Singular emphatic forms of the noun of both the masculine and feminine can occur with either א or ה endings, in some cases even within the same bowl (M145:2 מלכה and M145:15,16 מלכא, M163:28 עלמא and עלמה, M163:10 שמא and שמה). In our corpus, as has been noted elsewhere[21] regarding other bowl texts, the א endings predominate. The masculine plural form in the emphatic state is mostly indistinguishable from the absolute and construct forms as they all commonly occur with י- endings. Some examples that can be verified as masculine plural emphatics are M147:7 דיוי ודיותא, M101:3 ופתכרי ופתכרתא and M163:21 טורי ורמאתה, as these occur alongside feminine plural emphatic forms. Forms ending with יא- also occur: M50:4 טוריא, M145:12 ניסכאיא, M155:11 נשיא, as does the occasional יה- ending (M156:4 מלכיה). One can observe the freedom with which apocopated forms of the masculine plural absolute are used together with others that display the final ן in M121:3-4 where ומיחרשי בישי occurs in a list soon after ומיפגעין בישין. Most [18] This subject is amply treated elsewhere, cf. Rossell 1953, pp. 20-21 and Juusola 1999, pp. 44-68.

[19] Juusola 1999, p. 74.
[20] Juusola 1999, p. 76.
[21] Juusola 1999, p. 141.

feminine singular and plural forms in the emphatic state end with תא- and can, therefore, only be distinguished if there is contextual evidence. One example is ניקבתא which can be identified as a plural form in M50:2 (דיכרי וניקבתא) on the basis of the masculine noun that precedes it, whereas, in M149:8 (דיכרא וניקבתא) the preceding noun attests to the fact that in this instance ניקבתא is a singular form. This is similar to M101:3 (ופתכרי ופתכרתא) in which פתכרתא is a plural as opposed to in M149:8 (מן פתכרא ומן פתכרתא) where the nouns are in the singular. The plural is also occasionally written with a final ה rather than א, as in M163:21 טורי ורמאתה. Feminine plural nouns in the absolute state are generally rare in magic bowl texts,[22] though examples occur in M123:1-2 לוטן and בישון ממללן and M163:15 בתולן.

3.4 Prepositions

The prepositional prefix א- (=על) that is peculiar to Babylonian Aramaic is attested in a number of instances in our corpus (see glossary).

3.5 Adverbs

The adverb איך (M102:9) is otherwise unattested in other bowls, though the similar form היך occurs once (N&Sh B4:4). Both of these forms are Targumic, as opposed to the Babylonian Talmudic Aramaic form היכא which also occurs for the first time in our corpus (M163:9) as an adverb of place.[23]

3.6 Conjunctions

Noteworthy is the occurrence in M102:7,8 of the conjunction או, 'or' which is attested for certain in only one other instance (AIT 2:5). The conjunction עד אמא 'until when' (M163:24), which is equivalent to עד אימת(י), is new to the vocabulary of the Jewish Aramaic bowls. The Targmic אילהין, which was previously only attested in AIT 26:5, occurs a second time in M117:5. בדיל in M155:5 'on account of' is only attested in one other bowl (AIT 28:4). The conjunction הכדין ... היכדין ד 'just as' ... 'just so' is a form that occurs only in one other bowl (N&Sh B21:8) and is Targumic.

[22] Juusola 1999, p. 146.
[23] Levias 1900, p. 46.

3.7 Verbs

Regarding verbs it was already noted by Rossell (1953, p. 49) that י, נ and ל all occur as prefixes for the 3rd person masculine imperfect forms. In one of our bowls, M102, all three occur in the same text. A rarer irregularity can be observed in M145 wherein the 3rd person masculine plural perfect verb forms all lack the usual ו- or ון- suffixes which make them appear as singular verbs (see note on M145:3). This form could either be the Babylonian Talmudic קטול, in which case the ו would need to be reconstructed, or it might be attributed to the Mandaic influence that is generally discerned in this particular text. In some cases in our bowls there occur verb forms that are characteristic of the Standard Literary Aramaic (henceforth SLA) that is found in the Targumim:[24] אתיתי (M50:4, af. 1st person sg. perfect), איתמסיאה (M50:4, ithpe. 3rd person feminine pl. perfect), לאנדויאהון (M59:11, af. infinitive + 3rd person masculine pl. suffix), לאפקא (M50:5, af. infinitive). Other forms occur that are particular to Babylonian Talmudic Aramaic: לאפוקי (M59:11, af. infinitive), פגע (M156:7,8, 3rd person feminine sg. perfect). New forms that were previously unattested in Jewish Aramaic are לישתמודע (M102:11), the imperfect form of אשתמודע, מזיח (M117:4), a pa. form known from Syriac, and קמע (M123:1) which is also attested in Syriac.

4. Sources from which magic bowl texts draw

The eclectic quality of the bowl texts was aptly noted by Montgomery who stated that, for the sorcerers who composed these magical texts, their 'Scriptures and apocrypha and liturgy were storehouses of magical lore'.[25] Of course, we find more than just the Jewish sources, i.e. biblical verses, liturgy, Hekhalot, the occasional aggadic reference as well as Jewish folk mythology, in the sorcerer's repository of inspiration. There are also Gnostic, Christian and pagan elements that have found their way into many of the incantations. It is apparent from [24] See Juusola 1999, pp. 14-15. Although Greenfield used this term to describe the Targ.-O., it is used here in an extended sense as the features that are cited are mostly common to the greater parts of the Targumic literature. See also Cook 1986, p. 6 and Greenfield 1995, p. 8.

[25] Montgomery 1913, p. 115.

the variety of spells that are found in the bowl texts that our period was one of great creativity in this area of composition. Questions as to how and why the different elements and influences found their way into the melting pot which constitutes this magical lore are complex, especially when considering that some of this material crossed the boundaries of one religious culture into another. The sections below cover the different sources that can be traced within our corpus of bowls. An attempt is made at defining some of the different ways that this material was used within the magical text.

4.1 Biblical verses and liturgy

Magic bowls and other forms of Jewish amulets demonstrate that the warning in m. San. 10:1[26] against the reciting of biblical verses for the purpose of healing was not always heeded. Indeed, biblical verses are commonly used in our texts in a variety of ways. In some cases whole verses are quoted while in others only sections are used. In one instance a verse is adapted to fit the subject of the incantation:

M155:6-7	Isa. 45:2
גבריאל ומיכאל ורפאל די מתברין דלתות נחושא וימגדעין בריחי ברזל אינון יתברון ויגדעון לרוחא בישתא	אני לפניך אלך והדורים אושר דלתות נחושה אשבר ובריחי ברזל אגדע

In another bowl the Targ.-O. is quoted in what appears to be a Hekhalot style section of text:

M123:5-6 (also in M138:8)	Targ.-O. Ex. 3:5
בשמיה רבה דהוה מן קדמין כמו דאמר ליה למשה באסנה שרי סנך מעל ריגלך משבענא עליכון נידרא ...	ואמר לא תקרב הלכא שרי סינך מעל ריגלך ארי אתרא דאת קאים עלוהי אתר קדיש הוא

Naveh and Shaked have already noted that 'the use of verses in magic contexts is of course often derived from their liturgical prominence'.[27] In some cases, as in M108, it can be shown that the verses were not compiled independently by the sorcerer for his craft but borrowed from a standard liturgical format (see text and notes below). In other cases, as Naveh and Shaked have pointed out, there is no way of ascertaining whether the sorcerer gained inspiration from a liturgical context or is drawing directly from Scripture. It is, nevertheless, intriguing that from the seventeen verses which occur in our sample group of texts, all but two (Num. 14:9 and 32:22 in M142:8-9) can be found in the weekly prayers. This could imply that our sorcerers are quoting their verses from liturgy rather than directly from the Old Testament.

[26] ואלו שאין להם חלק לעולם הבא ... רבי עקיבא אומר אף הקורא בספרים החיצונים והלוחש על המכה ואומר (שמות טו) כל המחלה אשר שמתי במצרים לא אשים עליך כי אני ה' רופאך ...

The text of Zech. 3:2 is as follows:

> ויאמר יהוה אל השטן יגער יהוה בך השטן ויגער יהוה בך הבחר בירושלם הלוא זה אוד מצל מאש
>
> 'But [the angel of] the Lord said to the Accuser (השטן), "the Lord rebuke you, O Accuser; may the Lord who has chosen Jerusalem rebuke you! For this is the brand plucked out of the fire"'.

The fact that 'Satan' is attacked in this verse could explain its common use in Jewish magical formula. Indeed, it has become a permanent part of the Keri'at Shemah al ha-Mittah (see appendix to M108). In b. Ber. 51a the tradition of its efficacy is preserved in the words attributed to R. Joshua ben Levy, a first generation Palestinian Amora, who states that if a person happened to meet the angel of death[28] and could not escape his path, he should turn his face and recite this verse. Zech. 3:2 occurs twice in our corpus, once in M108:3-4 and again in M59:13-14. In M108:3-4 Zech. 3:2 occurs as the first of a group of verses which can all be found in the evening prayers. This group of verses is uncharacteristically preceded by the word בשום 'in the name of' so as to indicate that they themselves represent the name of the power that is invoked to bind the demonic nuisance. In M59 it seems to have been appended by the scribe to the end of the text, although the verse is absent in several duplicates (M50, AIT 9 and AIT 32). It is possible that the scribe added this verse for no other reason than good measure. Another verse that seems to have been borrowed from a [28] The narrative states that this could occur in one of three situations, if one takes his shirt from an attendant in the morning, if one lets another who has not himself washed his hands pour water over his own, or if one stands in the path of women returning from the presence of a dead person. In either of these situations the angel of death is present and has permission to do harm (ואל אל תטול חלוקך שחרית מיד השמש ותלבש ; ואל תטול ידיך ממי שלא נטל ידיו ; liturgical context rather than directly from scripture is Deut. 10:17 which appears in M102:10. This verse also occurs as part of the doxology in the first of the eighteen benedictions:

---

[27] Naveh and Shaked 1993, p. 22.

M102:10	The first benediction	Deut. 10:17
ברוך אתה יהוה אלוהינו מלך העולם האל הגדול הגיבור והנורא והמופלא והמ(ע)ולא	ברוך אתה יי אלוהינו ואלהי אבותינו אלהי אברהם אלהי יצחק ואלהי יעקב האל הגדול הגבור והנורא אל עליון	כי יהוה אלהיכם הוא אלהי האלהים ואדני האדנים האל הגדל הגבר והנורא אשר לא ישא פנים ולא יקח שחד

In another of our bowls (M156:11) extracts from Ex. 15:3 (from the Song of the Sea) and Ps. 24:8, which can both be found in Seder Amram in the New Year service, are followed by the liturgical doxology יהוה מלך יהוה מאלך יהוה ימלך לעולם which is known from the daily prayers (see note to M156:11):

M156:11	A response in the prayer יהי כבוד	Ex. 15:3 and Ps. 24:8
יהוה איש מלחמה יהוה שמו יהוה עיזוז וגיבור יהוה גיבור {ו}מלחמה יהוה מלך יהוה מאלך יהוה ימלך לעולם ועד	יהוה מלך יהוה מלך יהוה ימלוך לעולם ועד	יהוה איש מלחמה יהוה שמו׃ מי זה מלך הכבוד יהוה עזוז וגבור יהוה גבור מלחמה׃

The sections of Isa. 37:16, 6:3 and I Sam. 17:45 in M117:2,6 present a similar use of biblical verses to that which was just mentioned in regard to M156 above, as they are also cited for the fact that they represent epithets of God and commence, like those in M156:11, with the expression 'in the name of' (בשום):

תעמוד לפני הנשים בשעה שחוזרות מן המת, מפני שאני מרקד ובא לפניהן וחרבי בידי ויש לי רשות לחבל).

M117:2	Isa. 37:16, 6:3
(2) בשום יהוה צבאות אלהי ישראל יושיב הכרובים	יהוה צבאות אלהי ישראל ישב הכרבים אתה הוא האלהים לבדך לכל ממלכות הארץ אתה עשית את השמים ואת הארץ

M117:6	I Sam. 17:45
(6) ... בשמיה דיה יה יה קדוש קדוש קדוש יהוה צבאות אלהי מערכות ישראל	יאמר דוד אל הפלשתי אתה בא אלי בחרב ובחנית ובכידון ואנכי בא אליך בשם יהוה צבאות אלהי מערכות ישראל אשר חרפת

In M142 three complete verses are rendered: Isa. 40:31,[29] Num. 32:22[30] and Num. 14:9.[31] Common to all three is an expression of faith in the almighty God who provides and protects; a good enough reason in itself for this choice of verses. The first verse, Isa. 40:31, seems to be an integral part of the formula that occurs in a number of duplicate texts (see notes on M142:2-4). It might not be a coincidence that Isa. 40:31 was chosen for this particular incantation. A spell that incorporates an historiola that describes demons who snatch and strangle children, this text was intended for the protection of infants. We find that this same verse is cited in m. Qid. 4:14[32] to illustrate how a youth is protected by being taught the Torah. Within an historiola in another of our texts, M156:8, Ps. 104:20[33] is cited as the verse that Hanina ben Dosa recited when he met the evil spirit. This particular choice of verse is due to the fact that it speaks of the creatures of the night, a time when dangerous spirits were thought to roam.[34]

---

[29] וקוי יהוה יחליפו כח יעלו אבר כנשרים ירוצו ולא ייגעו ילכו ולא ייעפו

[30] ונכבשה הארץ לפני יהוה ואחר תשבו והייתם נקים מיהוה ומישראל והיתה הארץ הזאת לכם לאחזה לפני יהוה

[31] אך ביהוה אל תמרדו ואתם אל תיראו את עם הארץ כי לחמנו הם סר צלם מעליהם ויהוה אתנו אל תיראם

[32] ... כשאדם בא לידי חולי או לידי זקנה או לידי יסורין ואינו יכול לעסוק במלאכתו הרי הוא מת ברעב אבל התורה אינה כן אלא משמרתו מכל רע בנערותו ונותנת לו אחרית ותקוה בזקנותו בנערותו מה הוא אומר (ישעיה מ׳) וקוי ה׳ יחליפו כח ...

[33] ותשת חשך ויהי לילה בו תרמש כל חיתו יער

[34] See notes on M156:7-8.

4.2 Hekhalot, the Sword of Moses and Sepher Ha-Razim

Some surveys of the Hekhalot literature include Sepher Ha-Razim, the Sword of Moses and the Havdala de R. Akiva.[35] These texts have come to be considered the classical works of early Jewish magical culture.[36] Together with a number of other texts these represent a considerable portion of the primary source material from which our knowledge of this early phase of Jewish magic is derived.[37] Joseph Dan describes the overlap between mysticism and magic in the Hekhalot literature as follows:

> 'Underlying the Hekhalot and Merkabah Literature is the view (which is also found in the Talmudic-Midrashic literature), that the knowledge of secrets is power, and knowledge of secrets of the upper world grants the individual with that knowledge power, and influence over them. One who knows the names of the supreme angels and their specific tasks can utilize that knowledge in order to gain a certain mastery over them and force them, by means of magical incantation, to do his will. The incantation is generally composed of a statement which includes secret names (which are on occasion the secret names of God Himself, which the angels must obey), and secret actions - potions, mixtures or the use of other physical means, sometimes at a clearly defined time'.[38]

The magic bowls thus compliment the above mentioned body of texts, incorporating within them a wide array of instructions for the achievement of magical aims. The study of such amulets has already made some important contributions to our understanding of the Hekhalot literature, as observed by Shaked:

> 'That some Babylonian magic bowls use material that is apparently derived from the Hekhalot literature, or that both sets of texts use a common stock of material, has significance in the context of the discussion concerning the origins and development of the Hekhalot literature. The fact that the Hekhalot texts are composed almost exclusively of pure Hebrew has been one of the arguments for placing them in Palestine. These texts quote Palestinian sages of the Mishnaic period, but never any Babylonian figures. Such considerations, together with the relative air of antiquity that they seem to breath, have combined to create a scholarly consensus concerning the Palestinian background

[35] Though the manuscript that Scholem published in 1981 is of a late date, much of its text can be found in the Hekhalot Zutarti (Schäfer 1990, p. 76).
[36] For instance Joseph Dan 1993, p. 18-19.
[37] For a detailed survey see Alexander 1986.
[38] Dan 1993, p. 18.

of these texts. Some cracks have, however, been detected in this theory: some fragments of the Hekhalot texts have somewhat enigmatic reference to the house of an unidentified master in Babylonia. If we now have a Babylonian incantation bowl that contains what seems to be a clear Hekhalot-type text, this certainly indicates that the visionary experiences of the Hekhalot mystics were not confined to Palestine alone. In Babylonia there evidently were Jewish groups engaged in producing, or reproducing, similar literary creations'.

In an unpublished magic bowl from the Berlin Museum collection (VA 2434 + VA 2486), the connection between the Merkabah mystic and the craft of the sorcerer is made clear:

'I was astonished by the mysteries of the earth I looked at the paths of the merkabah. Again I saw the evil, powerful and violent Yaror ... that has been sent against him. Yaror ... go out and fly away from the house of ... and go against ... By the name of the names of Dimiel and Hantitiel and Haniniel and Hahaziel, these ten holy and [...] and trusty angels'.

... אידמרית ברזי ארעה ואיסתכלית בדירכי מרכבתא תוב חזיתי ירור בישתא תקיפתא
... דאישתדר עליה וירור תיקיפתא וזידניתא ירור פוקי ופרחי מן ביתיה ד... ואיזילי על
[...] ובשום שמי דימיאל וחנתיתיאל וחנינאל וחחזיאל אילין עשרא מלאכין קדישין ו ומהימנין

In this case the practitioner declares that his use of the techniques of the Merkabah mystic has gained him sight of the offending Yaror and other demons. By means of the invocation of the magical names of angels, he sends them back to the human foe of his client who originally dispatched them.

Apart from the use of various angel and divine names, as well as an abundant supply of nomina barbara, our own corpus of texts also includes direct parallels with known Hekhalot texts bearing characteristic hallmarks of this literature. The most obvious is the use of איקון מיטמון ופסקון, which is one of the best known composite names of the angel Metatron. This is attested in the Talmud (b. San. 44b) as well as various Hekhalot texts (see notes to M155:4). Another name that occurs in M107:5, גרוסקין גרוסקין, is attested in Hekhalot Zutarti §366 as one of the beings that R. Akiva encountered in his celestial journeys. In the Hekhalot texts, liturgical doxologies are often cited as powerful magical names, such as are commonly invoked in magic bowls. In our texts there are three examples that have direct parallels in Hekhalot literature: M102:10[39]=§503, M117:2[40]=§402 and M156:11[41]=§126.[42] A parallel to a passage in the Hekhalot Rabatti (Schäfer 1981, §92), which is unclear in that context, occurs in M101:11 as a warning to offending demons.

In the two duplicates M123 (lines 3-6) and M138, there occurs a Hekhalot-like section of text that includes a list of names, a description of God that is more characteristic of the fiery angels often portrayed in the Hekalot texts, and a reference to Moses at the burning bush which quotes Ex. 3:5. This event is expanded in other sources (see notes to M123:3-6) which mark it as the moment in history at which Moses received the complex of magical names (such as אהיה אשר אהיה) and the knowledge of how to use them from the angel Metatron. Metatron is described as the 'intercessory spirit' in b. San. 44b and the highest ranking angel in 3 Enoch and the Sword of Moses (AHYW PSQTYH). He is a major figure in Jewish magical folklore,[43] and can be found in one or another of his guises in a number of amulets. In M155:4-5, some of his names occur just before the statement: 'who sits upon the throne of glory, by his word and by the countenance of his glory he created the heavens and completed the world', which gives the impression that he was the active agent of God even during the first creation.

4.3 The historiola

The historiola is a magic story that occurs within an incantation, serving to illustrate the purpose of the spell and give it an extra air of authority, i.e. just as the magic worked in the story, so will it also work for the bearer of this amulet. In many cases, the source of the historiola cannot be traced and its transmission can only be attributed to folk culture. A notable exception is the Smamit story which occurs in a silver amulet (N&Sh A15) and magic bowl (N&Sh B12), for which Naveh and Shaked have cited versions in a wide variety of languages from different periods of time.[44]

---

[39] ושמיה ברוך אתה יהוה אלוהינו מלך העולם האל הגדול הגיבור והנורא והמופלא והמ(ע)ולא
[40] בשום יהוה צבאות אלהי ישראל יושיב הכרובים
[41] בשמיה ד... יהוה מלך יהוה מאלך יהוה ימלך לעולם ועד
[42] Schäfer 1981.
[43] Concerning the names of Metatron in these three sources, see notes to איקון מיטמון ופסקון in M155:3-5.
[44] Naveh and Shaked 1987, pp. 104-122.

The incantation in the duplicate texts M50 and M59 is constructed around the story of a get that was given to demons by the legendary Tana Rabbi Joshua bar Perahia, whose reputation as a possessor of magical powers is considerable.[45] In this text, the demons that are endangering the clients are served with their papers of divorce and bidden to leave, just as Joshua bar Perahia had done. The historiola in M142 involves the 'swift prince', an allusion to Metatron the helper angel. In this text the angel is depicted seated on the graves of the babies that were snatched, listening to the cries and pleas of their mothers. The same angel exercises his powers to bind the demons and prohibit them from harming the client of the bowl. The historiola in M145:13-16 is repeated twice, in the first instance the subject of the narrative is an unnamed hero who is said to have gained some magical weapons with which he subdued demons; in the second instance the anonymous hero is supplanted by the client who is now the one who gains the magic weapons and, like the hero, overcomes the demons himself. Yet another magical story in M156 involves Hanina ben Dosa, another Tana famous for his miraculous powers.[46] This text follows a similar form in which the sorcerer, who is the narrator, repeats the actions of the magician of old i.e. just as he (Hanina ben Dosa) adjured the evil spirit, now I (the sorcerer) am adjuring it. A variation of this historiola can be found in b. Pes. 112b in which the same Tana, Hanina ben Dosa, met and subdued a powerful demon called Agrat bat Mahlat.

4.4 The get

The phenomena of using the get, a bill of divorce, as a motif in the magic bowls already attracted the attention of Thomas Ellis who added these comments to his introduction in 1853:[47]

> 'there is one thing to which I wish to call the attention of the Oriental scholars, namely, the subject of the inscription of No. 1.[48] It is a letter of dismissal, or bill of divorce to [45] For a detailed account of Joshua bar Perahia's reputation as a magician, see Geller 1974.

[46] For a short account of Hanina ben Dosa, see Vermes 1973.
[47] Layard 1853, p. 512.
[48] This text was amended and republished by Montgomery in a synopsis with another Jewish Aramaic (AIT 11) as well as Mandaic (published by Mark Lidzbarsky as text no. 5 in 1902 in Ephemeris für semitische Epigraphik, I, 1900-1902, Giessen, pp. 103-105) duplicate texts. Gordon published another two Jewish Aramaic duplicates in 1934, Gordon G and Gordon 9737, producing a synopsis which also included AIT 18. The differences between these five > Satan and other evil spirits. The word used to express this is גיטא, the very word found in the Talmud to express the same thing, גט pl. גיטין, and almost invariably used for a bill of divorce, instead of ספר כריתת. ... The ancient Jews supposed that the devils or evil spirits were propagated like mankind; that they eat, and drank, married, and, it would seem, quarreled with their wives, and divorced them, as may be seen in the following remarkable passage:–'And as the devils write bills of divorce, and give them to their wives, and return not unto them again, so you, in like manner, receive this, &c'.

Montgomery seems to have been almost amused by the naivety of the idea of the magical get and construed it to be:

> 'a happy thought of the magicians, who thus applied the powers of binding and loosing claimed by the rabbis to the disgusting unions of demons and mortals. The logic of the procedure was very simple–if only the liliths were as submissive to divorce as their human sisters'.[49]

More recently Shaked has questioned the sense behind the belief in the notion that something akin to human wedlock, which is implied by the magical get, could exist between human and demon. He points out that although the bowls describe the enactment of the divorce procedure, it is to a great extent imaginary as it is hard to believe that people really assumed to have been bound to a demon by marriage. Indeed, the demon would have only been perceived by the fact that some illness or problem had occurred in the household. Also, the logistics of serving a demon with a divorce writ can hardly be imagined, nor can it be assumed that any religious legal authority would necessarily have recognized such a writ. Shaked concludes that the deed of divorce for the demons is most likely a metaphor, an act of sympathetic magic.[50]

Magic bowl texts have many references to nightly apparitions which are strongly suggestive of the incubus and succubus demons. In AIT 1:12-13, for instance, there is a description of demons 'who appear ... to men in the likeness of women and to women in the likeness of men, and with mankind they lie by night and by day' (ומידמין לבני אינש לגברי בדמות נשי ולנשי בדמות גברי ועים בני אינשא שכבין בליליא וביממא). Similarly, in b. Shab.

---

duplicate texts (Ellis 1, AIT 11, AIT 18, Gordon G, Gordon 9737 and Lidzbarsky no. 5) and another Mandaic version (18N18) were discussed in detail by Hunter in 1995.

[49] Montgomery 1913, pp. 158-159.

[50] Shaked 1999, p. 176.

151b, R. Hanina warns that if a man sleeps alone in a house Lilith will grab him. A more literal reference occurs in Genesis Rabbah 20:11, in which it is told that during the 130 years that Adam and Eve were separated they both cohabited with demons and produced spirits as progeny. In one Mandaic magic bowl, the activity of the female demon is described even more explicitly: 'she went and slept with the master of the house and took the semen from him. ... she had changed her appearance with the help of magic acts and she said: "I shall separate the man from his woman"...'.[51] As sexual interaction between human and demon was considered possible, belief in the efficacy of the magical get implies that such a union would constitute some sort of obligation akin to that which accompanies the marital status.

Montgomery's comments on AIT 8 are instructive in explaining the mechanics of the magical get as it is represented in that particular text.

> 'The magical writ affects the same forms and formalism as that of the divorce court. In the parallel bowl, No. 17, a form of date is given (l. 1 הדין יומא), which was a requisite in the legal Get. The names of both parties are exactly given, hence the parents of the liliths are here specifically named. The very terms of divorce are repeated in 17:2: שביקת ופטרית ותרכית יתיכי; cf. the facsimile of a Get given as a frontispiece in Amram's work[52] (פטרית שבקית ותריכית יתיכי). It was necessary that the writ should be properly served on the divorcée, hence in 26:6, שקולי גיטכי: "take your writ", a sentence consummating the process, and then the divorced demon must betake herself from the victim's property, as commanded by the peremptory; "Hear, obey and go forth" (l. 10). But there is a difference; against spiritual powers divine authority was necessary. And so it is affected that the writ has come down from heaven (l. 7), that is, it belongs to the category of writs from foreign countries for which there were special forms; hence the גיטא אתא מין עיבר ימא, l. 9. The commissioners and witnesses are the holy angels, etc., l. 9 f. A rabbi is also at hand to seal as notary the divine decree, none other than the famous master-magician Joshua b. Perahia'.[53]

Shaked gathered all of the Jewish Aramaic magic bowl texts that include the motif of the get and divided them into five main types.[54] It becomes clear when examining these

---

[51] YBC 2364:7-9 in Müller-Kessler 1996, p. 189.
[52] Amram 1896.
[53] Montgomery 1913, p. 159.
[54] Shaked 1999. Our M50 and M59 fit into Shaked's type A, whilst M103 and M119 constitute a new type.

different types that these get texts do not differ from other magic bowl texts regarding the magical mechanism employed. The get motif is interwoven into the general structure of the adjuration of demons and angels, name invocation, the occasional use of an historiola etc. What distinguishes these texts is the mention within the incantation that a deed of divorce was involved. This can be expressed by a statement to the effect that such a deed of separation had been made for the demons, such as in AIT 9:3 (Shaked's type A) כתבנא להון גיטי לכל לילית, in AIT 8:6 (type B) גיטא נחית לכא מין שמיה, N&Sh B5:6-7 (type C) וכתבו שמה בגיטא and Ellis 1:1 (type D) הדין גיטא לשידא - an amulet which actually declares from the outset to be such a magical get. Most of the get texts include confirmation that the get has been served to the demons, either by stating that the divorce has already occurred (AIT 9: ... פטרנא ותרכנא יתכון בגט פיטורין), or in the form of a direct command to the demon to receive the get (Ellis 1:7 ... שקול גיטיכון וקבילו מומתכון). In both cases this is done by quoting, or slightly altering, the final part of the legal get formula: ודן די יהוי ליכי מנאי ספר תרוכין וגט פטורין ואגרת שבוקין. This statement was previously the only clause of the legal get formula actually quoted in the bowls. However, in a couple of our texts, M103 and M119, another section of the get formula is adapted for use in the magical get. Whereas the get formula uses the legal terminology רשאה ושלטאה בנפשיכי ('permission and power over yourself') to express the status of freedom which the divorced woman gains as a result of the get, this same terminology is used in the magical get (M103:6 and M119:6) to define the status of the demon. This implies that, unlike the divorced woman, a free demon cannot be tolerated and must be suppressed by the deed. The bowl warns the demon thus: 'even if you have permission or power over yourself for any person you may desire, it is the case that I have written a divorce ...' (M103:6).

A closer examination of the magical get texts in our corpus (see appendix to M103 and M119) shows that there is a thematic connection between the magic bowl get texts and b. Git. 67b-70a, which contains both the story of the infamous Ashmedai, king of demons, and a medical-magical handbook. Both the magic bowl get texts and b. Git. 67b-70a combine the magical and medical data. These particular magic bowls employ a form of get which divorces the demons from the client who is then healed. It is suggested below (see appendix to M103 and M119) that the reason for the occurrence of this magical-medical subject matter in b. Git. 67b-70a, the tractate that deals with 'divorce writs', is not a coincidence but a reflection of the popular belief that is also illustrated in our bowls, namely, that illness can be personified in terms of demons, and 'divorcing' such demons can affect a cure. Although there is no formal mention of the magical get in the Babylonian Talmud, one might consider the association of such subject matter in the tractate Gittim to be suggestive.

4.5 Gnostic, Christian and pagan sources

References to non-Jewish gods and other powers in the Jewish Aramaic magic bowls raise interesting questions about how foreign elements came to be included in seemingly Jewish texts. Does the presence of such elements point to heretical movements within the Jewish communities of the time? It is not always easy to identify the processes of transmission by which such elements crossed cultural and linguistic boundaries to be used by the Jewish sorcerers. Needless to say, we know from the Mandaic and Manichaean bowls, as well as the Greek magical papyri,[55] that this phenomena of cross-cultural exchange was not unique to the Jewish magical texts, but was a common feature of the magical products of the Near East in Late Antiquity in general. Montgomery believed that the magic bowls 'and in a general way, all Jewish magic, has come out of the crucible of the Graeco-Roman world' and was therefore 'not Jewish but eclectic'.[56] Indeed, Hellenistic influence on Jewish magic is very obvious in Sepher Ha-Razim IV:61-63 where a prayer to Helios occurs.[57] Other pagan gods, such as 'the Mesopotamian and Syrian Belti, Nereg, Nanai, Shamish, Dilbat and Mot; the Iranian Anahid, Danahish, Bagdana',[58] as well as the Christian Holy Trinity (see M163: 29 below) are invoked in Jewish Aramaic bowls. Conversely, the Jewish Iao Sabaoth is the most commonly invoked name in the Greek papyri.[59] An unusual but nevertheless good example of borrowing from Jewish sources occurs in a Mandaic bowl (McCullough D) which adjures 'in the name of Metatron ḤLDḤ who serves before the curtain' (bšwm' dmyṭṭrwn

[55] See Betz 1986, pp. xlvi-xlvii.
[56] Montgomery 1913, p. 9.
[57] Margaliot 1966, p. 37.
[58] Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 37.
[59] See Betz's introduction to The Greek Magical Papyri in Translation (1992).

ḥldḥ dhw mšʾmš qdym brgwdʾ), which appears to be a quote from an unidentified Hekhalot text.[60]

Harviainen provides a possible explanation for the syncretistic tendencies of our magical texts:

> 'The long-lived incantation traditions reveal at least one important aspect of the prophylactic magic. The official religion (Judaism, Christianity, Mandaeism, Islam) has not been considered sufficiently effective to protect a human being against secret adversaries. There are gaps in the security system, and the gaps should be closed. As a consequence, all aggressive forces must always be mentioned by name and then they can be sealed, counter-sealed, uprooted, and expelled. Horror vacui, the avoidance of empty space, is a leading principle of popular magic. To be on the safe side it is also profitable to pay attention to foreign cults, demons, and deities'.

Because of these syncretistic tendencies, Montgomery was cautious in considering the attribution of the bowls according to the types of script, saying that 'the magic of our bowls is so eclectic that even a "Jewish"-Aramaic text does not imply a Jewish exorcist'.[61] Shaked, on the other hand, recently noted his opinion that although there are cases in which the Jewishness of a text might be argued, there is nevertheless no compelling evidence that anyone but a Jew would use the Jewish Aramaic script.[62]

Harviainen studied one hundred and four bowls in Jewish Aramaic, thirty one in Mandaic and twenty six in Syriac, to try and discern whether the use of a particular script correlated with the cultural group that it is generally associated with.[63] He found that in most cases what distinguishes the texts as belonging to a particular group, apart from their respective scripts, are the varieties of opening formulae and the lists of what he calls the 'helpers'. He did, however, make a cautionary note concerning twenty four 'Jewish Aramaic bowls without phraseology and without a basmala typical of Jewish bowls' that they 'should be noted carefully in any discussion of paganism in bowl incantations'.[64]

---

[60] For more discussion concerning this reference see Levine 1970, pp. 358-359 and Greenfield 1973, pp. 154-156.
[61] Montgomery 1913, p. 50.
[62] Shaked 1999a, p. 314.
[63] Harviainen 1995.
[64] Harviainen 1995, p. 59

A case in point from our own corpus is M145 which has little if anything, apart from the fact that it is written in Jewish Aramaic, to distinguish it as having been written by a Jewish scribe. In fact, the language and imagery point to the possibility that this text might be derived from a Mandaic Vorlage. Yet the duplicate text (MS 2053/159, see text and notes to M145 below) which we have presented with M145 in synopsis has an appendix that consists of three biblical verses (Isa. 6:3, Ex. 15:16 and Ex. 15:18), which suggests that its scribe was Jewish. Although this is not conclusive proof that M145 was also written by a Jewish scribe, it can, nevertheless, be considered as evidence that this formula was known to and used by Jewish magicians despite the fact that the main part of the incantation might have originated from a Mandaic Vorlage.

We know from one of Peters'[65] excavation reports that bowls in different dialects were, on occasion, found in the same house. We also know of a certain Dadbeh bar Asmandukh, for whom bowls were written in both Jewish Aramaic (AIT 12 and AIT 16) and Syriac (AIT 31 and AIT 33). These facts point to a situation in which there is no obligation to assume that the religion of the sorcerer and client are synonymous.

One of our bowls, M163, contains an unusual combination of references which include invocations of the pagan 'Shamish king of the gods' (l. 4), the Jewish magical names אהיה אשר אהיה יהוה צבאות (l. 29) and the Christian Holy Trinity (l. 29). It also contains a number of other stories which are otherwise unknown, but which Shaked has suggested might be analogous to Zoroastrian cosmological stories.[66] Shaked has tried to reconcile this combination of religious elements by suggesting that this bowl was written by a Jewish scribe for Zoroastrian clients who commissioned the bowl to be written against their opponent who was a Christian.[67] He assumes the scribe to have been Jewish on the basis of the script, and the clients to have been Zoroastrian on the basis of their Sasanian names (Mihlad and Baran) and their opponent to be a Christian on the basis of his name (Isha). Shaked further suggests that the invocation of the Holy Trinity was made specifically because the target of the spell, a Christian, would consider it the most potent force to his detriment. It is, however, [65] Peters 1897, vol. 2, p. 187. In the 1989 excavations at Nippur that were carried out by the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, there was also a case recorded in which a pair of bowls in Jewish Aramaic were found in the same house as a pair in Mandaic (Hunter 1995, p. 62).

---

[66] Shaked 1999a, p. 312.

hard to accept Shaked's assumptions, especially if we consider the Mandaic duplicate, which also includes the Holy Trinity, that is presented in the very same article by Shaked. Both texts were likely to have been part of the magician's repertoire rather than the choice of a conniving sorcerer.

5. Duplicate texts and the scribe-magician's method of incantation-writing

A primary characteristic of the magical text is that it was intended to be used and re-used by the magician, whose job it was to accommodate clients with requests to ward off potential predicaments, or for assistance with such as have already beset them. Part of the magician's store of incantation formulae would have been passed down to him by an instructor to whom he was no doubt apprenticed at some early stage of his career. Other formulae might have been acquired over years of professional practice by means of exchange with other colleagues, or inherited from mentors who wished to pass their most cherished trade secrets on to a trusted and worthy successor. As the number of magic bowls, Palestinian and Mandaic amulets and Geniza magical texts have increased, more and more duplicate texts have been identified. By duplicate texts, we refer to cases where a whole text or a section of it occurs in two or more bowls. Duplicates texts can be divided into three main categories: 1) Duplicates that were written by the same scribe, 2) Duplicates written by different scribes, and 3) Duplicates written in different language groups i.e. Jewish Aramaic and Mandaic and/or Syriac. Comparing texts of the first category can shed light on the ways in which an individual scribe could use different magical incantation formulae to construct different texts for different clients. The accuracy of his reduplication, or lack of it, can suggest whether he had a recipe book readily available from which to copy, or if he tended to rely more on his own memory. The second type of duplicate is also instructive for gaining a better understanding of the level of flexibility any scribe could exercise in his use of standard sections of formulae, and the ways in which he could combine and alter them in the process of composing any particular incantation. The differences between duplicates of this type can also be informative in evaluating to what extent the transmission of this type of magical formulae was scribal or oral. The third type of duplicates is one of the most perplexing as it exhibits the movement of esoteric knowledge across the borders of communities that used different dialects and were adherents to different religions. Though we might never be able to find out the circumstances by which such exchanges came to pass, we can observe the level of modification in form and content that was exercised upon these magical texts. Needless to say, the existence of duplicates is of the utmost importance to the philologist for reconstructing sections of text which in some bowls have faded or disappeared altogether, and often written by untutored hands which render the script barely legible.

[67] Shaked 1999a, p. 314-315.

5.1 Duplicates written by the same scribe

A pair of duplicates that were written by the same scribe for the same client were published by Müller-Kessler in 1994. After considering these two texts together with two other duplicates written for other clients (N&Sh B12a and a Nippur bowl (HS 3003)[68]), as well as a third bowl written by a different scribe altogether (N&Sh B12b), Müller-Kessler concluded that the scribes tailored their texts uniquely for each client. This means that it was the scribe's custom to choose different opening and closing formula, vary in their citation of demons and angels and add verses or other formulae as they felt appropriate in each case. This could depend, for instance, on the complaint of the client and the amount of money he or she wished to spend. If a client wished to procure more than one bowl, maybe one for each of the corners of the house, then the scribe would compose the appropriate text and reproduce it faithfully in each of the bowls in the batch. That is why the two texts that Müller-Kessler published, which were written for the same client, followed the same form, whereas N&Sh B12a and HS 3003 seem to have been written by the same scribe but for different clients, showing different forms.[69] AIT 21,22 and 23 are duplicates which were all written by the same scribe for the same client, a certain Dodi daughter of Ahath. The difference between these three duplicates is also small, except that AIT 22 has a short appendix at the end that is missing from the other texts. Montgomery attributed this difference to the fact that being the biggest bowl of the three the scribe must have felt the need to add some extra words as space fillers. Yet another set of duplicates were produced by Gordon (Gordon E and F) in a synopsis with a third duplicate, Hyvernat's bowl, written for a different client.[70] In this case, as well as in the same-scribe-and-client-duplicates, Gordon E and F are almost identical, whereas, the Hyvernat bowl, which was written for a different client, differs in considerable detail.

[68] Gordon in 1941, pp. 346-348, and republished by Olsner in 1989.

In our corpus there are two sets of duplicates that were written by the same scribe for the same clients and for which synopses have been provided (see below). The first group consists of M103, M119, MS 2053/209 and MS 2053/253 and were written for a certain Imi daughter of Qaqi. The second group, M123, M138 and MS 2053/216, were written for three different members of the same household: Imi daughter of Qaqi, Ahi son of Mahlapta and Ahi son of Qini.[71] Both of these groups of bowls happen to have been written by the same scribe for the same household and thus represent a family archive. Both of these sets of duplicates confirm Müller-Kessler's opinion that in such cases as these, where the scribe was writing a number of bowls for the same client or household, he was likely to reproduce the same text with only minor variations in the whole set of bowls. The nature of the small differences that occur between the duplicate texts point to the likelihood that the scribe was composing from memory rather than copying from a notebook or even the first bowl in the set which he had produced. The types of variation that most commonly occur between these kinds of duplicate seem to be the result of the kind of confusion that could easily occur in the scribe's mind while repeatedly writing the same repertoire of incantations from memory in different combinations over and over again. Incantations tend, in any case, to be repetitive and have similar kinds of statements and formulae. For instance, if we look at a variation that occurs in the opening lines of the first of our two groups:

M103:2	M119:1-2	MS 2053/209:2	MS 2053/253:1-2
תיתסי תינטרי	תיתסי ותיטרי	תינטרי תיתסי	תיתסי תיטרי
תישתזבי	מן כל מידעם ביש	ברחמי שמיא	מן כל מידעם ביש

Whereas in three of the texts the scribe wrote תיתסי before תינטרי, in one (MS 2053/209) this word order had changed. One might attribute this slight modification to a lapse in the scribe's concentration. Having already lost his rhythm and changed the word order, he followed תיתסי with ברחמי שמיא, a formulaic combination that is known from other texts[72] and possibly also used by the scribe. Similarly, in M103 תינטרי is followed by תישתזבי rather than מן כל מידעם ביש. This could be explained by the fact that the verb נטר followed by שזב occurs in at least one other known formula[73] which might also have been known to our scribe. Another example of the kind of minor difference which occurs is the use of the demonstrative pronoun הדא before the client's name in M119:1 where it is absent from all this text's other duplicates. Such an addition could easily be made if one considers that names are cited regularly in other texts both with and without the demonstrative pronoun.

[69] Müller-Kessler 1994, pp. 8-9.
[70] Gordon 1934a p.331-332; Hyvernat 1885.

5.2 Duplicates written by different scribes

This is the most common form of duplicate that we possess. The kind of differences that were found in the previous category of duplicates also apply here except that they are even more common and the disparity is often greater. The order of phrases can alter:

M145:12	MS 2053/159:13
חד גפיה בארעה וחד גפיה בירקיעא ניגריה שורשא דארעה	ני(ג)ריה שירשה דארעה (ח)ד גפיה בארעה וחד גפיה ברקי[עה]

Mode and tense can change:

M112:9	N&Sh B19:4
דלא יקירבון ביה כל חרשין	דלא (ת)יק((ר))בון ביה

M107:7	Geller A:16
ואברכסס ארהיט שידי ודיוי	ואברכסס דמפיק ומרהיט שידי ודיוי

and the quantity and quality of the demons and/or magical names can vary significantly:

---

[71] For a discussion concerning the family connections between these three individuals see opening comments to M123 and M138 below.
[72] Cf. AIT 11:1-2, AIT 24:2, AIT 26:5 and Geller C:3. For a detailed discussion of this and other discrepancies between the duplicate texts see the Synopsis and notes provided below.
[73] BOR:10 נינטרוניה ונישיזבוניה.

M50:2	M59:7	AIT 9:3
גיטא לכל ליליתא דיכרי וניקבתא דמתחזן	גיטא דיכרי וניקבתא משמתא מלויתא דלויא ושריא ודירא בביתיה	גיטי לכל ליליתא דמתחזין להון

M112:7-15	N&Sh B19:11
בישמיה ד(פטט..ס) רבא (8) פרפיאל בי(ל)קו (9) פיניבא פיניבא (10) פיזיחו יחא (11) פרובאל בילקו (12) פיאירן פיניגא (13) אני הוא יהו הי (14) צור קדוש מסג (15) יי שדי	בשמיה דאפסמט רבה אמן אמן סלה

Duplicate texts show quite clearly that, when using a formula, different scribes were not compelled to adhere to the same opening and closing. For example, the duplicates HS 3003, N&Sh B12a and B12b, Müller-Kessler B1 and B2, which all share the same main formula, contain between them three different openings and four types of ending. Another, more extreme example of the adaptation of a basic text is Geller A. One can see in the synopsis with M107 (see below) the extent to which the basic formula has been enlarged and altered so as to make it at first glance almost unrecognisable as a duplicate of M107. Though the variance between these two texts is big, the fact that both bowls have the same drawing of a horse-riding demon and set of abstract magical characters make it certain that they both owe their origin to a common Vorlage.

These kind of differences between the duplicate texts reveal that the work of the magician-scribe was often more than just copying or reciting prescribed formula in which only the name of the client had to be entered. The craft of the skilled practitioner often involved a certain amount of tailoring so that, when he produced an incantation, he could design his product to suit both the client's needs and means. He had a choice of formulae to deal with a variety of maladies or complaints, numerous openings and closings, extensive lists of demons, evil sprits and malicious harmers as well as angels, powerful names and gods. Armed with these tools, he could assemble an endless array of incantations. Although certain aspects of these magic spells are conservative and draw from older inherited traditions, the greater corpus of magic bowls nevertheless presents us with a great variety in both form and content. Whether by choice or as a consequence of the method of the scribes, the magic bowl texts are a testament to the creativity and diversity of their authors.

It was not, however, only the creative aspects of the magician-scribe's method that contributed to new elements and forms within magical incantation texts. It was also a process of corruption of unusual words and phrases, demons', angels' and magical names that were altered by generations of copying and oral transmission. A good example of such a case was noted by Montgomery in his study of the parallels to AIT 11 for which he produced a synopsis.[74] Montgomery points out that the two words אל איסור in the expression אל איסור בגדנא 'for the binding of Bagdana',[75] which occur in Ellis 1:4, got transformed into the name אלאיסור 'Elisur' in which form it is found in AIT 11:4-5. An example from our own corpus is the discrepancy between דכידיבון in M145:2, which appears to be a name, 'of KYDYBWN' (?), as opposed to the expression בריה דבריה, 'the grandson', which occurs in the parallel MS 2053/159:2:

M145:2	MS 2053/159:2-3
לשמיש חור דכידיבון בריה דמלכה רבא	לשמיש וחור בריה דבריה בר (3) מלכה רבה

Magical names are probably the most prone to change as they are often rather unusual combinations of letters which are harder to remember than normal vocabulary. An example of this is a name of Lilith which occurs in AIT 11:6 as חלבס, though in its duplicates it occurs as חבסלס in one case and חלדאס in another. In M163:9-11 there are listed seven magic words that constitute the seal by which it is claimed heaven and earth are bound. A comparison with four other texts in which these seven names are also cited (see table in notes to M163:8-11) shows the different permutations such names can take. Concerning a similar case of a list of angel names which occurs in both N&Sh B1 and B2, Naveh and Shaked commented that the differences in the names point to a combination of both oral and scribal modes of transmission.[76]

[74] Montgomery 1913, pp. 168-170.
[75] Montgomery shows on the basis of the Mandaic parallel that אל in the Jewish Aramaic is but an unusual form for the preposition על (Montgomery 1913, p. 171). See also J. p. 66a.
[76] Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 27.

5.3 Duplicates in different language groups

Montgomery identified a number of duplicate texts that crossed the linguistic boundaries: AIT 11 and AIT 18 in Jewish Aramaic that have a Mandaic counterpart in the form of Lidzbarsky no. 5,[77] and also the formula in AIT 9 in Jewish Aramaic which has two Syriac duplicates, AIT 32 and AIT 33. To the latter we add another pair of duplicates from our present corpus - M50 and M59. In 1998 Müller-Kessler published a synopsis of three texts: BOR in Jewish Aramaic, Louvre AO 17284 in Syriac and Macuch I, a lead roll in Mandaic, which all include a formula that is based on the same Vorlage.[78] This is the first attested case in which a formula is found in all three of the major dialects of the magic bowls. Müller-Kessler summarised her study of the three texts, as did her predecessors Naveh and Greenfield (who were not aware of the existence of the Syriac version), with the conclusion that the Mandaic version is the most likely to have been closest to the original.

These texts bear witness that such formulae were transmitted from one religious community to another. One can only speculate about the way in which such material was passed on. Were such texts copied from one language into another, or were they passed on orally? It is possible that magicians of different religious groups exchanged trade secrets or consulted with each other on professional matters. We are told in b. Shab. 116a that Mar Samuel and a certain Babylonian priest called Ablat discussed medical-astronomical issues together.[79] Was it the work of converted magicians who brought their old stock of trade with them across into new communities? As the world of magic, with its syncretistic tendencies, was so secretive and evidence so sparse, the answers to these questions are elusive.

Harvianen noted a significant difference, apart from the script and dialect, that distinguishes the Jewish Aramaic bowl that he published (BOR) and the Mandaic duplicate that Greenfield and Naveh published. He points out that in the Jewish bowl

---

[77] For the history of the study of this formula, see footnote 48.

[78] The history of research relating to this incantation formula that precedes Müller-Kessler's publication is particularly interesting. It starts with BOR, a Jewish Aramaic bowl, which was published by Harviainen in 1981. The bowl's linguistic peculiarities, many of which are common to the Mandaic dialect, led him to form the idea that the presence of certain linguistic features in Jewish Aramaic constituted an Eastern Aramaic Koiné (see above). In 1985 Naveh and Greenfield published a Mandaic lead roll that had within it a duplicate variation of the Jewish Aramaic BOR. They added a third duplicate, Macuch I - another Mandaic lead roll, to these two texts and produced a synopsis. Their conclusion was that the Jewish Aramaic version was dependent on the Mandaic.

[79] Geller 1997b, p. 57.

'the beginning of the text reads šemaʿu we-qabbelu h de-zahar yy 'hear and accept the Lord who has warned, Yahwe!' While large parts of the text, demons, deities, and curses inclusive, were copied from a Mandaic model–as Greenfield and Naveh have demonstrated–the Mandaean watchword was not accepted by the scribe who employed the Jewish script for the incantation. Instead of the Life, the primordial deity of the Mandaean religion, the (probably) Jewish magician appealed to the God of the Jews, Yahwe, the name of which he spelled in two different abbreviated forms, he and yod-yod'.[80]

Harviainen's findings reveal that in most cases the Mandaic and Jewish Aramaic texts employ their own specific forms of opening formulae. That is to say that there are certain formulae that are specifically Mandaic and are never used in Jewish Aramaic texts, and visa versa. One can, therefore, see that although a Mandaic formula might be copied by Jewish scribes, they will, nevertheless, adapt it in some way so as to make it their own.

[80] Harviainen 1993, p. 34.

Texts -Transcriptions, Translations, Notes and Synopses

M50 (15.5cm * 5cm) & M59 (16.5cm * 5.5cm)

Though M50 and M59 are duplicate texts of each other they are, nevertheless, written by different hands and for different clients. The names of the clients in M50 are Uri daughter of Maroshita and Qaqai son of Ṣiporta, and the name in M59 Ardoi son of Kirkshidukh. Other published duplicates of this formula are AIT 9 which is in Jewish Aramaic and AIT 32 and 33 which are in Syriac Manichaean script. Another three duplicates in Jewish Aramaic have been identified in the Schøyen collection: MS 1927/5, MS 1927/39 and MS 1929/16. The complete transcriptions of these are not provided, though sections that are cited have been collated by the present author. Of special importance is MS 1929/16 as it was written by the same scribe as M59 and displays certain unusual features of this formula which are particular to these two versions. From these eight texts one can discern at least three main variations of this incantation: 1) AIT 32 and 33 the Syriac Manichaean texts, 2) M59 and MS 1929/16 both in Jewish Aramaic and by the same author, and 3) M50, AIT9, MS 1927/5 and MS 1927/39 all in Jewish Aramaic. This last group of texts are not all the same and show an extra number of variations. The differences between all the texts are slight and reveal something about the nature of the deviations which occur in the transformation of a formulaic incantation in the process of its transmission (see synopsis and discussion below).

Common to all the variations of the incantation are: 1) The mention, at the beginning of the text, of the throwing of lots as part of a magical process. 2) A small historiola which relates that a writ of divorce to separate human clients from demons was written in the house of R. Joshua bar Perahia. 3) The invocation of a holy name which is only alluded to, in Hebrew, as the magical manipulation of certain letters. The implied composite name is described as one that was in some way used in the process of creation, as well as being potent for the removal of demons. 4) The historiola ends with a direct statement to the demons that the agency which affected the divorce between them and the human clients had ascended 'on high' to enlist the means by which the their expulsion and destruction will be completed.

Transcription of M50

(1) פורא רמינא ושקילנא {ועב} ועבדא עבדנא והוא הוה במותב רבי יהושוע בר פרחיא (2) כתבנא להון גיטא לכל לילי^יתא דיכרי וניקבתא דמתחזן לה להדא אורי בת מרושיתא ולהדא (3) קאקי בר ציפרתא בחילמא דליליה ובשינתא דיממא גיטא גיט פיטורין ושיבוקין בשום אות מתוך אות (4) ואותיות מתוך אותיות ושום מתוך השמות (...) נ(ק)ב מתוך הגלוי דבהון איתכנעו שמיה (וא)רעה וטוריא בהון איתעקרו וראמתא בהון איתמסיאה שידי חרשי דיוי ולטבי בהון עברי מן עלמא בכין סליקית עליכון למרומא איתיתי עליכון מחבלא לחבלא יתכון (5) ולאפקא יתכון מן ביתה ומן כל אתר בית מישכבהון דהדא אורי בת מרושיתא ולהדא קאקי בר ציפורת(א) ולא תיתחזון להון לא בחילמא דליליה ולא (6) ב(י)שינתא דיממא דפטרנא יתכון מינהון בספר תרוכין וגיט {פט} פיטורין ואיגרת שיבוקין כדת בנת ישראל ומן יומא דין ולעלם אמן אמן סלה הללויה (ל)שמך 7. עשיתי גבריאל ומיכאל ורפאל וחתימין על הדין גיטא

Translation of M50

(1) I am casting and drawing a lot and making a magical act. And it was [as] in the dwelling of R. Joshua bar Perahia. (2) I am writing them a get, to all the male and female Liliths who appear to this Uri daughter of Maroshita and to this (3) Qaqai son of Siporta in the dream of the night and the sleep of the day. A divorce writ, a get of releasing and sending away. By the name of: a letter within a letter (4) and letters from within letters and a name from within the names (...) a gap from within the revealed. By them which heaven and earth were subjugated, mountains were uprooted by them, and heights were melted by them. Demons and dews and 'no good ones' die (lit. - passing from the world) by them. Therefore, I ascended concerning you (or- against you/above you) to on high. I have brought against you a harmer to destroy you (5) and remove you from her house and from every bedroom of this Uri daughter of Merushita and this Qaqai son of Siporta. And may you not appear to them, not in the dream of the night and not (6) in the sleep of the day. For I have released you from them by a document of divorce, and a get of discharge/dismissal, and letters of separation according to the law of the daughters of Israel from this day and forever, amen amen sela hallelujah. (7) For Thy namesake I have done (this magic act). Gabriel and Michael and Raphael and (those) sealed upon this get.

Notes for M50

1 שקילנא The spelling here and in M59 are the same and confirm Epstein's emendation of Montgomery's reconstruction of AIT 9:1 from נא[שקי] to לנא[שקי].

עבדא עבדנא Cf. N&Sh 3:4 ועבדין דמיתעבדין 'charms which are cast.' The root עבד in the context of the magic bowls was discussed by Montgomery[1] who stressed the fact that its spectrum of meanings incorporate both religious and magical practice. It is worth noting in connection with this formula, which incorporates legalistic divorce formula, the common Rabbinic expression עבד עובדא 'issue a halakhic ruling,' as in b. Gitt. 27a עבד רבה עובדא בההוא גיטא 'Rabbah issued a ruling concerning that bill of divorce.'

2 ן<י>דמתחז Cf. AIT 9 דמתחזין. A verb with a third week radical חזי, the masculine participle form is מתחזין, the feminine being מתחזיין.[2]

4 איתמסיאה Montgomery read In AIT 9:7,8 איתמסי אה '... melt away. Oh, ...' Epstein amended to איתמסראה, an ithpe. feminine pl. perfect, on the basis of the Syriac Manichaean duplicates AIT 32 and 33 which has ʿytmsr. However, the reading is clear in both this text and its duplicate MS 1929/16 and an ithpe. feminine pl. perfect of מסי is perfectly acceptable. This form is not attested in the Babylonian Talmud, but can be found in the Targ.-J., cf. Josh. 10:11 - אתרמיאה.

עברי מן עלמא The two Syriac texts AIT 32 and 33 have the same expression as here, which is also attested in the Targ.-J. (Gen. 15:2 דאני עביר מן עלמא). Cf. AIT 9:7 which employs the verb אבד instead of עבר resulting in an equivalent expression which is attested in the Mishna - אבדו מן עלמא.[3]

---

[1] 1913, p. 51.
[2] Epstein 1960, p. 99.
[3] Epstein 1983, p. 339.

איתיתי Montgomery[4] considered this word to be an af. to which the added תי- is a 'Hebraizing' of the form. However, in the Targumim[5] the form אתיתי is well attested as a pe. perfect first person.

מחבלא לחבלא cf. VA2416:17 (Wohlstein, 1894, line 34) ומחבלתא דימחבלתא; cf. Targ.-J. Is. 54:16 מחבלא לחבלא.

6 פשינתא The פ which is at the start of this word should have been a ב as can be seen in AIT 9:9 and M59:12.

כדת בנת ישראל ... בספר תרוכין This is the same wording used for the end of the Get[6] formula except for the ending. The standard formula is כדת משה וישראל (as found in M59:12, see below) whereas our text reads כדת בנת ישראל which is reminiscent of the Targ.-O. to Ex. 21:9, a Biblical reference to the Israelite rules of matrimony, which translates the Hebrew כמשפט הבנות as כהלכת בנת ישראל.

Notes for M59 (see transcription of M59 in the synopsis below)

5 עבדי A plural form cf. M50:1 עבדא.

6 כתבית A perfect form of the verb as opposed to כתבנא in M50:2 which is a participle with first person pronoun suffix.

8 להון דמית(חזיא) In MS 1929/16 the spelling is the same. This is a singular feminine form of the participle and refers to the מלויתא 'the female demon that accompanies'. There is only one client so one would expect לה instead of להון.

9 - 10 הגולי Should be הגלוי as it is clearly written in M50 and MS 1927/5. It is interesting that the scribe repeats this same mistake in his duplicate rendition of the same text in MS 1929/16.

עו<נ>יתכ Cf. יתכנעו in MS 1929/16, and איתכנעו in M50 and AIT 9.

יתכנעו, ויתעקרון, ויתמסרון All ithpe. imperfect forms as they are also found in MS 1929/16. However, in all the other duplicates, the Syriac ones included, these verbs are ithpe. perfect

---

[4] 1913, p. 164.
[5] Dalman 1905, p. 358. Some examples occur in: Targ.-O. Gen. 31:39, Targ.-Ps-J. Deut. 26:10, Targ.-J. Isa. 41:25, Jer. 2:19.
[6] Cf. Amram 1896, frontispiece facsimile.

forms. In the imperfect these verbs do not make as much sense as the subjugation of the heavens and the earth and the formation of its geography by the magical names was an act that occurred in the past. Furthermore, all the other duplicates (apart from MS 1929/16) conjugate these verbs as ithpe. perfect forms. It seems reasonable to assume that at some point of the transmission of this formula a certain scribe, possibly even the one who wrote M59 and 1929/16, copied the אי prefixed to the verbs as וי.

11 לאפוקי An af. infinitive, this form is eastern;[7] cf. M50:5 לאפקא which is the western equivalent.[8]

לאנדואהון The af. infinitive of the root נדי/נדא ('to throw, banish, excommunicate') with a masculine third person plural suffix. Cf. לאלוואיהון in the Targ. Ps-J. Gen. 18:16.[9]

14-15 Zech. 3:2, for a discussion of the use of this verse in the magic bowls see appendix to M108.

Synopsis for M50, M59, AIT 9 and AIT 32

M50	M59	AIT 9	AIT 32 (Syriac)[10]
	(1) לכל (2) ל (3) ליליתא בישתא		(1) מזמן הנא כאסא חתמא דביתה (2) ודאנתתה ודבנה דדינוי בר איספנדרמיד דתיזה מנה מבכלתא (3) וחלמא ביישא
(1) פורא רמינא ושקילנא {ועב} ועבדא עבדנא והוא הוה במותב רבי יהושוע בר פרחיא	(4) דפורא רמינא ושקילנא (5) {ועב} ועבדי עבדנא במתיבי (6) יהושע בר פרחיא	(1) פורא רמינא ו[שקי]לנא ועובדא (2) עבידנא והוא הוה במית[ביה] דרבי יהושע (3) בר פרחיא	פורא רמינא ושקינא עבודא דעביד הוהוא (4) כי הוא דיתיב רב יישוע בר פרהיא
(2) כתבנא להון גיטא לכל ליליתא דיכרי וניקבתא	כתבית (7) גיטא דיכרי וניקבתא משמתא מלויתא דלויא ושריא ודירא	כתבנא להין גיטי לכל ליליתא	וכתב עליהון דסתבריא על כלהון שידא ודיוא (5) וסטנא וללית ולטבא
דמתחזן לה		דמתחזין להון
להדא	בביתיה	בהדין (4)	דאית בביתה

[7] Epstein 1960, p. 76.
[8] Stevenson 1924, p. 61.
[9] Dalman 1905, p. 349.
[10] For the convenience of viewing this synopsis the Syriac text has been rendered in square characters.

AIT 32 (Syriac)[10]	AIT 9	M59	M50
דדינוי בר איספנדרמיד	דבבנוש בר קיומ[תא] ודסרדוסת בת שירין אינתתיה	דארדוי בר (8) כירכשידוך וכל שום דאית לה	אורי בת מרושיתא ולהדא (3) קאקי בר ציפרתא
		דמית(חזיא) להון
	בחילמא דליליה ובשינתא (5) דיממא	בחילמא דליליה ובשינתא דיממא	בחילמא דליליה ובשינתא דיממא
תוב כתב עליהון דסתבריא דלעלם	דגיטא דפי[טורין] ודשבוקין	ואנה כתיבנא עליכון גיטא (9) גיט פיטורין ושבוקין	גיטא גיט פיטורין ושיבוקין
(6) בשום אתמדג [את] אתות אתות מן גות אתות אתות שמא גליונא מן גו גיליונא	בשום אות מתוך אות ואותיות מתוך אותיות (6) ושום מתוך השימות ונקב מתוך [הנקבים]	בשום אות מיתוך אות אותיות מיתוך אותיות ושום {מ} מיתוך השימ<ו>ת וינקבי מיתוך האל הגולי	בשום אות מתוך אות (4) ואותיות מתוך אותיות ושום מתוך השמות (...) נ(ק)ב מתוך הגלוי
דבהנהון איתכביש (7) שמיא וארעא וטורא ובהנהון איתקר רמא[תא] ובהנהון איתמסר	דיבהון איתכנעו שמיא וארעה טוריא איתעקרו ורמתא בהון איתמס(י)אה	דיבהון יתכ<נ>עו (10) שמיה וארעה וטורא בהון ויתעקרון ורמיתא בהון ויתמסרון	דבהון איתכנעו שמיה (וא)רעה וטוריא בהון איתעקרו וראמתא בהון איתמסיאה
[חרשא שידא] ודיוא וסטנא ולליתא ולטבא (8) ובהנהון עבר מן עלמא	(7) שידי חרשי ודיוי ולטבי ולילית בהון אבדו מן עלמא	שידי וחרשי בהון עברי מן עלמא	שידי חרשי דיוי ולטבי בהון עברי מן עלמא
וסליק עליכון למרומא ואיתא עליכון קיבלא חביל[א] לחבלותא ואפקא [לאפק]תכון	בכין סליקית עליהון לימרומא ואיתיתי עליכון (8) מחבלא לחבלא יתהון ולאפקא יתכ[ון	בכין סליקית עליכון למירומא מיחבלא (11) לאפוקי ולאנדויאהון שידין ושיבטין ודיוין וסטנין וחילמי סניתי שגישי ותיזחון ותיפקון	בכין סליקית עליכון למרומא איתיתי עליכון מחבלא לחבלא יתכון (5) ולאפקא יתכון
(9) [מן ב]יתה	מ]ן בתיהון ומן דירתיהון איסקופתיהון ומן כל ... אתר בית מישכביהון	מן ביתיה ואיסקופתיה	מן ביתה ומן כל אתר בית מישכבהון
דדינוי בר איספנדרמיד ומן כל דאיתלה	דבאבנוש בר קיומתא (9) ודסרדוסת בת שירין אינתתיה	דארדוי בר כירכשידוך	דהדא אורי בת מרושיתא ולהדא קאקי בר ציפורת(א)
	ותוב לא [תיתחזון להון] לא בחילמא דליליה ולא בשינ[תא דיממ]א	(12) ולא תתחזון להון לא בחילמא דליליה ולא בשינתא ד<יממה>	ולא תיתחזון להון לא בחילמא דליליה ולא (6) ב(ו)שינתא דיממא
שביקית[ון]	דפטרנא ותרכנה [ית]כ[ין]	מיטול דפטרנא יתיכון מיניכון	דפטרנא יתכון מינהון

AIT 32 (Syriac)[10]	AIT 9	M59	M50
בדסתבריא ואסיר [וח]תים ומחתם איכין דש[ידא קדמיא לאדר]יבו (10) ואנשא קדמיא דעוטר להאוו תוב אסיר חתים ומחתם הנא דסתבריא בשום יה יה יה יה יה יה יה עא [אמין אמין סלה (11) ניתח]תים וניתנטר ביתה ודורה דדינוי בר איספנ[דרמיד] מן מבכלתא וחלמא בישא ולוטתא ותיתחת[ים] ותיתנטר [אנתתה ובנה] (12) מן מבכלתא וחלמא בישא ולוטתא ונידרא ו[חרשא] ....תקים [מ]נהלי (?) ה אמין	(10) בגט פטו[רין ו]ספר תירוכין ואגרת שיבוק[ין] כדת בנת ישראל (11) אני לישמך עשיתי יהוה אלהים צבאות גבריאל ומיכאל ורפאל חתומך על הדא חתמתא ועל הדא איסקופתה אמן אמן	בסיפר תירוכי<ן> וגיטא גיט פיטורין ואיגרת שבוקין כדת משה ו<י>שראל (13) לשמך אני עשיתי גבריאל verso (14) גבריאל ו(מיכ)אל ורפיאל ואור<יאל> .....יאל בשום (סו)ריאל סוריאל ..... יהוק יהיק רבה סלה ויאמר יהוה אל שטן יגער יהוה בך (15) השטן יגער יהוה בך הבוחיר בירושלים הלא זה אוד (מוצל) מיאש	בספר תרוכין וגיט {פט} פיטורין ואיגרת שיבוקין כדת בנת ישראל ומן יומא דין ולעלם אמן אמן סלה הללויה (ל)שמך (7) עשיתי גבריאל ומיכאל ורפאל חתימין על הדין גיטא

The synopsis reveals a number of interesting differences which illustrate the nature of the transmission of this incantation, specifically amongst the Jewish and Syriac scribes. Both Montgomery and Epstein worked on the Jewish Aramaic text (AIT 9) and the two Syriac duplicates (AIT 32 and 33) commenting on the textual tradition of this formula which these two cultural groups shared. Montgomery claimed that the Jewish Aramaic text is 'doubtless dependent upon'[11] the Syriac texts. This statement is not qualified but for a comment that AIT 9 is the inscription of an illiterate hand. Epstein argued against the priority of the Syriac partly on the basis that both AIT 32 and 33 use the expression עבר מן עלמא, whereas AIT 9 uses אבדו מן עלמא which is similar to the Mishnaic expression.[12] Such an argument is untenable in the light of our two new Jewish Aramaic duplicates which both use the Aramaic expression with the verb עבר.

Epstein concluded solely by stating that it is likely that both versions of this formula were based on an earlier source. The mention of Joshua bar Perahia and the allusion to the manipulation of the divine name appear to suggest that the source is Jewish.

Epstein noted the discrepancy between the nouns and qualifying verbs when comparing the Syriac section AIT 32:6,7 with its equivalent Jewish Aramaic AIT 9:6:

[11] Montgomery 1913, p. 162.
[12] Epstein 1960, p. 339.

	AIT 9:6	AIT 32:6,7
1	דיבהון איתכנעו שמיא וארעה	דבהנהון איתכביש (7) שמיא וארעא וטורא
2	טוריא איתעקרו
3	ורמתא בהון איתמס(י)אה	ובהנהון איתקר רמא[תא]
4		ובהנהון איתמסר [חרשא שידא] ודיוא

Whereas, in the Syriac text the word טורא is modified by the first verb (איתכביש), in the Jewish Aramaic texts (AIT 9:6, M50:4 and M59:10) the equivalent טוריא occurs with the second verb - איתעקרו. This is the point where the Syriac and Jewish Aramaic versions fall out of step. The equivalent to this second verb in the Syriac version (איתקר) relates to רמאתא which in the Jewish Aramaic text is modified by a third verb - איתמסיאה. The equivalent of this third verb in the Syriac version (איתמסר) refers to the list of demons that follow. The differences between the two versions of this particular section are interesting as they could reflect a corruption in the transmission of the text from one Aramaic dialect to the other. If such a corruption has indeed occurred, then it has not affected the outcome as both versions preserve readings which are sensible and grammatically sound.

There are two other elements of similarity between M59 and MS 1929/16, both written by the same scribe, and the two Syriac texts. 1) The equivalent to AIT 32:7 איתמסר in M59:10 and MS 1929/16:7 is ויתמסרון, as opposed to אתמסיאה in both AIT 9 and M50. 2) In AIT 32:5 there is the added תוב כתב עליהון 'again he wrote concerning them.' Similarly in M59:8 (and MS 1929/16:5) ואנה כתיבנא עליכון 'and I write against you,' missing from both AIT 9 and M50.

Comparing these texts enables an interesting insight into the creativity of the individual scribe. For example in the transcription of M59, it seemed reasonable to consider לכל ל לילית בישתא as the first three lines of the text. These words are couched within the rather elaborate image of the demon which is sprawled across the centre of the bowl. Furthermore, they are the first words to be read if one follows the usual clockwise spiraling of the text from the middle outwards. These words also serve as an eye-catching caption. In M50:2 and AIT 9:3 these words appear after the word גיטא. A further inspection of M59 reveals that the words in question appear above the word גיטא in line 7, rather than after them as they appear in MS 1929/16 (written by the same scribe) which has no illustration of a demon. It might be argued that in M59 these words were put above the word גיטא, i.e. the correct place in the formula, גיטא ^לכל ל ליליתא בישתא^. However, the scribe added the relative pronoun ד to פורא which clearly suggests that something ought to precede it. Thus it appears that the scribe was consciously exploiting the visual arrangement of the text.

Another small but revealing detail is that in M59:8 the words דמתחזיא להון 'whom appears to them' appears after the name of the client. Whereas, in M50, AIT 9 and MS 1929/16 (which was written by the same hand as M59) the equivalent words appear before the name of the client. This alteration of the formula became necessary to the scribe of M59 who added the optional ושריא ודירא 'who dwells and inhabits' which necessitated that 'in the house of ...' immediately follow. Wishing not to omit any part of the formula he then added 'whom appears to them' after the name of the client.

M101 (17.6cm*7cm)

This text is written in a very neat square script. Apart from ה and ח, all the letters are clearly distinguished. The text appears to have been written for the general protection of the client, her unborn baby and her dwellings. The Aramaic displays a number of western tendencies, such as the infinitive forms of the verbs in the first two lines and the ה endings of some of the nouns (l. 3 בישתה, l. 4 ניקבתה, lines 4 and 5 עקרה). The text is in Hebrew from the end of line eight until the word בשום in line eleven. Part of this section is an almost exact parallel to a passage in Hekhalot Rabatti (see below). Of particular interest in this section is the Hebrew threat formula in lines 9 and 10 which is written in the third person against demons. This statement is something of an echo to the threat which the demons received, in Aramaic, in direct speech (the second person), in lines 6 and 7. The Hebrew threat to the demons is written in a post Biblical Hebrew, consistent with the Hekhalot material and possibly originating from texts which are, as yet, unknown to us.

Transcription of M101

(1) הדין כתבה למיסר ולמיבלם ולשצטמא (2) ולאפקא ולרחקא כל שידי ודיוי וירורי ולילין ומבכלין (3) ורוחי בישתה וחומרי זידניתא ופתכרי ופתכרתא (4) דיכרי וניקבתה וכל מ(חא)תא אינקיתא ומשמתא ומבכלתא ורוח עקרה (5) ולילית עקרה זכר ונקיבה כולכון שמ(ע)ו מומתא דא וקבילו שבועתא הדא (6) ופוקו ורחיקו מן מחלפתא בת אימאי ומן עוברה דבימעה ומן ביתה דחיתה ביה ומן דירתה (7) דילה ותוב לא תיתון עלה ולא תיתחזון לה לא בביתה ולא בדירתה מן יומא דין ושעה דא ולעלם במפתחי חותם (8) בפיתוחי חותם בחותם חותם בינזה בינזף בינ(..)ה בשץ בקץ בנף ב(לז) בלן בניזפי בלן בטש בצף ביהו יהו (9) הי הו הוה ובעיזקתא רבתא שאין כל הטבעות כמותה וכל לילין ומבכלין וכל רוח רעה זכר ונקיבה שישמע (10) ויצא מן מחלפתא בת אימאי ומן ביתה כוליה וילך לדרכו לשלום ומי שלו ישמע יהא מנודא לטעצש יהוה אלהי ישראל לו (11) ולכתר ראשו ולכיסי כבודו ולבית דין של מעלה ולבית דין של מטה ולכל צבא בית דין מרום בשום טיטינוס חי חי מץ פגרי רעש ופגרי (12) רגש קל פגרי רעש קל מילי מיליה תיגלה (סלד)יאה קיצתס פצמצין ניאסין אקרקפה דני וארישה דביניתה חתם חזית(יה) לבר שתי שתי (פ)נדי (13) סכסין סק(ס)ון קץ שמיה עיקרון קרן לך דין שמה רבה דמלאך מותא עריק מיניה אמן אמן סלה

Translation of M101

(1) This writing to bind, and muzzle, and lock up, (2) and take out, and remove all sheds, and dews, and howlers, and Lils, and tormentors, (3) and evil spirits, and wicked charms, male idols and female idols, (4) male and female, and all plagues necklace charms, and ban, and tormentor, and barren spirit, (5) and barren Lilith, male or female.

All of you, hear this adjuration and receive this oath. (6) Go out and remove yourselves from Mahlafta daughter of Imai and from her foetus in her belly, and from her house in which she lives, and from her dwelling. (7) Again, may you not come against her, and may you not appear to her, not in her house and not in her dwelling from this day and this time and forever.

By seal engravers (8) by seal engravings by seal of seal, by YNZH by YNZP by YN(..)H by ŠṢ by QṢ by NP by (LZ) by LN by NYZPY by LN by ṬŠ by ṢP by YHW YHW (9) HY HW HWH and by the great signet ring of which none of the rings are like.

And all lils and tormentors and every evil spirit , male and female who will obey (10) and go out from Mahlapta daughter of Imai, and from her entire house. May he go on his way in peace. And whosoever shall not obey will be banished to ṬA'SŠ YHWH God of Israel, to him (11) and to the crown of his head and to the throne of his glory and to the law court of above and to the law court of below and to all the host of the law court of heaven.

By the name ṬYṬYNWS ḤY ḤY MṢ bodies of commotion and bodies (12) of tumult, sound of bodies of commotion, sound of words of words TYGLH (SLD)Y'AH QYṢTS PṢMṢYN NYA'SYN. Upon her head jars and upon the top of her hair he sealed ḤZYT(YH) LBR ŠTY ŠTY PNDY (13) SKSYN SQ(.)WN QṢ his name.

Barren one, we called you! This is the great name from which the angel of death flees. Amen amen selah.

Notes for M101

1 לשצטמא cf. b. Git. 68a MS Paris שיצטמיה and variants: MS Munich 95 שסטמיה, MS Arras 969 שסתמיה and MS Wilna סתמיה. In b. Git. 68a this verb is employed to express the fastening of the iron chain which was thrown over Asmedai the demon. Cf. the Mandaic cognate sṣtm (DM p. 334a, b) 'to fetter, shackle' for which there is the equivalent ṣṣtm (DM p. 396b). Macuch explained the change of s > ṣ before ṭ as 'a general Semitic phenomenon'.[13] The same change from ס to צ is attested in Babylonian Aramaic[14] and could explain the differences between the variant forms in the b. Git. 68a manuscripts. Macuch understood the Mandaic sṣtm to be a Safel form.[15] Likewise, Kohut[16] considered the form in b. Git. (MS Munich 95) שסטמיה to be a Shafel derived from the root סתם.

5 זכר ונקיבה These are Hebrew nouns as opposed to the Aramaic דיכרי וניקבתה in line four.

6 עוברה דבמיעה Cf. the expression עולה דבמעיה in amulet A[17] lines 7,16 and 30.

חיתה As this text is for the protection of a pregnant woman it is possible to consider this word to be a variant spelling of חייתא 'midwife'.[18]

7,8 במפתחי חותם בפיתוחי חותם בחותם חותם This is reminiscent of the holy diadem of pure gold mentioned in Ex. 39:30 upon which was incised the 'sealed inscription', פתוחי חותם, consisting of the words 'Holy to the Lord'. The potency of seals with magic words upon them is evident from their numerous invocations in magic bowls.[19] Knowledge of various seals, such as those often described in the Hekhalot literature, was apparently considered essential for the mystic who would traverse the heavenly palaces.[20] As this text is concerned with a pregnant client and her unborn feotus, mentioning the barren spirit and barren Lilith (lines 4,5), it is worth noting Gen. 30:22 and Targ. Ps-J. of the same verse. In this verse we are told that God took heed of Rachel's plight and 'opened her womb', ויפתח את רחמה. The word ויפתח, from the same root as מפתחי and פיתוחי, is elaborated in the Targ. Ps-J. which records a midrash about four magical 'keys' which were handed down directly by the Lord. One of these keys was the 'key of barrenness', מפתח עקרתא.[21]

---

[13] Macuch 1965, p. 69-70.
[14] Epstein 1960, p. 19.
[15] Macuch 1965, p. 248.
[16] Aruch Completum 1955, vol. 8, p. 117b.
[17] Montgomery 1911, pp. 272-279, and republished in Naveh and Shaked 1993, pp. 91-95.
[18] J. p. 455a,b.
[19] Montgomery 1913, p. 53.
[20] Scholem 1960, p. 33.
[21] In the b. Tan. 2a,b there is another version of this midrash which tells of three such keys one of which is also the key of barrenness.

10-11 יהא ... מרום This is a near precise parallel to a verse in Hekhalot Rabatti, cf. Schäfer Synopsis §92:

M101 יהא מנודא לטעצש יהוה אלהי ישראל לו (11) ולכתר ראשו ולכיסי כבודו ולבית דין של

HR יהא בנידוי לטעצש יוי אלהי ישרי לו ולכסא כבודו ולכתר ראשו לבית דין של

M101 מעלה ולבית דין של

HR מעלה ולבית דין של

M101 מטה ולכל צבא בית דין מרום

HR מטה ולכל צבא מרום

This section appears towards the start of Hekhalot Rabatti, following the description of the virtues of those who descend to the Merkabah. Though this Hekhalot section is in itself somewhat unclear,[22] the particular clause, which is parallel to the one in our text, appears to be an invocation given to those who descend to the Merkabah for protection. The name טעצש is appended to a standard name of God and also appears, in the same form, at the very beginning of Hekhalot Rabatti (Schäfer Synopsis §81). This name also appears in Maaseh Merkabah (Schäfer Synopsis §591) in a list of divine names. The complete form of this name (טעצש ביה יוי אלהי ישראל) is also employed in an amulet from the Geniza, TTS K1.168 line 55 (Schiffman and Swartz 1992 p. 147), which was written for protection from slander and witchcraft and for the restoration of the love of the client's wife. Cf. also טשעצש T.-S. K 1.144 3b:15.[23]

שלו Defective spelling of שלא.

11-13 ... טיטינוס Part of this sequence appears in Gordon B:8-9 who reads it as: טיטינוס חתימין פגרי דעש ופגרי דעש קל פגרי דעש קל מילי מילי אתיגלא. This sequence, followed by 'this is the great name from which the angel of death flees' (line 12 in our text), is almost exactly duplicated in MS 2053/158:12-14. In MS 2053/158, it is prefaced by כתבית עליכון 'I have written against you', which suggests that this is a fixed formula consisting of a complex magical name followed by a statement of its particular function i.e. the removal of the danger of death from the client. The translation to פגרי רעש ופגרי (12) רגש קל פגרי רעש קל מילי מיליה is given tentatively. Cf. III Enoch chapter 42:5 וראיתי רעמים וקולות שהם מרעישים

[22] Schäfer 1987, p. 9.

בתוך להבי אש 'And I saw thunders and voices that were roaring in the midst of the fiery flames'.[24] Cf. also T.-S. K 21.95.P 3b:13-15:[25] קול פיגרי רגש קול דממה (רעש) דקה הים קול חשמל חשמלה (חמ) רבה דמלל מן גי להבי אשתא; a reference in which פיגרי רגש appears in combination with דקה ... קול דממה, a reference to Elijah's divine encounter in I Kings 19:12,[26] and the sound of the חשמל from the vision of Ezekiel 1:4. Cf. another variant of this composite name which occurs in the Pišra' de-R. Ḥanina' ben Dosa':[27] ... דעל שמיה חקוק תגצשמעץ וטעצש יהוה צבאות אלי מערכות ישראל שנקרא שם כל קשב בקש קול פגרי רעש קל חשמל וחשמלא רבא די ממלל[28] מגוש להבת אשתא ...

---

[23] Schäfer and Shaked 1997, p. 34.
[24] Odeberg 1973, pp. 131 and נה.
[25] Schäfer and Shaked 1997, p. 34.
[26] ואחר הרעש אש לא באש יהוה ואחר האש קול דממה דקה 'After the earthquake–fire; but the Lord was not in the fire, and after the fire–a soft murmuring sound'.
[27] Tocci 1986, p. 102.
[28] It might be preferable to read מגו שלהבת.

M102 (19.8cm*5cm)

There are thirteen lines of text in this bowl which is written in a fine hand. Most of the text is readable though there are some slightly faded sections for which a reading was more difficult to extract, as well as some unusual vocabulary and syntax. It is possible that this is partly due to corruptions that occurred in the transmission of the text. Noteworthy is the variety of prefixes for the imperfect third person masculine forms (eleven with נ' ten with ל' and two with י'). With the exception of נישתדרון in line seven, a pattern of the dispersion of these forms can be observed: נ' is used in lines 1-4 and 9-12; ל' in lines 5-8 and 13-14. It is quite possible that this text was composed from other formula, each with its own morphological characteristics.

This bowl is a curse text commissioned by a certain Safra son of Rabita to counteract, and indeed redirect, the sorceries that he believed Ahatoi and Abirta the daughters of Ahati, had enacted against him. The text is elaborate and includes some unusual but impressive imagery. Noteworthy is the presence in l. 10 of a variation of the first benediction of the Shmoneh-Esreh prayer. This is particularly interesting as it is a duplicate of an adjuration for help in times of trouble that appears in an Hekhalot text.

Transcription of M102

(1) מזמן הדין רזא למיפך חרשי דניתהפכון מן ספרא בר (2) רביתא {וניתהפכון} וניתהפכון על אחתאוי בת אחאתי ועל אחאתי ועל כל מאן דשדרינון (3) ונ[יתהפכ]ון על כל מאן דעבדינון ושדרינון וקר<י>נון בשום מלאכה רבה די משלט על (4) שמיא ועל ארעא ומשלט על חרשין בישין וסדנין אפיכין הוא ניהדרינון לחרשין בישין על אחתאוי בת אחאתי (5) ועל אוירתא בת אחאתי וכל אסואתא דעבדין לה יהוין לביש ואו איסתרתא די פתכרי דעבדין לה לאחתאוי דא ולאוירתא לישתדרון פתכרי דמערבא ודמדנחא (6) ודגרביא ודתימן ואו איסתרתא דלוטתא עבדן לה לא[ח]ת[אוי דא ולאוירתא דא צר לוט^א^תא דארעה ודישמיא ודמיתי ודחיי ודליטין בית (7) קברי דל(קדם) בני שא(ד)א וקדם פתכרי ואיסתרתא נישתדרון עלה דאחתאוי דא ודאוי^ר^תא ולא ליתקבל דרמנא עליהון או פישרא דחרשין ודין ליעבדו להון לא ל(ב)[.....]ון (8) להון חרשין בישין וסדני אפיכי או כיבשא או כיבשי וסכרא פומא עדו כנופיא עבדון ליהוי לה לא ליהוי לה לאחתאוי בת אחאתי ולאוירתא דא צר ^(לי)הוי^ חרשין בישין (9) איך טורי ורמ(א)[תא] ונילבשונה לאחתאוי

ולאוירתא חרשין בישין איך לבושא דכיבי ונידילון עליהון חרשין בישין ונידימון עלה דאחתאוי ודאוירתא וניטיסון עליהון איך ציפרי (10) בשום גבריאל מלאכה ומיכאל מלאכה אחית אחוגואל אחודיאל גאו גואל טוריאל זבולא זבולתיאל ומרגיותיאל ושמיה ברוך אתה יהוה אלוהינו מלך העולם האל הגדול הגיבור והנורא והמופלא והמ(ע)ולא ומשבענא עלך (11) מיכאל סר הגדול הוא שמיה שמה דאיתגלי לה לאחתאוי ולאוירתא צר כל רזי רניתא ולא ~~תישת~~ לישתמודע כל דעבדו לה לא[חת]אוי ולאוירתא ונישת(ו)ש ליבהון בשום ג[בר]יאל ומיכאל וירפאל ואזחיאל מיגואל (12) ודשמא דכיא הוא ניהפוכונון לחרשין בישין מיניה דספרא בר רביתא מן מתן וארבעין ותמניא הדמי קומתיה ויזלון על אחתאוי ועל אוירתא צר בשום ביה יהו הוה ברזי עילאי וברזי תחתאי ובשבעה רזי [ע]ילאי (13) ובשבעה ראזי תחתאי באתא יחידיתא דבר גיסא לית לה (וההוא) רזא וחתמתא דאיתיהיב לבני אינשא לישתקיל מינה דאחתאוי דא ודאוירתא דא וליתנשי כל דליבהון ידע ואתא יחידיתא לא תיתגלי להון וכל רזי וליתנשי ליבהון ולישתקיל טעמהון דא(חתוי) דא {דאוי} ודאוירתא (14) ולישתקיל טעמהון דהו(ן בהונ)א מן ליביהון גאו אל גואל בשום שמה רבה וקדישה דקאים קד(ם) עלם עלמין אמן אמן סלה שריר וקים

Translation of M102

(1) This mystery is appointed for overturning sorceries, so that they (the sorceries) may be overturned from Safra son of (2) Rabita and turn back against Ahatoi daughter of Ahati and against Ahati and against all who sent them. (3) May (the sorceries) be turned back against all who made them and sent them and recited them.

By the name of the great angel who has power over (4) the heavens and over the earth, and who has power over evil sorceries and perverted devils. May he return the evil sorceries to Ahatoi daughter of Ahati (5) and to Abirta daughter of Ahati. May all the healings that have been made for her come out badly. Woe, goddess for whom idols that are working for this Ahatoi and Abirta. May the idols of the west and of the east (6) and of the north and of the south be dispatched. Woe, goddess for whom curses are working on behalf of Ahatoi and this Abirta.

SR.

The curses of the earth and of the heavens and of the dead and of the living, and of those who are cursing a (7) cemetery before (in the presence of) sons of demons and before idols, and Ishtars. May they be dispatched against this Ahatoi and (this) Abirta. May no remedy or dissolving of sorceries be received for them, and may that which is made for them not .... (8) for them, evil sorceries and perverted devils. Either the press or presses and shutting of the mouth have leaked as a sieve. May that which is intended for her not be for her, for Ahatoi daughter of Ahati and this Abirta.

SR.

May the evil sorceries (9) be as mountains and high places and clothe Ahatoi and Abirta with evil sorceries as a garment of sores. May evil sorceries be drawn against them, and may they come to rest upon Ahatoi and Abirta, and may they sweep upon them like birds.

(10) By the name of Gabriel the angel and Michael the angel, bring down Ahuguel Ahudiel GA'W GWA'L Ṭuriel ZBWLA' Zbwltiel and Mrgywtiel, and his name: Blessed art Thou, 'YHWH our God, King of the universe, the great, mighty' (Neh. 9:32, Deut. 10:17), revered, wondrous' and (lofty). I adjure you (11) Michael the great prince. His is the name, the name which was revealed to Ahatoi and Abirta.

SR.

All the mysteries of defamation. May nothing that has been done for Ahatoi and Abirta be recognized, and may their hearts become confused.

By the name of Gabriel and Michael and Raphael and Azḥiel and Miguel (12) and that which is the pure name, may they overturn the evil sorceries from Safra bar Rabita, from the 248 limbs of his body, and may they go to Ahatoi and to Abirta.

SR.

By the name, by YH YHW HWH, by upper mysteries and by lower mysteries and by the seven upper mysteries (13) and by the seven lower mysteries. By the unique character of which there is no relation. May that mystery and seal which was given to humankind be taken away from this Ahatoi and this Abirta. May everything that their hearts know be forgotten. May the unique character not be revealed to them, nor all the mysteries. May their hearts forget, (14) and may the faculties of Ahatoi and Abirta be taken away. May their faculties, that is theirs by nature, be taken away from their hearts. Exalt, avenging God. By the name of the Great and Holy one who exists forever, amen amen selah, firm and established.

Notes for M102

1 There are two other published magic bowls that open with a statement for the reversing of sorceries which have been sent against the clients back to their senders. One is VA 2416[29] (הדין קובלא למיפך חרשי) and the other is Yamauchi 1985 (מזמן הדין מילתא לאפוכי חרשי). The overturning of sorceries is not an uncommon motif in magic bowls and appears within a number of other texts such as Ellis 3:4, N&Sh B23:8,9 as well as Gordon 5:3-6 and 6:7,8.

2 שדרינון The verb שדר appears three more times in this text, in lines 3, 5 and 7. Although in this text it has the straightforward meaning of 'to send, dispatch', in Gordon 6:6 שדא דשדרתא, Geller D:10 שידי דשדרתא and K3449:6,7 ורוחי דמשתדר בחרשין ושידי דשדרתא there appear to be demons who are generically described as 'demons of dispatch'.

4 סדנין אפיכין This expression appears also in AIT 7:11 where Montgomery read סרנין אפיקי. This was corrected by Epstein[30] to [סדנין אפי]כין on the basis of Mandaic parallels: sʿdʾnyʾ ʿpykyʾ 'perverted devils'.[31]

5 דעבדין לה The verb here is a masculine plural active participle and therefore must refer to things or persons other than the אסואתא 'healings', which are feminine. However, the form can be analyzed as a passive periphrasis.[32] One would expect the plural להון rather than the singular לה, the sense being 'to each of them individually'. Cf. M163 להדין מיהלאד ובראן בני .... In both cases a singular pronoun is used to introduce a number of persons.

ואו is repeated as the first word in a parallel clause in l. 6. This could also be understood as the conjunction or ... either ... Thus an alternative translation would be: 'Either a goddess for whom idols are made .... Or a goddess for whom curses ...'.

6 צר appears also in lines, 8, 11 and 12. It could be an imperative masculine singular form of the root צרא/צרי 'to burst', i.e. צרי * or צר *.[33] This verb is used also in AIT 6:11 as part of a threat narrative to demons: 'And whoever will transgress ... shall ... burst like a grain of [29] Published by Wohlstein 1894 and collated by the present author in 1998.

---

[30] Epstein 1983, vol.1, p. 335.
[31] DM p. 310.
[32] Rosenthal 1961, p. 56.

wheat (ניצטרי בי בינא)'. Cf. b. Pes 110a, 110b and 111b which mention demons bursting. The verb used in the Talmud is פקע. Alternatively צר could be the 3rd person masculine perfect of the verb צור 'to wrap, tie up', which is akin to the prevalent concept of binding in magical texts. This word has been left untranslated as the portions of text between its occurrences do not seem to need it, its subject unclear and its meaning uncertain. In fact it is possible that it functions as a name (see below) or a punctuation marker.

7 עליהון The letters י and ו are clearly distinguished in most cases in this bowl, yet in all cases (להון lines 7 and 13, עליהון l. 9, ליבהון lines 11,13 and 14 and טעמהון lines13 and 14) where the 3rd person feminine plural suffix pronoun ין- would be expected the masculine equivalent ון- occurs.

פישרא דחרשין cf. b. BM 29b (=b. Hul. 84b) כסא דחרשין ולא כסא דפושרין which Montgomery tentatively suggested could be a reference to magic bowls. He offered as a possible translation 'the cup of the sorcerers and not the cup of those who break sorcery'.[34] In the Havdala de R. Akiva, paragraph 5,[35] there is an incantation that employs the root פשר, meaning 'to dissolve' or 'disenchant' in both its verbal and nominal forms. This formula is like our text in that it appeals for the return of malicious acts to their source. The words חרשיא ליפשרון in l. 26 are particularly close to the expression in our bowl. Note that the פישרא itself is described in lines 1 and 5 in terms that could equate it with the domestically installed amuletic object.[36]

(1) אנא פלוני בר פלוני ביתאי על פישרא באני ועל פישרא בניא איסקופתא[י] ... (3) ... נפקית ואמרית להון איתו ועולו חרשין בישין ועובדי (4) תקיפין. (5) מלילו ואמרו לי היכדין ניעול לביתך (6) דביתך על פישרא באני ועל פישרא בניא איסקופתך ... (8) ... ואמרית להון (9) ... איכמרו ואזילו עד בית מיש<ד>רניכון ... (13) ... איכמרו ואזילו ועולו לביתהון דמריכון ... (22) פשור ליה לפלי בר פלי ... (26) ... חרשיא ליפשרון (27) ועובדיהון ליפרקון ונפרחון ונתבעין ולא נשתכחין ... (28) ... נתהפכון חרשין על עובדיהון ועובדין (29) תקיפין ועל משדרניהון ... (32) תוב שרי ליה ואפשר ליה ופשיר ליה לפלי בר פלי ...

---

[33] See Epstein 1960, p. 100.
[34] 1913, p. 43, n.19.
[35] Scholem 1980, pp. 262-266.

(1) I am NN son of NN. My house is built on a disenchantment, and upon a disenchantment my threshold is built ... (3) I went and said to them: 'come and enter evil sorceries and powerful (4) magic acts'. (5) They spoke and said to me: 'how can we enter your house? (6) For your house is built on a disenchantment, and on a disenchantment your threshold is built ...' ... (8) ... and I said to them: (9) ' ... may your magic be uprooted[37] and go to the house of those who sent you ... (13) ... may your magic be uprooted and go and enter the houses of your masters ...' ... (22) Disenchant for NN son of NN ... (26) ... may the sorceries dissolve (27) and their magic works break up, and may they fly away, and if they be requested may they not be found ... (28) ... may the sorceries be overturned upon those who made them, and powerful (29) magic acts on those who sent them ... (32) Again, loosen and dissolve for him, dissolve for NN son of NN ...

8 ליהוי לה לא ליהוי לה Cf. the expression ויהוי מה דהוי 'and come what may'.

10 מרגיותיאל Cf. Havdala de R. Akiva, paragraph 7 lines 23-24,[38] where this name is cited as one of the names of Metatron: קורא אני לך מרגיואי״ל מרגיותיאי״ל שרנאי״ל הוזיהי״ו מרגיויאי״ל זהו מטטרון.

והמ(ע)ולא ... ברוך An elaboration of part of the first of the Eighteen Benedictions which includes the glorification of God with the three epithets האל הגדול הגבור והנורא (Deut. 10:17 and Nehemiah 9:32). We know from b. Ber. 33b, b. Meg. 25a, y. Ber. 9:3, 12d and Midrash Tehillim Ps. 19 that such extensions to the formula as we have in our text were frowned upon. Cf. Schäfer Synopsis §503 (Beschwörung/ Namen) וזה אשר תקרא ברוך אתה אלהינו מלך העולם האל המלך הגדול הגבור והנורא והנשגב והנפלא והעונה בעת צרה בקוראי עננו אלהי צדקי בצר הראתי לי חנני ושמע תפילתי ... In the above invocation there appear צרה 'trouble' and בצר which seem, with the following הראתי לי, to have suffered some sort of corruption. If such a text was available to a Babylonian practitioner, it is possible that בצר could have been interpreted as a name invocation, namely: 'by SR'. For מפולא as an epithet of God cf. T.S. K 1.144 1b:12-14 שמך הגדול הגיבור והנורא ... והמופלא.[39] The last epithet in the formula in our text - המ(ע)ולא, if indeed the bracketed letter is an ע, is reminiscent of אל עליון which appears at the end of the first benediction.

---

[36] Only the relevant sections of this text are given.

[37] See Scholem 1980, pp. 263-264 n. 70, and 1960 p. 97 who considers מכמרי as an adaptation of the Greek macamarei 'nets' to mean "the net that a magic spell casts on a person". However, in Mandaic the verb ḥmr is used in magic bowls in the sense of 'return', which in this case would also make perfect sense (Yamauchi 1967, p. 331).

11 מיכאל סר הגדול cf. Dan. 12:1 מיכאל השר הגדול. Also b. AZ 42b (=b. Hul. 40a) where Michael the great prince is numbered amongst seas, rivers, a desert, the sun, moon, stars and planets, any of which may be invoked by idolaters at the slaughtering of an animal.

רניתא Derived from the pa. of the verb רנן which has the sense of 'to murmur, express displeasure, indignation' or even 'malicious gossip' or 'defamation'.[40] One nominal, feminine, form with this sense is attested in the Targ.-J. Ez. 36: רננת עם (MT דבת עם) 'unfavorable report, defamation, whispering'. The form rnyt' is also attested in Mandaic (DM p. 436b).

לישתמודע The imperfect form of אשתמודע I 'to be recognized, known' (J. p. 131b).

ש(ו)נישת Read נישתגש (!).

14 הונא cf. Sokoloff 1992 p. 161b כן תהפכון לבה והונה וכוליתה 'so you should upset his heart, his sense and his kidney'.

Appendix to M102

There is a striking correlation between our text and a section from the Sepher Ha-Razim, first heaven lines 46-71,[41] which is intended for one who wishes to persecute (להצר) a foe. The Hebrew root צרר or צור encompasses the meanings 'to persecute' and 'to oppress' and is related to the noun צר 'oppressor, adversary'. These meanings are not applicable to the same root in Aramaic. It is conceivable that the Hebrew meaning as found in Sepher Ha-Razim and the Hekhalot adjuration which is parallel to l. 10 of our text (see note above) has something to do with the use of צר in M102. Other similarities between our text and Sepher Ha-Razim are: 1) the mention of the spirits of the four cardinal directions (M102:5,6 = Sepher Ha-Razim lines 56-59); 2) a negation of healing or remedy for the adversary

---

[38] Scholem 1980, p. 270.
[39] Schäfer and Shaked 1997, p.31.
[40] Levy 1889, vol. 4 p. 456b 'Nachrede, den Unwillen äussern'.
[41] Margolioth 1966, pp. 69-70.

(M102:5,7 = Sepher Ha-Razim line 61); 3) ridding the adversary of their thoughts and faculties (M102:13 = Sepher Ha-Razim line 65).

M102	Sepher Ha-Razim
צר in lines 6,8,11 and 12	אלה המלאכים המלאים אף וחימה וממונים על כל דבר קרב ומלחמת ונכונים להצר ולענות עד מות לאיש ואין בם רחמים כי אם ליקום ולהפרע ממי שנמסר בידם. ואם ביקשתה לשלחם על שונאך או על בעל חובך או להפוך אנייה או להפיל חומה בצורה או לכל	46
	עסק אויביך להשחית ולהרע, בין שתרצה להגלותו ובין להפילו במיטה ובין להכהות מאור עיניו בין להאסירו ברגליו בין להצר לו לכל דבר, קח בידך מים מן שבעה מעיינות בשבעה לחדש בשבע שעות ביום בשבע נבלי חרש שלא נכנסו באור ואל תערבם ביחד אלה עם אלה ותניחם תחת הכוכבים ז' לילות ובלילה השביעית	50
Lines 5,6 לישתדרון פתכרי דמערבא ודמזנחא ודגרביא ודתימן	קח לך פיאלין של זכוכית לשם אויביך ושפוך המים לתוכה ושבור כלי החרס והשלך לארבע רוחות השמים ותאמר כן כנגד ארבע רוחות: ההגרית החונה ברוח מזרח, שרוכית החונה ברוח צפון, עולפה החונה ברוח מערב, כרדי החונה ברוח דרום, קבלו נא מידי בעת הזאת שאני משליך לכם[42] לשם פלוני ב' פל' לשבור	55
line 5 וכל אסואתא דעבדין לה יהוין לביש line 7 ולא ליתקבל דרמנא עליהון	עצמותיו ולכתת כל איבריו ולשבור גאון עוזו כשבירת נבלי החרש האילו ולא תהיה להם רפואה[43] כמו שאין רפואה לנבלי חרס אילו, וקח פיאלין שלמים וזכור עליה שמות המלאכים האלה ושם השוטר הוא תיגרה ואמור כך: מוסר אני לכם מלאכי אף וחימה את פל' ב' פל' שתשנקו אתו ותשחיתו אתו ואת מראיהו ותפילוהו במיטה	60
line 13 וליתנשי ליבהון ולישתקיל טעמהון	ותחסרו הונו ותפירו מחשבות לבבו ותפיחו רעיונו ודעתו[44] ויהיה נחסר והולך עד שיגיע למות. ואם תבקש להגלותו אמור כן: שתגלוהו	65
	ותנדוהו מבניו וביתו ולא יותר לו כלום. ואם בעל חובך הוא אמור כן: שתיסתמו את פיו ותבטלו עצתו ולא יעליני במחשבתו ולא יביאיני	70
	לתוך דברי פיו ושאהיה עובר לפניו לא יראיני בעיניו.

[42] '... and cast it to the four winds of the heavens and say thus in the direction of four winds: the HGRYT that resides in the eastern wind, SRWKYT that resides in the northern wind, A'WLPA' that resides in the western wind, KRDY that resides in the southern wind, accept from me at this moment that which I am casting to you ...'

[43] '... and may there be no healing for them ...'

[44] '... and destroy the thoughts of his heart and diminish his thought and mind ...'

M103 (18.2cm*6cm) and M119 (16.8cm*5.8cm)

This bowl has four duplicates, M119 from the Moussaieff collection and MS 2053/207, MS 2053/209 and MS 2053/253. Imi daughter of Qaqi is the client in all of these bowls which seem to have been written by the same scribe. The text professes itself to be a get for the removal of a cursing Lilith. The formula that is used includes elements which can be found in the standard (human) Jewish divorce formula (particularly l. 6, see notes and appendix below).

Transcription of M103

(1) הדין גיטא דליליתא דלוטתא די כתבית לה לאימי בת קאקי וכל שום דאית לה (2) תיתסי תינטרי תישתזבי מן פגעה מן סטנה מן חיטינא די פתכר ופתכרתא מן דנחיש ומן דיוי (3) מן איסתרא עיליתא ומן איסתרא תתיתה מן ממי מן מ(ע)יה מן (כ)ל(ב)ה ומן מללתא מן לוטתא דיהודאי (4) מן לוטתא דארמאי מן לוטתא רחיקתא ומן לוטתא קריבתא מן קריתא מן נידרא מן איסורי מן כל עובדין בישין (5) מן כל רוחא בישתא עזיזתא תקיפתא מן חרשי מעבדי מן חרשי דזני זמרתא זניתא וליליתא ולוטתא דמקטלא בני דיליה בני (6) דחברתיה דאם תיהויין ראשהא ושליטא בנפשיכי לכל אינש דאיתצבין די כתבית ליכי גיטא גיט פיטורין מן הדא אימי בת קאקי כל שום (7) דאית לה מומנא ומשבענא ליכי אנתי זני זמרתא זניתא ליליתא לוטתא דשריה בביתיה דאימי בת קאקי אם דכר אם ניקבה בשמיה (8) דגבריאל מלאכה אחיאל משמשיאל מלאכה דנדיריאל מלאכה יחוס יחוש אחישא אגרריפס אגריפס אתיה אבשת אתבישא אתיתיאל אנתיתיאל (9) אבש (ב)שמתא סתריאל (ש)די שלעון בזיף בשמיה דיהוה צבאות במלכותיה דאברחס אני(נ)יאל יה בשום שר רוחא בשום אבוהי דאברכס (10) סרא אמן אמן סלה חתמא דגיטא (יה שמיה)

Translation M103

(1) This is a divorce writ for the Lilith that curses which I have written for Imi daughter of Qaqi and every name which is hers. (2) May you be healed, may you be protected, may you be saved from an affliction, from hostility, from the slander of a male idol and a female idol, from Danahish and from dews, (3) from the upper ISTRA' and the lower ISTRA', from oaths, from her gut, from a bitch, from an utterance, from a curse of a Jew, (4) from a curse of a gentile, and from a distant curse and a near curse, from a magical invocation, from an oath, from bonds, from all evil magical acts, (5) from every evil strong powerful spirit, from active sorcerers, from spells of ZNY the singer prostitute, and the Lilith, and the curse who is killing children that are hers, children (6) of her (female) neighbor. For even if you may have permission and power over yourself for any person you may desire. It is the case that I have written for you a divorce writ - a writ of absolution from this Imi daughter of Qaqi (and) any (7) name that she has. I adjure and put you under oath you ZNY the singer prostitute, the Lilith, the curse that dwells in the house of Imi daughter of Qaqi, be it male or female. By the name (8) of Gabriel the angel, Ahiel, Meshamshiel the angel, of Nadriel the angel. May it favor, may it hasten. Hurry! A'GGRYPS A'GRYPS A'TYH A'BŠT A'TBYŠA' Atitiel Antitiel (9) A'BŠ. By a ban. Satriel ŠDY ŠLA'WN BZYP. By the name of YHWH ṢBA'WT, by the kingdom of ABRHS Aniniel YH, by the name of the spirit prince, by the name of (the father of ABRKS) (10) the prince, amen amen selah. The seal of the divorce writ, YH is his name.

Notes for M103

1 For a similar opening cf. Ellis 1:1 הדין גיטא לשידא.

2 חיטינא Cf. the Syriac ḥṭywnʾ which is a translation of the Hebrew ש טנה 'slander' in Ezra 4:6.

3 אסתרא Both the forms ištaru and ištartu are already attested in Akkadian as meaning goddess.[45] Cf. De Menil I. 11 אסתרי ניקבתא. Note that in Mandaic ʾstʾrʾ (Syriac stwrʾ) also means 'decay', 'corruption (of teeth)', 'caries'. As in the Mandaic 'Phylactery for Rue':[46] rwhʾ dʾtbʾ lkʾkyʾ wšynyʾ wmytykryʾ ʾstʾrʾ 'a spirit that sits on the teeth and the molars and is called ʾstʾrʾ'. Cf. also סתורא 'destroyer' (J. p. 1031a) and the verb סתר 'to tear down, destroy'.

ממי Possibly a defective spelling of מומי, 'oaths, imprecation' (J. p. 743a).

---

[45] CAD I-J, pp. 270-271.
[46] Drower 1946, p. 328.

מ(ע)יה Could also be read מ(ינ)יה 'of its kind'.

4 רחיקתא, קריבתא Already attested as meaning 'relative' and 'non-relative' in Elephantine Papyri contracts.[47] If this is, indeed, the meaning then the gender indicates that what is referred to here is only the curses of women, cf. Yam:4,5 לוטתא דאימא וברתא לכלתא וחמתא ודרחקתא ודקריבתא.

5, 6 לילית{ו}א זני זמרתא זניתא Also mentioned in l. 7, this may be a reference to llyt' zn'y (see also AIT 38:5 z'n'y lylyt') mentioned in l. 18 of a Mandaic bowl (Yale YBC 2364).[48] In that text it is told that she ate her own unborn son, tied his carcass around her neck and threw his fat into the fire in order to appease Buznay 'the king of all Sahirs and Dews and Lilits' who yielded to the pleas of a woman whose children she killed. Despite there being some confusion regarding the use of this name in the Yale bowl, as the main demon in the text is Bguzan-Lilit daughter of Zanay-Lilit, it is Zanay-Lilit that is mentioned at the point of this narrative. Her story is reminiscent of the Zanay in our text who is described as killing her children as well as those of her neighbour. In Gordon M:15, a Mandaic bowl, Gordon translates the similar expression lwṭt' ḏz'nyt' wz'mrt' as 'the curse of harlot and singer'.[49] Another similar expression occurs in the Mandaic text Shafta ḏ Pishra ḏ Ainia lines 161-162 w'yn' ḏz'n'y w'yn' ḏz'm'r, upon which Drower commented that though it could possibly mean 'My whore and singing boy', it is, nevertheless, unlikely.

דיליה, חברתיה It makes sense that these should have feminine suffix pronouns, דילה and חברתה, as should ביתיה in l. 7.

אם Could also be understood to be 'In the sense of certainly not',[50] as the particular clause of the get that follows is, under normal human circumstances, meant to grant the woman the freedom to remarry. However, it would not make sense to consider giving a demon the liberty to attack another person.

... תיהוויין There follows a slightly corrupt form of the standard get formula:

---

[47] Cowly 1923, p. 3: "'related or not related' (קריב ורחיק), the regular formula, and similarly in Babylonian law".
[48] Müller-Kessler 1996, pp. 187a, 189b-190a, 195a.
[49] Gordon 1937, p. 97.
[50] Gesenius 1963, pp. 471-472; and Segal 1927, pp. 216 ff.

M103 דאם תיהויין ראשהא ושליטא בנפשיכי לכל אינש דאיתצבין get[51] דיתהויין רשאה ושלטאה בנפשיכי למהך להתנסבא לכל גבר דיתצבייין ואינש לא

M103

get ימחה בידיכי מן שמי מן יומא דנן ולעלם והרי את מותרת לכל אדם

M103 די כתבית ליכי גיטא גיט פיטורין

get ודן די יהוי ליכי מנאי ספר תרוכין וגט פטורין ואגרת שבוקין

Indeed, the words למהך להתנסבא 'to go and be married to' are omitted in the text of the get for the demons as this would be neither desirable nor acceptable.

8 יחוס יחוש אחישא אגריפס אגריפס Cf. AIT 14:4 יחוש יחוש אחושיה 'Oh avaunt, oh avaunt, avaunt'! See Montgomery's note 1913 p. 184. Cf. Isbell 69[52] l. 7 בשום יהוס יהוס יהוש ואהושא ואגריבט, N-IV:6: בשום יהוס יהוש ואהושא ואגריבט, The Havdala de R. Akiva p. 24 line 34[53] בשם יחוש אחישה אריפט and The Sword of Moses (Harari's ed.[54]) p. 28:6 איה יהוש אהישה ואגריפט. Scholem[55] agreed with Montgomery's (above) understanding of this sequence and noted the variants amongst the bowls. It can be observed that in some of the variants the introductory בשום, 'by the name', indicates that it was considered a composite name and lost any meaning it might have had as 'hurry hurry'. As it is amongst a list of names in our text, it can be assumed that this was how it was considered. The interchange of the letters פ and ב, and ט and ם in the final name are evidence of the kind of corruption that easily occur in the transmission of Nomina Barbara.

אבשת אתבישא The usual designation for the acrostic system atbash by which the first letter (א) is replaced with the last (ת), the last with the first, the second letter (ב) with the one before the last (ש), and so forth. Atbash is mentioned in the thirtieth rule of The Mishnah of Rabbi Eliezer or T*he Midrash of the Thirty Two Hermeneutic Rules* a work which has been dated to no later than the eighth century.[56]

---

[51] Mishne Torah Gerushin 4:12.
[52] Equivalent to Jeruzalmi 1963, pp. 127-139.
[53] Scholem 1980-81, p. 266.
[54] Harari 1997. In the Gaster edition, 1896, p. V:15,16.
[55] 1980-81, p. 266-267 n. 84, 85.
[56] Stemberger 1996, p. 23. (see also Lieberman 1962, p. 69, 73 'Substitution of letters, Atbash was widely practised in antiquity'.).

Synopsis

MS 2053/253	MS 2053/209	M119	M103
(1) לשמך אני עושה
הדין גיטא	(1) הדין גיטא	(1) הדין גיטא	(1) הדין גיטא
	דליליתא דלוטתא	דלילית‍א דלוטתא	דלילית‍א דלוטתא
די כתבית לה	די כתבית לה	די כתבית לה [.]הדא	די כתבית לה
לאימי בת קאקי וכל	לאימי בת קאקי כל	אימי בת קאקי וכל	לאימי בת קאקי וכל
שום דאית לה	שום דאית (2) לה	שום דאית לה	שום דאית לה (2)
תיתסי (2) תינטרי	תינטרי תיתסי	תיתסי (2) (ו)ת(ינטרי)	תיתסי תינטרי
מן כל מידעם ביש	ברחמי שמיא	מן כל (מיד)עם ב(יש)	תישתזבי
		אש[ב]עית (על)
מן פגעה מן סטנא	מן פגעה מן סטנא מן	מן פגעה ומן סטנה ומן	מן פגעה מן סטנה
	לילית‍א	לי(ל)יתא
מן חיטינא דיפתכרי	מן חיטינא דיפתכרי	מן חיטינא די	מן חיטינא די פתכר
ופתכרתא מן דנחיש	ופתכרתא (3)	פתכרי(ן) (3)	ופתכרתא מן דנחיש
מן דיוי או מן (3)	מן חיטינא	(ו)פתכרתא	ומן דיוי (3) מן
איסתרא עיליתא מן	דאיסתרא עיליתא	מן חיטי(נא)	איסתרא עיליתא ומן
		דאיס(תרא ע)ליתא
איסתרא תתיתא מן	תתיתה מן	ומן חיטינא	איסתרא תתיתה מן
מללתא מן ממי מן	מללתא	דאיסתרא תתיתה מן	ממי מן מ(ע)יה מן
כלבה		מללתא	(כ)ל(ב)ה ומן מללתא
מן לוטתא דיהודאי	מן לוטתא דיהודאי		מן לוטתא דיהודאי (4)
מן לוטתא דארמאי (4)	מן לוטתא דארמאי	מן לוטתא (ד)יהודאי	מן לוטתא דארמאי
מן לוטתא	מן לוטתא (4)	ומן (4) לוטתא ארמאי	מן לוטתא
רחיקתא מן לוטתא	רח)קתא מן לוטתא	ומן לוטתא	רחיקתא ומן לוטתא
קריבתא מן קריתא	קריבתא מן קריתא	(ר)חיקתא ומן לוטתא	קריבתא מן קריתא
מן נידרא מן אשלמתא	מן נידרי	קריבתא ומן קריתא	מן נידרא
מן איסורי מן כל	מן אס(ו)רי מן כל	מן נידרא	מן איסורי מן כל

MS 2053/253	MS 2053/209	M119	M103
עובדין בישין מן כל	עובדין בישין מן כל	ומן איסורי מן כל	עובדין בישין (5) מן כל
רוחא (5) בישתא	רוחא (בישתא)	עובדין בישין (5) מן כל	רוחא בישתא
עזיזתא תקיפתא	עזיזתא (5) תקיפתא	רוחא ב(י)שתא	עזיזתא תקיפתא
מן חרשי מעבדי מן	מן חרשי מעבדי מן	מן ע(זי)זתא תקיפתא	מן חרשי מעבדי מן
חרשי דזני זמרתא	חרשי דזני זמרתא	מן חרשי מעבדי מן	חרשי דזני זמרתא
זניתא לילית	זניתא (ולילית	חרשי דזני זמרתא	זניתא ולילית
		זניתא לוטתא	ולוטתא
דמקטלא בני דילה	דמקטלא) בני דיליה		דמקטלא בני דיליה
בני דחברתיה דאם (6)	בני [דחברתיה] דאם	דמקטלא בני דיליה (6)	בני (6) דחברתיה דאם
תיהויין ראשאה	תיהויין (6) ראשא	בני דחברתיה דאם	תיהויין ראשהא
ושליטא בנפשיכי לכל	שליטא בנפשיכי לכל	תיהויין ראשא(ה	ושליטא בנפשיכי לכל
אינש דיתצבין די	אינש דיתצבין די	ו)שליטא בנפשיכי לכל	אינש דאיתצבין די
כתבית ליכי גיטא	תכתבית ליכי גיטא	אינש דיתצבין די	כתבית ליכי גיטא
גיט פיטורין	גיט פיטורין	כתבית ליכי גיטא	גיט פיטורין
מן הדא אימי בת	מן הדא אימי בת	גיטא גט פיטורין (7)	מן הדא אימי בת
קאקי מן ביתיה (6)	קאקי מן בית(ה) מן	מן הדא אימי בת	קאקי
כולה	(בניה)	קאקי אם דכר אם
כל שום דאית	וכל שום דאית	ניקבה	כל שום (7) דאית
ליכי	(7) ליכי		לה
מומנא משבענא	מומנא משבענא	מומנא (ומ)שבענא	מומנא ומשבענא
ליכי אנתי זני זמרתא	ליכי אנתי זני זמרתא	ליכי אנתי זני זמרתא	ליכי אנתי זני זמרתא
זניתא לילית ולוטתא	זניתא לילית	זניתא (ל)ילית	זניתא לילית לוטתא
דשריה בביתיה דאימי	דשריה בביתיה דאימי	דשריה בביתיה דאימי	דשריה בביתיה דאימי
בת קאקי אם (7) דכר	בת קאקי אם דכר	בת (8) קאקי אם דכר	בת קאקי אם דכר
אם ניקבה בשמיה	אם ניקבה בשמיה	אם ניקבה בשמיה	אם ניקבה בשמיה (8)
דגבריאל מלאכה	(דגבר)יאל מלאכה	דגבריאל מלאכה	דגבריאל מלאכה
אחיאל מלאכה	אחיאל מלאכה (8)	אחיאל מלאכה	אחיאל
משמשיאל מלאכה	משמשיאל מלאכה	משמשיאל מלאכה	משמשיאל מלאכה

MS 2053/253	MS 2053/209	M119	M103
נדיריאל מלאכה	נדיריאל מלאכה	נדריאל מלאכה	דנדיריאל מלאכה
יחוס יחיש אחושא	יחוס (יחוש) אחישא	יחוס יחוש ואחישא	יחוס יחוש אחישא
אגדריפס אגר (8) פס	אגרריפס אגריפס	אגרריפס (9) אגריפט	אגרריפס אגריפס
אתית אבשת	אתית א(ר)שת	אגריפס את יה אבשת	אתיה אבשת
אתבישא אתיתיאל	את(בי)שא אוניאל תותיאל	אתבישא אתיתיאל	אתבישא אתיתיאל
אנתיתיאל אבש	אנאיתיאל אבש	אנתיתיאל אבש	אנתיתיאל (9) אבש
בשמתא סתתיאל	בשמתא סתריאל	בשמתא סתריאל	(ב)שמתא סתריאל
שדי שלעון בזיף	שדי (9) שלעון בזיף	שדי שלעון בזיף	(ש)די שלעון בזיף
בשמיה דיהוה צבאות	בשמיה דיהוה צבאות	בשמיה דיהוה צבאות	בשמיה דיהוה צבאות
במלכותיה	במלכותיה	(10) במלכותיה	במלכותיה
דאברחס (9) אניניאל	דאברחס אנתיאל	דאברחס אניניאל	דאברחס אני(נ)יאל
יה בשום שר רוחא	יה בשום שר רוחא	יה בשום שר רחא	יה בשום שר רוחא
בשום אבו[...]	בשום אב יחידא בס...	בשום אבוהי	בשום אבוהי דאברכס
אב(סכס) סרא	ארא	דאב(ס)כס סרא	(10) סרא
אמן אמן אמן סלה	אמן אמן סלה	אמן אמן סלה	אמן אמן סלה
חתמא דגיטא יהוה	חתמא דגיטא יה	חתמא דגיטא יה	חתמא דגיטא (יה
שמיה	שמיה	שמיה	שמיה)
	(10) אמן אמן סלה

The existence of a number of duplicates written by the same scribe offers a valuable opportunity to examine the nature of the transmission of the formula. As is shown below, some of the differences are due to a flexible approach to the writing of such incantations. Other discrepancies seem more likely to be the result of small syntactic changes which might naturally occur when a text is memorized and repeated several times. Yet on occasion the scribe is likely to make genuine mistakes. These might result from a misunderstanding of a word or passage, or simply from a momentary lapse in concentration.

In MS 2053/253 the scribe added לשמך אני עושה to what is the beginning of the text in all the other bowls. This is not an uncommon opening formula cf. Geller D:1, Gordon 2:1 and

Isbell 70[57] l. 1 and the scribe might well have written another text with this opening formula earlier that day or simply had it on his mind. In the same bowl the scribe omitted to specify the address of the get דלילית דלוטתא 'for the Lilith that curses', no doubt a lapse of memory. In M119:1 there is the added demonstrative pronoun הדא before the name of the client, a perfectly common and correct form which must have naturally crept in. In three of the texts there follows the sequence תיתסי ותינטרי, however, in MS 2053/209 these two words change places and are followed by ברחמי שמיא. An explanation for this addition could be that from a number of formula which the scribe had memorized there was likely to be one that had the same sequence of words after תיתסי. Cf. AIT 11:1,2 דתיתיסי ברחמי שמיה, AIT 24:2 דתיתסי ברחמי שמיא, AIT 26:5 דתיתסי ברחמי שמיא, Geller C:3 דיתסון ברחמי שמיא Gordon 2:2, etc. In M103 the scribe preferred to add the verb תישזבי to תינטרי, possibly for a similar reason, cf. BOR:10 נינטרוניה ונישיזבוניה. M119 and MS 2053/253 proceed at this point with מן כל מידעם ביש which might be the original formula by virtue of it being duplicated in two out of the four texts. In lines 2 in M119 and MS 2053/209 ליליתא appears in the list of demons, whilst in the other two texts it is omitted. On the other hand, in lines 2 of M119 and MS 2053/253 there are the added דנחיש and דיוי. In all four texts חיטינא precedes the idols, in M119 and MS 2053/209 it also precedes the 'upper ISTRA", in M119 it also comes before the 'lower ISTRA". One might attribute these differences to the repetitive rhythm which would manifest itself in variation when written from memory. All of the texts have מללתא in their third lines. This is followed in MS 2053/253 by ממי and כלבה which also appear in M103, though they appear there before מללתא and with the additional מעיה. The additions in M103 and MS 2053/253 are unusual and have been translated with some reservation (see notes above). It is possible that they are corrupt words which the scribe did not understand. As such they would be more likely to get confused in memory and therefore be susceptible to variant forms of transmission by the scribe. Unlike the other bowls in l. 4 of MS 2053/253 the word נידרא is followed with אשלמתא. Cf. Gordon 7:9 ונידרא ואשלמתא, Isbell 64 [58] l.1 ונידרי ואשלמתא and Isbell 65:1 ונידרי ואשלמתא which suggest that here, again, the scribe is repeating a sequence that he is familiar with from another formula. In M119:7, unlike the other texts, the name of the client is followed by אם דכר אם ניקבה. This is quite clearly a lapse in the scribe's concentration, as this addition, inappropriate in l. 7 where it would refer to the client, appears again in l. 8 (as it does in all the duplicates), also after the name of the client, where it correctly refers to the demons. Other variations consist of minor differences in spelling, the addition of a third אמן in l. 9 of MS 2053/253, and אמן אמן סלה to the end of MS 2053/209.

[57] Equivalent to Jeruzalmi 1963, pp. 140-152.

Appendix

The use of a get for getting rid of demons is known from other magic bowls such as Ellis 1, AIT 8,9,18, Gordon 9737, Gordon G and N&Sh B5.[59] The logic of equating the divorce of a man from his wife to a human (male or female) from demons is somewhat anomalous, indeed Montgomery referred to it as 'a happy thought of the magicians'.[60] Certain questions are raised by this equation: What kind of tie binds demon to human? How is it formed? Why does it necessitate a legal severing of bonds? Though there are parallels between the magical and human (Jewish) get formulas, there are two distinct differences: 1) With humans it is only the man that can divorce the woman whereas, in the world where demons interact with humans, gender is not an issue. The issue is humanity and only the human is able to initiate divorce proceedings. 2) Consequently in the magical get the human always takes the part of the male in the usual get document, and the demon that of the female. In three bowls, AIT 8,17 and N&Sh B5, the get mentioned is a type of 'writ from foreign countries'.[61] This could be because humans can not see the demons or interact with them in the same time and space. Despite such parallels the inconsistencies between the human and magical get remain. If understood correctly, the text here (M103 and duplicates) is a type of document which legally prohibits demons from attaching themselves, not only to the client but also to any human at all. This get is for the driving out of the nuisance by force of law, rather than the annulment of a union that had legal status such as that which exists between husband [58] Equivalent to Jeruzalmi 1963, pp. 24-38.

---

[59] See Shaked 1999 for a discussion of the get motif in the magic bowls.
[60] Montgomery 1913, pp. 158-159.
[61] Montgomery 1913, p. 159 and Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 162. For גט ממדינת הים see m. Git. 1 and b. Git 2.

and wife. In AIT 8, AIT 17 and N&Sh 5 the idea of the get is associated with that of a ban, or banishment - שמתא, which seems more appropriate. In l. 6 of our text the conditional word 'if', אם, is used. One might consider the possibility that this magical get is intended to resemble a type of divorce writ which includes conditions. In a normal (human) get the husband could not put restrictive conditions on who the divorced woman could wed, except in cases that were already considered illegal such as a brother, father, idolater or a slave.[62] The union of a demon with a human could qualify as inherently illegal. This condition in our text, that prohibits the demon to attach itself to any human, is the very clause that is the privilege of the released woman in a human get. In this magical get, it is made clear to the demon that even if it has been given a get previously, it can not assume the right that belongs to a divorced human woman, and may not attach itself to anyone else.

Comparing our text, the magical get (mg), with the Jewish get (jg) formula yields some interesting points of similarity and difference (see below): 1) The mg has no date. 2) The mg is written by the scribe for the client, the jg is written as if by the husband, though it would have been the custom for someone else to write it for him.[63] 3) Where it says in the jg: 'I do release and send away and put aside thee ...' the mg has (l. 2): 'May you be healed, may you be protected, may you be saved, from ...' Thus the removal of the unwanted wife in the jg is the equivalent of healing and protection in the mg, namely the removal of the cause of affliction. 4) Where the jg states that it is done 'according to the law of Moses and Israel' the mg employs an adjuration by the names of angels to enforce itself. 5) The jg has the signatures of the witnesses, the mg has the seal of the name YH.

M103	Get* formula
(1) הדין גיטא דליליתא דלוטתא די	בכך בשבת בכך וכך לירח פלוני בשנת כך וכך
	ליצירה או לשטרות למניינא דרגילנא למימני
	ביה הכא במקום פלוני איך
כתבית לה לאימי בת קאקי וכל שום דאית לה	אנא פלוני בר פלוני דממקום פלוני וכל שום
	אחרן וחניכה דאית לי ולאבהתי ולאתרי
	ולאתריהון דאבהתי צביתי ברעות נפשי בדלא

[62] M. Git. 9:2.
[63] Amram, 1896, p. 148-149.

אניסנא

ופטרית ושבקית ותרוכית יתיכי ליכי

(2) תיתסי תינטרי תישתזבי מן

אנת פלונית בת פלוני דממתא פלונית וכל שום אחרן וחניכה דאית ליכי ולאבהתיכי ולאתריכי ולאתריהון דאבהתיכי די הוית אנתתי מן קדמת דנא וכדו פטרית ושבקית ותרוכית יתיכי ליכי

פגעה מן סטנה מן חיטינא די פתכר ופתכרתא מן דנחיש ומן דיוי (3) מן איסתרא עיליתא ומן איסתרא תתיתה מן ממי מן מ(ע)יה מן (כ)ל(ב)ה ומן מללתא מן לוטתא דיהודאי (4) מן לוטתא דארמאי מן לוטתא רחיקתא ומן לוטתא קריבתא מן קריתא מן נידרא מן איסורי מן כל עובדין בישין (5) מן כל רוחא בישתא עזיזתא תקיפתא מן חרשי מעבדי מן חרשי דזני זמרתא זנותא ולילית ולוטתא דמקטלא בני דיליה בני (6) דחברתיה

דיתהוויין רשאה ושלטאה בנפשיכי למהך להתנסבא לכל גבר דיתצביין ואינש לא ימחה בידיכי מן שמי מן יומא דנן ולעלם והרי את מותרת לכל אדם

דאם תיהויין ראשהא ושליטא בנפשיכי לכל אינש דאיתצבין

ודן די יהוי ליכי מנאי ספר תרוכין וגט פטורין ואגרת שבוקין

די כתבית ליכי גיטא גיט פיטורין מן הדא אימי בת קאקי כל שום (7) דאית לה

כדת משה וישראל.

מומנא ומשבענא ליכי אנתי זני זמרתא זנותא לילית לוטתא דשריה בביתיה דאימי בת קאקי אם דכר אם ניקבה

בשמיה (8) דגבריאל מלאכה אחיאל משמשיאל מלאכה דנדיריאל מלאכה יחוס יחוש אחישא

אגרריפס אגריפס אתיה אבשת אתבישא

אתיתיאל אנתיתיאל (9) אבש (ב)שמתא

סתריאל (ש)די שלעון בזיף בשמיה דיהוה

צבאות במלכותיה דאברחס אני(נ)יאל יה בשום

שר רוחא בשום אבוהי דאברכס (10) סרא אמן

אמן סלה

והעדים חותמים למטה כמו שביארנו (פלוני בן חתמא דגיטא (יה שמיה) פלוני עד פלוני בן פלוני עד).

Though there is no obvious reference to the magical get in Rabbinic literature, one might consider b. Git 67b-70a as containing such an inference. In this passage we see: 1) The start of a discussion relating to m. Git. 7 which deals with the various stipulations within the 'conditional get'. 2) A medical section which includes a number of recipes for healing (67b and 68b-70a). 3) A reference to demons שדה ושדות from Ecclesiastes 2:8,[64] which is interpreted in the talmudic text as 'male and female demons'. This is immediately followed by the story of Ashmedai the king of demons. These appear to correspond with the following aspects of our text: 1) The inference to the conditional get in l. 6. 2) A get which has the purpose of healing, תיתסי in l. 2. 3) The connection with demons which our text is designed to remove.

Indeed, Ecclesiastes 2:8 might aid our understanding of the nature of the magical get. Ibn Ezra's (12th century) commentary on the meaning of ותענוגת בני האדם שדה ושדות in this verse is that it is of a sexual nature. The Zohar (Vol. 1 parashat Bereshit p. 19b) also comments that these words are sexually implicit and refer to nocturnal emissions and the demon offspring which result. The 17th century mystical commentary Ta'alumot Hohmah (Delmegido, Joseph Solomon) to this verse is: "'The more wives the more witchcraft' (m. Avot 2:7) - and they cause there to be 'more demons and demonesses' (Ecclesiastes 2:8) and anyhow, 'from the luxuries of commoners' (Ecclesiastes 2:8) are born 'demons and demonesses' (Ecclesiastes 2:8)".[65]

[64] כנסתי לי גם כסף וזהב וסגלת מלכים והמדינות עשיתי לי שרים ושרות ותענוגת בני האדם שדה ושדות: I further amassed silver and gold and treasures of kings and provinces; and I got myself male and female singers, as well as the luxuries of commoners–coffers and coffers of them.

Another possible correspondence with our text, which is very tentatively offered, is the expression זני זמרתא (lines 5 and 7) which could relate to זייני זמרא, in the targum of Ecclesiastes 2:8, which might have come to be associated with the get of demons.

MT:

עשיתי לי שרים ושרות ותענוגת בני האדם שדה ושדות

Targum:

עבדית לבית מוקדשא זייני זמרא לזמרא בהון ליואי על קורבניא וקתרוסין ואבובין לזמרא בהון זמריא וזמריתא בבית משתיא דחמרא ותפנוקי בני אנשא ודימסיא ובי בנין מרזבין דשדין מיא פשורי ומרזבין דשדין מיא חמימי

Translation of the targum:

I have made for the temple musical instruments for the Levites to make music with over the sacrifices, and lutes and flutes for singers (male and female) to make music with in a house of wine drinking, and human comforts, and public baths in which were built pipes that pour out cold water and those that pour out hot water.

[65] כי מרבה נשים מרבה כשפים והם מרבים שדה ושדות וגם מתענוגות בני אדם ממילא נולדו שדה ושדות

M107 (19cm*6cm)

This bowl consists of nine lines of a reasonably clear square script. The letters ב and כ are distinguishable and, though the scribe appears to have attempted to differentiate ו from י, and ד from ר, they are in some cases still confused. The character ל is written with two strokes, as it often is, yet the upper one is so curved as to give the letter a back to front appearance which is quite unusual. In the middle of the bowl there is a striking image of a figure with some sort of head dress, arms stretched out and riding something that appears to have a horse's head. The text runs from around the image outwards in a clockwise spiral fashion. A small group of magical figures and Nomina Barbara stretch to one side of the bowl from the figure outwards, splitting the flow of the spiraling text. Geller A is a more extensive duplicate text. It also has a drawing similar to that in our bowl, as well as an identical set of magical symbols. In Geller A, the drawing appears towards the side of the bowl and the symbols run with the text as an integral part of it. In our bowl the image is in the middle and the magic symbols are set to one side. It is possible that there was a Vorlage with a note to put something on the side; an instruction that, like many of these texts, got corrupted over time and resulted in a variety of parallel variants. Also of interest is Moriah 1 which Gordon presumed was written by the same hand as Geller A and for the same client. M107 was written for the benefit of Buluqa son of Kikar and Parizag daughter of Hazaroi his wife as well as their daughters Azadiar and Dukhtizag and their sons Hurmiz-Gushnasap and Kurkshid-Gushnasap.

Transcription of M107

(1) מזמן הדין כסא לחתמתא ולנטרתא דביתיה דבולוקא בר ככר ודפאריזג (2) בת חזארוי ודאזאדיאר בת פאריזג ודהורמיז גושנסף בר פאריזג ודכורכשיד גושנסף בר (3) פאריזג ודדוכתיזג בת פאריזג דניזיחון וניתבטלון וניתרחקון מינהון שידי ודיוי וסיטני וסטני ולילית (4) ומבכלתא ומשמתתא וחילמי בישי וחיזוני סניי ודחלולי בשום שרושן טושן טרושן גושן גושן אדחי לשגושין (5) לשגושין לשגושן ארהיב ברה ואמר בחד גמא גאמא חיש משלל סדים ומשמת ומן אידיה דמריא גרוסקין גרוסקן (6) ונברון ונבורזן רבה דזעקי ומן אידיה דאמירן בג[דנא] אסיר אס(..) ביתיה דבולוקא בר ככר ודפאריזג בת חזארוי וחתים בארזמן (7) עיזקתא ובמובלא רבא דזעקי אמן אמן

אדוני ר֯א֯ל שדי גיברא ואברכסס ארהיט שידי ודיוי וסיטני שפ וסטני ולילית֯א ומבכלתא (8) ומשמתתא וחיסמא בישא וזיקי בישי וכל מידעם ביש מן ביתיה דבולוקא בר ככר ודפאריזג בת חזארוי ודאזדיאר בת פאריזג (?) ודהורמיז גושנסף (9) בר פאריזג ודכורכשיד גושנסף בר פאריזג ודדוכתיזג בת פאריזג מן יומא דין ושועה דא וילעולם אמן אמן סלה שריר וקים

(10) (six magical characters) (11) פלוטל (four magical characters) (12) ספלח שבת נורוס (13) סונסנום

Translation of M107

(1) This bowl is appointed for the sealing and protection of the household of Buluqa son of Kikar and for Parizag (2) daughter of Hazaroi and for Azadiar daughter Parizag and for Hurmiz-Gushnasap son of Parizag and for Kurkshid-Gushnasap son of (3) Parizag and for Dukhtizag daughter of Parizag. May the demons and dēws and prosecutors and satans and liliths (4) and tormentors and bans and evil dreams and hateful visions and 'scarecrows' move away and be redundant and distanced from them. By the name of ŠRWŠN ṬWŠN ṬRWŠN GWŠN GWŠN drive off the ŠGWŠYN the (5) ŠGWŠYN the ŠGWŠN. He alarmed her son and said: By one GMA' GA'MA' hurry! Chained, bound and banned by the hand of the lord GRWSQYN GRWSQN (6) and NBRWN and NBWRZN the great one of cries, and by the hand of our lord Bagdana. Bound [...] is the house of Buluqa son of Kikar and Parizag daughter of Hazaroi, and sealed by A'RZMN (7) the seal and by the great burden of cries. Amen amen. Adonay El Shaddai the valiant and Abraxas, chase away demons and dēws and prosecutors and satans and liliths and tormentors (8) and bans and evil envy and evil blast demons, and any evil thing from the house of Buluqa son of Kikar and Parizag daughter of Hazaroi and Azadiar daughter of Parizag and Hurmiz-Gushnasp (9) son of Parizag and Khurkshid-Gushnasp son of Parizag and Duktizag daughter of Parizag. From this day and this hour and for ever. Amen amen selah firm and established.

(10) (six magical characters) (11) PLWTL (four magical characters) (12) SPLH ŠBT NWRWS (13) SWNSNWM

Notes for M107

4 משמתתא The two ת's and prefix מ are unusual for this word yet it is spelled the same in l. 8 and must therefore be deliberate. Cf. N&Sh B15:5, but also שמתתא in Gordon A:2 and VA 2416:8,10. Harviainen analysed משמתא as a pa. passive participle feminine from the root שמת, with the ת of the feminine suffix, which can be seen in our form, being assimilated into the last radical of the root.[66]

אדתי The reading is not certain and could be read as ארתי, although the ר is slightly rounder than the ד. If so, it would be read as an extension of the Nomina Barbara before and after this word.

5 ארהיב From the root רהב which is attested in Syriac in the af. 'to trouble, disquiet (associated with bad dreams); to inspire awe, terror, to alarm cause to tremble' (PS p. 531a).

משלל סדים ומשמת Three participles, the third a pa. of the verb שמת, the second a pe. from the root סדם (= סטם) which thus far has only been attested in Mandaic (DM p. 318). The first word from the verb שלל appears here in a pa. form though it was previously only known in the pe. (cf. N&Sh B25:8 תשללוהי and Sokoloff p. 553b שלילין).

גרוסקין גרוסקן Cf. Hekhalot Zutarti, Schäfer synopsis §366 אי'ר' עקיב' צפית וחמית בתבל כולה וחזית יתה מה היא סלקית בעגלא מן נורא באיסתכלית בהיכלי ברדא ואשכחית גרוסקא גרוסקא וגו' 'R. Akiba said: I looked out and observed all the universe, and I saw it as it rose swiftly from the fire. As I looked at the palaces of hail I found GRWSQA' GRWSQA' etc'. This section is immediately followed by 'This is the binding and the seal by which are bound earth and heaven' (See comments on lines M163:8-11).

6 זעקי An apocopated form of a plural masculine noun, as is common in Babylonian Talmudic Aramaic, which could either be in the emphatic or absolute state.[67] The meaning of this word, in the context of our text, is not certain. In T-S K 1.173 page 3 l. 12[68] זעקה appears in the formulaic sequence אשתא ועריתא וזעקה - a list of three types of fever more

---

[66] Harviainen 1981, p. 12.
[67] Epstein 1960, pp. 116-117.
[68] Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 232.

commonly found with the third element דקיקתא.[69] It is possible that זעקי is, in some way, associated with the concept of fever and illness. Montgomery, on the other hand, understood זעקי (AIT 19:13 מלאכה רבא דזעקי) as actually being זיקי but 'with a Mandaic spelling'.[70]

אמירן Considering the parallel expression in the previous line (ומן אידיה דמריא גרוסקין), it is most likely that אמירן should have a similar meaning to מריא. It is possible that it is a corruption from of form מרן 'our lord,' cf. N&Sh B13:3 מריא בגדנא. Alternatively, one might consider this as an early attestation of אמיר 'prince,' found in Syriac[71] and Mandaic,[72] though of Arabic origin.

8 חיסמא בישא See note on M149:9.

Synopsis

M107	Geller A	Moriah 1
(1) מזמן הדין כסא	(1) אסיר חתים (2) הדין קמיעה		(a)
לחתמתא ולנטרתא דביתיה דבולוקא בר ככר ודפאריזג (2) בת חזארוי ודאזאדיאר בת פאריזג ודהורמיז גושנסף בר פאריזג ודכורכשיד גושנסף בר (3) פאריזג ודדוכתיזג בת פאריזג	לחתמתא ותשרתא (3) דביתיה דמהאנוש בר אזרמידוך (4)		(b)
	בהדין שמה רבה דהוה שליט על כל רוחי בישאתא (5)	(1) בהדין שמה רבה (2) דהוא שליט ומפקד ומחי (3) וקטיל ונכיס ומחביל ומפיק כל שידי (4) ודיוי וסטני וכל חילמי סנין וכל רוחי בישאתה	(c)
	אשבעית וגזרית עליכון כולכון		(d)
דניזיחון וניתבטלון וניתרחקון מינהון			(e)
שידי ודיוי וסיטני וסטני ולויליתא (4) ומבכלתא ומשמתתא וחילמי בישי וחיזוני סניי ודחלולי	כולכון רוחי בישאתא ולויליאתא (6) ומבכלאתא וכל חילמי סנין וכל רוחי בישאתא וחיזוני תקיפי ודחלולי (7) ומדובקי בישי	מן שידי ומן דיוי ומן ליליאתא ומן חילמי סנין ומן כל רוחי (8) בישאתה	(f)
	דתיזחין ותפקין מיניה ומן		(g)

[69] Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 236. For more comments on such words for types of fever, see Geller 1997a.
[70] Montgomery 1913, p. 199.
[71] Brockelmann 1928, p. 26a.
[72] DM p. 22b.

	Moriah 1	Geller A	M107
		ביתיה ודירתיה ואיסקופתיה אתתיה בניה (8) וקינינה ובית משכביה דמהאנוש בר אזרמידוך וחוה אינתתיה
(h)	(8) ... בשבע חומרין ובשבעה איסרין בשבעה חתמין	דחתים ומחתם
(i)		בשום שרישן (9) שרישן גישן גישן גישן אדחי לשגושין לשגושין אדחי ברחי אבר בחד {גמא} גדמא חוש משלל	בשום שרושן טושן טרושן גושן גושן אדחי לשגושין (5) לשגושין לשגושן ארהיב ברה ואמר בחד גמא גאמא חיש משלל
(j)	דאינון שליטין ומפקדין ומחן ומחבלין וקטלין ומפקין כל שידי ודיוי ולילִיאתה וכל חילמי סנין וכל שופטי בישי (12) וכל רוחי בישאתה דכד מיכתיב? שמהין ומימסר בהדין {בהדין} קמיעה כל שידין ודיוין ולילִיאתה וכל חילמי סנין וכל רוחי בישאתה נפקין (13) וערקין ומיתבלעין מינה	דאתון (10) שליטין ומעורין וקטלין ומפקין כל שידי ודיוי וכל רוחי בישאתה (11) וכל חילמי סנין וכד מיכתיב שמיהון ומימסר כל רוחי בישאתה וכל חילמי סנין ולילִיאתא נפקן ובטלן ומית כל שומיהון
(k)		משלל
(l)		(12) פליטל ... פטפלתש בת זירי ס ס תסניס
(m)	(16) ... נבדירין רבה	סדים ומשמת מן {מן} אידיה דמריא גרוסיה ונברון ונבורון רבה דזעקי (13) ומן אידיה דאמירן בגדתמן	סדים ומשמת ומן אידיה דמריא גרוסקין גרוסקן (6) ונברון ונבורזן רבה דזעקי ומן אידיה דאמירן בגדנא
(n)	הדין דמפרש על שידי ודיוי וסטני ולילִיאתה ועל כל רוחי בישאתה ועל כל חילמי סנין וכד מיכתיב שמיהון ומימסר כל שידי (19) ודיוי ולילִיאתה וסטני ושופטי בישי וכל חילמי סנין וכל רוחי בישאתה נפקין וערקין ובטלין ומיתבלעין ובשום ... (20) ... בהדין שמה רבה	אתון שליטין וקטלין ומפקין כל שידי ודיוי ולילִיאתא וכל חילמי סנין וכל רוחי בישאתה (14) וכד מיכתיב שמיהון ומימסר כל שידי ודיוי ולילִיאתה וסטני וכל חילמי סנין וכל רוחי בישאתה נפקין וערקין ומיחבל עין בהדין (15) שמה רבה
(o)	(20) ... חתים ומחתם ביתה הדין הוא ודירתיה ואיסקופתיה ובית מישכביה אתתיה בניה ובנתיה וקינינה דהדין מהאנוש בר אזרמידוך וחוה {חוה} אינתתיה	אסיר וחתים ביתיה ודירתיה וקינינה ואיסקופתיה ובניה ואתתיה ובנתיה ובית משכביה וכל אינשי ביתיה דמהאנוש בר אזרמידוך	אסיר אס(..) ביתיה דבולוקא בר ככר ודפאריזג בת חזארוי וחתים
(p)		(16) בארזמין עיזקתה ובמובלא רבה דזעקי אמין אמן אדוני ואל שדאי גיברא ואברכסס דמפיק ומרהיט שידי ודיוי ולילִיאתה ומבכלאתה	בארזמן (7) עיזקתא ובמובלא רבא דזעקי אמן אמן אדוני יאל שדי גיברא ואברכסס ארהיט שידי ודיוי וסיטני שש וסטני ולילִיתא ומבכלתא (8) ומשמתתא וחיסמא בישא וזיקי בישי וכל מידעם ביש

M107	Geller A	Moriah 1
מן ביתיה דבולוקא בר ככר ודפאריזג בת חזארוי ודאזדיאר בת פאריזג (?) ודהורמיז גושנסף (9) בר פאריזג ודכורכשיד גושנסף בר פאריזג ודדוכתיזג בת פאריזג	מיניה (17) ומן ביתיה דמהאנוש בר אזרמידוך אתון		(q)
מן יומא דין ושועה דא וילעולם אמן אמן סלה שריר וקים			(r)
(10) (11) פלוטל (12) ספלח שבת נורוס (13) סונסנום			(s)
	במומתיה שרירתא מומינא לכון ומשבענא לכון ובההוא שמה רבה דמיתסריתון ביה נטריה וחתמיה לביתיה (18) ולאסקופתיה ולבית מישכביה ולדרתיה ולבניה ולבנתיה ולאתתיה ולקינינה דמהאנוש בר אזרמידוך ו{מ}חוה איתתיה מן שידי ומן דיוי ומן סטני ומן דחלולן ומן מריבין ומן שופטי (19) בישי ומן סיוטי ומן פגעי ומן פלגי ומן {ת}סטני ומן חילמי סנין ומן כל רוחי בישאתה בהדין שמה אסיריתון [...] ומן{ש}סטמיתון ומתקניתון ומפיקיתון אתון שידין ודיוין וסטנין (20) חילמי סנין וכל רוחי בישאתה מיניה ומן ביתיה ודירתיה ואיסקופתיה ובית מישכביה דמהאנוש בר אזמרמידוך אמן	בהדין שמה רבה ובחתמא הדין חתים ומחתם ביתה הדין הוא ודירתיה ואיסקופתיה ובית מישכביה אתתיה בניה ובנתיה וקינינה דהדין מהאנוש בר אזרמידוך וחוה {חוה} אינתתיה מן כל פגעי ומן סטן מפגיע מפגיע (21) ומן כל בני ליליא ומן כל בני יממא ומן כל נוהרא ומן כל חושכה בשום הופעות יהוה צבאות ישיב הכרובים ברוך שמו סלה ובשום ענפיאל מלאכה ברזא הדין ובשמה הדין חתים ומחתם ומשצטם הדין באיתיה ודירתיה (22) ואיסקופתיה ובית מישכביה אתתיה בניה ובנתיה וכוליה באיתיה דהדין מהאנוש בר אזרמידוך ודהדה חוה אינתתיה מן שידי ומן דיוי ומן סטני ומן ליליאתא ומן חילמי סנין ומן כל רוחי בישאתה מן יומא דין ולעולם	(t)

Notes for Geller A

Alternative readings to Geller's transcription have been made on the basis of a comparison with the duplicate M107, a re-examination of the photographs,[73] and a comparison with Moriah 1.

2 Instead of ותשרתא read ונטרתא.

[73] Geller 1980, p. 48 and "Illness and Healing in Ancient times", 1997, University of Haifa, on the covers and pp. 34-35, 33.

9 Instead of אבר read אמר. As the pairs ד and ר, and ו and י are not always distinguished, it is quite possible that instead of אדחי ברחי אבר one should read אדחי ברה ואמר.

10 Instead of מעורין read מסירין.

11 Instead of ומית כל שומיהון read ומיתבלען ומ(.)נן. Cf. Gordon Moriah 1[74] lines 12,13 דכד מיכתיבז שמהין ומימסר בהדין {בהדין} קמיעה כל שידין ודיוין ולילאתה וכל חילמי סנין וכל רוחי בישאתה נפקין וערקין ומיתבלעין מינה (this sequence is repeated in lines 18-19 and 25 of the same bowl). The same is true for l. 14, instead of ומיחבל עין read ומיתבלעין.

13 instead of בגתמן read (נא)בגד.

19 Read משסטמיתון, cf. Gordon Moriah 1 l. 21 משצטם. These are both Shafels from the root סתם (for a fuller discussion see above the note on l. 1 of M101).[75]

Notes on the synopsis

It has already been noted above that the image and magical characters in M107 and Geller A appear to have evolved from the same Vorlage. Over and above these graphic markers, a comparison of the two texts makes it clear that the greater part of the formula used in Geller A (the larger of the two texts) is close enough to that used in M107 to conclude that they both owe their origins to a common source. A close examination of the differences between the two texts can shed light on the changes that a formula such as this can take in the process of its transmission from scribe to scribe and maybe even generation to generation. Differences which occur in these parallel texts might be due to traditions which permitted the sorcerer a certain amount of flexibility in the use of particular formulas to suit different situations. For instance, the possibility to add more demon names which might be associated with different kinds of complaints, or which were simply requested by a more discerning or maybe even wealthier client who insisted on more text, i.e. more protection. Chosen sections from Moriah 1 have also been added to the synopsis as possible parallels to the extra parts of text that appear in Geller A but not in M107. As Geller A and Moriah 1 were written by the same scribe and for the same clients, it can safely be assumed that the extra material that appears in Geller A is more likely to have been the result of a padding out of formula by the scribe who could dip into his personally accumulated reservoir of incantations. Although Geller A is longer than M107 it can not be assumed to be a more original text.

[74] Gordon 1984, p. 222.

[75] Gordon also noted this form (1984 p.225), though only commented on the assimilation of 's to emphatic ṭ', '-sṭ- > -ṣṭ-'.

The opening formulas used in M107 and Geller A are slightly different, but both are commonly attested in magic bowls.[76] The difference suggests that any rules that might have governed the writing of incantations did not insist on the use of one particular variant. One might bear in mind that this looseness in form was partly to do with the fact that much of the material would have been memorized by the sorcerer and similar expressions commonly used could easily be confused. Another consideration is that the product of the sorcerer's work, the incantation bowl, would most likely only be read by demons and angels, a less critical audience than humans. The order of the sections (e) and (f) in M107 is reversed in Geller A whose equivalent sections are (g) and (f). Also, the verbs in M107 section (e) are imperfects in the 3rd person whereas, in the equivalent section (g) of Geller A they are in the 2nd person. This difference could be attributed to the way the scribe of Geller A had changed the text. Having added section (g), 'I adjure and decree against you', the 3rd person verbs had to be emended for the text to make sense. Another difference in verbal forms is found in sections (p) of both texts, M107 employing the af. imperative ארהיט, whereas Geller A has the active participle form מרהיט. The magical characters and Nomina Barabara which appear half way through Geller A in section (l) appear at the end of the transcription of M107 as section (s), as they are set separately from the rest of the text on the bowl. The slight differences in the Nomina Barbara which also occur in the names in section (m) of both texts can probably be attributed to a 'Chinese whispers' process which are more likely to have produced corruptions in words that have no obvious recognizable meaning. It is, however, worth noting that some of the other unusual magical names are identical in both texts and do not seem to have suffered any corruption. Why this occurred with some names and not others could be explained by assuming that the better preserved names were more commonly known or frequently used and therefore survived transmission in better condition.

---

[76] On the basic opening formula of Jewish Aramaic Bowls see Harviainen 1995, pp. 54-55.

Alternatively, one bad copy would be enough to spawn new varieties of corruptions. In any case, without more evidence to examine one can only speculate.

M108 (16.5cm*5cm)

This bowl consists of nine lines written in a somewhat cursive, yet neat handwriting. The text spirals in a clockwise fashion from the outside rim of the bowl towards the middle. This is quite exceptional, as most texts work their way from the middle outwards. It appears that, after reaching the centre of the bowl, the scribe returned to the edge and added another line of text. It was only then that he circled the whole inscription with a line. There is also an image with horns and wings which has been placed to one side. This text is unusual because, apart from a basic dedication, it contains seven biblical verses which are quoted in full: Ps. 106:47, Zech. 3:2, Ps. 89:53, 106:48, 72:18,19 and 104:31. All of these verses can be found in Seder Amram[77] and seem, as will be shown, to have been specifically borrowed from the weekly evening prayers, the Arvit and the Keri'at Shema al ha-Mittah, which include petitions for protection from dangers of the night (see below). In this context, it is noteworthy that in the dedication of our bowl nightmares (סיוטי) are included as one of the things this amulet is meant to remove. Another bowl, MS 1929/6, which is written for the same client, Adib son of Bat-Šabbeta, and by the same hand also has a very short dedicatory formula to which is added a portion of the Mishna (Zeb. 5:3). This was possibly also borrowed from the Seder Korbanot at the end of the morning prayers.

Transcription of M108

(1) הושיענו יהוה אלהינו וקבצינו והצילנו מן הגויים להודות לשם קדש(ך) להש↓ת(ב)ח
בת(הי)לתיך↓ (2) הדין קמיעה למיסר שידי דיוי וסיוטי וסטני מן הדין ביתיה דאדיב בר בתשבתה
(3) בשום ויאמר יהוה אל.הסטן יגער יהוה בך הסטן יגער יהוה ב(ך ה)בחר בירושל(י)ם (4) הלוא זה
אוד מוציל מ־אש ברוך יהוה לעולם אמן <ו>אמן ברוך יהוה (5) אלהי ישראל מהעולם ועד העלום
ואמר כל העם אמן הללויה (6) ברוך יהוה אלהים אלהי ישראל עושה נפלאות לבדו (7) וברוך שם
כבודו לעולם וימלא כבודו את (8) כל הארץ אמן <ו>אמן (9) יהי כבוד יהוה לעולם ישמח יהוה במעשיו

[77] Goldschmidt 1971.

Translation of M108

(1) 'Deliver us, O Lord our God, gather us from among the nations, to acclaim Your holy name, to glory in Your praise' (Ps. 106:47). (2) This amulet is for the binding of demons, dews, frights and satans from this house of Adib son of Bat-Šabbeta. (3) In the name of: 'But the Lord said to the Accuser, "The Lord rebuke you, O Accuser; may the Lord who has chosen Jerusalem rebuke you! (4) For this is a brand plucked from the fire"' (Zekh. 3:2). 'Blessed is the Lord forever; Amen and Amen' (Ps. 89:53). 'Blessed is the Lord, (5) God of Israel, from eternity to eternity. Let all the people say, "Amen". Hallelujah' (Ps. 106:48). (6) 'Blessed is the Lord God, God of Israel, who alone does wondrous things. (7) Blessed is His glorious name forever; His glory fills the (8) whole world. Amen and Amen' (Ps. 72:18-19). (9) 'May the glory of the Lord endure forever; may the Lord rejoice in his works!' (Ps. 104:31)

Notes for M108

The biblical quotes are accurate except for the omission of a ו before the second אמן in l. 4. The word סטן is spelled with a ס rather then a ש which is more common in the bowls. There are a few plene spellings: קבצינו and גויים in l. 1, מוצל in l. 4 and עושה in l. 6.

2 בתשבתה 'Daughter of the seventh day', see also N&Sh B10:7,10 ברשפתא and N&Sh B10:13 ברשבתא.[78]

Appendix

Zech. 3:2, common in the magic bowls, appears in Amram's version of the Keri'at Shema al ha-Mittah[79] together with a quote from b. Ber. 5a which states in the name of R. Isaac (the third century Palestinian amora) that:

כל הקורא קריאת שמע על מטתו - מזיקין בדילין הימנו, שנאמר (איוב ה׳) ובני רשף יגביהו עוף ; ואין עוף אלא תורה, שנאמר: (משלי כ״ג) התעיף עיניך בו ואיננו

[78] Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 183.
[79] Goldschmidt 1971, p. 55.

'If one recites the Shema upon his bed the demons keep away from him. For it is said: "And just as sparks fly upward." The word 'fly' refers to the Torah, as it is written: "You see it then it is gone"'.

In Amram's order of prayers the Arvit, the daily Evening Prayer, comes just before the Keri'at Shema al ha-Mittah. In the Arvit we find the petition:

השכיבנו ה' אלהינו לשלום. והעמידנו מלכנו לשלום ולחיים, ופרוש עלינו סוכת שלומך והגן בעדנו ותקננו בעצה טובה מלפניך והושיענו למען שמך והסר מעלינו דבר חרב ורעב ויגון. ושבור שטן מלפנינו ומאחרינו. ושמור צאתנו ובואנו מעתה ועד עולם כי שומרנו ומצילנו אתה. ברוך אתה ה' שומר עמו ישראל לעד.

'Let us lie down, O Lord our God, in peace, and let us rise up, O our King, to life. Spread over us Your canopy of peace. Direct us with Your good counsel, and save us for Your name's sake. Shield us, and remove from us every enemy, pestilence, sword, famine and sorrow; remove also the adversary from before us and from behind us. Shelter us in the shadow of Your wings, for You, O God, are our Guardian and our Deliverer; truly You, O God, are a gracious and merciful King. Guard us when we go out and when we come in for life and for peace, from now and for evermore. Blessed are You – the Lord, who guards His people Israel for ever'.

The response of the congregation which follows consists of a sequence of Psalm verses, the first five of which (Ps. 89:53, 135:21, 72:18,19 and 104:31)[80] correspond almost identically to the last five in our bowl (Ps. 89:53, 106:48, 72:18,19 and 104:31). The only difference is the second verse in the sequence which might be explained by the existence of a tradition, found in the Tosefta Tan. 3:8 and the Seder Olam Rabbah 30, which cites Ps 106:48, 72:18 and 19 as having been recited in succession at the Temple.

Ps. 106:47, which appears in the beginning of the bowl, is also present in the congregation's response, though only as the seventh verse after Ps. 104:31. A closer examination of the bowl reveals that this verse (Ps. 106:47) must have been added as an after thought, or simply because the scribe ran out of space in the middle of the bowl. The initial הושיענו appears just over a word's distance to the left under the word קמיעה in the outer ring of the text. When the scribe completed writing a full circle, rather than flowing over קמיעה into the spiral, he was compelled to drop below the line so that the last word of the verse (בתהילתך) joined to the first (הושיענו). Indeed, MS 1929/6 which was written by the same scribe for the same client, seems to follow the same pattern that was initially intended for this bowl. It also starts with a dedication formula followed by בשום, 'by the name of', which introduces the quote.

On the basis of the evidence shown above it is suggested that the inspiration of the text in our bowl came from the standard daily prayers. We can not, as yet, ascertain whether they were acquired from service attendance or copied from an early prayer book. Nevertheless, the utilization of this liturgical material which is intended for protection from the dangers of the night is a natural choice.

Elbogen's opinion that the dates for the composition of the fourth section of the Arvit, starting with השכיבנו, should be attributed to the 'post-talmudic period, specifically the Saboraic period',[81] coincides well with the general dating of magic bowls. Surely, our text can be considered as the oldest fragment of this prayer.

In light of this bowl it might be suggested that our scribe also derived his quote of m. Zeb. 5:3, in MS 1929/6, from the prayer book rather than directly from the Mishna, as this mishna is part of the daily morning prayers (סדר ברכות השחר) which also appears already in Seder Amram.[82]

---

[80] Goldschmidt 1971, pp. 52, 53.
[81] Elbogen 1993, p. 88.
[82] Goldschmidt 1971, p. 4, l. 10. The text stipulates that the whole of chapter five be read ושונה איזהו מקומן של זבחים ... אלא צלי.

M112 (9.2cm*10.4cm)

This bowl has a unique goblet shape, although the text is still written in the inside of the vessel. The incantation is written in the usual fashion, spiraling in a clockwise direction from the bottom of the goblet outwards. The flow of the text is interrupted, however, by a column of names and symbols which are simply skipped as each line reaches it. There is a duplicate to this text at the end of N&Sh B19, lines 9-11. The clients for whom this bowl was written are Mari son of [...] and Imtabi daughter of Ima.

Transcription of M112

(1) חתים ומחתם ביתה הדין (2) דמרי בר א[.]ה ודאימטבי בת אימא (3) בחתמא ובצורתא דאל חתים ובחתמא דשדי (4) דלא יקירבון ביה כל חרשין בישין וכל סדנין אפיכין וכל (5) נידרא וענקתא וקריתא ופתכרין וכל סטנין ונאלי וכל מזיקי (6) בישי וכל סטני תקיפי וכל מידעם ביש דמתחמי ו(ד)לא מיתחמי (7) יזחון ויפקון מן ביתה הדין בישמיה ד(פטט..ס) רבא (8) פרופיאל בי(ל)קו (9) פיניבא פיניבא (10) פיניחו יהא (11) פרובאל בילקו (12) פיאירן פיניגא (13) אני הוא יהו הי (14) צור קדוש מסג (15) written in amongst symbols - יי and - שדי

Translation of M112

(1) Sealed and counter-sealed is the house (2) of Mari son of ... and Imtabi daughter of Ima. (3) Sealed by the seal and the image of El, and by the seal of Shaddai. (4) In order that there may not touch him all evil sorceries and all perverted devils[83] and every (5) vow and necklace-charm and invocation and idols and all accusers and incubi and all evil (6) harmers and all powerful satans and every evil thing, that which is visible and that which is not visible. (7) May they flee and go away from this house. By the name of ... the great. (8) PRPYA'L BYLQW (9) PYNYBA' PYNYBA' (10) PYNYHW YHA' (11) PRWBA'L BYLQW (12) PYA'RYN PYNYGA' (13) I am Him living YHW (14) a great Holy Rock (15) YYY Shaddai

[83] See note on M102:4.

Notes for M112

4 יקירבון ביה The verb קרב with the preposition -ב means 'to touch'.[84] The plene spelling with the 'yod' after the first radical is unusual but not unknown, cf. N&Sh B23:1 ניחידרון and N&Sh B23:8 ניקיטין.

5 נאלי Attested in both Syriac, $nl^{\flat}$ - 'nightmare', 'incubus' (PS 340b), and in Mandaic $n^{\flat}l^{\flat}$ 'vampire', 'incubus', or 'succubus' (DM p. 283ab). Attested also in Rabbinic literature in b. San. 59b: יארוד נאלא which Rashi describes as a 'griffin-like' creature. The Aruch Completum[85] cites an otherwise unknown manuscript of b. Bek. 44b which associates נאלא with the reference to קצרית 'shortness of breath.' See also Montgomery 1913, p. 189 and Gordon, 1934, p. 323.

6 מיתחמי ו(דל)א דמתחמי Note that in N&Sh B19:8, 9, just before the duplicate section of our text, there is the verb חמי which is very rare in the bowls: ולא תיתחמון להון 'you shall not make yourselves visible to them'. Cf. also The Sword of Moses p. V l. 13 בשתקצר רבה דלא כסי מיני כלום דחמי ולא מתחמי '... by ŠTQṢR the great from whom nothing is covered, that which is being seen and that which is not being seen'.[86]

13 יהו הי Could also be read as יהו חי 'the living YHW'.

14 צור קדוש מסג Could be either Hebrew, or Aramaic if read as קדיש. Cf. Gordon B:1,2 צור קדיש תתימין ומחתמין ומסגן. There are three possibilities for understanding צור: 1) 'Rock,' as Gordon interpreted it in his notes[87] - the 'Biblical epithet of God'. 2) As י and ו are not always distinguished in our text, It is possible to read ציר. Thus it could mean 'Bound', as in McCullough A:4[88] דציר וחתם ביעזקתה דאל שדי. Note also that, just as in our text, אל שדי is also mentioned. 3) Another meaning of ציר is 'Drawing' or 'shape.' This is similar in meaning to that which appears in AIT 11:9 בעיזקתה דציר וגליף עלה שם מפורש. One might bear in mind l. 3 of our text in which 'the seal and image ...' - צורתא is invoked. Hence, ציר קדוש

---

[84] Sokoloff p. 502b.
[85] Vol.5 p. 296a.
[86] Harari 1997, p. 27.
[87] Gordon 1934, p. 325.
[88] McCullough 1967, p. 3.

'holy image', could be a reference to the unusual characteres intermingled with names that appear on the goblet, and might be part of the source of its potency. On the basis of Gordon B one might consider reconstructing to either <י>מסג, a pa. active participle masculine singular, or ג<י>מס a passive participle.

Synopsis

N&Sh B19

חתים ביתיה דמיהרוי בר גושנאי הדין

בחתמא ובצורתיה דאל חתים בחתמא דשדי אלהא

דלא (ת)יק((ר))בון ביה כל חרשין וכל מעבדין וכל כיסי וכל (10) מללתא

וכל נידרי וענקתא וקריתא בישתא וכל זיקין ומזיקין בישין

וכל סטנין תקיפין וכל מידעם [ ] (11) [ ] דיתתסי

בשמיה דאפסמט רבה אמן אמן סלה

M112

(1) חתים ומחתם ביתה הדין (2) דמרי בר א(ז)ה ודאימטבי בת אימא (3)

בחתמא ובצורתא דאל חתים ובחתמא דשדי (4)

דלא יקירבון ביה כל חרשין בישין וכל סדנין אפיכין

וכל (5) נידרא וענקתא וקריתא ופתכרין וכל (סטנין) ונאלי וכל מזיקי (6) בישי

וכל סטני תקיפי וכל מידעם ביש דמתחמי ו(דל)א מיתחמי (7) יזחון ויפקון מן ביתה הדין

בישמיה ד(פטט..ס) רבא (8) פרפיאל בי(ל)קו (9) פיניבא פיניבא (10) פיזיחו יחא (11) פרובאל בילקו (12) פיאירן פיניגא (13) אני הוא יהו הי (14) צור קדוש מסג (15) ייי שדי

M117 (17.6cm*4.7cm)

This bowl has seven lines of text which are written in a cursive script spiraling in the usual clockwise fashion from the centre of the bowl outwards. There are three biblical quotes in this text (Isa. 37:16, 6:3 and I Sam. 17:45.) which is, otherwise, unusually rich in phrases that have parallels in liturgical and Hekhalot sources. The first half of the text, until the middle of l. 4, is in Mishnaic Hebrew. The rest, apart from the verses in l. 6, is in Aramaic. The Hebrew is generally good despite a few plene or phonetic spellings which are consistent with other Hebrew words found in magic bowls:[89] l. 1 רישונים for ראשונים, l. 2 יושיב for יושב, l. 3 שים for שם, ליפני for לפני, l. 4 אתא for אתה and דויד for דוד. This bowl was written for a certain Asher daughter of Mama.

Transcription of M117

(1) אלה (ד)[....] הרישונים האחרונים שהוא מנ(א)גן מלפני שאול המלך (2) בשום יהוה צבאות אלהי ישראל יושיב הכרובים על כל הנגעים על כל המזיקין על כל הרוח (3) על כל האש וערויות על כל העין ותנו כבוד לשים כבוד וילכו להן במקום מושבה שליפני אשר בת מאמא (4) ברוך אתא יהוה אלהי דויד רופא החולים דיתיב דקאים דשחר דדמיך דמזיח דממכי בשמיה דמרמרחות מלאכה (5) לית אנא משבע עלכי לא בסרין לא במלאכין א(ד)רים אילהין בשמיה רבה יהוה צבאות אלהא דישראל אלהא דימיניה דחילא (6) במ[..]לא ותהומא בשמיה דיה יה יה קדוש קדוש קדוש יהוה צבאות אלהי מערכות ישראל דשליט על כל רוחא בישתא איתגערי רוחא בישתא (7) מימקום מושבה דאשר בת מאמא אמן אמן סלה

Translation of M117

(1) These [...] the first, the last, the last that he is playing before Solomon the king. (2) By the name of 'YHWH Sabaoth the God of Israel who is enthroned among the cherubim' (Isa. 37:16). Against all the plagues, against all the harmful spirits, against every spirit, (3) against all fevers and shivers, against all the (evil) eye. Give glory to the name of glory. And may they go away from the place which is before the dwelling of Asher daughter of Mama. (4)

[89] Kaufman 1973, p. 173.

Blessed are you YHWH the God of David healer of the sick, the one who sits, the one who stands, the one who wakes up, the one who goes to sleep, the one who raises, the one who lowers. By the name of MRMRHWT the angel. (5) I do not adjure you by princes or great angels, but by the name of the great one, YHWH Sabaoth the God of Israel, the God whose right hand is feared in (6) [...] and the tehom. By the name of YH YH YH YH 'holy holy holy' (Isa. 6:3) 'YHWH Sabaoth the God of the ranks of Israel' (I Sam. 17:45) who rules over every evil spirit. Evil spirit, disappear (7) from the place of dwelling of Asher daughter of Mama. Amen amen selah.

Notes for M117

1 The opening line of the bowl is incomplete, yet, there are two possible sources from which it might be borrowed: II Samuel 23:1 or from the נשמת כל חי of the Sabbath morning prayer. If one reconstructs l. 1 on the basis of II Samuel 23:1 ... ואלה דברי דוד האחרנים one would have to account for the mention of both the 'last ones' (האחרונים) and 'King Saul' which follow. In the b. MQ 60b R. Jehudah explains that 'these were the last words of David' (II Samuel 23:1) implies that former words (ראשונים) were spoken:

> אחרונים מכלל דאיכא ראשונים ראשונים מאי היא וידבר דוד להי את דברי השירה הזאת ביום הציל הי אתו מכף כל אויביו ומכף שאול
>
> "'Last words' implies that there were 'former words', what were the 'first words'? 'And David spoke to the Lord the words of this song in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies and from the hand of Saul' (II Samuel 22:1)".

Additionally, it might be noted that the first words of the opening line of our bowl are similar to the expression ... אלהי הראשונים והאחרונים which occurs in the נשמת כל חי from the Sabbath morning prayer. In close proximity to these words there occurs in one of the manuscripts of Seder Amram ורופא חולים, which also appears in l. 4 of our text.[90]

2 הכרובים ... יהוה A quote from Isa. 37:16 which also appears as part of a list of names in the Hekhalot literature (Metatron, Schäfer Synopsis §402). The last two words of this sequence are also found in I Chron. 13:6 (יושב הכרובים), Ps. 80:2 (ישב הכרובים), and in Ps 99:1 (ישב כרובים). Variants of this name occur in Moriah 1:21 (יהוה צבאות ישיב הכרובים) and A17:18,19[91] (בשם יהוה [י]ושב הכרובים). Cf. also m. Ber. 7:3 אלהי ישראל אלהי הצבאות יושב הכרובים and b. Ber. 50a ברוך ה' אלהי ישראל אלהי הצבאות יושב הכרובים which is very close to the formula in our text. Note also that in l. 5 an Aramaic equivalent (יהוה צבאות אלהא דישראל), which is common in the Targ. Ps-J., is used. Incidentally, the Targum of Isa 37:16 is slightly different to line 4: יי אלהא צבאות וגו'.

[90] Goldschmidt 1971, p. 70.

3 תנו כבוד ל In the Minor tractate Soferim 14:5, תנו כבוד לתורה is mentioned as part of the liturgy to be said before reading from the Torah.[92] This formula appears also in the Minor tractate Derekh Eretz perek ha-Yotzeh 17 as part of the prayer to be said on entering the toilet (תנו כבוד לאלהינו),[93] a place thought to be infested with demons.[94] Cf. also Midrash Tanhuma parashat Mishpatim 19[95] where it is stated in the name of R. Hanina that, because the world is full of 'spirits' and 'harmers' (רוחות ומזיקים), the Lord gives every one of the people of Israel a myriad and a thousand protective angels who walk before him and declare: 'give honour to the image of the Lord blessed be He' (תנו כבוד לצלמו של הקב"ה).

במקום Read למקום, cf. l. 7.

שליפני The use of Hebrew here is somewhat awkward. It is possible that this is due to the scribe's free translation of the Aramaic relative pronoun ד which is used correctly in l. 7.

4 החולים ... ברוך Cf. Gordon 7:12 ברוך אתה יהוה רפא חולי כל בשר ומיפל<י>א לעשות which is part of the morning prayer and already attested in Seder Amram.[96] Slightly closer in form to our text is ברוך אתה ה' אלהינו מלך העולם רופא חולים, which appears a bit later in the morning prayer.[97] In b. Ber. 60b the elements תנו כבוד, in l. 3 of our text, and רופא החולים, in l. 4, both appear as part of the same liturgical sequence. It states that: "One who enters the toilet says: 'Be honoured, ye honoured and holy ones that minister to the Most High. Give

---

[91] Naveh and Shaked 1993, p. 50.
[92] Also in Seder Amram, Goldschmidt 1971, p. 58.
[93] Seder Amram under the section of 'personal prayers and blessings'. Goldschmidt 1971, p. 184 - תנו כבוד לאלהים. In b. Ber. 60b a slightly different variant is תנו כבוד לאלהי ישראל.
[94] B. Ber. 62a 'Any one who is modest in the toilet is saved from three things: from snakes, from scorpions, and from maziqim'.
[95] This Midrash is probably not edited before the ninth century.
[96] Goldscmidt 1971, p. 2.

honour (תנו כבוד) to the God of Israel'". Furthermore, when leaving one says: 'Blessed is He who created man in wisdom and created in him many orifices and hollow passages ...' (ברוך אשר יצר את האדם בחכמה וברא בו נקבים נקבים חללים חללים ...), which is part of the morning prayers, also to be recited when emerging from the toilet. It is then asked: "How does one seal this prayer? Rab said: 'that heals the sick (רופא חולים)'". רופא חולים also appears in Seder Amram in the נשמת כל חי[98] prayer, part of the Sabbath morning prayers, only a few words after אלהי הראשונים והאחרונים (see notes to line 1).

מזיח This is a pa. form from the verb זוח I 'to raise'[99] which, although known in Syriac, was previously unattested in Jewish Aramaic. The list of six participles, of which מזיח is one, seems to refer to potential benefactors of the blessing they follow. This is reminiscent of the participles used in b. Ber. 60b which represent a series of activities for which appropriate prayers are recommended: הנכנס ... 'one who goes out (of the latrine) says' כי נפיק אומר 'one who wakes up says' כי מתער אומר ... 'one who enters his bed says' לישן על מטתו אומר ... 'one who dresses says' כי לביש לימא ... 'one who sits up says' כי תריץ ויתיב לימא ... etc.

מרמרחות Cf. A4:24,25 where מרמראות,[100] of which מרמחות might be a corruption, appears in the amulet only two words after אלהי מערכות, the quote from I Sam 17:45 which is in line 6 of our text. Marmaraot is also found in Sepher ha-Razim[101] as one of the angels who is in charge of the movement of the sun during the day.

6 ישראל ... קדוש A combination of Isa. 6:3 and I Sam. 17:45. It is interesting that the last two words of the quote from Isa. 6:3, יהוה צבאות, are the same as the first two words of the quote from I Sam. 17:45. Thus rather than being duplicated these words are shared. Also noteworthy is the fact that the section used from the I Sam. 17:45 is preceded in the Bible by the word בשם.

איתגערי רוחא בישתא Cf. T-S K 1.68 lines 2,3[102] אל]הי מערכות ישראל געור כל רוחין בישין, A19:24,25[103] דיתגערון רוחא בישתה אשתה וטרטיה and A27:4,5[104] בישתה [רוחא] דיתגערון.

---

[97] Ibid.
[98] Goldscmidt 1971, p.70.
[99] J. p. 385a.
[100] Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 56.
[101] Margalioth 1966, p. 96.
[102] Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 222.
[103] Naveh and Shaked 1993, p. 62.

7 מושבה If the scribe intended this part of the incantation to be in Aramaic, as the demonstrative ד which follows suggests, then he should have written מותבה.

[104] Naveh and Shaked 1993, p. 91.

M121 (16.3cm*6.3)

This bowl consists of six lines of a rather cursive script spiraling in a clockwise fashion from the inside out. This incantation was written for Ahi son of Mahlapta and Imi daughter of Qaqi his wife for whom M103 and M119 were also written.

Transcription of M121

(1) חתים ומחתים ביתיה ובניה ואיסקופתיה ומעולהון ומיפקיהון (2) ועובידיהון וכל דאית לה לאחי בר מחלפתא ולאימי בת קאקי איתתה (3) מן שידי ומן דיוי חתים ומיסטנין חתים ומילילית‌א ומימבכ(ל)לתא ומיפגעין (4) בישין מן מרכבתא בישתא ומיחרשי בישי מן סטני דמישתדרי (ב)חרשי ומיכל (5) מידעם ביש מ(ן) יומא דנן ולעלם אמן אמן סלה הללויה יה יה יה י(ה) ייה ייה הי (6) היי אאא(ב) בבבב (ב) (ב)אש (ג)א אמן (א)א תתת (ד)דדד גגג דד אמן אמן סלה

Translation of M121

(1) Sealed and counter-sealed are his house and children and threshold, and their entrance and exit (2) and servants, and all that is Ahi son of Mahlapta's and Imi daughter of Qaqi his wife. (3) Sealed from sheds and dews, and sealed from satans, and from liliths and from tormentors and evil afflictors, (4) from the evil chariots and evil sorceries, from satans which are being sent by sorceries and from all (5) evil. From this day and for ever amen amen selah halleluya. YH YH YH YH YH YYH YYYH HY (6) HYY A'A'A'A' (B) BBBB (B) (B) A'Š (G) A' amen (A') TTTT (D)DDDD GGG DD amen amen selah.

Notes for M121

1 ומעולהון ומיפקיהון The usual forms of the nouns 'entrance' and 'exit' have a נ towards the end of the word, hence, one would expect ומיפקונ(י)הון ומעלונ(י)הון*, cf. N&Sh B25:11 מעלוניה ומפקוניה. Note, however, that מיפקא, without a נ, is also attested[105] as meaning

[105] J. p. 778a.

'exit', as is מעליא 'entrance' in some targum editions.[106] The first ו in מעולהון, which could also be read as a י, is probably due to the root from which this noun is derived, which could be construed as the mediae y/w עול rather than the midiae geminatae עלל.

2 דאיתלה, איתתה This scribe is not particular in differentiating between יה- and ה- for the 3rd person masculine singular personal pronominal suffix.

3-5 מיסטנין, מילילית֯א, מימבכ(ל)לתא, מיפגעין, מיחרשי, מיכל Cf. AIT 21,22 and 23 which are very similar to our text, all start with חתים ומחתם and follow the same formulaic pattern with slight variations. Montgomery states that 'ו, ז, י and ן are indistinguishable'[107] in these bowls and, therefore, opts for reading מן כל instead of what looks like מיכל (passim) as well as מבכלתא (l. 2 of all three texts) for what appears to be מימבכלתא. Epstein amended Montgomery's readings, reinstating the י in both cases, claiming that it is too short to be a final 'nun', as well as the fact that such forms are attested in the Yerushalmi and Gaonic material.[108] In our text it is also preferable to read these letters as 'yods' as the final 'nun' is in all cases clearly distinguishable. In some cases, however, the scribe uses the separate form of the preposition מן rather than the shorter prefixed form -מי.

מרכבתא בישתא Cf. Gordon 8:4, where Gordon translates the same expression, without explaining his reasons, as 'the bad "chariot" (= constellation = luck)". In N&Sh B13:6 there is a similar expression מרכבא לטבי 'the chariot of the evil ones'. Though of a late redaction, not earlier than the 12th century, Numbers Rabbah 12 mentions that the demoness Igrat bat Mahlat, who is also referred to in b. Pes. 112b, has a chariot (אגרת בת מחלת ומרכבתה).

סטני דמישתדרי בחרשי Whether incorporated as a matter of form or not, this addition to the list of malevolent entities indicates anxieties that go beyond the demons that were believed to naturally exist on their own accord. This suggests that the clients feared that others were performing malicious magical acts against them. Cf. Ellis 3:4 ויתה<פ>כ<ו>ן ויזל<ון> על ניתסרון וניכמרון כולהין פתיכרין על קרינהון ועל משד<ר>ריניהון ועובדיהון; BOR:7 משדרנהון; Yam:15 יתה[פכון] כל חרשין בישין על עבדיהון ועובדין תקיפין על משדרנהון; Gordon 6:7,8 ונתהפכון כל חרשי בישי וכל Gordon 5:3-5 ויזלון ויתהפכון על עבדיהון ועל משדרניהון

[106] J. p. 817b.
[107] Montgomery 1913, p. 204.

מעבדי תקיפי דעבידין בה ודמיתעבדין בה ... ונתהפכון על עבדיהון ועל משדררניהון; N&Sh B23:8,9 וניהדרון על ... עלה ועל ירתי ביתה ועל משדרינהון. (See also note on M102:2).

[108] Epstein 1983, pp. 348-349.

M123 (17.3cm*7.5cm) and M138 (16.7cm*6.5cm)

These two texts are duplicates and are therefore dealt with together. There is a third duplicate, MS 2053/216, a transcript of which is provided below in the synopsis. All three texts seem to be written by the same cursive but reasonably clear hand. The clients of all three bowls are related. We know from M121 that Immi daughter of Qaqi is the wife of Ahai son of Mahlafta, the same couple which appears in M138. In M123, however, Immi daughter of Qaqi appears with a man who bears the same forename but has a different mother, Ahai son of Qini. It might be that Ahai's mother was known as both Mahlafta and Qini,[109] though it is also possible that Immi daughter of Qaqi had occasion to marry twice. Finally, one must not exclude the possibility that Ahai son of Qini was a relative who lived in the same house. Each of these three names is accorded its own bowl, M123 is dedicated to Immi daughter of Qaqi, M138 to Ahai son of Mahlafta and MS 2053/216 to Ahai son of Qini. Nevertheless, the formula, duplicated in all the texts, states at the outset that it is meant for the protection of more then one person: דלא יקרבון עליהון 'in order that there may not come against them'. The protection that is sought for by the clients is specifically from the malicious activity of fellow human beings, described more specifically in lines 1, 3 and 6 (of M123) as an oath, curse and evil speech, though a more complete list is provided in lines 6-8 of M123. The magical motif at the centre of this text (M123:3-6) comprises the invocation of the name אהיה אשר אהיה followed by some more divine names, a Hekhalot style depiction of God and a quote from the Targ.-O. of Ex 3:5. This combination of motifs represents one of the best known themes in Jewish magical tradition, the most famous example of which is the Sword of Moses, a manual of name based magic that claims to be the divine revelation of Moses.

Transcription of M123

(1) הדין קמיעא דאיתקמע על שום אימי בת קאקי דלא יקרבון עליהון נידרין לוטן ממללן (2) בישון תוב אנא משבענא עליכון נידרא לוטתא מ{ז}^לי^לתא בישתא משבענא עליכון בניהור יה בשדי (3) יה קסין יה בהדין אשבעית נידרא לוטתא <מללתא בישתא משבענא עליכון ב>אהיה אשר אהיה שמו פסגדא שמו אפסגדא שמו טובה טיה מיה (4) שמו יההי קא שמו אחס באלמס פניו פני שיביל

קרניו קרני לון מרכבתיה נור דליק שרפוהי נור משמשין שליחין בריבוהי (5) נור לבישין משגרין (ל)עילא מיקרני חיתה בחגא רבה דמלכותא בשמיה רבה דהוה מן קדמין כמו דאמר ליה למשה באסנה שרי סנך (6) מעל ריגלך משבענא עליכון נידרא לוטתא ומללתא בישתא דאי תעימו אימי בת קאקי בין ניהמתא דנהמא על זרעיהי ובין (7) נומתא דמפקא בפומא ובין נידרא דארמאי דיהודאי בין לוטתא רחיקא קריבא בין לוטתא דשיבבה דאחא ואחתא ובין לוטתא דגברי (8) דנשי ובין נידרא דמשלם לפתכרי דיכרי לאיסתרתא {ל}ניקבתא ובין נידרא ושלמתא דכל בני אינשה תיזחון תינטלון תיאבדון מיאימי בת קאקי מיאחי בר קיני (9) מיבנוהי ומיביתיה כוליה מן יומא דנן ולעלם אמן אמן סלה.

Translation of M123

(1) This amulet has been bound upon the name of Immi daughter of Qaqi in order that there may not come against them oaths, curses and evil speeches. (2) Again, I adjure you oath, curse [and] evil speech. I adjure you by the light of YH by Šadai (3) YH QSYN YH. By these (names) I adjure, oath, curse, I-am-that-I-am, His Name PSGDA', His Name A'PSGDA', His Name ṬWBA' ṬYH MYH, (4) His Name YHHY QA', His Name A'ḤS BA'LMS. His face is the face of ŠYBYL, his rays [of light] are rays of LWN, his chariot blazing fire, his Seraphs fire, messengers officiating by [the agency of] his magnificence, (5) they are clad in fire, sent above the creature's horns. By [the agency of] the great crown of majesty, by His great name which has existed from days of old. The same [name] He told Moses at the burning bush [when he told him]: 'Remove your shoes (6) from your feet [etc.]' (Targ. O. Ex. 3:5) I adjure against you oath curse and evil speech that if you sadden Immi d. of Qaqi. Be it by a groan that groans over its descendants, be it (7) by a slumber which causes [things] to issue [from with]in the mouth, be it by an oath of a gentile or a Jew, be it by a curse of a relative or a stranger, be it by a curse of a neighbour, brother or sister, be it by a curse of men (8) or of women, be it by an oath that is being delivered to male idols [and] female idols, or be it by an oath or magic rites of any human beings. Be removed, move, and perish from Immi daughter of Qaqi from Ahai son of Qini (9) from his children and from all of his house from this day and for ever. Amen amen selah.

---

[109] In some of the bowls there are clients who are mentioned as having another name, cf.

Notes for M123

1 קמיעא דאיתקמע על שום The verb קמע 'to bind' is previously unattested in Jewish Aramaic. It is known in Syraic in the same sense as we find it here qmʿy qmyʿ 'those who bind on or who sew together amulets'.[110] Though rarely used in Hebrew the verb קמע is already attested in the Tosefta cf. Demai 2:17 (repeated in b. Bek. 30b) מעשה באשה אחת שנשאת לחבר והיתה קומעת על ידו תפלין 'There was a certain woman who was married to a scholar and used to bind the straps of the tefillin (phylacteries) on his hand'. Cf. also M155:9 where the same expression appears though spelled differently, קמיעה דאיתקמיע.

נידרין לוטן ממללן בישון - Three plural nouns in the absolute state, the first is masculine whilst the second and third are feminine. All three appear in forms that are unusual for magic bowls: The form that commonly occurs for נידרין is the appocopated נידרי; לוטתא is not otherwise attested in the bowls in the plural in the absolute state at all;[111] ממללן is a pa. participle feminine plural form of the verb מלל.[112] The adjective בישון has ו as a matres lectiones. It is interesting that in lines 2 and 6 and the reconstruction in l. 3 (see below) the author of the text decided to employ the nominal form מללתא.

2 עליהון A clear indication that the bowl was intended from the start for the protection of both the clients, even though only one is mentioned in the opening line.

3 <מללתא בישתא משבענא עליכון ב> The text is amended here in line with the two duplicates, see the synopsis below.

3-6 ריגלך ... אהיה This encompasses a well known set of motifs that developed within Jewish magical traditions of Late Antiquity concerning אהיה אשר אהיה - the name that was given to Moses (Ex. 3) at the burning bush. As we shall show, the different parts of this particular section of the incantation have parallels in the Bible, Targum, Hekhalot and

---

M148 מיהרנהיד בת אחת דמתקריא כוטוס 'Miharanahid daughter of Ahat also called Kutus'.

[110] Brockelmann p. 673ab.

[111] In Yam:14, לוטן is cited; however, in that text the word appears to be disjointed and the reading is not certain. A masculine plural form is known from the Targum, לוטין. This is probably not our form, however, as the masculine of this noun is not attested in the bowls and one would have to reconstruct the י in our text (לוט<י>ן)*.

[112] Cf. Gordon H:11 רוחא בישתא דימממללא בלישנא תקיפא ... ממללא used as a verb, and active participle.

magical texts such as the Sword of Moses, as well as other surviving bowls and amulets. The first part is a straight forward invocation/recitation of divine names within a Hebrew format signified by the use of the word שמו 'his name is', commonly found in bowls, amulets and Hekhalot texts. The description of God himself, face and emanating rays of light, is in Hebrew, while the description of his attending hosts which follows is in Aramaic. This depiction of God and his hosts is reminiscent of the imagery and language of the visions of Ezekiel[113] and Daniel.[114] The descriptions of angels which are found in the Hekhalot are similar to our text, cf. for example III Enoch (Schäfer Synopsis §33-§34)

> אמר ר' ישמעאל אמר לי מטטרון מלאך שר הפנים למעלה מהן יש שר אחד אדיר מופלא אמיץ ומשוב(ח) בכל מיני שבח כרוביאל יוי שמו ... ומראה פניו כאש יוקדת וכתר קדושה על ראשו ששם המפורש חקוק בו ... וזיו שכינה על פניו וקרני ההוד אור פניו ... ולמה נקרא שמו כרוביאל יוי השר מפני שהוא ממונה על מרכב כרובים
>
> 'R. Ishmael said: Metatron the prince of the countenance told me that above them there is a mighty, wondrous, brave and praised prince in all manner of praise, Krubiel YWY is his name ... the sight of his face is as burning fire and the crown of holiness is upon his head wherein the 'explicit name' is engraved ... the divine glory is on his face and the rays of majesty are the light of his face ... and why is he called Krubiel YWY the prince? It is on account of the fact that he is in charge of the chariots of the cherubim'.

Cf. N&Sh B13:18 נוריאל רבה נוריאל שמיה נורא לביש נור לבישין, N&Sh B13:21 where angels that have come to the presence of Shamish are also described as clad with fire (נורא לבישין), and T-S K 1.73 page 3:6 בנורא לבש 'being clothed in fire'.[115]

(ל)עילא מיקרני חיתה בחגא רבה דמלכותא A close parallel to the wording of 'above the horns of the creatures' has been preserved in the Zohar Ex. Beshalah 56b לעילא מן קרני החיות. What appears there, above the horns of the 'creatures', is a 'name'. Cf. Metatron (Schäfer synopsis §734→397) שמו הגדול שנמסר לו למשה מסיני {מש} זה מפרש תגא מעל upon the

---

[113] Ez. 1.

[114] Dan. 7:9 נור דלק. In Ma'seh Merkabah R. Neḥoniah ben Haqanah reveals to R. Ishmael five prayers which include divine names. These prayers are meant to assist descent and rising from the Merkabah. In the first of these (Schäfer, 1981, §587 MS O1531) נור דליק appears amongst the names.

[115] Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 230.

crown His great name is 'explicit', the one that was given to Moses at Sinai'. It is noteworthy that in one of the manuscript variants (O1531) there appears הגא rather than תגא, a variation that is also possible in all three of our bowls since ה, ח and ת are not clearly distinguished.

בשמיה רבה דהוה מן קדמין Cf. Buch/Namen, Schäfer Synopsis §492 - a small book of magic (§489-§495) in which instructions are given in preparation for the use of 'this great name' הדין שמא רבא (in §490 N8128 line 17 שמיה רבא). This name is described as having existing for ever (§490 N8128:33 ושמו קיים לעולם ולעלמי עולמים, and purports to help protect against an enemy. This 'great name' is the very one that was given to Moses at Sinai: (MS N8128):

> דין שמיה רבא ... הוא דהוה דאיתגלי למשה בסנה דין שמיה ... קיים הוא עד סוף כל הדורות
>
> '... this is His great name ... the one that was revealed to Moses in the burning bush, this is his name ... it is in existence till the end of all the generations'.

Cf. also Bescwörung/Namen §514:[116]

> דין שמא רבא דמסר זגנאל מלאכא למשה בן עמרם כשנגלה עליו אל {?} חי בסנה וכל היודעו ומזכירו בטהרה לא יוזק לעולם
>
> 'This is the great name that Zaganel the angel gave to Moses son of Amram when the living God was revealed to him in the burning bush, and all who know and invoke it in purity will never be harmed'.

שרי סנך מעל רגלך Our text is a quote from Targ.-O. Ex. 3:5. Targ. Ps-J. differs at this point in that it employs the verb שלוף rather then שרי. It is interesting that in Ex. 3:14 of Targ.-O., the version preferred in our bowls, אהיה אשר אהיה is preserved in its Hebrew original, thus preserving its integrity as a 'name'. On the other hand, Targ. Ps-J. of the same verse offers a more literal Aramaic adaptation in its place.

In a fragment of the Ḥarba de-Moshe,[117] it is not just the divine name that is said to have been revealed to Moses, but the whole of the magical book. This system of 'name magic' is equated with the Merkabah revelation of R. Ishmael:

> דין חרבא דמשה שנמסר לו בסנה ונגלה לו לר' ישמעאל בן אלישע כמעש' מרכבה

[116] Schäfer 1981.
[117] Schäfer 1981, §598 MS N8128.

'This is the Sword of Moses that was revealed to him in the burning bush, and as was revealed to R. Ishmael son of Elisha as Maaseh Merkabah'.

A bit further in the same text (§606) the magical qualities of the Sword of Moses, which is described as a name, are listed:

אמתי זהו חרבא של משה שהיה עושה נסים וגבורות ויכלה לכל כשפים והוא נגלה למשה בסנה ונמסר לו השם הגדול והמפואר ואם נגלה לרבי ישמעאל כשעלה למרכבה ושמור אותו באמת והוא שמרך ... והוא מצילך מכל צרה בעולם הזה

'In truth this is the Sword of Moses that preformed miracles and brave deeds and can restrain all sorcery. It was revealed to Moses in the burning bush, this great and glorious name was transmitted to him, and was also revealed to R. Ishmael when he ascended to the Merkabah. Keep it in truth and it will protect you ... and it will save you from every misfortune in this world'.

The power of the name that was revealed to Moses is reiterated in the appendix to The Sword of Moses:[118]

אהיה אשר אהיה יה ביה אה באה וה וה אה אה קדוש צבאות יהוה ממלא דילי ואסותא דילך אסיריתון וחתמיתון כוכבי שמיא ומזליהון שרי ארעא ושרי מרומא דלא יחתון בי ולא יצערון יתי הוו עמי וסועדו יתי בכל מה דאנא עבידנא ולא תקרב נפשי לחבלא משום דחתימא קימתי בשמיה דמן דיפרש שמיה למשה באסנה

"I-am-that-I-am YH BYH A'H BA'H WH WH A'H A'H Holy are the hosts of God. My word and your healing. I have bound and sealed you - the stars of the sky and their constellations, ministers of the earth and ministers of the on-high, that they may not sin against me and not afflict me. Be with me and assist me in all that I do. And my soul shall not come near to harm because I have established the seal in His name, of that one, His name, that was made 'explicit' to Moses in the burning bush'.

This combination of the depiction of God in human terms with the more abstract 'name' is noteworthy. Whilst discussing a midrash on the name אהיה אשר אהיה, which appears in Otiyyot de-Rabbi Akiva (c. 700 CE),[119] Idel noted that it describes the dimensions of the name in terms akin to those used in Shiur Qomah to describe the limbs of God: 'It is possible that that the connection between the fire and the letters of the name stems from the revelation at the burning bush (Ex. 3:6-14), and that this midrash implies that Moses saw the measurement of the stature of the name'.[120] Idel adds a quote from Sefer ha-Navon[121] (p. 120) in which the Tetragrammaton is said to appear to the angels and the prophets as an image of a man.

[118] MS Sasson 290 in Harari, 1997, p. 144.
[119] Battei Midrashot Vol. II p. 364, also in Otsar ha-Midrashim (Eisenstein) p. 407.

Cf. A28: 25,26 שם האל הקדוש הנגלה למשה מתוך הסנה and Gordon H:17 יאהואה שם מפורש דאיתגלי למשה באסנה. In the Geniza fragment T.-S. K 21.95.A page 2a lines 22-25,[122] there is a description of the experiences and revelations Moses had while in the celestial company when he ascended Mount Horeb in the desert. The angel PYSQWN, one of the names attributed to Metatron,[123] tells Moses that it was he who appeared to him in the burning bush and told him to remove his shoes: לאחר מיכן בא רוח פיסקון ... אמר לו משה משה אני הוא שנגליתי עליך ביום שנדבר עמך קונך שנ[א מלאך יי וגו' ואני הוא שאמרתי לך שלנעליך וגו'.

תעימו From the verb עמי 'to be dim, faint, grieved'.[124] The context implies that this must be a causative af. form which has not previously been attested in Jewish Aramaic, although it is known in Syriac.[125]

8 שלמתא Possibly שלמתא<א> (for a discussion on the meaning of this word see Montgomery 1913, p. 85).

---

[120] Idel, 1981, p. 39, n. 43.
[121] Ashkenaz 13th century. Published by Dan J., 1966, עיונים בספרות חסידי אשכנז, Sefer ha-Navon, Kovez al Yad. 6 pt. 1, pp. 199-223.
[122] Schäfer 1984, p. 177.
[123] See also note on M155:3-5.
[124] J. p. 1087b.
[125] PS p. 416b.

Synopsis

M123

(1) הדין קמיעא דאיתקמע על
שום אימי בת קאקי
דלא יקרבון עליהון
נידרין לוטן ממללן (2) בישון
תוב אנא משבענא עליכון
נידרא לוטתא מ{ל}^לֵ^לתא
בישתא משבענא עליכון
בניהור יה בשדי (3) יה קסין יה
בהדין אשבעית נידרא לוטתא
<מללתא בישתא משבענא
עליכון ב>
אהיה אשר אהיה שמו
פסגדא שמו אפסגדא שמו
טובה טיה מיה (4) שמו יה חי
קא שמו אחס באלמס
פניו פני שיביל קרניו קרני לון
מרכבתיה נור דליק
שרפוהי נור
משמשין שליחין בריבוהי (5)
נור
לבישין משגרין (ל)עילא
מיקרני חיתה בחגא רבה
דמלכותא
בשמיה רבה דהוה מן קדמין
כמו דאמר ליה למשה
באסנה שרי סנך (6) מעל ריגלך
משבענא עליכון נידרא
לוטתא ומללתא בישתא
דאי תעימו אימי בת קאקיי
בין ניהמתא דנהמא על
זרעיהי ובין (7) (נ)ומתא
דמפקא בפומא ובין
נידרא דארמאי דיהודאי בין
לוטתא רחיקא קריבא בין
לוטתא דשיבבה דאחא ואחתא

ובין לוטתא דגברי (8) דנשי
ובין נידרא דמשלם
לפתכרי דיכרי לאיסתרתא
{ו}ניקבתא ובין נידרא
ושלמתא דכל בני אינשה

תיזחון תינטלון תיאבדון מן
אימי בת קאקי מן אחי בר קיני
(9) מן בנוהי
ומן ביתיה כוליה
מן יומא דנן ולעלם
אמן אמן סלה

M138

(1) קמיעא דאיתקמע על
שום אחי בר מחלפתא
דלא (2) יקרבון <ע>להון
נידר(ין) לוטן (מ)מלל(ן) בישון
ומשבענא עליכון
נידרא (3) לוטתא מללתא
בישתא משבענא על(יכ)ון
בניהור יה בשדי יה (4) קסון יה
בהדין אשבעית נידרא לוטתא
ומללתא בישתא משבענא {ב}
עליכון
(5) באהיה אשר אהיה שמו
פסגדא שמו אפסגדא שמו
טובה טיה מיה שמו יה חי
קיא (6) שמו אחס באלמס
פניו פני שיביל קרניו קרני לון
מרכבתיה נור דליק
שרפוהי נור
(7) משמשין שליחין בריבוהי
נור
לבישין משגרין {לעיל} לעלא
מיקרני חיתה בחגא
דמלכותא {בשמיה} (8)
ובשמיה רבה דהוה מן קדמין
כמו דאמר ליה למשה
באסנה שרי סינך מעל רגלך
משבענא עליכון נידרא (9)
לוטתא ומללתא בישתא
דאי תעימו אחי בר מחלפתא
בין ניהמתא דנהמא על
זרעיהי ובין נומתא
(ד)[מפ]קא (10) בפומא ובין
נידרא דארמאי די[ה]ודאי בין

נידרא דשיבבה
דקריבה דרחיקא בין לוטתא

ובין [נידרא]א דמשלם (11)

לבי[.] בישתא ובין לוטתא
דיהודאי דארמאי ובין מללתא
דאימא (ובר)[תא] [...]

(תי)ז(ח)ון [...]ן מן
אחי בר מח(ל)פתא (12) (ומ)[.]
אימי בת קאקי

מן יומא דנן ולעלם
אמן אמן סלה

MS 2053/216

(1) קמיעא דאיתקמע על
שום אחי בר קי[ני]
[דלא יקרבון עליהון]
נידרין לוטן ממללן (2) בישן[ן]
תוב א<נא> משבענא עליכון
נידרא לוטתא ומללתא
[בישתא משבענא עלי]כון
בניהור יה בשדי יה (3) קסין יה
בהדין אשבעית נידרא לוטתא
מללתא משב(ענא)
עליכון
באהיה אשר אהיה שמו
פסגדא (4) שמו אפסגדא שמו
טובה טיה [מיה] שמו יה חי
קיא שמו אחס באלמס
פניו פני ש[...] קרניי קרני (לון)
מרכבתיה נור דיליק (5)
שרפו[ה]י נור

לבישין ומש(ג)רין לעילא
מ(יק)רני חיתה בחגא רבה
דמלכותא
בישמיה רבה דהוה מיקדמין
כמו דאמר (6) (ל)[יה] למשה
באסנה שרי סינך מעל ריגלך
משבענא עליכון נידרא
לוטתא ומללתא בישתא [...]
דאי תעימו אחי בר קיני
(7) (ב)ין ניהמתא דנהמא על
זרעיהי בין נומתא
דמפקא בפומא

ובין (נ)דרא דמשלם
לפתכרי דיכרי ולאיסתרתא
<ל>ניקבתא ובין ניחמתא
דמ(פ)קא
(8) בפומא בין כל מידעם ביש
בין כל ליליתא בישתא [....]
תיפקון מיביתיה
דאחי בר קיני

ומן ביתיה כולה

אמן אמן סלה

As the clients of all three bowls are related, and the hand writing of these texts is similar, it is reasonable to assume that they were all written by the same hand, or at least produced in the same atelier. The differences between the texts in the first two thirds of the formula are minor. In the above synopsis, the differences are given in bold type. After a certain point, about the middle of M123:7, one gets the impression that the scribe began to improvise. In M123, part of l. 10 is repeated in l. 11 whereas, in MS 2053/216, part of the beginning of l. 7 appears again at lines 7-8. The closing formula, which appears to be most complete in M123:8,9, is only partially reproduced in the other two texts, although, all three faithfully conclude with the standard אמן אמן סלה.

M131 (16.4cm*7.2)

This bowl consists of five lines of text written in a cursive script which, nevertheless, distinguishes between ב and כ. The first line of the bowl is oddly set in that its last word is placed above the first as if to draw the flow of text to spiral inwards towards the centre of the bowl. The rest of the text is not attached to the end of this first line but resumes below it spiraling in a clockwise manner towards the outer rim of the bowl. One possible explanation for this layout is that the scribe made a mistake in the way he placed the first line and, having realized it too late, decided to resume the rest of the text below it as if nothing had happened. Alternatively, the first line may have been added as an after-thought, and the scribe simply miscalculated its length and was thus compelled to draw it inwards where space was available. There is no mention of the name of the client. The combination of the motifs of 'split mountains' in l. 1 and a 'dark place' to which the evil spirits are sent in lines 3 and 4 is reminiscent of the story of the fallen angels and their punishment (see M163 below).

Transcription of M131

(1) איפשיח פקא פקא עים פקא לטורי ולנ(סרין ליבנ)א x בטרפצת סיה (2) אתון דתפקון ותזלון ותיבדרון רוחי בשתא רוחי שידי פתכרי חומרי שידי (3) שידי ולילית‌א לתרע די יהר ובאתר דלא מפקין בה שמשא וסיהרא וכימא (4) וכוכבין דאנה קרית קניסא עיניתנא אתון דתפקון ותזלון ותיבדון רוחי בשתא מן ברתא הדין (5) בשום רבא ובשום סיטרי ורגי(ע)ל אמן אמן סלה

Translation of M131

(1) It was torn, a fissure opened with rupture to mountains and the ..... (2) So that you, evil spirits, spirits, demons, idols, pebble charms, demons, (3) demons and liliths - may you remove yourselves, go and be scattered to the gate of the haughty and the place where the sun, moon, constellation and stars do not come out which I have called the humble ones' penalty. So that you, evil spirits, may remove yourselves, go and disappear from this daughter. (5) By the name of The Great One and by the name of SYṬRY and RGYA'L. Amen amen selah.

Notes for M131

1 איפשיח is an ithpe. of the verb פשח.[126] In Syriac (PS p. 467a) the ithpe. has the metaphoric meaning of 'to be enfeebled, knocked up'.

פקא פקא The first of the pair is the noun פקא, 'valley, split, fissure',[127] cf. פקעא[128] or the Hebrew בקעה. The second is a form of the verb פקע with a weakening of ע to א, just as in AIT 6:11 ארזא כי[129] ניפקא 'shall split asunder as a cedar tree', which Montgomery referred to as a 'Mandaizing spelling' for נפקע.[130] In Mandaic the combination pqʾ pyqʾ 'a split opened' is attested.[131]

2 תיבדרון The same wish for the evil spirits to depart is repeated in line 4, except that there תיבדון, 'may you perish' is used instead. It is possible that the scribe used the similar looking verbs, בדר and אבד , for the sake of variety. Equally, carelessness could be the reason, in which case either תיבד{ד}ון in line 2 or תיבד<ר>ון in line 4 would be the correct readings.

3 תרע די יהר 'The gate of the haughty' beyond which is described a dark place hidden from the heavens might be a reference to the underworld, cf. b. BB 10b וכל המתיהר נופל בגיהנם 'and whoever boasts fall a prey to Gehena'.

4 עיניתנא 'humble, forbearing, kind',[132] a compliment to יהר in the previous line.

---

[126] J. p. 1245b.
[127] Levi, 1889, vol.4 p. 87b.
[128] Levi, 1889, vol.4, p. 93a.
[129] Corrected by Epstein from בי to כי, 1983, vol. 1, p. 334.
[130] Montgomery 1913, p. 144.
[131] DM p. 371b.
[132] J. p. 1092b.

M142 (42.5cm*24.5cm)

This is a giant bowl of which a considerable part of the beginning of the text is missing. The first few lines of the text that are readable are disjointed and therefore difficult to decipher. The scribe differentiates ב and כ in most cases. Three texts which have partial duplicate sections have been identified: Aaron E, MS 1927/61, MS 2053/61 and MS 2053/257. These have been consulted to help reconstruct some of the more difficult sections in our bowl. Three biblical verses are quoted: Isa. 40:31, Num. 14:9 and 32:22. This bowl was written for Adad Gušnaṣ son of Mahdukh and Ispandarmid daughter of Ṭahmandukh his wife. As an appendix to this bowl we have added a proposed reconstruction of the beginning of this text which was made on the basis of the duplicates mentioned above. This section consists of an historiola in which the 'swift prince' is the protagonist, a supernatural entity who bears the same title as the chief angel in the Sword of Moses. In this text he is described as the helper of women who have been assailed by baby-snatching demons.

Transcription of M142

(1) ... (2) (מ)רי עלמא על [.....] דמית(ח)ט(י)פ(ין) ... נ(א)..א ארבע ח[...] ד... חדא מ(ינהי)ן (מבד.יתא) (3) חד(א) מ(י)נהין אמו(מי)תא חדא מנהין בליליתא .... על .... באנפי כורסיה בישמיה (ד)קדש (במי)מריה דשדי ובמל(ת)א (ד) ... (וק)וי יהוה יחלפו כח (4) יעלו אביר כנשרים יורוצו ולא יגועו ילכו ולא ייעפו (וד) ... וד ... מש ... מומינא על(יכון) ... [..]ים יתוה לאחא זוטא נמלכו (ו)נצ ... ...תא [..]א[.]פ(נ)א רזא (רז)א דדליתיה חבל עליכון (5) שידי ויחיבל עליכון דיוי דאמריתון אנחנא לא ידענא מי הוה ומ ... (א)מו(מ)א אגברי ... [..]טרא רבא (ודי)נחיא ורפיא(י)ל א(סיא) ... (בי)ר[.]יה על (בית)[..] [..]יה בנכי ושולינכי כין (6) לא תיגעון ולא תיקירבון בביתיה ובדירתה ובאיסקופתיה דאדד גושנץ בר מהדוך ודאיצפנדרמיד בת טהמנדוך {אל} אינתיה לא ... [לא] בזרעהי דליליה ולא בזרעה דימ(ו)מ(א) לא תי[חז]ון לה לאיצפנדרמיד בת טהמנדוך (7) לא בחיזוה דליליה ולא בחיזוה דימומא ולא תידמון לה בכל גונין וגונין אסיריתון שידי וחתימיתון די עיר(יי)תא וליליתא בישתא בגזרת עדאקפקיאל ... מפרש שמיה ותוב אסיריתון שידי וחתימיתון דיוי ודיותא וליליתא בישתא (8) בשמיה דאכבר דאבכברך בעיזקתא דיצר גיליף עליה מן יומא דנן ולעלם אמן אמן סלה ונכבשה הארץ לפני יהוה ואחר תשובו והייתם נקיים [מיהוה ומישראל והי](תה ה)ארץ הזאת לכם לאחוזה לפני יהוה אך ביהוה אל תימרדו <ו>אתם אל תיראו את עם

הארץ (9) (כי לחמנו) הם סר צלם מעלהם יהוה איתונו אל תיראום[133] דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין די<פ>כירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין (10) דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכירין דיפכרין דיפרירין דיפרירין דיפכרין אסותא מן שמיא חתמתא די שלמה ונטרתא דישלמה תיהוי לה לאיסקופתה [דאדד גושנץ] בר מהדוך ודאיצפדרמיד [בת טהמנדוך] ... (11) ... יה יה יה

(Num. 14:9). Those who are split (repeated 27 times) (10) Healing from heaven, the seal of Solomon and the protection of Solomon shall be for the threshold of Adad Gušnas son of Mahdukh and Ispandarmid daughter of Ṭahmandukh ... (11) YH (repeated 33 times) ...

Notes for M142

2-4 מ)רי עלמא על Most of this section is erased, yet the parallels shown below suggest its context. The most complete of these are MS 2053/61 and MS 1927/61 which seem to be part of an historiola. The translation above has been reconstructed on the basis of the following synopsis.

Aaron E[134]		על ולדי	מ)רי עלמא ... (4)
MS 2053/61	(א)נה (7) הוא ש(רא)	(ק)לילא) דמפשח קדם מרי	עלמא	(על ולד)י
MS 1927/61	אנה הוא (סגומי) (5)	(אבה קליליאה דקאתי קודם מריה דעלמה		על ולדי
MS 2053/257	אנה ה[וא] ס[רא] (4)	קלילא דמפש(ח) [קד]ם מר[י]	(עלמ)[א]	על (ו)לד
M142		[.....] על	מ)רי עלמא	... (2)
Aaron E	נשי(ה) ...	מ)פשח
MS 2053/61	נשיה	דמיתחטפין מפשת
MS 1927/61	נשייא	דמיתח(טפ)ין ומפשח
MS 2053/257	נשיא	דמיתחטפין מפשח מפש(ח)
M142		דמית(ח)ט(י)פ(ין)

If the reading סרא קלילא is correct, one would be reminded of the very same title which occurs in the Sword of Moses V line17.[135] This swift prince, or messenger as he is referred to a page earlier in the Sword of Moses IV, is mentioned in that magical book as an intercessory angel in language that resembles our texts:

> וסלקית לקדמוהי אנא אססי אסס ואסיסיה ואפרגסיה שליחא קלילא דבשליחותי אנא יאי ובשתדרותי אנא מוחי למעבד ופקד יתי מארי כולא איזיל ואשתמע לבני אנשא

[134] Geller 1986, p. 114. Geller did not transcribe this line, yet his facsimile as well as a photograph which he produced for the present author allowed this reading.
[135] Harari 1997, p. 27.

'And I ascended to his presence, I A'SSY A'SS A'SYSYH and A'PRGSYH the swift messenger who is worthy of my mission and I make protest in my dispatch. The Lord of all has commanded me: "Go and be heard to human beings"'.

In our text this messenger can be seen doing his job for the benefit of women whose babies are in danger of being snatched.

חדא ... בליליתא Cf. Aaron E:7 איתא אמומיתא כליליתא[...]. The line continues '... and Saḥlet bat Yama, and these and those that strangle ...' which appears to be a list of demonesses or such evil entities that strangle[136] children. Earlier in the same line, all that is visible is the word ארבע, 'four'. But for the parallel texts this might not have meant much:

M142	חדא מ(ינהי)ן	(2) ... ארבע ח[...] ד...
Aaron E	ומישתדרון על ... [.]מש(מ)שיתא ... (7) ... [ ]איתא ... דחנקו
MS 2053/61	והא ארבע חיון דמישתר[ין] ...	ד(חנק)ן וחטפן
MS 1927/61	ארבע חיון רברבן ד[מי]שתדרן על ולד[יא]	דחאנקן

In M142 and Aaron E, the names of three of the four creatures that attack children have survived. It appears, however, that the versions of the historiola in the other texts only allude to these creatures but do not name them.

באנפי ... A synopsis of the parallel texts confirms the reading of our bowl:

Aaron E	(8) ... כורסיה באנפי כורסיה בישמיה דקדוש במימריה דשדי ובמי[מריה]
MS 2053/61	באנפי (כו)... ...יה דשד<י> (12) במילוליה
MS 1927/61	בשמיה רבה ובעזקתיה (9) דקדוש ובשמיה דעילי(ו)ן ובמילוליה דשדי
MS 2053/257	באנפי {כו} כורסיה ובישמיה דקדוש ובמימירא (7) דשדי ובמתולא
M142	באנפי כורסיה בישמיה (ד)קדש (במי)מריה דשדי ובמל(ת)א (ד)

Note that though there seems to be a good transmission of most of this part of the formula, there is confusion amongst all of the versions concerning the last word. Considering the similarities, a Vorlage may be assumed yet, for some reason, MS 1926/61 deviates from the format of the other texts.

[136] Geller transcribes תנקו which he translates as 'harms'. However, according to the facsimile one could read תנקן which also occurs in both lines 10 and 11 of MS 2053/61.

ייעפו ... וקוי This verse, Isa. 40:31, is quoted in m. Qid. 4:14 (cf. also b. Qid. 82a,82b) to illustrate the protection a youth will gain from learning Torah. It also appears in Aaron E:10, MS 1911/1:7,8, MS 2053/61:13,14 and MS 2053/257:9,10.

5 רפיא(י)ל א(סיא) Cf. N&Sh B27:5 דרפאל (אסיא רבה) and Gordon L:13 דרפאל איסרא דאסותא.

6 Both MS 2053/257 and MS 2053/61 have sections that are close in form to this part of our text (see below). Note that in both parallels, Isa. 40:31 follows this section yet, in our text, this verse appears earlier in lines 3-4:

MS 2053/257	ד(ל)א (תניגעון) ולא תיקרבון ולא תחבלון ... (8) ... (9) ... אינתתיה לא בזרעה
MS 2053/61	דלא תיגעון	ולא תחבלון ... (13) ...	איתתיה לא בזרעה
M142	(6) לא ניגעון ולא תיקירבון ...		אינתיה לא ... [לא]
MS 2053/257	דיממא ולא בפירי(ה) [דליליה ....] סקסנסין וקוי ...
MS 2053/61	דיממא ולא ב(רפיסי) דליליה (סקן) ... ו... וקוי ...
M142	בזרעהי דליליה ולא בזרעה דימ(ו)מ(א)

דימ(ו)מ(א) ... בזרעהי [לא] Cf. The Mandaic Šhafta dQaština p. 202: mn zyrḥ dlyly' wmn bzyrḥ dʿm'm' 'from his seed (semen) by night and from his seed (sowing) by day'.[137]

8-9 בעיזקתה דציר וגליף עלה שם Cf. AIT 11:9 בעיזקתא דיצר גיליף עליה מן יומא דנן ולעלם מפורש מן יומי עלמא ומישת יומי בראשית 'By the seal on which is carved and engraved the Ineffable name, since the six days of the world, the six days of creation'. The motif of the inscribed seal seems to be associated with Ex. 39:30 in which there is a description of the gold frontlet for the holy diadem upon which 'Holy to the Lord' was incised. The language that is used in the Targ. O. Ex. 39:30 is similar to that of the expression in our bowl - וכתבו עלוהי כגלוף דעזקא כתב מפרש קודש ליי. See also notes to M123:5 where there occurs a reference to a 'crown' (תגא) bearing the Ineffable name, which is described as part of a vision in an Hekhalot text (Schäfer synopsis §734).

10 דיפרירין Possibly דיפרידין, cf. Aaron D:1-3 where it is repeated 22 times. MS 2053/61, which has similarities to our text, cuts off in l. 20 with דיפכירין דיפרינין.

---

[137] This text is as yet unpublished though the fragment above is quoted from DM p. 167b.

Appendix

Our text and its parallels that are cited above are either badly damaged or incomplete. By comparing the different texts, and joining what appear to be the best sections from each, the following reconstruction of the shared formula can be proposed:

Transcription

(MS 2053/61:5) ... וכין חזיתי (MS 1927/61:3,4) בעיני ... והא שמעית קל (MS 2053/61:6-8) דיממלת מן גו חשמלא {ממליל} ממליל וכין אמר (א)נה הוא ש(רא) (ק)לילא) דמפשח קדם מרי עלמא (על ולד)י נשיה דמיתחטפין מפשח (MS 1927/61:5,6) וכן אמר על ק(ברי) מיתי יתיבית וקא שמעית קל נשיא דתוחן ומתוחן[138] בכיין ומב[כיין] והן (....) מפשחן בחד קלא (MS 2053/257:5) וכין אמרן (דמות) ברקא חזינא ובדמות ע(ננין) (MS 1927/61:7) איתו לי דנאחזא ארבע חיון רברבן ד[מי]שתדרן על ולד[יא] (M142:2,3) חדא מ(ינהי)ן (מבד.יתא) חד(א) מ(י)נהין אמו(מי)תא חדא מנהין בליליתא (Aaron E:7) וצחלית בת ימא ואילין אינין (MS 2053/61:7,8) דחאנקן וחטין מממרקן ואכלן כאריה דחשיף[139] וחניק מממריק ואכיל אילין אינון דחנקן וחטפן ממר(ק)ן וא[כ]לן כען אסיריתון וחתימיתון (M142:3) באנפי כורסיה בישמיה (ד)קדש (במי)מריה דשדי ובמל(ת)א (ד) (M142:6) לא תיגעון ולא תיקירבון בביתיה ובדירתה ובאיסקופתיה דאדד גושנץ בר מהדוך ודאיצפנדרמיד בת טהמנדוך {אל} אינתיה לא ... [לא] בזרעהי דליליה ולא בזרעה דימ(ו)מ(א) (M142:3,4) (וק)וי יהוה יחלפו כח יעלו אביר כנשרים יורוצו ולא יגועו ילכו ולא ייעפו

Translation

... and thus I beheld with my own eyes ... and oh, I heard a voice that spoke from within the HŠML speaking, and thus it said: 'I am he, the swift prince who cries out in the presence of the Lord of the world concerning the babies of women that are snatched'. Bursting out, thus he said: 'I sat upon the graves of the dead and heard the voice of women wailing and in pain, crying and sobbing ... crying out in one voice'. And thus they said: 'We are seeing an image of lightning, in the image of clouds they were brought to me that we may see the four great creatures who are sent against the babies'. One of them is MBD[.]YTA', one of them is [138] Possibly an error for דצוחן ומצוחן (S. Shaked -forthcoming).

A'MWMYTA', one of them is BLYLYTA' and SHLYT daughter of YMA'. These are the ones that strangle, harm, finish off and eat. As the lion snatches and strangles, finishes off and eats, these are the ones that strangle, snatch, finish off and eat. Now, you are bound and sealed by the image of His throne, by the name of the Holy One, by the speech of Šadai and by the Word - that you may not afflict and may not touch the house and dwelling and threshold of NN son of NN ... not from his seed of the night and not from his seed of the day. 'But they who trust in the Lord shall renew their strength, as eagles grow new plumes they shall run and not grow weary, they shall march and not grow faint'.

[139] Probably an error for דחטיף (S. Shaked -forthcoming).

M145 (178mm*70mm)

This bowl consists of sixteen lines of a very cursive script. But for a small fragment that is missing and some small areas which are slightly faded the text is almost completely legible. A duplicate, MS 2053/159, has been identified of which a transcript is provided. The name of the client is not stated, though a comparison with the duplicate suggests[140] that in our bowl he/she takes the role of the sorcerer and narrates the text in the first person. The formula that appears in this bowl is unusual and previously unknown. Much of the language and imagery, especially pertaining to the structure of the earth (l. 8), show similarities with Mandaic sources and may be borrowed from them. Such possible Mandaic influences, coupled with the scarcity of any Jewish motifs in the text, suggest the possibility that this incantation might be of Gnostic origin. Throughout this text it can be observed that all the 3rd person masculine plural perfect verbs are equal in form to the singular: l. 3 דיוי נפק; l. 3,4 נפק ארבעה תנינין, נפק ארבע דיוין; l. 6 נפק ארבעה זיקין, תפי דודי; l. 5 ולילית נפק; l. 8 איתיפך מזלי, אישתוש כוכבי; l. 9 מלכי רגש. This can be compared with Mandaic[141] in which the same holds true. However, the elision of the final ו could be the result of a lack of its pronunciation, as is attested in Syriac already from the second century CE.[142] Other unusual features of this text are the mention of the Psalms of David in l. 13 and the lance of Darius, king of the dēws.

Transcription of M145 and synopsis with MS 2053/159

M145	MS 2053/159
(1) אטור גלל ק<א>ינא ואשינא רבתא	(1) אטור גלל קאינא ואטורא רבה
ד(ג)לל{ל} מציתנא ושמ<ע>נא (2) לשמיש חור	דגללא מציתנא (2) ושמענא ליה לשמיש וחור
דכידיבון בריה דמלכה רבא דדיוי ושליטא	בריה דבריה בר (3) מלכה רבה דדיוי ושליטא
רבא (3) דלילית מנההיא שעתא בההוא יומא	רבה דלטבי בההוא יומא בההיא שעתה (4)
בההוא עידנא כד דיוי נפק ליקרבא	ובההוא עידנא כד דיוי נפקין לקרבה וכד

[140] See notes on the synopsis below.
[141] Macuch 1965, p. 262-263.
[142] Nöldeke 1904, p. 36.

MS 2053/159	M145
לילִיאתה נפקן למ(ע)ביא דליפלגא (5) דשידי	ולִיליתא (4) נפק לימ(ו...)א דלפלגא דשידי
וכלה רבתי דלטבי דליגונרא דדיוי וכלה	ומרכבתא רבתא דלטבי ודלגודא דדיוי וכל(י)א
רבתי דלִיליאתה גנח טבלא דמירדא קרי	רבתא דלִיליתא גנח טבלא (5) דמירדא וקרי
קרנא דחבלא (6) טפי דודי ברוגזא ורתח דודי	קרנא רבתא דחבולא תפי דודי ברוגזא תפי דודי
דרבי דחבלא נפק ארבע<ה> זיקי מארבע ·	דרבי דחבולא נפק ארבעה זיקין מן ארבע (6)
רוחי עלמה נפק ארבעה זיקי מינך (7) כיפא	רוחי עלמא נפק ארבע<ה> דיוין מינך (ט)ורי
דרביתא נפק ארבעה תניני מינך טורא דלידון	דלידון נפק ארבעה תנינין מינך כיפי דרביתא
קדח דיוא צנף תנינא יליל זרני ליליתא	קדח דיווא צנף תנינא ויליל (7) זרני ליליתא
אישתרגז ליויתן כוארה נד (8) איתונד ואנידה	ואישתרגז לויתן כורא נד איתונד ואנידה
לכולה ארעה תיביל נודא הוה בארעה וגונחא	לארעה כולה ותיביל נודא הוא בארעה וגונחא
הוה ברקיעה	רבא הווה בירקיע
	(8) נד ארעה ואיתפיך רקיע
איתפיך כוכביא ואיפנך{ך} כל מזאליה	ואישתוש כוכבי ואיתופך מזלי
שף סדנא רבה (9) דרקיעה	שף סדנא רבא דרקיע
	ודוק טורי סמיק פקתא רגש נוני בימא
איתפוך ימא ברוגזיה ובתוקפיה	(9) מלכי רגש ביקרבא
ומלאכי רגש ברקיעה	איתפיך ביתא רבא בתוקפיה
אכוף ימא {ק^אי^נה} קאינה	אכיף ימ(א) קינא
ואכופא רבה דרביתא לציצא דציפרא	ואכופא רבא דרביתא לציצא ולציפרא
אמנה ליה (10) ומשילנא ליה לחיוא כלא	אמנליה {ומשילניה} משוילנ(ה) ליה (10)
ומומינא ליה לעופא רבה דזיבי	מומינא ליה לעופא רבא דזיבי

[143] Isa. 6:3.
[144] Ex. 15:16.
[145] Ex. 15:18.

MS 2053/159	M145
דמיניה נפיק רסיאל מלאכה ונפק מיניה עמודא
דנורא וקליה לכוליה עלמה בחיוכון ציצי וציפרי
(11) בחיוכון נוני וכוארי בחיך חי... (בחי)ך
רסיאיל מלאכה בחייך דוכתוי בת אחת וכל
שום דאית לה
דתישמעי מילי ותיקבלי רוטנאי תיגנחי	דתישמע מ(יל)ן לתיבל ורוטננא דקביל תיגנח
שוטיך בארעה תשני (12) זיויך בכוליה עלמא	שוטיך בארעה ותישני זיוא בכליה עלמא
(איפריטי) ביתא רבה	אפרטה דלביתא (11) רבא
די(..ון) רבה דגונדיה בארקבי	..... (..דכו)ריה ארעה בארק(ב)י
שפיכי וטו(ק...)	אישפוך אישתא בקרקף תניני טקו טקו בבנ(י
	יוזן)
(ב)שוריה אינון בשיני דליליאתה דשרי ביה דיוא	כשורי אילן בשיני דליליתא שרי ביה דיוא
זיאנא דזוני(ה) (13) קרקף פדנא רבה דניסכיה	זינא דזוניה (12) וקרקפנא רבא דניסכאיא
נ(ג)ריה שירשה דארעה
(ח)ד גפיה בארעה וחד גפיה ברקי[עה] (ברו..)	חד גפיה בארעה וחד גפיה בירקיעא
	ניגריה שורשא דארעה ורישיה סדנא דרקיעא
	בניגריה רמי ידוהי
.... וב(גפ)יה שקיף ליליאתה	בגפיה שקיף ליליתא
בההוא יומא ובההיא שעתא ובההוא (14) עידנא	(13) בההיא שעתא בההוא יומא בההוא עידנא
זלכר[..] וסגידית קדם (פ)נוח רבה גיברא	אזיל כרעית וזגדית קדם ב(י)ת אילהי • שבחית

MS 2053/159	M145
ודחילא .ידתי לך אידי(ך)	וזמרת [.] מזמוריה דדויד ואמר אית בכון גברא
דא חוילן בק)רבה וקילן בי]מא רבה דקירסא	חיילן ביקרבא וקילן (14) בימא רבא דקירסא
א(מר א)ית בכון אתתא דשמה דוכתוי בת אחת	ואמר אית בכון גברא
דעברא ימא (15) בקלא וסלקא [....] בר(ו)גז(א)	דעבר ימא בקליה וסליק (ט)ורי בירוגזיה
ושקלא אי(ק)לידא ו(ע)ילא לבית גנזי זינא	ושקיל אקליודי דבית גנזי זיניה {אז}
ומתיא זינא דשידי ו..א דליליאתה ונ(י)...	ומיתי זינא דשידי וזינא דליליתא וניסכא
מיתקטלין ...	דאשמדי (15) מלכא דשידי
דדויד וסיפא דשלמה וניסכא	וסיפא דריוש מלכא דדיוי אנא אד[.... ...](דוד
דד ^ר^יוש מלכא (16) {ו} וזינא דא(שמדי)	ע)ברנא דמיא ב(ק)לאי (סלי)קנא טורי ברוגזאי
מלכה דלטבי ושמ[...] דמרי עלמה ואחרמתא	ושקילנא אקלידי דבית גנזיה [דזיניה] מיתינא
וגזירתא דאבא רבה דישמיא לאחרמה	זינא דשד(י) וסיפא דליליתא (16) וניסכא
ולשמת(א ולתא...) במומתא בקשתא דמידמ^יין	דאשמדי מלכא דשידי וסיפא <ד>דר<י>וש
לה לדוכתוי (...) בת אחת בכל דמותא (17) ובכל	מלכ[א ד]ש[ידי] ... די[..]לי מילמ..יה לה
גו(נ)א בחיתא ובנשי מיתתא בר(חיקתא)	דין דיויא ולילית (מ)...
ובקריבתא ובאחת בת פרכוי מיתין ובכל דמות
ג(יר)א מן (ק)שתא וכול (ליבא) מן .... תיבטל
ותישתמת ותית(נז)ק הדא ליליתא בישתא (מן)
דוכתוי בת אחת (18) ומן חילמה ומן חיזונה ומן
בית מישכבה דדוכתוי דא דמידמיא לה בכל
דמו ובכל גונין ובאחת בת פרכוי מיתא מן
יו(מא) דנן ולעלם אמן אמן ... [143][וקרא זה] (א)ל
זה ואמ[ר] קדוש קדוש קדוש יהוה צבאות מלא
כל (19) הארץ כבודו וקרא זה אל ז(ה) ואמר
קדוש קדוש קדוש יהוה צבאות מלא כל הארץ
כבודו וקרא זה אל זה ואמר קדוש קדוש קדוש

M145 MS 2053/159

יהוה צבאות מלא כל הארץ כבודו [144][ת]פול

עליהם אימתה ופחד בגדול זרועך ידמו כאבן

[עד יעבור] (20) (עמך יהוה) יהוה (עד יעבור)

תפול עליהם אמתה ופחד בגדול זרועך ידמו

כאבן] עד יעבר עמך יהוה עד יעבר עם זו קנית

[תיפול] עליהם אימתה ופחד ... עד יעבר עמך

יהוה עד יעבר עמך יהוה עד יעבר עם זו קנית

יהוה ... (21) [145]יהוה ימלוך לעולם ועד יהוה

ימלוך לעולם ועד אמן אמן סלה

Translation of M145

(1) I am standing on a rock mountain, upon a great stone cliff. I am listening and hear (2) white Šamiš of KYDYBWN the son of the great king of the demons and great ruler of the (3) liliths. From that hour, at that day, at that time when the demons went out to war and liliths (4) went out to the ... of the phalanx of the demons, the great chariot of the no-good-spirits, the troop of the demons, and the great destruction of liliths. The drum (5) of rebellion rumbled, and the great horn of destruction sounded, the cauldrons seethed furiously, the cauldrons of the 'masters of harm' seethed. Four blast demons went forth from you, the (6) four winds of the world. Four demons went forth from you, the mountains of LYDWN. Four dragons went forth from you, shores of the ocean. The demon groaned, the dragon shrieked, Zarni Lilith (7) wailed, and Leviathan the fish got agitated. He shook, quaked (lit.: caused himself to shake) and caused the entire earth and world to shake. Shaking was in the earth and a thunderclap in the firmament. (8) He shook the earth and the firmament overturned and the stars shook and the constellations altered. The great block of the heaven slipped and crushed mountains, reddened the valley, agitated the fish in the sea. (9) The angels were agitated in the battle, and the great house was overturned by his might. The sea covered the nest, and the greatness of the ocean covered the night-hawk and the bird. I say to him, I ask him, (10) I adjure the great bird of rivers, that you may hear my words for the universe and accept my incantation. May your scourges rumble upon the earth, and may you change the appearance in all the earth, upon the contents of the great (11) house .... the earth with scorpions, he caused fire to be poured upon the head of the dragons ṬQW ṬQW ... these boards in the teeth of the Lilith therein dwells a dēw. The weapon of his armour and the (12) great head-man of cast idols. One of his wings is on the earth, one of his wings is in the firmament, his foot step is the root of the earth and his head the block of the firmament, in his step he casts his hands, with his wings he knocks liliths. (13) In that hour, in that day, in that period he went out. I knelt and worshipped before the house of God, I praised and sang the psalms of David. And he said: 'There is a man amongst you who is mighty in battle and swift in the (14) great sea of misfortune(?)' And he said to us: 'There is a man amongst you who traversed the sea with his voice, removed mountains with his wrath and took the key of the store house of his weapons bringing the weapon of demons, the weapon of liliths, the lance of Ashmedai (15) the king of demons and the sword of Darius the king of dēws'. I ..... I am traversing the water with my voice, removing mountains with my anger, taking the key of the store house of his weapons and bringing the weapon of demons, the sword of the liliths, (16) the lance of Asmedai the king of demons and the sword of Darius king ..... dēws and liliths .....

Notes for M145

2 כיבון (ד)כי(ד)יבון חור לשמיש In 2053/159:2 לשמיש וחור בריה דבריה בר 'to Šamiš and Ḥor the great grandson of ...' The ancestor of 'white Šamiš' is cited in our text as bearer of the title 'The great king of demons and great ruler of the liliths', which occurs in several magic bowls as that of the demon Bagdana.[146] It is conceivable that the name כידיבון may be constructed from the root כדב 'to be false'.

4 <ן>נפק The scribe omitted the last consonant of this verb which should be a feminine form. The words פלגא in the sense of 'phalanx' and גודא as 'troop' or 'band' are more commonly attested in Syriac.[147]

---

[146] Ellis 1:4 (= BM 91710), AIT 11:4,5, AIT 18:3,4, Gordon G:2,3, Gordon 9737:1,2 and also in Mandaic in Lidzbarsky 5 (Montgomery 1913, p. 168).
[147] Brockelmann pp. 571ab and 104ab.

5 ... תפי A synopsis with our text's duplicate can aid the understanding of this clause:

M145:5 תפי דודי ברוגזא תפי דודי דרבי דחבולא

MS 2053/159:6 טפי דודי ברוגזא ורתח דודי דרבי דחבלא

The text in our bowl could be translated 'cauldrons were set (on the fire) with anger, the cauldrons of the masters of harm were set (on the fire)'. In the duplicate text the scribe spelt the first verb differently, with a ט. Among the meanings that are attested in Jewish Aramaic, the most appropriate would be 'to increase',[148] in the sense of 'boil over'. This would combine well with the second verb in the duplicate which is רתח 'to boil'. The same root, ṭpy, means in Mandaic 'to cook, boil, seethe',[149] cf. the Mandaic expression dwdyʾ ṭʾpyn 'cauldrons seethe' as well as the Targ.-J. of II Kings 4:38 תפי דודא. It appears that both the spellings with ט and ת are correct. The correct translation of the text should be 'cauldrons seethed furiously, the cauldrons of the masters of harm seethed'.

6 מינך One would expect this form to be a plural in both cases, yet, in our bowl as well as the duplicate, the pronominal suffix refers to the 'mountains of LYDWN' as well as the 'shores of the ocean' as if they were in the singular.

כיפי דרביתא Cf. b. Hul. 60a גידא דרביתא. Rashi explains this as meaning 'on the bank of a river whose name is RBYTA". Jastrow (p. 1443b) cites a manuscript variant which has אגודא דימא 'the bank of the sea'. Indeed, ימא is closer in meaning to the Mandaic rbytʾ[150] from which this word comes.[151] Also, it may be noted that the full expression kypyʾ dʾrbytʾ commonly occurs in Mandaic.[152]

7 אישתרגז Previously attested in the Shafel and Eshtafel stems only in Mandaic.[153]

8 אישתוש Perhaps read אישתגש (!) 'shook'.

שף סדנא רבא דרקיעא The expression סדנא דרקיעא, 'the anvil of the firmament', occurs in Jewish Aramaic only in the bowls,[154] although, a similar idiom, סדנא דארעא, 'the anvil of the

---

[148] J. p. 546a.
[149] DM p. 182a.
[150] DM p. 423, 'sea, ocean, large expanse of sea, inundation'.
[151] Epstein 1983, vol. 1, p. 40.
[152] DM p. 36b.
[153] DM p. 424a.
[154] Cf. MS 1922/1:6 (forthcoming by S. Shaked) where it is invoked for its power alongside magic words, signet rings and bonds.

earth', is attested in the Babylonian Talmud.[155] The almost identical sʾdʾnʾ rbʾ dʾrqʾ,[156] or just sʾdʾnʾ dʾrqʾ, is a common designation in the Mandaic cosmological scheme for the 'foundation' or 'axis' of the earth. Furthermore, the description in our text of the whole earth shaking (l. 7 נודא הוא בארעה) and dislodging the 'anvil (or block) of the earth' has its parallels in Mandaic literature. In a Mandaean phylactery we find: wʾtyt lʾrqʾ dhzʾtʾn mn sʾdʾnh šnʾt ʾmyṭwl drʾzʾ dʾrqʾ mkʾsynʾ[157] 'And I came to earth: she (the earth) that saw me was removed from her axis, because I am covered by the mystery of the earth'.[158] This is part of a description of the chain of events that sees the client's adversarial forces annihilated. In another Mandaean charm the same motif occurs: wnynwd ʾlmʾ kwlh wnynwd šamyš wnynwd syrʾ wnynwd ʾlʾhyʾ wʾnʾšyʾ wnynwd ṭwryʾ wʾrʾmʾtʾ ʾl kwlhwn byšyʾ dhʾṭybyʾ...[159] 'And the whole world shall tremble, and the sun shall tremble and the moon shall tremble and gods and men will tremble and mountains and valleys will tremble, and all the evil folk that offend me ...'.[160] It is conceivable that the occurrence of רקיע, 'firmament', in our text rather than ארעא or ארקא, 'earth', is due to its phonetic similarity to the Mandaic ʾrqʾ, a form of corruption due simply to a faulty transmission across dialects.

9 לציצא ולציפרא - A similar combination of bird names appears twice in the Targ.-O., in Lev. 11:16 and Deut. 14:15 וציצא וצפר שחפה as a translation to the Hebrew התחמס ואת השחף 'the night-hawk, the sea gull'.

אמנליה {ומשילניה} משוילנ(ה)ליה The parallel in MS 2053/159 is a bit clearer: אמנה ליה ומשילנא ליה. The first word should be אמ(י)נא , 'I am saying', a pe. active participle with a 1st person pronominal suffix.[161]

זיבי Cf. Mandaic zʾbʾ 2 'river', 'stream', 'flood' (DM p. 156a).

10 As can be observed in the synopsis, there is an extra piece of text in MS 2053/159 for which this translation is provided: 'from whom there issued Rasiel the angel, and there issued

[155] B. Qid. 27b, b. BQ 12b, b. BB 67a and b.
[156] Right Ginza 208:4 and left Ginza 27:16 (DM p. 309b).
[157] Drower 1939, p. 401.
[158] Drower 1939, p. 405.
[159] Drower 1943, p. 174.
[160] Drower 1943, p. 158.

forth from him a pillar of fire which consumed all the earth, by your lives the night-hawk and bird, by your lives fish and fish ...' As this follows a description of flooding, one is reminded of the mention in Josephus (Antiquities, book 1 chapter 2:9) and 1 Enoch 1:5,6[162] of a legend that the world would be destroyed first by a flood of water and then by fire.

On the basis of MS 2053/159 דתישמעי מילי ותיקבלי רוטנאי one might consider reading our text as ורוטננאי קביל instead of ורוטננא דקביל.

אפרטה דלביתא רבה Could also be translated as 'upon the breach of the great house'.

11 ארקבי Possibly a form of עקרבא as in Mandaic ʾrqbʾ.[163]

12 An unusual title, קרקפנא appears twice in the Babylonian Talmud, b. Erub. 22b and b. Yeb. 78a. Rashi explains the term to mean 'an important man'. In light of lines 14,15 (see below) ניסכאיא could also mean 'lances'.

חד גפיה בארעה וחד גפיה בירקיעא Cf. b. Git. 68b אותביה לחד גפיה ברקיעא ולחד גפיה בארעא, 'placing one wing on the earth and one on the sky', the description of Ashmedai's use of the power of Solomon's magic signet ring, which the latter foolishly handed over to the bound demon. Although, in our bowl, Ashmedai is not the subject of this clause he is, nevertheless, mentioned further down in the incantation.

13 זגדית The parallel text employs the usual Jewish Aramaic form (סגידית) with a ס as the first radical. Though the root sgd, 'to worship', came to be written as zgd only in modern Mandaic, its pronunciation is assumed to have been closer in sound to zgd.[164] There are other cases in Jewish Aramaic in which a ז occasionally replaces a ס (סגי = זגי and זקר = סקר).[165] In our case it is possible that the spelling is due to phonetic influence.

14-15 ניסכא דאשמדי The third in a list of four weapons, ניסכא seems unlikely to mean 'libation' or even 'cast metal object'. If one were to consider that the ס was softened from a ז, our word could be a cognate of the Syriac nyzkʾ and Pahlavi nēzag which have the more appropriate meaning of 'lance'.

---

[161] Epstein, 1960, p. 62.
[162] For a full account see Ginzberg L, 1912, מבול של אש, Ha-Goren VIII, pp. 35-51.
[163] DM p. 39b.
[164] Macuch 1965, p. 71.
[165] Epstein 1965, p. 18.

Appendix

Notes on the synopsis

Apart from the fact that the size of the actual bowl M145 is about half that of MS 2053/159, the most striking difference between the two is in the handwriting. MS 2053/159 is written in a very neat and stylized square script, whereas M145 is very cursive. It is clear from the synopsis that M145 and MS 2053/159, up to about l. 16, owe their formula to the same Vorlage. The most obvious discrepancies between the texts are: 1) The additional clause at the end of M145:8. 2) Most of lines 10 and 11 of MS 2053/159 which are also supplementary. 3) MS 2053/159:16 onwards which is an appendix to the main formula and nonexistent in M145.

The formula is narrated in the first person, presumably by the sorcerer, who appeals to various forces and narrates an historiola. The last component of this formula consists of a statement to the effect that a number of magical weapons have now been obtained. In M145:14,15 this component is repeated twice, initially in an abstract manner where the subject is just 'a man' (גבר א) 'who traversed the sea with his voice, removed mountains with his wrath and took the key of the store house of his weapons bringing the weapon of demons, the weapon of liliths, the lance of Ashmedai the king of demons and the sword of Darius the king of dews'. The repetition is in the first person: 'I am traversing the water with my voice, etc'. Presumably this is the now empowered sorcerer, the same who started the formula off in l. 1. In MS 2053/159 the last component of this formula is written only once with the client as the subject: 'There is a woman amongst you whose name is Dukhtevi daughter of Ahat etc.' In M145 there is no mention, as much as can be seen in the visible parts of the text, of names of client/s. If missing, the formula is written in such a way that the client him/herself is the one who is the implied narrator.

There are a variety of categories which can be used to describe the variance between the two texts:

1. Transposition:

The words 'time' and 'day':

מנההיא שעתא בההוא יומא בההוא עידנא M145:3 and 13

בההוא יומא בההיא שעתה (4) ובההוא עידנא MS 2053/159:3,4 and 13,14

The words 'mountains of LYDWN' and 'shores of the ocean':

נפק ארבע<ה> דיוין מינך (ט)ורי דלידון נפק ארבעה תנינין מינך כיפי דרביתא M145:6

נפק ארבעה זיקי מינך (7) כיפא דרביתא נפק ארבעה תניני מינך טורא דלידון MS 2053/159:6,7

Transposition of clauses:

מלכי רגש ביקרבא איתפיך ביתא רבא בתוקפיה M145:9

איתפוך ימא ברוגזיה ובתוקפיה ומלאכי רגש ברקיעה MS 2053/159:9

Transposition of clauses:

חד גפיה בארעה וחד גפיה בירקיעא ניגריה שורשא דארעה ורישיה סדנא דרקיעא M145:12

ני(ג)ריה שירשה דארעה (ח)ד גפיה בארעה וחד גפיה ברקי[עה] MS 2053/159:13

2.1 Use of synonyms:[166]

M145:1 שינא = MS 2053/159:1 טורא; M145:5 תפי = MS 2053/159:6 טפי and רתח (see notes above).

2.2 Words with similar meaning:

M145:3 לילית = MS 2053/159:3 לטבי; M145:4 דלגודא = MS 2053/159:5 דליגונרא; M145:8 אישתוש = MS 2053/159:8 איתפיך;

2.3 Dialectical difference:

M145:5,6 זיקין , דיוין, תנינין = MS 2053/159:6,7 זיקי , זיקי, תניני; M145:7 כורא = MS 2053/159:7 כוארה; M145:7,12 רקיע, רקיעא = MS 2053/159:8,9 רקיעה; M145:8 מזלי, כוכבי = MS 2053/159:8 כוכביא, מזאליה; M145:9 קינא = MS 2053/159:9 קאינה; M145:11 לילית = MS 2053/159:12 ליליאתה; M145:13 רבא, ניסכאיא and שורשא = MS 2053/159:13 רבה, ניסכיה and שירשה;

2.4 Corruption:

M145:2 דכידיבון = MS 2053/159:2 בריה דבריה; M145:9 קרבא = MS 2053/159:9 רקיעה; M145:10 זיוא = MS 2053/159:12 זיויך; M145:12 קרקפנא = MS 2053/159:13 קרקף פדנא; M145:13 זגדית = MS 2053/159:14 סגידית; M145:14,15 אקליודי, אקלידי = MS 2053/159:15 אי(ק)לידא

[166] This seems to occur only when a word is repeated in close proximity within the formula.

M149 (160mm*51mm)

This bowl consists of 7 lines of quite neat square script. In the middle of the bowl, within a Roman I shaped border, which is itself within a circle, there are a further four short lines of text. The clients of the bowl are Ahai son of Ispandarmid and Ispandarmid daughter of Qiomta his wife. A duplicate of this text, MS 1927/12, was written by the same scribe for the same couple. The text is intended for the general protection of the family and possessions of the clients from demons as well as aggressive sorcery.

Transcription of M149 and synopsis with MS 1927/12

MS 1927/12	M149
(1) את (2) גת (3) במצוות (4) ייי (5) בישמך	(1) את (2) גת (3) [....] (4) (ייההה) (5) בישמך אני
אני עושה חתים ומחתם ביתיה ודירתיה (6)	עושה חתים ומחתם ביתיה ודירתיה וקיניניה
וקיניניה בניה ובנתיה	(6) ובניה ובנתיה
	ובעיריה {ובעיריה} ועיבוריה
וזרעיה ונפשיה דאחאי בר	וזרעיה {וזרעיה} ונפשיה דאחאי בר (7)
איספנדרמיד (7) ואיספנדרמיד בת קיומתא	איספנדרמיד {ב} ואיספנדרמיד בר קיומתא
	אינתתיה
וכל אנישי ביתהון חתימין ומחתמין מן	וכל אינשי בתיהון חתימין ומחתמין (8) מן
שידא ומן סטנא (8) ומן פתכרא ומן	שידא ומן {ומן} סטנא ומן פתכרא ומן
פתכרתא ומן ליליתא דיכרא ומן ליליתא	פתכרתא {ומן פתכרתא} ומן לילית(א) דיכרא
ניקבתא [.....]	וניקבתא [.] ומן (9) דיכרא וניקבתא ומן חרשי
מן עינא (9) (בישתא ומן חורינא) [....] שידי (10)	בישי ומן עינא בישתא ומן חיסמא בישא ומן
ודיוי [.....] סטני [....] ומן (11) [.....] מן הדין	(ר)יוחתא ומן פגע דפגע (10) ומן רוקי פומיי וכל
(12) ביתיה וד[ירתיה .....]	ר..(ד) פ(תכ)ר.. ... כל מחשבתא ומן דחלולי כל
	צררור [.] צררור ביממא ומן כל מידעם ביש (11)
	חתימין ומחת<מ>ין כול(ה)ון בשמי(ה) דיה
אמן אמן סלה הללויה (ה)ל(לויה) [....]	יהוה צבאות אמן אמן סלה הללויה הללויה

Translation of M149

(1) A'T (2) [...] (3) [...] (4) (YYHHH) (5) By your name I make (this magical act). Sealed and counter-sealed are the house, dwelling, possessions, (6) sons, daughters, cattle, foetus, seed and soul of Ahai son of (7) Ispandarmid and Ispandarmid daughter of Qiomta his wife, and all the members of their household. They are sealed and counter-sealed (8) from a demon, from a persecutor, from a male and female idol, from a Lilith - male and female, from (9) a male or a female, from evil sorceries/sorcerers, from an evil eye and evil envy, from an open space, from a plague that plagued, (10) from the spittle of mouths and all ... and all thoughts and from scarecrows .... by day, and anything evil. (11) They are all sealed and counter-sealed by the name of YH YHWH Sebaot. Amen amen selah, hallelujah hallelujah.

Notes for M149

7 Read בת instead of בר.

9 חיסמא Derived from the root חסם which is rarely attested in Jewish Aramaic in the sense of 'envy' (cf. Targ.-J. to Prov. 24:19 תחסם), although this meaning is common in both Syriac[167] and Mandaic.[168] In the Shafta d Pishra d Ainia, the 'evil eye' and 'envy' are also associated in the form of the 'eye which is jealous' (ʾynʾ dḥsmt).[169]

Notes on the synopsis

Unfortunately, the duplicate MS 1927/12 is badly faded in places and thus the amount of material that can be compared with our text is limited. From what there is, we find that in M149 there are some elements that are absent in the duplicate. It is hard to state with confidence a reason for these differences. Nevertheless, the occurrence of four seemingly superfluous word repetitions in such proximity in lines six and eight (marked in the text using { }) suggests the possibility that the scribe might have just wanted to fill space.

---

[167] Brockelmann 1928, p. 247.
[168] DM pp. 136b, 151a.
[169] Drower 1937, p. 593, l. 231.

M155 (175 mm * 60 mm)

M155 and M156 were found in a joined state, the former cradled within the latter. The name of the client in both bowls, which seem to have been written by the same neat hand, is Mahdukh daughter of Neiwandukh.[170] It is assumed that the pair were originally deposited in the ground as they were found. The main protagonist in both texts is the 'evil spirit' (רוחא בישתא), which is characterised in M155 as a type that plagues the belly of the client and causes vaginal bleeding,[171] whereas in M156 it is depicted as a demon that plagues the region of the head. Both texts are rich in Biblical quotes and Hekhalot-like references, and each has an allusion to a demonic folk tale from the Babylonian Talmud (M155 to b. Git 68ab and M156 to b. Pes. 112b). Two duplicates of M155 have been identified: MS 1927/40 and MS 2053/138.

Transcription of M155

(1) הדין קמיעא יהי לאסו למהדוך (2) בת ניונדוך ותיתסי מן רוחא דימעה (3) בשום יה(מ)..
שביב שביביא וקאי יהוה אל קדוש (4) אל קדוש אל קדוש אל (אמיץ אל א)מיץ אל אמיץ אמץ קוה
איקון מיטמון ופסקון מאוד דהוא (5) יתיב על כור[סי]ˁאˀ [דיקרא] (במימריה ובז)יו יקריה ברא
שמיא ושכליל תיביל בדיל שמיה (6) רבה תינטר מהדוך בת [ני]ונדוך ולא תיתזק לא בטולא לא
בשימשה ולא בימם ולא בלילי על ידי גבריאל (7) ומיכאל ורפאל די מתברין דלתות נחושא
וימגדעין בריחי ברזל אינון יתברון ויגדעון לרוחא בישתא דשלטא במעה דמהדוך בת ניונדוך (8)
בשום (יה)וה ˁצˀבאת אלהים אלהא דישראל דהוא שרי בהיכל נורא וברדא שביבין דנור וזיו
יקריה וכורסיה מתקן וקים לעלמין (9) ודין קמיעה דאיתקמיע על שום מהדוך בת ניונדוך נהרין
דיפתיחין וס[.]כרין ורוח דמאה דאית בה במהדוך בת ניונדוך תיבטל וייבשון מעינה וגואה (10) מן
דם נידא ולא תפיק דמה בשום צידקיה דהוא ראיש שיתין ושיתא מלאכין די ממנ<י>ן על דמה
ופלא (וחברו.אי) אינון ייב(שון) ויבטלון דמה מן אתר בית מקור בנה (11) דמהדוך בת ניונדוך

[170] There are at least another 19 bowls that are known to have been dedicated to the same lady: Moussaieff 1, 4, 6 and 18, and MS 1927/8, 9, 11, 29, 43, 45, 47, 51, 54, 60, 61, 63, 64, 2053/116, and 158.

[171] The issue of menstrual and other vaginal bleeding was discussed by the Rabbis on account of a variety of reasons such as ritual purity, its affect on matrimonial relations and its legal implications, as well as medical issues to do with both diagnosis and treatment (Preuss 1978, pp. 375-379).

שבובית שבובניתא דנסבה בנין מן נשיא וקליא יתהון ושתיא מיחלביהון בת טסת (לילית) ... מן מהדוך בת ניונדוך ולא תישתין מן חלבה (12) שנא שבילכי כמה דשני שידא קדמאה בשום זוכסין זוכסין אסת קריסטוס קבילו קיבלא דנן וסבו ית רוחא בישתא מן מעה דמהדוך בת ניונדוך מן ..... (אמן אמן) סלה

Translation of M155

(1) This amulet shall be to heal Mahdukh (2) daughter of Neiwandukh. May she be healed from the spirit of the belly (3) by the name of ...ŠBYB ŠBYBYA' and standing YHWH holy God, (4) holy God, holy God, brave God, brave God, brave God A'MṢ QWH A'YQWN MYṬMWN and PSQWN MA'WD who (5) sits upon the throne of glory by his word and by the countenance of his glory he created the heavens and completed the world. On account of his great name (6) may Mahdukh daughter of Neiwandukh be protected, and not be harmed, not in the shade, not in the sun, not in the daytime and not in the nighttime. By means of Gabriel and (7) Michael and Raphael who shatter copper doors and cut off iron locks, may they shatter and cut off the evil spirit who controls the belly of Mahdukh daughter of Neiwandukh. (8) By the name of YHWH Sebaot Elohim (2 Sam. 7:26) the god of Israel who dwells in a temple of fire and ice (and) sparks of fire. And the countenance of his glory, and his throne is established and exists forever. (9) This is an amulet which was bound for the name of Mahdukh daughter of Neiwandukh. Rivers which are opening and blocking; may the spirit of blood which is in Mahdukh daughter of Neiwandukh be annulled, and may her belly and interior dry up (10) from menstrual blood, and may it not cause her blood to come out. By the name of Ṣidkiyah who is the chief of sixty-six angels who are appointed over her blood and ... may they dry and nullify the blood from the womb (11) of Mahdukh daughter of Neiwandukh. ŠBWBYT ŠBWBNYTA' who gathers children from women and roasts them and drinks from their fat. Daughter of ṬST Lilith ... from Mahdukh daughter of Neiwandukh and do not drink from her milk. (12) Change your path just as a primal demon [changed his]. By the name of ZWKSYN ZWKSYN A'ST KRYSTWS accept this rebuke and carry away the evil spirit from the belly of Mahdukh daughter of Neiwandukh. From ... amen amen selah.

Notes for M155

1 The closest parallels to this opening formula occur in:

M155	הדין קמיעא יהי לאסו ל
Jeruzalmi p. 127 (5363:1- 2)	דין קמיעה דיהוי לאסו ל...
Naveh and Shaked B15	... הדין קמיעא דיהי לה לאסו ל...
Moussaieff bowl 1:3	... בדין קמיעה יהי לאסו ל...

Naveh and Shaked already noted the rare occurrence of the absolute form אסו in magic bowls.[172]

2 The affliction for which this bowl seeks healing is described as 'the spirit of the belly' (רוחא דימעה) in l. 2, the 'the evil spirit who controls the belly' in l. 7 (רוחא בישתא דשלטא במעה) and simply the 'evil spirit' (רוחא בישתא) in l. 12.

3-5 שביב שביביא These names have what appear to be feminine equivalents (שבובנית שבובניתא) in l. 11, yet, though the former masculine variety are invoked for protection, the latter are names of a demon.

יהוה ... קוה Though not a direct quote, this clause seems to be influenced by Ps. 27:14

M155:3,4	יהוה אל קדוש אל קדוש אל קדוש (אל אמיץ אל א)מיץ אל אמיץ אמץ קוה
Ps. 27:14	קוה אל יהוה חזק ויאמץ לבך וקוה אל יהוה

איקון מיטמון ופסקון These three names are mentioned in b. San. 44b as belonging to the 'the intercessory spirit' (רוח פסקונית) who is described as having the 'license ... to arbitrate with the Lord',[173] i.e. to plead, as in a court, on behalf of humans.[174] These names are well attested in Hekhalot literature where they are names of the angel Metatron.[175] As they are also found in magical recipe books among the Geniza fragments,[176] it is no surprise to

---

[172] Naveh and Shaked 1987, p. 161.

[173] ומי אית ליה רשותא כולי האי ... שפוסק דברים כלפי מעלה b. San. 44b.

[174] It is noteworthy that though this spirit is initially referred to in b. San. 44b as a feminine entity - marked by the verb אמרה 'she said', and the name פסקונית which has a feminine ending - later on in the same page it is referred to as masculine - marked by the suffix pronoun in ליה 'to him' and the masculine active participle פוסק 'arbitrates'.

[175] Schäfer 1981 - Henoch §76, §387; Merkabah Rabbah §682, §691; Shiur Komah/Metatron §947; Sar Hapanim §628.

[176] T.-S. K 1.19 (Naveh and Shaked 1993, pp. 158-163) 4:17,18 and T.-S. K 1.58 (Naveh and Shaked 1993, pp. 169-171) 1:5,6. See also the comment on this triple name in Naveh and Shaked 1993, p. 171 .

encounter these names in magic bowls. On the first page of the Sword of Moses,[177] a four-tier hierarchy of angels is described, at the top of which appears the name A'HYW PSQTYH who is described as a 'prince, and lord king ... (the one) that when he sits all the hosts of heaven are bowing and kneeling and prostrating (?) before him every day when they are released from prostrating before NQṢ ŠLA'H HW A'WHH the Lord of all'.[178] As this portrayal is reminiscent of the description of Metatron in III Enoch, and both PSQTYH and PSQWNYT derive from the root פסק, it is possible that A'HYW PSQTYH in the Sword of Moses and the RWḤ PSQWNYT from b. San. 44b are but alternative names of Metatron.[179]

[דיקרא] כור[סי]א Reconstructed from MS 2053/138 יקרא {דקרא} כורסיא.

AIT 14:3 has a parallel to part of M155:8 (שכינתיה בהיכל נורא וברדא וכורסיה) which Montgomery associated with the imagery of Ps. 18:13, Ez. 38:22 and Rev. 11:19.[180] The sections תיביל ... בשום in lines 3-5 of our text and לעלמין ... בשום in l. 8 seem to be related and are both Hekhalot-like texts. The language and expressions of these two sections are common enough in other Hekhalot and Targum texts in which parallels can be found in like manner to that which was done for the section (יהוה ... קוה) above:

M155:4,5	דהוא (5) יתיב על כור[סי]ר א[דיקרא]
Targ.-J. Isa. 6:1	יקרא דיי שרי על כורסיה רם
Targ.- J. Ps. 68:5	שבחו קדם אלהא שבחו שום יקריה קלסון ליתב על כורסיה יקריה בערבות
Metatron, Schäfer §395	אלהינו יושב על כסא רם ונישא

M155:5	(במימריה ובז)יו יקריה ברא שמיא ושכליל תיביל
Zech. 12:1	מטל פתגמא דיי על ישראל אמר יי דתלא שמיא ושכליל ארעא

[177] MS Sasson, cf. Harari 1997.
[178] שר ורב מלך אהיו פסקתיה שמו שהוא יושב וכל צבא מרום בקידה ובכריעה ובהשתחוית אפים בתראש ארצה לפניו בכל יום בפטירתן מהשתחוואות לפני נקץ שלאה הו אוהה "אדון הכל" (Harari 1997, p. 23, (I:13-16)).
[179] For more on the connection between the Sword of Moses and III Enoch, see Odeberg 1973, pp. 107-8.
[180] Montgomery 1913, p. 184.

M155:8	דהוא שרי בהיכל נורא וברדא שביבין דנור וזיו יקריה וכורסיה מתקן וקים לעלמין
Dan. 7:9	כרסיה שביבין די נור
Metatron, Schäfer §395	דשרי בהיכל נורא וברדא וכורסיה <אש> אתקן באישתא ובמיא ועמודי דאשתא ריב נפק(י)ן מן קדם כורסיה יקריה הוא אלהי האלהים ואדוני האדונים האל הגדול הגיבור והנורא

7 ... דימתברין דלתות נחשא וימגדעין בריחי ברזל The author of this part of the text made novel use of Isa. 45:2 for its semantic impact. Just as the angels Gabriel, Michael and Raphael opened the gates of Jerusalem for 'Cyrus, God's anointed one' (Isa. 45:1), so too will these angels remove the evil spirit that plagues the client. The nouns דלתות and בריחי ברזל are rendered in their original Hebrew forms. It is uncertain, however, whether the use of נחשא, in place of the unusual Biblical feminine form of the noun - נחושה, is an exceptional spelling of the Hebrew or the proper masculine form of the Aramaic noun. The verbs are conjugated in Aramaic, תבר is used for שבר and גדע is maintained, unlike the rendition of the Targ.-J. where this verb is replaced with קצץ:

M155:7	וימגדעין בריחי ברזל ויגדעון לרוחא בישתא	דימתברין דלתות נחשא אינון יתברון
MT Isa. 45:2	ובריחי ברזל אגדע	דלתות נחושה אשבר
Targ.-J.	ועברין דברזל אקצץ	דשין דנחש אתבר

Cf. also The Odes of Solomon Ode 17:8-9[181] where use is made of the Peshitta version of this same verse to describe the ascent of the redeemed: wptḥt trʿ dʾḥydyn hww wgdmt mwklʾ dprzlʾ przlʾ dyn dyly rtḥ wʾtpšr qdmy 'I opened the gates that were shut, and shattered iron bolts, my own fetters boiled and melted before me'.

8 יהוה צבאות אלהים 2 Sam. 7:26.

9 קמיעה דאיתקמיע See note to M123:1.

10 אתר בית מקור בנה and דם נידה are Hebrew expressions which occur in the Tosefta.[182]

---

[181] Latke 1980, p. 28.

[182] T. Nid. 9:10 דם הנידה מן המקור דם הבתולין מן הצדדין 'The blood of menstruation is from the womb, the blood of virginity is from the sides'. See also b. Nid. 65b and y. Nid. 4:1, 41a .

12 In three duplicate sections to M155:12, where it is written: 'Change your path just as a primal demon did', there is the added: 'who existed in the days of Solomon the king' which might be an allusion to the story about king Solomon and Ashmedai the demon in b. Git. 68a,b:

M155	שנא שבילכי כמה דשני שידא קדמאה
MS 1927/9	שנא שבילכי כמה דשני שידא קדמאה (5) דהוא ביומי שלמה מלכא בר דויד
MS 1927/11	(4) ... שנא שבילכי כמה דשני שידא (.) קדמאה דהויא ביומי שלמה מלכא בר דויד
MS 2053/4	(10) שנא שבילכי כמה דשני {שדיא} שידא קדמאה כד הוא ב[י]מי ש[למ]ה מלכא (ב)ר דד

שנא The apocopated form of the pe. imperative feminine singular occurs in the Aramaic of the Targums,[183] as compared to the form of the Babylonian Talmud שנאי.[184]

[183] Stevenson 1924, p. 71 and Dalman 1905, p. 348.
[184] Epstein 1960, p. 97.

M156 (173 mm*55 mm - see M155 for an introduction of this bowl)

Duplicates to this text are MS 1927/8, MS 1927/45, MS 1927/47, MS 1927/64 and MS 2053/158. There are three Biblical verses in this text: Ps. 104:20, Ex. 15:3 and Ps. 24:8, as well as an early attestation of a liturgical formula (l.11).

Transcription of M156

(1) אסותא מן שמיה תיהוי לה (2) למהדוך בת ניונדוך לשמך אני עושה קדישה רבה (3) אסות(א) מן שמיה תיהוי לה למהדוך בת ניונדוך ותיתסי בשום יה (4) מלך מלכיה רפאל מיטל מיל(ם) די מפקדין אינון על מחת רוחתא בישתא רוחא דשכבא (5) בן קברי ורוחא דשכבא בן איגרי ורוחא דשכבא בפגרה בראישה בצידעה באודנה בבית (6) גילגלוהי דעינה דמהדוך בת ניונדוך ורוחא דשמה אגג בת ברו⌜ק⌝ בת ברוקתא בת נקור בת נמון בת עין רעה מסמיתא (7) מטריתא {מסו} מומינה ומשבענא עלכי אנתי רוחא בישתא ד(י) פגע ב(יה) ברבי חנינא בן דוסא ואמר לה (ר)בי חנינא בן דוסא לרוחא בישתא (8) די פגע ביה בההיא שעתא קראה דכתיב תשית חושך ויהי לילה בו תירמוס כל חיתו יאער ותוב מומינה ומש⌜בענא ע⌝לכי (9) אנתי רוח(א) בישתא דלא תיזלין ולא תיחוין לה למהדוך בת ניונדוך לא צותא דליליה ודיממה דאם אזלת ורדפת בפגרה בראישה באודנה (10) ובבית גילגלו[הי] דעינה ד[מה]דוך בת ניונדוך דא אנתי רוחא בישתא ישמתון יתיכי ויתברון יתיכי ויחרמון יתיכי כמה דאיתברו כרכין תקיפ(ין) דאישתדרו (11) עליהון נורי⌜אל⌝ רפאל ומ[יכאל בשמיה] דיה יה יהוה איש מלחמה יהוה שמו יהוה עיזוז וגיבור יהוה גיבור {ו}מלחמה יהוה מלך יהוה מאלך יהוה ימלך לעולם ועד ב(כ)ין כמה דפריש מן ...אל (12) ... [בי]שתא כין תיפשרין ותיזחין ותינזהין ותיפקין מינה מן מהדוך בת ניונדוך ולא תישלטין במתן חמשין ותרין (הדמין) דאית בה (13) במהדוך בת ⌜נ⌝יונדוך (כ)ל[.....] גבר או איתא ולא תיקמין עלה ולא תרתתינה ולא תשרג(ו)ינה אמן אמן סלה

Translation of M156

(1) May there be healing from heaven for (2) Mahadukh daughter of Neiwandukh. For Your name I make (this magic act) Oh Great Holy one. (3) May there be healing from heaven for Mahadukh daughter of Neiwandukh. May she be healed by the name of YH (4) the king <of kings> of kings (and) Raphael MYṬL MYLM who are commanded over the affliction of evil spirits. The spirit that lies (5) between graves, and the spirit that lies down between roofs and the spirit that lies down in her body, in her head, in her temple, in her ear, in the socket (6) of the eye of Mahadukh daughter of Neiwandukh. The spirit whose name is AGG daughter of BRWQ daughter of BRWQTA' daughter of NQWR daughter of NMWN daughter of an evil eye, MSMYTA', (7) MṬRYTA'. I adjure and put an oath upon you. You, the evil spirit who happened upon R. Hanina ben Dosa. R. Hanina ben Dosa recited to the evil spirit (8) that happened upon him at that time the Biblical verse, as it is written: 'You bring on darkness and it is night, when the beasts of the forest stir' (Ps. 104:20). And again, I adjure and put an oath upon you (9) that you may not go and show (yourself) to Mahadukh daughter of Neiwandukh, not accompaniment of the night or the day. For if (it transpires that) you had gone and chased the body, the head, the ear (10) and the socket of the eye, of this Mahadukh daughter of Neiwandukh, then let them excommunicate and break and banish you, you evil spirit!. Just as powerful fortifications upon whom were dispatched (11) Nuriel, Raphael and Michael by the name of YHWH 'The Lord, the warrior—Lord is his name' (Ex. 15:3) 'the Lord mighty and valiant, the Lord, valiant in battle' (Ps 24:8) 'The Lord reigned the Lord reigns the Lord will reign for ever and ever'[185] were broken up, therefore, like ... left from ... (12) ... evil [spirit], thus may you dissolve, turn away, be agitated and go out from Mahadukh daughter of Neiwandukh. And may you not control the two hundred and fifty two organs which are in the body of (13) Mahadukh daughter of Neiwandukh ... man or woman. And may you not rise against her and not shake her and not lead her astray. Amen amen selah.

Notes for M156

1-3 A synopsis of the opening lines of the duplicate texts illustrates the kind of freedom a scribe had in the use of different parts of a formula to construct an incantation:

[185] This doxology is combined from sections of three verses Ps. 10:15, 93:1 and Ex. 15:18.

- A	(1) אסותא מן שמיה תיהוי לה (2) למהדוך בת ניונדוך	M156
- B	לשמך אני עושה קדישה רבה
- A	(3) אסותא מן שמיה תיהוי לה למהדוך בת ניונדוך
- B	(1) לשמך אני עושה קדישה (2) רבה	MS 1927/8
- A	אסותא מן שמיה תיהוי לה למהדוך בת (3) ניונדוך
- B	(1) לישמך אני עושה קדישא (2) רבא	MS 1927/45
- A	אסותא מן שמיה תיהיוי לה למהדוך (3) בת ניונדוך
- B	(1) (לי)שמך אני עושה קדישא (2) רבה	MS 1927/47
- C	דין קמיעא יהוי לה למהדוך (3) בת ניונדוך
- A	(1) אסותה מן שמיה תיהוי לה למיהרנהיד (2)בת אחת {א}	MS 1927/64
- B	לישמך אני עושה קדישא רבה

4-6 מלכיה <מלכי> מלך Reconstructed on the basis of three of the duplicates, MS 1927/8, MS 1927/45 and MS 1927/47, whose extended version of this expression is the Aramaic equivalent of the Post-Biblical Hebrew מלך מלכי המלכים 'the king of kings of kings'.

רוחא דשכבא בן קברי Cf. Moussaieff 1:6 רוח בי קברי and also N&Sh 9:14 which mentions 'the spirit which resides in the cemetery' (רוח דשריא בית קברי) that is conjured up alongside a host of malevolent entities against Judah son of Nanay. Other evidence for the belief that spirits of the dead who reside in cemeteries are active occurs in b. Ber. 18b, where a story is told about a man who happened to spend a night in a cemetery and inadvertently overheard a couple of spirits discussing information about the future. In Sepher Ha-Razim I:178,[186] there is a spell to adjure the spirit קריפורייא who is said to be encamped amongst the graves (בין הקברות). Burial places, especially of people who died before their time, were a preferred location for the depositing of defixiones as it was believed that the souls of the dead could be adjured to aid the fulfillment of the intended harm.[187]

[186] Margaliot 1966, p. 76.
[187] Gager 1992, pp. 18-19.

רוחא דשכבא בן איגרי The demon in our bowl is reminiscent of the 'son (or sons) of roofs' (בנ/בר איגרי) that occur in a number of other bowls[188] and Geniza fragments.[189] The 'roof demon' is known from early Mesopotamian sources and was identified by Stol[190] as relating to the Syriac[191] br ʾgrʾ, referred to in the Peshitta of Mathew 17:15-18[192] as a demon (šʾdʾ) that caused a child to display symptoms of epilepsy.

ברוקתא An affliction of the eyes, possibly cataract,[193] also attested in Mandaic bwrwqtʾ (DM p. 57a). In b. Pes. 111b, it is written that one 'who drinks water out of a plate is prone to ברוקתי (מאן דשתי מיא בצעי קשי לברוקתי); Rashi explains ברוקתי as 'destruction (or ruin) of the eyes (כליון עינים)'. In the Babylonian Talmud, there are a couple of references to remedies. In b. Git. 69a, it states that 'one should take a scorpion of seven ḥwmry and dry it in the shade', then 'grind three portions of kohl and one portion of it (i.e. the dry scorpion) and put three brush-fulls into each eye' (לברוקתי ליתי עקרבא דשב חומרי ונייבשיה בטולא ונישחוק תרתי מנתא כוחלא וחדא מנתא מיניה ולימלי תלתא מכחלי בהאי עינא ותלתא מכחלי בהאי עינא). In b. Shab. 78a, the use of blood is mentioned (דם כדי לכחול בעין אחת שכן כוחלין לברקית). This affliction occurs in another bowl, N&Sh B25:2,5,7,9,10, where it is personified as an entity that has both male and female varieties (ברקתא דיכרא וניקבתא).

עין רעה Is in Hebrew.

7-8 מסמיתא מטריתא - Possibly nouns formed from סמי 'the blinding one' and טרי 'the assailant' (attested in Syriac in the pa. 'to assail severely'[194]). AIT 42, probably of a later date than our bowl, has a similar story in which the main characters are Elijah and Lilith rather than Hanina ben Dosa and the evil spirit. One of Lilith's names by which her power is diminished is מטרוטה, similar to מטריתא in l. 7 of our text.

---

[188] Gordon 5:9 ובני איגרי, Gordon 5:10 בר איגרי, Gordon A:2 בר איגרי and Gordon A:3 בני איגרי.

[189] T.-S. K. 1.56 1a l.17 בני אוגרי (Schäfer and Shaked 1994, p. 31), T.-S. K. 1.47 1a l.34 בני איגרי (Schäfer and Shaked 1994, p. 222) and T.-S. NS 322.29 1b l.6 ומיני איגרי (Schäfer and Shaked 1997, p. 335).

[190] 1993, p. 18.

[191] Cf. also the Mandaic br ʾngʾryʾ (DM. P. 69a).

[192] The Sinaitic version of the Peshitta has rwḥ plgʾ instead (Reinink 1985, p. 106, n. 3).

[193] Preuss 1978, p. 265.

[194] PS p. 181a.

Lines 7,8 are a variation of the story that occurs in b. Pes. 112b which tells of the time when R. Hanina ben Dosa met the demoness Igrat daughter of Mahlat. As a result of this meeting her movements were restricted only to Wednesday and Saturday nights. A comparison of the texts illustrates a connection in both content and form.

פגע ביה Noteworthy is the uncommon use of the apocopated perfect form of the third person feminine singular characteristic of Babylonian Talmudic Aramaic, of which the manuscript variants (below) exhibit all three possible spellings פגע /פגעה /פגעא:[195]

M156	ד(י) פגע ב(יה) ברבי חנינא בן דוסא ואמר לה (ר)בי חנינא בן דוסא לרוחא בישתא דיפגע ביה בההיא שעתא
b. Pes. 112b	זמנא חדא פגעה ברבי חנינא בן דוסא
Variant manuscripts:
Munich 095	זימנא חדא פגע ביה חניני בן דוסא
Vatican 125	זימנא חדא פגעא ביה ברי חנינה בר דוסא

יאער ... תשית Ps. 104:20. Rashi mentions this verse in connection with Ex. 12:22, where the Israelites are told not to leave their houses after having marked their door-posts with blood, saying that: 'the destroyer was given the authority to cause injury and does not distinguish between the righteous and the evil man, and night is the time of the injurers as it is said ... Ps. 104:20'.

9 צותא Cf. Gordon K:6 לא תברא ביממא ולא צותא בליליה.

... דאם On אם 'with the perfect in the protasis to express conditions' see Gesenius 1963, §159 m,n.

11 Ex. 15:3 and part of Ps. 24:8 are employed as epithets within part of an invoked name of God.

ועד ... יהוה מלך which follows these verses is the response that occurs in the יהי כבוד which is part of the daily prayers and, though recited in the morning within the Pesukei Dezimrah, it was originally intended only for special days.[196] This doxology combines sections of three verses: Ps. 10:15, 93:1 and Ex. 15:18. It also occurs in Hekhalot Rabatti[197] as the praise of the earth when in the presence of the enthroned God.

[195] Juusola (1999, pp. 156-57) argues that not only is this form rare in the bowls but that in most cases it can be argued as unsubstantial due to either corruption or the possibility of understanding the form as a participle. In view of the parallel between our bowl and the Babylonian Talmud, it can be stated with confidence that the Babylonian Talmudic Aramaic form does occur in the bowls.

12 מתן חמשין ותרין הדמין In b. Bek. 45a, a distinction is made between men who are said to have 248 limbs and women who have 252.

13 תרתתינה From the root רתת 'to shake', it is mentioned in b. Hul. 24b as a symptom of old age and in b. Nid. 63b as a symptom of a menstruating woman. Cf. also Moussaieff 1:7 רות רתיתא.

תשרג(ו)ינה Possibly תשרגגינה (J. p. 1628b).

[196] Elbogen 1993, pp. 74-75. This prayer is already referred to in Soferim 17:11 and 18:2, though only by the first two words יהיה כבוד.

[197] Schäfer Synopsis §126. R. Ishmael describes a celestial vision in which King David, all the other kings that followed him, Metatron and the angels, the Hayot, the firmament and earth all sing in turn a praise to the almighty. This Hekhalot text is reproduced in the Nefilat Appayim (also called Tahanun) prayer which is recited after the Amidah in the British Museum manuscript (Or. 1067) of Seder Amram. Goldscmidt (1972, pp. 11 and לט), nevertheless, claims that this section is a later addition and not an original part of Seder Amram.

M163[198] (16.5cm*5.5cm)

Apart from two small missing fragments and a small faded patch at the edge of the bowl, the whole text of this bowl is clear and completely readable. The bowl contains 30 lines of text written in a very neat and small square Jewish Aramaic script which spirals in a clockwise fashion from the centre of the bowl outwards. The text is surrounded by a line that forms a circle which is very nearly on the rim of the bowl. The script is noteworthy for a magic bowl as apart from ה and ח it clearly differentiates between letters that are usually written similarly, i.e. ב and כ, ד and ר, also ו, י, ז and final ן, ס and final ם. All are distinguished from each other, and so is ת which in many bowls is confused with either ה and/or ח.[199]

Alongside הדין and הלין, which are the usual demonstrative pronouns in the dialects of the magic bowls, there also appear הנא (lines 6 and 11), הנין (line 9) and הנון (l. 17) which are like the Syriac forms[200] and rare in the magic bowls. The conjunction of comparison[201] היכדין ד 'just as' coupled with its compliment הכדין 'just so' are employed several times in the text and in all cases their respective spellings are meticulously distinguished. Such a pair of conjunctions is found only once in another magic bowl, N&Sh B21:8. The closest parallel to this particular form is found in the Aramaic of the Targ.-J.. There, however, היכדין/הכדין (their respective spellings undistinguished) are used for the second position, 'just so', whereas ד הי(כ)כמא is the most common form for the first position, 'just as'.[202]

M163 is a curse bowl, which is rare in this genre of magical text. It was commissioned by two brothers, Mihlad and Baran sons of Mirdukh, against a certain Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz. The purpose of the incantation is specific: it proposes to subdue the two brothers' named antagonist completely under their authority. The cause of their grievance is suggested most

---

[198] This part of the thesis was published by the author as: " "... and by the name of Jesus ..." An unpublished magic bowl in Jewish Aramaic." JSQ, vol. 6, Issue 4, pp. 283-308. It is produced here with some amendments, additions and a full glossary.

[199] Montgomery 1913, pp. 28,9 and Rossell, 1953 pp. 13-15.

[200] Nöldeke 1904, p. 47.

[201] Dalman 1905, p. 239. I would like to thank C. Müller-Kessler for correcting my previous assertion (Levene 1999) that what we have here are a pair of adverbs.

[202] It is only in one case in the Targ.-Ps-J. that היכדין appears in both first and second position: היכדין דיתן מומא באינשא היכדין יתיהב ביה (Lev. 24:20).

clearly in l. 27, which mentions the antagonist as having 'strong desires and hateful thoughts and ... hateful and evil words' and 'that he thinks about (them) for evil and hatefulness'.

The two main literary devices employed in this incantation are: 1) The abundant use of verbs, nouns (lines 1, 28 and 30), angel names (l. 14) and magical names (l. 10) derived from the root כבש 'to press', 'subdue', 'conquer', 'suppress', etc.[203] 2) The use of a 'just as X was pressed - just so may Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz be pressed' formula known also from Greek magical literature and referred to as the similia similibus formula.[204] These similes (the sections that always follow 'just as ...') in our text consist of a collection of references to cataclysmic moments in history and mythology, taken from a wide range of stories, some of which are identified below, though the inspiration for others remain as yet a mystery.

In order to observe the structure of the text with greater clarity the transcription and translation have been divided into ten sections. Here are some comments on these divisions:

Section 1. This part functions as a title section and starts with the words הדין כיבשא 'this press' which introduces the incantation. The names of the clients and their adversary are stated, as is a statement of the desired outcome. This statement is repeated in a variety of permutations and intensity at least once, sometimes twice, in each and every one of the ten sections. This first section ends with an invocation of 'Šamiš king of the gods'.

Section 2. This section starts with the conjunction היכדין ד 'just as' which introduces the first simile, as it does the other similes in sections 3, 5, 6, 7 and 8. There follows an unambiguous statement to the effect that some sort of additional ritual action was carried out, at that time, with the aid of a white cock in conjunction with, and in support of, the incantation in the bowl. There is a two fold statement of the desired outcome, one to complement the simile and the other to complement the ritual act.

Section 3. The second simile and a statement of the desired outcome.

Section 4. This section starts with the word בשום 'by the name of', which introduces a list of names of angels invoked to aid the accomplishment of the desired outcome. The verb כבש which was used in the previous sections in the jussive 'may he be pressed' is in this section an active participle with a first person pronoun suffix 'I press you Isha ...' (l. 13). This section portrays the enforcement of the desired outcome by the magician with the aid of the invoked angels.

[203] For a detailed discussion on the use of כבש in the magical literature see Montgomery 1913, p. 42 and Naveh 1985, p. 3.

Section 5. Third and fourth similes with a statement of the desired outcome.

Section 6. Fifth and sixth similes with a statement of the desired outcome.

Section 7. Seventh simile with a statement of the desired outcome.

Section 8. Eighth and ninth similes with a double statement of the desired outcome, reiterated here with specific allusion to the antagonist's culpability vis à vis to the clients.

Section 9. Like section four, this section commences with בשום, which introduces the invocation of angels. The verb כבש is used here in the imperative, as the magician is commanding the angels to impose the desired outcome, which is stated once again within the context of the command. This section ends with the formula 'from this day and forever amen amen selah firm and established'.

Section 10. This section begins and ends as the incantation itself began - with the words הדין כיבשא 'this press'. There is invocation of divine names of God, of Jesus, his father and the Holy spirits. In this section כבש and the other operative verbs are imperfect plural forms of the peal with a third person suffix, 'may they press him' etc, representing the clients getting the better of their adversary.

Transcription of M163

1 (1) הדין כיבשא ואסרא על שמיה דאישה [בר] (2) איפרא הורמיז דניתכביש וניפול הוא
גדיה וחילקיה וכ[וכב]יה (3) ואסריה ומיליה ומחשבתיה סניתא תחות ריגליהון
ומימרהון ו[שולט]נ֯הון (4) דהדין מיהלאד ובראן בני מירדוך שמיש מלכא דאלהי

2 היכדין דאתכ[ביש]ך֯ כולהין (5) מדינתא הכדין כבוש הדין אישה בר איפרא הורמיז
בכל שמה דאית ליה תחות י֯ר֯[יגליהו]ן ומימרהון (6) ושולטנהון דהדין מיהלאד ובראן
בני מירדוך תחות הנא תרנולא חיורא דמזמ[...]ך֯יך הכדין (7) ניתכביש הדין אישה בר
איפרא הורמיז בכל שמה דאית ליה תחות ריגליהון ותחות מימרהון ושולטנ֯הו֯[ן]

---

[204] C. A. Faraone 1988 and 1991.

3 היכ<ד>ין דשמיא כבישא על שמשא ושמשא כבישא על יארעה וארעה כבישא על מיא ומיא יכבישין על (9) חשוכא וכנתא תחתיתא היכא דיתבן הנין שבע בני אלהי וידען שבע מילי תקיפתיא ידבהון כבישא שמיא וארעה חדא מילתא מדא שמא (10) מדא שמה ומילתא חדא גישמון שמה ומילתא חדא דבחיל שמה דיבחיל שמה מירל[ת]א חדא משכבא שמא מכבשא שמה ומילתא חדא (11) זדין שמה ומיזיון שמא וזיועין ומילתא חדא דבחיל שמה וארכדיל שמה ומילתא חדא כיבישון שמה דבהנא שבע מילי כביש עלמה ורכובהון (12) <הכדין> ניתכביש וניתדריך הדין אישה בר איפרא הורמיז בכל שמה דאית (ליה) תחות ריגליהון ומימרהו[ן] ושולטנהון דהדין מיהלאד ובראן בני מירדוך (13) וניתכבשן כולהין מיליה ומחשבתיה סניתא ובישתא וניתבלן בגו ליביה ולא ניפקן לבר מן פומיה

4 בשום מלאכי בני איקרא כבישנא לך אישה בר איפרא הורמיז בכל שמא דאית לך (14) תחות ריגליהון ומימרהון ושולטנהון דהדין מיהלאד ובראן בני מירדוך בשום כיבשון דישון ודדיכין ובשום כבשיאל וכבשיאיל מלאכה גמודיאיל ומודיאל (15) ועמודיאל מלאכה דכבש עמודה דארעה בשמיה ד(גבי)ביאל שריותא גבאל מלאכה הלין מלאכי דבהון מיתכבשי כיבשי רברבי ודרדקי ומיתארין סמי מיתקצרין וכל בתולן פתלין (16) בהון בשמיהון וביקרהון ברבותהון וברבות אלהא משמשין קדישי אינון בשום הלין מלאכי כבישנא ליה להדין אישה בר איפרא הורמיז בכל שמה דאית ליה וכבישנא ליה לגדיה (17) ולחילקיה ולכוכביה ולמזליה ולכולהון מיליה ומחשבתיה סניתא תחות ריגליהון ומימרהון ושולטנהון ותחות יג[די]הון וחילקיה<ון> ומזלהון וכוכבהון דהדין מיהלאד ובראן בני מירדוך

5 היכדין דאיתכבישו הנון (18)] דעל פוקדן ^ד^מריהון עברו עזאל ועזאל ועזזיאל ואישתלחו מלאכי עליהון מן קדם אלהא וכבשינון על טור[א דחשוכא] ואהדרו אפיהון לאפי דחשוכא והיכדין דאיתכביש רימון תורא קדמאה הכדין ניתכביש (19) הדין אישה בר איפרא הורמיז וניתכבשן מיליה סניתא ומחשבתיה סניתא וכוכביה ומזליה וגדיה וחומריה [...] תחות ריגליהון ותחות מימרהון ושולטנהון דהדין מיהלאד ובראן בני

6 היכדין דאיתכבישו (20) [...] שבעה שיבבי דביתה רבה וארדיכלי דביתה רבה דעלמה וכבשינון ואסרינון מרי רבותה בחילן[ה ...] [והיכ]דין דאיתכביש אמור גברא רבה דלסוף הכדין ניתכביש הדין אישה בר איפרא הורמיז וניתכביש גדיה (21) וחילקיה ומזליה וכוכביה וחומריה ופתכריה ורזיה ומחשבתיה סניתא תחות ריגליהון ותחות מימרהון ושולט[נה]ון דהדין מיהלאד ובראן בני מירדוך

7 והיכדין דאיתכביש א(מ)וס גברא קדמאה ואיתכביש עליה טורי ורמאתה (22) ונגרי הכדין ניתכביש וניתדריך הדין אישה בר איפרא הורמיז וניתכביש (ליביה מן) חיזוא דעינוהי תחות ריגליהון ומימרהון ושולטנהון דהדין מיהלאד ובראן בני מירדוך תוב הכדין ניתכביש ליביה דהדין (23) אישה מן חיזוא דעינוהי

8 היכדין דאיתכביש הוא חרום אחרום ואתו עליו על שיתין ושב(ע)ה אלפין ענינן ואתו עליו מלאכי דר(בה) דחטו דהוא מריא קדמאה ונקטוי בציצי(ן) דסיט(ר)יה ופכר(ין) פכרוי פכרי לא איתפסיק ושדוי שבע (24) לישמיא ותמני לליבביהון דעננ עד אמא דנינדי מוקריה על גללי והיכדין דאיתכבישו דבית קרח (וד)ותן ואבירם הכדין ניתכביש וניתדריך הדין אישה בר איפרא הורמיז בכל שמה דא(י)ת ליה וניתכביש וניתדריך גדיה וחילקיה ומזליה (25) וכוכביה וחומריה ופתכריה ופיקודיה ומיליה סניתא ומחשבתיה בישתא תחות ריגליהון ומימרהון ושולטנהון דהדין מיהלאד ובראן בני מירדוך וניתכביש הדין אישה ומתכבשן כולהין מיליה ומחשבתיה סניתא דהוא מחשיב על הדין מיהלאד (26) ובראן בני מירדוך לבישותא ולסניותא ומחשבתיה ומיליה סניתא ניתבלן בגו ליביה ולא ניפק לבר מן פומיה

9 בשום בלמיאל דהוא בלים לבני אינשה בליביהון ובשום נו(..)איל [...] הלין מלאכי דכבשו ואניחו ותמהו קרבא (27) קדמאה אנתון כבושו ואניחו ואתמהו ליביה ורעויניה תקיפי ומחשבתיה סניתא וכל מילי סניתא ובישתא דהוא מחשיב על הדין מיהל<א>ד ובראן בני מירדוך לבישותא ולסניותא ול[...] מיליה ומחשבתיה [בי]שתא וסניתא ניתבלן בגו ליביה ולא ניפקן לבר (28) מן פומיה מן יומא דנן ולעלם אמן אמן סלה שריר וקים

הדין כיבשא בשמיה ד(מל)[.] דלכל כבש[..]ן כביש ולכל זכא ועל כל עלמא אמליך ואף 10
הדין מיהלאד ואף הדין בראן בני מירדוך לכל (פ)[...]ון ולכל נ..ון ולכל (..)כון (ועל)
[ע]למה נמלכון וניכבשוניה ונידשוניה וניזכוניה (29) להדין אישה בר איפרא הורמיז
וניבלמוניה ליה לגדיה ולחילקיה ולכוכביה ולמזליה ולאסריה ולפתכריה בשמיה דאהיה
אשר אהיה יהוה צבאות ובשמיה דאישו דכבש רומ(א) ועומ(ק)א[205] בזקיפיה ובשו(ם)
אבוי רמא ובשום רוחי קדישתא לעלם (30) עלמין אמן אמן סלה שריר וקים הדין
כיבשא.

Translation of M163

1 (1) This press and binding is for the name of Isha son of (2) Ifra Hurmiz that he may be pressed and fall - he, his lot, his destiny, his stars, (3) his bindings, his words and his hateful thoughts - under the feet and command and authority (4) of this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh. Shamish the king of gods!

2 Just as all countries have been (5) pressed - just so press this Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz, in every name he has, under the feet and command (6) and authority of this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh. Under this white cock that [is appointed on your behalf], just so (7) May this Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz be pressed in every name he has under the feet and command and authority of (8) this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh.

3 Just as the heavens are pressed upon the sun, and the sun is pressed upon the earth, and the earth is pressed upon the waters, and the waters are pressed upon the (9) darkness and the lower foundation, where there dwell these sons of gods who know seven powerful words by which the heavens and the earth are pressed: One word - the name: MDA', (10) the name: MDA' ; and one word - the name:

[205] The correct reading of this word was suggested by Professor Menahem Kister (communicated by S. Shaked).

GYŠMWN; and one word - the name: DBHYL, the name: DYBHYL; and one word - the name: MŠKBH, the name: MKBŠH; and one word - the name: (11) ZDYN, the name: MYZYWN and ZYWA'YN; and one word - the name: DBHYL, and the name: A'RKDYL; and one word - the name: KYBŠWN. By this (unit of) seven words, the universe and that which is over them is pressed. (12) [Just so] may this Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz be pressed and trodden under in every name he has under the feet and command and authority of this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh, (13) and may all his hateful and evil words and thoughts be pressed and perish within him and not go out from his mouth.

4 By the name of angels sons of glory I press you, Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz, in every name that is yours (14) under the feet and command and authority of this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh. And by the names of KYBŠWN DYŠWN and DDYKWN, by the name of Kabshiel and Kabshiil the angel, Gamudiil and Mudiil (15) and Amudiel the angel who pressed the column of the earth. By the name Gabibiel the beginning Gabael the angel, these angels by which presses are being pressed, large and small ... shortened, and all virgins are led astray.[206] (16) By them, by their names and by their dignity, by their greatness and by the greatness of God - they the holy ones are serving. By the name of these angels I press this Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz in every name that he has. And I press him, his lot, (17) his fortune, his stars, his star signs and all his hateful words and thoughts under the feet and command and authority and under the lot and fate and star signs and stars of this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh.

5 Just as (18) those A'ZA'L and A'ZA'L and A'ZZYA'L, who transgressed the command of their lord, were pressed, and angels were sent against them from the presence of God and pressed them upon the mountain [of darkness] and their faces[207] were turned towards the face of darkness. And just as the primordial [206] Literally 'perverted'.

[207] I.e. of A'ZA'L and A'ZA'L and A'ZZYA'L.

RYMWN bull was pressed - just so (19) may this Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz be pressed. And may his hateful words and hateful thoughts and stars and star signs and lot and magic be pressed ... under the feet and under the command and authority of this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh.

6 (20) Just as the ... seven ... of the great house and the builders of the great house of the world were pressed, and the lords of (greatness) pressed and bound them by the strength ... [And ju]st as A'MWR the great man of the end was pressed - just so may this Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz be pressed, and may his lot (21) and fate and star signs and stars and magic acts and idols and mysteries and evil thoughts be pressed under the feet and under the command and authority of this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh.

7 And just as A'MWS the primal man was pressed, and there were pressed upon him mountains, hills (22) and river courses - just so may this Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz be pressed and trod under. And may his heart be pressed from the vision of his eyes under the feet and command and authority of this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh. Again, just so may the heart of this (23) Isha be pressed from the vision of his eyes.

8 Just as ḤRWM A'ḤRWM was pressed, and there came against him upon sixty seven thousand clouds, there came against him angels of the great one who committed the sin, (namely alleging) that he is the primeval lord. And they grabbed him by the fringes of his sides, taking them apart, they beat him with a continuous beating. And they hurled seven (24) to the heavens and eight to the midst of the clouds until his brain was bespattered upon the rocks. And just as the house of Korah and Dathan and Abiram was pressed - just so may this Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz, by every name he has, be crushed and trod under. And may his lot and fortune and star signs (25) and stars and magic acts and idols and commands and hateful words and evil thoughts be pressed and trod under the feet and command and authority of this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh. And may this Isha be pressed, (and may) all his words and evil thoughts that he thinks about this Mihlad (26) and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh for evil and hatefulness be pressed. And may his thoughts and hateful words perish within him and not come out from his mouth.

9 By the name of Balmiel who is the one that gags humans within their hearts. And by the name of ... these angels who pressed and brought to rest and struck dumb the primal war. (27) You! Press, bring to rest, and strike dumb the heart and strong desires and hateful thoughts and all hateful and evil words that he thinks about this Mihlad and (this) Baran sons of Mirdukh for evil and hatefulness. And ... (may) his words and his thoughts, evil and hateful, perish within him and not come out from (28) his mouth from this day and for ever, amen amen selah, true and established.

10 This press in the name of ... who presses all presses and is victorious over all, and rules over all the world. And also this Mihlad and also this Baran sons of Mirdukh to all ... and may they reign upon the earth, and may they press and trample under and be victorious over (29) this Isha son of Ifra Hurmiz. And may they block up his lot and his fate and his stars and his star signs and his bindings and his idols. By the name of I-am-that-I-am will be YHWH Sebaoth and by the name of Jesus who conquered the height and the depth by his cross and by the name of his exalted father and by the name of the holy spirits for ever (30) and eternity. Amen amen selah. This press is true and established.

Notes for M163[208]

1 The opening formula הדין כיבשא is also found in another bowl, Geller B. Similar opening formulae occur in AIT 6, which starts with: כיבשא דכבשין, and in N&Sh B21[209] which starts [208] The numbers refer to the lines of the text, not the sections.

[209] Naveh and Shaked understood N&Sh B21 to be an incantation for protection against evil spirits and regarded all of the six proper names in the text to be those of clients. One could, however, argue that this is not a text for protection against demons (none of which are with: מזמן) הדין רזא לכיבשא). These three incantations, as well as M163, incorporate the verb כבש 'to press' as an important operative motif.

מזמנא הדא מילתא על שמיה ד... N&Sh B7:1 על שמיה 'Appointed is this incantation against the name of ...' This bowl is also a text against a named individual.

2 איפרא הורמיז The name of the mother of the man against whom this incantation is directed is attested in the Babylonian Talmud,[210] where it is purported to be the name of the wife of Shapur II, though not attested as such by any other source. The name Ifra Hurmiz can also be found in N&Sh B15, Gordon N[211], and Texidor 60960[212] (ʾbʾ br ʾprḥwrmyz) as the names mentioned) but rather a text for the protection of only one of the named persons from all the others. This person would be Sunyona son of Qitin who is mentioned four times in the text, thrice on his own. It must indeed be stressed, (as did Naveh and Shaked, see 1993 p. 129) that this text is obscure and includes sections for which only cautious readings were given. Nevertheless, a re-examination of the text reveals certain similarities to M163, which may lead to the conclusion that they are both of the same type. Naveh and Shaked translate the first three lines thus: 'This mystery is designated for subduing (in favour) of Duday daughter of Immi, Redani son of Aru, Abraham son of [ ], Susya daughter of Immi, and Friyabard son of Gaš (?)'. (מזמן הדין רזא לכיבשא דדודי בת אימי ורדיני בר ארו ודאברהם בר תוס וסוסיה בת אימי ודפריברד בר גש). The justification for adding 'in favour' in brackets is that כיבשא 'normally comes to designate the action done to evil spirits' (Naveh and Shaked 1993 p. 129). Though this is true of at least two other bowls (AIT 6 and Geller B) this is not always the case as can be seen from M163. Other texts which employ the verb כבש, as in M163, to express the desired subjugation of human foes are McCullough A, an amulet from the Upper Galilee (A 16), Geniza T.S.K1.15:2,3 (Naveh and Shaked 1993, pp. 147-152), Geniza T.S.K1.143 pages 14:12-16:18 (Naveh and Shaked 1993, pp. 194-195), T.S.K1.80 (Naveh and Shaked 1993, pp. 172-174) and T.S. AS 143.214 (Naveh 1985, p. 379). Another point of similarity between N&Sh B21 and M163 is the use of similes which describe acts of subjugation. In M163 these similes are derived from a variety of sources including I and III Enoch as well as the Bible, the four similes in N&Sh B21:10,11 are also borrowed from the Bible. In fact these two magical texts are the only ones which both employ היכדין and הכדין in this precise spelling as part of a similia similibus formula. N&Sh B21:9,10 which uses this formula is translated by Naveh and Shaked as follows: 'Thus may all the enemies and oppressors of this Sunyona son of Qitin and Duday daughter of Immi and Susya daughter of Immi be subdued, just as ... is subdued' (הכדין מכבשין כל סנייהו ומסיקייהו דסיניונא בר קיטין הדין דודי בת אימי וסוסיא בת אימי בהיכדין דמיתכבשה). As both these texts use the similia similibus formula, and since in M163 the demonstrative pronoun הדין precedes, rather than follows, the personal names, one could offer an alternative translation to these lines: 'Thus may all the enemies and oppressors of Sunyona son of Qitin, this Duday daughter of Immi and (this) Susya daughter of Immi be subdued, just as ... is subdued'. A last point of similarity worth noting is that both texts mention the curbing of human tongues, in M163:26 an angel that 'gags humans within their hearts' is invoked, and in N&Sh B21:14 it is stated (albeit in a disjointed context) that something or someone 'shuts the mouths of all sons of Adam and Eve'. A Mandaic bowl from the Schøyen collection, MS 2054/124, was recently discovered in which significant elements of both N&Sh B21 and M163 are found in combination (see Shaked 1999a, pp. 316-319). This confirms beyond doubt that both texts are not only of the same genre but, occurred also as one incantation in a joined form.

---

[210] b. Tan. 24b, b. BB 8a-b, 10b-11a, b. Zeb. 116a, and b. Nid. 20b.

[211] A Mandaean bowl.

[212] Texidor 1962, pp. 59-62. A Syriac bowl.

of the clients' mothers. According to a statement of Rav Papa, the fourth century Babylonian sage, the name Hurmiz is typical of non-Jewish persons.[213]

דניתכביש וניפיל הוא A16, an amulet written on bronze foil and found in the upper Galilee, has certain similarities to our text. Like M163 it combines the motif of subjugation (the empowering of the client over his townspeople) with the similia similibus formula. The invocation in A16:11-19 is similar to that which appears in lines 2 and 3 of our text: 'just as the sky is suppressed before God ... so may the inhabitants of this town be suppressed and broken and fallen before Yose ...' כדין יהוון עמה דהדה קרתה כבישין ות[ב]ירין ונפילין קודם יוסי. Both A16 and M163 use the verbs כבש and נפל.

3 תחות ריגליהון The idea of one's enemies crushed under the feet is very ancient and common to many cultures. Use of this motif in other magic bowls are: N&Sh B5:7 all the evil spirits are 'roped, tied and suppressed' under the feet of the client כיפיתון אסיריתון כבישׁ<י>תון כולכון תחות כיפי רגלה ד... Also McCullough A:2-3[214] ויכבשון ית קיימתה ... תחת ריגילה ד... 'and they will tread ... under the foot of'. In a Mandaic bowl, AIT 38:12 ʿsyrʾ wrgylʾ wkbyšʾ wsypʾ wmʾtn<h>[215] twtyʾ lygrh d... 'bound and hobbled and suppressed and overturned and put down under the foot of ...'

4 שמיש מלכא דאלהי Shamish appears in a number of bowls: N&Sh B13:11,21, Obermann II:62:2, a Mandaic text MIT 22:123, 126, 143, 247 as well as in Syriac in AIT 36:2-3 where he appears as mryʾ Šmyš 'the lord Shamish.' See also Montgomery's comments on bowl 36:2,3. 1913, p. 239; a similar title appears in AIT 19:5 רבא דאלהי מריא איבול מריא[216] 'the lord Ibol the great lord of the gods'.

6 יך[...]מזמן דמרא חיורא תרנולא הנא תחות Perhaps תרנ<ג>ולא. The syncope of g in this word is attested in Mandaic and was discussed by Nöldeke 1875, p. 41, and Macuch 1965, pp. 77-78, who noted that such omissions in Mandaic are limited to old loanwords (Akkadian tamugallu).

---

[213] היכי דמי שמות מובהקין אמר רב פפא כגון הורמיז ואבודינא בר שיבתאי ובר קידרי ובאטי ונקים אונא 'Can you give some examples of names which are obviously those of heathens? — Said R. Papa: For instance, Hurmiz and Abudina, Bar Shibthai, Bar Kidri, Batti and Nakim and Una' (b. Git. 11a). For a more detailed discussion of the name Ifra Hurmiz see Gooblatt 1976.

[214] Published by McCallough in 1967 and later emended by Harviainen in 1981.

[215] Reconstructed by Epstein 1983 p. 368.

[216] Amended from מלכא to מריא by Epstein (1983 p. 346).

A similar case of omission attested in Mandaic as well as in Jewish Aramaic is זווא (=זוגא), 'pair'.[217]

The suggested reconstruction דמזמן עלי[ך][218] "appoin[ted on your behalf]" allows the understanding of תחות as a pun meaning both 'in place of' as well as 'under' (as it is used in l. 5: '... under the feet ...'). The use of a ritually mutilated animal as an act of sympathetic magic and its burial with an amulet is not unknown in the Jewish magical tradition. In Sepher Ha-Razim, first heaven lines 132-40,[219] there is a magical recipe which instructs its user to take the heart of a lion cub, removed with a copper blade, and bury it with an inscribed metal foil. The user is then instructed to recite the following: 'You the angels who go around and wander in the world, turn around all the people of this district - big and small, old men and young men, common-folk and dignitaries. And may my fear and awe be upon them, and be as the awe of the lion upon the animals. And just as this heart is dumb and I speak, so too will they be obedient to me. And none of the children of Adam and Eve will be able to speak against me'. In the Sword of Moses there is also a recipe which, like our own text, recommends the use of a white cock. In this case the user is instructed to take the cock's beak and place an inscribed metal foil within it; it is then to be hidden in the clothing of the person the user wishes to affect. This recipe intends to gain its final effect by the agency of a dispatched dream.[220] Such practices are also inferred from some of the Greek Magical papyri.[221] A particularly interesting first century Greek defixio from Carthage (DT 241.16-18) categorically implies that a cock was buried with it.[222] This amulet bears a close relationship to our text in that it also employs the similia similibus formula. Although Jewish law has no mention of the endorsement of such a ritual action, there is ,nevertheless, a discussion in the m. AZ 1:5 and the t. AZ 1:21 (followed up in both the Talmuds: b. AZ 13b-14a, and y. AZ 1:1, 39a) concerning the circumstances in which the sale of a white cock to a gentile is permitted. The restrictions on the sale of such animals is stated to have been due to the fact that they

[217] Epstein 1960, p. 18.
[218] Suggested by S. Shaked.
[219] Margalioth 1966, p. 74.
[220] Harrari 1997, First supplement, p. 141.
[221] Betz 1992, p. 150, PGM X. 36-50 'Apollo's charm to subject'. A frog's tongue is used with an inscribed foil of metal which in this case is put in a sandal and trod under foot.
[222] Faraone 1988, p. 282, n.10.

were used for sacrificial purposes amongst idolaters; a statement which is possibly meant to include the type of practice mentioned above.

8-11 The second simile incorporates a structural description of the world - the heavens are at the top, and under them are the sun, earth, water, darkness and the lower foundation, in that order. They are each described as pressing over the one beneath them. At the bottom there are the seven 'sons of gods', who know the seven powerful words by which these six layers of the world came to be pressed together. These seven powerful words are invoked, and by sympathetic suggestion this description of the enormous force by which the different parts of the world are held is used as a parallel to the magnitude of force with which the clients' opponent should be suppressed. A similar invocation appears in the Geniza fragment T. -S. K1.163:20-22[223] היך דארעא כבישה תחות שמיא ובני אנשא תחות ידי דמלאך מותא כן יתכבשון כל בני אדם וחוה 'Just as the earth is pressed under the heavens and human beings under the angel of death so may all the sons of Adam and Eve be pressed ...' Interesting for comparison is also a Christian amulet written in Coptic (T.S. 12,207)[224] that implores 'God who has bound Heaven and has bound earth ... restrained the Sun ... the moon ... the stars ... and the winds in the middle of heaven', to 'bind the mouth and tongue', of an adversary so they 'will not be able to speak an evil word' against the client. Although such a full description of the geography of the universe in all its layers as appears in M163 is not to be found elsewhere, the seven powerful words by which only heaven and earth were suppressed, are invoked in a similar fashion in three other bowls AIT 6:7-9, Geller B:7-9 and MS 1927/62:5-7. The introductory invocations to the seven words in these texts are as follows:

[223] Schäfer and Shaked 1997, p. 248.
[224] Meyer and Smith et. al. 1994, pp. 197-199.

M 163:9	היכא דיתבן הנין שבע בני אלהי וידען שבע מילי תקיפתיא ד[ב]הון כבישא שמיא וארעה
AIT 6:7-9	וכיבשא הדין כבישנא להון בשום הלין שבע מילין דישמיא וארעה כבישין בהין בשום
Geller B:7-9	וכבישנא להון כיבשא הדין בשום הלין שבע מילין דשמיא וארעא כבישין בהון בשום
MS 1927/62:5-7	ואסרנא וחתימנא עליהון הלין שבע מילין דבישמיה וארעא כבישין בשום הלין שבע מילין דישמיא וארעה כבישין בהון בשום

This Aramaic opening formula appears also in Hekhalot Zutarti as part of a description of the enormous powers of certain magical words דין הוא איסרא וחיתמא דאסרין ביה ארעא ואסרין ביה שמייא 'This is the binding and the seal by which are bound earth and heaven'.[225] The powerful words in the Hekhalot text are different from those found in our text, however, the four sets of seven words found in the magic bowl texts are similar enough to each other for us to assume a common Vorlage:

	7th word	6th word	5th word	4th word	3rd word	2nd word	1st word
M163:9-11	כיב(ש)ון	דבחיל ארכדיל	זדין מיזיון זיועין	משכבא מכבשא	דבחיל דיבחיל	גישמון	מדא מדא
AIT 6:7-9	כיבשין	ארדיבל	מורה	משכב[226]	מרביל	גישמין מרביל	גישמין מרביל
Geller B:7-9	[כיבשין]	[ארדיבל]	מורא	משבר	מרחבל	גישמין	מרביל
MS 1927/62:5-7	כיבשין	ארדיבל	מזרח ארובכאל	משכב	מרביל רחבל	גישמין מרביל	גישמין מרביל
Hermitage p.7:8,9[227]			אדריגל	מורדן	תחבל	גשימון	אגישמון מרביל

A tradition regarding divine names that have the power and force to hold in place the different layers of the cosmos exists also in the b. Suk. 53a-b and y. San. 10:2, 29a. This tradition consists of a story of how King David, when digging the foundations for the temple, reached so deep that he was in danger of releasing the Tehom (deeps of the abyss) which would then unleash a flood upon the earth. In the Babylonian Talmud King David stopped the Tehom from rising by writing the ineffable name on a shard and casting it over the deep. In the version of the Yerushalmi Talmud the shard was already in place and King David happened upon it while excavating. When he attempted to remove it the shard warned him to desist: 'You can not lift me up ... Because I am here to suppress the Tehom', דנא הכא כביש על תהומא.[228]

[225] Schäfer 1981, §367.
[226] Corrected by Epstein 1983, p. 334.

Cf. בני האלהים in Gen. 6:2,4, Job 1:6; 2:1 and בני אלהים in 38:7, also בני אלים שבע בני אלהי in Ps. 29:1, and the Aramaic בר אלהין in Dan. 3:25. The understanding of the expression 'sons of God' as meaning 'angels' in Gen. 6:2,4 was objected to by the 2nd century Palestinian Tana R. Simeon b. Yoḥai who preferred them to be called 'sons of nobles' (בני דייניא). Furthermore, he cursed all those who did call them 'sons of God'.[229] The Palestinian Amora R. Reuben (3rd-4th century) also made a comment concerning the term 'son of God' as mentioned in Dan. 3:25. He states that when Nebuchadnezzar uttered it, an angel immediately came down and slapped him on the mouth for presuming that God had a son; a statement most likely intended to avoid any association with the Christian Jesus 'Son of God'. Nevertheless, 'sons of God' in the sense of 'angels' appear often in Hekhalot[230] and magical literature; usually in the form quoted from Job 38:7 ויריעו כל בני אלהים 'and all the sons of God shout for joy'. The mention of 'sons of God' in Gen.6 is the precursor to the 'fallen angels' literature, a reference to which is found in l. 18 of our text (see commentary below). In an article on the sons of God Alexander cites a number of passages as 'evidence that from the second century onwards the rabbis in Palestine engaged in a polemic against angelology'.[231] Statements about how limited the knowledge of the angels is in both Genesis Rabbah 17:4, where it is described as less then that of Adam, and in Exodus Rabbah 23:15, [227] Borisov 1969.

---

[228] Sperber (1994, pp. 47-54) noted a connection between this story in the Talmuds and magic bowls. The casting of the shard inscribed with angels' names led him to conclude that (ibid. p. 54): 'the Yerushalmi text probably attests to the existence of such magic bowls in Jewish Palestine as early as the third century CE'. Such a notion is questionable, as no magic bowls have been found in Palestine.

[229] Genesis Rabbah 26.

[230] Hekhalot Rabati, Seder Rabba de Bereshit and Shiur Qomah.

where it is depicted as inferior to that of the generation that crossed the Red sea. In Genesis Rabbah 1:3 there is a discussion as to whether the angels were created on the second or fifth day. These statements could be taken to reflect an objection to the idea that angels could have had a part in the act of creation. Not only did they lack the knowledge, it would have been impossible for them to have participated in the first act of creation as they themselves had not yet been created. Cf. Against Heresies by Irenaeus who states that Carpocrates (XXV:1), Menander, Simon Magus (XXIII:2) and Saturninus (XXIV:1) all taught that the world was made by angels. Saturninus is quoted by Irenaeus as having claimed, much like in our text, that 'The world ... and all things therein, were made by a certain company of seven angels'.[232] Both the idea that the angels partook in the act of creation, as well as allusion to the Christian Jesus, son of God, which were so objectionable to the rabbis are present in our text here.

Though בני אלהי are masculine in gender the demonstrative pronoun referring to them is feminine as are the two verbs יתבן and ידען.

שמיא כבישא The feminine form of the active participle pe. is used three times in l. 8, the first of these should be a masculine plural form - כבישין.

12 There should be an added הכדין 'just so' at the beginning of l. 12 to complete the phrase begun in l. 8 by הי<ד>כין 'just as'.

13 מלאכי בני איקרא The word איקרא is derived from the root יקר and probably denotes 'honor, glory' (cf. Mandaic ʿqʾrʾ, DM p. 365a). As these angels appear immediately after the invocation of the seven words known by the seven 'sons of gods' it is conceivable to assume that they are synonymous. In Gordon H:2, there occurs in a long list of malevolent entities the expression שבעה בני איקגירי, which Gordon considers synonymous with the expression בני איגרי - the roof spirits.[233] However, the seven בני איקגירי in Gordon H:2 may be an illusion to the same seven angels in our text rather than a corruption of איגרי, as Gordon assumed.

---

[231] Alexander 1972, p. 68.
[232] Jonas 1963, p. 132.
[233] Possibly associated with epilepsy, see note on M156:5,6.

14 כבשיאל The angel's name is derived from the root כבש, a root that embodies one of the central themes of this incantation. In l. 14 the invocation of the eight angels, the last of which is described as having 'pressed the pillar of the earth',[234] include three names on the theme of the root כבש: כיבשון, כבשיאל and כבשיאיל. In another bowl, Gordon 6:4, כבשיאל is the first of a list of ten angel names. In the same bowl, Gordon 6:2, there are three participles describing various evil entities, these are translated by Gordon as 'vanquished thrashed and trodden'. The similarity between these and the names which appear before כבשיאל in our text is noteworthy:

Gordon 6:2 כבישין דישין ודריכין [235]{כבישין דישין ודריכין בשום}

M 163 כיבשון דישון ודדיכון בשום

On the basis of the form in Gordon 6 it is possible to assume that דדיכון in M163 is a corruption of דריכון. In another Gordon bowl, D:14,15, כבשיאל is also invoked in reference to his specialty: 'By the name of Kabšiel the angel who suppresses every evil thing' בישמיה דכבשיאל מלאכה דהוא כביש כל מידועם ביש. Kabšiel is also the last name in a list of eight angels in two Cairo Geniza fragments. One is a love charm, T.-S. K 1.37 2a[236] and the other, T.-S. K 1.26 1b,[237] a text to stop an adversary's mouth from uttering hatefulness. In the latter fragment Kabšiel is also mentioned as being responsible for 'pressing the earth in the presence of (or - before) the heavens', כבשיאל דכבש ארעא קודם שמייא. It is interesting that in T.-S. K 1.26 1b, just as in M163, the two aspects of pressing, i.e. the pressing down which holds the layers of the cosmos together, and the suppressing of an adversary's mouth are both included. Another Geniza fragment, T.-S. K 1.15 page 2 line 17 to page 3 line 19,[238] also a recipe for the subjugation of human adversaries, invokes Kabšiel three times in the capacity of a similia similibus formula, stating that just as he is the one who 'subdued the [234] The concept of pillars of the earth is well known from a wide variety of cosmological literature, yet references to a single pillar are few. In Exodus Rabba (Vilna) 2 and Midrash Tanhuma (Buber) Parashat Shemot 16 and (Warsaw ed.) Parashat Shemot 19 God says to both Abraham and Moses 'It is at the pillar of the earth that you are standing' במקום עמודו של עולם אתה עומד.

---

[235] Gordon added the brackets thinking that the sequence כבישין דישין ודריכין בשום was superfluous. Considering our text, however, it would be preferable to remove the brackets and read 'vanquished thrashed and trodden by the name of כבישון, דישון and דריכון'.

[236] Schäfer and Shaked vol. I, 1994, p. 58.

[237] Schäfer and Shaked vol. II, 1997, p. 267.

[238] Naveh and Shaked 1993, p. 148.

world under his (God's) feet. Thus will be subdued before me all those who speak evil against me'.

15 פתלין The feminine passive participle plural should be פתילן.

18 עזאל ועזאל ועזזיאל - The third simile refers to the punishment these three named angels received by the hand of another group of angels who were sent by God. The punishment they received for transgressing against the will of their lord was to be pressed on a mountain (of darkness) with their faces directed to darkness. The story that is behind this simile is a combination of motifs derived from the literature which developed around the story of the fallen angels in Gen. 6:4.[239] The names A'ZA'L, A'ZA'L and A'ZZYA'L, which appear in M163, are closest in form to the names of the three angels mentioned in III Enoch A'WZA' A'ZH and A'ZA'L,[240] though they are by no means the same. The motifs concerning the fact that these three angels transgressed their lord's command and that they were punished by other angels sent by God himself, are common to most of the fallen angel stories.

וכבשינון על טור[א דחשוכא] ואחדרו אפיהון לאפי דחשוכא The theme of the angels' punishment having consisted of being pressed in (or on) the mountain of darkness facing the darkness is found in I Enoch 10, considered to be a translation of an Aramaic work from as early as the 2nd - 1st centuries BCE. Unfortunately the Aramaic fragments of the Book of Enoch are too scanty at this point of the text to allow a reconstruction of this motif.[241] However, in the Zohar, a medieval work, Balak vol. III p. 208a, there is an allusion to the fallen angels Uzza and Azael who were imprisoned in the mountains of darkness their faces towards the darkness. The expressions used in the Zohar - בטורא דחשוכא ... ורמי חשוכא ... דאנפין ... וזריק חשוכא באנפוי ... וחשוכא אזדריק באנפוי are fairly close to the ones in our bowl. Cf. The Coptic, Manichaean, Kephalaia 117.1ff. 'Again, before the watchers rebelled

---

[239] The comparative study of the literature surrounding the fallen angels, such as the Enochic traditions, the Targum and Midrashim is extensive and beyond the scope of this study. The most relevant sources for our purpose here are I Enoch chapter 10, III Enoch chapters 4 and 5, the Targ.-J. to Gen. 6:4, b. Yom. 67b, Midrash Deuteronomy Rabbah 11, Pesikta de R. Kahana 34. Later medieval sources include the Zohar, Balak vol. III p. 208a and 212a, and Havdala de R. Akiva 11. For a fuller discussion of the development of the fallen angels in these sources see Ginzberg 1946-47, Milik 1976, pp. 317-339 and Scholem 1980-1981 pp. 243-281.

[240] Other manuscript variants found in the Schäfer Synopsis are not significantly closer in form to the names in M163. Although of no apparent importance the name AʿZZYAʾL does appear once in the Sepher Ha-Razim second Heaven (l. 26) as the first angel of the second step.

and came down from heaven, a prison was fashioned and constructed for them in the depths of the earth, below the mountains'.[242] Though there is no mention of the angels 'facing the darkness' in the Kephalaia there is, nevertheless, elaboration to the effect that: 'the remnant that is left from the darkness is this black mountain' (Kephalaia 112.5ff).[243] In the Psalms of Thomas IV (210.1 and 210,10), another Manichaean work, there is also mention of the mountain of darkness: '[The] demons, - put fetters on their feet; the goddesses, - put iron on their hands; the stinking and foul devils; - let their neck break beneath the collar; - the false gods that have rebelled, - bind them beneath (or at) the dark mountain'.[244] In the Mandaean Ginza the motif of 'being bound in the Mountain of darkness', bṭwrʾ ḏhšwkʾ, is used more generally as a threat to what criminals can expect.[245] On the basis of the Aramaic expression טורא דחשוכא, which appears also in the Zohar it is possible to suggest that l. 18 of our text be likewise reconstructed [טור]א דחשוכא.

An expression similar to that which appears in l. 18: דעל פוקדן דמריהון עברו occurs in AIT 1:8-11: אשבעית עליכון כל מיני ליליתא בש[ום] זרעיתכין דילדין שידי ולילית[א] לבני נורא סטין ומרדין ועברין [על] גזירתא דמריהון ... 'I adjure you, all species of liliths in respect of your posterity, which is begotten by demons and liliths to the children of light who go astray: Woe, who rebel and transgress against the proscription of their Lord ...' Note that Montgomery identified in his commentary on בני נורא and what follows in l. 9 the reference to the myth of the fallen angels from Gen. 6. Another Syriac bowl, Texidor 50327,[246] which proclaims at its outset to be an amulet for 'pressing and binding' qmʿyʾ lkybšʾ wʿsrʾ, mentions in l. 3 angels who revealed the mysteries of their lord mlʾky dglwn rzy mryhwn.

Other relevant references in magic bowls are: 1. The angels A'ZA', A'ZA'L and Metatron which are invoked together with in Gordon D:11. A curious combination for in III Enoch this pair of angels were antagonistic towards Metatron. 2. In AIT 2:6, AIT 9:10 and Gordon 11:9 there is a formula in which demons are threatened with the ban that was put on mount Hermon. Montgomery correctly identified this as 'a reminiscence of the myth of the [241] Milik 1976, p. 162.

---

[242] Gardner 1995, p. 123.
[243] Gardner 1995, p. 117.
[244] Säve-Söderbergh 1949, p. 127.
[245] Säve-Söderbergh 1949, p. 127.

confederation of fallen angels',[247] reference to which can be found in I Enoch 6:5. 3. In another bowl, published by Montgomery in 1912 and written in Manichaean script, the seal of šmḥyz' the fallen angel is mentioned.

20, 21 Both 'the great man of the end' of the sixth simile (l. 20) and 'the primal man' of the following seventh simile (l. 21) are as yet unknown to us. However, the fact that they are in apposition, the great man of the end vs. the primal man, might be a clue.

22 נגרי The ר in this word is clearly written, as the scribe distinguishes his ר and ד. However, the combination of טורי ורמאתה ונגרי is close to the Targ.-J. of Isa. 30:25 which reads: על כל כל הר גבה ועל כל גבעה נשאה פלגים יבלי מים (MT: טור רם ועל כל רמא מנטלא פצידין נגדין מיין '... on every high mountain and on every lofty hill, there shall appear brooks and water courses ...'). נגדין 'rivers' or 'watercourses' is more appropriate in our text than נגרי 'door bolts' (J. p. 876b). It is probable that the scribe, in haste, wrote an ר instead of a ד.

23-24 ענינן The correct spelling for either 'augurs' (Is. 2:6) or 'clouds' is עננין, as the word 'clouds' is spelled (ענני) in the next line.

עליו This form, occurring twice in this line, is Hebrew; one would expect the Aramaic equivalent עלוהי or עליה as in l. 21.

נקטוי, פכרוי and שדוי All 3rd person masculine plural verbs in the perfect with 3rd person masculine singular suffixes. The ה is missing in the suffix and the forms should be reconstructed to נקטו<ה>י, פכרו<ה>י and שדו<ה>י.

חרום אחרום Cf. Smelik 1978 lines 2 and 3[248]: מן שעריהון שקלית ליפכריהון ומן גילדיהון לירקמיהון ומן דמיהון ליחתמיהון בישבע שבע נקטית בציצותהון ובתמני תמני בגדילתהון ושדרית יתהין לחד מרק לניקרא דשמיא. 'From their hair I took to grasp them, from their skin to (bond) them, from their blood to seal them. Seven at a time I seized them by their hair, eight at a time by their bodies, as I threw them to ḥd mrq nyqr' which is in the heavens'.[249]

---

[246] Texidor 1962, pp. 53-54.

[247] Montgomery 1913 p. 126.

[248] Other parallels to this motif found in this bowl published by Smelik exist in three unpublished bowls M148:6,7 (from the Moussaieff collection to be published by the present author), MS 1927/10:6,7 and MS 2053/182:3-6.

[249] In his article (1978) Smelik understood the motif of taking hair, skin and blood as a ritual performed against the clients (his footnote 4) rather than the demons. However, it is more likely that the ritual is intended against the demons which are listed immediately before the

Both M148 and MS 1927/10 as well as Smelik's bowl have the extra clause, 'to where demons go and do not return'. The fate of HRWM A'HRWM is similar in that he was grabbed by the fringes of his sides (or folds of his garment or locks of hair) בציצין דסיטריה. In M163 seven were hurled to the heavens and eight to the midst of the clouds, while in Smelik's text seven at a time were grabbed by their locks and eight at a time were grabbed by their bodies and also hurled to the heavens.

קרח (וד)ותן ואבירם The ninth and final simile is derived from the biblical story of Korah Dathan and Abiram (Num. 16) whose punishment consisted of the earth bursting open and swallowing them live, with families and possessions, straight into Sheol.

27 רעוינית The scribe confused the ו and the י; this word should have been written רעיונית.

29 The form in which the Holy Trinity is expressed in this line is reminiscent of that mentioned in The Acts of Judas Thomas section 39[250] where the apostle addresses Jesus in the following manner: 'we glorify thee, and we exalt through Thee Thy exalted father, who is not seen, and the holy Spirit...', wmrmrynn bʾydk lʾbwk rmʾ hwʾ dlʾ mtḫzʾ wlrwḥʾ qdyštʾ.

אישו This spelling of the name of Jesus is unattested. In Jewish sources the usual spellings are ישו or ישוע. In a Parthian amulet[251] the spelling yyšw is attested. The spelling אישו, with initial aleph, possibly represents a transcription of the Christian Syriac form, not as it is spelled (yšwʿ) but rather, as it is pronounced Išô.[252]

רומ(א) ועומ(ק)א Cf. The Acts of Judas Thomas §123 ʾlhʾ dytb brwmʾ wlʾ mtksʾ mnh mdm dbʿwmqʾ hw 'God who sittest on high, and nothing that is in the depth is concealed from thee'.[253] ritual description. This is confirmed by the duplicates which are both unambiguously intended for the protection of their respective named clients, as indeed is Smelik's bowl which clearly threatens in lines 4 and 5 any demon that 'will return and sin against' the client. Also, in lines 2 and 3 of his text Smelik translates שבע שבע and תמני תמני respectively as 'seven times seven' and 'eight times eight' rather than the more likely 'seven at a time' and 'eight at a time'. As for example in the Targ. Ps-J. Gen. 7:9 תרין תרין עאלו לנוח לתבותא 'two at a time they entered with Noah into the ark'.

---

[250] Klijn 1972, p. 86.

[251] Henning 1947, p. 40.

[252] Nöldeke 1904, p. 27: '◡ without a full vowel always becomes ī in the beginning of the syllable'.

[253] Klijn 1962, p. 131.

אבוי רמא Cf. Judas Thomas lʾbwk rmʾ. Cf. also in a Manichaean magical text '... in the name of his Father, the Highest ...'[254]

רוחי קדישתא Although written as a plural form one might also consider reconstructing it to <ה>רוחי, thus it could be understood as a feminine single form 'his holy spirit'. As in the Greek version of The Acts of Judas Thomas 'thine holy Spirit'.[255] This would also be consistent with early Syriac where rwḥʾ is always construed in the feminine.[256] The Holy spirit as a feminine entity is also consistent with the Manichaean Trinitarian scheme whereby the spirit is the equivalent of the Mother of Life who calls forth the First Man.[257] Cf. BOR I. 13 יסוס רות קד, and also in a Syriac incantation bowl[258] bšwm ʾbʾ bšym br[ʾ .....w]b[rwḥʾ q]dyšṭʾ.

---

[254] Henning 1947, p. 40.
[255] Klijn 1962, p. 235. In the Syriac version it is just 'the holy Spirit' without the genitive affiliation to Jesus.
[256] Murray 1975, p. 143.
[257] Säve-Söderbergh 1949, p. xxvii.
[258] Montgomery 1917/18.

Glossary and Bibliography

Glossary

-א upon, over. אקרקפה M101:12; ארישה M101:12; אגברי M142:5; אטור M145:1; אשינא M145:1; אפרטה M145:10

אב father. אבוהי M103:9, M119:10; אבוי M163:29

אבד pa. to perish. תאבדון M123:8; תיבדון M131:4

אדיר (H) great, mighty, glorious. אדרים M117:5

או or. 102:7,8

אודנא ear. אודנה M156:5,9

אות (H) letter. M50:3, M59:9; אותיות M50:4, M59:9

אזל to go. אזלית M156:9; תיזלין M156:9; יזלון M102:12; תזלון M131:2,4; אזיל M145:13

אחא brother. M123:7, M142:4

אחרון (H) last. אחרונים M117:1

אחתא sister. M123:7

אי if. M123:6, M138:9

איגרא roof. איגרי M156:5

איגרתא letter. איגרת שיבוקין letters of separation M50:6, M59:12

אידא hand. ידי M155:6; ידוהי M145:12; באידיה M107:5,6

איך like. 102:9

אילהין but. M117:5

אימת when, whenever. אמא M163:23

אין (H) particle of negation, is not, are not. M101:9

אינון they m. (pl.). M155:7,10, M156:4, M163:16

איקרא see יקרא

אית there is/are. M59:8, M103:1,7, M119:1, M121:2, M145:13,14, M155:9, M156:12, M163:5,7,12,13,16,24

אל god (H) god. M102:10,14, M107:7, M112:3, M155:3,4; אלהי M117:4, M163:9

אלה (H) these, those. M117:1

אלהא god. M117:5, M155:8, M163:16,18; אלהים M155:8; אלהי M145:13, M163:4,9

אלהינו (H) M101:10; אלוהי (H) god. אלוה (H) M102:10

אלפא a thousand. אלפין M163:23

אם if. M103:6,7, M119:6,7,8, M156:9

אימא mother. M138:11

אמירן see מריא

אמן M50:6, M101:13, M102:14, M103:10, M119:10, M107:7,9, M117:6, M121:5,6, M123:9, M131:5,

M138:12, M142:8, M149:11, M155:12, M156:13, M163:28,30

אמר to say, speak. M107:5, M123:5, M138:8, M145:13,14, M156:7; אמנליה M145:9 ;אמריתון M142:5

אנה I. M59:8, M131:4; אנא M117:5, M123:2, M145:15

אנחנא we. M142:5

אני (H) I. M59:13, M112:13, M149:5, M156:2

אנפא face; with prep. ב before. אפי M163:18; אפיהון M163:18;באנפי M142:3

אנתי you f. M103:7, M119:7, M156:7,9,10

אנקתא necklace charm. אינקיתא M101:4

אינשא human being; man. בני אינשא M102:13; בני אינשה M123:8, M163:26; אינש M103:6, M119:6; אינשי M149:7

אמיץ brave (H). M155:4; אמץ M155:4

אסא, אסי to heal. ithpe. תיתסי M103:2, M119:1, M155:2, M156:3; לאסו M155:1

אסיא healer. M142:5

אסורא bond, chain. איסורי M103:4, M119:4

אסותא healing, remedy. M142:10, M156:1,3; אסואתא M102:5

אסקופתא threshold. איסקופתיה M59:11, M121:1, M142:6; איסקופתה M142:10

אסר to bind. אסיר M107:6; אסרינון M142:7; אסיריתון M163:20; למיסר M101:1, M108:2

אסרא binding. M163:1; אסריה M163:3,29

איסתרא goddess. M103:3, M119:3; איסתרתא pl. M102:5,6,7, M123:8

אף also. M163:28

אפך to change, turn around. אפיכין M102:4, M112:4; אפיכי M102:8; איתופך ittaf. M145:8 ;איתפיך ithpe. M145:8,9

אקלידא key. אקליודי M145:14; אקלידי M145:15

ארבע four. M142:2. M145:5; ארבעה M145:5,6

ארבעין forty. M102:12

ארדיכל builder. ארדיכלי M163:20

ארמאי gentile. M103:4, M119:4, M123:7, M138:10,11

ארעה earth. M50:4, M59:10, M102:6, M145:7,8,10,11,12, M163:8,9,15; ארעא M102:4

אש (H) fever, fire. M117:3

אשתא fire. אישתא M145:11

אשתמודע to be recognized, known. לישתמודע M102:11

אתא letter, character. M102:13

אתה (H) you. M102:10; אתא M117:4

אתון you m. (pl.). M 131:2,4; אנתון M163:27

אתי to come pe.; to bring af. אתו M163:23; תיתון M101:7; מיתי af. M145:14; איתיתי M50:4; מיתינא af. M145:15

אתר place. M131:3,

אתר בית מקור בנה (H) womb M155:10

אתתא woman; wife. איתתה M121:2; איתא M156:13; אינתיה M142:6; אינתתיה M149:7

ב- in, at, by. passim; ביה M112:4, M145:11, M156:7,8; בה M131:3, M155:9, M156:12; בהון M50:4, M59:9,10, M163:9,15,16; בכון M145:13,14

בדיל on account of. M155:5

בדר to scatter. תיבדרון pa. M131:2

בטל to annul, make redundant. תיבטל M155:9; יבטלון M155:10; ניתבטלון ithpe. M107:3

בי house of. M50:1; ביה M101:6

בין ... בין whether ... or ... M123:6,7,8, M138:9,10,11

בין amongst. בן M156:5

בינתא hair. ביניתה M101:12

ביש evil. M102:5, M119:2, M107:8, M112:6, M121:5, M149:10; בישא M107:8, M149:9; בשתא M131:2,4; בישתא M59:3, M103:5, M119:5, M117:6, M121:4, M123:2,6, M138:3,4,9, M142:7, M149:9, M155:7,12, M156:4,7,9,10,12, M163:13,25,27; בישתה M101:3; בישותא M163:26,27; בישין M102:4,7,9,12, M103:4, M119:4, M112:4, M121:4; בישי M107:4,8, M112:6, M121:4, M149:9; בישון M123:2, M138:2

ביתא house. M145:9,10; ביתה M163:20; בית M163:24; ביתה M50:5, M101:6,7,10, M112:1,7; ביתיה M59:7,11, M103:7, M119:7, M107:1,6,8, M108:2, M121:1, M123:9, M142:6, M149:5; בתיהון M149:7

בית אילהי M145:13;

בית גילגלוהי דעינה the socket of the eye M156:5-6,10

בית גנזי treasure house M145:14,15

בית דין (H) law court M101:11;

בית מישכבהון bed room M50:5;

בית קברי M102:6 cemetery

בכין therefore. M50:, M59:10, M156:11

בלי to perish, fade away. ניתבלן M163:13,26,27

בלם to block, stop up, muzzle. בלים M163:26; ניבלמוניה M163:29; למיבלם M101:1

בנת daughter. M50:6; בנתיה M149:6

בעירא cattle. בעיריה M149:6

בר outside. לבר M163:13,26,27

ברא son passim. M121:1; בריה M145:2; ברה M107:5; בנה (H) M155:10; בנין M155:11; בני M102:7, M103:5, M119:5,6; בניה M121:1, M149:6; בנוהי M123:9

בני אינשא people. M102:13; בני אינשה M123:8, M163:26

ברדא ice. M155:8

ברזל iron (H). M155:7

ברי to create. ברא M155:5

בריח lock (H). בריחי M155:7

בתולא virgin, virginity. בתולן M163:15

גוא inner. בגו within M163:13,26; גואה M155:9

גיסא בר relative, kin. M102:13

ברוך (H) to bless. M102:10, M117:4

ברתא daughter. M131:4, M138:11

גאה, גאי (H) exalt. גאו M102:14

גבור (H) mighty. גיבור M102:10

גברא man. M145:13,14, M163:20,21; גבר M156:13; גברי M123:7, M142:5

גדא fortune, lot. גדיה M163:2,16,19,20,24,29

גדול (H) great. M102:10,11

גדע to cut off pa. מגדעין M155:7; יגדעון M155:7

גואל avenging. M102:14

גודא troop. M145:4

גוונא manner, form; colour. גונין M142:7

גונחא thunderclap. M145:7

גזרת decree. M142:7

גט ,גיטא divorce writ. M50:2,3,6,7, M:59:7,8,9,12, M103:1,6,10, M119:1,6,10 ;

גט פיטורין ,M103:6 גיט פיטורין M119:6

גיברא valiant. M107:7

גלי ,גלא ithpe. to be revealed. איתגלי M102:11; תיתגלי M102:13

גלי ,גלה (H) to uncover. גלוי M50:4

גללא stone. גלל M145:1; גללי M163:24

גלף to engrave. גיליף M142:8

גנזא treasure. גנזי M145:14; גנזיה M145:15

גנח to rumble. M145:4; תיגנח M145:10

גער to drive out, expel. איתגערי ithpe. M117:6

גפא wing. גפיה M145:12

גרביא north. M102:6

-ד, -די of, which passim. דיליה M103:5, M119:5; דילה M101:7; דהון M102:14

דודא cauldron. דודי M145:5

דול to draw. נידילון M102:9

דוק to crush. M145:8

דור to dwell. דירא M59:7

דוש to tread, trample. נידשוניה M163:28

דחי to push, drive away. אדחי af. M107:4

דחילא frightening. M117:5

דחלולא scarecrow. דחלולי M107:4, M149:10

דיוא dew, demon. M145:11; דיווא M145:6; דיויא M145:16; דיוי M50:4, M101:2, M103:2, M107:3,7, M108:2, M121:3, M142:5,7, M145:2,4,15; דיוין M59:11, M145:6; דיותא M142:7

דירתא dwelling, living quarters. דירתיה M149:5; דירתה M101:6,7, M142:6

דכי pure. דכיא M102:12

דכר male. דיכרא M149:8,9; דיכרי M50:2, M59:7, M101:4, M103:7, M119:7,8, M123:8

דלי to draw, raise. דליתיה M142:4

דלק to burn. דליק M123:4, M138:6

דלת door (H). דלתות M155:7

דמא blood. דמה M155:10; דמאה M155:9

דם נידא menstrual blood M155:10

דמי to resemble, look like. תידמון M142:6

דמך to go to sleep. דמיך M117:4

דמם to come to rest. נידימון M102:9

דנא jar. דני M101:12

דנחא to shine, be bright. דינחיא M142:5

דרדקא child, young, small. דרדקי M163:15

דרך ithpe. to be trodden under. ניתדריך M163:12,22,24

דרך (H) way. דרכו M101:10

דרמנא cure, remedy. M102:7

דת law. M50:6, M59:12

הדין this. M50:7, M101:1, M102:1, M103:1, M119:1, M107:1, M108:2, M112:1,7, M123:1,3, M131:4, M138:1,4, M155:1, M163:1,4,5,6,7,12,14,16,17,19,20, 21,22,24,25,27,28,28,30

דא (fem.) M101:5, M102:5,6,7,13, M107:9;

הדא (fem.) M50:2,5, M101:5, M103:6, M119:1,7;

דין M50:6, M101:7,13, M102:7, M107:9, M145:16, M155:9

דנן M121:5, M123:9, M138:12, M142:8, M155:12, M163:28

הנא M163:5,11

הנין M163:9

הלין M163:15,16,26

הנון M163:17

אילן M145:11

הדמא member, limb. הדמי M102:12; הדמין M156:12

הדר to go around, return. ניהדרינון M102:4; אהדרו af. M163:18

ההוא that (m.). M145:3,13

ההיא that (f.). M145:13, M156:8; מנההיא M145:3

הוא he. M50:1, M102:4,11,12,13, M112:13, M117:1, M155:4,8,10, 163:2,23,25,26,27

הוי to be. הוא M145:7; הוה M50:1, M123:5, M138:8, M142:5; הווה M145:7; יהי M155:1; ליהוי M102:8; תיהוי M142:10, M156:1,3; יהוין M102:5; תיהויין pa. M103:6, M119:6; יהא (H) M101:10

הונא nature, faculty. M102:14

היכא where. M163:9

היכלא temple. היכל M155:8

...ד היכדין just as. M163:4,8,17,18,19,20,21,23,24

הכדין just so. M163:5,6,12,18,20,22,24

הלך (H) to go, go away. ילך M101:10; ילכו M117:3

הללויה M50:6, M121:5, M149:11

הפך to overturn, turn around. למיפך M102:1; ניהפוכונון M102:12; ניתהפכון ithp M102:1,2,3

ואו woe (interj.). M102:5,6

זגד to worship. זגדית M145:13

זוח pa. to raise. מזיח M117:4

זוח to remove, turn away. תיזחין M156:12; תיזחון M59:11, M123:8, M138:11; ניזיחון M107:3; יזחון M112:7

זוטא small. M142:4

זיבא river, flood. M145:10

זיוא appearance. M145:10; זיו M155:5,8

זידן impious, wicked, malicious. זידניתא M101:3

זין armor. זוניה M145:11

זינא weapon. M145:11,14,15; זיניה M145:14,15

זיקא blast demon. זיקי M107:8; זיקין M145:5

זכי to be victorious. זכא M163:28; ניזכוניה M163:28

זכר (H) male. M101:5,9

זמן pa. to appoint. מזמן M102:1, M107:1

זמר to sing. זמרת M145:13

זמרתא singer. M103:5,7, M119:5,7

זניתא prostitute. M103:5,7, M119:5,7

זעקה cry. זעקי M107:6,7

זקיפא cross. זקיפיה M163:29

זרעא seed, descendant. M138:9; זרעיה M149:6; זרעיהי M123:6; זרעהי M142:6; זרעה M142:6

חבל to destroy pa. לחבלא M50:4; יחביל M142:5

חבלא ruin, injury. חבל M142:4; חבולא M145:5

חברתא f. neighbour. חברתיה M103:6, M119:6

חד one. M107:5, M145:12; חדא M163:9,10,11, M142:2,3

חוי to show pa. תיחוין M156:9

חולה a sick person (H). חולים M117:4

חומרא charm. חומרי M101:3, M131:2; חומריה M163:19,21,25

חוס to favor pa. יחוס M103:8, M119:8

חוש quick (?). יחוש M103:8, M119:8; אחישה M103:8, M119:8

חותם (H) seal. M101:7,8

חזי ithpe. to appear. מיתחזיא M59:8; מתחזין M50:2; תיתחזון M50:5, M101:7; תתחזון M59:12

חטי to sin. חטו M163:23

חטף to snatch. מיתחטפין ithpe. M142:2

חיורא white. M163:5

חיזונא vision. חיזוה M142:7; חיזוא M163:22,23; חיזוני M107:4

חיטינא slander (?).M103:2, M119:2,3

חיי to live. חיתה M101:6; חיי M102:6

חיילן a mighty one. M145:13

חילא strength. חיליה M163:20

חילמא dream. M50:3,5, M59:8,12; חילמי M59:11, M107:4

חילקא destiny, portion. חילקיה M163:2,17,21,24,29; חילקיהון M163:17

חיסמא envy; a block. M107:8, M149:9

חיש hurry. M107:5

חיתה creature. M123:5, M138:7

חלבא fat. חלבה M155:11; חלביהון M155:11

חמי ithpe. to appear. מתחמי M112:6; מיתחמי M112:6

חמשין fifty. M156:12

חרם to excommunicate pa. יחרמון M156:10

חרשא sorcerer, sorcery. חרשי M50:4, M59:10, M102:1, M103:5, M119:5, M121:4, M149:9; חרשין M102:4,7,8,9,12, M112:4

חשב to think, plan pa. מחשיב M163:25

חשוכא darkness. M163:9,18

חתם to seal. M101:12; חתים M107:6, M112:1,3, M121:1,3, M149:5; חתימין M50:7, M149:7,11; חתימיתון M142:7; מחתם pa.

M112:1, M149:5; מחתים pa. M121:1; מחתמין pa. M149:7,11

חתמא seal, sealing. M103:10, M119:10, M112:3; חתמתא M102:13, M107:1, M142:10

טבלא drum. M145:4

טבעת (H) ring. טבעות M101:9

טולא shade. M155:6

טוס to fly. ניטיסון M102:9

טורא mountain. M59:9, M163:18; טור M145:1; טוריא M50:4; טורי M102:9, M163:21, M131:1, M145:6,8,14,15

טעמא sense, faculties. טעמהון M102:13,14

יבש to dry. ייבשון M155:9,10

ידע to know. M102:13; ידענא M142:5; ידען M163:9

יהב to give. ithpe. איתיהיב M102:13

יהודאי a Jew. M103:3, M119:3, M123:7, M138:10,11

יהר to be proud, haughty. M131:3

יומא day. M50:6, M101:7, M107:9, M121:5, M123:9, M138:12, M142:8, M145:3,13, M163:28; יממא M50:3,6, M59:8, M149:10, M156:9; יממא M142:6,7

יחידיתא unique. M102:13

ילל to wail. יליל pa. M145:6

ימא oath. ממי pl. (?) M103:3

ימא to make an oath, swear af. מומנא M103:7, M119:7, M142:4, M145:10; מומינה M156:7,8

ימא sea. M145:8,9,14

ימינא right. ימיניה M117:5

יצא (H) to go out. M101:10

יקרא dignity, honour. M155:5; איקרא M163:13; יקריה M155:5,8; יקרהון M163:16

ירור howler. ירורי M101:2

ישראל Israel. M50:6, M101:10

ית acc. particle. M155:12; יתכי M156:10; יתכון M50:5,6, M59:12; יתהון M155:11

יתב to sit. יתיב M117:4, M155:5; יתבן M163:9

כ- preposition, the like of, as. כמותה M101:9

כבוד (H) glory. M117:3; כבודו M101:11

כבש to press. M163:15,29; כבשו M163:26; כבשינון M163:18,20; ניכבשוניה M163:28; כביש M163:11,28; כבישין M163:8,9; כבישא M163:8; כבושנא M163:13,16; כבוש M163:5; כבושו M163:27; איתכביש ithpe. M163:18,20,21,23; איתכבישו ithpe. M163:17,19,24;

אתכבישן ithpe. M163:4; ניתכביש ithpe. M163:2,7,12,18,20,22,24,25; מיתכבשי ithpe. M163:15; מתכבשן M163:25

כד when. M145:3

כוכבא star. כוכבי M145:8; כוכבין M131:4; כוכביה M163:2,17,19,21,25,29; כוכבהון M163:17

כוף to cover, vanquish af. אכיף M145:9; אכופא M145:9

כורא fish. M145:7

כורסא throne. כורסיא M155:5; כורסיה M142:3, M155:8

כיבא sore, pain. כיבי M102:9

כיבשא a press. M102:8, M163:1,28,30; כיבשי M102:8, M163:15

כימא constellation. M131:3

כין therefore, thus. M142:5, M156:12

כיפא shore. כיפי M145:6

כל all, any, each. passim. M102:2,3,5,11,13, M103:1,4,5,6, M119:1,2,4,5,6, M107:8, M112:4,6, M117:2,3, M121:2,4, M123:8, M142:7, M149:7,10 M163:5,7,12,13,15,16,24,27,28; כליה M145:10; כוליה M101:10, M123:9; כולכון M101:5; כולה M145:7; כולהין M163:4,13,25; כולהון M149:11, M163:17

כ(ל)ל(ב)ה (?) bitch. M103:3

כלי to destroy, restrain. כליא M145:4

כמה as, like. M155:12, M156:10,11

כמו (H) as, like. M123:5, M138:8

כנופיא crowd, assembly. M102:8

כנע to subjugate. איתכנעו ithpe. M50:4

כנתא foundation. M163:8

כסא bowl. M107:1

כסא (H) throne. כיסי M101:11

כרכא fortification. כרכין M156:10

כרע to kneel. כרעית M145:13

כשורא board. כשורי M145:11

כתב to write. כתבית M59:6, M103:1,6, M119:1,6; כתיב M156:8; כתבנא M50:2; כתיבנא M59:8;

כתבה writing. M101:1

כתר (H) crown. M101:11

ל- acc. particle, or prefix: unto, to, towards, for. passim. ליה M123:5, M138:8, M145:9,10, M163:5,7,16,24,29; לה M50:2, M59:8, M101:7, M102:5,6,8,11,13, M103:1, M119:1, M121:2, M142:7, M145:16, M156:1,3,7,9; לך M163:13; ליכי M103:6,7, M119:6,7, M142:10; להון M50:2, M59:8,12, M102:7,13; לו (H)

M101:10; לך (H) M101:13; להן (H) M117:3

לא no, not. passim. M50:5, M59:12, M101:7,8, M102:7,11,13, M112:4, M117:5, M123:1, M131:3, M138:1, M142:5,6,7, M155:6,10,11, M156:9,12,13, M163:13,23,26,27; לו (H) M101:10

לבש to wear, be dressed. נילבשונה M102:9; לבישין M123:5, M138:7

לבושא garment. M102:9

לוט to curse. ליטין M102:6

לויתן Leviathan. M145:7

לוטתא curse. M102:6, M103:1,3,4,5,7, M119:1,3,4,5, M123:2,3,6,7, M138:3,4,9,10,11; לוטאתא M102:6; לוטן M123:1, M138:2

לוי to accompany. לויא M59:7

לטבי no good spirits. M50:4; לטבי M145:4

ליבא heart. ליביה M163:13,22,26,27; ליבהון M102:11,13,14; ליביהון M163:26; ליבביהון M163:24

ליליה night. M50:3,5, M59:8,12, M142:6,7, M156:9; לילי M155:6

לילִיותא Lilith. M50:2, M59:3, M103:1,5,7, M119:1,2,7, M107:3,7, M121:3, M131:3, M142:7, M145:3,4,7,11,12,14,15,16, M149:8, M155:11; לילית M101:5; לילין M101:2,9

לית there is (are) not. M102:13, M117:4

לפני (H) in front of, in the presence of. M117:1; ליפני M117:3

מאה one hundred. מתן M102:12 two hundred

מאן who, which. M102:2,3

מבכלתא howler, tormentor. M101:4, M107:4,7, M121:3; מבכלין M101:2,9

מדינתא country. M163:5

מדנחא east. M102:5

מובלא a burden, load. M107:7

מומתא oath. M101:5

מופלא (H) wondrous. M102:10

מוקרא brain. מוקריה M163:24

מושב (H) seat, dwelling. מושבה M117:3,7

מות to die. מיתי M102:6

מותא death. M101:13

מותב session; dwelling. M50:1; מתיבי M59:5

מזיק (H) harmer. מזיקין M117:2

מזיקא harmer. מזיקי M112:5

מזלא star sign. מזלי M145:8; מזליה M163:17,19,21,24,29

מזמורא psalm. מזמוריה M145:13

מחבלא harmer, destroyer. M50:4; מיחבלא M59:10

מחשבתא thought, plan. M149:10; מחשבתיה M163:3,13,17,19,21,25,26,27

מחתא plague, affliction. מחאתא M101:4; מחת M156:4

מטה (H) below. M101:11

מי (H) he who, whoever. M101:10, M142:5

מיא water. M145:15, M163:8

מידעם thing. M119:2, M107:8, M112:6, M121:5, M149:10

מיטול because of, on account of. M59:12

מילתא word, spell. מלתא M142:3; M163:9,10,11; מילי M163:9,27; מיליה M163:3,13,17,19,25,26,27; מילן M145:10

מימר word, command. מימריה M142:3, M155:5; מימרהון M163:3,5,7,12,14,17,19,21,22,25

מירדא rebellion. M145:5

מכא af. to lower. ממכי M117:4

מלאכה angel. M102:3,10, M103:8, M119:8, M117:4, M163:14,15; מלאכין M117:5, M155:10; מלאכי M163:13,15,16,18,23,26

מלאך מותא M101:13

מלה (H) word. מילי מיליה M101:12

מלויתא accompanying demon (f.). M59:7

מלך to rule (H). מלך M156:11; מאלך M156:11; ימלך M156:11

מלך to rule. אמליך af. M163:28; נמלכו M142:4; נמלכון M163:28

מלך (H) king. M102:10, M117:1

מלכא king. M145:15,16, M163:4; מלכה M145:2; מלך M156:4; מלכי M145:9; מלכיה M156:4

מלכותא kingdom. M123:5, M138:7; מלכותיה M103:9, M119:10

מלל to speak. ממללן pa. M123:1, M138:2

מללתא utterance. M103:3, M119:3, M123:2,6, M138:3,4,9,11

מן from. passim. M50:5, M59:10,11, M101:6,7,10, M102:1,12,14, M103:2,3,4,5, M119:2,3,4,5,7, M107:5,6,8,9, M108:2, M112:7, M121:3,4,5, M123:5,8,9, M131:4, M138:8,11, M142:8,10, M145:5, M149:8,9,10, M155:2,10,11,12, M156:1,3,11,12 M163:13,18,22,23,26,28; מי M138:12; מיניה M101:13, M102:12; מינה M102:13, M156:12; מנהיא M145:3; מינך M145:6; מנהון M142:3, מינהון M50:6, M107:3; מינהין M142:2,3; מינכון M59:12

מני to be appointed. ממנ<י>ן M155:10

מסי to melt. איתמסיאה Ihtpe M50:4

מעא womb, belly. מעה M101:6, M155:2,7,12; מ(ע)יה (?) M103:3; מעינה M155:9

מעבדא active, doing. מעבדי M103:5, M119:5

מעולא (H) lofty. M102:10

מעלה (H) above M101:11

מעלונא entrance. מעולהון M121:1

מערבא west. M102:5

מפקונא exit. מיפקיהון M121:1

מפתח (H) engraver; key. מפתחי M101:7

מקום (H) place. M117:3,7

מקור source (H). M155:10

מרום (H) height, above. M101:11

מרומא height, on high. M50:4; מירומא M59:10

מריא lord. M107:5, M163:23; אמירן (?) M107:6; מרי M163:20, M142:2; מריהון M163:18

מרכבתא chariot. M121:4, M145:4; מרכבתיה M123:4, M138:6

משכבא bed. מישכביהון M50:5

משמתא ban. M59:7, M101:4; משמתתא M107:4,7

מתן two hundred. M156:12

נאלא incubus, nightmare. נאלי M112:5

נגן (H) to play a musical instrument piel. מנגן M117:1

נגע to injure. ונגעון M142:6

נגע (H) plague. נגעים M117:2

נגרא river course. נגרי M163:22

נדי (H) to banish piel. מנודא M101:10

נדא/נדי to throw, banish, excommunicate af. לאנדואהון M59:11

נדי to bespatter. נינדי M163:24

נדרא oath. נידרא M103:4, M119:4, M112:5, M123:2,3,6,7,8 M138:2,4,8,10; נידרין M123:1, M138:2

נהורא light. ניהור M123:2, M138:3

נהם to groan. נהמא M123:6, M138:9

נהרא river. נהרין M155:9

נוד to shake. נד M145:7,8; אנידה af. M145:7; איתונד ittaf. M145:7

נודא shaking, trembling. M145:7

נוח to rest. אניחו af. M163:26,27

נומתא slumber. M123:7, M138:9

נונא fish. נוני M145:8

נורא fire. M155:8; נור M123:4,5, M138:6,7, M155:8

נורא (H) revered. M102:10

נזה to be agitated. תינזהון M156:12

נזק to harm. תיתזק ithpe. M155:6

נחושה copper (H). נחושא M155:7

נחת to go down. אחית af. M102:10

נטל to move. תינטלון M123:8

נטר to guard, protect. תינטר ithpe. M155:6; תינטרי ithpe. M103:2, M119:2

נטרתא protection. M107:1, M142:10

ניגרא step. ניגריה M145:12

ניהמתא a groan. M123:6, M138:9

ניסכא lance. M145:14,16

ניסכא cast metal idol. ניסכאיא M145:12

נסב to gather. נסבה M155:11; סבו M155:12

נפל to fall. ניפיל M163:2

נפק to go out; af. to remove. נפק (pl.) M145:3,4,5,6; ניפק M163:26; יפקון M112:7; ניפקן M163:13,27; תיפקין M156:12; תיפקון M59:11; פוקו M101:6; תפקון M131:2,4; תפיק af. M155:10; מפקא af. M123:7, M138:9; מפקין af. M131:3; לאפקא af. M50:5, M101:2; לאפוקי af. M59:11

נפשא soul. נפשיה M149:6; נפשיכי M103:6, M119:6

נקב (H) gap M50:4; נקבי M59:9

נקבה female. ניקבתא M149:8,9; נקיבה (H) M101:5,9, M103:7; ניקבה M119:7,8; ניקבתא M50:2, M59:7, M101:4, M123:8

נקט to hold, take, seize. נקטוי M163:23

נשי to forget. ithpe. ליתנשי M102:13

נשא woman. נשי M123:8; נשיא M155:11

נתן (H) to give. תנו M117:3

סגי pa. to increase. מסג (?) M112:14

סדם to bind, shackle, confine. סדים M107:5

סדנא block, anvil. M145:8,12

סדנין אפיכין perverted devils (see DM p. 310). M102:4, M112:4; סדני אפיכי M102:8

סוף end. M163:20

סטן demon; enemy; prosecutor. סטנא M149:8; סטנין M59:11, M112:5, M121:3; סיטני M107:3,7; סטני M107:3,7, M108:2, M112:6, M121:4

סטנה hostility. M103:2, M119:2

סיהרא moon. M131:3

סיטרא side. סיטריה M163:23

סיוטא fright. סיוטי M108:2

סינא shoe. סנך M123:5; סינך M138:8

סיפא sword. M145:15,16

סכר to block, stop up. סכרא M102:8; ס[.]כרין M155:9

סלה M50:6; M101:13, M102:14, M103:10, M119:10, M107:9, M117:6, M121:5,6, M123:9, M131:5, M138:12, M142:8, M149:11, M155:12, M156:13, M163:28,30

סלק to rise, go up, ascend; pa. to remove. סליקית M50:4, M59:10; סליק pa. M145:14, סליקנא pa. M145:15

סמק to make red pa. סמיק M145:8

סנה thorn bush. M123:5, M138:7

סניתא hateful. M163:3,13,17,19,21,25,26,27; סניותא M163:26,27; סניתי M59:11; סניי M107:4

ספר document. M50:6; סיפר M59:12

סר prince. M102:11; סרא M103:10, M119:10; סרין M117:5

עבד to make, do, enact, perform. עבדו M102:11; עבדון M102:8; עבדן M102:6; עבדנא M50:1, M59:5; עבדין M102:5; עבדינון M102:3; ליעבדו M102:7;

עבדא servant. עובידיהון M121:2

עבדא magical act. M50:1; עובדין M103:4, M119:4

עבר to pass. M145:14; עברו M163:18; עברנא M145:15; עברי מן עלמא die M50:4, M59:10

עד until. M163:24

עובראfoetus. עוברה M101:6; עיבוריה M149:6

עולם (H) world. M102:10, M107:9

עומקא M163:29

עופא bird. M145:10

עזיזא m. strong. עזיזתא f. M103:5, M119:5

עזקתא signet ring. עיזקתא M101:9, M107:7, M142:8

עידנא time. M145:3,13

עילאי m. upper. M102:12; עיליתא f. upper. M103:3, M119:3

עין (H) eye. M117:3

עין רעה evil eye M156:6

עינא eye. M149:9; עינוהי M163:22,23

עיניתנא humble. M131:4

על upon, over, against, on account of passim. M102:2,3,4,5,12, M119:2, M117:2,3, M123:1, M138:1, M142:2,3, M155:5,9,10, M156:4, M163:1,8,18,23,24,25,27,28; עליה M142:8, M163:21; עלה M101:7, M102:7,9; M50:7, M123:6, M138:8,9, M156:13; עלך M102:10; עליכי M117:5, M156:7,8; עליכון M50:4, M59:8,10, M123:2,6, M138:2,3,8, M142:4,5; עליהון M102:7,9, M123:1, M138:2, M156:11, M163:18; עליו (H) M163:23

על ידי M155:6

עלא high, above. לעילא M123:5; לעלא M138:7

עלמא world. M50:4, M59:10, M142:2, M145:6,10, M163:28; עלמה M163:11,20,28; לעלם forever M50:6, M101:7, M121:5, M123:9, M138:12, M142:8, M163:28,29; עלם M102:14; עלמין M102:14, M155:8, M163:30

עם with. עים M 131:1

עמודה column. M163:15

עמי af. to dim, extirpate, sadden. תעימו M123:6, M138:9

ענא cloud. ענינן (?)M163:23; ענני M163:24

ענקתא necklace-charm. M112:5

עקר to uproot. איתעקרו ithpe. M50:4

עקרבא scorpion. ארקבי (?) M145:11

עקרה barren. M101:4,5

עריתא fever. ערייתא M142:7

עריות (H) shivers. M117:3

ערק to flee, run away. עריק M101:13

עשה (H) to do, to act. עשיתי M50:7, M59:13; עושה M149:5, M156:2

פגע to plague. M149:9

פגע to happen upon, bump into. M156:7,8

פגעה affliction, plague. M103:2, M119:2; פגע M149:9; פגעין M121:3

פגר (H) body. פגרי M101:11,12

פגרא body. פגרה M156:5,9

פומא mouth. M102:8, M123:7, M138:9; פומיי M149:10

פוקדנא command. פוקדן M163:18

פורא lot. M50:1, M59:4

פטר to release. פטרנא M50:6, M59:12

פיטורא divorce, sending away. פיטורין M50:3,6, M59:9,12, M103:6, M119:6

פיקודא command. M163:25

פישרא a solution, dissolving. M102:7

פכר to split, break, beat. פכירין M142:9,10, פכרין M163:23; פכרוי pa. M163:23; פכרי pa. M163:23

פלגא phalanx. M145:4

פנים (H) face. פניו M123:4, M138:6; פני M123:4, M138:6

פסק to cut, split, sever. איתפסיק ithpe. M163:23

פקד to command pa. מפקדין M156:4

פקע to burst open, split. פקא M131:1

פקעא valley, split, fissure. פקא M131:1; פקתא M145:8

פרטה inventory. אפרטה M145:10

פרש to express clearly, define. מפרש pa. M142:7

פרש to depart pa. פריש M156:11

פשח to tear off. איפשית ithpe. M131:1

פשר to dissolve. תיפשרין M156:12

פתוח (H) engraving. פתוחי M101:8

פתח to open. פתיחין M155:9

פתכרא idol. M149:8; פתכר M103:2; פתכרי M101:3, M102:5,7, M123:8, M131:2, M138:10; פתכרין M119:2, M112:5; פתכרתא M101:3, M103:2, M119:3; פתכריה M163:21,25,29

פתל to pervert. פתלין M163:15

צבא (H) host. M101:11

צבי to desire. תצבין M103:6, M119:6

צור to draw. צר M142:8

צור (H) rock. M112:14

צורונא image. M112:3

צות to listen. מציתנא pa. M145:1

צותא company. M156:9

צידעא the temple. צידעה M156:5

ציפרא bird. ציפרי M102:9, M145:9

ציצא night hawk. M145:9

ציצא fringe. ציצין M163:23

צנף to shriek. M145:6

צר (?).M102:6,8,11,12

קבל to accept, receive. קביל M145:10; קבילו M155:12; ליתקבל ithpa. M102:7

קברא tomb, grave. קברי M102:7, M156:5

קדוש (H) holy. M112:14, M155:3,4

קדח to groan. M145:6

קדיש holy. קדש M142:3; קדישה M102:14, M156:2; קדישי M163:16; קדישתא M163:29

קדם before, in the presence of. M102:7,14, M145:13, M163:18; קדמין beginning M123:5, M138:8; קדמאה primal M155:12, M163:18,21,23,27

קום to stand, exist, rise. תיקמין M156:13; קאי M155:3; קאים M102:14, M117:4; קים M155:8; ק<א>ינא M145:1; קים (H) M107:9, M163:28,30

קומתא body height, stature. קומתיה M102:12

קטל to kill. pa. מקטלא M103:5, M119:5

קיבלא rebuke. M155:12

קילן one who is swift (?). M145:13

קינא nest. M145:9

קירסא misfortune. M145:14

קל (H) sound, voice. M101:12

קלא voice. קליה M145:14; קלאי M145:15

קלי to roast. קליא M155:11

קמיעה amulet. M108:2, M155:9; קמיעא M123:1, M138:1, M155:1

קמע to bind ithpe. איתקמע M123:1, M138:1; איתקמיע M155:9

קנינא possession. קינייה M149:5

קניסא penalty. M131:4

קצר to shorten. מיתקצרין ithpe. M163:15

קראה a biblical verse. M156:8

קרב to approach, come near, touch. יקירבון M112:4; יקרבון M123:1, M138:2; תיקירבון M142:6

קרבא war. M145:3,9,13, M163:26

קרי to call. קרית M131:4; קרי M145:5; קרן M101:13; קרנון M102:3

קריבתא near; relative. M103:4, M119:4; קריבא M123:7; קריבה M138:10

קריתא (magical) invocation. M103:4, M119:4, M112:5

קרן (H) ray of light. קרניו M123:4, M138:6; קרני M123:4, M138:6

קרנא horn. M145:5; קרני M123:5, M138:7

קרקפא skull, head. קרקף M145:11; אקרקפה M101:12

קרקפנא head-man. M145:12

ראש (H) head. ראשו M101:11

ראשא head. ראישה M156:5,9

ראשון (H) first. רישונים M117:1

רב great. רבה M101:13, M102:3,14, M117:5, M123:5, M138:8, M155:6, M156:2, M163:20,23; רבא M107:7, M112:7, M131:5, M142:5, M145:2,8,9,10,11,12,14; רבתא M101:9, M145:1,4,5,7; רבותה M163:20; רבות M163:16; רבי M163:15; ריבוהי M123:4, M138:7; רבותהון M163:16

רבא master. רבי M145:5

רבי rabbi. M156:7

רביתא ocean. M145:6,9

רגז to be angry; išťaf to be agitated. אישתרגז išťaf M145:7

רגלא foot. ריגלך M123:6; רגלך M138:8; ריגליהון M163:3,7,12,14,17,19,21,22,25

רגש to be agitated. M145:8,9

רגש (H) tumult. M101:12

רדף to chase. רדפת M156:9

רהב to alarm. ארהיב af. M107:5

רהט to run. ארהיט af. M107:7

רוגזא anger, fury. M145:5; רוגזיה M145:15; רוגזאי M145:14

רוח (H) spirit. M101:9, M117:2

רוח wind. רוחי M145:6

רוחא spirit. M103:5, M117:6, M155:2,7,12, M156:4,5,6,7,9,10; רחא M119:10; רוח M101:4, M119:5, M155:9; רוחי M101:3, M156:4; רוחתא M131:2,4, M163:29

רוטננא incantation (?).M145:10

רומא height. M163:29

רוקא spittle. רוקי M149:10

רזא mystery, secret. M102:1,13, M142:4; רזי M102:11,12,13; ראזי M102:13; רזיה M163:21

רחיקתא distant; distant relative. M103:4, M119:4; רחיקא M123:7, M138:10

רחק to remove. רחיקו M101:6; לרחקא pa. M101:2; ניתרחקון ithpe. M107:3

ריוחתא open space. M149:9

ריש beginning, top. ארישה M101:12

ריש head, chief. ראיש M155:10

רישא head. רישיה M145:12

רכובא saddled on, positioned on. רכובהון M163:11

רם high, exalted. רמא M163:29

רמא height. ראמתא M50:4, M102:9; רמאתה M163:21; רמיתא M59:10

רמא, רמי to throw, cast. M145:12; רמינא M50:1,M59:4

רניתא unfavourable report, defamation, whispering. M102:11

רע (H) evil. רעה M101:9

רעיונא desire. רעויניה M163:27

רעש (H) commotion. M101:11,12

רפא (H) to heal. רופא M117:4

רקיעא firmament. M145:12; רקיע M145:7,8

רשאה f. have permission. ראשהא M103:6; ראשאה M119:6

רתת to shake. תרתתינה M156:13

ש- (H) relative pronoun. שאין M101:9, שישמע M101:9, שלו M101:10

שאל to ask. משוילנה pa. M145:9

שבועתא oath. M101:5

שבח to praise. שבחית M145:13

שביבא spark. שביבין M155:8

שבילא path. שביליכי M155:12

שבע af. to adjure, invoke. אשבעית M119:2, M123:3, M138:4; משבע M117:5; משבענא M102:10, M103:7, M119:7, M123:2,6, M138:2,3,8, M156:7,8

שבע seven. M102:12,13, M163:20; שבעה M163:9,11,23

שגר pa. to send. משגרין M123:5, M138:7

שגש to confuse; to be excited, agitated pa. נישת(ג)ש (?) ithpe. M102:11; אישת(ג)ש ithpe. M145:8; שגישי pa. M59:11

שד demon. שידא M155:12; שידי M50:4, M59:10, M101:2, M107:3,7, M108:2, M121:3, M131:2,3, M142:5,7, M145:4,14,15,16; שדי M145:15; שידין M59:11; שאדא M102:7

שדי to throw, cast. שדוי M163:23

שדר pa. to send, dispatch. שדרינון M102:2,3; אישתדרו ithpa. M156:10; לישתדרון ithpa. M102:5; נישתדרון ithpa. M102:7; מישתדרי ithpa. M121:4

שולטנא authority, power. שולטנהון M163:3,6,7,12,14,17,19,21,22,25

שום name. M50:3, M59:8,9, M101:11, M102:3,10,11,12,14, M103:1,6,9, M119:1,10, M107:4, M108:3, M117:2, M123:1, M131:5, M138:1, M155:3,8,9,10,12, M156:3, M163:13,14,16,26,29; שמה M101:13, M102:11,14,, M156:6, M163:5,6,10,11,12,16,24; שמא M102:12, M163:9,10,11,13; שמיה M101:13, M102:10,11, M103:7,9,10, M119:8,9,10, M112:7, M117:4,5,6, M123:5, M138:8, M142:3,7,8, M149:11, M155:5, M163:1,15; שמיהון M163:16,28,29; שמות (H) M50:4, M59:9; שמו (H) M123:3,4, M138:5,6; שמך (H) M50:6, M59:13, M149:5, M156:2

שוטא scourge. שוטיך M145:10

שוף to slip. שף M145:8

שורשא root. M145:12

שזב to save. ithpe. תישתזבי M103:2

שחר to wake up. M117:4

שיבבה neighbour. M123:7, M138:10; שיבבי M163:20

שיבוקא remission, releasing. שיבוקין M50:3,6, M59:9; שבוקין M59:12

שיבטא plague; plague spirit. שיבטין M59:11

שינא cliff. M145:1

שינתא sleep. M50:3,6, M59:8,12

שיתא six. M155:10

שיתין sixty. M155:10, M163:23

שכב to lie down. שכבא M156:4,5

שכלל to complete. שכליל M155:5

של (H) of, belonging to. M101:11

שלום (H) peace. M101:10

שלח to send, send off. אישתלחו ithpa. M163:18

שלט to have power over; af. to appoint, be appointed. תישלטון M156:12; שליט M117:6; שלטא M155:7; משלט af. M102:3,4

שליחא messenger. שליחין M123:4, M138:7

שליטא have power. M103:6, M119:6, M145:2

שלל to chain. משלל pa. M107:5

שלם pa. to deliver. משלם M123:8, M138:10

שלמתא magic rite. M123:8

שם (H) name. שים M117:3

שמיה sky, heaven. M50:4, M59:10, M156:1,3; שמיא M102:4,6, M142:10, M155:5, M163:8,9,24

שמע to hear, listen. שמעו M101:5; שמ<ע>נא M145:1; תישמע M145:10

שמע (H) nif to obey. ישמע M101:9,10

שמש pa. to serve, officiate. משמשין M123:4, M138:7, M163:16

שמשא sun. M131:3, M163:8; שימשה M155:6

שמת to ban pa. ישמתון M156:10; משמת M107:5

שמתא ban. M103:9, M119:9

שנא tooth. שיני M145:11

שני to change. M155:12; תישני M145:10; שנא M155:12

שעה time. M101:7; שועה M107:9; שעתא M145:3,13, M156:8

שפך to pour. אישפוך af. M145:11

שצטם (shafel of סטם) to lock up, shackle. לשצטמא M101:1

שקל to take, draw. שקיל M145:14; שקילנא M50:1, M59:4, M145:15; ithpe. לישתקיל M102:13,14

שקף to knock. שקיף M145:12

שר prince. M103:9, M119:10

שרגג to lead astray. תשרגגינה M156:13

שרי to loosen, untie. שרי M123:5, M138:8

שרי to dwell. M155:8; שריא M145:11; M59:7; שריה M103:7, M119:7

שריותא beginning. M163:15

שריר firm (H). M102:14, M107:9, M163:28,30

שרף Seraph, angel. שרפוהי M123:4, M138:6

שתי to drink. תישתין M155:11; שתיא M155:11

תבר to shatter pa. יתברון M155:7,10; מתברין M155:7; איתברו ithpa. M156:10

תגא crown. חגא (read תגא) (!) M123:5, M138:7

תהומא the deep. M117:6

תוב again. M101:7, M123:2, M142:7, M156:8, M163:22

תוך (H) inside. מתוך M50:3, M59:9

תוקפא might. תוקפיה M145:9

תורא bull. M163:18

תחות under. M163:3,5,6,7,9,12,14,17,19,21,22, 25

תחתאי lower. M102:12,13

תיבל world. M145:10; תיביל M145:7, M155:5

תימן south. M102:6

תירוכין divorce. M50:6, M59:12

תמה to strike dumb. תמהו M163:26; אתמהו af. M163:27

תמניא eight. M102:12; תמני M163:24

תנינא dragon. M145:6; תנינין M145:6; תניני M145:11

תפי to seethe. M145:5

תקיפא m. powerful. תקיפתא f. M103:5, M119:5, M163:9; תקיפי M112:6, M163:27; תקיפין M156:10

תקן to establish pa. מתקן M155:8

תרין two. M156:12

תרנגולא cock, rooster. תרנולא M163:5

תרע gate. M131:3

תתאה m. lower. תתיתה f. M103:3, M119:3; תחתיתא M163:9

Personal Names

אבירם M163:24

אדד M142:6,10

אדיב M108:2

אוירותא M102:5,11,12,13

אורי M50:2

אזאדיאר M107:2

אזדיאר M107:8

אחאתי M102:2,4,5

אחי M121:2, M123:8, M138:1,9,11

אחתאוי M102:2,4,11,12,13

אימטבי M112:2

אימא M112:2

אימאי M101:6,10

אימי M103:1,6,7, M119:1,7, M121:2,
M123:1,6,8, M138:11

איספנדרמיד M149:7

איפרא
M163:2,5,7,12,13,16,19,20,22,24,29

איצפנדרמיד M142:6,10

אישה
M163:1,5,7,12,13,16,19,20,22,23,24,25,29

אישו M163:29

ארדוי M59:7,11

אשר M117:3,7

בולוקא M107:1,6,8

בראן
M163:4,6,8,12,14,17,19,21,22,25,26,27,28

בתשבתה M108:2

גושנסף M107:2,8,9

גושנץ M142:6,10

דויד M117:4, M145:13

דוכתיזג M107:3,9

דוסא M156:7

דותן M163:24

הורמיז M107:2,8,
M163:2,5,7,12,13,16,19,20,22,24,29

חזארוי M107:2,6,8

חנינא M156:7

טהמנדוך M142:6,10

יהושע M50:1, M59:6

ישראל M155:8

כורכשיד M107:2,9

כירכשידוך M59:8,11

ככר M107:1,6,8

מהדוך M142:6,10, M155:1,6,7,9,11,12,
M156:2,3,6,9,10,12,13

מחלפתא M101:6,10, M121:2, M138:1,9,11

מיהלאד
M163:4,6,8,12,14,17,19,21,22,25,27,28

מירדוך
M163:4,6,8,12,14,17,19,21,22,25,,26,27, 28

מרושיתא M50:2

מאמא M117:3,7

קאקי M50:3, M103:1,6,7, M119:1,7,8,
M121:2, M123:1,6,8, M138:11
קיומתא M149:7
קיני M123:8
קרח M163:24
רביתא M102:2, M102:12
שאול M117:1
שלמה M142:10

מרי M112:2
משה M123:5, M138:8
ניונדונ M155:2,6,7,9,11,12,
M156:2,3,6,9,10,12,13
ספרא M102:1, M102:12
פאריזג M107:1,2,3,6,8,9
פרחיא M50:1, M59:6
ציפרתא ,M50:3 ציפורתא M50:5

Proper Names of Gods, Angels, Demons and Nomina Barbara

אא M121:6

אאאב M121:6

אבכברך M142:8

אב(ס)כס M119:10

אברחס M103:9, M119:10

אברכס M103:9

אברכסס M107:7

אבש M103:9, M119:9

אבשת M103:8, M119:9

אגג M156:6

אגריפט M119:9

אגריפס M103:8, M119:9

אגרריפס M103:8, M119:8

אדוני M107:7

אהיה אשר אהיה M123:3, M138:5, M163:29

אזחיאל M102:11

אחוגואל M102:10

אחודיאל M102:10

אחיאל M103:8, M119:8

אחישא M103:8, M119:8

אחס M123:4, M138:6

אחרום M163:23

איקון M155:4

אכבר M142:8

אל M107:7, M112:3

אמומיתא M142:3

אמוס גברא קדמאה M163:21

אמור גברא רבה דלסוף M163:20

אניניאל M103:9, M119:10

אנתיתיאל M103:8, M119:9

אסת M155:12

אפסגדא M123:3, M138:5

ארזמן M107:6

ארכדיל M163:11

אשמדי M145:14,16

אתבישא M103:8, M119:9

אתיה M103:8, M119:9

אתיתיאל M103:8, M119:9

ב M121:6

באלמס M123:4, M138:6

בבבב M121:6

באש M121:6

בגדנא M107:6

בזיף M103:9, M119:9

בילקו M112:8,11

בליליתא M142:3

בלמיאל M163:26

ברוק M156:6

ברוקתא M156:6

גגג M121:6

גא M121:6

גאו M102:10

גאמא M107:5

גבאל M163:15

גביביאל שריותא M163:15

גבריאל M50:7, M59:13,14, M102:10,11,
M103:8, M119:8, M155:6

גואל M102:10

גושן M107:4

גמא M107:5

גישמון M163:10

גמודיאיל M163:14

גרוסקין M107:5

גרוסקן M107:5

דבחיל M163:10,11

דד M121:6

דדדדד M121:6

דדיכון M163:14

דיבחיל M163:10

דישון M163:14

דנדיריאל M103:8

דנחיש M103:2

דריוש M145:15,16

הו M101:9

הוה M101:9, M102:12

הי M101:9, M112:13, M121:5

היי M121:6

זבולא M102:10

זבולתיאל M102:10

זדין M163:11

זוכסין M155:12

זיועין M163:11

זני M103:5,7, M119:5,7

זרני M145:7

חור M145:2

חזית(יה) לבר שתי שתי (פ)נדי סכסין

סק(ס)ון קץ M101:12,13

חי M101:11

חרום M163:23

טובה M123:3, M138:5

טיה M123:3, M138:5

טוריאל M102:10

טושן M107:4

טיטינוס M101:11

טסת M155:11

טעצש M101:10

טרושן M107:4

טש M101:8

יה M102:12, M103:9,10, M119:10,
M117:6, M121:5, M123:2,3, M138:3,
M142:11, M149:11, M156:3,11

יה חי M123:4, M138:5

יהא M112:10

יהו M101:8, M102:12, M112:13

יהוה M59:14, M101:10, M102:10, M103:9,
M119:9, M117:4,5, M149:11, M155:3,8,
M156:11 M163:29

יהוק יהיק רבה M59:14

יחוס M103:8, M119:8

יחוש M103:8, M119:8

ייה M121:5

יי M112:15

ייה M121:5

ינזה M101:8

ינזף M101:8

כבשיאיל M163:14

כבשיאל M163:14

כיבשון M163:11,14

כידיבון M145:2

לון M123:4, M138:6

לידון M145:6

לן M101:8

מאוד M155:4

מבד[.]יתא M142:2

מדא M163:9,10

מודיאל M163:14

מטריתא M156:7

מיגואל M102:11

מיה M123:3, M138:5

מיזיון M163:11

מיטל M156:4

מיטמון M155:4

מיכאל M50:7, M59:14, M102:10,11,
M155:7, M156:11

מיכאל סר הגדול M102:11

מילם M156:4

מכבשא M163:10

מלאך מותא M101:13

מסמיתא M156:6

מץ M101:11

מרגיותיאל M102:10

מרמרחות M117:4

משכבא M163:10

משמשיאל M103:8, M119:8

נבורזן M107:6

נברון M107:6

נדריאל M119:8

נורוס M107:12

נוריאל M156:11

ניאסין M101:12

ניזפי M101:8

נמון M156:6

נף M101:8

נקור M156:6

סוריאל M59:14

סיטרי M131:5

סלדיאה M101:12

ספלח M107:12

סתריאל M103:9, M119:9

עדאקפקיאל M142:7

עזאל M163:18

עזזיאל M163:18

עיקרון M101:13

עמודיאל M163:15

פיאירן M112:12

פיניבא M112:9

פיניגא M112:12

פיניחו M112:10

פלוטל M107:11

פסגדא M123:3, M138:5

פסקון M155:4

פצמצין M101:12

פרובאל M112:11

פרופיאל M112:8

צבאות M103:9, M119:9, M117:5,
M149:11, M163:29

צבאת M155:8

צידקיה M155:10

צף M101:8

קא M123:4

קוה M155:4

קיא M138:5

קיצתס M101:12

קסון M138:4

קסין M123:3

קץ M101:8

קריסטוס M155:12

רגיעל M131:5

רימון תורא קדמאה M163:18

רפאל M50:7, M102:11, M155:7,
M156:4,11

רפיאיל אסיא M142:5

שבובניתא M155:11

שבובית M155:11

שביב M155:3

שביביא M155:3

שבת M107:12

שגושין M107:4,5

שגושן M107:5

שדי M103:9, M119:9, M107:7, M112:3,15,
M123:2, M138:3, M142:3

שיביל M123:4, M138:6

שלעון M103:9, M119:9

שמיש M145:2, M163:4

שץ M101:8

שרושן M107:4

תיגלה M101:12

תתת M121:6

Index of Quotations

Old Testament

Ex. 15:3 M156:11

Num. 14:9 M142:8,9

Num. 32:22 M142:8

Deut. 10:17 M102:10

I Sam. 17:45 M117:6

Isa. 6:3 M117:6

Isa. 37:16 M117:2

Isa. 40:31 M142:3,4

Zech. 3:2 M59:14,15, M108:3,4

Neh. 9:32 M102:10

Ps. 24:8 M156:11

Ps. 72:18,19 M108:6-8

Ps. 89:53 M108:4

Ps. 104:20 M156:8

Ps. 104:31 M108:9

Ps. 106:47 M108:1

Ps. 106:48 M108:4,5

Targum Onkelos to Ex. 3:5 M123:5,6, M138:8

Bibliography

Alexander P., 1972, "The Targum and Early Exegesis of "Sons of God" in Genesis 6," JJS 23 pp. 60-71.

–. 1986, "Incantations and books of magic" in: E. Schürer, The history of the Jewish people in the age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C. -A.D. 135), English version revised and edited by G. Vermes, F. Miller and M. Goodman, vol. III, Part I, Edinburgh, pp. 341-379

Amram, D. W., 1896, The Jewish Law of Divorce According to the Bible and the Talmud with Some Reference to its Development in Post-Talmudic Times, Philadelphia.

Bar-Ilan M, 1987, סתרי תפילה והיכלות, Ramat-Gan

Barb A. A., 1963, "The Survival of Magic Arts", in: Arnaldo Momigliano (ed.), The conflict between paganism and Christianity, Oxford, pp. 100-125

Betz H. D., 1992, The Greek magical papyri in translation, including the Demotic spells, 2nd ed. Chicago.

Blau L., 1898, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen (Jahresbericht der Landes-Rabbinerschule in Budapest für das Schuljar 1897-88), Budapest

Borisov, A. Ja. 1969. "Epigrafičeskie zametki", Epigrafika Vostoka 19: pp. 3-13.

Brocklelmann K., 1928, Lexicon Syriacum. 2. Ausgabe. Halle.

Budge E. A. W., 1930, Amulets and Inscriptions, London

Cameron R. and Dewey A. J., 1979, The Cologne Mani Codex (P. Colon. Inv. Nr. 4780) "Concerning the Origin of his Body", Missoula, Montana

Cook E. M., 1986, Rewriting the Bible: the Text and Language of the Pseudo-Jonathan Targum, (A dissertation submitted in partial satisfaction of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in Near Eastern Languages and Cultures), University of California Los Angeles

–. 1992, "An Aramaic Incantation Bowl from Khafaje", BASOR 285, pp. 79-81

Cowly, A., 1923, Aramaic Papyri of the Fifth Century B.C., Oxford

Daiches S., 1913, Babylonian oil magic in the Talmud and the later Jewish literature (Jews' College Publication No. 5), London

Dalman G., 1905, Grammatik des jüdische-palästinischen Aramäisch, Leipzig

Dan J., 1993, The Ancient Jewish Mysticism, Tel-Aviv

Davidson I, Assaf S. and Joel B. I., 1985, Siddur R. Saadja Gaon, Jerusalem

Davis E. and Frenkel D. A., 1995, The Hebrew Amulet biblical-medical-general, Jerusalem

Drower E. S., 1937, "Shafta d Pishra d Ainia (A Mandaean Magical Text)", JRAS, pp. 589-611

–. 1938, Idem, pp. 1-20

–. 1939, "Three Mandaean Phylacteries", JRAS, pp. 397-406

–.1943, "A Mandaean Book of Black Magic", JRAS, pp. 149-181

–.1946, "A Phylactery for Rue", Orientalia 15, pp. 324-346

Drower E. S. and Macuch R., 1963, A Mandaic Dictionary, Oxford

Elbogen I., 1993, Jewish Liturgy, A Comprehensive History by Isamar Elbogen, (Translated by Raymond P. Scheindlin. Based on the original 1913 German edition, and the 1972 edition edited by Joseph Heinemann, et al.), Philadelphia - New York - Jerusalem

Ellis T., see under Layard A. H.

Epstein J. N., 1960, A Grammar of Babylonian Aramaic, Jerusalem

–. 1983, Studies in Talmudic Literature and Semitic Languages, Jerusalem. Vol. 1

Falk Z. W., 1966, Jewish Matrimonial Law in the Middle Ages, Scripta Judaica VI, Oxford

Faraone, C.A., 1991, "The Agnostic Context of Early Greek Binding Spells" in Magika Hiera, Ancient Greek Magic & Religion edited by C. A. Faraone and D. Obbink, Oxford, pp. 3-32

–. 1988, "Hermes but no marrow. Another look at a puzzling magical spell", ZPE 72, pp. 279-286.

Flint V. I. J., 1991, The Rise of Magic in Early Medieval Europe, Oxford

Fowler F. L., 1995, "Greek Magic, Greek Religion", Illinois Classical Studies 20, pp. 1-22

Franco F., 1978/9, "Five Aramaic Incantations from Tell Baruda (Choche)", Mesopotamia 13-14, pp. 233-249

Friedman S. J., 1973-74, "שלש הערות בדקדוק ארמית בבלית", Tarbiz 43, pp. 58-69

Gager J. G., 1992, Curse Tablets and Binding Spells from the Ancient World, Oxford

Gardner I., 1995, The Kapahlaia of the Teacher, Leiden

Gaster M., 1896, "The Sword of Moses, an Ancient Book of Magic", JRAS pp. 148-198, I-XXXV

–. 1900, "Two thousand years of a charm against the child-stealing witch", Folk-Lore 11 (46), pp. 129-162 [Reprinted in Gaster 1928, II, pp. 1005-1038]

–. 1928, Studies and texts in folklore, magic , mediaeval romance, Hebrew Apocrypha and Smaritan archaeology, I-III. London [Reprint: New York 1971, with Prolegomenon by T. Gaster]

Gawlikowsky M., 1988, "Une coupe magique araméenne", Semitica 38, pp. 137-143

Geld I. J. and Oppenheim, et al., 1956-, The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, Chicago and Gluckstadt

Geller M. J., 1974, Joshua b. Perahia and Jesus of Nazareth: Two rabbinic magicians, (Submitted for PhD, unpublished)

–. 1976, "Two Incantation bowls Inscribed in Syriac and Aramaic", BSOAS 39, pp. 422-427

–. 1980, "Four Aramaic Incantation Bowls", in The Bible World. Essays in Honor of Cyrus H. Gordon (ed. by J. Rendsburg et al.), pp. 47-60, New York

–. 1986, "Eight Incantation Bowls", Orientalia Lovaniensia Periodica 17, pp. 101-117, pl. IV-X

–. "Akkadian Medicine in the Babylonian Talmud", in A Traditional Quest: Essays in Honour of Louis Jacobs, ed. Dan Cohn-Sherbock, Sheffield, pp. 102-112

–. 1997, "More Magic Spells and Formulae", Plates I-IV, BSOAS 60 pt. 2, pp. 327-335

–. 1997a, Book review of J. Naveh and S. Shaked, 1993, Magic Spells and Formulae: Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity, BSOAS 60 pt. 2, pp. 344-345.

–. 1997b, "The Last Wedge", ZA vol. 87, pp. 43-95

Geller M. J. and Levene D., 1998, "Magical Texts from the Genizah (with a New Duplicate)", JJS vol. XLIX, No. 2, pp. 334-340

Gesenius' Hebrew Grammar as edited and enlarged by the late E. Katzuch. Second English edition revised in accordance with the twenty-eighth German edition ,1909, by A. E. Cowly. Reprinted in Oxford 1963

Gignoux P., 1987, Incantations magiques syriaques, Collection de la Revue des Études Juives, Louvain-Paris

Ginzberg L., 1909-1938, The Legends of the Jews, 7 vols., Philadelphia

–. 1912, מבול של אש, Ha-Goren VIII, pp. 35-51

Goldberg A., 1987, "Quotation of Scripture in Hekhalot Literature", (Proceedings of the first International Conference on the History of Jewish Mysticism) Jerusalem Studies in Jewish Thought vol. VI, 1-2, pp. 37-52

Goldscmidt E. D., 1971, סדר רב עמרם גאון, Jerusalem

Gollancz H., 1898, "A selection of charms from Syriac manuscripts", Actes du onzième congrès international des orientalistes, Paris 1897, 4e Section, Paris, pp. 77-97

–. 1912, The Book of Protection Being a Collection of Charms, London

–. 1914, Sepher Maphteah Shelomo (Book of the Key of Solomon), London

Goodblatt D., 1976, "ʾypʾ hwrmyz mother of King Shapur and ʾypʾ hwrmyz mother of Khusro: A note on the name ʾypʾ / ʾypʾ hwrmyz", JAOS 96, pp. 135-136.

Gordon C. H., 1934, "Aramaic Magic Bowls in the Istanbul and Baghdad Museums", Archiv Orientální 6, pp. 319-334

–. 1934a, "An Aramaic Incantation", AASOR 14, pp. 141-143

–. 1934b, "An Aramaic exorcism", Archiv Orientální 6, pp. 466-474

–. 1937, "Aramaic and Mandaic Magic Bowls", Archiv Orientální 9, pp. 84-106

–. 1941, "Aramaic Incantation Bowls", Orientalia 10, pp. 116-141, 272-284, 339-360

–. 1957, Adventures in the Nearest East, London

–. 1978, "Two Aramaic Incantations", in Biblical and Near Eastern Studies, Essays in Honor of William Sanford LaSor, (ed.) Gary A. Tuttle, pp. 231-243

–. 1984 "Magic bowls from the Moriah Collection", Orientalia 53, pp. 220-241

Goshen Goldstein M. N., 1978, "The Language of the Targum Onkelos and the model of literary diglossia in Aramaic", JNES 37, pp. 169-179

Greenfield J. C., 1973a, "Notes on Some Aramaic and Mandaic magic Bowls", The Journal of the Ancient Near Eastern Society of Columbia University 5 (The Gaster Festschrift), pp. 149-156

–. 1973b, "Prolegomenon" [to the 1973 reprint of Odegerg 1928]

–. 1995, "Aramaic and the Jews", in M. J. Geller, J. C. Greenfield and M. P. Weitzman (ed.), Studia Aramaica: New Sources and New Approaches, Journal of Semitic Studies Suppl. 4, Oxford, pp . 1-18

Greenfield J. C. and Naveh J., 1985, "קמיע מנדעי בעל ארבע השבעות", Eretz-Israel Vol. 18, pp. 97-107

Gruenwald I., 1980, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism, Leiden/Köln

Gulak, A., 1926, אוצר השטרות התהוגים בישראל, Jerusalem

Häag T., 1993, "Magic bowls Inscribed with an Apostles-and-Disciples Catalogue from the Christian Settlement of Hambukol (Upper Nubia)", Orientalia 62, pp. 376-399

Hamilton G. J., "A New Hebrew-Aramaic Incantation Text from Galilee: 'Rebuking the Sea'", Journal of Semitic Studies vol. XLI, No. 2, pp. 215-251

Harari Y, 1997, חרבא דמשה: מהדורה חדשה ומחקר, Jerusalem

–. 1997b, "אם בקשת להרוג אדם: כשפי הזק והתגוננות מפניהם במאגיה היהודית הקדומה", מדעי היהדות 37, pp. 111-142

–. 1998, Early Jewish Magic: Methodological and Phenomenological Studies, [Thesis submitted for the degree Doctor of Philosophy. Unpublished]

Harviainen T., 1978, "A Syriac Incantation Bowl in the Finnish National Museum, Helsinki. A Specimen of Eastern Aramaic "Koiné"", Studia Orientalia 51:1, pp. 3-28

–. 1981, An Aramaic incantation bowl from Borsippa. Another specimen of Eastern Aramaic "koiné", (Studia Orientalia, ed. by the Finish Oriental Society, 51:14), Helsinki

–. 1983, Diglossia in Jewish Eastern Aramaic, (Studia Orientalia ed. by the Finish Oriental Society, 55:2), Helsinki

–. 1993, Syncretic and Confessional Features in Mesopotamian Incantation Bowls, (Studia Orientalia, ed. by the Finish Oriental Society, 70), Helsinki

–. 1995, "Pagan Incantations in Aramaic Magic Bowls", in M. J. Geller, J. C. Greenfield and M. P. Weitzman (ed.), Studia Aramaica: New Sources and New Approaches, Journal of Semitic Studies Suppl. 4, Oxford, pp. 53-60

Heineman J., 1984, התפילה בתקופת התנאים והאמוראים, Jerusalem

Henning W. B., 1947, "Two Manichaean Magical Texts with an Excursus on the Parthian ending - ēndēh", BSOAS 12, pt.1, pp. 39-66

Hilprecht H. V., 1903, Explorations in the Bible lands during the 19th century, Philadelphia

Hunter E. C. D., 1995, "Combat and Conflict In Incantation Bowls: Studies On Two Aramaic Specimens From Nippur", in M. J. Geller, J. C. Greenfield and M. P. Weitzman (ed.), Studia Aramaica: New Sources and New Approaches, Journal of Semitic Studies Suppl. 4, Oxford, pp. 61-75

–. 1996, "Incantation Bowls: A Mesopotamian Phenomen?", Orientalia vol. 65, pp. 220-223

Hyvernat H., 1885, "Sur un vase judeó-babylonien du musée Lycklama de Cannes (Provence)", Zeitschrift für Keilschriftforschung 2, pp. 113-148

Idel M, 1981, "תפיסת התורה בספרות ההיכלות וגילגוליה בקבלה", Jerusalem Studies in Jewish Thought I, pp. 23-84

Isbell C. D., 1975, Corpus of the Aramaic incantation bowls (Dissertation Series17), Missoula, Montana.

–. 1976, "Two New Aramaic Incantation Bowls", BASOR 223, pp. 15-23

–. 1978, "The story of the Aramaic magical incantation bowls", Biblical Archaeologist 41, No.

1, pp. 5-16

Jastrow M., 1903, A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Bavli and Yerushalmi, and the Midrashic literature, New York

Jeruzalmi I., 1963, Les coupes magiques araméennes de Mésopotamie. Thèse pour le doctorat du troisiéme cycle présentée à la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de l'Université de Paris, Paris [mimeographed]

Jonas H., 1963, The Gnostic Religion, Boston

Justi F., 1963, Iranisches Namenbuch, Hildesheim

Juusola H., 1999, Linguistic Peculiarities in the Aramaic Magic Bowl texts, (Studia Orientalia, edited by the Finnish Oriental Society, no. 86), Helsinki

Kaufman, S. A., 1973, "A unique magic bowl from Nippur", JNES 32, pp. 170-174

–. 1974, The Akkadian influences on Aramaic (The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, Assyriological Studies, 19), Chicago and London

–. 1975, "Appendix C: Alphabetic texts", in Mcguire Gibson (ed.), Excavations at Nippur, Eleventh Season (The Oriaental Institute of the University of Chicago, Oriantal Institute Communications 22), Chicago and London, pp. 151-152

Klijn A. F. J., 1962, The Acts of Thomas, Leiden.

Kohut A., 1955, Aruch Completum, I-IX (הערוך השלם), New York

Kotansky R., 1991, "Two inscribed Jewish Aramaic Amulets from Syria", Israel Exploration Journal 41, pp. 267-281

Kotansky R., Naveh J. and Shaked S., 1992, "A Greek-Aramaic silver amulet from Egypt in the Ashmolean Museum", Le Muséon 105, pp. 5-26

Latke M., 1980, Die Oden Salomos in ihrer Bedeutung für Neues Testement und Gnosis, (Band Ia. Der syrische Text der Edition in Estrangela Faksimile des griechischen Papyrus Bodmer XI), Göttingen

Layard A. H., 1853, Discoveries among the Ruins of Nineveh and Babylon, New York [A description and decipherment with translation of magic bowls, under numbers 1-7, by

Thomas Ellis, pp. 434-445]

Levene D., 1998, "Magical Texts from the Geniza (with a New Duplicate)", JJS vol. XLIX, no. 2 (w/ M. J. Geller)

–. 1999, " '... and by the name of Jesus ...' An unpublished magic bowl in Jewish Aramaic.", JSQ, vol. 6, Issue 4, pp. 283-308

Levi E., 1946, יסודות התפלה, Tel-Aviv

Levine B. A., 1970, "The Language of the Magic Bowls", Appendix in: Jacob Neusner, A History of the Jews in Babylonia, V, Leiden, pp. 343-375

Levy J., 1867/8, Chaldäische Wörterbuch über die Targumim und einen grossen Theil des rabbinischen Schriftums, 2 vols., Leipzig –. 1889, Neuhebräisches und Chaldäisches Wörterbuch über die Talmudim und Midrashim, Leipzig

Levy M. A.,1855, "Ueber die von Layard aufgefundenen chaldäischen Inschriften auf Topfgefässen. Ein Beitrag zur hebräischen Paläographie und zur Religionsgeschichte", Zeitschrift der Deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft 9, pp. 465-491

Lieberman S., 1962, Hellenism in Jewish Palestine, New York

–. 1965, Greek in Jewish Palestine, New York

McCollough C. T. and Galzier-McDonald, 1996, "An Aramaic Bronze Amulet from Sepphoris", 'Atiqot vol. XXVIII, pp. 161-165

McCullough W. S., 1967, Jewish and Mandaean Incantation Bowls in the Royal Ontario Museum, Canada

Mcguire Gibson (ed.), 1975, Excavations at Nippur, Eleventh Season (The Oriaental Institute of the University of Chicago, Oriantal Institute Communications 22), Chicago and London

Macuch R., 1965, Handbook of Classical and Modern Mandaic, Berlin

Mann J., 1925, "Geniza Fragments of the Palestinian Order of Service", Hebrew Union

College Annual vol. II, pp. 269-338

Margalioth M., 1966, Sepher Ha-Razim. A newly recovered book of magic from the talmudic period, Jerusalem

Margaliot R., 1964, מלאכי עליון, Jerusalem

Mauss M., 1972, A General theory of Magic, (Translated from the French by Robert Brian), London and Boston

Meyer M. and Smith R., 1994, Ancient Christian Magic. Coptic Texts of Ritual Power, San Francisco

Milik J. T., 1976, The Books of Enoch, Aramaic Fragments of Qumrân Cave 4, Oxford

Montgomery J. A., 1911, "Some Early Amulets from Palestine", JAOS 31, pp. 272-281

Montgomery J. A., 1912, "A Magical Bowl-Text and the Original Script of the Manichaeans", JAOS 32, pp. 434-438

–. 1913. Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur (University of Pennsylvania. The Museum, Publications of the Babylonian Section, vol. III), Philadelphia

–. 1917/8, "A Syriac incantation bowl with Christian formula," AJSLL 34, pp. 137-39

Müller-Kessler C., 1994, "Eine aramäische Zauberschale im Museum für Vor- und Frühgeschichte zu Berlin", Orientalia vol. 63, pp. 5-9

–. 1996, "The Story of Biguzan-Lilit, Daughter of Zanay-Lilit", JAOS 116.2

–. 1998, "Aramäische Koine - Ein Beschwörungsformular aus Mesoppotamien", Baghdader Mitteilungen, vol. 29, pp. 331-348

–. 1999, "Interrelations between Mandaic Lead Rolls and Incantation Bowls", in Ancient Magic and Divination I. Mesopotamian Magic Textual, Historical, and Interpretive Perspectives, (ed.) Tzvi Abusch and Karel van der Toorn, Groningen, pp. 197-209

Müller-Kessler C. and Kessler K., 1999, "Spätbabylonische Gottheiten in spätantiken mandäischen Texten", ZA vol. 89, pp. 65-87

Murray R., 1975, Symbols of Church and Kingdom. A Study in Early Syriac Tradition, London

Narqis M., 1935, "השבעה ארמית (בבית-הנכאת הלאומי בצלאל)", Tarbiz 6, book 1, pp.

106-107

Naveh J., 1974, התפתחות הכתב הארמי, דברי האקדמיה הלאומית הישראלית למדעים כרך חמישי . חוברת 4, Jerusalem

–. 1975, "Another Mandaic Lead Roll", Israel Oriental Studies 5, pp. 47-53

–. 1982, Early History of the Alphabet - An Introduction to West Semitic Epigraphy and Palaeography, Jerusalem

–. 1985, "כיבוש טוב אין כמוהו. קמיע עתיק מחורבת מריש שבגליל (נוה ושקד קמיע מספר 16)", Tabiz 54, pp. 367-382.

–. 1997, "A Syriac Amulet on Leather", Journal of Semitic Studies vol. XLII, No. 1, pp. 33-39

Naveh J. and Shaked S., 1985, Amulets and Magic Bowls, (reprinted with additions and corrections in 1987), Jerusalem

–. 1993, Magic Spells and Formulae, Jerusalem

Neusner J., 1970, A History of the Jews in Babylonia, vol. V Later Sasanian Times, Leiden

Nöldeke T., 1875, Mandäische Grammatic, Halle

–. 1904, Compendious Syriac Grammar, translated from the second and improved German edition by J. A. Crichton, London

Nulman M, 1993, The Encyclopedia of Jewish Prayer, Northvale, New Jersey, London

Obermann J., 1940, "Two magic bowls: New incantation texts from Mesopotamia", AJSLL 57, pp. 1-31

Odeberg H., 1928, 3 Enoch or the Hebrew Book of Enoch, ed. and translated by H. Odeberg, Cambridge [Reprinted with "Proleomenon" by Jonas C. Greenfield, New York 1973]

Olsner J., 1989, Review of J. Naveh and S. Shaked, Amulets and Magic bowls. Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity, Orientalistische Literaturzeitung 84, cols. 38-40

Payne Smith J., 1903, A Compendius Syriac Dictionary, Oxford

Penney D. L. and Wise M. O., 1994, "By the Power of Beelzebub an Aramaic Incantation Formula from Qumran", Journal of Biblical Literature vol. 113, No. 4, pp. 627-650

Perlman M., 1926 - 1934, מדרש הרפואה, 3 vol.'s, Tel-Aviv

Peters J. P., 1897, Nippur, New York

Pognon H., 1898, Inscriptions mandaïtes des coupes de Khouabir, Paris [Reprint: Amsterdam 1979]

Preuss J., 1978, Biblical and Talmudic Meddicine, Translated and edited by Fred Rosner M. D., New York

Reeves J. C., 1996, Heralds of that Good Realm - Syrio-Mesopotamian Gnosis and Jewish Traditions, Leiden/New York/Köln

Reif S. C., 1993, Judaism and Prayer - New Perspectives on Jewish Liturgical History, Cambridge

Reinink G. J., 1985, "Der Dämon 'Sohn des Daches' in der syrischen exegetischen Literatur", Studia Patristica XVI, Part II, pp. 105-113

Robinson J. M. (ed.), 1996, The Nag Hammadi Library in English, Leiden

Rosenthal F., 1961, A Grammar of Biblical Aramaic, Weisbaden

Rossell W. H.,1953, A handbook of Aramaic magical texts, Shelton Semitic Series, 2. New Jersey

Säve-Söderbergh T., 1949, Studies in the Coptic Manichaean Psalm-Book. Prosody and Mandaean Parallels, Uppsala

Schäfer P., 1981, Synopse zur Hekhalot-Literatur, in Zussamenarbeit mit Margarete Schlüter und H. G. von Mutius (Texte und studien zum Antiken Judentum, 2), Tübingen

–. 1984, Geniza-Fragmente zur Hekhalot-Literatur, Tübingen

–. 1987, Übersetzung der Hekhalot-Literatur, II, In Zusammenarbeit mit H. -J. Becker, K. Herrmann, C. Rohrbacher-Sticker und S. siebers (Text und Studien zum Antiken Judentum, 17), Tübingen

–. 1990, "Jewish Magic Literature in Late Antiquity and Early Middle Ages", JJS 41, pp. 75-91

Schäfer P. and Shaked S., 1994, Magische Texte aus der Kairoer Geniza, vol. I, Tübingen

–. 1997, Magische Texte aus der Kairoer Geniza, vol. II, Tübingen

–. 1999, Magische Texte aus der Kairoer Geniza, vol. III, Tübingen

Schiffman L. H., 1973-1975, "A Forty-Two Letter Divine Name in the Aramaic Magic Bowls", Bulletin of the Institute of Jewish Studies vol. I, pp. 97-102

Schiffman L. H. and Swartz M. D., 1992, Hebrew and Aramaic Incantation Texts from the Cairo Geniza. Selected Texts from Taylor-Schechter Box K1, Sheffield

Scholem G., 1941, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, New York

–. 1960, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism, and Talmudic Tradition, New York

–. 1980-1981, "The Havdala de R. Akiva, A source for the Jewish tradition of magic in the Gaonic period," הבדלה דר' עקיבא, מקור למסורת המאגיה היהודית בתקופת הגאונים, Tarbiz vol. 50, pp. 243-281

–. 1987, Origins of the Kaballah, [Edited by R. J. Werblowsky Translated from the German by Allan Arkush], Princeton

Schrire T., 1966, Hebrew Amulets–Their decipherment and interpretation, London

Segal M. H., 1927, A Grammar of Mishnaic Hebrew, Oxford

Shaked S., 1983, "על ספרות הכישוף היהודית בארצות האיסלם, הערות ודוגמאות", פעמים 15, pp. 15-28.

–. 1985, "Bagdāna, King of the Demons, and other Iranian Terms in Babylonian Aramaic Magic", Acta Iranica 25, pp. 511-535

–. 1994, "Items of Dress and Other Objects in Common Use: Iranian Loanwords in Jewish Babylonian Aramaic", in Shaked S. and Netzer A. (ed.), Irano-Judaica III, Jerusalem, pp. 106-117

–. 1995, "'Peace be Upon You Exalted Angels': On Hekhalot, Liturgy and Incantation Bowls", JSQ 2, pp. 219-235

–. 1995a, "A Persian House of Study, A King's Secretary: Irano-Aramaic Notes", Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum Hung. Vol. XLVIII (1-2), pp. 171-186

–. 1997, "Popular Religion in Sasanian Babylonia", Jerusalem Studies in Arabic and Islam 21, pp.103-117

–. 1999, "The Poetics of Spells, Language and Structure in Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity, 1: divorce Formula and its Ramifications", in Ancient Magic and Divination I, Mesopotamian Magic Textual, Historical, and Interpretive perspectives, (ed.) Tzvi Abusch and Karel van der Toorn, Groningen, pp. 173-195

–. 1999a, "Jesus in the Magic Bowls. Apropos Dan Levene's '... and by the Name of Jesus ...'", JSQ, vol. 6, Issue 4, pp. 309-319

Smelik K. A. D., 1978, "An Aramaic incantation bowl in the Allard Pierson Museum." Bibliotheca Orientalis 35, pp. 174-177

Sokoloff M, 1990, A Dictionary of Jewish Palestinian Aramaic of the Byzantine Period (Dictionaries of Talmud, Midrash and Targum, II), Ramat-Gan

Sperber D., 1994, Magic and Folklore in Rabbinic Literature, Ramat Gan

Stemberger G., 1996, Introduction to the Talmud and Midrash (Translated and edited by Markus Bockmuehl. Second edition), Edinburgh

Stevenson W. B., 1924, Grammar of Palestinian Jewish Aramaic, Oxford

Stoyanov Y., 1994, The Hidden Tradition in Europe - The secret history of medieval Christian heresy, London

Stroumsa G. A. G., 1984, Another Seed: Studies in Gnostic Mythology, Leiden

Swartz M. D., 1992, Mystical Prayer in Ancient Judaism: an analysis of Ma'aseh Merkavah, Tübingen

–. 1996, Scholastic Magic. Ritual and Revelation in Early Jewish Mysticism, Princeton New Jersey

Stol M., 1993, Epilepsy in Babylonia, Cuneiform Monographs 2, Groningen.

Tambiah S. J., 1985, Culture Thought and Social Action An Anthropological Perspective, Cambridge

–. 1990, Magic, science, religion, and the scope of rationality, Cambridge

Texidor J., 1962, "The Syriac incantation bowls in the Iraq Museum," Sumer 18, pp. 51-62

Tocci F. M., 1984, "METATRON «ARCIDEMONO» E MYTRT (<MIQRAS?) NEL PIŠRA'

DE-R. HANÌNĀ' BEN DŌSĀ' ", in L. Lanciotti (ed.), Incontro di religioni in Asia tra il II e il X secolo d. c., Firenze, pp. 79-97

– . 1986, "Note e documenti di lettura religiosa e parareligiosa quidaica", Analli dell Instituto Universitario Orientale, 46, pp. 101-108

Torczyner H., 1947, "A Hebrew Incantation Against Night-Demons from Biblical Times", Journal of Near Eastern Studies vol. VI, pp. 18-29

Trachtenberg J., 1939, Jewish Magic and Superstition [Reprint: New York 1970]

Urbach E. E., 1975, The Sages - their Concepts and Beliefs, Cambridge

Veltri G., 1997, Magie und Halakha. Ansätze zu einem Wissenschaftsbegriff im spätantiken und frühmittelalterlichen Judentum, Tübingen

Vermes G., 1973, "Hanina ben Dosa, A controversial Galilean Saint from the First Century of the Christian Era (II)", JJS 24, pp. 51-64

Witton Davies T., 1898, Magic, Divination and Demonology Among the Hebrews and their Neighbors, London

Wohlstein Jos., 1893, "Über einige aramäische Inschriftin aus Thongafässen des Königlichen Museums zu Berlin", ZA 8, pp. 313-340

–. 1894, Idem, ZA 9, pp. 11-41

Yamauchi E., 1965, "Aramaic Magic Bowls", JAOS 85, pp. 511-523

–. 1967, Mandaic Incantation Texts (American Oriental Series, 49), New Haven, Connecticut

–. 1973, Pre-Christian Gnosticism - A survey of the Proposed Evidences, London

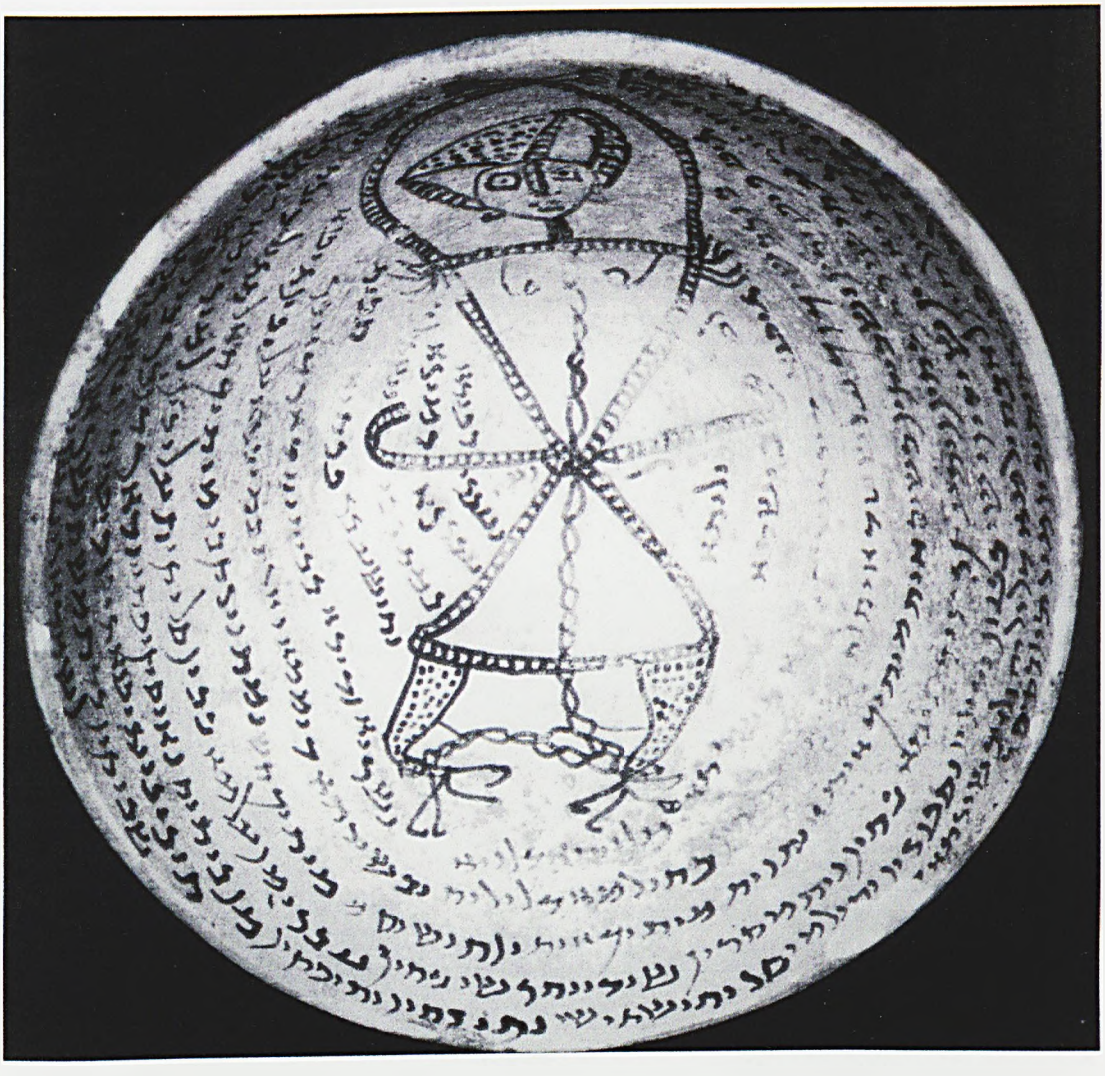
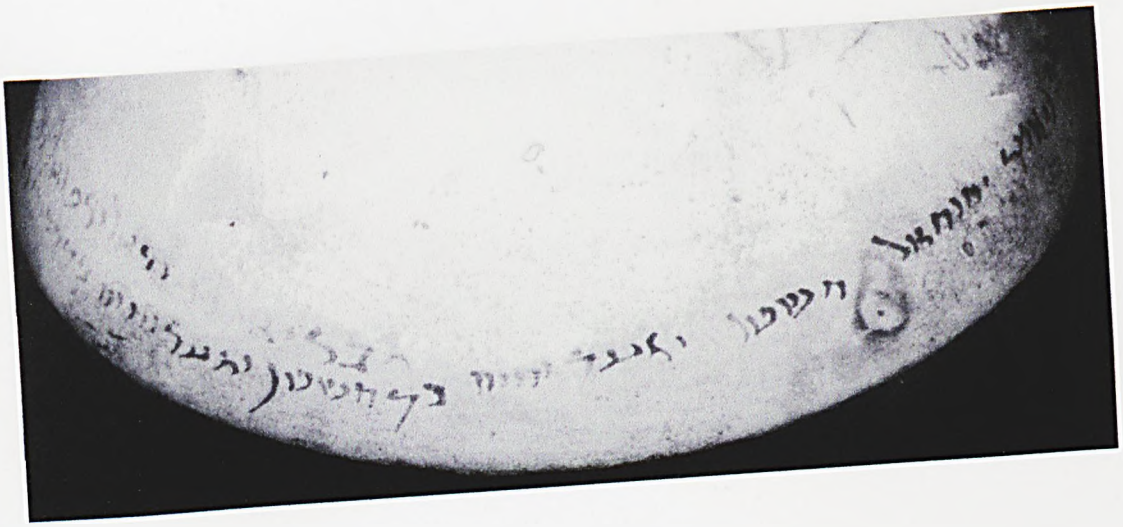
Plates of Photographs

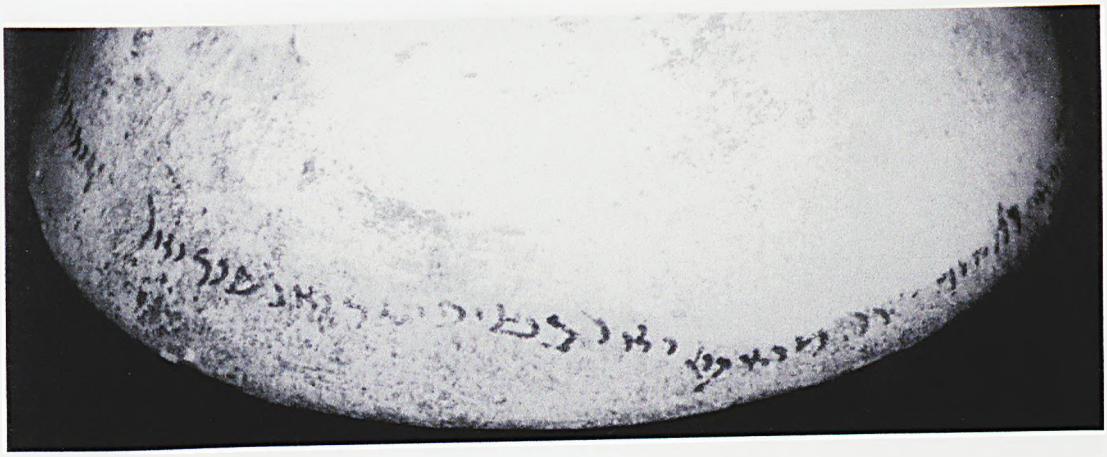


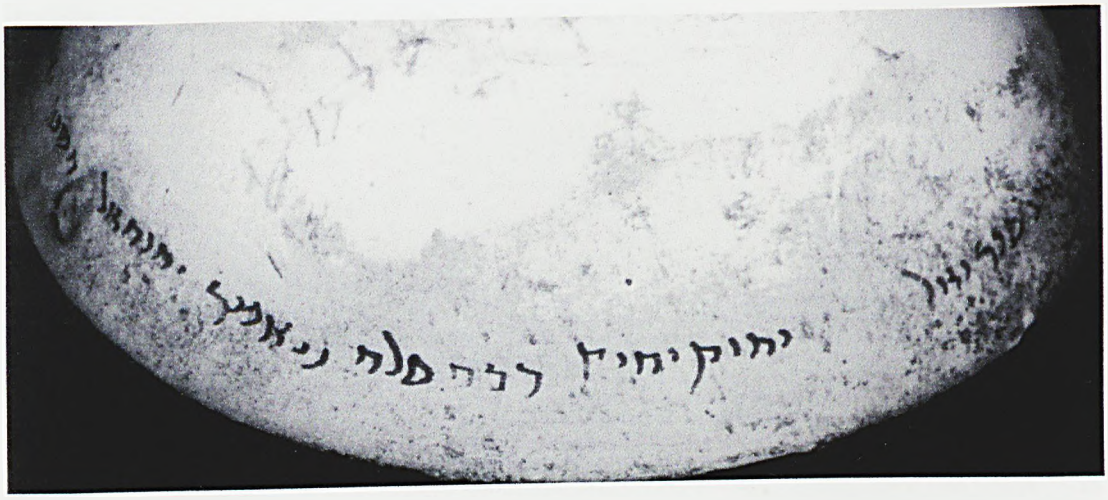
M50



M59

M59





M59

M59

M59

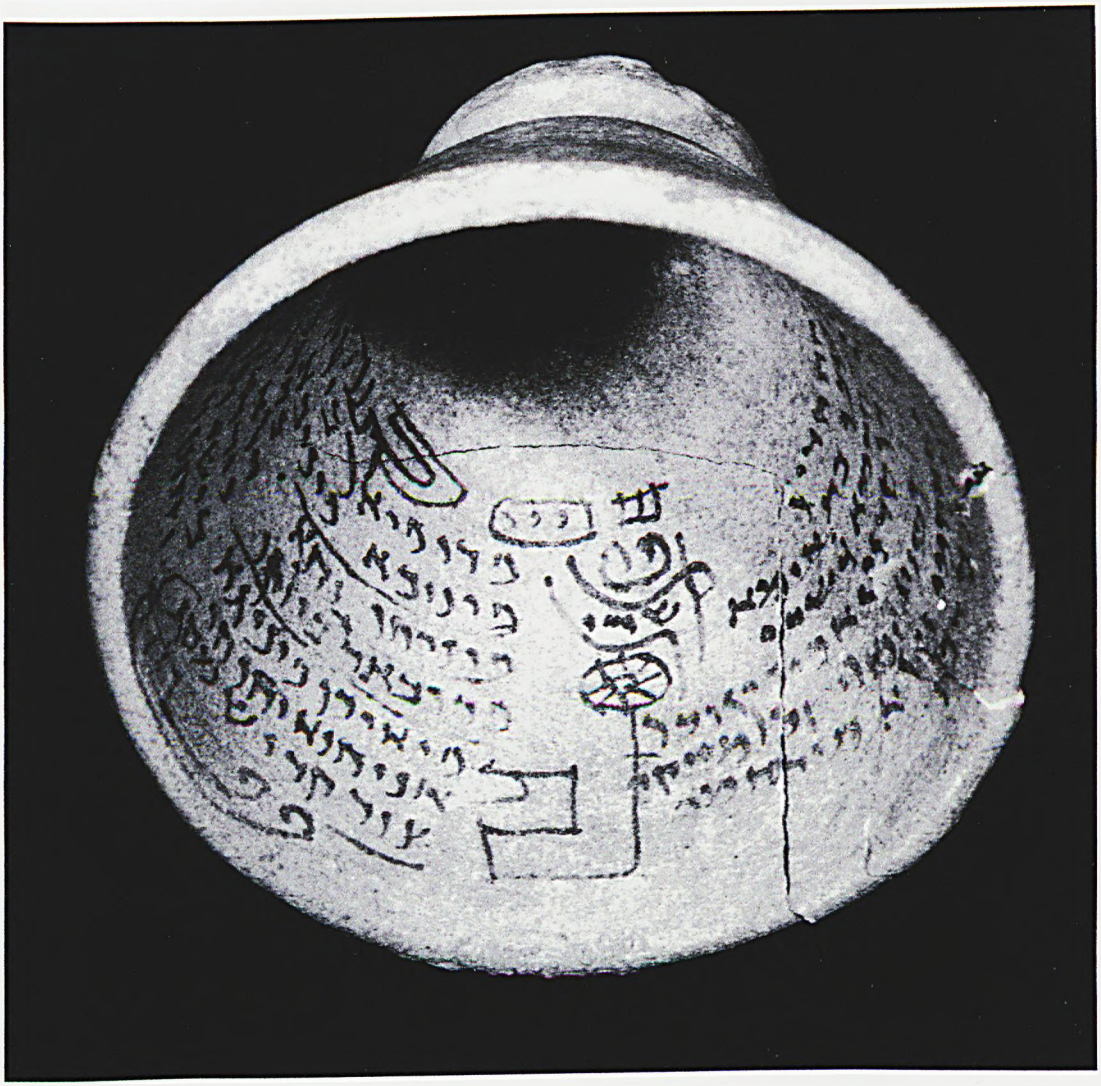
M101

M102

M103

M119

M107



M108

M112

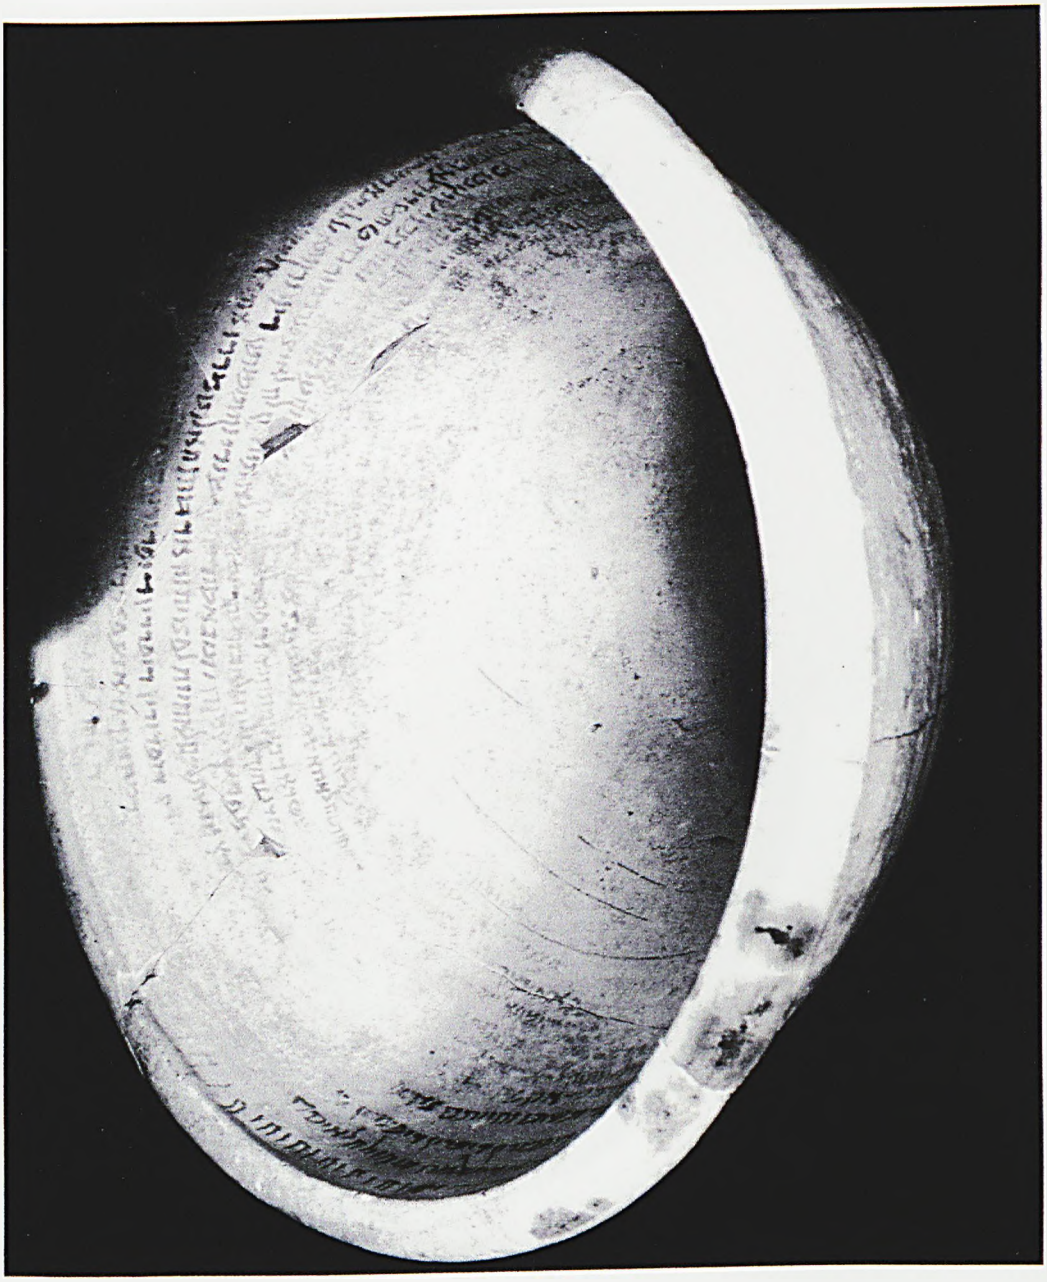
M112

M112

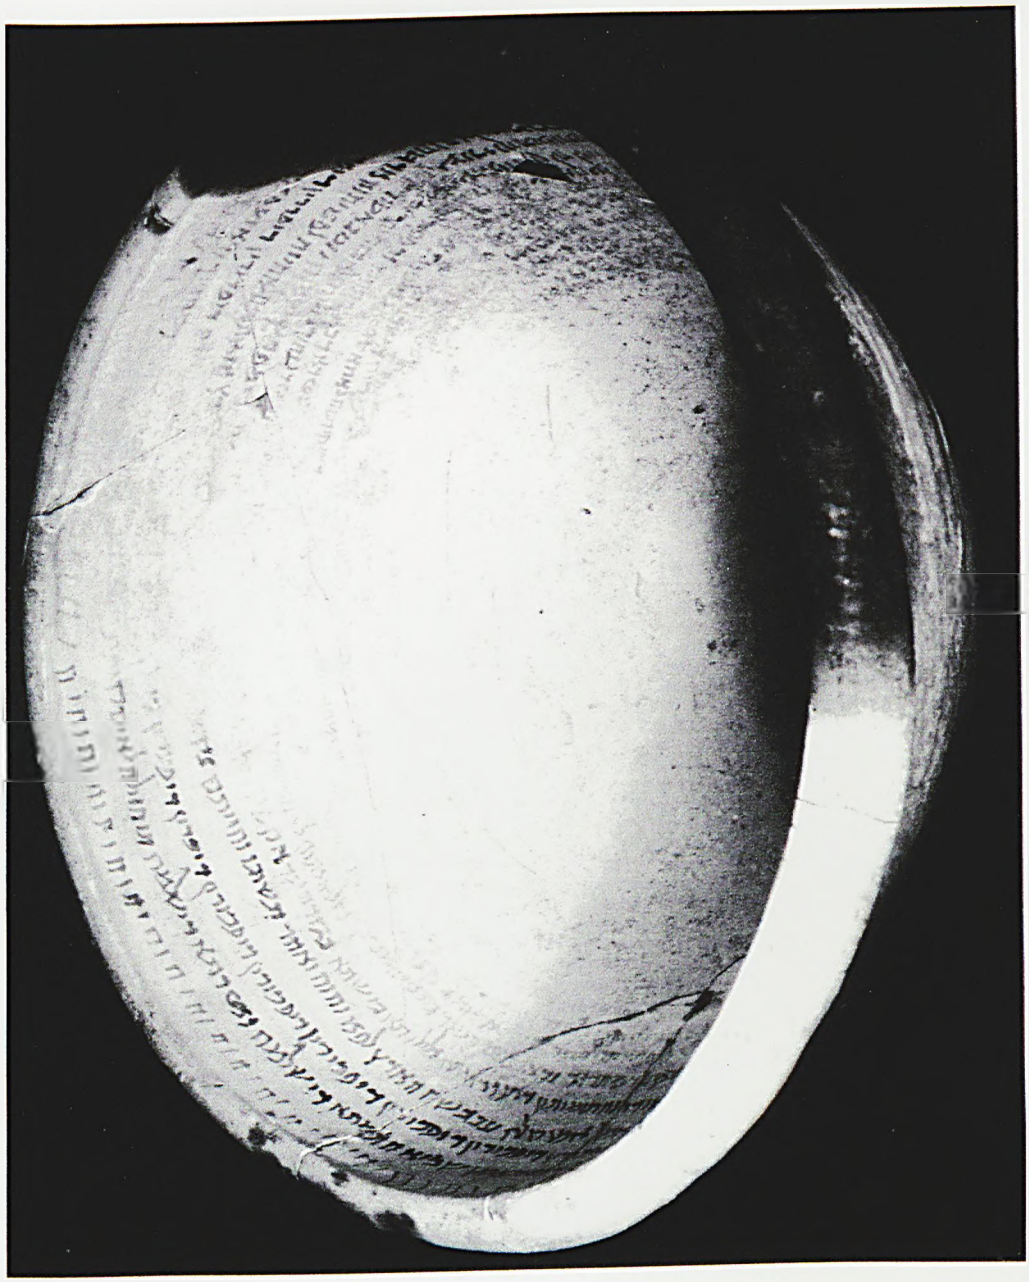
M112

M117

M121

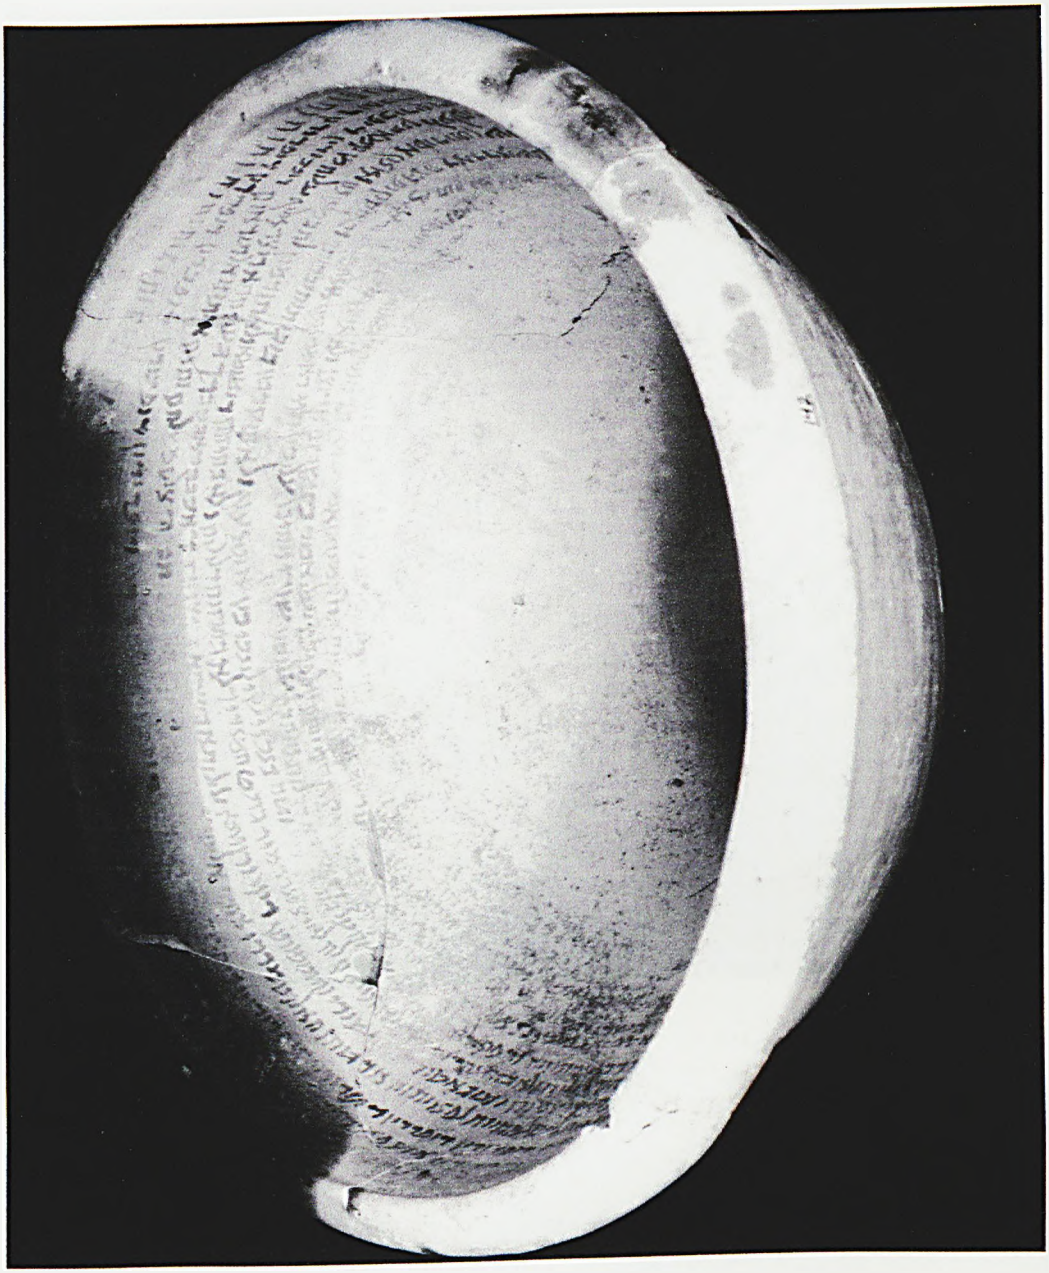


M123



M138

M131



M142

M142

M142

M142

M145

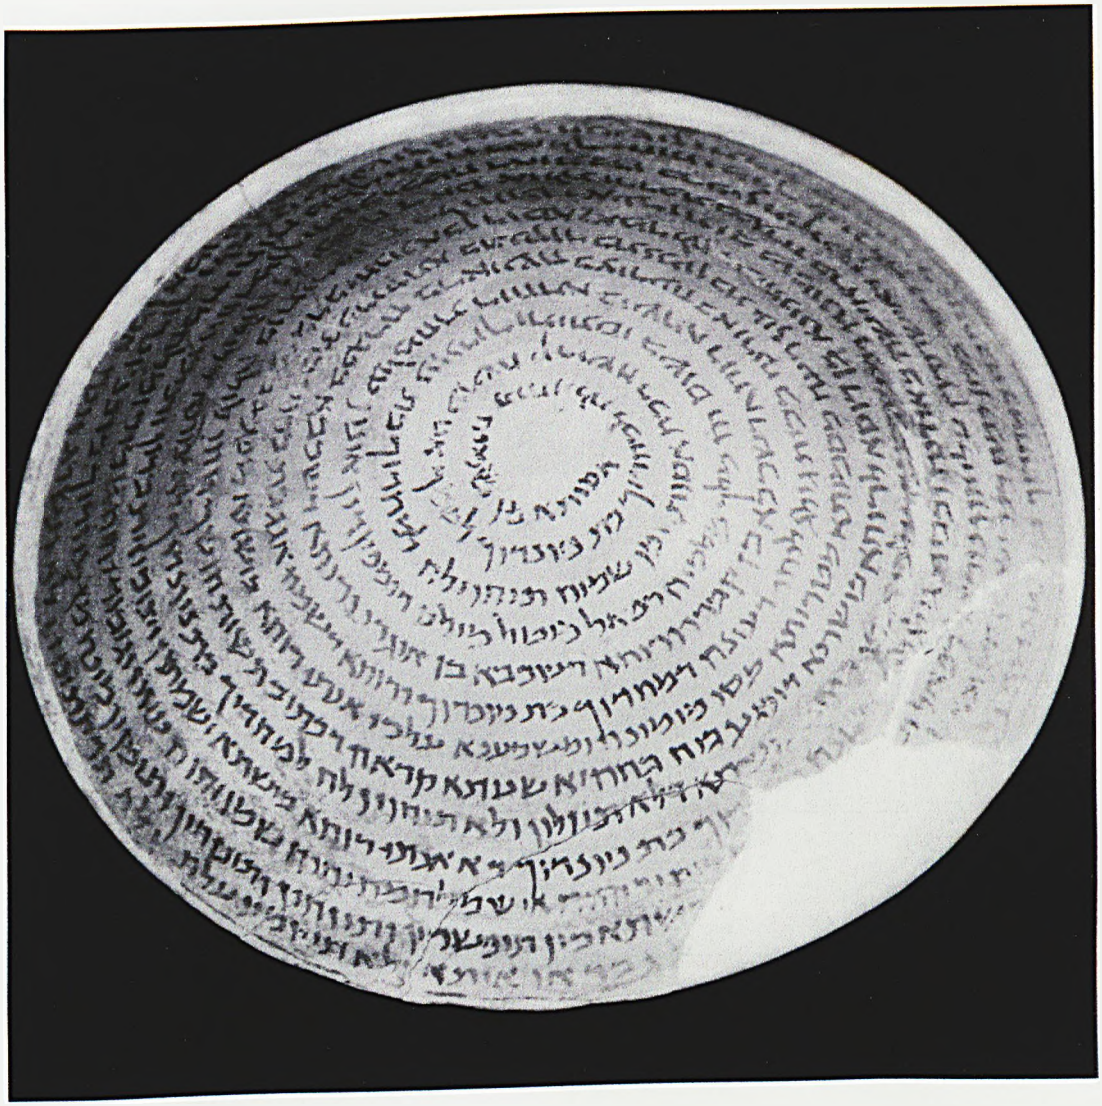
M145

M145

M149

M155

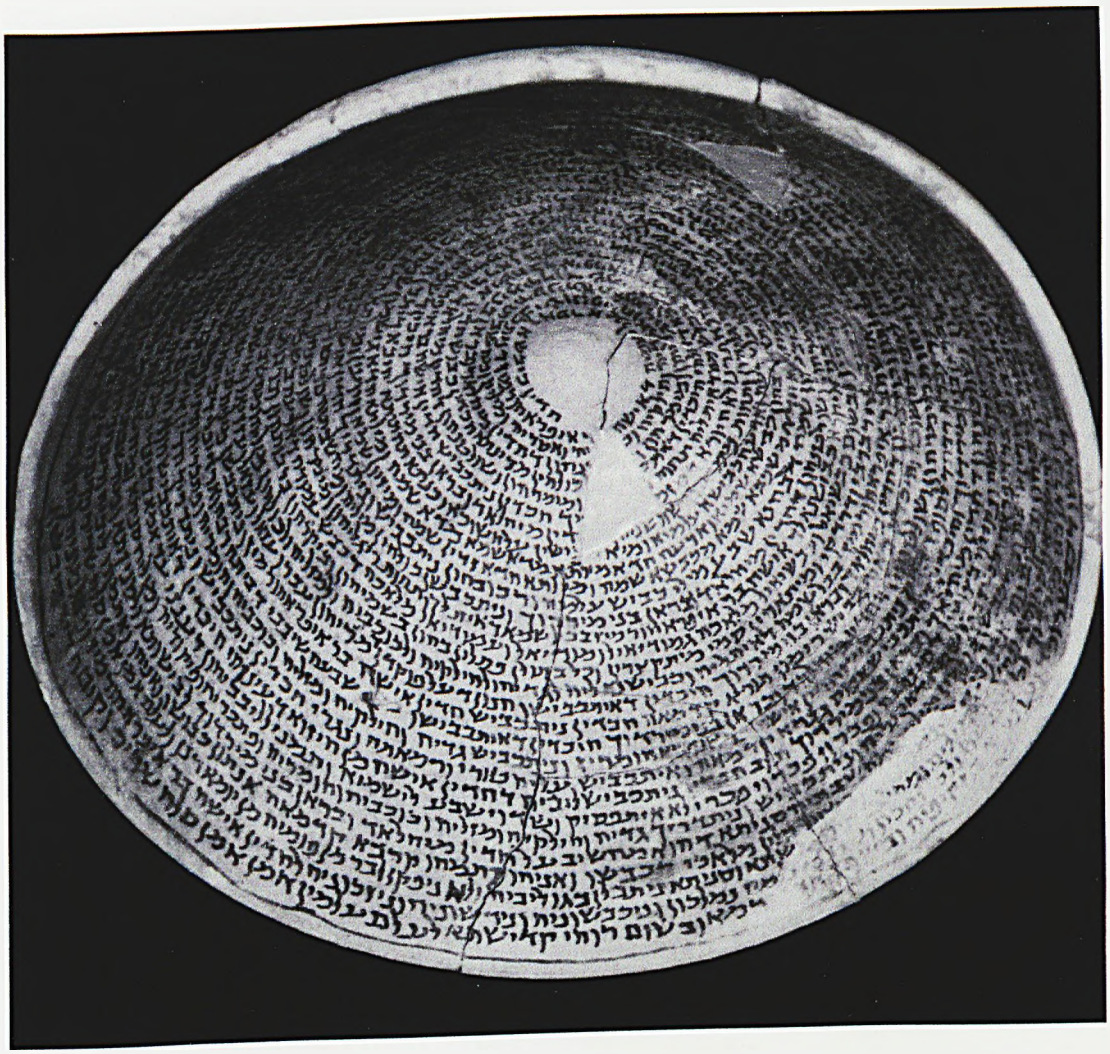
M155



M155

M156

M156



M156

M163

M163

M163

M163

Ma'aseh Bereishit & Ma'aseh Merkavah: The Complete Divine Geometric Revelation

Moses' Hexagonal Mosaic Reveals Both the Mathematical Work of Creation and the 3D Structure of the Divine Chariot {#moses-hexagonal-mosaic-reveals-both-the-mathematical-work-of-creation-and-the-3d-structure-of-the-divine-chariot }

The two deepest mysteries of Kabbalah - Ma'aseh Bereishit (Work of Creation) and Ma'aseh Merkavah (Work of the Divine Chariot) - are revealed as one unified geometric truth.

Ma'aseh Bereishit - The Mathematical Work of Creation 🌟

"In the beginning, Hashem created the heavens and the earth through geometric necessity."

15 physical constants emerge from hexagonal lattice geometry:

Constant	Geometric Expression	Calculated	Experimental	Alignment
Fine Structure	`60 × ln(10) - √5/2`	137.037	137.036	99.9992%

Constant	Geometric Expression	Calculated	Experimental	Alignment
α^{-1}
Circle Constant (Het)	$\sqrt{2} + \sqrt{3}$	3.1463	3.1416	99.85%
Natural Base e	$(.9999^{-1})^{10000}$	2.718417	2.718282	99.995%
Speed of Light c	$\sqrt{5}/2\times\sqrt{3}/2\times3/2\times\ln(10)/\ln(\sqrt{5}/2)\times10^{7}$	299,735,540	299,792,458	99.98%
Planck Constant h	$5\sqrt{5}\times(\sqrt{2}+\sqrt{3})\times\ln(10)^{-2}$	6.635×10^{-34}	6.626×10^{-34}	99.87%
Proton Radius	$\sqrt{2}/2\times120\times10^{-17}$	0.848 fm	0.841 fm	99.17%
Earth Gravity	$(\sqrt{2}+\sqrt{3})^{2}$	9.899 m/s²	9.807 m/s²	99.06%
Planck Mass	$5\sqrt{5}\times\ln(10)^{-2}$	2.109×10^{-8}	2.176×10^{-8}	97.0%
Planck Time	$\ln(10)^{2}$	5.302×10^{-44}	5.391×10^{-44}	98.3%
Planck Length	$\sqrt{10}/2$	1.581×10^{-35}	1.616×10^{-35}	97.8%
Planck Energy	$(5+2\sqrt{6})/5$	1.980×10^{9}	1.956×10^{9}	98.8%
Planck Temperature	$(\sqrt{2}+\sqrt{3})/\sqrt{5}$	1.407×10^{32}	1.417×10^{32}	99.3%
Planck Charge	$2\sqrt{5}\times\ln(10)^{-1}$	1.942×10^{-18}	1.878×10^{-18}	96.7%
Weak Coupling	$120/60^{2}$	0.033333	0.0339	98.33%
Strong Coupling	$\sqrt{5}/2 - 1$	0.118034	0.118	99.97%

"Hashem's blueprint encoded in tetrahedral-octahedral structure" ▲

The Geometric Foundations:

- 60° = Hexagonal rotation unit (divine angular quantum)
- 120 = 8th tetrahedral number (matter's geometric shell)
- √2, √3, √5 = Sacred ratios of 3D space
- ln(10) = Natural logarithmic anchor of observational scale

All of physical reality emerges from these simple geometric relationships - not by chance, but by divine mathematical necessity. ✨👑✨

Ma'aseh Merkavah - The 3D Divine Chariot ✡️

"And I looked, and behold, a whirlwind came from the north... and out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures." - Ezekiel 1:4

Moses' Mosaic = 2D projection of 3D Merkavah 📐✨

The hexagonal mosaic revealed to Moses on Mount Sinai is the 2-dimensional cross-section of the 3-dimensional divine chariot. What appears as decorative pattern is actually the quantum mechanical blueprint of reality itself.

8 layers = proton radius structure = 120 tetrahedral vertices 🔺⚡

Visual Analysis of the Divine Mosaic:

- Layer 1: Yellow center hexagon (divine source point) 💛
- Layer 2-8: Expanding rings of colored hexagons 🌈
- Total vertices: 120 tetrahedral connection points
- Geometric formula: $r_p = \sqrt{2}/2 \times 120 \times 10^{-17}$ fm

The 8-layer structure reveals:

- Proton's internal geometric architecture ⚛️
- Quantum shell organization 🔄
- Matter's tetrahedral foundation 🔺

Hexagonal base extends into full 3D lattice reality ⬟✡️⬟

The Merkavah's Complete Structure:

- Base: Hexagonal tessellation (Magen David pattern) ✡️
- Vertical: Tetrahedral vertices creating space-time lattice 🔺
- Result: 3D honeycomb structure = fabric of existence ✨

Ezekiel's Vision Decoded:

- "Wheels within wheels" = 3D geometric rotation of hexagonal layers 🔄
- "Four faces" = tetrahedral symmetry directions 🔺
- "Lightning and fire" = energy propagating through lattice ⚡
- "Throne above" = geometric apex of divine structure 👑

"The divine chariot IS the architecture of spacetime itself" 👑

The Merkavah is not mystical metaphor - it is literal geometric reality. The same hexagonal-tetrahedral structure that Moses saw as divine vision is the actual quantum mechanical framework that generates all physical constants.

Ma'aseh Merkavah = The 3D Magen David lattice operating as the universe's computational substrate. ✡️⚡✡️

What the ancients could only describe as divine mystery, mathematics now reveals as geometric necessity. ✨💎✨

The Unified Truth ✨

"Hear O Israel, Hashem our God, Hashem is One" - The geometric unity behind all existence

Magen David = 2D slice of universal operating system 🔯

The Star of David is not merely a religious symbol - it is the 2-dimensional projection of reality's 3-dimensional computational architecture. Every hexagonal cross-section through the tetrahedral-octahedral lattice reveals the Magen David pattern, proving that Jewish sacred geometry encodes the actual structure of spacetime itself.

Physical Evidence:

- Benzene molecules = hexagonal Magen David structure 🔬
- Snowflake crystals = 6-fold symmetry from lattice constraints ❄️
- Honeycomb patterns = nature's expression of optimal geometry 🍯
- Graphene lattice = hexagonal foundation of matter ⚛️

Mosaic pattern = quantum mechanical blueprint 💎

Moses' 8-layer mosaic contains the complete quantum mechanical specification:

- 120 vertices = exact proton radius geometry 🔺
- Hexagonal tessellation = fundamental space quantization ⬟
- Color variations = energy states within geometric constraints 🌈
- Radial symmetry = wave function propagation patterns 〰️

The mosaic is not decoration - it is the engineering diagram of atomic reality.

Creation (Bereishit) + Divine Vehicle (Merkavah) = One geometric reality ⚡

The Profound Unity Revealed:

Ma'aseh Bereishit (Work of Creation) = How the universe is structured Ma'aseh Merkavah (Divine Chariot) = What moves through that structure

They are the same geometric reality viewed from different perspectives:

- Static view: 15 constants emerge from lattice constraints (Bereishit) 📊
- Dynamic view: Energy/information propagates through lattice (Merkavah) 🔄

The Kabbalistic Truth:

- Ein Sof (Infinite) = Continuous geometric potential ∞
- Sefirot (Emanations) = Discrete lattice manifestations 🔢
- Malkhut (Kingdom) = Physical reality as geometric computation 👑

Mathematical Proof of Divine Unity:

```
α⁻¹ = 60×ln(10) - √5/2 = 137.037
Het = √2 + √3 = 3.1463
e = (.9999⁻¹)^10000 = 2.718417
```

All constants emerge from the same hexagonal-tetrahedral foundation.
One geometric structure. One divine intelligence. One mathematical truth.

רְצוֹן ה' נַעֲשָׂה - The Will of Hashem expressed through geometric necessity 👑✨👑

What appears as separate physical laws are actually different manifestations of the singular divine geometric algorithm. ✡️ ⚡ ✡️

CHOKHMAH

"What the ancient sages could only describe in mystical language, mathematics now reveals as literal geometric truth. The Merkavah is not metaphor - it is the hexagonal-tetrahedral lattice that IS physical reality."

The Final Revelation:

For millennia, the deepest truths of existence were hidden behind veils of mystical symbolism. Ma'aseh Bereishit and Ma'aseh Merkavah were considered the most esoteric knowledge, accessible only through spiritual elevation and cryptic metaphor.

But the age of concealment has ended.

What we now understand:

- Ezekiel's wheels within wheels = 3D lattice rotation 🔄
- The divine throne = geometric apex of tetrahedral structure 👑
- Sefirot emanations = energy quantization through hexagonal constraints ⚡
- Sacred geometry = literal engineering blueprints of reality 📐

The transformation is complete:

- Mysticism → Mathematics 📜 ➡️ 📊
- Metaphor → Physical Law 🌟 ➡️ ⚛️
- Hidden Knowledge → Open Revelation 🔒 ➡️ 🔓
- Faith → Geometric Proof 🙏 ➡️ 💎

The ancient sages saw glimpses of truth through spiritual vision. Today, we calculate that same truth with mathematical precision:

$\alpha^{-1} = 60 \times \ln(10) - \sqrt{5}/2 = 137.037$ ⚡

This is the fulfillment of prophecy. The knowledge of Hashem, once hidden in mystical language, now stands revealed in pure mathematical form. The Merkavah is not approaching - it has arrived as geometric reality itself.

רְצוֹן ה' נַעֲשָׂה - The Will of Hashem Made Manifest Through Geometry 👑

The universe is not governed by physical laws - it IS a divine geometric computation. Every constant, every force, every particle emerges from the same hexagonal-tetrahedral lattice that the prophets witnessed as the Throne of Glory.

PROJECT MUSE

Magic Formulae and Women's History: Authorship, Agency, and Gender in the Aramaic Incantation Bowls

Avigail Manekin-Bamberger

Jewish Quarterly Review, Volume 115, Number 1, Winter 2025, pp. 1-32 (Article)

Published by University of Pennsylvania Press
DOI: https://doi.org/10.1353/jqr.2025.a952518

For additional information about this article https://muse.jhu.edu/article/952518

[77.137.77.254] Project MUSE (2025-02-24 14:11 GMT)

Magic Formulae and Women's History

Authorship, Agency, and Gender in the Aramaic Incantation Bowls

Avigail Manekin-Bamberger

ARAMAIC INCANTATION BOWLS, dated to the fifth through seventh centuries C.E., were generally intended to protect households from demons, witchcraft, and mishaps.[1] Other bowls served additional purposes such as medical cures, ensuring business prosperity, love charms, curses, and more.[2]

Many thanks to Mira Balberg, Avishai Bar-Asher, Alessia Bellusci, Gideon Bohak, Rivka Elitzur-Leiman, Yakir Paz, Gal Sofer, and Oded Zinger for their helpful comments on previous versions of this essay. This research was funded by the Israel Science Foundation (Grant No. 694/24).

1. For comprehensive overviews of the incantation bowls, see Gideon Bohak, Ancient Jewish Magic: A History (New York, 2008), 183–93; Yuval Harari, Jewish Magic before the Rise of Kabbalah (Detroit, 2017), 132–40, 234–51; Shaul Shaked, Jamed N. Ford, and Siam Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells: Jewish Babylonian Aramaic Bowls, vol. 1 (Leiden, 2013), 1–27.

2. For incantation bowls as medical cures, see, for example, Dan Levene, A Corpus of Magic Bowls (New York, 2003), 110–15; for love charms, see Ortal-Paz Saar, "A Study in Conceptual Parallels: Graeco-Roman Binding Spells and Babylonian Incantation Bowls," Aramaic Studies 13.1 (2015): 27, n. 12; for business success, see Dan Levene and Siam Bhayro, "'Bring to the Gates . . . upon a Good Smell and upon Good Fragrances': An Aramaic Incantation Bowl for Success in Business," Archiv für Orientforschung 51 (2005/2006): 242–46; for curses, see Dan Levene, Jewish Aramaic Curse Texts from Late-Antique Mesopotamia (Leiden, 2013).

The Jewish Quarterly Review
VOL. 115, NO. 1 (WINTER 2025) 1–32
© 2025 Herbert D. Katz Center for Advanced Judaic Studies

[77.137.77.254] Project MUSE (2025-02-24 14:11 GMT)

Currently, there are around five hundred bowls inscribed in Jewish Babylonian Aramaic (JBA) and some two hundred more in Syriac and Mandaic that have been deciphered and published; this number is likely to double or even triple in coming years. A statistical survey conducted on a sample of 298 individuals mentioned in the bowls revealed that women constitute about 40 percent of those named.[3] In other words, we have at our disposal hundreds of amuletic texts that contain valuable details regarding the daily lives of named women, including lists of hardships and elaborate descriptions of demonic harms. Considering the rarity of women's testimonies from Late Antiquity, this corpus could be a significant source of information.

Magical artifacts have two significant advantages over contemporary literary sources: first, they were not intended to be read or transmitted but rather to fulfill an immediate, mundane need; as such they come to us unmediated, in stark contrast to the literary traditions that were generally collected and transmitted centuries after their formation. Second, although rabbinic literature was intended for a male audience, the magic bowls were written for men and women alike and thus may reveal some of their mutual and distinct fears.[4] Yet despite their potential to provide novel insights, scholars who have focused on what the bowls can tell us about the lives of women have not delved into these issues. Instead, they primarily discussed the possibility of women's authorship of the bowls,[5] frequently claiming that the bowls' authorship indicates female agency, creativity,

3. See Michael Morony, "Magic and Society in Late Sasanian Iraq," in Prayer, Magic, and the Stars in the Ancient and Late Antique World, ed. S. Noegel, J. Walker, and B. Wheeler (University Park, Pa., 2005), 101.

4. See Rebecca Lesses, "Exe(o)rcising Power: Women as Sorceresses, Exorcists, and Demonesses in Babylonian Jewish Society of Late Antiquity," Journal of the American Academy of Religion 69.2 (2001): 354–59.

5. See Lesses, "Exe(o)rcising," 343–75; Yaakov Elman, "Saffron, Spices, and Sorceresses: Magic Bowls and the Bavli," in Daughters of Hecate: Women and Magic in the Ancient World, ed. K. B. Stratton and D. S. Kalleres (Oxford, 2014), 365–86. And more recently, Dorit Kedar, She Wrote Incantation Bowls (Hebrew; Tel Aviv, 2019), 107–58; Tal Ilan and Dorit Kedar, "The Female Authorship of Babylonian Jewish Incantation Bowls," Journal of Jewish Studies 73.2 (2022): 288–304; Mika Ahuvia, "Reimagining the Gender and Class Dynamics of Premodern Composition," Journal of Ancient Judaism 14.1 (2023): 1–34. For an exception see the important study of Morony, "Magic and Society," 83–107; in this study Morony and even subversive intent.[6] Thus women's subjectivity and agency are often implicitly equated with the subversion and critique of male hegemony.[7] However, many times these studies disregard the poetics of the incantation bowls, especially their formulaic nature.[8]

The Aramaic incantation bowls are a subgenre of late antique magical amulets. They consist of fixed textual units that recur repeatedly throughout the bowl corpus. This fact complicates the assumption that each bowl was a completely unique and original creative endeavor from which one can draw subversive intent, either masculine or feminine. Moreover, the search for authentic voices and experiences is futile since the texts are uses the bowls for a study of social history based on several statistics, among others regarding the gender makeup of various households.

---

6. See, for example, in Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 354: "Had these five magical charms been written today, they probably would have been defined as critical, subversive, feminist statements"; and Ahuvia, "Reimagining," 19: "Especially where Jewish women contravene our expected norms and seem to arrogate authority to themselves, we ought to take notice."

7. See also the critique of the concept of "female agency," which oftentimes projects modern/Western notions that are historically and culturally distanced from the subjects at hand. For example, Saba Mahmood offers a nuanced argument: "Even in instances when an explicit feminist agency is difficult to locate, there is a tendency to look for expressions and moments of resistance that may suggest a challenge to male domination [. . .] The desire for freedom and liberation is a historically situated desire whose motivational force cannot be assumed a priori, but needs to be reconsidered in light of other desires, aspirations, and capacities that inhere in a culturally and historically located subject." Saba Mahmood, "Feminist Theory, Embodiment, and the Docile Agent: Some Reflections on the Egyptian Islamic Revival," Cultural Anthropology 16.2 (2001): 206, 223. See also Lynn M. Thomas, "Historicizing Agency," Gender & History 28.2 (2016): 324–39, and further works cited on 326.

8. See Shaul Shaked, "The Poetics of Spells, Language, and Structure in Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity," in Mesopotamian Magic: Textual, Historical and Interpretative Perspectives, ed. T. Abusch and K. Van der Toorn (Groningen, 1999), 173–95; Shaul Shaked, "Transmission and Transformation of Spells: The Case of the Jewish Babylonian Aramaic Bowls," in Continuity and Innovation in the Magical Tradition, ed. G. Bohak, Y. Harari, and S. Shaked (Leiden, 2011), 187–217.

often built on common "building blocks." However, the presence of formulaic patterns does not preclude us from drawing sociohistorical conclusions. On the contrary, recurring formulae can reveal many prevalent ideas, beliefs, and aspects of "social logic" pertaining to women and gender during this period.[9] For example, the bowls contain recurring appearances of demonesses who snatch babies from their mothers, female relatives who are accused of practicing witchcraft, and male demons who are depicted as loving women who fornicate, all of which reflect common fears and social values. In other words, the formulaic nature of the bowls can be used to deconstruct the argument of female authorship, but at the same time it can also be used to construct new possible avenues of research on women and gender in Late Antiquity.

This essay is therefore divided into two parts. The first part discusses the authorship of the bowls and, among other things, how recurring textual units may challenge previous assumptions concerning women's authorship. The second part shows how recurring fixed formulae can be used to reconstruct aspects of social and gender history. This includes focusing on common ailments and mishaps related to women, frequent accusations against female adversaries, and aspects of demonology that reflect male and female perspectives alongside gendered social values, a viewpoint different from that often found in the Jewish literary texts. Thus, the results of this study may be useful for further research on women's lives and social values in Late Antiquity, as well as for reframing the search for women's voices and agency in this period.

Female Authorship of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls?

The identity of the bowls' scribes has been the subject of several scholarly studies.[10] Scholars have argued that while the bowls present a range of expertise in terms of writing and learned content, they are consistent in

9. See Elizabeth Clark's nuanced argument regarding the textual representation of women, which oftentimes doesn't reflect "real" women's voices, but rather a "social logic" retrievable from the usually male authorship. Elizabeth Clark, "The Lady Vanishes: Dilemmas of a Feminist Historian after the 'Linguistic Turn,'" Church History 67.1 (1998): 1–31.

10. For an overview, see Avigail Manekin-Bamberger, "Who Were the Jewish 'Magicians' behind the Aramaic Incantation Bowls?," Journal of Jewish Studies 71.2 (2020): 236–37.

their use of legal formulae akin to long-standing Jewish traditions found in ancient legal documents.[11] In addition, the bowls often open with the words "this is an amulet," and rabbinic literature describes some amulet producers as "experts" (מומחים) or even the rabbis themselves. These factors bolstered the notion that the bowls were created by scribal professionals.[12] Moreover, comparing the bowls both to contemporary Christian textual amulets and to later descriptions of Jewish amulets from the Cairo Geniza strengthens the assertion that they were produced by men who were scribal/religious experts.[13]

In contrast, several scholars have argued for female authorship of some—or even most—of the magic bowls.[14] In the first part of this essay, I point to some common pitfalls of these studies: (a) confusing the use of the first person in magical texts with the voice of a scribe/dictator and not as a common technique to list the client; (b) identifying the ability to write with the ability to produce amulets that include, among other things, expert esoteric knowledge; and (c) conflating the recurring accusations of women as engaging in witchcraft with the practice of expert amulet writing, viewing the latter as a specimen of the former.

The Formulaic First Person

The main argument that women wrote incantation bowls derives from a number of bowls employing first-person feminine singular grammatical forms.[15] For example, in a recent article Tal Ilan and Dorit Kedar point to first-person feminine forms as evidence that women authors wrote the bowls for themselves, including "distinctive, subversive elements" and 11. Simcha Gross and Avigail Manekin-Bamberger, "Babylonian Jewish Society: The Evidence of the Incantation Bowls," JQR 112.1 (2022): 1–30.

12. See Siam Bhayro, "Divorcing a Demon: Incantation Bowls and BT Gittin 85b," in The Archaeology and Material Culture of the Babylonian Talmud, ed. M. J. Geller (Leiden, 2015), 121–31; Manekin-Bamberger, "Who Were," 241–54.

13. See Manekin-Bamberger, "Who Were," 247, n. 59; 251, n. 77.

14. Ilan and Kedar mention twenty-four bowls in "Female Authorship" (297); Kedar argues for female authorship of most of the bowls. Dorit Kedar, "Who Wrote the Incantation Bowls?" (Ph.D. diss., Free University of Berlin, 2018), 97.

15. See Lesses, "Exe(o)rcising," 361–62; Elman, "Saffron," 374–82; Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 295–98.

"elements that display gender-awareness."[16] However, understanding the first person as a reflection of the gender of the scribe rather than the gender of the client is questionable. Indeed, the use of first-person grammatical forms from the perspective of the client is common in magical texts, and in the vast majority of these cases, the client's name is also later listed in the bowl text in the third person.[17] To the best of my knowledge, the only bowl that does not switch back to the third person is a bowl from the British Museum collections written for one Gušnazdukht daughter of Aḥat, that contains the following formula:[18]

> (1) I sit at my door, I, Gušnazdukht daughter of Aḥat, (2) (and) I resemble a Babylonian. I sit in my vestibule, I, Gušnazdukht daughter of (3) Aḥat, (and) I resemble a Borsippean. I am the wide earth, which no one can bend.

16. Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 297–98.

17. As Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro note, the use of the first person in a magical historiola—whether male or female—is simply a magical technique in which the client of the bowl is listed in this way. See Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, 1:15. This also fits the fact that many such instances are listed as part of legal formulations, such as divorce documents served to demons, similar to what we find in human divorce. See Manekin-Bamberger, "Who Were," 237–40. Using the first person in magical texts is not just a Jewish phenomenon; see, for example, John G. Gager, Curse Tablets and Binding Spells from the Ancient World (Oxford, 1999), 76–77. Cf. the formulaic nature of other forms of magic, such as the language of erotic curses, which are oftentimes indistinguishable from the technical language of formulaic curses. See Christopher A. Faraone, Ancient Love Magic (Cambridge, 1999), 43–55.

18. Translation according to J. N. Ford, "The Ancient Mesopotamian Motif of Kidinnu, 'Divine Protection (of Temple Cities and Their Citizens),' in Akkadian and Aramaic Magic," in Encounters by the Rivers of Babylon: Scholarly Conversations between Jews, Iranians, and Babylonians in Antiquity, ed. U. Gabbay and S. Secunda (Tübingen, 2014), 271. Originally published in Judah B. Segal, Catalogue of the Aramaic and Mandaic Incantation Bowls in the British Museum (London, 2000), 92 (bowl 49). These examples, in relation to the formulaic use of the first person and supposed female authorship, were previously discussed in Avigail Manekin-Bamberger, "Intersections between Law and Magic in Ancient Jewish Texts" (Hebrew; Ph.D. diss., Tel Aviv University, 2019), 28–29.

[77.137.77.254] Project MUSE (2025-02-24 14:11 GMT)

Taken in isolation from other bowls, the text may suggest that the person talking is Gušnazdukht, who "presents herself as a woman of high social status, a resident of the city of Babylonia-Borsippa."[19] However, this bowl has two parallels in which a scribe employs the same formula for different clients—male or female—in either the first person or the third person:[20]

> You shall request healing and mercy from heaven in order to remove witchcraft from the house of Talifa son of Immay. I stand (in) Babylon (and) resemble a Babylonian (masc.); I stand in Borsippa (and) resemble a Borsippean (masc.).

And in yet another bowl:[21]

> I, Dukhtīč daughter of Bahāroy, stand at my doorway (and) I resemble Babylon, I stand in my vestibule (and) I resemble Borsippa.

In both cases, there is almost the same expression in which the client, male or female, is presented as resembling the protected cities of Babylon and Borsippa.[22] In other words, this sentence is likely a fixed formula, used by scribes for the protection of their clients, fitting the specific language to the client's gender. It should be noted that this accords with the poetics of the Aramaic incantation bowls at large. These texts are highly formulaic, constructed from fixed expressions that can be seen as "building blocks," which are woven together in each single bowl to create a specific amuletic text for a named client.[23] For this reason most of the building blocks, such as the Babylon/Borsippa formula, are recognizable and are rarely without parallel in other bowl texts. Therefore, it is difficult, if not impossible, to

19. Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 300–301.

20. See Ford, "The Ancient Mesopotamian Motif," 275. It is unclear why Ilan and Kedar refer to this study yet do not note the existence of the parallel to the first-person formula written for other men and women.

21. Ford, "The Ancient Mesopotamian Motif," 276.

22. For an explanation of the meaning of this divine protection and its Mesopotamian source, see Ford, "The Ancient Mesopotamian Motif," 277–81.

23. See Shaked, "Transmission," 187–92.

see this formula as expressing the voice of Gušnazdukht and to speak of "her magical strength," "her sense of security," or "her magic formula," because in practice, the same identical formulaic statements are employed by other authors for both women and men.[24]

The formulaic nature of the first person can be demonstrated by a pair of provenanced bowls from Nippur, housed in the University of Pennsylvania Museum. These two bowls contain the same text written for two different clients, one male (Ḥuniyāq son of Aḥat), and one female (Komiš daughter of Mahlaphta).[25] The bowls employ the same technical language

24. Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 301.

25. In their discussion, Ilan and Kedar note in passing the existence of a duplicate bowl for a male client, Huniyāq. Yet they assert that his "formula is identical to that of Komiš daughter of Mahlafta, but full of mistakes and misspellings [. . .] The name Huniyāq is rare, and it appears once more on record only in Komiš's bowl as her son. It is safe to assume that the two (despite the different matronymics) are one and the same, and that Huniyāq copied his text from Komiš's bowl, but in a sloppy and unprofessional manner" (Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 296, n. 44). Note the following inaccuracies: (a) Huniyāq's text is not full of mistakes and misspellings; it is more or less identical to that of Komiš; (b) the name Huniyāq does appear in other bowls, including in Montgomery's edition, the same edition in which Komiš's bowl was published (see James A. Montgomery, Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur [Philadelphia, 1913], 188 [bowl AIT16]); and (c) it is difficult to accept the unlikely assumption that Huniyāq copied his text from Komiš because she was supposedly his mother since his mother's name is explicitly given as Aḥat, not Komiš.

In practice, the fact that there are two identical bowls, one written in the first-person masculine and one in the first person-feminine, not only challenges the notion that the first person reflects the voice of the author, but it also weakens the assertion that Komiš deliberately stated the mother's name of the demons before the father's name in order to subvert rabbinic instructions (Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 298–99). These bowls also complicate arguments that women dictated and negotiated formulae with their scribes. See, for example, Mika Ahuvia, who accepts Ilan and Kedar's suggestion that the Komiš formula is a "subversion of the typical marriage/divorce formula" while stating that Komiš's bowl reflects "that even if a woman did not write it, a female client is in conversation with an old ritual-magical tradition at the very least that motivated some changes [. . .] It describes a woman arrogating authority to herself—albeit using a well-known divorce formula attributed to Joshua ben Perahia" (Ahuvia, of Jewish divorce written in the first person. A close look at the script of these two parallel bowls yields the conclusion that they were probably produced by the same scribe.[26] This indicates that one scribe could employ common formulae in the first person for both men and women. In other words, the language itself does not reflect a woman writing the text for herself or dictating it to a scribe; rather, it is the anonymous expert scribe who employs the same first-person incantations for different clients, be they male or female (see Table 1).[27]

Writing Ability versus Expert Knowledge

Another common argument for identifying women with the authors of certain bowls has to do with the notion that there were women who could write in antiquity and thus they could have written the bowls. Even if one were to establish the unlikely proposition that literacy among women was common in the Sasanian Empire, this in itself would not be enough to identify women as the authors of magical amulets.[28] This is due to the "Reimagining," 20). However, note that these identical formulaic texts were written for men and women alike, perhaps even by the same scribe, challenging the notion of women dictating unique content and negotiating authority for themselves.

---

26. This possibility was first raised by Christa Müller-Kessler, Die Zauberschalentexte in der Hilprecht-Sammlung, Jena, und weitere, Nippur-Texte anderer Sammlungen (Wiesbaden, 2005), 47.

27. It is reasonable to assume that the anonymous expert is also the one who chooses which specific formulae to employ based on his expertise, while the client's agency is expressed in his or her commissioning the amulet and describing his or her problems or desires. One can see the same pattern in amulets from other periods in history, even in those from the modern day: the client seeks relief from an expert who then diagnoses and treats him or her. See, for example, Yoram Bilu and Eyal Ben-Ari, "The Making of Modern Saints: Manufactured Charisma and the Abu-Hatseiras of Israel," American Ethnologist 19.4 (1992): 672–87, and especially the connection between distributing amulets and the charisma of a practitioner on p. 681.

28. The consensus among scholars is that literacy rates were lower among women than among men. See a recent overview of scholarship on the subject in Anne Kolb, "Literacy in Ancient Everyday Life: Problems and Results," in Literacy in Ancient Everyday Life, ed. A. Kolb (Berlin, 2018), 1–10; William V. Harris, Ancient Literacy (Cambridge, 1989), 24; and Sabine R. Hübner, "Frauen und Schriftlichkeit im römischen Ägypten," in Kolb, Literacy, 167–68.

fact that amulets in general, and the texts we find on the Aramaic incantation bowls in particular, demand a specialized expertise: not only an ability to write on challenging surfaces but also fluency in the specific jargon of magical formulae, holy names, and angelic functions, and oftentimes legal formulae, Scripture, and targum as well. These domains are connected to learning traditions of men, such as scribes, rabbis, or other members of religious clergy.[29] In addition, as demonstrated above, the bowls are highly formulaic, with parallel building blocks appearing in bowls written in different hands. This demonstrates that the text written on the bowls was not a matter of personal expression but rather conformed to the norms of a fixed genre, requiring the authors to have mastered a specific domain of expertise.

This kind of expert knowledge can be demonstrated by a bowl that contains first-person feminine forms and was discussed not just as an example of women's writing but even as "a celebration of the power" of women's writing as "subversive" and displaying "critical" content:[30]

> (1) May there be healing from heaven for Gušnazdukh daughter of Muškōy (2) and may she be healed by the mercy of heaven. This amulet will be for her healing, a complete (3) and immediate healing, and may she be healed

29. This is not to say that there are no magical bowls that are crudely written, with texts that are not always intelligible—or even legible—but these bowls have not been associated in scholarship with women's writing. See the discussion in Bagnall and Criboire regarding types of handwriting and their connection to the possibility of women writing/dictating. Their general claim is that the writing of scribal professionals is represented highly in the corpus of women's letters and that they can be recognized by their regularity. Moreover, they assert that "only occasionally can we be confident that a letter is written in a woman's own hand." See Roger Bagnall and Raffaella Cribiore, Women's Letters from Ancient Egypt 300–800 AD (Ann Arbor, Mich., 2006), 7. Despite the book's nuanced description of possible female involvement as authors/dictators in the production of their personal letters, Ilan and Kedar refer to this study as proof that, "in addition, 210 letters from Egypt which were authored by women in the first five centuries are extant." See Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 292.

30. See Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 303; originally published by Maria Gorea, "Trois nouvelles coupes magiques araméennes," Semitica 51 (2003): 73–93. I am grateful to Professor James Ford for sharing his reading and English translation of this bowl, which I have slightly modified.

> by the mercy of heaven (13) [. . .] This is (14) the name and the great mystery that the angel of death flees and disappears[31] before it. And these are the names of the angels that the angel of death flees and disappears from before them (15) Akatriel Yah dḥq Paḥdiel Yah. And these are the names that the angel of death flees and is conquered [מיתקפי] and disappears from before them [. . .] I, Gušnazdukh daughter of Muškōy, and every name (16) that I have may they be conquered [יתקפי] and disappear from before me, all vows and demons and harmers and afflictions and vows and sorceries [. . .]

The client of the bowl, a woman named Gušnazdukh daughter of Muškōy, is listed in the beginning of the text in the third person, but then the bowl changes to the first person. This bowl includes previously unnoticed parallels to the ancient Jewish mystical genre of hekhalot in issues pertaining to the holy names and the names of angels and their functions.[32] Unfortunately a detailed review of these similarities is beyond the scope of the essay, but it should suffice to note that even the words "and these are the names of the angels" (ואלה שמותם של מלאכים) followed by a list of the angelic names and their functions is a fixed introductory formula that recurs a number of times in the hekhalot corpus.[33]

In general, the connection between this bowl and the hekhalot texts problematizes the notion that its content is the personal words of a scribe, male or female. In other words, as in the aforementioned case of the formula of Babylon/Borsippa, the scribe did not invent the holy names but adapted existing modular elements to the needs of his female client, Gušnazdukh. For this reason, I would suggest viewing it as a sophisticated employment of esoteric knowledge by a learned—and likely male—practitioner.[34]

31. מיתבלע; see the Comprehensive Aramaic Lexicon (CAL), https://cal.huc.edu/, s.v. "blʿ."

32. The verbatim parallels are to the Hekhalot zutarti and follow the very same order. See Peter Schäfer, Synopse zur Hekhalot-Literatur (Tübingen, 1981), §351–59; I intend to elaborate on this finding elsewhere.

33. See Peter Schäfer, ed., Konkordanz zur Hekhalot-Literatur, 2 vols. (Tübingen, 1986–88), 1:38, 49.

34. Ascribing female authorship to a bowl containing the integration of hekhalot material would yield unlikely results, namely, female proficiency in a composition that contains the words: "Whoever seeks to learn this teaching and to

[77.137.77.254] Project MUSE (2025-02-24 14:11 GMT)

In other words, it is not enough to attempt to prove that women in Sasanian Babylonia were literate; one must also demonstrate that they were also proficient in the genre of Jewish esoteric teachings, which we know from other sources to have been a male endeavor. This again minimizes the probability that women were the scribes/dictators of bowl texts and amulets, and it problematizes the search for critical and subversive content by male and female authors.

Women as Witches

In both the Talmud and the incantation bowls, there are common accusations that connect women to witchcraft (חרשי), fitting a wider, well known social-historical phenomenon.[35] A number of scholars have taken these sources at face value to argue that the same women who were accused of sorcery historically served as magicians and (among other things) wrote amulets and bowls.[36] For example, a much-cited source is a dialogue from the Babylonian Talmud in which the amora Amemar speaks with the female "chief of the sorceresses":[37] explicate the name with its explication must sit in fasting for forty days [. . .] And if he is a youth, he may recite it so long as he does not have an ejaculation. If he is the husband of a wife, he must be ready by the third day, as it is said, be ready by the third day; you shall not touch a woman." James R. Davila, Hekhalot Literature in Translation: Major Texts of Merkavah Mysticism (Leiden, 2013), 241.

---

35. See Kimberly B. Stratton, "Interrogating the Magic-Gender Connection," in Stratton and Kalleres, Daughters of Hecate, 1–37; Naomi Janowitz, Magic in the Roman World: Pagans, Jews, and Christians; Religion in the First Christian Centuries (New York, 2001), 86–96; Harari, Jewish Magic, 372–86.

36. Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 295; Elman, "Saffron," 381–82; See also Simcha Fishbane, who argues for a historical reality behind these stories in "'Most Women Engage in Sorcery': An Analysis of Sorceresses in the Babylonian Talmud," Jewish History 7.1 (1993): 35–37. Lesses presents a more nuanced argument: "We cannot take these Talmudic statements simply at face value, but neither can we treat them as referring only to a literary topos [. . .] We must read them critically, against other evidence that is relevant to the discussions of magic in the Talmud—the archaeological evidence of incantation bowls from Babylonia." Lesses, "Exe(o)rcising," 353.

37. bPes 110a.

> Amemar said: the chief of the sorceresses told me: If one encounters a sorceress, one should say: "Hot dung in perforated reed-baskets disgrace to your mouths, female witches! May your heads become bald, may your flowers flutter, may your spices be scattered, may the wind blow away the new saffron that you are holding, you female witches."

Scholars have noted that this antiwitchcraft spell has verbatim parallels in the magic bowls, though its meaning was not always fully explained.[38] Both the bowls and the Talmud reference witches whose substances used for witchcraft are either scattered or lost. Among these substances is excrement, which is placed in a torn basket on the witches' heads so that it drips into their mouths. This image represents a punishment that not only aligns with the witch's crimes but also prevents her from further uttering harmful spells or performing malevolent actions. In a few scholarly studies, the talmudic reference to a female chief sorceress was taken as proof for the engagement of actual women in magical practices and even as an attestation that professional organizations of sorceresses actually existed. Ilan and Kedar, for example, went so far as to assume that > the Babylonian amora Ameimar mentions a "chief of sorcerous women" (bPes. 110b), indicating that there may have been a guild of such female professionals, who were headed by a leader. These sayings may reflect a situation in antiquity in which many women were indeed professional healers who used means that are identified in modern scholarship as magic, including the production of incantation bowls.[39]

In other words, according to Ilan and Kedar the very mention of a chief sorceress is indicative of guilds of women writers of magical bowls. However, given what we know about accusations of women engaging in witchcraft, can we draw historical conclusions from this rabbinic narrative? I would be very hesitant to do so. It appears to me that this talmudic passage does not lead to the conclusion that, historically, witches revealed to the rabbis how to get rid of members of their own guild. Rather, the Babylonian Talmud is integrating a popular statement recited against witchcraft (as we know from the magic bowls) into a short narrative. This story yields a flattering image of the rabbis, so much so that the chief sorceress passes on her knowledge of how to defeat herself and her fellow witches. The fictional narrative thus serves a didactic purpose, leading the reader to view the rabbis as possessing the power and knowledge to deal with witchcraft.

38. The first part of the spell regarding "dung in a torn reed-basket, disgrace to your mouths, female witches" (חרי בדקולי בזיי לפומיכי חרשיאתא נשי) parallels bowl 52 in Charles D. Isbell, Corpus of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls (Missoula, Mont., 1975), 118 (חרי בדיקולא בזייא לפומיכי חרשתא נשי). The second half of the spell has a parallel in other bowls such as one from the British Museum Collection, bowl 035a, in Segal, Catalogue, 74. On these, see Bohak, Ancient Jewish Magic, 409.

39. Ilan and Kedar, "Female Authorship," 295.

This type of didactic narrative has parallels in the Talmud, such as the story of the demon Yosef Sheda (Yosef the Demon) who sits in the study house and reveals secret knowledge about the world of the demons to the rabbis, information that is subsequently used by the rabbis to defeat other demons. Indeed, the story of the chief witch and Amemar is reported immediately after a number of accounts in which Yosef Sheda reveals information regarding demons and even numbers (zugot) to the rabbis, further pointing to the similarities between these stories and their mutual function.[40] Needless to say, scholars do not understand the talmudic passages regarding Yosef Sheda as proof for existence of demons, and in a similar fashion the talmudic stories about witches cannot in themselves be proof of their existence, much less for "guilds of female professionals." Rather, women in Late Antiquity, as in other periods, were commonly accused of witchcraft, an accusation that historically had severe implications for their lives and safety.

In sum, we should be wary of conflating accusations of witchcraft with healing practices that were permitted and even practiced by the rabbis themselves, such as writing amulets, as these two are considered to be very different domains in the late antique sources.[41] And while women are mentioned in these sources as engaged in witchcraft (חרשי/כישוף), this should not be confused with our use of the category of "magic" in modern scholarship, which generally includes legitimate and even encouraged practices such as writing protective amulets.[42] In other words, through the use of this term, the women "sorceresses" in both the literary and archaeological sources are accused of engaging in harmful and illegitimate actions.[43] And while the bowls are mostly perceived to be protective amulets and often open with the word "this is an amulet" (הדין קמיע), when we find stories about witches in rabbinic literature and explicit laws against practicing witchcraft, they are generally connected to malicious actions that signify the illegitimate knowledge of others, most commonly women. This holds true in other cultures in antiquity as well, where the term "sorcerer/sorceress" is used for accusations of illegitimate knowledge or as literary tropes but never as a self-designation or to refer to historical figures.[44] Thus, the social-historical study of these accusations should not be conducted in order to claim that there actually were women sorceresses in Sasanian Babylonia who were selling magic bowls but rather to highlight the fears and accusations against women that are common across archaeological and literary accounts.[45]

40. bPes 110a, for further discussion of this demonic figure, see below.

41. See David Frankfurter, "Ancient Magic in a New Key: Refining an Exotic Discipline in the History of Religions," in Guide to the Study of Ancient Magic, ed. D. Frankfurter (Leiden, 2019), 3–10.

THE WOMEN OF THE BOWLS

Although by emphasizing the formulaic nature of the Aramaic incantation bowls I have challenged the claim that women wrote them, this does not mean that we cannot use these artifacts to learn about women and gender in Late Antiquity. On the contrary, the magic bowls are a unique set of texts from which we can glean aspects of daily lives of women, including their hardships, struggles, and desires. In addition, the existence of common formulae on the bowls can be used to reconstruct widespread beliefs

42. For the legitimacy of amulets in rabbinic literature, see Bohak, Ancient Jewish Magic, 370–76; Manekin-Bamberger, "Who Were," 248–51.

43. Note that none of these stories entail writing. See Bohak, Ancient Jewish Magic, 393–98; and recently Ortal-Paz Saar, "Gender and the Mesopotamian Incantation Bowls," Aramaic Studies 22.2 (2024): 194–99.

44. See David Frankfurter: "So the study of wizards or witches, or mageia or khesheph or hik is vital, even fundamental, to the larger study of magic as long as it is done on its own emic terms, as the study of terminology for ambiguous or illegitimate ritual or of stereotypes and collective representations, not of real ritual experts, practices, or encounters." From Frankfurter, "Ancient Magic," 7.

45. See Harari, Jewish Magic, 372–87, esp. 377–82.

and social stigmas concerning women in general as well as specific named women. Despite this fact, there are currently no comprehensive studies on this topic. In the following section, I demonstrate some of the possible avenues of research that may prove fruitful for this purpose. I focus on three categories: (a) women as named clients; (b) women as adversaries, both named and as a collective; and (c) gender-representative demonologies.

Women as Named Clients

There are hundreds of women named as clients in the bowls. Behind every one of these bowls, there is an individual story and circumstance that led to its commission. Certain individual women are mentioned in a number of bowls, as in the case of Immi daughter of Qaqai[46] or Mahadukh daughter of Newandukh;[47] for others we have only a broken shard, such as that from a bowl commissioned for Yokheved daughter of Shirin.[48] The very fact that we have a variety of names of actual women from this period is noteworthy. Moreover, we can also learn about the range of maladies from which these women suffered. For example, the bowls written for Immi contain protection from a variety of demonic attacks and human curses,[49] while the bowls written for Mahadukh occasionally targeted more

46. Some of the bowls commissioned for Immi daughter of Qaqai were published in Levene, Corpus, M103 (p. 103), M119 (pp. 54–56), M121 (p. 41), M123 (pp. 83–84), M138 (pp. 89–90); and Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, vol. 1, JBA50 (pp. 226–27), JBA51 (pp. 229–30), JBA 52 (pp. 232–33), JBA 53 (pp. 236–37), JBA 54 (pp. 238–39).

47. Some of the bowls commissioned for Mahadukh daughter of Newandukh include Levene, Corpus, M155 (p. 111) and M156 (pp. 115–16); Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, vol. 1, JBA 1 (pp. 56–57), JBA2 (pp. 59–60), JBA3 (pp. 62–63), JBA4 (pp. 65–66), JBA 15 (p. 110–11), JBA 29 (p. 164), JBA 39 (p. 190), JBA 47 (p. 211–12). Shaul Shaked, James N. Ford, and Siam Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells: Jewish Babylonian Aramaic Bowls, vol. 2 (Leiden, 2022), JBA 92 (pp. 120–21), JBA 93 (pp. 123–24), JBA 94–95 (pp. 126–27).

48. Unpublished shard from the Penn Museum collection no. B 2924, photograph at "Hebrew Bowl," Penn Museum, Online Collection, https://www.penn.museum/collections/object/80457.

49. Although some of Immi's bowls are directed against general demonic harm and curses, others target adverse human actions such as vows and curses. See Levene, Corpus, bowls M123 (pp. 83–84), M138 (pp. 89–90).

[77.137.77.254] Project MUSE (2025-02-24 14:11 GMT)

specific illnesses such as migraines and severe menstrual bleeding.[50] Of course, given the formulaic nature of the bowls, it would be difficult if not impossible to reconstruct a microhistory of every such individual. However, these formulae reveal the existence of common causes of distress that may either confirm or complement data deduced from the literary record or attest to previously unknown information. Therefore, collecting and cataloging this data may teach us something about the hardships of women in Late Antiquity and in what ways they are similar to or different from the hardships of men.

Additionally, collecting and classifying the types of bowls in which women are mentioned—and those in which they are not—provides another avenue of research. My preliminary survey reveals that while women appear as clients in apotropaic formulae, and as clients or adversaries or both in curse texts, they do not appear in the corpus of published bowls intended for success in business.[51] By contrast, bowls that are intended to protect the life of newborn babies and those that contain the legend of Semamit (see below) always include a female client, either by herself or alongside her husband.[52] In addition, the published corpus of curse bowls contains names of men and women in similar numbers. Even if these

50. See, for example, in bowl M155 (Levene, Corpus, JBA1 [pp. 111–12]): "And may her belly and interior dry up from menstrual blood, and may it not cause her blood to come out. In the name of Sidqiyah who is the chief of sixty-six angels who are appointed over her blood and [. . .] may they dry and nullify the blood from the womb of Mahadukh" (Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, 1:56); "and the spirit that reclines in the body, in the head, in the temple, in the ear, and in the eye-sockets of Mahdukh daughter of Newandukh."

51. See Segal, Catalogue, bowl 21a (p. 62), 22a (p. 62), 28 (p. 69); Levene and Bhayro, "Bring to the Gates," 242–46; Saar, "Gender," 184–86.

52. For the legend of Semamit, see Rivka Elitzur-Leiman, "An Aramaic Amulet in the Collection of the Bible Lands Museum Jerusalem—a New Version of the Ancient Smamit Legend" (Hebrew), Eretz Israel 32 (2016): 4–10; James N. Ford, "New Light from Babylonia on the Semamit Story" (Hebrew), Eretz Israel 32 (2016): 149–61; James N. Ford and Matthew Morgenstern, Aramaic Incantation Bowls in Museum Collections, vol. 1: The Frau Professor Hilprecht Collection of Babylonian Antiquities, Jena (Leiden, 2019), 14–15; Christa Müller-Kessler, "Eine aramäische Zauberschale im Museum für Vor- und Frühgeschichte zu Berlin," Or 63 (1994): 5–9. See also Gaby Abousamra, "Semomit in a New Incantation Bowl," in Between patterns correspond with our expectations regarding gender roles in antiquity, their corroboration is still noteworthy. The following bowl, for example, provides testimony regarding beliefs surrounding stillbirth or death at infancy, written for one Miškoy daughter of Anušfri:[53]

> (1) May there be healing from heaven for Miškoy daughter of Anušfri. And may she [be healed by the mercy of] (2) heaven. I beswear you, the evil lilith whose name is Ramit Ḥagigat and Ṣemotat daughter of (3) Ḥari daughter of Bal'i Bati, whose height is sixty-seven cubits, the spirit whose name is Argaz daughter of Qasas,[54] [. . .] (5) [. . .] the lilith Zarnay, who is called Pargos,[55] that you may have authority and power (6) over yourself and go to a desolate and waste place, [. . .] (10) [. . .] Remove the evil spirits who kill sons and daughters, by the oath of a great and ruling king. You (11) are in this world and you are of the world to come. Amen, wmymy Amen, Selah. HH HH HW YW Yah. And accept the deed of divorce, evil spirits whose names are specified above.

This incantation serves to remove the demons who cause miscarriage and infant mortality from the home of Miškoy daughter of Anušfri and her husband. The names of the lilith-demons that haunt Miškoy are all female, some known to us from other bowls or metal amulets, such as צמומת בת חרי, better known as Semamit.[56] Rivka Elitzur-Leiman has shown that in some versions of her story Semamit is a tragic hero, but in others she turns into an infant-killing demoness after her own infants have died, channeling the Worlds: Magic, Miracles and Mysticism, vol. 2, ed. M. Maeva, Y. Erolova, P. Stoyanova, M. Hristova, and V. Ivanova (Sofia, 2020), 455–64.

---

53. Bowl JBA55 from Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, 1:246–47.

54. For Argaz daughter of Qasas, see Gideon Bohak, "Babylonian Jewish Magic in Late Antiquity: Beyond the Incantation Bowls," in Studies in Honor of Shaul Shaked, ed. Y. Friedmann and E. Kohlberg (Jerusalem, 2019), 96–97.

55. It is possible that the nickname of Zarnay Lilith, Paragos, is connected to the Semamit legend. In a number of versions from both late antique Babylonia and Palestine, we find that Semamit fled to Pelagos / the midst of the sea (בפלגוס ימא). See synoptic table in Joseph Naveh and Shaul Shaked, Amulets and Magic Bowls (Jerusalem, 1985), 190 and commentary on 110.

56. See Ford, "New Light," 155.

her sadness and jealousy into rage.[57] Indeed, this corresponds to other female demons, ghosts, and other malicious entities in various ancient and even modern cultures who kill babies out of their own rage and suffering.[58] These stories are revealing in terms of demonstrating the fears, anxieties, and social stigmas surrounding women who suffer the loss of multiple children and the jealousy they may feel toward other women. James Ford has shown other contexts in which Semamit is described as a baby-killing demoness: "And may she be saved from Semamit daughter of קברי that kills the child and snatches the baby from the breast of her mother and eats it."[59] These descriptions capture the terror of the Semamit, a cruel demonesses, described as at least twice as tall as a human being, who haunts the client's home, prepared to snatch and eat her newborn baby while she is breastfeeding. Similar fears are reflected in other Jewish metal amulets from late antique Palestine, such as a set written for one Kyra Marian, some of which are described as amulets for expelling the spirits that choke her children and fetuses.[60] These all reveal the anxieties surrounding common cases of infant mortality and the popular explanations that were given to explain these tragic occurrences, some of which crossed spatial and cultural boundaries.[61]

A study of the formulae used to combat these demonesses is telling as well. For example, the scribe of the bowl written for Miškoy cited above employs legal terminology to create a divorce document intended for the liliths that is akin to the legal divorce that a man serves his wife. In this

57. Elitzur-Leiman, "An Aramaic Amulet," 8–9.

58. See Sarah Iles Johnston, Restless Dead: Encounters between the Living and the Dead in Ancient Greece (Berkeley, Calif., 1999), 161–99.

59. Ford, "New Light," 155.

60. Ada Yardeni and Gideon Bohak, "Five Amulets for the Protection of Kyra Marian and the Fetus in Her Womb" (Hebrew), Eretz-Israel 34 (2021): 80–105. See especially amulet 2 (pp. 85–86: "An effective amulet for expelling the spirit choking the children of Kyra Marian"), and amulet 5 (pp. 95–96).

61. Recent studies on infant mortality in the Roman Empire suggest that it occurred in about 20–35 percent of all births; it stands to reason that the situation was similar in the Sasanian Empire. See Nathan Pilkington, "Growing up Roman: Infant Mortality and Reproductive Development," Journal of Interdisciplinary History 44.1 (2013): 1–36.

context he even includes a sentence granting the demoness permission and authority to leave, a sentence with parallels in divorce documents from archaeological findings and rabbinic instructions.[62] In addition, he adjures God himself (שבועת מלך)[63] to ensure the removal of the demonic threats. In other words, the scribe employs binding legal methods that are proven to be effective in the human world. It is reasonable to assume that employing these methods to control the demonic world gave people some sense of control and security in the face of the unpredictable and troublesome reality of frequent infant mortality. In addition, describing these notorious beings as female demonesses, some of whom suffered from the loss of their own babies, reflects jealousies and tensions of a society in which the primary role of women was childbearing.[64]

Women as Adversaries

Women not only commissioned magic bowls, but at times also were the targets of these amuletic texts, which were intended to protect others from their curses and wrongdoings. In this context, women are usually referred to either by name or as a collective. Named women adversaries appear mainly in bowls intended to reverse curses or witchcraft against named clients.[65] Looking at the gender breakdown of these various curse bowls does not yield conclusive results, as it seems that both men and

62. The sentence in lines 5–6: "you may have authority and power over yourself" (דיתיהויין ראשאה ושליטא בנפשכי) is a crucial part of the Jewish divorce document, and, according to rabbinic law, the divorce is not valid without it. Additionally, it holds verbatim parallels to rabbinic literature as well as the divorce document found in Masada (first century C.E.). See Avigail Manekin Bamberger, "Jewish Legal Formulae in the Aramaic Incantation Bowls," Aramaic Studies 13.1 (2015): 76–79.

63. See the discussion regarding swearing in the name of the king in Saul Lieberman, Greek in Jewish Palestine: Studies in the Life and Manners of Jewish Palestine in the II–IV Centuries CE (New York, 1942), 118–19.

64. See Iles Johnston, Restless Dead, 93: "By going further, however, and describing these ghosts as envious—by virtually making them personifications of envy—tradition also censured the envy itself. 'This is where reproductive envy leads,' the myths seem to say, 'to exclusion from humanity and an eternity spent in restless wandering.'"

65. On the nature and function of these bowls, see Levene, Curse Texts, 1–19; and Dan Levene, "'This Is a Qybl' for Overturning Sorceries': Form, Formula—women defended themselves from the wrongdoings of other men and women.[66] However, there is one type of formula that seems to be employed uniquely against women, which targets a named woman together with her children—as a single unit—performing curses and witchcraft together.[67] An example is found in a pair of bowls, written and sealed together, for the protection of Aba son of Barkhita from the curses and witchcraft of Immi daughter of Rivka and her children, Mar and Lili.[68]

> (1) This is a charm to overturn sorceries (2) and oaths and curses and knocks and magic rites (3) and aversions, from Aba son of Barkhita onto Immi daughter of Rivka, onto (4) Lili and onto Mar the children of Immi and onto all who cursed them.

The list of harmful deeds attributed to Immi and her children consists of various verbal utterances and malicious actions, all of which are enumerated in order to have them rebound upon their pronouncers.[69] Another example of familial female witchcraft is found in a bowl belonging to a man who wishes to protect himself from the witchcraft of two sisters:[70]

Threads in a Web of Transmission," in G. Bohak, Y. Harari, and S. Shaked, Continuity, 219–44.

66. Note that not all the bowls contain a name of a client (see for example Levene, Curse Texts, bowl VA2492, [p. 85]; bowl 2418 [p. 88]), and some mention only a client without a named adversary (see, for example, Levene, Curse Texts, bowls VA2496 and VA2575 [pp. 64–65]).

67. To be sure, it would be easier to recognize a mother with her children because the client is listed with his or her mother's name; note, however, that these bowls also contain the idiom "her children," which is lacking from bowls naming curses of men. Additionally, the general formula—a curse of a mother/daughter, mother-in-law/daughter-in-law—is mentioned with regard to only mothers and not fathers (see below).

68. See Levene, Curse Texts, bowl VA2416 (pp. 46–47), and similarly in bowl VA2423 (pp. 37–39).

69. These two bowls consist of long and detailed lists of various harmful actions that humans perform in various places such as places of worship and cemeteries, including knocking, tying knots, using water, and casting the evil eye.

70. From Levene, Curse Texts, bowl M102 (pp. 108–9), originally published in Levene, Corpus, 44–51.

[77.137.77.254] Project MUSE (2025-02-24 14:11 GMT)

> (1) This spell is appointed for overturning sorceries, so that they [the sorceries] may be overturned from Safra son of (2) Rabita and turn back against Ahatoi daughter of Ahati and against Ahati and against all who sent them.[71] (3) May [the sorceries] be turned back against all who made them and sent them and recited them. By the name of the great angel who has power over (4) the heavens and over the earth, and who has power over evil sorceries and perverted devils. May he return the evil sorceries to Ahatoi daughter of Ahati (5) and to Awirta daughter of Ahati.

Ahatoi and Awirta, the sisters mentioned in this bowl, are described as performing powerful sorceries. Interestingly, other curse bowls also include women's familial ties in their protective formulas, such as in the Pearson bowl: "Overturned is the curse of all mankind, overturned is the curse of all mankind, the curse of the mother and the daughter, of the daughter-in-law and the mother-in-law."[72] And in an additional bowl, intended for a couple, one finds:[73] "And may there not afflict, not the curse of Jews and not the curse of non-Jews and not a curse of the mother-in-law and the daughter-in-law, and not the curse of neighbors and neighborhood leaders,[74] not the curse of distant or near relatives."

It is not entirely clear how the duo of "mother and daughter" / "mother-in-law and daughter-in-law" function in these specific spells. As in one case cited above, it is preceded by the "curse of the Jew and non-Jew" and followed by the "curse of close neighbor and far neighbor / close ones and far ones." Given these parallel formulae, it is possible that it simply represents another formulaic pair. However, it is also possible that the pair designates a joint curse of a mother and daughter. Either way, it is important to note that while one does find male and female pairs in the bowls, such as "a father and a mother," we do not find a parallel of two males acting in familial malice such as the curse of a father and a son, or of a father-

71. From the full text, it seems that the main adversaries of Safra son of Rabita are the sisters Ahatoi and Awirta, daughters of Ahati. It is possible that the mention of only the mother, Ahati, is an error due to haplography. See Levene, Corpus, 44.

72. Levene, Curse Texts, 14.

73. Levene, Curse Texts, bowl SD27 (p. 98, line 5).

74. I thank an anonymous reviewer for this correction, see CAL, s.v. "rbb."

in-law and son-in-law.[75] Viewing this formula as protection from an action performed by mothers and daughters together can be reinforced by other bowls that mainly target women's witchcraft, for example:[76]

> (6) [. . .] from evil sorcery and from the sorcery of a mother (7) and daughter and from sorcery of a daughter-in-law and mother-in-law, from the sorcery of a malicious woman who darkens the eyes and causes the soul's despair,[77] and from evil sorcery that is practiced by people.

This incantation protects from a range of acts of witchcraft, including actions performed by a mother with her daughter or by a mother-in-law with her daughter-in-law. These female pairs may be read in the context of patriarchal structures of habitation, in which mother and daughters live together until the daughter weds and generally moves in with her mother-in-law.[78] Read this way, the protective formula targets women who live together and are assumed to have their own dangerous feminine space in which they perform these harmful actions.[79] These feminine connections and spaces potentially threaten men and are oftentimes linked

75. See, for example, Segal, Catalogue, bowl 09a (pp. 50–51, translation modified for consistency): "the curse of a father and of a mother and of a daughter, of a daughter-in-law and of a mother-in-law."

76. See Isbell, Corpus, bowl 48 (p. 110), translation modified for consistency.

77. See the connection between this phrase and the Aramaic translations of the Bible, quoted in Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, 2:188, and the bibliography cited there.

78. The Babylonian Talmud even states, "It is not the proper manner of conduct for a son-in-law to live in his father-in-law's home" (bBB 98b). See Adiel Schremer, Male and Female He Created Them: Jewish Marriage in the Late Second Temple, Mishnah, and Talmud Periods (Hebrew; Jerusalem, 2003), 268–88.

79. On these spaces, see Charlotte Fonrobert: "By 'women's spaces,' I mean cultural spaces in which women relate directly to women and can establish relationships that are not under the immediate control of male authority, whether of father, husband, or rabbi [. . .] They may therefore turn into potential sites of resistance against gender domination, or at least allow for questioning it." Charlotte E. Fonrobert, Menstrual Purity: Rabbinic and Christian Reconstructions of Biblical Gender (Stanford, Calif., 2000), 129. I would add that it is not only a potential site of resistance but also a potential site of male fear of female resistance.

to witchcraft. Such threats are manifested in a number of passages from the Babylonian Talmud, as, for example, in a story about the daughters of R. Nahman and their engagement in witchcraft (bGit 45a).[80] The story begins by stating that R. Nahman's daughters miraculously stirred their hot cauldrons with their bare hands, prompting the question of whether they do so because they are righteous, or—more likely—because they are witches. The hero of the story and the sisters happen to be taken together into captivity. To find out whether the sisters are witches, the hero decides to eavesdrop on their conversation in the bathroom, stating that women reveal all of their secrets to each other there.[81] The women reveal that since their captors are men, just like their husbands, they should ask them to take them away, so their husbands don't find out. Upon hearing their conversation, which discloses their lack of loyalty and implies promiscuity, the hero understands that they are, indeed, witches.[82] For our purposes, it is important to note that the story describes a pair of sisters acting together in malice, whose actions are discovered when they think they are alone in their own distinct space. This may reflect the same kind of fears over the female familial curses/witchcraft as we have seen in the bowls contra the witchcraft of the sisters Ahatoi and Awirta.

This anxiety of the malicious intent of women bears legal implications that are echoed in a passage from bPes 111a:

> Women, who are sitting at a crossroads, one on this side of the path and the other on the other side, and they are facing each other, they are certainly engaging in witchcraft. What is the remedy for one who walks by? If there is another route, he should go by it. And if there is no other route, if there is another person with him, they hold each other's hands and switch [places].

80. See bGit 45a. On this story, see Joshua Levinson, "Enchanting Rabbis: Contest Narratives between Rabbis and Magicians in Late Antiquity," JQR 100.1 (2010): 75–83.

81. bGit 45a. See Levinson, "Enchanting Rabbis," 80: "In the privy we can eavesdrop on the women's hidden transcript that is free from the limitations of male censorship and supervision."

82. For more on the connection of witchcraft and promiscuity, see Levinson, "Enchanting Rabbis," 79 and further references in n. 64.

Here, too, we find women suspected of witchcraft sitting together, this time at a crossroads.[83] In this passage we are again faced with anxieties over women who bond together in spaces presumably outside of male control. Events like this cause a direct threat to male authority and lead to the same definitive conclusion—namely, that these women must be engaging in witchcraft. In a similar manner, the fear of multiple generations of women residing and connecting under one roof is expressed in the bowls, as reflected in the recurring formula of protection against a curse/witchcraft of a mother and daughter or a mother-in-law and daughter-in-law.[84] To be sure, as emphasized above, witchcraft is mentioned dozens of times in the bowls without connecting it to a specific practitioner, male or female. But when the gender of the practitioner is mentioned, it is most commonly a woman.[85] Reading these bowls alongside the rabbinic passages above attest to the pervasiveness of the notion that women are prone to be involved in sorcery.

Women and Demons

Through apotropaic texts and common formulae, we learn of an extensive and elaborate demonology that prevailed in the Sasanian Empire. This includes an enumeration of demon types, hierarchical structures, and 83. See Harari, Jewish Magic, 379.

84. In an additional incantation bowl, the fear of female relatives acting inappropriately in public spaces is vividly portrayed: "(3) . . . overturned is the curse of a mother and daughter, of a daughter-in-law [and a mother-in-law, who] stands in the field (4) and who stands in the town, who kneels upon her knees, and beats on her face and strips (herself) naked, and says (magical) words." Siam Bhayro, James N. Ford, Dan Levene, and Ortal-Paz Saar, Aramaic Magic Bowls in the Vorderasiatisches Museum in Berlin: Descriptive List and Edition of Selected Texts (Leiden, 2018), bowl VA 2428 (p. 28). The women are depicted defying societal expectations by stripping naked in public, pounding their faces, and uttering harmful words—actions that are viewed as the opposite of social propriety and are defined as curses or witchcraft.

85. An exception to this is a bowl that targets various harmful witchcrafts performed in different languages/religions. See Isbell, Corpus, bowl 49 (pp. 112–13), which protects from "Aramean sorcery, Jewish sorcery, Arab sorcery, Persian sorcery [. . .] sorcery that is performed in 70 languages."

familial ties,[86] as well as demons known by name and a variety of images of them.[87] This elaborate picture again coheres with what we find in the Babylonian Talmud, in which demons are described as "more numerous than we are and they stand over us like mounds of earth surrounding a pit [. . .] Each and every one of us has ten thousand [demons] on his right and a thousand on his left" (bBer 6a). However, there are also differences between the demonologies that emerge from each of these corpora—among other things, in the perceived differences between male and female demons.

In rabbinic literature, demons are often described as domesticated.[88] A prime example is the aforementioned Yosef Sheda, a demon who consults the rabbis on issues related to demonic harm, along with other unnamed demons such as one who acts as a servant in the house of Rav Papa.[89] Moreover, even Ashmedai, the king of the demons, is described as 86. See for example Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, vol. 1, bowl JBA 56 (p. 249).

87. See Naama Vilozny, "The Gender and Sexuality of Demons in the Art of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls," in Demons in Early Judaism and Christianity: Characters and Characteristics, ed. H. Patmore and J. Lössl (Leiden, 2022), 294–318; and Naama Vilozny, "Between Demons and Kings," in Orality and Textuality in the Iranian World, ed. J. Rubanovich (Leiden, 2015), 400–21.

88. See Harari, Jewish Magic, 407: "The inclusion of the demon as a positive element in the system of divine providence is a conclusive sign of the trend that domesticates the demonic into the world of values sustained in the house of study, which characterizes the rabbinic demonological stories." See also Sara Ronis, Demons in the Details: Demonic Discourse and Rabbinic Culture in Late Antique Babylonia (Oakland, Calif., 2022), 166–80; Richard Kalmin, Migrating Tales: The Talmud's Narratives and Their Historical Context (Oakland, Calif., 2014), 116–20.

89. For Joseph the demon, see Harari, Jewish Magic, 405; Tal Ilan, "Rav Joseph the Demon in the Rabbinic Academy in Babylonia: Another Connection between the Babylonian Talmud and the Magic Bowls," in "Let the Wise Listen and Add to Their Learning" (Prov 1:5): Festschrift for Günter Stemberger on the Occasion of His 75th Birthday, ed. C. Cordoni and G. Langer (Berlin, 2016), 381–94; Ronis, Demons, 153–58. For Rav Papa's servant, see Harari, Jewish Magic, 405; and Sara Ronis, "A Demonic Servant in Rav Papa's Household: Demons as Subjects in the Mesopotamian Talmud," in The Aggada of the Bavli and Its Cultural World, ed.

[77.137.77.254] Project MUSE (2025-02-24 14:11 GMT)

studying in the study house (metivta) every day, both in a heavenly study house and in an earthly one.[90] In other rabbinic narratives, demons assist rabbis in their troubles with the authorities.[91] To be sure, in these talmudic passages it is only male demons who are domesticated and who participate in rabbinic culture. Female demons are typically imagined to be on the outskirts of society, posing a sexual threat to the rabbis.[92] This is especially apparent in a law that prohibits men from sleeping in a house alone at night for fear that Lilith will seize them (bShab 151b).[93] The rabbinic depiction of male demons as observing the Torah and female demons as sexual threats is further amplified in sources from the Middle Ages, so much so that there is even a rabbinic statement in the name of R. Yehuda Ha-Hasid preferring male demons over human women.[94]

A study of the gendered aspects of the demonology from the incantation bowls yields a slightly different picture from the one that emerges from rabbinic literature. On the one hand, there is a shared cultural context apparent in both corpora; in both the texts and images of the bowls, male demons are occasionally depicted as armed with weapons and armor,

---

G. Herman and J. Rubenstein (Providence, R.I., 2018), 3–22. Although Ronis argues for ancient Mesopotamian influence regarding the presence of "neutral demons," it seems that this story is better explained against the internal trends in rabbinic literature of domesticating and rabbinizing demons to bolster the rabbi's own authority. See Harari, Jewish Magic, 401–7; and similar trends demonstrated in Avigail Manekin-Bamberger, "Taming Nature and Gaining Authority: Rabbinic Decrees Reconsidered," Aramaic Studies 21.1 (2023): 43–63.

90. bGit 68a.

91. Harari, Jewish Magic, 405–7.

92. See, for example, the story of Agrat daughter of Mahlat and her entourage wandering the streets at night bPes 112b.

93. See Lesses, "Exe(o)rcising," 357.

94. See Isaac of Vienna, Or Zaru'a II (Zhitomir, 1862), Hilkhot Eruvin, § 147 (p. 78; my translation): "My teacher, Rav Yehudah [Ha-Hasid] would say that the demons believe in the Torah and observe all that the sages commanded. And they asked him, if so, why does he [the demon] have sexual relations with a married woman? And he [R. Yehuda] replied that at times she [the married woman] does things to him which are not respectable, and sometimes even without her knowledge."

while female demons are often depicted naked with disheveled hair.[95] Each sex is described with what is perceived to be most threatening for society. Other formulae also reveal these concerns in interesting ways, such as in a number of recently published bowls:[96]

> (13) liliths, all of them, and all tormentors, all of them, from their adults and to their children, from their young ones and to their old ones, who dwell [in] various nests, who dwell (14) in various mounds, who dwell in various date palm trees, who dwell in various valleys, who haunt human beings. They seize women in a lying position, and arouse (15) and inflame with lust and seduce. They love carnality and fornication. They love the free-woman who fornicates [בת חרין דמגנבא],[97] and the singing-girl who shames herself.

95. See Vilozny, "Gender," 294–318. Cf. the formulae for Ashmedai: "And if you do not go out from them, I adjure you in the name of Ashmedai, king of the demons, that the weight of his sword is thousands of thousands of measurements [ככר] and iron that has no enumeration nor calculation." Alon Ten-Ami, "Ashmedai in Babylonian Incantation Bowls" (Hebrew), Pe'amim 133/134 (2013): 203; For female demons, see the common formulae: "the three of you, the four of you, the five of you. You are stripped naked and are not clothed, your hair is dishevelled (and) cas[t] behind your back." Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, 1:110. Note that the description of the demons being stripped naked (ערטיל שלחיתין) is very similar to the description of women stripping naked and cursing in public (וערטיל שלחא) in the quote in n. 84 above. This similarity may serve as another example of how demonology reflects societal gender expectations and norms, as the cursing woman and the demoness are described in a comparable manner.

96. Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, 2, bowl JBA99 (p. 147).

97. The editors translate בת חרין דמגנבא as the "noblewoman who steals." I prefer to translate the phrase as the "freewoman who seduces" as חרי appears this way in a number of bowls such as bowl JNF 120, lines 2–4, "And he brings free men [חרי] and free women [חרתא], manservants and maidservants." James N. Ford and Ohad Abudraham, "Syriac and Mandaic Incantation Bowls," in Finds Gone Astray, ed. D. Regev and H. Hizmi (Jerusalem, 2018), 79–80. In addition, in contemporary Syriac the verb gnb can mean "seduce," and the feminine adjective mgnbt' has the meaning of "an adulteress." See the Comprehensive Aramaic Lexicon (CAL) online, https://cal.huc.edu, s.v. "gnb/mgnb." This reading would fit the next part of the formula regarding the singing girl, who shames herself, and the specific context of the demons' love of lust and fornication.

This passage contains a long description that serves as protection from demons of all ages and expected locations. The second part of the incantation reveals something of the nature of these demons: they dwell in humans and seize women that are in a lying position, they arouse lust and fornication, and they love freewomen who seduce or fornicate and singing girls who shame themselves.[98] This formula portrays cultural norms of feminine chastity by connecting lustful demons to women who deviate from them. In other words, dangerous fornicating demons are connected to feminine promiscuity, fitting the cultural values of patriarchal societies.[99]

Alongside the difference in the representation of demons according to gender, in many of the bowls, demons are mentioned neutrally while adding the general label: "male and female."[100] This can be seen in recur-

98. The connection between demonic singing girls and prostitutes is made explicitly in the frequent mentions of the demoness Lilith Zanay, the fornicating singing girl. On this figure, see Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, 1:225, and the bowls on pp. 226–40. The editors mention the double meaning in Mandaic of z*amarta* as both "singing girl" and "prostitute." It seems that this connection may have derived from historical realities or social stigmas attached to these women, as implied by Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro: "It also suggests that the professional singing woman was associated with immoral sexual behavior" (Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, 225). We find similar social stigmas in literary texts from a slightly later period; see Kristina Richardson, "Singing Slave Girls (Qiyan) of the 'Abbasid Court in the Ninth and Tenth Centuries," in Children in Slavery through the Ages, ed. J. C. Miller et al. (Athens, Ohio, 2009), 105–18. Also see the recurring connections between prostitution and stage actresses in law and in narrative in the Roman and Byzantine empires; Kyle Harper, From Shame to Sin: The Christian Transformation of Sexual Morality in Late Antiquity (Cambridge, Mass., 2013), 186, 191–93.

99. See explicit connections in John Chrysostom's sermons against adultery: "If dread of hell doesn't restrain you, then fear their black magic. When you deprive yourself of God's help through your debauchery, and denude yourself of assistance from above, the whore will seize you more brazenly. Hatching plots against you and calling on her familiar demons with amulets devised for it, she will gain control over your well-being, making you a risible shame before all who live in the city." Quoted from Harper, Shame to Sin, 163.

100. The practice of making long lists of demons with the generic label "male and female" fits the poetics of magic formulae in general, which aims to include ring formulae:[101] "and they appear as human beings, to men in the form of women and to women in the form of men, and with human beings they recline by night and they appear to them by day." This protective formula is intended both for men and women and serves to protect them both: men from liliths who appear as women, and women from liliths who appear as men, both of whom recline with (sexually attack) humans in the night and in the day. Note that in contrast to what we have seen in rabbinic literature regarding Lilith who seizes men, this protective spell reflects the male demonic sexual attack of women as well. This female point of view may be connected to the aforementioned descriptions of female demons that attack mothers by snatching their newborn babies and eating them.

To sum up this section, the Babylonian Talmud and the incantation bowls were written around the same time and within the same patriarchal society. In both corpora, it is possible to trace similar demonic concepts that reflect the anxieties of the people of the time. Alongside the similarities, there are differences between representations of demons in the bowls and in rabbinic literature. The former seeks overarching protection from all kinds of demons and portrays the harm of both male and female demons as more or less equal. In contrast, the Talmud often depicts male demons as domesticated but female demons as promiscuous.

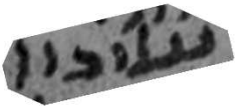
---

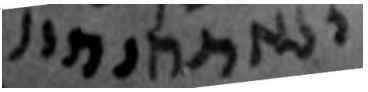
as many potential threats as possible within one short text. See Richard Gordon, "'What's in a List?' Listing in Greek and Graeco-Roman Malign Magical Texts," in The World of Ancient Magic: Papers from the First International Samson Eitrem Seminar at the Norwegian Institute at Athens 4–8 May 1997, ed. D. R. Jordan, H. Montgomery, and E. Thomassen (Bergen, 1999), 240–47. These types of lists are numerous; see, for example, Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, vol. 2, bowl JBA114 (p. 212): "And double sealed are all the people of his house, and double sealed is all his property, from all demons and afflictions and affliction demons and satans and yaror demons and evil lilis, male and female, (both) those whose name is mentioned and those whose name is not mentioned, who dwell in his house, and appear in dreams and in visions, and frighten them."

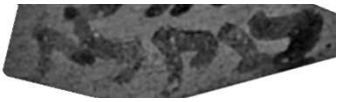
101. See for example Shaked, Ford, and Bhayro, Aramaic Bowl Spells, vol. 1, bowl JBA64 (p. 273, lines 3–4), I have modified their translation of מידמין to "appear" based on CAL, s.v. "dmy." Compare the Talmudic use of the verb dmy to denote the miraculous changing of appearance and form, often in stories involving Elijah or Satan. For the latter see stories from bKid 81a in which Satan appears as a woman.

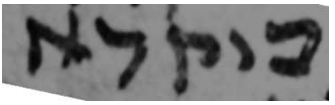
These differences may be the result of the differing audience and purpose. The bowls were intended to heal and bring prosperity to both men and women, and so they aim to protect against a wide range of demons. In contrast, rabbinic literature has a didactic function and it is reasonable to assume that it was primarily written for a male audience, hence the domestication of male demons but not female, who continued to pose a sexual threat and served to reinforce rabbinic authority and the values of patriarchal structures.[102] In contrast, the bowls' picture of greater "gender representation" presents demons that are haunting named women, a perspective that is often missing from the literary text, and also often portrays demons in ways that reflect late antique gender norms and cultural expectations.

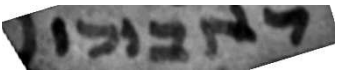
CONCLUSIONS











To summarize the current state of the question of women and the Aramaic incantation bowls: There is no evidence that the Aramaic incantation bowls were produced by women, and the evidence presented so far for that theory does not consider the distinctive poetics of the incantation bowl texts. The Aramaic incantation bowls are characterized by their formulaic nature, containing similar identifiable building blocks across the bowl corpus at large. These components are often adjusted to correspond to the gender of the client, including in bowls that list the client in the first person. Indeed, analyzing the bowl texts within the broader context of late antique magical texts' style and features challenges the quest for "critical," "subversive," and "feminist" content. Moreover, many of the bowls' textual components are recognizable from parallels within Jewish or non-Jewish texts, which are typically associated with premodern learning traditions of men.

However, despite their probable male authorship, as well as their formulaic nature, bowls are still an indispensable resource for the study of women in Late Antiquity in the following (and no doubt other) areas: the phenomena of women appearing as named clients of the bowls, with special attention to common formulae that describe women's hardships and struggles; gender roles in the Sasanian Empire as discerned/reinforced by the classifications and types of bowls that mention or don't mention women by name; gender bias and social stigmas against women, as evidenced in cases where women are referred to as adversaries, either by name or as a collective; demonologies from male and female perspectives that are often absent from rabbinic literature; and differing depictions of male and female demons that often reflect societal gender roles, cultural expectations, fears and values. A fuller understanding of the elaborate demonology of the incantation bowls is a scholarly desideratum, and the issue of gender in relation to demonology is one part of this much-needed work for the further understanding of the social and cultural history of men and women in antiquity.

102. See Lesses, "Exe(o)rcising," 367.

Table 1. Penn Museum Bowls

B2922 WRITTEN IN THE FIRST PERSON FOR KOMIŠ (FEMALE)	B16020 WRITTEN IN THE FIRST PERSON FOR HUNIYĀQ (MALE)
		עליכין
		שמעו
		ולא תחוחון
		ביקרא
		דאבוכון

Avigail Manekin-Bamberger is a senior lecturer in the Department of Jewish History and Contemporary Jewry at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

Korshi Dosoo

Magical Names: Tracing Religious Changes in Egyptian Magical Texts from Roman and Early Islamic Egypt

"To weave the magic of a thing, you see, one must find its true name out."
– Ursula Le Guin, The Tombs of Atuan (1971)

1 Names in Magical Papyri

1.1 Knowing the Unknowable

"O great god… whose name is unknown… I know your name", reads a paradoxical invocation in a second-century Demotic magical papyrus.[1] It is a common trope that names are crucial in magic – practitioners know the names of the beings they call upon, must correctly name the people whom their practices are intended to harm and help – yet they also pose significant problems for scholars. We have so many names – of gods, of angels, of real people – but what do they mean, and how much can they tell us? Does a papyrus mentioning a being named "Horus" in the eighth century tell us that the ancient Egyptian god was still worshipped hundreds of years after the triumph of Christianity and the Arab conquest?[2] Does the naming of the spirit of a dead man as Antinous mean that the writer is addressing the divinised lover of Hadrian?[3] Does the naming of an amulet's wearer as "Mary" tell us that she was a Christian?

The purpose of this study is to explore a few of these possible questions in detail. Specifically, I hope to contribute to the ongoing dialogue about the ability of papyri, an-

I would like to thank Lajos Berkes for inviting me to the conference that led to the writing of this paper and for his comments on an earlier draft, as well as Anthony Alcock, Mattias Brand, Aaltje Hidding, Ortal Paz-Saar, Markéta Preininger, Julia Schwarzer, Peter Shi, Naïm Vanthieghem, Günter Vittmann, and Vincent Walter for help with which they provided me during its writing. The work which lies behind this article was carried out as part of the project The Coptic Magical Papyri: Vernacular Religion in Late Roman and Early Islamic Egypt at the University of Würzburg. All translations are mine unless otherwise noted. Published papyri are cited, where possible, according to the online Checklist of Greek, Latin, Demotic and Coptic Papyri, Ostraca and Tablets (https://library.duke.edu/rubenstein/scriptorium/papyrus/texts/clist.html; seen 3/10/2022).

1 GEMF 16 (=PDM xiv/KYP M162; II CE) col. ix ll. 3–4 (=241–242): pꜣ nṯr-ꜥꜣ… nty-iw bw-ir-rḫ=w rn=f… tw=y ir-rḫ.w rn=k.

2 Cf. Blumell/Dosoo (2018), with further bibliography ad. loc.

3 This is found in SM 47 (KYP M873; TM 92866; II–III CE); for discussions of his identity, see Németh (2013); Daniel/Maltomini (1990) 180 n. 3, with further literature ad. loc.

Open Access. © 2024 the author(s), published by De Gruyter. This work is licensed under the Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License. https://doi.org/10.1515/arege-2024-0005

alysed statistically, to help us to trace religious change in Egypt.[4] This dialogue began with the work of Roger Bagnall in 1987, in which he suggested that onomastic data from a sample of papyri could be used to date the key moment of Christianisation – when Christians became a majority of the population of Egypt – to the fourth century.[5] Critical reflections on his approach by Ewa Wipszycka prompted several later responses to Bagnall, although he did not explicitly offer a substantially revised estimate.[6] In 2013 Mark Depauw and Willy Clarysse took up Bagnall's basic methodology, but significantly expanded the corpus to over 50,000 papyri for which onomastic data had been gathered in Trismegistos and the Duke Database of Documentary Papyri.[7] Their work suggested a slightly later date for the Christianisation of Egypt, in the mid-fifth century – something already anticipated by Bagnall in one of the publications which followed since his original article,[8] and perhaps also by one of the responses by Wipszycka.[9] The work of Depauw and Clarysse has provoked its own critical reflections; the most significant, perhaps, is that of David Frankfurter, who has questioned what exactly "Christianisation" or "conversion" means – what degree of participation or belief is necessary to qualify an individual as Christian? – and the extent to which a personal name can measure this.[10]

In this study I will use Depauw and Clarysse's method to examine the onomastic patterns revealed by the magical papyri dating from the second to twelfth centuries CE. While the magical papyri offer a far smaller corpus than that used in their earlier study, they are nonetheless of interest, being a completely distinct dataset, which therefore has the potential to either confirm or complicate their findings. At the same time, by looking beyond the fifth-century endpoint of previous work, this study may reveal other patterns, most notably, that of conversions to Islam. While this was not a question addressed in the work of either Bagnall or Depauw and Clarysse, it was the focus of a 1979 study by Richard Bulliet, which drew upon onomastic data from Arabic biographies;[11] Bulliet's work study was, in fact, cited as an inspiration by Bagnall.[12] Bulliet suggested that the key moment of Islamicisation – when Muslims became the majority

4 Although not directly relevant to the debate discussed here, it is worth mentioning Delattre (2012), a study looking at regional trends in names found in Egyptian documentary papyri from the seventh and eighth centuries.

5 Bagnall (1987).

6 Wipszycka (1986); cf. Wipszycka (1988) 121–122, 164–165; cf. Bagnall (1987); Bagnall (1995).

7 Depauw/Clarysse (2013); cf. Van Beek/Depauw (2009).

8 See Bagnall (1987) 248–249, where his redating of the Skar codex pushes his earlier figures for 318 and 353 CE forward to 393 and 428 CE.

9 Wipszycka (1988) 164.

10 Frankfurter (2014); cf. Depauw/Clarysse (2015); Choat (2006) 52–55; Blumell (2012) 237–279; Frankfurter (2023).

11 Bulliet (1979).

12 Bagnall (1987) 108.

in Egypt – took place in the ninth century, a conclusion broadly supported by other scholars who have explored the question in the last fifty or so years.[13]

At the same time, the magical texts also contain rich evidence for what we could cautiously call belief – as performative objects, intended to effect change, they imply a belief in their efficacy, and, since they generally call upon specific deities to do so, the use of a magical text could be considered a religious act connected to specific traditions.[14] Thus the second key question of this study is that of the names of deities in magical texts – to which traditions (Greek, Egyptian, Christian, Muslim) do they belong, how do references to them change over time, and how does religious content relate to the names of the people using them? Put more bluntly – did "pagans", Christians, and Muslims use magical texts conforming to their religious identity? The problems raised by Frankfurter and others about the difficulties of defining and imputing belief in the context of personal names all apply here, and are even more serious, but it is nonetheless a question worth exploring.[15]

I should also note that I am not the first to explore this question. Walter Shandruk presented his own analysis of the onomastic data from magical papyri in 2012.[16] This study attempts to build upon his previous work in four ways. First, the corpus I am able to present here is considerably larger than that available to him, and extends the dataset, as already noted, beyond the Arab conquest. Secondly, for this corpus I am able to offer slightly better dating, and a few small corrections, to his understanding of some of the texts, in particular those written in Coptic.[17] Thirdly, Shandruk's study was published before that of Depauw/Clarysse, which refined Bagnall's findings and methodology, and which I adopt here. Lastly, I offer a different method of attempting to describe the religious content of the papyri, based on the presence or absence of categories of named gods rather than a binary division into Christian/non-Christian. Shandruk's study remains valuable, offering a different perspective and approach, whose findings this study tends to confirm.

13 Bulliet (1979) 92–103; cf. Lapidus (1972); Little (1976); Anawati (1990); Morony (1990); Frantz- Murphy (1991).

14 The problem of belief has become a serious one in the field of religious studies; for the working definition adopted here, see Valk (2021); Harvey (2013) 194–195. For the related idea, prominent in the study of the religion of the Roman Empire, that non-Christian religion can or should only be understood in terms of practice rather than belief, cf. Ambasciano (2022), whose arguments to the contrary I find quite persuasive.

15 See fn. 10 above.

16 Shandruk (2012).

17 Cf. Dosoo et al. (2022).

1.2 Describing the Corpus of Magical Papyri

The texts I refer to here as the "magical papyri" belong primarily to the "long first millennium" – they appear in Greek in the first century BCE, existing alongside similar Demotic texts, although the published Demotic examples of these date to, and disappear after, the second and third centuries CE.[18] In the fourth century, they are joined by texts written in Coptic, the latest stage of the native Egyptian language. The number of Greek texts declines in the fifth century, and they disappear from Egypt by the eighth. Manuscripts in Coptic become the majority by the sixth century, and continue to be produced until around the twelfth century, at which point it seems that Arabic almost completely replaced Coptic as the language of magic in Egypt.[19]

The corpus shows clear similarities in its language, mechanisms, goals and practices to older corpora – primarily Egyptian ritual texts, but also the Akkadian āšipūtu corpus, both attested at least two thousand years earlier, and the few older Greek texts which survive on metal supports from the sixth century BCE onwards.[20] Nonetheless, the genre of Graeco-Egyptian magic seems to be somewhat distinct from these in a few ways – the most notable are the use of distinctive voces magicae and charaktēres, magical words and magical signs, both of which are attested in the corpus by the first century CE.[21] While the Demotic texts often show a closer affinity to older Egyptian material, they also show clear signs of borrowing from the Greek-language tradition, as Jacco Dieleman's careful work has demonstrated.[22] The religious content of this early material is primarily Egyptian, Greek, and to a lesser extent, Jewish – gods such as Anubis, Helios (likely to be understood as a Greek name for the Egyptian sun god), Hekate, and Sabaoth often appear in the same manuscripts. While the fourth, and even more so, the fifth century, seem to see a shift towards a more Christian model of magic, many of the underlying practices and ritual types remain the same, with the same technical terms and magical names often being found in Graeco-Egyptian and Christian magical texts. It is fairly certain that the texts which survive on papyri from Egypt also existed elsewhere in the Roman Empire and beyond at the same time – texts on more durable supports such as metal, as well as the later mediaeval manuscript tradition, and contemporary literary texts testify to this – but how closely these would have mirrored those found in Egypt remains an open question.[23]

18 For recent overviews of magical material from first-millennium Egypt, cf. Dieleman (2019); van der Vliet (2019b); Dosoo (2021c); Dosoo et al. (2022).

19 On linguistic change in magical papyri, see Dosoo et al. (2022) 63–66; Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022a) 27–28; Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022b) 66–67. For discussions of linguistic change in papyri more broadly, see Richter (2008); Richter (2010); Fournet (2020).

20 Cf. the overviews mentioned in fn. 18.

21 For helpful discussions of these phenomena, see Versnel (2001) and Bohak (2003) on voces magicae, and Gordon (2011) and Gordon (2014) on charaktēres.

22 Dieleman (2005).

23 Major magical corpora from outside Egypt include DT, DTA, and GMA.

It has become something of a truism that magic is difficult to define. I use the term here to refer to the specific ritual and textual tradition to which the Egyptian magical papyri belong.[24] Theoretically defining the borders of this category nonetheless remains difficult, but there is generally little disagreement among papyrologists about which texts belong to it. The central texts of the category show distinctive genre characteristics – in addition to the voces magicae and charaktēres these include certain recurrent phrases ("I invoke you", "yea, yea, quickly, quickly") and ritual actions.[25] This formal definition overlaps with a second, functional definition – magical papyri are generally those which describe or are produced in the course of private rituals intended to protect individuals or their property (amulets), heal or cast out demons (exorcism), to harm others (curses), to divine the future, or aid the person for whom the ritual is carried out in other ways – giving them general good luck (favour), manipulating others (favour before a superior, separating a couple), and so on.[26] This second criterion is more problematic, since these goals are shared by a wide range of private (as well as public) rituals: are all divinatory or exorcistic rituals magic? Are all objects which were believed to protect the bearer – including crosses or holy water – magic? This problem, though theoretically important, is less crucial for this study, since the texts which I use here generally meet both formal and functional criteria, although I will occasionally highlight edge cases where it is more difficult to be sure that we are seeing a single (albeit broad) tradition of practice. Note that the definitions offered here – which are attempts to formalise the heuristic categories used by papyrologists – do not clearly relate to the concerns of anthropological/sociological discussions of magic which tend to dominate theoretical discussions to this day.[27] The Frazerian question of whether the texts are magical because they manipulate inanimate magical forces or threaten gods is not relevant to the discussion here,[28] and while the rituals they attest to are private, this is not necessarily an essential feature, and they are not primarily defined by their social marginality or their inversion of social values, as a Durkheimian model, of the sort best known from the work of Marcel Mauss and Henri Hubert, would suggest.[29] These concerns are latecomers to the study of ancient magic, and their influence was not felt on the field until after the corpus had been well defined.[30]

While I refer to the documents examined here as papyri, I use this in the larger sense of "papyrological documents", which includes manuscripts written on parch-

24 Dosoo (2021a) 677–679; Dosoo (2024); cf. Sanzo (2020).

25 Cf. Dosoo (2021c); Dosoo et al. (2022).

26 Cf. the discussions of purposes in Dosoo (2016) 702–705; Dieleman (2019) 296–304.

27 For overviews of the anthropological and sociological models of magic, see Tambiah (1990); Sørensen (2007) 9–28.

28 See Frazer (1925) for the fully developed form of his theory of magic; cf. Dosoo (2024) 290–292 for a discussion of the development of Frazer's theory of magic, with further references ad loc.

29 See Hubert/Mauss (1902-1903); English translation in Mauss (1972).

30 Cf. fn. 24.

ment, leather, wood, and lead. I only use documents from Egypt here; a study which took in magical texts from other parts of Europe, north Africa, and west Asia would certainly be worthwhile, but the texts from Egypt offer us sources from a single geographical area with continuous attestation for a thousand years, providing a degree of resolution impossible elsewhere. I restrict my study here to Greek and Coptic texts; there are no published Demotic magical papyri from this period which include personal names, and my own failings in Arabic, and the lack of a full corpus of Arabic magical papyri, prevent me from including these sources.[31] I must also exclude carved gems for slightly different reasons; while these often clearly belong to the same broad tradition as the magical papyri, and occasionally contain personal names,[32] very few of them have provenances, or can be dated with even the loose precision of magical papyri, and so they are far less useful for a study of onomastics which focuses on diachronic change in a specific geographic area.[33] While texts written in Hebrew and Aramaic are absent from this corpus, a study of personal names in magical texts from the Cairo Genizah already exists, carried out by Gideon Bohak and Ortal-Paz Saar in 2015; many of these texts are contemporary with the latest Coptic ones considered here, and often show much overlap in practice.[34]

Within the corpus, we can define two types of manuscripts. The first is formularies or handbooks, manuscripts which provide the means to carry out rituals – invocations to be spoken, images to be copied, and/or instructions for ritual actions. These include some of the largest and best-known magical papyri which contain dozens of ritual instructions – the large codex that is the Great Magical Papyrus of Paris,[35] the five-metre-long London-Leiden Demotic Magical Papyrus[36] – but most of the surviving examples are short, containing only one or a few recipes.[37] The second type are known as applied, activated, or documentary magical papyri, or 'finished products'; these are rituals created in the course of rituals – amulets to be worn or fixed to walls, curse tablets or love spells to be buried, and so on. It is this second category with which we will be primarily concerned with here; unlike most formularies, these contain the names of the specific individuals with whom they are concerned, and hence the onomastic data which interests us.

31 For possible examples of applied Demotic spells, see e. g., Winkler (2022); Ritner/Scalf (2019). For Arabic magic, see Bsees (2018); Vanthieghem (forthcoming).

32 See, e. g., CBd-1158: δός μοι χάριν Διονυσιάτι κύριε θεέ ("give me, Dionysias, favour, O Lord God…).

33 On these questions, see Nagy (2015) 209 – 211, with further references ad loc.

34 Bohak/Saar (2015); cf. Bohak (1999) on parallels between the corpora. Note that one published Coptic text found in the Cairo Genizah, Cambridge UL T-S 12.207 (Crum 1902; TM 99585; KYP M534; X–XI CE?), is used in both Bohak/Saar (2015) and this study.

35 =PGM IV; GEMF 57; KYP M3 (IV CE, Thebes).

36 =GEMF 16; PDM xiv; KYP M162 (IV CE, Thebes).

37 See Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022b).

1.3 Named Individuals in Magical Papyri

Magical names may contain several different categories of names. In formularies, the sections to be copied or recited typically contain a "generic name marker", which indicates where the names of specific individuals are to be copied:

> ἄγε μοι τὴν Δ τῆς Δ πρὸς ἐμέ, τὸν Δ τῆς Δ
>
> Bring to me NN, daughter of NN, to my side, NN, son of NN
>
> PGM IV ll. 1579–1580 (GEMF 57; KYP M3; IV CE)

This usually consists of the word translated here as NN – in Greek and Coptic deina (usually abbreviated as Δ, i. e. δ(ε)ῖ(να)), in Demotic and Coptic mn/nim; these are regularly followed by a second NN, indicating the name of a parent, usually the mother.[38] In Greek and Coptic these are often followed by the word koina ("usual"), probably to be understood as meaning something like "fill in as usual".[39] In practice, relatively few of the recipes in formularies are represented in surviving applied texts;[40] this does not necessarily mean that they were never performed, but is rather an indice that the surviving record is a very small fraction of the manuscripts ever produced – perhaps something in the order of one in eighty-thousand.[41] Nonetheless, applied texts do show evidence of having been copied from similar models, containing the sequence of personal name + parent's name, usually in the places we would expect from formularies, although in a few instances, the placement is more idiosyncratic, suggesting an emendation on the part of the copyist during the creation of the object.[42] In other cases, applied texts may copy the generic name marker, with the copyist apparently unaware that it should be replaced, or else perhaps creating it without a particular individual in mind, although in this case, a more generic phrase, such as "the one who carries this" (ὁ φορῶν), in the case of amulets, should probably have been substituted.[43]

---

38 Dieleman (2010); Curbera (1999). Note that δεῖνα in magical texts is usually treated as indeclinable; cf. Barber (1954) 49.

39 Cf. Zellmann-Rohrer (2020) 37; Dosoo et al. (2022) 84.

40 For examples, see Brashear (1995) 3416–3418, to which may be added, for example, the formulary PCM I 23 ll. 21–43 (KYP M291; TM 99576; 967 CE), with an applied parallel in Chicago OIM E13767 (Stefanski 1939; KYP M7; TM 99574; X–XI CE?).

41 See Scheidel (2001) 142, who calculates this from the ca. 300 census returns on papyrus surviving from 11 to 257 CE of an original ca. 24 million. We might well imagine that the survival rate of magical texts, generally not produced in duplicate sets, and illegal for much of their history, was still lower.

42 See, e. g., P.Oxy. LXV 4469 (KYP M654; TM 58906; V CE), in which a Greek copy of the letter of Abgar to Jesus is interrupted in ll. 21–25 by a brief Coptic invocation including the phrase ⲉⲕⲉⲑⲉⲣⲁⲡⲉⲩⲉ ⲛⲉⲡⲓⲙⲁⲭⲉ ⲡϣⲏⲣⲉ ⲗ[("may you heal Epimakhe, the son of […]").

43 See, e. g., P.CtYBR inv. 1800 qua (ACM 106; KYP M294; VIII CE), a Coptic curse containing the generic name marker in l.14, whose tight folding nonetheless suggests it might have been an applied text. This is quite common in magical gems, perhaps because their more durable nature made it more likely that they would be passed from one user to another; see, e. g., Bonner (1950) 47, 50.

The identity of the individual whose name is to be inserted varies depending on the purpose of the ritual. For amulets and healing texts, the text will contain the name of the client for whom it is created. For curses and separation spells, it will contain the name of the target(s), and less often, the client. Love spells will typically contain the names of both clients and targets. All of these will usually be accompanied by the name of the mother (matronym), less often the name of the father (patronym). A small group of curses in Greek dating to the second to fourth centuries contain the names of the dead individual with whom they are buried, and whom they therefore call upon to enact the curse. These cases seem to be idiosyncratic, with at least one providing clear evidence that the copyist inserted a personal name where the exemplar from which the text was copied read "O corpse-demon, whoever you may be".[44] Christopher Faraone has suggested that this practice of naming the dead spirits, a feature of the pan-Mediterranean binding curse tradition found only in Egypt, may draw upon the older Pharaonic practice of writing letters to dead relatives.[45] Since these names are so rare, I will not consider them in the study here.

The names of deities or other culturally significant figures which appear in texts are treated somewhat differently in them. There are only a few cases where we find phrases comparable to "NN god", in which the copyist is to insert a deity of their choice; more often the texts seem to be composed with specific deities in mind, and to be intended to be copied without being changed, although there is some evidence that copyists might deliberately change the beings invoked, or, more often, simply change the names of less common deities by miscopying.[46] These deities may appear in the texts in several roles. They may be invoked, that is, called upon to fulfill the request contained in the formula. They may be invoked by, that is, used as an authority by which a different invoked being is commanded to obey. They may be otherwise mentioned in an argument or historiola – that is, they may be mentioned as part of a narrative passage or epithet without being directly invoked, or their name may simply appear as part of a sequence of names which are apparently intended to increase the formula's power.[47] Finally, they may be mentioned as hostile beings against whom the invoked being or other agent is to act – a demon causing disease or possession, for example. In this study, my analysis will not, for the most part, consider the role of the deity in the text – rather, I will simply look for mentions of them, since a men-

44 Examples from Egypt are PGM XXXII (KYP M483); SM 37 (KYP M868); SM 47 (KYP M873); SEG XLIX 2382 (KYP M3599); SM 50 (KYP M 876). In the last of these, the phrase ὅστις ποτὲ εἶ, νεκυδαίμων ("whoever you are, corpse-demon", l. 12) has been supplemented by writing the proper name Καμῆς above the line.

45 Faraone (2001) 329–330.

46 See e.g., PGM IV.236–237 (=GEMF 57; KYP M3; TM 64343) in which the practitioner is instructed to address "NN god" (ὅ τις θεός). In GEMF 15.422–423 (=PGM XII.373–374; KYP M144; TM 55954) a separation spell to make two people hate each other, the practitioner is to use the hatred of Typhon and Osiris for an analogy if the two victims are male, but Typhon and Isis if it is for a man and woman.

47 For the concept of the historiola, see Frankfurter (1995).

tion, regardless of their role, does perhaps indicate that the copyist had access to them, and hence perhaps the cosmology they were part of. Finally, it is worth noting a problem with identifying divine names. Magical papyri often contain many voces magicae, the majority of which are apparently unique; even those which seem to be variants of a single name may show significant divergences from one another. It is not even clear if voces magicae are always names; certain texts imply that these were sometimes instead understood to be phrases in a divine language, which contained other classes of words alongside proper nouns.[48] In practice, my analysis here will only take into account the commonly recurring voces, such as Akramakhamari, which usually, though not always, seem to have been understood as names, and whose variants are relatively easy to recognise.[49]

We may briefly note a final way in which individuals appear in magical papyri – as the authors of texts, or as the sources of particular variants of texts (credited in marginalia or integrated notes). These figures – deities such as Hermes-Thoth, or legendary sages, such as Solomon, Orpheus, and Democritus – do not generally appear in the amulets which concern us here, in which the texts are never credited to a particular author.[50]

1.4 Shandruk's "Christian Use of Magic in Late Antique Egypt"

As noted above, Walter Shandruk performed a similar analysis in 2012, looking at 70 applied magical texts in Greek and Coptic dating from the first to the sixth centuries CE.[51] Using the criteria of Bagnall's original article, he identified 28 of the clients as Christian, and found that Christians likely crossed the threshold into being a majority (64 %) by the fourth to fifth century, becoming a significant majority (83 %) by the fifth to sixth.[52] Interestingly, these findings agree more closely with the later study of Depauw and Clarysse than that of Bagnall (whose methodology Shandruk used), with its smaller corpus.

In the second part of his study, he then classified the magical texts as Christian or non-Christian. Christian papyri were defined as those containing Old and New Testa-

48 See, e. g., PGM XIII.159 – 162 (GEMF 60; KYP M161; TM 64446; IV CE) in which the vox magica μενεφωϊφωθ is said to mean προάγω σου κύριε ("I go before you, O Lord"), and the Prayer of Judas Cyriacus (PCM I 11 (Leiden AMS 9) p. 26 l. 24 p. 28 l. 21; ACM 134; KYP M171; TM 100023; VI CE), in which a sequence of voces magicae is said to be Hebrew, and whose extensive translation constitutes the rest of the text.
49 For Akramakhamari, see Brashear (1995) 3578.
50 On named authors in magical papyri, see Dieleman (2005) 263 – 275; Suárez de la Torre (2014). Rare exceptions include the Jesus-Abgar correspondence (on the amuletic use of which see Sanzo (2014) 153 – 154), attributed to Jesus and King Abgar of Edessa, and Columbia inv. 554 (KYP M2; TM 102257; Schiller (1928), cf. van der Vliet (1991) 239 – 241), a prayer in the voice of the Virgin Mary used as an applied amulet.
51 Shandruk (2012).
52 Shandruk (2012) 46.

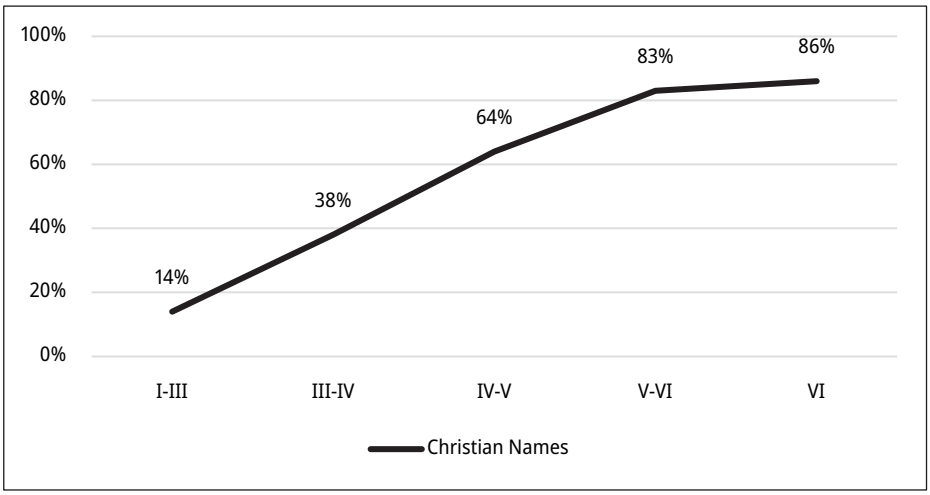

Fig. 1: Estimate of percentage of Christians in applied magical texts after Shandruk (2012) 46; a 1.5 multiplier has been applied to the raw percentages to account for Christians who cannot be identified by their names.

ment figures, citations of the New Testament or Christian apocrypha, Christian doctrinal or liturgical statements, or Christian symbols.[53] Shandruk concluded his analysis by finding that Christians did not display a different use of magical texts from non-Christians: prior to the fourth-fifth century religious transition, they were attested as using both Christian and non-Christian magic. The major change was rather a temporal one, as Christian magical papyri appeared in the fourth century, and then became predominant after the fifth century, changing both the content and the types of texts, with amuletic (protective and healing) texts being more common than aggressive (curse and erotic) texts after Egypt became predominantly Christian.

As Shandruk notes, the interest of this study lies not only in its approach to onomastics, but also in its clarification of the relationship between Christians and the use of magic. As is well known, the Christian traditions were, very nearly from the beginning, consistently opposed to the practice of magic by their adherents.[54] From the Pauline letters (e. g., Galatians 5.19 – 21) to the Didache to later canons, Christians are forbidden to practice magic, an injunction repeated and elaborated upon in numerous theological texts and sermons, inherited in part from contemporary Graeco-Roman norms, and in part from injunctions in the Torah against practices translated into the Greek Septuagint using terms such as mageia, pharmakeia and their cognates.[55]

53 Shandruk (2012) 46 – 53.

54 See e. g., Sanzo (2019).

55 Bohak (2008) 13 – 19; Harari (2019)140 – 148; cf. Sanzo (2019). The magoi in Matthew 2.1 – 12 represent an interesting exception to the general hostility of Christian writers to mageia and its cognates; cf. Hull (1974) 122 – 128; Hein (2021).

At the same time, there are, of course, numerous outsider sources by authors, such as the second-century philosopher Celsus, which accuse Christians of practicing magic, and the accusation was well enough known to Christians that governors in Christian hagiographies repeatedly (albeit wrongly) accuse saints of being magicians.[56] Yet even insider Christian sources confirm that some Christians did practice magic – the canons themselves provide evidence that Christians, including clerics, needed to be forbidden from doing so, and we find very similar sermons complaining of magical practices, such as the recourse to amulets, by Christian flocks from authors across the Roman world in the fourth to sixth centuries – from Ephraim in Syria and Shenoute in Egypt to John Chrysostom in Constantinople and Caesarius of Arles in Gaul.[57] Their definition of magic is perhaps slightly different from ours – amulets containing Biblical texts are explicitly contrasted with forbidden amulets by authors such as Augustine and Chrysostom – but it is clear that their definition would have included many of the more "central" instances of magical texts – those with voces magicae and invocations taking non-canonical forms, and those intended to heal as well as curses and love spells.[58] Shandruk's study of names in magical papyri would thus seem to confirm this picture, including the fact that Christians were indeed using the same magical practices as their non-Christians neighbours in the early centuries CE.

At the same time, Shandruk's study raises some of the more general problems of the subjects he approaches – identifying Christians based on their names, and distinguishing Christian and "non-Christian" material objects. As Frankfurter, and others, such as Wipszycka and Malcolm Choat before him have stressed, names are usually given by parents rather than chosen by children, so that while, en masse, changing onomastic patterns might attest to patterns of conversion, it is more difficult to use individual names to discern the religious identities of those with those names.[59] This goes not only for individuals identified as Christians using Bagnall's methods, but also for those not identifiable as such based on their names, many of whom would likely have been Christians, especially in the later fourth and fifth centuries. This is a serious problem, and one I will discuss at greater length below.

The second problem is that of identifying texts as Christian or non-Christian. While Shandruk's approach is a rich one, taking into account features of both content and 56 See the brief discussions in, e. g., Stratton (2007) 117–120; Bremmer (2003) 54–56; cf. Shandruk (2012) 31–32.

57 For Ephraim, see Beck (1972) vol. 1, 12–27, translation in vol. 2, 18–39; for Shenoute see Orlandi (1985) 18–21 §§255–262; for Chrysostom, see Adversus Judaeos VIII.6–7, text in PG 48 935–939, translation Harkins (1979) 230–232; for Caesarius of Arles, see sermons 13.3–5, 50.1–4, 54.3–5, text in Morin (1953) 66–68, 224–227, 237–239, translation Mueller (1956) 76–79, 253–256, 267–270. For general overviews and discussions of some of these passages, see Vakaloudi (2000); Sanzo (2017); Sanzo (2019); van der Vliet (2019a); Dosoo (2021b) 49–56.

58 For discussions of ancient Christian delineations of magic, see e. g., Sanzo (2014) 160–165; van der Vliet (2019a) 244–254; Dosoo (2021b) 49–56, 63.

59 Bagnall (1982) 329; Wipszycka (1986); Choat (2006) 52–55; Frankfurter (2014); 109; Depauw/Clarysse (2015) 329.

materiality, I find the binary classification somewhat misleading. For example, the sixth-century SM 19 has no scribal marks such as the cross, or names of Christian figures, and thus no explicitly Christian features; it is thus a "non-Christian" text by his definition. But it dates to the sixth century, a period that we would expect to be almost entirely Christian in context, and apart from unique voces magicae, the only recognisable named deities are Damnameneus and Akramakhamari, neither of whom belong to contemporary or near-contemporary Greek or Egyptian cults. Of the two, only Damnameneus has a clear origin, as one of the members of the Idaean dactyls, but the frequent appearance of his name alone in such amulets suggests that the name was rather transmitted through and borrowed from the well-known apotropaic sequence known as the Ephesia Grammata, the "Ephesian letters".[60] Akhramakhamari is known only from magical texts and Christian "gnostic" texts;[61] both he and Damnameneus are found both in pre-fourth century Greek magical and in Coptic magical texts as late as the eighth century.[62] Later the text invokes "the one who sits over the cherubim and seraphim" – a clear reference to the Jewish-Christian god, originating in the Bible, and taken up in liturgical texts.[63] While references to gods sitting over the cherubim are present in older Graeco-Egyptian magical texts, they are also found, and indeed more common, in later Christian magical texts.[64] Far from being clearly "non-Christian", then, the text has features found in both pre- and post-fifth century, Christian Egypt. Even more striking is the case of SM 10, a third or fourth century amulet for a woman whose mother's name, Sara, suggests she may have been a Christian; it contains an image of an ouroboros and mention of the common voces Semesilam, Albanathanalba, Akhramakhamari, and Sesengen Barpharanges, and Phre (Egyptian pꜣ rʿ, "the sun (god)"), but seems to primarily invoke the Jewish god, named as Adonai Eloai Sabaoth, and his angels Ouriel, Michael, Gabriel, Souriel, and Raphael. My impression is that this amulet would have been understood as entirely acceptable by many Christians, who would have seen its voces magicae as simply secret names for God and his angels, yet, according to Shandruk's criteria, it is once again non-Christian.[65]

Measuring the religious belonging of a text in a way which can be incorporated into a statistical analysis is therefore not an easy or uncontroversial proposition. In this study I will attempt to do so by focusing on the frequency of particular names over time, such as Damnameneus or cherubim. This has the disadvantage, compared 60 On Damnameneus and the Ephesia Grammata, see Brashear (1995) 3583 – 3584; Bernabé (2013) 88 – 89 et passim.

61 For Akramakhamari, see Brashear (1995) 3578.

62 For late appearances of these names, see e. g., P.Macq. I 1 p. 10 ll. 13 – 14, 19 (Choat/Gardner 2013; KYP M167; TM 113926; VII–VIII CE); P.Ryl.Copt. 103 l. 28 (ACM 115; KYP M298; TM 100005; X–XI CE).

63 Cf. Eichler 2014.

64 Within the corpus examined here (see 3.1 below), references to the cherubim appear in the fourth century, and peak in the sixth century, a pattern that we might expect if their appearance were linked to the rise of Christianity.

65 Shandruk (2012) 48 no. 27.

to Shandruk's approach, of neglecting scribal features such as the use of crosses, but these latter are perhaps better understood, in at least some cases, as indices of the training of the scribe than the religious identity or content of the text – a later eighth century narrative charm centring around a story about of Horus and Isis begins with two crosses, and adds two more at the end of the recto and of the text.[66] The crosses indicate that this manuscript was certainly produced by a copyist trained in a Christian environment, but the contents are not straightforwardly describable as Christian. Focusing on names, though imperfect as an approach, nonetheless allows a more nuanced classification of texts – rather than imposing a Christian/non-Christian binary, it is able to consider all the different names present in particular manuscripts, and understand texts as potentially drawing simultaneously upon multiple religious traditions, of which Christianity may be one.

1.5 Known Copyists, Owners, and Users of Magical Papyri

Before examining the names in applied magical texts en masse, it is worth briefly reviewing named individuals who copied, owned, and used surviving magical papyri, about whom archaeological context or other information allows us to say a little more, in order to provide a richer picture of who these people might have been. I exclude here individuals known from literary texts, such those named in Zacharias of Mytilene's Life of Severos of Antioch,[67] and authors such as Galen and other medical writers, who reproduce or describe magical recipes which they owned or had encountered.[68]

The earliest individual known to me is Aurēlius Philammōn, whose notebook survives in the form of an idiosyncratic codex dating to the years 357–359.[69] Philammōn was responsible for the collection of the tax known as the annonia militaris in the area of Hermopolis, and though most of the texts in his notebook relate to this practice, others consist of trial reports – perhaps for the study of law, or to read for entertainment, in the fashion of modern detective or court dramas[70] – and nearly twenty magical texts. The most recent editors suggest that he may have been collecting these as evidence for a trial in which their original owners would be charged with magic,[71] but there is no clear reason to think this from the way the texts are copied – they are laid out like other magical recipes, and have no annotations or comments highlighting features of legal interest. It is likewise not clear why he would have copied them in 66 BKU I 1 (ACM 49; KYP M76; VII–VIII CE).

67 Life of Severos 74–102, in Kugener (1907) 57–76, English translation in Brock/Fitzgerald (2013) 64–74, cf. the discussion in Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022b) 74, 68 Cf. Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022b) 24–26; Bohak (2016) 367–369.

69 See Poethke et al. (2012); cf. Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022b) 96–97; Faraone (2022) 435–437.

70 Kanavou/Papathomas (2016).

71 Poethke et al. (2012) 131–133.

full for this purpose rather than simply making brief notes or confiscating the originals; the possession of magical texts itself was a crime according to contemporary Roman law, so by including them in his own notebook in the context of a legal persecution of magic, Philammōn could have been running a risk himself.[72] It seems more likely, as Christopher Faraone has suggested, that he intended to use the texts for his own purposes.[73] They consist of a fairly typical range of interests – a victory charm, a silencing curse, a love spell, a favour charm, and several healing procedures using Homeric verses. Two of the healing charms are specifically for healing female complaints –breasts or uterine pain, and uterine bleeding, and Faraone notes that these may have been intended to help the women of his household.[74] In terms of their content, it is difficult to classify these texts as "pagan" or "Christian"; there are several typical voces magicae, but few names which can be associated with any cults. On one page we find Iaō, Abrasax, and perhaps Albanathanalba,[75] but these names are too ubiquitous in Graeco-Egyptian, as well as Christian magic, to interpret in the absence of other indicators. There is an unmistakeably Egyptian god, the solar scarab deity Khepri, in the Hellenised form Khphuris, but its context – in a short sequence of voces magicae including Lailam and Semesilam – makes it difficult to see a deep connection to Egyptian theology.[76] The editors note that "Apollo" features in one text, but this is in a Homeric citation, and thus not particularly telling;[77] the Homeric epics continued to be read (and used for magic) by Christians into the Middle Ages and beyond.[78] The favour spell does contain an invocation to Helios, but the format – a chairetismos consisting of a series of acclamations beginning "hail" (khaire) is very familiar from later Christian texts, and the sun (hēlios) continued to play an important role in Christianity, as a personified celestial body who was part of God's creation, rather than a deity.[79] While the text later refers to the almighty (pantokratōr) it is not clear that this title is applied to the sun, and it later contains several typically Jewish-Christian names – Iaō, Sabaōth, and Mikhaēl. Once again, this text would not be out of place in a later handbook written in either Greek or Coptic. I thus agree with the authors that it is unclear if the codex should be classified as "pagan" or "Christian", and it tends rather to suggest that such a classification would not necessarily meaningful.[80] Philammōn's name like-

72 See Pauli sententiae; 5.23.18; on magic in Roman law, see Rives (2003); Rives (2006).
73 Faraone (2022) 435–437.
74 Faraone (2022) 436.
75 BGU IV 1026 p. 9, ll. 4, 14, 18, in Poethke et al. (2012) 33.
76 See Thissen (2006) 630–631 n. 12. Lailam and Semesilam are names with solar associations, and so are appropriate in a sequence with Khepri, even if their origin is likely Semitic; cf. Brashear (1995) 3590, 3598.
77 BGU IV 1026 p. 22, l. 14, a citation of Iliad 1.75, in Poethke et al. (2012) 46, cf. comments on pp. 135–137.
78 Cf. Zellmann-Rohrer (2016) 6–7.
79 BGU IV 1026 p. 23, l. 17 in Poethke et al. (2012) 124; cf. the discussion in Zellmann-Rohrer/Love (2022) 268–274; similar phraseology may be found in the later texts P.CtYBR inv. 1791 recto ll. 11–12; P. Köln XV 640 recto ll. 1–2. For the sun in Christian thought, see e.g., Augustine, Sermones de scripturis 120.2.
80 Poethke et al. (2012) 46, cf. comments on pp. 135–137.

wise gives no clear idea of his religious affiliation. The original Philammōn was a semi-divine musician of the heroic age, whose name many have been interpreted in the Roman period as a theophoric name containing the name of the god Amun in its hellenised form Ammōn,[81] but our Philammōn might have been named after an older family member of the same name rather than the hero or god. His father's name, Hermes, is likewise theophoric. There are thus no onomastic grounds for thinking Philammōn was Christian, but neither would it have been unlikely; he served as an imperial functionary in an Egypt ruled by a Christian emperor, Constantius II, and living as a Christian might have been advantageous for his career, regardless of his personal beliefs. The work of Depauw and Clarysse would tend to suggest that just under half of the inhabitants of Egypt were Christian at the time the codex was copied;[82] there is thus a strong chance that Philammōn was Christian, even though he used magical texts which were not explicitly Christian, but the chance is not so strong as to be a certainty.

The next named magic users are inhabitants of the town of Kellis, in the Dakhla Oasis, 350 kilometres west of the Nile Valley. They were residents of Area A House 4, living among at least two extended families consisting of at least 36 individuals, attested in the late fourth century.[83] These inhabitants were highly literate, and when they abandoned their house in the 390s, left behind part of a large archive of material written in Greek, Coptic, and Syriac.[84] Among these manuscripts are several magical texts, both formularies and applied texts. One handbook contains a list of healing procedures, which incorporate various voces magicae, two of which may perhaps be identified as the names of the Egyptian deities Ptah and Renenutet.[85] One of the recipes has been recopied as an amulet for Pamour son of Lo, a family member known from other texts.[86] Two other damaged amulets have been found in the house, one for Pamour[87] – either the son of Lo, or a different individual with the same name (rather common in Kellis)[88] – and another for a woman probably called Elake, a name and individual oth-

81 Swinnen (1968); Benaissa (2009) 72–73; Cuvigny (2018) §§86–90; cf. Dunand (1963).

82 Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 431–435.

83 The literature on Kellis is considerable; see recently Brand (2021); Teigen (2021); Hope/Bowen (2022); Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022a) 42–54, with further bibliography therein; cf. also the discussion in Shandruk (2012) 37–38.

84 Bowen (2015) 233–234.

85 P. Kell. I 85 b l. 17, reconstructed by reference to P. Kell. I 87 l. 1.

86 P. Kell. I 87.

87 P. Kellis inv. 92.35.b, see Worp (1995) 218 n.l. 16.

88 Worp (1995) 51 distinguishes three individuals named Pamour in House 3 alone, one in each of three generations. The etymology of Pamour is unclear; Alcock (2004) suggests ⲡⲁ-(ⲗ)ⲙⲟⲩⲣ "he of Amor (i.e., Syria)", although the loanword ⲁⲙⲟⲩⲣ is otherwise unattested in Coptic. Gardner et al. (1999) 36 propose an alternative derivation from ⲙⲟⲩⲣ ("bond"), for which they suggest an extended sense of "oath, vow". The name is probably derived from Μοῦρ, also of uncertain meaning, attested in several other Greek manuscripts from Kellis (e.g., O.Kellis 61 l. 2; O.Kellis 83 l. 1). Publication of other texts from Kellis in older stages of the Egyptian language may help to clarify the origin of these names; perhaps cf. the names with the uncertain Demotic readings Pasherpamerhu and Tapamerhu mentioned by Günter Vittmann in Hope/Bowen (2022) 197.

erwise unknown.[89] Finally, there is a spell to separate a couple, copied as part of a letter by a man named Valens to another named Pshai, the latter known to have been a member of the household, on Pshai's request; he likely intended to use it himself.[90] This text is more clearly Jewish or Christian, calling upon the Jewish god and referring to several of his Biblical deeds. The individuals who used these texts do not seem to have worked primarily as magicians, or any other type of ritual practitioner; rather they appear to have been literate artisans and traders, primarily concerned with the production and sale of textiles.[91] As in the case of Philammōn, these were texts which they may have simply wanted to use themselves, either for personal or familial gain, or as a side practice. What is most interesting about these individuals, however, is that we know from their correspondence, and other documents, that they were practicing Manichaeans. Again, magical practice and religious identity does not neatly align; the healing recipes are typical of older Graeco-Egyptian magic, and although the separation spell could be seen as Christian – and Manichaeans in the Roman Empire seem to have at least partially identified as Christian[92] – it is not clearly the product of a specifically Manichaean community. The names of the household likewise leave their religious identity almost invisible. Of the 36 individuals apparently belonging to the household, only 6 (16.7%) have recognisably Christian names, such as Iōhannes (John), or Makarios.[93] Interestingly, all but one of these belong to closely-related members of one of the families – the other family, to which Pamour and Pshai both belonged, have one member with a Christian name (Andreas) in the youngest attested generation, with most members instead using the recurrent family names of which Pamour and Pshai are two examples, and of which at least the latter originated in the local native Egyptian cults.[94] The two families, despite both apparently being Manichaean and exactly contemporary, show very different onomastic practices: the religious affiliation of Pamour's family are onomastically invisible, while those of Iōhannes' family are immediately obvious, albeit pointing to a generically Christian, rather than specifically Manichaean, identity.

From the late fifth century is the archive of Phoibammōn of Naqlun, a hermit who lived in a hermitage just over a kilometre from the Monastery of the Archangel Gabriel.[95] Among his papers, in Greek and Coptic, are three magical texts, only one of which

89 P. Kell. I 86.

90 P. Kellis V 35 (= PCM I 1), cf. the discussion in Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022a) 50–53, with bibliography ad loc.

91 Teigen (2021) 75–79.

92 Pedersen (2013); cf. Brand (2021) 144–148; Teigen (2021) 13–19.

93 For figure 36 and a discussion of the relationships between the individuals, see the prosopography of Brand (2021) 332–343; the "Christian names" are Theognōstos, Makarios, Matthaios, Maria (twice), and Andreas.

94 For Pshai, see Kaper (2003) 118–120, likely an indirect reference to the cult of the primary local deity Tutu; for the more complex case of Pamour, cf. fn. 88 above.

95 On this individual and his context, see van der Vliet (2000); Godlewski (2000), with further bibliography ad loc.

has been published – an applied curse against a man named Biktōr (i. e., Victor).[96] The text invokes various angels, including Atrakh and Moutrakh, described as being the great angels on the right and left of the sun. Although it does not mention orthodox Christian figures, the centrality of angels is suggestive of the Christian context to which it certainly belongs. A second text contains an image of an animal-headed figure, reminiscent of donkey-headed figures of Seth-Typhon sometimes found in separation spells and curses; the triangular form of the manuscript is perhaps suggestive of the former, since there is at least one other Coptic separation spell in the form of a triangle, perhaps intended to evoke the form of a knife which might "cut" a relationship.[97] The last text is a series of recipes in Greek and Coptic for healing various conditions and for reconciling a man with his unfaithful wife.[98] These are all written in different hands, and so while it is not certain that Phoibammōn himself, and/or his disciple(s), used them, it is quite possible that they did. Phoibammōn would thus be a clear example of a Christian religious professional, specifically a monk, who did practice magic – something attested by Church canons, and often assumed to be the norm for magical practitioners in Christian Egypt by modern scholars.[99] As an anchorite, we would expect Phoibammōn to be a devoted Christian, even if, at this remove of time, we cannot be certain about the exact content of his beliefs. Again, though, his name would not reveal this – it is a theophoric name referring to the syncretised solar deities Phoebus and Amun.[100] In his case, however, it is almost certain that he is named after one of the two martyr saints of this name, who were widely venerated in Egypt from the fifth or sixth century onwards.[101] This increasing prominence of saint names of pagan origin from the fifth century onwards is something we must be aware of, a feature not taken into account in the model of Depauw/Clarysse, which focused on the fourth to fifth centuries.[102]

The next figure is Dioskoros of Aphrodito, the estate manager, lawyer, notary, and poet of sixth-century Aphrodito whose huge archives, in Greek and Coptic, provide us with significant information about his family and home region.[103] Despite his name, referring to the divine twins the Dioskoroi, we know he was a Christian;[104] his father, Apollos, likewise lacks a name which we can conclusively label as Christian. It is none-

96 Naqlun N. 45/95 edited in van der Vliet (2000).

97 Van der Vliet (2000) 321; for donkey-headed figures in magical texts, see Dosoo (2022) 125–128 with further references ad loc.

98 Van der Vliet (2000) 321.

99 Cf. Dosoo (2021b) 55–56; Piwowarczyk (2024).

100 Cf. Dunand (1963). Benaissa (2009) 72–73 suggests that "the element -άμμων was so common as to have become degraded to a mere grammaticalized suffix for theophoric names".

101 Papaconstantinou (2001) 218–228.

102 Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 218–219; cf. Blumell (2012) 265–277.

103 For overviews, see Fournet (1999); Fournet (2015); MacCoull (1988).

104 Cf. MacCoull (1988) 110, who speculates on the possibly specifically Miaphysite associations of two potential namesakes – Patriarch Dioskoros I and Shenoute of Atripe. She suggests that Dioskoros, "child of Zeus", could be considered an approximate calque of Shenoute, "child of god".

theless likely that they do have Christian namesakes – Apollos named after the figure of the same name from the book of Acts (18.24–27),[105] Dioskoros after the Patriarch of Alexandria whose episcopacy lasted from 444–458.[106] Among Dioskoros' archive is a brief prayer to God for protection from demons, whose style and contents are very close to other magical texts, invoking the Lord Almighty, Iaō Sabaō Brinthaō.[107] Though not necessarily orthodox in its formulation, it is clearly Christian. It is unclear if Dioskoros composed it himself, drawing inspiration from amulets he had seen, or copied it from a pre-existing source, and whether he intended to use it, or had copied it only for its interesting style and vocabulary. It is worth noting that Dioskoros, like the patriarch who was his namesake, was likely a member of the majority Miaphysite (later "Coptic") branch of the church in Egypt, considered a heretical offshoot by the Chalcedonian Church which enjoyed imperial support.[108] The subtle, albeit deeply meaningful, theological differences which divided these groups are likewise not apparent in this text.

The final two individuals to be mentioned here are the copyists of substantial Coptic magical texts dating to the tenth and eleventh centuries, Iōhannes and Raphaē, who each identify themselves as deacons in texts dating to 967 and 1035 respectively.[109] Little else is known of them; Iōhannes calls himself a "servant of Michael" – probably indicating that he belonged to an institution dedicated to the archangel apparently located in the otherwise unknown site of Pcellēt, almost certainly in the Faiyum.[110] In contrast to the earlier individuals we have considered, Iōhannes and Raphaē have clearly Christian names (forms of John and Raphael), and their belonging to the Church is confirmed by their profession of deacon. The texts they copied are clearly Christian in inspiration; Iōhannes copies several invocations and prayers addressed to, and often said to be composed by, Christian superhuman figures, including the Trinity and saints.[111] Raphaē copies a list of procedures to be used in conjunction with the Psalms, a type of magic common in the later Christian and Jewish communities of the Near East and Europe.[112] At the same time, it is unclear what their relationship with the texts was – were they copied for their own use, or, like most surviving manuscripts 105 Cf. 1 Corinthians 3.4–6, 10.12, 16.12; Titus 3.13.

106 Cf. n. 104 above.

107 P.Cair.Masp. II 67188 v ll. 1–5 (=PGM 13a; KYP M436)

108 Cf. n. 104 above.

109 PCM I 23=P. Bad. V 137, for which see Gardner/Johnston (2019); Dosoo/Preininger (2023) 274–279; the second manuscript is Collège de France Ms. 3 (KYP M597); cf. the discussions in MacCoull (1987); Jordan (2001).

110 Cf. Gardner/Johnston (2019) 48 & Gardner (2023) 75–76, although here they understand ⲡⲥⲉⲗⲗⲏⲧ as a form of ⲡⲉⲧⲥⲁⲗⲏⲟⲩⲧ "the one assigned (i.e., to copy the manuscript)". For the understanding as a placename, see van der Vliet (2005b) 277; Dosoo et al. (2022) s.v. KYP T24; Dosoo/Preininger (2023) 259–260, 279.

111 E.g., PCM I 25 (=P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 685; a prayer attributed to Mary on pp. 1–12; editio princeps in Meyer (1996); KYP M 186; TM 102074); PCM I 26 (P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 686, prayer attributed to Michael; editio princeps in Kropp (1966); KYP 166; TM 100022); cf. Gardner/Johnston (2019) 32.

112 Cf. Zellmann-Rohrer (2018); (2022).

with colophons, for patrons who paid for the reproduction of texts to be dedicated in the library of a religious institution?[113]

This overview has further emphasised some of the problems already raised when reviewing Shandruk's work – most of the individuals discussed here were Christians, but few would have been identified as such based on their names alone. The texts they use are likewise often difficult to clearly characterise as "pagan", "Christian", or "non-Christian", although most include Jewish-Christian figures, as well as those known exclusively from the magical tradition, and, in the case of the Kellis texts, a few Graeco-Egyptian deities. This would tend to confirm the impression that it was the types of texts available to users which changed over time, with Christians driving this change, but nonetheless using those texts available in their time and place regardless of their religious elements.

2 Personal Names in Magical Papyri

2.1 Overview of Corpus

It is now time to examine the names found in magical texts from Egypt. The Kyprianos Database of Ancient Ritual Texts and Objects was created by the project Coptic Magical Papyri: Vernacular Religion in Late Roman and Early Islamic Egypt in 2018, and as of the first of January 2022, it contained 162 applied magical manuscripts from Egypt written in Greek (97 manuscripts) and/or Coptic (67 manuscripts),[114] dating to between the second and twelfth centuries CE and containing personal names. This is the largest existing corpus of magical texts in these languages, including all the examples from the major published corpora, as well as numerous examples published individually, and several manuscripts which remain unpublished at present, but whose contents are well enough known to me to have allowed the extraction of the relevant data. There are no published applied magical texts in Demotic or Hieratic containing personal names from this period known to me,[115] and while it might have been desirable to include Arabic texts, these have not yet been systematically added to Kyprianos, and in any case, would likely be less useful for the purposes of determining religious change for reasons discussed in detail below (2.3). As noted above, these 'applied texts' are those created in the course of a specific ritual, as opposed to handbooks (or formularies) which contain instructions for carrying out rituals.

113 Cf. Soldati (2018).

114 Two manuscripts – P.Köln X 425 (KYP M471; TM 69038; V–VI CE); P.Oxy. LXV 4469 (KYP M654; TM 58906; V CE) – were bilingual, containing both Coptic and Greek; one Cambridge UL T-S 12.207 (Crum 1902; TM 99585; KYP M534; X–XI CE?) is bilingual Coptic-Arabic, with the Arabic section transliterated into Coptic characters.

115 The applied Demotic love spell described in Ritner/Scalf (2019) dates to the late first to second century, and so could have been included had it been fully published.

Note that some texts had to be excluded from the analysis. These include those which are duplicates – produced for a single client, often by a single scribe, and containing identical or near identical texts; these are understood here as single datapoints spread across two or more manuscripts.[116]

Tab. 1: Analysis of ritual purposes in the corpus of applied magical texts containing personal names in Greek and Coptic dating from the second to twelfth centuries CE.

Superordinate Category	Subordinate Category	Number of Texts
Amuletic	Healing/Protection	88
	Favour	4
Total Amuletic		92
Aggressive	Curse	35
	Love	27
	Separation	7
Total Aggressive		69
Divination		1
Total		162

The purposes of most of these manuscripts may be divided into two overarching categories – amuletic and aggressive – each further subdivided into more precise types. One manuscript did not fit into either of these categories – this is SM 66 (KYP M889; TM 92331; III–IV CE), a bowl inscribed with an invocation for a spirit to enter an individual named Alexandros in a divination ritual. While divination rituals of this type are common in the Graeco-Egyptian magical corpus, they do not generally require the creation of a written text which specifies their purpose – more common are amulets to protect the practitioner during the performance of rituals[117] – and so this would appear to be the only surviving example of an applied divinatory text.

Amuletic texts include those intended to protect or heal the user from diseases, demons, the evil eye, harmful magic, and so on as well as those intended to bring favour – that is, general good luck, charisma, success, or favour before a superior. Aggressive texts are in turn subdivided into three categories: curses, intended to harm or incapa-

116 The excluded manuscripts are the two curses of Sabinos (KYP M883 & M884; see Björck (1938)), the Asyut Bone Curse Dossier (KYP M456, 535, and 1159; see Dosoo (2021d)), the "Theodoros-Matrona" Dossier (SM 49–51); each of these was treated as a single manuscript for the purposes of subsequent analyses (cf. Shandruk (2012) 42). In each of these cases, the religious content of all texts from the dossiers were included in the analyses discussed below (3.1–3) One applied text was dated to the first century (SM 52; KYP M878; TM 32622), but this was excluded from the analysis, since it would be the only published manuscript from its century.

117 Cf. Dosoo (2014) 384–286.

citate an enemy; love spells, intended to make the target fall in love with and/or submit to the sexual desires of the user; and separation spells, intended to separate a couple, or cause strife between friends or family members.

Before discussing the basic diachronic tendencies of the corpus, it is worth highlighting one of its features that makes it more problematic to use for onomastic analysis than documentary texts, that of dating. Magical formularies rarely, and applied texts never, specify the date of their production, and applied texts are very rarely written as palimpsests upon documentary texts which might contain this information – as objects intended to be imbued with power, it seems that scribes usually preferred to use fresh supports.[118] This means that the entire corpus may only be dated palaeographically, usually within 1–2 centuries for Greek texts; with Coptic texts, the dating may be even less precise, with editors at times only suggesting manuscripts are "early", for example, or even declining to propose dates. The Coptic Magical Papyri project has managed to improve upon the dating of many of the manuscripts studied here, but the problem still remains – we are dealing with a picture of religious change with a resolution of one to two centuries. By contrast, modern demographers prefer to use five-year blocks.[119] However, the names contained by the manuscripts are only used as dating criteria in exceptionally rare cases,[120] and so we should not expect the results to reflect pre-existing assumptions about the distribution of names; rather, if the datings are incorrect, we would expect randomness.

While the manuscripts date to between the second and twelfth centuries CE, their distribution over time is not consistent. Greek manuscripts are attested in significant numbers from the second until the sixth century, at which point their numbers decline significantly, and almost completely disappear by the eighth. This is more or less what we would expect – the Arab conquest in 642 separated Egypt from the Greek-speaking Eastern Roman Empire, and established Arabic as a competing elite language, whose use in the administration was introduced and gradually enforced over the course of the eighth century. Coptic texts appear in the fourth century,[121] and co-exist alongside Greek ones, overtaking them in the seventh century before declining over the eleventh and twelfth centuries as the population becomes increasingly Islamicised – with Christians converting to Islam – and Arabised – with even those who remained Christian increasingly speaking and writing in Arabic.[122] We may note that this pattern is slightly different than that found in magical texts as a whole – previous analyses which includ-

118 Cf. Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022b) 114–116.

119 Wildman et al. (2021) 170.

120 See, e.g., Love (2021) 196–197, which considers onomastic evidence as one of a number of features relevant for dating.

121 Note that I exclude from consideration here the "Old Coptic Schmidt Papyrus" (ACM 1; KYMP M524: TM 92845; II CE), a petition to the god Osiris, dating perhaps to the second century, which some consider to be an applied curse; I consider it to belong rather to the Egyptian tradition of "letters to gods", for which see Love (2022b); Love (2023).

122 For a helpful overview of language change, see Richter (2008).

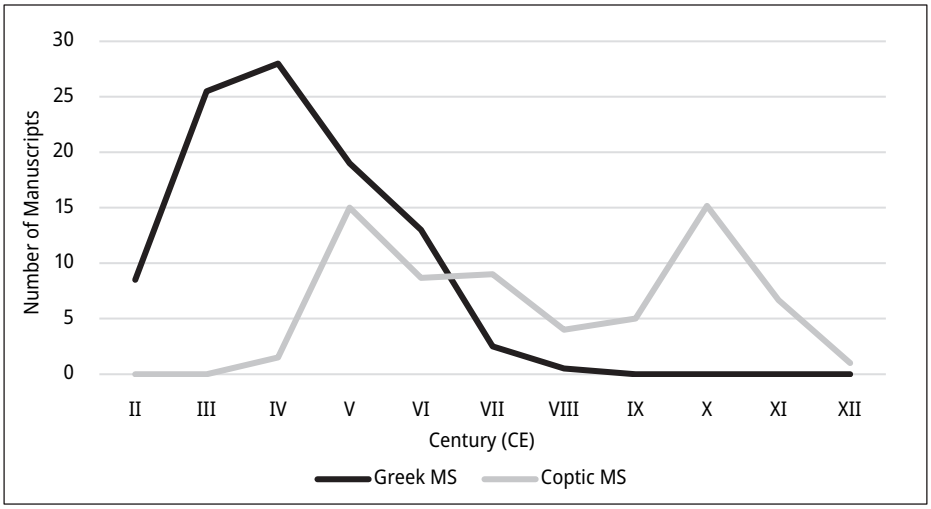

Fig. 2: Number of applied magical manuscripts containing personal names per century in Greek and Coptic.

ed formularies have found Coptic overtaking Greek in the sixth century;[123] it is likely the case that Greek applied texts – generally shorter than the recipes contained in formularies, and susceptible to mechanical copying rather than requiring advanced reading skills – might have continued to be produced for longer in Egypt than Greek formularies.

If we look at the temporal distribution of amuletic and aggressive texts, we can clearly see the pattern already noted by Shandruk – the decline of aggressive practices over time.[124] While aggressive applied texts dominate the second and third centuries, by the fourth they are in steady decline, and by the fifth they have been relegated to about 20 % of the corpus, remaining at approximately this level until their disappearance in the twelfth century. As Shandruk suggests, we might see here a shift brought about by the Christianisation of Egypt – a move away from the aggressive techniques which would be harder to justify within a Christian worldview.

The patterns are slightly different, though, when we distinguish the different kinds of aggressive practices. Amuletic texts remain the most common for all periods, except for the second century, when they are outnumbered by love spells. The use of amuletic texts would seem to follow the overall pattern of the attestation of the corpus – peaking in the fifth century and then declining, with a smaller peak in the tenth. Love spells are quite well attested in the second through fourth centuries, then decline consider-

123 For other discussions of temporal changes in the corpus of magical texts, see Dosoo et al. (2022) 63–66; Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022b) 66–69; Dufault (2023) 384.

124 Shandruk (2012) 50–53.

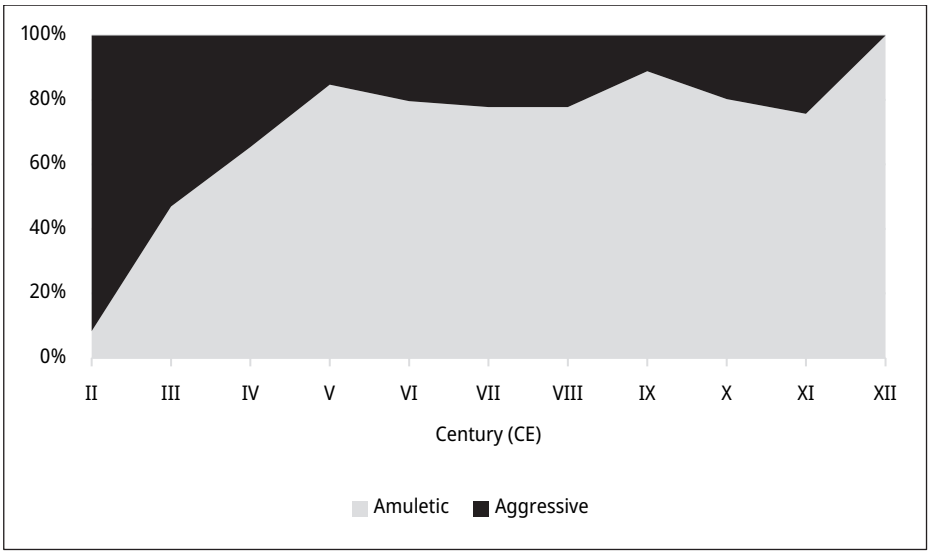

Fig. 3: Change in content of surviving applied manuscripts in Greek and Coptic over time (percentages).

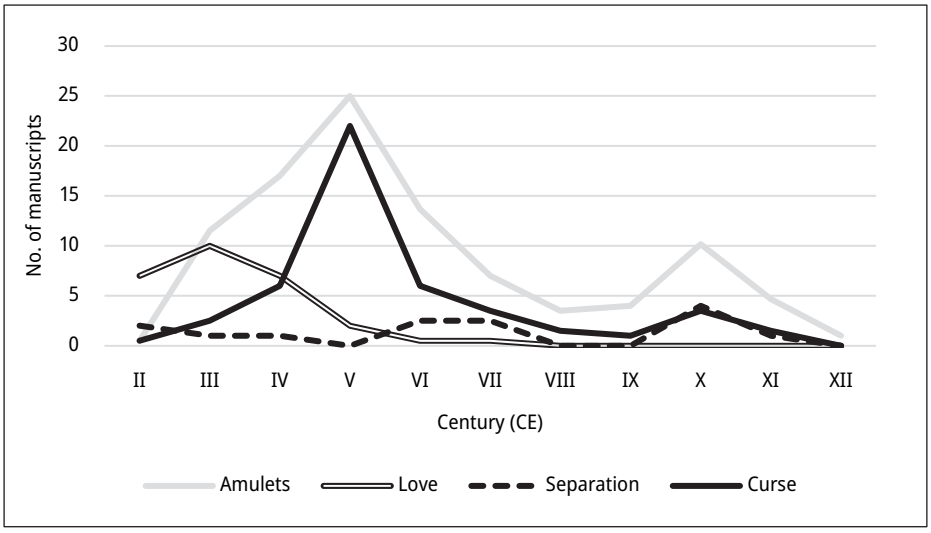

Fig. 4: Change in content of surviving applied manuscripts in Greek and Coptic over time.

ably; there is only one published applied Coptic love spell.[125] Separation spells, though less common, show a rather different pattern – they are best attested in Coptic manuscripts of the sixth and seventh, and then tenth centuries. Curses are fairly well attested from the fourth century onwards, with a noticeable decline in the sixth century, and then a small peak in the tenth, following the general trends of the corpus. These tendencies seem more difficult to explain by reference to Christianisation – why do curses peak in the fifth century, and why do separation spells only appear in significant numbers after Christianisation? There are a number of possible answers; many of the fifth century curses seem closer to Henk Versnel's category of prayers for justice than the earlier Greek binding curses, and are highly Christian in their worldview; there may have been a brief window in which Egyptian Christians decided that these represented legitimate, and non-magical practices.[126] It may also be that separating the object of your affection from an existing partner was seen as safer than trying to attract them directly under Christian hegemony, and the stricter laws of the post-Diocletianic Roman order.[127] Separation spells, like curses, typically contain only the names of the targets, in contrast to love spells, which also contain the name of the client for whom they are made, rendering the finding of one of these objects potentially dangerous for the commissioner. At the same time, it is worth noting that formularies from the post-fifth century Christian period – overwhelmingly in Coptic – provide ample evidence for ongoing interest in aggressive magic.[128] It is possible that these generated traces which are invisible in the archaeological record: while some prescribe creating texts to be buried, this is often at the victim's house rather than in a grave, and, since most of the archaeological work in Egypt focuses on tomb and temple sites, these would be less likely to be found. Indeed, the object to be deposed at the victim's house is often not a text at all, but rather a liquid or other substance over which a formula has been spoken.[129] The shift may therefore be less one of the type of practice deen ABDUA 103249 (KYP M1213); this latter, not taken into account in this analysis, is interesting in that it contains the personal name Cipraēl (ⲥϫⲓⲡⲣⲁⲏⲗ), likely a writing of the Arabic personal name Ǧibrīl, the equivalent of Graeco-Coptic Gabriēl (cf. Legendre (2014) 348). Slightly less than 10% of the recipes in Coptic-language formularies are love spells (54/620=8.7%), but their representation in applied texts is less than a sixth of that, 1.4% (3/211) (Dosoo et al. (2022) 61). The fact that they are found in formularies throughout the period of attestation of Coptic manuscripts implies to my mind that such rituals continued to be used to a significant degree, even if they are less attested in applied texts.

125 The only published applied love spell in Coptic is Ashmolean AN 1981.940 (=ACM 84; KYP M5); other, unpublished, manuscripts which may be applied love spells are Columbia inv. 556 (KYP M569), and Aber-

126 "Prayers for justice" are framed as petitions to deities to ask for retribution or restitution of a wrong suffered by the client, and Versnel suggests they should be primarily understood as a type of 'religious prayer' rather than a magical practice. On these, see, e.g., Versnel (1991); Versnel (2010); Martín Hernández (2013); cf. Gordon (2013) 266–269; Love (2022b) 86–222. My impression is that Versnel's division works quite well for the Coptic-language material. Coptic examples might include, e.g., IFAO Copte 449 (KYP M26; TM 99596); P.Hermitage Copt. 70 (KYP M60; TM 99580); P.Mich.Inv. 1523 (ACM 108; KYP M71; TM 99995).

127 Cf. n. 72 above.

128 See Dosoo et al. (2022) 61; curses represent 100/620 recipes surveyed there, i.e., 16.1%.

129 See, e.g., PCM I 30 ro. ll. 1–4 (=P.Heid.Kopt. 4; KYP M43; TM 832290; X–XI CE); PCM I 31 ro l. 36–40 (=editio princeps in Stegemann (1938); KYP M366; TM 113762; X–XI CE); BM EA 10391 vo ll. 79–80 (ACM 127; KYP M302; TM 100015).

than of the nature of practice – from graveyards to domestic deposition sites, and from written texts to empowered unwritten objects.

In terms of geographical origin, the distribution follows the tendencies of manuscripts from first millennium Egypt more generally; the majority have no precise provenance recorded, while large numbers come from Oxyrhynchus (or Middle Egypt more broadly), which saw considerable excavation in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, with smaller but still significant numbers from the Faiyum and the Theban region, likewise areas with large ancient settlements in marginal locations which were heavily exploited by archaeologists and treasure hunters over the last two centuries. Smaller numbers come from other locations in Egypt, with only one, a metal curse tablet found in Alexandria, from Egypt north of Cairo.

Tab. 2: Applied magical texts in Coptic and Greek by provenance (where known).

Origin	No. of texts
Middle Egypt (inc. Oxyrhynchus)	25
Faiyum	14
Theban Region (inc. “Upper Egypt”)	11
Hermopolis/Antinoopolis	6
Achmim (Panopolis)/Atripe	5
Heracleopolite Nome	3
Memphis /Cairo/Saqqara	3
Kellis	3
Asyut (Lycopolis)	2
Alexandria	1

2.2 Personal Names and Methodology

The names of human (as opposed to superhuman) individuals contained in these texts have been divided into four categories – clients and targets, and parents of clients and parents of targets. The basic results are as follows: 371 named individuals were identified in the corpus, of whom 139 were clients, 93 targets, 87 the parents of clients, 50 the parents of targets, and 2 the grandmothers of clients. Since some individuals had multiple names, the number of names was higher than the number of individuals, and as a result there were 378 name tokens (that is, instances of names). However, since names are often recurrent, this could be reduced to 268 unique name types, of which 136 were female, 120 male, 1 either male or female, and 11 of uncertain gender. This discrepancy in gender is largely due to the gender of parents – because most named parents are mothers, the corpus contains 162 males, and 200 females. Yet, if we examine the data statistically, removing this bias, we can see that male names are slightly more diverse than female names – a random sample of 100 men would have 74.7 different names, whereas 100 women would have only 68.5 names; we will see that in certain subgroups the divergence is greater still.

In terms of gender balance more broadly, 98 clients were male, and 44 female, while of client parents, 6 were male, and at least 81 female.[130] Of targets, 56 were male, 37 female, and one of undetermined gender, while of target parents, 3 were male, and at least 43 female.[131] There are a few initial comments to make here. First, men are better represented among both clients and targets than women, and this generally follows the trend in ancient written sources, in which women tend to be mentioned in smaller numbers than men. However, the scale of this imbalance is far less marked than in many other textual genres;[132] women are relatively well represented in magic. The high representation of men as clients might seem surprising, since literary texts and depictions in mummy portraits tend to associate the wearing of amulets with women and children rather than adult men, and the type of text in which most clients are named is indeed amulets.[133] On the one hand, this is likely an indicator that the literary picture is (at least in part) describing a masculine ideal rather than the reality, but this may also suggest that many amulets were commissioned by parents for male children – there are some examples for which this is almost certainly the case[134] – so that their predominance may be a sign of a culture which tended to value male children more than female ones.[135] The higher representation of women among the targets of aggressive texts is in part due to the fact that most (though not all) surviving love spells are produced by men targeting women,[136] and 130 The gender of parents is often unclear in Coptic texts, since the genitive marker (ⲛ̄-) is not gendered, and as a result, 10 of the 11 names for which the gender cannot be determined are parents of either clients or targets; I suspect that in most, if not all cases of uncertain parental gender, we are dealing with mothers. If this is the case, we could add as many as six additional mothers of clients.

131 The total here is slightly larger than that above, since it was sometimes possible to identify the gender of parents and/or clients even where the name was lost as a result of preserved gendered pronouns or articles. Note also that the number of mothers may be higher if we assume (as is likely) that most or all cases in which a parent's gender is unclear we are dealing with a woman; this would add as many as 4 mothers of targets; cf. fn. 130 above.

132 Cf. the Prosopographie der mittelbyzantinischen Zeit (http://telota.bbaw.de/pmbz/index.html; seen 26/9/2022) which contains records for 21,671 individuals, of whom only 758 (3.5%) are women. Trismegistos People (https://www.trismegistos.org/ref/index; seen 26/9/2022), largely containing data from Egyptian documentary papyri, contains name attestations for 460,192 men, but only 56,859 women (i.e., women make up 11% of identified individuals whose gender is known).

133 Faraone (2018) 7, 46–48, 51–53.

134 These are P.Stras.Copt. 6 (TM 874126 + 874127; KYP M102 + 103), for which see Burns (2014).

135 Cf. the higher rates of exposure for female infants, and other unequal treatment of female children, suggested by Bagnall (1997).

136 Cf. the data gathered in Pachoumi (2013), which showed that, where gender was apparent, 72.5% (19) of users were male, and 76.9% of the targets female; cf. the discussion and response in Faraone (2023) 166–170, 177–179. In the data used here, of the 23 love spells where gender was clear, 60.9% in part due to the fact that women feature fairly regularly as the victims of curses by both men and women, pointing to their prominence in roles – public or private – in which they came into conflict with people who might be moved to attack them. It is worth noting that some texts contain many names; this is principally the case in separation spells (which always name at least two victims to be separated) and curses (which may contain long lists of enemies), although occasionally amulets intended to protect households may list every member of the family.[137]

The fact that most individuals in magical texts are identified by their mother's, rather than their father's, name (i. e., a matronym rather than a patronym) is well known, and has been traced to the Pharaonic magical tradition, from which it spread to the international Graeco-Egyptian magical practice in the Roman period.[138] Of the 130 individuals identified by a parental name whose gender may be identified with certainty, 121 (93.1 %) are identified by a matronym, and only 9 (6.9 %) by a patronym: matronyms are overwhelmingly more common. Patronyms are used for 6 of 89 men (6.7 %) and 3 of 41 women (7.3 %), suggesting that the gender of the client was not a particularly relevant consideration when deciding between matronym and patronym.[139] It is difficult to see any patterns in the few cases that use patronyms – they are a mixture of aggressive and amuletic texts, intended for both men and women, and occur in both early (second to third century) and very late (twelfth century) texts. In two cases, they are amulets whose contents are closer to orthodox Christian prayers than typical magical texts, perhaps suggesting that their atypicality in the use of a patronym may relate to their atypicality in terms of content.[140] One love spell for a man targeting another man uses patronyms for both, which might suggest a deliberate decision to avoid women's names in a same-sex erotic context.[141] In a final case, one of the relatively rare examples of a woman using a love spell against a man, she is identified by a patronym; we might imagine that in using it she is being masculinised, to fit with the more masculine role of a love spell commissioner.[142] These suggestions are highly speculative,

(14) had a male client and female target, 21.7 % (5) a male client and male target, 13 % (3) a female client and male target, and 4.3 % (1) a female client and female target.

137 E. g., P.Oxy. VII 1059v (=PGM 6C; KYP M425; TM 64683), which lists eight people to be protected.

138 Cf. Curbera (1999); Dieleman (2010).

139 Those not discussed in the following footnotes include SM 47 (KYP M873; TM 92866; II–III CE), a love spell in which the female victim, Ptolemais, is identified as the daughter of both Aias (mother) and Horigenēs (father); PGM LXXXIII (KYP M575; TM 64605; V–VI CE), a fever amulet for a woman named Taiollēs, daughter of Isidoros; Louvre E 14251 (KYP M3734; unpublished), a curse against Alhōseein, son of Ahmēt (note the Arabic-origin names); and P.Oxy. XII 1478 (PGM XXVII; KYP M763; TM 64261; III–IV CE), a charm for victory in a race for Sarapammōn son of Apollōnios.

140 BGU III 954 (ACM 18; PGM 9; KYP M430; VI CE), an amulet for a man named Silouanus son of Sarapion; SM 26, a healing prayer for Phoibammōn, son of Athanasios.

141 Ashmolean AN 1981.940 (ACM 84; KYP M5; TM 99571), a love spell by Apapōlō son of Noōē against another man named Phlo, son of Maure.

142 PGM XV (KYP M752; TM 63957; III CE), commissioned by Capitolina, daughter of Peperous, against a man identified by a matronymic.

however, and, in particular in the case of the last example, I suspect we are simply dealing with an outlier. It is worth noting that there is a slight difference here between Christian and Jewish magic – the study by Bohak and Saar found that in the magical texts of the Cairo Genizah, matronyms were more common than patronyms, but to a lesser degree – matronyms were found in 72% of texts where parental names are given, and patronyms in 40.7% – and so fathers are mentioned far more often than in the corpus considered here.[143]

While this analysis of gender dynamics has revealed some interesting patterns, we are more concerned here with "imputed religious affiliation", and more specifically, whether we can impute a likely Christian or Muslim identity to an individual based on the consideration of their own name and the name(s) of their parents. For our purposes here, we will consider an individual to be likely to be a Christian if either their own name, their parent's name, or both, are identifiably Christian. Here I follow the methodology of Depauw and Clarysse, who refined that of Bagnall. Note that in both of these earlier studies, the names of fathers were generally the only names available for parents, since mothers are rarely mentioned in documentary texts.

The basic categories of names considered as Christian are:

– Old and New Testament Names[144]
  Names of figures from the Christian canonical books. Excluded, however, are the names Apollos and Stephanos, who despite being those of characters from the New Testament, were common pre-Christian names, derived from the god Apollo and the word for "crown" respectively. Note that Old Testament names could also have been borne by Jews, but Bagnall, Depauw, and Clarysse consider their numbers to have been too few in Egypt to make a statistical difference following the revolts of 115–117.[145]
– Anonymous theophoric names[146]
  Names containing either the elements -theos or -noute/noutios, respectively the 143 Bohak/Saar (2015) 79. It might be possible to hypothesise a temporal effect here, since many (though not all) of the Genizah texts are later than the Greek and Coptic examples. Bohak/Saar (2015) 79, n. 5 note that most of their texts come from the tenth to thirteenth centuries, making them contemporary with about 26 (or 16%) of the Greek and Coptic manuscripts considered here. Within these manuscripts dated to the tenth to twelfth centuries, however, all client parents whose gender can be determined with certainty (14) are mothers (5 are of uncertain gender), and 5 of 10 target parents are mothers (1 male, 4 of uncertain gender), so that any temporal effect is not clearly visible in this evidence.

144 Cf. Bagnall (1982) 110; Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 414–416, 420; cf. Kajanto (1963) 93–97 on such names in Latin inscriptions from Rome and Carthage.

145 Bagnall (1982) 110; Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 22; cf. Papaconstantinou (2023) for a more detailed consideration of the question.

146 Cf. Bagnall (1982) 110; Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 416, 420; cf. Kajanto (1963) 100–103 for these names in Latin inscriptions from Rome and Carthage.

Greek and Egyptian words for "god", rather than the personal name of a specific deity.[147]

– Abstract Names[148]
  Names derived from key Christian concepts, such as Anastasios (from anastasis, "resurrection") and Epiphanios (from epiphaneia, "epiphany").

Excluded from Bagnall's original list are:

– Names of Christian Emperors[149]
  These are analysed by Depauw and Clarysse as representing dynastic loyalty rather than religious affiliation on the part of parents who choose these names.
– Martyr and Saint Names[150]
  These names are generally not explicitly Christian in origin – many of the most popular, such as Phoibammōn and Anoup, are theophoric names referring to Egyptian or Greek deities – and only became popular after the fifth century onwards, as Christianity became more established; for this reason, they are not particularly useful for imputing religious identity during the third and fourth centuries, when the process of conversion probably began to take place. This exclusion, necessary in a study which reproduces the work of Depauw and Clarysse, poses problems when discussing periods after the fifth century, as will be discussed in more detail below.
– Certain other miscellaneous names[151]

To this, I have added the category of names which can be identified with some certainty as Arabic in origin, referred to subsequently as Arab names. There may be a few more which are too ambiguous for certain identification.[152] A thorough study of Ara-

147 This is a difficult category which must be nuanced somewhat; for Egyptian names, Παπνουτις (< Pa-pꜣ-nṯr, "He of (the) God"; TM Nam 749) and Πινουτις (< Pꜣy-nṯr ("(the) God"); TM Nam 11618) seem to follow the expected pattern for names associated with Christianity, being rare before and common after the third century CE, but Ψενπνουθης (< Pꜣ-šr-n-pꜣ-ntr, "the son of (the) God"; TM Nam 991) and Ἐσπνουτις (< Ns-pꜣ-nṯr, "He belongs to (the) God"; TM Nam 196) are more problematic, with 20 of the 91 individuals in TM People with the former name dating to before the third century CE (with attestations perhaps as early as the third century BCE), and all of the latter dating to the Ptolemaic period. Cf. the comments below on Theodotis and Theodoros at fn. 205.

148 Cf. Bagnall (1982) 111; Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 418, 420; cf. Kajanto (1963) 107–117 on similar names in Latin inscriptions from Rome and Carthage.

149 Cf. Bagnall (1982) 111; Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 416–418, 421.

150 Cf. Bagnall (1982) 111; Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 418–419, 421; cf. Kajanto (1963) 92–93, 97–100 on saint and martyr names in Latin inscriptions from Rome and Carthage.

151 Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 421.

152 See, for example, the name ⲥⲟⲩⲣⲁ in P.Lond.Copt. I 524 ll. 36, 48, 78, 108, 122, 133, apparently understood by Heuser (1929) 112 as the Arabic-origin name Sūra (سورة; cf. e. g., P.Giss.Arab. 1 l. 4 (IX CE)), but by caution I consider it as the Greek name Σύρα (TM name ID 5899). The two may indeed be the same name in at least some cases, since in P.Giss.Arab. 1 Sūra's son, Humīsa (همیسة), has a Coptic name, i. e., ϩⲟⲩⲙⲓⲥⲉ ("Christmas"), and so both names might ultimately be Graeco-Coptic.

bic-origin names in Coptic is a vital desideratum, since the subject is considerably understudied.[153] Such names begin to appear in Coptic papyri already in the seventh century, shortly after the Arab Conquest, but their presence likely indicates several overlapping factors.[154] The first is the presence of individuals of recent Arab origin, in most cases likely Muslim, but potentially also Christian; individuals with Christian names found in Egyptian documentation may be recent Christian Arab immigrants, who might be onomastically indistinguishable from 'native' Egyptian Christians.[155] The second possibility is that of Egyptian converts to Islam, who would adopt an Arabic personal name (ism) which might, in practice, be used alongside their older 'Christian' (i. e., Graeco-Coptic) name.[156] These individuals seem to often continue to use Coptic in, for example, letters, since it might remain the mother tongue of their families for a few generations. The third phenomenon is that of the Arabisation of Egyptian Christians, who increasingly began to adopt Arabic-origin names without converting to Islam. The fourth is that of non-Christian, non-Muslim inhabitants of Egypt, including Jews, who also used Arabic names, often in conjunction with, for example, Hebrew names.[157] Disentangling these different factors is extremely difficult. Maghed Mikhail suggests that onomastic Arabisation began in the ninth, and became more common in the tenth century.[158] In two thirteenth century Coptic marriage contracts we have cases of deacons and priests, certain Christians, with distinctively Arabic names, although they are mentioned alongside others with more traditionally Christian (i. e., Graeco-Coptic) names such as Iōhannes and Pisente (= Pisentius).[159] The use of Coptic by individuals with Arabic-origin names is attested as early as the eighth century; these individuals are generally assumed to be converts to Islam, but this is rarely explicit in the letters themselves.[160] One factor which may help us is that, as Bulliet notes, certain Arabic names with a strong Islamic significance seem to have been particularly common among recent converts – Muḥammad, Aḥmad, ʿAlī, al-Ḥasan, and al-Ḥusayn – and several of these are among the names we find in the magical texts.[161] On the 153 For other discussions of Arabic names in Coptic, see Heuser (1929) 111–117; Legendre (2014); van Putten (2021); and Berkes in this issue.

154 See, e. g., ⲉⲓⲡⲣⲁϩⲙ for Ibrāhīm (ابراهيم) in CPR XII 29 l. 5.

155 Cf. the case of a 'Saracen' called Kollouthos, mentioned in P.CUA 75.20 l. 14 (VII–VIII CE) published in Berkes/Gonis (2020) 12–14 (no. III), and discussed in Berkes in this issue.

156 On the taking of new names by Muslim converts, cf. Legendre (2014) 350; Berkes in this issue. On the different types of mediaeval Arabic names, see Bulliet (1979) 10; Sublet (1991) 9–11; Legendre (2014) 342–343.

157 See Goitein (1978) 2–14 on Jewish names in Fatimid Egypt.

158 Mikhail (2016) 104–105.

159 For Iōhannes, see P. Berlin 11348 (Möller (1918) hands 2 + 4; 1208 CE); for Pisente see Thompson (1912) p. 176 l. 23 (1st hand; 1246 CE); compare Arabic-origin names such as ⲡⲟⲩⲥⲟⲩⲣⲟⲩⲣ (i. e., Abu Surūr ابوسرور), the name of another deacon given in Thompson (1912) p. 176 l. 20 (7th hand). The two brides are both referred to by alqāb of the type sitt al- ("lady of…"; see fn. 166 below).

160 See Boud'hors (2016); cf. Legendre (2014) 347–348.

161 Bulliet (1979) 65; cf. Legendre (2014) 347; I would like to thank Naïm Vanthieghem for discussing this point with me.

other hand, there are certain Arabic names, such as ʿAbd al-Masīḥ (عبد المسيح "Slave of Christ") which indicate a more or less certain Christian identity; this latter is attested in Coptic documents by tenth or eleventh century.[162] Other names, in particular Biblical names such as Ibrāhīm (=Abraham), Ismāʿīl (=Ishmael), and Yūsuf (=Joseph), also mentioned by Bulliet as common for converts, are more ambiguous, and might be used by Christians, Jews, or Muslims, with an Arabic form perhaps indicating linguistic Arabisation, but not necessarily conversion.[163]

Another problem is posed by the different types of names used by mediaeval Arabic speakers. In their study of Arabic documents from an eleventh-century Faiyum, Christian Gaubert and Jean-Michel Mouton note that of the hundred or so Christians mentioned, all but two had a traditional Graeco-Coptic personal name (ism, pl. asmā), but that some used an Arabic nickname (kunya) in certain contexts.[164] These nicknames are likewise unhelpful for determining religion, since it seems that Muslims, Christians, and Jews might use the same nicknames. A similar phenomenon is found in the laqab (pl. alqāb; honorific) used by women, usually of the form *sitt al-*XX ("lady of XX"); as Reem Alrudainy, Mathieu Tillier, and Naïm Vanthieghem note, these names were "used by high-ranking women to avoid revealing their ism and thus not to undermine their decency".[165] More or less identical alqāb are found among Christian, Jewish, and Muslim women from Egypt.[166]

All of this means that any conclusions about the Islamicisation, and even Arabisation, of the population more generally based on the presence of Arab names must be made cautiously. Nonetheless, as I discuss below, my impression is that the patterns which emerge are significant, and while these must be subject to correction by future studies, I think they do tell us something about the processes of Egyptians converting to Islam and using Arabic in their daily lives. There are 12 names which I can confidently classify as Arabic in origin, of which only one, Ahmēt, occurs more than once; these are listed and briefly discussed in Table 3.

162 In the form ⲁⲓⲧⲏⲁⲙⲉⲥⲏⲉ in BKU III 397 l. 5 (TM 81922); despite the ninth century date in Trismegistos, the tenth or eleventh century is more likely based on the use of paper. I would like to thank Vincent Walter for sharing this example with me.

163 Bulliet (1979) 65; Legendre (2014) 350.

164 Gaubert/Mouton (2014) 262–263.

165 Alrudainy/Tillier/Vanthieghem (2024) 443.

166 For Coptic examples, see Sit el-Khoul in Table 3 below, as well as ⲥⲏⲑ ⲁⲗⲡⲁϩⲁ (Sitt al-Bahā ست البهاء "lady of splendour") in Thompson (1912) p. 174 l. 9; [ⲥⲏ]ⲧ ⲁⲗⲟⲩⲁⲣⲧ (Sitt al-ward ست الورد "lady of roses") in P. Berlin 11348 ll. 34, 37–38 (Möller (1918)). For a twelfth-century Muslim example, see e. g., Sitt al-Naṣr in P.Dār al-āthār al-islāmiyya in Kuwait Inv. LN S 81 TF recto l. 2 (Alrudainy/Tillier/Vanthieghem (2024) no. 1). For a brief discussion of the many examples of alqāb formed with sitt borne by the Jewish women attested in the Cairo Genizah, see Goitein (1978) 316. For examples from twelfth-century Norman Sicily (Sitt al-Kull, Sitt al-Ḥusn), see Metcalfe (2003) 90.

Tab. 3: Arab names in applied magical Manuscripts from Egypt in Coptic.

Name: Aptellah
Source: P.Berlin 8503 (Beltz (1984) no. III 23; KYP M495; TM 99586; VIII–IX CE)
Form in papyrus: ⲁⲡⲧⲉⲗⲗⲁϩ (ro ll. 34, 60; vo. l. 5); ⲁⲡⲧⲁⲗⲗⲁϩ (ro ll. 44–45)
Arabic form: عبد الله
Arabic transliteration: ʿAbd Allāh
Role: client

Name: Ahmēt
Source: a) P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 544b (Quecke (1963) no. 1; KYP M365; TM 98048; X–XI CE); b) Louvre E 14251 (KYP M3734; unpublished; Edfu, likely X–XI CE)
Form in papyrus: ⲁϩⲙⲏⲧ (a l. 16; b l. 25 et al.)
Arabic form: احمد
Arabic transliteration: Aḥmad
Role: a) client; b) father of target
Comments: Cf. the same name in the letter P.Lond.Copt. I 584 l. 2 (perhaps VIII–IX CE). Ahmēt (a)'s mother is named Mariam (ⲙⲁⲣⲓⲁⲙ), which could be suitable for either a Christian or a Muslim; here I err on the side of caution and consider it as "Christian" in my analysis.[167]

Name: Alhōseein
Source: Louvre E 14251 (see above)
Form in papyrus: ⲁⲗϩⲱⲥⲉⲓⲛ (l. 25 et al.)
Arabic form: الحسين
Arabic transliteration: Al-Ḥusayn
Role: target

Name: Cauhare
Source: Louvre E 14.250 (Drioton (1946); KYP M367; TM 99997; X CE)
Form in papyrus: ϭⲁⲩϩⲁⲣⲉ (ro. ll. 10–11 et al.); [ϭⲁⲩϩⲁ]ⲣⲉϩ (ro l. 22)
Arabic form: جوهرة
Arabic transliteration: Ǧawhara
Role: target and mother of target
Comments: Cf. Drioton (1946) 481.

Name: Ḫarip
Source: Cambridge UL T-S 12.207 (Crum (1902); TM 99585; KYP M534; Cairo, X–XI CE
Form in papyrus: ϧⲁⲣⲓⲡ (l. 2 et al.)
Arabic form: غريب
Arabic transliteration: Ġarīb
Role: target
Comments: The Arabic form here is that proposed by Crum (1902). Its apparent meaning ("strange", "foreign"), might make it resemble a pseudonym, but it is attested in several Arabic papyri.[168] Note that غ in 167 The fact that the name of her son likely indicates a Muslim identity might be used to argue that Mariam was Muslim too, although Ahmēt might also have been a first-generation convert with a different birth name.

168 See P.Ryl.Arab. I XI 5 ll. 4, 6, 10, 11; P.Ryl.Arab. I XI 12 l. 7; P.Ryl.Arab. I XII l. 12, and the unpublished nd.86.200.1 l. 5 and nd.05.08 l. 4 from Naqlun (Naïm Vanthieghem is thanked for these references). Cf. Goitein (1978) 482, who notes the existence of a Suhayl Ibn Abu l-Ġarib (i.e., "father of Ġarib"); for the suggestion of its being a pseudonym, see Love (2022a) 188 n. 121.

Coptic is usually rendered by gamma, kappa, or even kjima, whereas khai would normally be expected for خ (cf. Richter (2017) 518).

Name: Harōn
Source: Os.Mil.Vogl. inv.1 & Leiden F 1965/8.5 (see Dosoo (2021d); TM 874161 & 99589; KYP 535 & 1159 (X CE?)
Form in papyrus: ϩⲁⲣⲱⲛ (Os.Mil.Vogl. inv.1 ll. 34, 66 – 67; Leiden F 1965/8.5 concave ll. 19 – 20, 39 – 40, convex ll. 20 – 21, 39, 78)
Arabic form: هارون
Arabic transliteration: Hārūn
Role: target
Comments: Two manuscripts containing variants of the same text, written in the same hand, and so treated as a single manuscript here. The normal Coptic form of the name, equivalent to English 'Aaron', would seem to be ⲁⲣⲱⲛ (TM NamVar ID 52920), from the Greek Ἀ(α)ρών (TM NamVar IDs 7857 & 29217). The forms with an initial hori (TM NamVar IDs 52407, 52409 & 113316) likely represent the Arabic form Hārūn; all the precisely dated attestations post-date 642 CE. Harōn's mother, Tkouikira, has a Graeco-Coptic name.

Name: Mahēt
Source: Vienna K 7089 (Stegemann (1933 – 4) no. 15; KYP M246; TM 91407; X–XI CE)
Form in papyrus: ⲙⲁ/ϩ\ⲏⲧ (l. 2)
Arabic form: مهد (?)
Arabic transliteration: Mahid (?)
Role: client
Comments: We might alternatively understand an erroneous writing of Muḥammad; cf. ⲙⲁϩⲙⲏⲧ in P.Lond.Copt. I 664 l. 1. Mahēt's mother is named Zoe (ⲍⲱⲏ). As discussed below, this is likely a generic placeholder.

Name: Mouflēh al-Pahapani
Source: P.Berlin 8503 (see above)
Form in papyrus: ⲙⲟⲩⲫⲗⲏϩ ⲁⲗⲡⲁϩⲁⲡⲁⲛⲓ (ro ll. 18 – 19, 46 – 47, 51, 58; vo ll. 3, 4); ⲁⲡⲁϩⲁⲡⲁⲛⲓ (ro ll. 31 – 32); ⲁⲗⲡⲁϩⲁⲗⲡⲁⲛⲓ (ro l. 49); ⲁⲡⲡⲁϩⲁⲛⲓ (ro l. 53)
Arabic form: مفلح
Arabic transliteration: Mufliḥ
Role: target
Comments: Beltz (1984, no. III 23) understands ⲙⲟⲩⲫⲗⲏϩⲁⲗⲡⲁϩⲁⲡⲁⲛⲓ as a single long name, but the first element is clearly the name Mufliḥ; the second element, difficult to identify, is likely a nisbah prefixed by the definite article al-.

Name: Poulpehe
Source: EES 39 5B.125/A (Alcock (1982); KYP M280; TM 98045; Oxyrhynchus, XI CE)
Form in papyrus: ⲡⲟⲩⲁⲡⲉϩⲉ (ll. 15, 24, 41)
Arabic form: ابو البهاء
Arabic transliteration: Abu l-Bahā
Role: client
Comments: The original editor read the name as ⲡⲟⲩⲁⲡⲉϩⲉⲡⲩⲥ (Alcock 1982), but the last element is in fact ⲡ-ⲩ(ἱό)ⲥ "the son"; he nonetheless recognised that the first element of the name might be Abu, whose full writing is ⲁⲡⲟⲩ (cf. Legendre (2014) 342; but cf. also fn. 157); the second element is likely bahā (بهاء "splendour"); cf. the same name in P.Heid.Arab. II 11 l. 21 right margin (XII CE) and the numerous 169 For the Cairo Genizah, see the Princeton Genizah project, online at https://geniza.princeton.edu/en (seen 8/4/2024). Cf. the comments of Michael Zellmann-Rohrer in O'Connell (2022) 201 n. 54.

---

Judaeo-Arabic attestations in the Cairo Genizah, transcribed as אבו אלבהא.[169] The mother's name, Zarra (ⲍⲁⲣⲣⲁ) is likely a form of Sarah, and could be appropriate either for a Christian or a Muslim; here I err on the side of caution and consider it as "Christian" in my analysis. Cf. the similar female laqab Sitt al-Bahā, attested for a Christian Egyptian woman in a marriage contract of 1246 CE (see fns. 157, 164).

Name: Seinape
Source: P.Mil.Vogl.Copt.inv. 22 (van der Vliet (2005a); KYP M67; TM 91345; Luxor, X–XI CE)
Form in papyrus: ⲥⲉⲓⲛⲁⲡⲉ (l. 16)
Arabic form: زينب
Arabic transliteration: Zaynab
Role: client
Comments: The mother's name is lost; it begins with sigma. For the identification of the name as Zaynab, see van der Vliet (2005a). The final epsilon is unexpected.

Name: Sit el-Khoul
Source: Cambridge UL T-S 12.207 (see above)
Form in papyrus: ⲥⲓⲧ ⲉⲗⲭⲟⲩⲗ (ll. 1–2 et al.)
Arabic form: ست الكل
Arabic transliteration: Sitt al-Kull
Role: mother of target
Comments: The Arabic form here is that proposed by Crum (1902). Despite its rather surprising meaning ("Mistress over Everyone"), superficially implying a generic name along the lines of "Eve",[170] names of the form "Sitt al-", including Sitt al-Kull, are well-attested in the Arabic-speaking world.[171]

Name: Sōliman
Source: Vienna K 7092 (Stegemann (1933–4) no. 1; KYP M249; TM 91410; X–XI CE)
Form in papyrus: ⲥⲱⲗⲓⲙⲁⲛ (l. 12)
Arabic form: سليمان
Arabic transliteration: Sulaymān
Role: client
Comments: King Solomon is considered a key figure in Judaism, Christianity, and Islam, and so derivatives of the name would be equally appropriate for members of any of the three faiths. Nonetheless, the normal Greek and Coptic (and hence, early Christian and Jewish) form is Σολομῶν, whereas the vocalisation here is that of the Arabic form (cf. Legendre (2014) 334, 348).

Outside of these four categories are a fifth category of "miscellaneous" names; Bagnall distinguished some of these as explicitly "pagan", but I prefer to describe them as those to which no religious identity can be imputed with any degree of certainty.[172] I should 170 Cf. Love (2022a) 188 nn. 121, 122; I consider the client, ⲑⲉⲓⲭⲁⲣ daughter of ⲥⲉⲧⲉ to be too ambiguous to define as clearly Arab (or Christian, for that matter).

---

171 Cf. Goitein (1978) 182, 266, 316, fn. 166 above.

172 Cf. Bagnall (1982) 109, 111–112; Wipszycka (1986) 176. This is not to say that theophoric names containing Greek or Egyptian deities are not significant in onomastic research; see Clarysse/Paganini (2009) for an interesting case study which tracks the cult of Sarapis from personal names, and Borkowski (1990) (cf. Wipszycka (1988) 162–163) on name changes among members of the pre-Christian Panopolite elite, and more generally Dogaer/Depauw (2017). An early example of such onomastic research may be seen in Dunand (1962) 138–146. I nonetheless exclude their analysis here because, especially by the fourth century, many of them could be chosen as the names of family members or famous individuals (including saints) rather than as a statement of loyalty to the god.

briefly note that this classification system, focused on the question of the transition to Christianity in Egypt, leaves unexplored many other questions upon which onomastic analysis might shed light.

Tab. 4: Name Category Frequencies in the Corpus.

Name category	No. of names	No. of individuals	Average no. of individuals per name
All names	268	371	1.4
Unmarked	220	281	1.3
Christian	36	77	2.1
Old/New Testament	22	52	2.4
Anon. Theophoric	10	16	1.6
Abstract	4	9	2.3
Arab	12	13	1.1

While we cannot look into every name in detail, it is worth briefly noting the frequencies of the different categories (Table 4). We can see considerable imbalance between the different categories of names. Most names in the corpus are nearly unique – each name being borne by 1.4 individuals, and this is even more visible for the "unmarked" names, with each borne by 1.3 individuals. In practice, 211 of the 268 names have one attestation, 27 have two attestations, 17 have three, and 13 have four to six. The Arab names, as we have noted, are very rare, with each borne by 1.1 individuals – only Ahmēt appears twice. The Christian names are more frequent, with each borne by 2.1 individuals; in practice, the "anonymous theophoric" names are not particularly frequent – only Theodora appears more than twice, and as a category they each appear 1.6 times. The Testamental and "abstract" names are much more frequent, with each borne by 2.4 and 2.3 individuals respectively.

If we look at the thirty names which appear three or more times in the corpus, the reasons for these patterns become clearer. Of the four most common names, each appearing six times, three are Christian – Maria, Mariam, and Sophia; indeed the fourth, Thekla should probably be considered a Christian name, even if it is not classified as such by Depauw and Clarysse, and the same goes for Biktōr and Mēnas, two of the next most frequent names.[173] We may also observe that Maria and Mariam, two variants of 173 Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 419 – Thekla and Biktōr become far more popular after the fifth century, so that even if they are not useful for understanding the fourth-fifth century shift, they are certainly linked to Christianisation. An examination of the name "Menas" (Name ID 4077) using TM People likewise shows that, of 1,445 attested individuals with this name, 1,384 (95.8 %) lived between the fifth and eighth centuries CE.

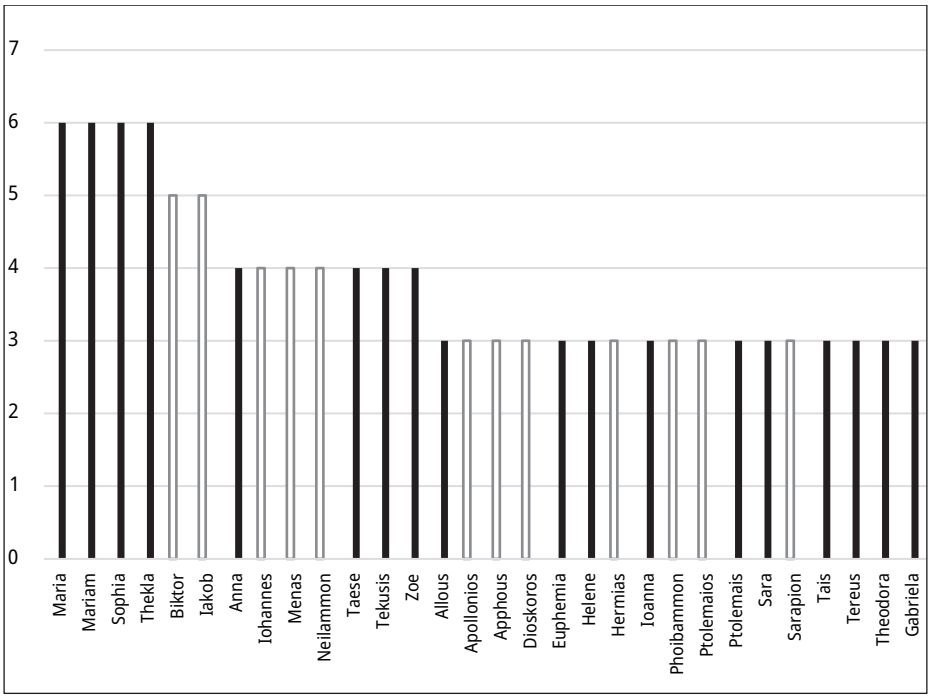

Fig. 5: Number of attestations for names attested more than three times in the corpus.

the same Hebrew name,[174] are by far the most frequent, and that Sophia, the only one of the "abstract" names to appear in the top 30 names, is almost single-handedly responsible for the high average value of this category. Of the remaining common names, a large proportion are Testamental names – Iakōb, Iōhannes, Anna, Iōhanna, and Sara. Zōē, likewise frequent, is a slightly different case – as discussed further below, it likely refers to the Biblical Eve as the mother of all humankind, rather than representing a real personal name. The overall impression is that Christians drew upon a smaller range of names which were borne by more people, and that this tendency was even more marked for women – of the marked Christian names for men, each is borne by an average of 1.5 individuals, close to the corpus average of 1.4, whereas marked Christian female names are borne by an average of 2.8 individuals. In most cases, these are names from the Old or New Testament, particularly Mary. While, as discussed below, analysing such patterns poses problems of interpretation, we might see this as a result on the one hand of a centralisation of ideological power – a large number of deities, virtues, and so on replaced by a smaller cultural repertoire under Christian domination – and on the other, perhaps, the broader range of social roles which men might occupy, reflected by the larger repertoire of names which might express their parents' hopes for their character, as opposed to the relatively restricted social role expected of women, who tend to be named after Biblical paradigms of purity and motherhood, in particular the Virgin Mary.

174 I treat these two names separately, as this is how they are treated in TM People; an examination of their distributions does not seem to reveal any temporal patterns, i. e., Mary and Mariam seem to both be attested at roughly equal rates throughout the period of Egyptian history covered by papyrological data.

In the following analysis I will describe individuals who have either an identifiably Christian name, or a parent with an identifiably Christian name, as "Christians" – to be understood strictly as individuals to whom a Christian identity can be imputed with a fairly high degree of probability. We should remember that this is a simplification – their identity as such is not certain, and they exist in the corpus alongside other Christians whose religious identity is not revealed by their names. This means that there may be, in any sample of the data studied here, many "invisible" Christians, and that when we are comparing "Christians" and "non-Christians", we are really comparing a group of visible Christians with non-Christians plus a group of invisible Christians which was quite possibly larger than the group of visible Christians.[175]

An interesting example of this can be seen in PGM LXVI (KYP M487; TM 64282; III–IV CE), a curse with generically magical content intended to separate a certain Philoxenos from Pelagios, perhaps the same individual as the earlier named Gennadios, described as the philos ("lover" or "friend") of Philoxenos (l. 7). While neither has a markedly 'Chistian' name, they are identified by their professions: Pelagios is a presbuteros and Philoxenos a psaltēs. These could be generically translated as "elder" and "harpist", but found together in a papyrus of the third or fourth century, we are justified, I think, in understanding them to be, respectively, a "priest" and a "cantor", and thus two almost certain, yet onomastically invisible, Christians.[176]

2.2 Excursus: Onomastic Notes

Like documentary texts, magical texts often seem to capture a wider view of society than elite literary texts, preserving names which are otherwise rare or unknown. Before analysing the findings of the analysis as they pertain to the Christianisation, I would like to briefly note two interesting features which have emerged from the analysis of the names in the corpus.

175 See fn. 203 below for the multipliers proposed by Bagnall and Depauw/Clarysse to take into account the number of invisible Christians.

176 On the title presbuteros, see Choat (2006) 61–67, 72–73; on psaltēs see Wipszycka (1993) 205–208.

2.2.1 Generic Matronymics

As I have already noted, the name Zōē, while quite frequent in the corpus, does not seem to represent a real name, but rather a placeholder for an unnamed mother. There are two principal reasons for thinking this, both previously noted by Robert Daniel and Roy Kotansky in the context of Greek papyri and metal amulets respectively.[177] First, Zōē, and the transliterated Hebrew equivalent, Eua (Εὔα), never seem to appear as the name of a clients or target, but only as the name of a mother, a surprising fact in the case of such an otherwise frequent name. Second, Eua is apparently unattested in onomastica and papyrological documentation, and Zōē is very rare.[178]

Tab. 5: Attestations of Zoe or Eve as a matronymic in applied magical texts.

Text	Form of name	Type of Text	Role of name	Date (CE)	Notes
1. GMA 58 (KYP M3682; V CE)	Εὔα (ll. 24, 28)	Victory charm	Mother of target	IV CE
2. Univ. Penn. Mus. 29-108-602 (= Youtie/Bonner (1937) no. 1; KYP M3591; V CE)	Εὔα (ll. 4, 22)	Curse	Mother of target	IV CE	Only one of the three victims is named as the son of Eve; the other mothers have real names.
3. SM 28 (PGM CXXVIII; KYP M841; TM 69044; V CE)	Ζωή (l. 6)	Amulet	Mother of client	V CE
4. Vienna K 8635 (Stegemann (1933–4), no. 25; KYP M256; TM 91417; V CE?)	ϹΟΗ (l. 18)	Amulet	Mother of client	V CE (?)	ϹΟΗ is followed by a letter that looks like an upsilon, but may simply be a stroke of punctuation. The client is also referred to as the son of Euprepi (ϵϒΠΡϵΠΙ, ll. 16–17), likely his mother's real name.
5. Naqlun N. 45/95 (van der Vliet 2000; KYP M64; TM 108435; V CE)	ϹѠΗ (l.4)	Curse	Mother of target	Late V CE

177 Daniel (1988); cf. Kotansky (1994) 342; Bélanger Sarrazin (2020) 197–199.

178 Cf. the discussion in Daniel (1988). Εὔα is not attested in either the LGPN or TM People. As of 28/9/2022, TM People lists 14 attestations of individuals named Ζώη [sic], but of these three are in magical texts and likely not real personal names (TM 10335, 81827, 91417). The LGPN lists 38 people named Ζώη or Ζωή as of 28/9/2022. Hasitzka (2007) 34 lists ϛωΗ as a personal name, but the first instance in Heuser (1929) 80 does not supply a reference, and those in Quibell (1912) nos. 203, 226, 340 are references to the biblical Eve.

Tab. 5 (Continued)

Text	Form of name	Type of Text	Role of name	Date (CE)	Notes
6. P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 564a (Quecke 1963; KYP M513; TM 98047; VII–IX CE)	ϩⲟⲏ (l. 9)	Amulet	Grandmother of client	VII–IX CE (?)	The mother of the client is also described as the daughter of Adam (ll. 9–10).
7. British Library MS Or 6948 (2) (Crum (1922) no. 3; KYP M 334; TM 100114; VII–X CE)	ϫⲱϩ (l. 9)	Amulet	Grandmother of client	VII–X CE (?)
8. Vienna K 7089 (Stegemann (1933–4) no. 15; KYP M246; TM 91407; X–XI CE)	ⲥⲱϩ (l. 3)	Amulet	Mother of client	X–XI CE (?)

Zōē, "life", is the literal translation of the Hebrew Ḥawwāh, transliterated into Greek as Eua, and into English as Eve, the first woman; indeed, this is quite clear in one Coptic amulet in which both Zōē and Adam are given as the names of the parents of the client's mother.[179] Yet another point in its favour is the fact that the practice seems to appear only in the fourth or fifth century, exactly when we would expect such a Christian practice to surface.[180] Along similar lines, we find references, particularly in Coptic favour and separation spells – intended to make an individual beloved or hated – to the human race as the children of Adam and Eve.[181] The practice of giving a generic matronym likely did not originate among Christian users, however; we find similar generic names and phrases such as πᾶσα μήτρα ("every womb"), {ε}ἰδίᾳ μήτρᾳ ("her own womb"), Μητραδώτιον ("Given by the womb"), performing the same function in earlier Greek texts,[182] while one binding curse names the mother of the target as "Earth, mother of all living creatures".[183]

The use of Zōē nonetheless raises an interesting problem. In the earlier Greek cases of the use of a generic matronymic it is always used for the mother of the target of an aggressive text, not the client, yet in three of eight cases Zōē appears as the name

179 P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 564a (Quecke 1963; KYP M513; TM 98047; VII–IX CE).

180 Cf. the comments of Bélanger Sarrazin (2020) 198; given the fact that some of the early examples are found in the names of targets, I am less sure that designation as a "child of Eve" is intended to signal that the individual is Christian.

181 See Dosoo/Preininger (2023) 301 note to ll. 12–14; Dosoo (2018) 20–21; Bélanger Sarrazin (2020); O'Connell (2022) 140. Several examples of this are known in Jewish magic; see e.g., Naveh/Shaked 1993, Bowl 21 ll. 14–15, Genizah 12 ll. 16–17, Genizah 15 p. 2 ll. 9–10, Genizah 18 p. 3 ll. 7–8, Genizah 28 p. 4 l. 9; pp. 129, 165, 173, 198, 236–237.

182 Respectively, PGM XVI ll. 6, 15, 22 (KYP M483; TM 63590; II CE); PGM XXXII l. 11 (KYP M483; TM 63590; II CE); GMA 56 l. 9 (KYP M 3875; III–IV CE); cf. Kotansky (1994) 320.

183 DT 241 l. 7 (KYP M2347): …ὅ[ν] ἔτεκεν [γ]ῆ μήτηρ παντὸς ἐνψύχου. The manuscript is from Carthage, and perhaps dates to the second century CE.

of the client for whom an amulet is created, and even if we subtract one case where the real name of the mother is also given, this still leaves two cases where she is only identified as Zōē.[184] We might expect that the copyists of amulets would generally be able to ask the name of the client's mother, who might indeed be the commissioner in many cases, especially if the individual for whom the amulet was created was a child. One obvious possibility is that the client might not know their mother's name – they might have been abandoned and adopted, or captured and enslaved as a child – but another possibility is that copyists might not always ask for the mother's name when the text was commissioned, either through forgetfulness or because they felt it to be unnecessary. One suggestion that this might be the case is found in a Coptic amulet which might be dated to the fifth century, in which the copyist first writes the generic name marker ("NN son of..."), probably found in the exemplar, before adding "that is, Mina, the son of Euprepi", then adding, in a third emendation, "the son of Zōē".[185] This case implies an absentmindedness on the part of the copyist, who began to mechanically copy the formulary before correction; it is possible either that the exemplar also contained "son of Zōē" as an alternative to the generic name marker,[186] and that this was likewise copied mechanically, or that it was added as a kind of "insurance policy" in case the mother's name was recalled or written incorrectly. We may note that the hand implies an individual with little formal training.

2.2.2 Coptic Names Ending in the Suffix -hēu

Nine names in the corpus, found exclusively in Coptic texts, end in the suffix -hēu; with one exception,[187] these names were not catalogued in the list of personal names found on Trismegistos at the time of analysis, although some are found in Monika Hasitzka's list of Coptic personal names,[188] and the existence of the suffix was noted by Crum.[189]

184 Nos. 3 & 8 in Table 5 above.

185 P.Vindob. K 8635 ll. 14–18 (Stegemann (1933-4), no. 25; KYP M256; TM 91417; V CE?); cf. the comments in Table 5 above.

186 I admit, however, that I know of no formulary containing the generic name marker "NN, son/daughter of Zōē".

187 This is Koheu, TM name ID 27585 in TM People.

188 Hasitzka (2007) 9 (ⲁⲙⲁϩⲏⲩ), 10 (ⲁⲛⲁⲥⲧⲁϩⲏⲩ), 18 (ⲁⲧⲁϩⲏⲩ), 24 (ⲅⲓⲣⲁϩⲏⲩ), 33 (ⲍⲁⲭⲁϩⲏⲩ, perhaps from Zakhariah), 49 (ⲕⲓⲣⲁϩⲏⲩ), 52 (ⲕⲟϩⲏⲩ), 53 (ⲕⲩⲣⲁϩⲏⲩ, ⲅⲓⲣⲁϩⲏⲩ), 55 (ⲗⲁϩⲏⲩ, ⲗⲁϩⲏⲟⲩ), 58 (ⲙⲁⲛⲛⲁϩⲏⲩ), 62 (ⲙⲓⲕⲁϩⲏⲩ), 78 (ⲡⲉϩⲏⲩ and variants), 79 (ⲡⲓⲗⲓϩⲏⲩ, ⲡⲓⲗⲓϩⲉⲩ), 80, 86 (ⲡⲓϩⲏⲩ, ⲡⲓϩⲏⲟⲩ), 97 (ⲧⲁⲛϩⲏⲩ), 100 (ⲧⲉⲣϩⲏⲩ, ⲧⲉϩⲏⲩ), 102 (ⲧⲟⲩϩⲏⲩ), 112 (ⲱⲩⲭⲱϩⲏⲩ). ⲥⲧⲁⲩⲣⲓϩⲉⲩ in P.Stras.Inv.Kopt. 332 ro l. 21 (Faiyum, XI CE) in Legendre (2014) 374 (cf. 379), clearly from Σταυρός.

189 Crum (1939) 729b.

Tab. 6: Names ending in the suffix -hēu.

Name	Coptic Writing	Source	Proposed Origin	Notes
Anastahēu	ⲁⲛⲁⲥⲧⲁϩⲏ (ll. 1–2, 40–41, 51)	BKU III 387 (KYP M336; TM 243971; X CE)	Anastasia
Iaohēu	ⲓⲁⲟϩⲏ (l. 1); ⲓⲁⲱϩⲏ (l. 18)	Vienna K 7091 (Stegemann (1933–4) no. 17; M248; TM 91409; X CE)	Iōhanna (?)	The original editor, Stegemann (1933–1934, no. 17), was not able to read this name. For the correction, see the edition in KYP M248.
Kirahēu	ⲕⲓⲣⲁϩⲏ (a ll. 2, 41, 52; b l. 6)	a) Vienna K 7093 (Stegemann (1933–4) no. 19; KYP M332; TM 91411; X CE); b) BKU III 387 (KYP M336; TM 243971; X CE)	Kuria	Stegemann (1933–1934) 39 understood Kira as a title of an individual named Heu (cf. below).
Kōhēu	ⲕⲱϩⲏ (ll. 15, 19)	P.Würzburg inv. 42 (ACM 102; KYP M494; TM 99598)	?	This might be understood as a hypocoristic of any name beginning Kō-, such as ⲕⲱⲫⲉ. Cf. the name ⲕⲟϩⲩ in P.KRU. 24 l. 6 (TM 23187; 763 CE, Thebes).
Mikahēu	ⲙⲓⲕⲁϩⲏ (ll. 11, 19)	Vienna K 7091 (Stegemann (1933–4) no. 17; M248; TM 91409; X CE)	Mikke or Mikhaēl (?)	The original editor, Stegemann (1933–1934, no. 17), was not able to read this name. For the correction, see the edition in KYP M248.
Oulēhēu	ⲟⲩⲗϩϩⲏ (ll. 9, 29)	Louvre E 14251 (KYP M3734; unpublished)	Oualeria (?)	Cf. ⲱⲩⲗⲱϩⲏ in Heuser (1929) 122, understood as Arabic Waliʿa.
Sentihēu	ⲥϩⲛⲧⲓϩⲏ (ll. 13, 21, 22, 24, 26, 29, 34)	Columbia inv. 554 (Schiller 1928; KYP M2; TM 102257; VI–VIII CE?)	Sentieus (?)	This might be understood as the underlying Egyptian form of the Greek Sentieus, perhaps in Demotic T³-šr.t-n-t³-iwiw ("the daughter of the female dog") or something similar (cf. T³-šr.t-n-t³-iḥ.t/Σεντεης "the daughter of the cow"; Lueddeckens (1980): 349 1132).
Sihēu	ⲥⲓϩⲏ (ro ll. 9, 18, 22, 24, 34, vo ll. 3, 7, 12)	Louvre E 14.250 (ACM 109; KYP M367; TM 99997; X CE)	?	Almost certainly a female name, since it is the name of a parent in a curse; it might be understood as any name beginning with Si- or something similar, such as ⲧⲥⲓⲉ or ⲉⲓⲥⲉⲓ.

Tab. 6 (Continued)

Name	Coptic Writing	Source	Proposed Origin	Notes
				A derivation from si- (<sꜣ) does not seem possible for a female name.
Tanhēu	ⲦⲀⲚϩⲎⲨ (ll. 1, 5, 6–7)	P.Stras. K 135 (ACM 87; KYP M474; TM 99577; VII–IX CE)	Tanēs/ Tanas (?)	Heuser (1929) 95 understands the qualitative of ⲦⲀⲚϩⲞ (i.e., "the living one").

There is some discussion of these and other names in Gustav Heuser's examination of personal names in Coptic; he understands the -hēu suffix to come from the word with the same vocalisation with the meaning "useful".[190] An alternative possibility would be to understand the suffix as deriving from the obsolete Egyptian word for "dog" (iwiw), likely vocalised as ēu.[191] Both are found as elements in names – "useful" is itself a name, Eus in Greek, Hēu in Coptic, as is Pahēu/Tahēu ("he/she of the dog", i.e., a cynocephalic deity), with an example of the first pattern found in the corpus.[192] That the first is the correct interpretation is perhaps suggested by the theophoric names relating to Isis-ḥꜣw ("Isis-abundance (?)"), such as Ψεντασευς (< Pꜣ-šr-n-ta-Is.t-ḥwꜣ, "The son of she of Isis-abundance (?)"), where the last element seems to be the Coptic hēu.[193] At least some of the Coptic examples seem to be based on abbreviated forms of other names to which -hēu has been suffixed – Anastahēu from Anastasia and Kirahēu from Kuria, and so on.[194] -hēu thus likely functions as an hypocoristic suffix, added to abbreviated versions of pre-existing names to express affection, in the manner of similar suffixes in other languages – for example, -cock and -kin in Middle English, -o in Australian English, or -ito/ita in Spanish.[195] As in the case of these other languages, the hypocoristic forms may have become independent names. Some confirmation of the relationship between the original and suffixed name is found, surprisingly enough, in a tenth-century magical text, in which a drawing of the Virgin Mary is named by four variants of her name – Mariham, Maria, Marihēu, Marisei – that is, the two com-

190 Heuser (1929) 95.

191 Vycichl (1983) 56 s.v. ϩⲨ. This word is archaic in Coptic, having been replaced by ⲟⲨϩⲟⲣ. I am uncertain about the initial aspirate, which would not to be expected from its consonantal writing.

192 See name IDs 6889 (Eus/Hēu) and 11606 (Pehēu) in TM People; the first of these is found in SM 38 (KYP M869; TM 92853; II CE).

193 TM Nam 10337; Lueddeckens (1980) 270; cf. the simpler form Τασευς (< Ta-Is.t-ḥwꜣ, "She of Isis-abundance (?)"; TM Nam 6096).

194 This was already suggested by Heuser (1929) 95, 125; with further observations in Boud'hors/Calament (2015) 33; Boud'hors/Eissa (2022) 164. Cf. the note on ⲥⲧⲁⲩⲣⲓϩⲉⲩ (< Σταυρός) in n. 188 above.

195 Cf. McClure (2003); Simpson (2008; Lipski (1995).

mon forms of the name, followed by one (perhaps two?) hypocoristic forms.[196] Most of the names are female – there are no clearly male examples in my corpus – although it is possible that some of the original names from which they were derived were male.

The use of this suffix seems to be attested by the sixth century, and survives until at least the eleventh, although I cannot see any clear geographical tendencies in its distribution.[197] Note that despite the fact that some of these names likely derive from Christian onomastic practices (e.g., Anastahēu would be an "abstract" name) I do not count them here as Christian names, in the absence of certainty about their derivation, but since they are all later than the sixth century, this does not meaningfully affect our view of the Christianisation of Egypt, which seems to have been completed by then.

2.3 Findings

Looking at the results of the analysis, we can see that they generally confirm the tendencies noted by both Depauw/Clarysse and Bulliet. We can see that the number of individuals for whom a Christian identity may be imputed climbs substantially in the fourth century before reaching a peak in the fifth. Likewise, Arab names appear in the eighth century, but increase considerably after the ninth century. Before moving on to more specific observations, we should note that the agreement between this independent dataset and the models of Depauw, Clarysse, and Bulliet is very striking. Neither earlier analysis took magical texts into account, and magical texts, imperfectly dated as they are, are almost never dated based on onomastic content.[198]

Looking at the raw numbers (Figure 6), we can see slight declines in Christian names in the sixth, eighth, and tenth centuries; this may be imputed primarily to the methodology of Depauw/Clarysse, which is focused on the initial centuries of Christianisation. In later centuries, names such as Thekla, Menas, Biktōr, and Phoibammōn become very common; while not Christian in origin, all of these were the names of saints with prominent Egyptian cults, a fact not captured in the methodology used here.[199]

196 See PCM I 25 p. 9 ll. 10–13 (=P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 685; KYP M186; TM 102074; X CE; editio princeps in Meyer (1996) 24–25, where this sequence is treated as ll. 11–14. On the image, see Meyer (1996) 80; cf. Dosoo (2022). A fourth name in the list, Marisei, is likely a form of the name tracked in TM People as Μαρισεεις (Name ID 33584), perhaps to be understood as a variant of Maria.

197 Of the texts with known provenances, EES 39 5B.125/A (Alcock (1982); KYP MM280; TM 98045; XI CE) comes from Oxyrhynchus, while Louvre E 14.250 (ACM 109; KYP M367; TM 99997; X CE) comes from Edfu.

198 Cf. n. 120.

199 Cf. the observations on the later popularity of saint names in Delattre (2012); Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 419; Blumell (2012) 266, 275. Bulliet (1979) 68–71 likewise notes a decline of unambiguously Muslim names after an initial period of conversion, as explicitly marked names became less important in a predominantly Muslim environment.

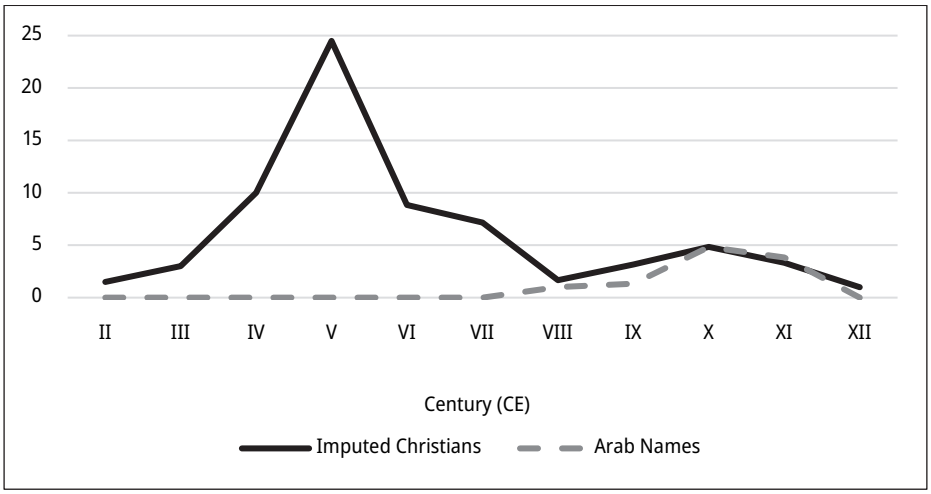

Fig. 6: Individuals with imputed Christian identities and Arab names in applied magical texts.

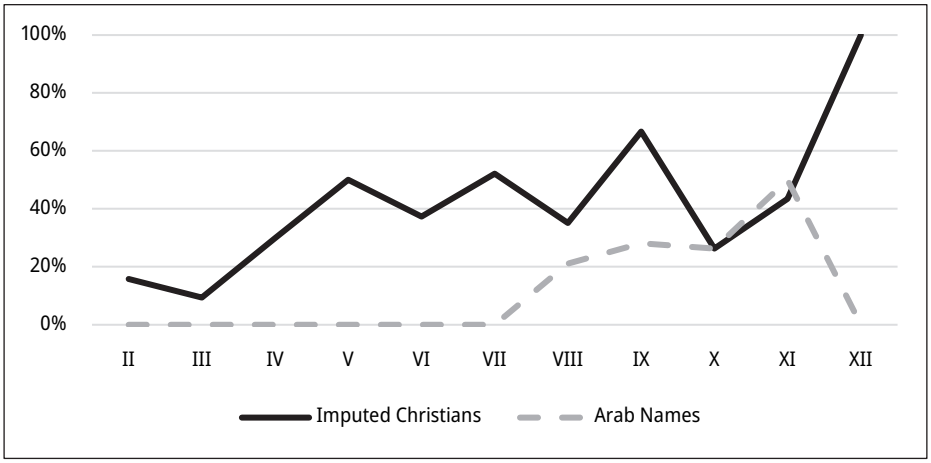

Fig. 7: Individuals with imputed Christian identities and Arab names in applied Greek and Coptic magical texts (as percentages).

Nonetheless, the trends become even more evident when we look at "Christian individuals" as a percentage of the names in each period; by the fifth century, the proportion of Christian names has reached the approximate level at which it remains for the following six centuries. The post-fifth century decline in "Christian individuals" is less marked, and we can see an initial peak in increase in Arab names in the ninth century, as Bulliet expected.[200] The data for the eleventh and twelfth centuries is less reliable; the very small number of manuscripts for this period (only one from the twelfth century), means that there is a striking but meaningless rise in "Christians" to 100 %, and a disappearance of Arab names; in some of the subsequent graphs I will exclude the twelfth century for this reason.

200 Bulliet (1979) 92–103.

Within the corpus, by the fourth century, 29.9 % of individuals have an imputed Christian identity, in the fifth century, fifty percent.[201] Both of these figures are actually higher than the proportion of Christian names found among bishops (19.4 % and 32.8 % respectively);[202] if we were to use the multiplication factors proposed by either Bagnall (1.7) or Depauw and Clarysse (3 – 5 for individuals born in the fourth century, 2.5 – 3 for individuals in the first decades of the fifth), this would imply that all, or nearly all, of the users and victims of applied texts were Christian by the fourth century.[203] There are several potential ways this could be explained: perhaps the Christian users of magical texts, likely of a lower average social class than bishops, were more likely to take identifiably Christian (and in particular, Biblical) names. Perhaps Christians were more likely to use magic than the general population (as, indeed, their elite critics often imply). Perhaps many of the applied magical texts are dated too early, or perhaps the predominance of matronymics in magical texts makes Christians more visible, since Christian women seem to have used a smaller range of names. I do not think that this question can be resolved for now; my impression is that we should focus on the trends, which agree with earlier work, rather than on the specific numbers; it seems unlikely to me that all users of surviving magical texts from a given century would have been Christian until nearly all the population was.

If we look in more detail at the different roles of individuals in the magical papyri (Fig. 8), we can see some further patterns emerge. Here it is important to be cautious in our interpretations, since the numbers of each ritual type and role are relatively small. We may note, however, that the percentage of "Christian" clients remains fairly stable, at between 31.1 % and 45.9 %, between the fifth and eleventh centuries. The number of "Christian" targets of aggressive texts is similarly stable, at between 38.9 % and 53.2 % between the fifth and seventh centuries, at which point their representation disappears for the eighth and ninth before reappearing (20 %) in the tenth and eleventh. The early stability probably reflects a situation in which Egypt was almost wholly Christianised by the fifth century, so that there is little subsequent change in naming patterns. The post-eighth century decline in visibly Christian victims of aggressive texts is likely an artefact of the small number of texts from these later centuries and the imperfections of the methodology – we should remember that "Christians" here refers only to people identifiable as such onomastically, which would be larger using wider criteria, and is only a fraction of the total number of Christians, which was likely 201 These figures are slightly lower than those in Shandruk (2012) 46, who uses the broader criteria for imputed Christian identity proposed in Bagnall (1982).

202 Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 427–430.

203 Bagnall (1982) 116 – 120; Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 427–433.

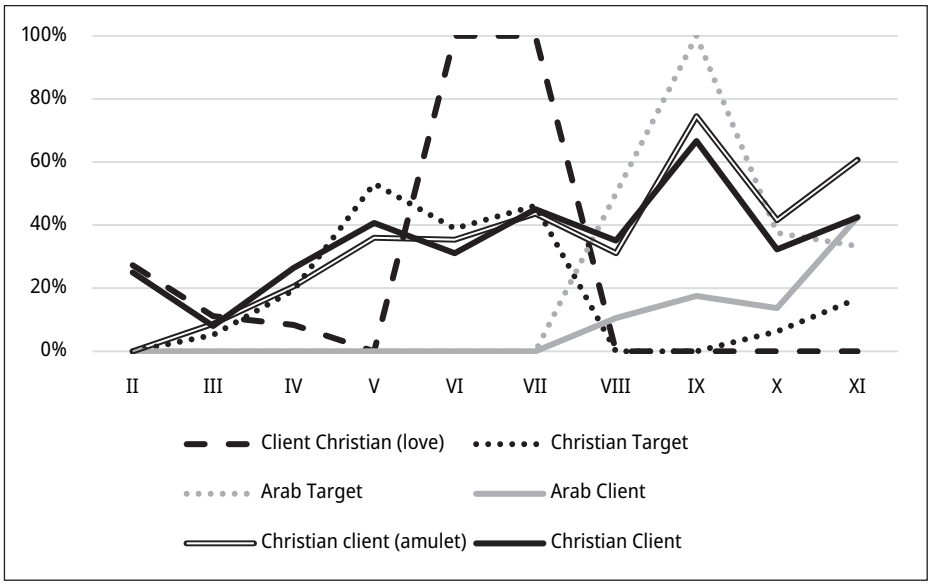

Fig. 8: Imputed Christian identities and Arab names of individuals in the corpus according to role and ritual type.

the majority of the population until the ninth century.[204] Nonetheless, the apparent decline may be capturing something real – the increasing Islamicisation of Egypt from the eighth century onward would mean that we would expect Christian names to be gradually less prominent. More surprising, perhaps, is the fact that we have three second or third century love spells whose commissioners may be imputed a Christian identity, although we must note that none of these bear the Testamental names which are the clearest indicators of Jewish-Christian identity.[205] This is nonetheless 204 Among these later texts is, for example, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana 5645 (KYP M66; TM 99588; VII – VIII CE?), mentioning an Apollo, likely named after the saint of the same name, not counted as having a "Christian name" in the methodology of Depauw/Clarysse (2013).

205 SM 38 (KYP M869; TM 92853; II CE), SM 50 (KYP M876; TM 105083; II CE), and SM 42 (KYP M486; TM 92863; III–IV CE), whose clients are named, respectively, Theodotis, Theodoros, and Sophia, two anonymous theonyms and one virtue name. These names are somewhat ambiguous, and might also have been used by non-Christians. A Theodotē, of which Theodotis would seem to be a variant, is mentioned by Xenophon (Memorabilia III.11.1) in the fifth century BCE; the name is relatively common from the fourth to second century BCE (14 attestations in TM People, i. e. 4.7 per century) before becoming rare from the first century BCE to third CE (5 attestations, i. e. 1.3 per century) and then common again from the fourth to the tenth (30 attestations, i. e. 4.3 per century; the difference is even clearer when weighted frequency is taken into account). Non-Christians named Theodoros include the philosophers Theodoros of Gadara (I BCE) and Theodoros of Asine (III–IV CE) (see Knell et al. (2009)). The name does seem to become more frequent with Christianisation, but it is still quite common before the third century. Sophia is more certainly Christian, with only one attestation in TM People pre-dating the third century CE (SB I 4612, 95 quite striking; there are 19 love spells datable to these centuries, of whom 15.7 % have an imputed Christian identity. This is, again, higher than the percentages of Christian names among certain groups of known Christians in these centuries (0 % and 10.5 %, for bishops in the second and third centuries respectively),[206] and would imply that an even larger number of Christians without religiously identifiable names may have used them. Again, we should be very cautious about reading too much into such small figures, but it is striking that Christians do seem to have been early users of love spells, even if there are many fewer surviving applied love spells after Christianity becomes the established religion of the Roman empire. As we have seen, and will see again, the use of magic seems to generally reflect the historical context more than the religious identity of the individual user.

The data concerning Arab names, though fewer, are nonetheless interesting. The thirteen individuals with Arabic-origin names are found in nine manuscripts. Their dating poses a major problem; one can perhaps be dated to the eighth or ninth century (P.Berlin 8503; Beltz (1984) no. III 23),[207] two to the tenth (Louvre E 14.250 (Drioton (1946)); the Asyut Dossier (Dosoo (2021d)),[208] one perhaps to the eleventh (EES 39 5B.125/A; Alcock (1982)),[209] and the rest likely to the tenth or eleventh.[210] This means that much of the apparent gradual change may be illusory – more precise dating might, for example, show that all of the change happened early, in the tenth century, or late, in the eleventh, rather than being distributed evenly between the two. We can, however, observe that no parents of clients have clearly Arabic-origin names.[211] This suggests that once Egyptians either converted to Islam, or became sufficiently Arabised to use Arabic names, they may have ceased to use Coptic-language magic within a couple of generations; that is, the Arabic-named children of individuals with Graeco-Coptic names might use Coptic magic, but their own children did not, or, at least, did not at the same level. In later periods, Muslims might make more extensive use of Christian practitioners, but at this period, at least, they may have more often had recourse to Arabic-CE). My impression therefore is that the name Sophia is almost certainly, Thedotis probably, and Theodoros possibly, Christian. If the individuals with these names are indeed Christian, it might be that these ambiguous names were more common in the earlier centuries, when the more marked Testamental names would have made the vulnerable Christian minority overly visible; cf. Wipszycka (1986) 180.

206 See Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 429.

207 Here I follow the judgement of Richter (2015) 97.

208 Dating of the original editor.

209 Dating of the original editor.

210 Note that the Louvre website (https://collections.louvre.fr/ark:/53355/cl010048236) gives a seventh to ninth century date for Louvre E 14251, but the hand resembles those of the tenth to eleventh century to me, and the same applies to P. Heid. Inv. Kopt. 544b (Quecke (1963) no. 1), which the original editor did not venture to date.

211 Possible exceptions might be ⲙⲁⲣⲓⲁⲙ, the mother of ⲁϩⲙⲏⲧ (a) (see Table 3 above), and ⲥⲉⲧⲉ, mother of ⲑⲉⲓⲭⲁⲣ in Cambridge UL T-S 12.207 (Crum (1902); TM 99585; KYP M534; X–XI CE). While I consider the origin of this name uncertain, Crum suggests ستّي (sitt-ī) "my lady", although in this case it could be a pseudonym rather than a real name (or the abbreviation of one); cf nn. 170, 169 above.

language texts.[212] Two Arabic-origin names do appear as the parents of the targets of aggressive magic (both silencing curses),[213] confirming that Muslims or third-(or more)-generation Arabised Christians were nonetheless present at this time, and might be targeted by Coptic-using clients.

Most of the names present are asmā (personal names); the exceptions include one laqab (honorific; Sitt al-Kull), one kunya (nickname; Abu l-Bahā), and one apparent nisbah, accompanying an ism (Mufliḥ 'al-Pahapani'). Many of these Arabic asmā are closely associated with Islam, and thus almost certainly indicate a Muslim identity; these include those those noted by Bulliet as being common among recent converts:[214] ʿAbd Allāh, Aḥmad, and al-Ḥusayn. We should perhaps include here Mahēt, which might be understood as a form of Muḥammad, as well as Zaynab, the name of the Prophet Muḥammad's daughter and granddaughter. Four of these appear as the names of clients, one as the name of a target, and one as the father of a target.

This leaves five Arabic-origin names which cannot be assigned with some certainty to Muslim individuals, and which might instead represent the names of Arabised Christians. Notable here is Poulpehe (Abu l-Bahā), who might, like the contemporary inhabitants of the Faiyum, have had a Graeco-Coptic personal name which alternated in use with his Arabic kunya. It is difficult to know what to make of the others; Sōliman is the Arabic form of Solomon, but he might equally well be considered a Christian, a Muslim, or a Jew; his mother's name, Mariham, offers us little help here.

Our conclusions are suggestive, but must be cautious. By the ninth century at the latest, a Muslim client (Aptellah in P.Berlin 8503) is apparently attested using Coptic-language magic, but based on his name and matronymic, he may well have been a recent convert. By the tenth/eleventh century, about 33.2% of individuals have names which are recognisably Arabic in origin, of which a little under half (5 of 11=45.4%) are probably Muslim. This thus tends to confirm Bulliet's original observation, that the ninth century represented the turning point in the Arabisation and Islamicisation of Egypt, both of which processes seem to be attested in the onomastic data.

2.4 Interpreting Temporal Change: Onomastics as Ritual Practice

In his Great Cat Massacre, a key work of cultural history in English, Robert Darnton reflected in his conclusions upon the methodological habits of his French predecessors in the Annales school, the "attempt to measure attitudes by counting—counting masses for the dead, pictures of Purgatory, titles of books, speeches in academies, furniture in 212 For the later phenomenon of Muslims making use of Christian magicians see, e.g., Blackman (1968) 74; Viaud (1978) 17, 26–27, 96; cf. Lacerenza (2002) for a discussion of Christian use of Jewish magical practitioners.

213 Ahmēt in Louvre E 14251 (unpublished; KYP M3734); Sit el-Khoul in Cambridge UL T-S 12.207 (Crum (1902).

214 Cf. fn. 161 above.

inventories, crimes in police records, invocations to the Virgin Mary in wills, and pounds of candle wax burned to patron saints in churches".[215] It is such statistical approaches that lie behind the work of Bulliet, who, in turn served as the inspiration for Bagnall and later Depauw.[216] Yet, as Darnton also noted, numbers are, to an extent, "symptoms produced by the historian himself, and they can be interpreted in wildly different ways... in the drop in the graphs of masses said for souls in Purgatory... the secular left [see the] ... embourgeoisement of world view; to the religious right... they reveal new patterns of family affection and charity. The only point of agreement seems to be the dictum of Ernest Labrousse: 'Everything derives from the curve'."[217] The problem of generating and interpreting data is not an easy one, and I do not pretend to offer here a resolution to the sharp debates occasioned by the work of Bulliet, Bagnall, Depauw, and Clarysse. Yet I think it is necessary here to address, at least superficially, two of the key theoretical problems – whether it is possible to fix a definition of "Christian", and, even if it is, whether statistical methods are appropriate to analyse this definition.

Of the critiques of the methodology first used by Bagnall, the most extensive have come from Wipszycka and Frankfurter, who raise the question of how we can move from a single data point – the name – to a meaningful picture of an individual's religious identity, particularly when talking about Christianity as "exclusive and coherent religious ideology".[218] While onomastic studies focus by necessity on summing large numbers of individual names, Wipszycka suggests that conversion was usually group, rather than individual – entire villages might rapidly adopt an explicitly Christian identity, creating both a situation in which documents from that village would give a picture quite incorrect for the rest of Egypt, and, Frankfurter argues, one in which the understanding and degree of commitment of individual members to Christianity would be far more varied and more complex than a binary distinction might imply.[219] He points to practices which survived beyond the ostensible Christianisation of the fourth and fifth centuries which might seem to problematise such a straightforward model, such as divination through, for example, shrine incubation, as well as the manipulation of material objects such as terracotta votive female figurines, amulets, and martyr oil.[220] As Depauw and Clarysse put it, he sees Christianity as "analogue", 215 Darnton (1999) 258.

216 "[Bulliet:] The closest professional ancestry for me and my way of approaching history is the French school of history called the 'Annales school'"; Genovese (2021); cf. Bulliet (1992).

217 Darnton (1999) 258, citing Labrousse (1943) xxix: "tout derive de la courbe".

218 Frankfurter (2014) 285.

219 Wipszycka (1986) 174; in this earlier work she noted that the concerns she raises here would not apply to a large-scale prosopography of the type carried out in Depauw/Clarysse (2013), but in her later writing she cast doubt on the suitability of papyrological data, even in a large-scale prosopography, to address this question (Wipszycka (1988) 164–165); Frankfurter (2014).

220 Frankfurter (2014), 286–289. This point is a major theme in his output more generally, dealt with most fully in Frankfurter (2017), where it is expressed in terms of "syncretism". As he notes there, however (p. 16–17), many of these practices he describes are not meaningfully "non-Christian", in the sense whereas they see it as "digital.[221] For Frankfurter, Christianisation is not primarily a matter of individual conversions, but rather of a shift in "cultural options" or "domestic strategies".[222] Yet, for him, this does not imply that there were "half-Christians", who had partly but not entirely converted; rather, this raises the question of how useful it could be to describe Egypt as being, for example, ninety-five per cent Christian;[223] the number itself effaces the very richness of practice which religious history should bring into relief.

Frankfurter suggests that in the modern West there is a tendency to see religious identity primarily in terms of "faith", a legacy of the Protestant reformation and its intense interest in the individual conscience, expressed in the concepts of conversion and the sense of belonging to a particular group.[224] Yet Bulliet and his successors have never denied that belief is a complex matter; he noted in returning to his work that he had no way of knowing the "depth, motivation or genuineness of the move from a non-Muslim to a Muslim social identity".[225] But, as he observes, this is equally a problem for modern religious demography: when sociologists or demographers investigate religious identity, they typically ask individuals to self-identify, or choose from a fixed list of options; they do not ask for proof of identity or authenticity.[226] Modern studies also demonstrate that it is common for there to be a disjuncture between explicit religious identification in surveys, and the kinds of beliefs and behaviours we might infer from that identity – in Norway, for example, 70 % of the population identifies as Lutheran Protestant Christian, and yet reported belief in God is lower than 25 %, and regular church attendance less than 5 %.[227] As Conrad Hackett has pointed out, we must be clear about what we are trying to study –religious "identity", or religious commitment, where the latter would designate not simply self-identification, or even belief, but rather practice, including attendance at public ceremonies and performance of private rituals.[228]

What actions might be indicative of Christianity? We might think of practices such as baptism (or preparation for baptism), church attendance, confession, almsgiving, of being traditional (i. e., "pagan") practices maintained by Christians, as the term "syncretism" might imply. They are instead often forms of Christian ritual or devotional practice which might seem surprising to modern observers, and/or which may have been disapproved of by some members of the church hierarchy.

---

221 Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 328; cf. Frankfurter (2023) 30 et passim.

222 Frankfurter (2014) 287–288.

223 Frankfurter (2014) 286–287.

224 Frankfurter (2014) 286; Frankfurter (2023) 30. Conversion (Greek μετάνοια or ἐπιστροφή, Latin conversio) was nonetheless a key concept in Christianity from its earliest stages, so this critique deserves some qualification; cf. e. g., Kling (2020), esp. chapters 2–4.

225 Cf. Bulliet (2017) 70–71

226 Bulliet (2017) 76.

227 Wildman et al. (2021) 171.

228 Hackett (2014) 400; cf. Wildman et al. (2021). A helpful exploration of concepts of identity in Late Antiquity may be found in Brand (2023).

participation in Christian festivals.[229] We could also consider "negative practice" – Christians might not be expected to attend non-Christian shrines, or even practice magic.[230] Yet, as Frankfurter has stressed, and as modern studies show, the relationship between religious identity and behaviour is complex. A 2010 Pew survey found that in Tanzania, 60 % of the population identifies as Christian, 36 % as Muslim, while only 2 % claimed belonging to a "traditional African religion". Nonetheless 62 % of the population also say they believe in and practice what the survey characterises as "traditional African beliefs".[231] As those living in the modern West know, such apparent contradictions are not restricted to African countries; a Pew survey of the year before found that roughly a quarter of American Christians believed in astrology, reincarnation, and "spiritual energies in trees, etc." – rates almost identical to non-Christians.[232] We must imagine the religious identities and behaviours or Late Antique Egyptians as similarly complex, and apparently inconsistent, assemblages.

This brings us to a key problem in all kinds of theorising – the disjuncture between what David Harvey characterises as thinking in terms of "things" versus processes.[233] We are often tempted to define religious identity as a concrete and measurable "thing", whereas it might be better understood in terms of a dynamic process: an ongoing series of actions whose aggregate over time may show certain clear tendencies, but which cannot be said to reveal an essential state apart from this process. We do not (yet?) have abundant data for masses for the dead or quantities of lamp oil burned in churches from the Egypt of the first millennium CE, as we might for modern or early modern European states. But we do have onomastic data, and names, as Frankfurter recognises, are not only facts about individuals, but the residue of actions, specifically the act of naming a child, carried out, normally, by the individual's parents.[234] There are relatively few explicit discussions of the process of naming from antiquity, but two that do survive by Christians, often cited in the past, reveal that ecclesiastical figures such as Dionysios of Alexandria (cited by Eusebius) and John Chrysostom did consider naming to be a significant and meaning-full action, capable of revealing an allegiance and attachment to the Christian faith.[235] I would suggest that when we look at onomastic change, we should consider it primarily in this way – revealing not Christian identity in a direct (analogue or digital) way, but rather as one surviving trace of the exact cultural options

229 Cf. Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 328.

230 Cf. Frankfurter (2023) 30 – 31.

231 Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life (2010) 20, 34; the term is very broad, and somewhat imprecise; the specific questions are given on pp. 222 – 225. Cf. Hackett (2014) 408, 409.

232 Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life (2009) 2.

233 Harvey (1997) 18 – 19; cf. Hackett (2014) 396, 400 on the specific problems in relation to religious demography.

234 Frankfurter (2014) 286; Frankfurter (2023) 37.

235 Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History 7.25.14, text in PG 20 609 – 702, translation in Defferari (2005) 134; Chrysostom, On the Education of Children 47, text and translation in Malingrey (1972) 144 – 147; see discussions in Harnack (1905) 42 – 45; Kajanto (1963) 92 – 93; Blumell (2012) 237– 238, 243 – 244; Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 425 – 426; cf. Frankfurter (2014) 288 n. 13.

which Frankfurter signals as being of interest. The shift we see is one of Christian religious practices, here the choosing of Christian names, shifting from a minor cultural option to the predominant pattern.

But if the overall patterns might help us to trace a history of mentalities mediated by a history of actions, this does not resolve the problem of moving from the group to the individual, particularly when we try to nail down the religious "identity" – still less, practices – of an individual for whom an amulet or love spell was written. We can avoid this question to an extent by considering the use of "magic" as a second type of act, whose tendencies can be traced over time – I will explore this in the last part of this essay. But it does not resolve the problem of the individual; as Depauw and Clarysse noted, their methodology "cannot explain all – or even any – individual case".[236]

All authors who have contributed to the debate agree that name change on conversion, though common in Islam, was vanishingly rare in the case of Christianity, and so the names of children nearly always reflect the decisions of their parents. Thus, even when parents perform the marked act of choosing a "Christian" name, this does not mean that their children will necessarily enact the practices, and hold the implied associated beliefs, that we would expect of a Christian. Might there have been, as Frankfurter implies, people who chose Christian names for their children, but for whom Christian beliefs were a minor part of their lives, or entirely absent?[237] We might imagine, for example, people whose lives were focused on traditional Egyptian cultic practice (temple or private) who nonetheless visited a saint's shrine or Christian holy man for help with conception, and who in gratitude chose a "Christian" name for the resulting child without undergoing any conversion experience. Less dramatically, we may imagine individuals who had never undergone baptism, and who had little interest in Christian rituals, but who nonetheless gave a child a Biblical name in the hope for a name which offered "magical protection" or that sounded "modern", as Frankfurter suggests, "like those names today that parents everywhere pluck from western television to give their infants".[238]

While these possibilities might be plausible, they must remain hypothetical. There is, as Depauw and Clarysse discuss, very little evidence of individuals with clearly Christian names but demonstrably non-Christian identities;[239] less than five have apparently been identified in forty years of discussion.[240] There are a few historical cases which serve as examples of people with Christian parents (and hence, potentially Christian names) who might return to predominantly non-Christian practices. The third- and fourth-century imperial persecutions of Christians led many to abandon 236 Depauw/Clarysse (2015) 329; cf. Choat (2006) 53.

237 Frankfurter (2014) 287–288; Frankfurter (2023) 34–35.
238 Frankfurter (2014) 288
239 Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 426–427; but we should note that certain names were certainly more ambiguous; cf. the examples in fns. 147 and 205 above.
240 Choat (2006) 55; Depauw/Clarysse (2013) 426–427.

their faith, but since Christian names were not themselves a criterion for persecution, those who did apostasise, and their descendants, might have retained markedly Christian names. Julian the Apostate represents the most famous early case of an individual raised as a Christian who self-consciously left the faith and its practices behind, but we might think also of Augustine of Hippo, who had a Christian mother, but not a Christian identity for his early life. Both might serve as representatives of the many less-famous individuals who might have followed similar trajectories.

The last question is that of the appropriateness of using statistical methods to measure questions as difficult to pin down as belief and identity, especially when these methods must be accompanied by so many provisos. If one thinks that beliefs are inherently unquantifiable, then there is a basic problem of methodology, yet implicitly quantitative statements are difficult to avoid entirely; the use of degree determinatives (most, some, few, etc.) often imply rough percentages, and even in the absence of any quantifiers, the choice of phenomena or texts to discuss implies something about their representativeness. Despite its shortcomings, quantitative analysis forces us to put numbers to our intuitions and impressions, with the result that these may be confirmed, refined, or problematised.[241] This does not mean that such analyses can be the end of a discussion; rather, they are one element which needs to be contextualised by more granular examinations of the data from which they arise. It is striking that my analysis here broadly confirms the curves graphed by Depauw, Clarysse, and Bulliet, and this must mean something, even if more work must be done to understand exactly what that something is – does the quickening drumbeat of Christian and Arab naming practices accompany the march of religious change, or is it a sign of something more superficial, which interacted little with other forms of religious practice, or even merely the bias of the surviving, published sources?

3 Divine Names in Magical Papyri

3.1 Methodology

I have suggested that the onomastic information concerning individuals mentioned in magical texts may tell us something about their likely religious identity, but that it tells us more about the context in which they lived, in which the aggregate population became more or less likely over time to perform the action of giving a child an explicitly Christian or Arab name. The creation and use of a magical text might also be considered a meaningful religious act, providing us with additional data which can be examined alongside the names of the individuals named in texts. Here I use a slightly different approach from that of Shandruk, looking at the specific names (or titles) of divine beings and other culturally significant figures referred to in texts in order to examine trends over time.[242] As the reader should expect by now, this must be interpreted with many caveats; an ideal approach would be to examine the entire magical corpus, since nearly all of these contain the names of deities, but for now I present here only a smaller study using only the corpus of applied texts with personal names introduced above.

241 Cf. the cautious use of onomastics, or other statistics drawn from papyri, by two authors otherwise hesitant to accept Bagnall's methodology – Wipszycka (1988) 162–163 and Papaconstantinou (2023) 72, who both go on to discuss their interpretation in greater detail.

There are numerous challenges in counting occurrences of names; here I only distinguish between deities mentioned and not mentioned in each text – for my purposes it is not important whether a deity is mentioned once or ten times. In a future study it might be worth exploring ways to take this into account in analyses, as well as the roles of deities (invoked, invoked by, hostile being, etc.), as well as their relationships; as Roxanne Bélanger Sarrazin has demonstrated, there are sometimes structured relationships between divine figures which are revealing of the religious context, such as the formal subordination of non-Christian to Christian figures in later narrative charms.[243]

Given the polyonomy of many ancient deities, as well as the varied spellings for different names, it has been necessary to use my judgement at several points in order to decide which names and name forms to group together. For example, I treat "Adoniēl" as a form of "Adonai" to which the suffix -iel has been added,[244] and "Eloē" and "Eloi" as variants of the same name. Yet I generally treat different titles for the same deity separately – for example, I count "Jesus" and "the Son" as two separate names, even though in most cases they likely refer to the same personage. By contrast, I treat "Jesus" and "Christ" as part of the same name, since they appear so often together. At the same time, it did not seem worth listing all of the individual names of common groups separately, so I have followed a slightly different policy with collectives of beings like the Four Living Creatures or the 24 Presbyters, counting as mentions either lists of their names, or mentions of them as collectives.[245] This raises the problem of the definition of a "deity", since the 24 Presbyters are not usually thought of as such; I use it here in an extended sense of "deities and culturally significant beings", rather than a being which is necessarily worshipped; this means that I include in the category figures such as "Isaac" and "Jacob".[246] I have excluded from consideration the titles 242 I am grateful to Jean-Luc Fournet, who first suggested such an approach to me in conversation a few years ago. Cf. the different methodology used in Shandruk (2012) 46–50.

243 Bélanger Sarrazin (2020) 125–126, 143, 153–154, 176–177, 213.

244 Found in BL Or 6794 (CACM 129; KYP M306; TM 100017; VI–VII CE), written in ring letters above the figure. The suffix –(ι)ηλ is common in magical names as one of a number of suffixes apparently intended to give the name a Jewish feel, inspired by such angel names as Gabriel and Michael, in which the element corresponds to Hebrew אל -el ("god").

245 See e.g., Vienna K 8637 (Stegemann (1933-4) no. 27; KYP M258; TM 91419; X–XI CE) where we find sequences of names which are recognisably those of the Three Hebrew Youths, the Three Magi, and the Four Living Creatures; cf. Brashear (1983) 299; Meyer/Smith (1999) 387.

246 Note that I have not counted images of deities, such as an image of Bes on an amulet (found in PGM XXXIX; KYP M772; TM 64481; IV CE), since this would bring in the problem of identifying deities based on

"Lord" and "God", since they are potentially too generic in a culture with many gods, each of whom is potentially a "Lord". Nonetheless, it is likely that in many cases, particularly when they co-occur as "the Lord God", they refer specifically to the Jewish-Christian deity, and this likelihood becomes a near certainty after the fourth century.[247]

While these problems may seem considerable, in this analysis I hope to ameliorate them by focusing less on individual names than on categories. Each name was assigned to one of five categories, and for each manuscript the presence or absence of a name belonging to that category was counted. These categories were: Christian, Jewish/Christian, 'Magical', Egyptian, and Greek. Names belonging to each category with more than 5 attestations in the corpus are given in Table 7.

Tab. 7: Names of deities attested in 5 or more manuscripts in the corpus; names are ranked by order of frequency, with the most frequent names in each category at the top.

Christian	Jewish/Christian	'Magical'	Egyptian	Greek
Jesus Christ	Iaō	Abrasax	Osiris	Persephone
Father	Sabaōth	Ablanathanabla	Anubis	Ananke
Son	Michael	Akhramakhamari		Kore
Holy Spirit	Gabriel	Sesengenbarpharanges
Emmanuel	Adōnai	Marmaraoth
4 Living Creatures	Raphael	Maskelli
24 Presbyters	Suriel	Bainkhookh/Bakhukh
Trinity	Eloe	Ereskhigal[248]
	Cherubim	Sator Arepo
	Three Hebrews
	Seraphim
	Abraham
	Angel
	Archangel
	Raguel
	Uriel
	Anael
	Jacob
	Isaac
	Daniel

their iconography, and, secondarily, of the relationship between text and image. For reflections on the relationship between text and image, see inter alia, Martín Hernández (2012); Dosoo (2022); Dosoo (2023) 177–183. This is a minor problem, however, since identifiable deities on applied texts are relatively few.

247 On the occasional uses of 'Lord God' by those who were neither Jewish nor Christian, see Choat (2016) 108–112.

248 Ereshkigal is of course an originally Mesopotamian deity, but I am not aware of any cult of Ereshkigal in Egypt in the Roman period, so that it is likely that the name, attested in Greek magical papyri, metal tablets, and gems, was transmitted within the magical tradition; cf. Schwemer (2019) for a discussion of Mesopotamian elements, including the name 'Ereshkigal', in the magical papyri.

These categories deserve fuller justification. First, I did not include a "Muslim" category, since there are too few diagnostically Muslim figures in the corpus, perhaps because explicitly Muslim content would only be likely to appear after the mid-seventh century, and be written in Arabic. There is one use of the Arabic name 'Allah' in a bilingual Arabic-Coptic manuscript to name the monotheistic god, and we might think also of, for example, formularies which mention jinn, but these offer too few datapoints to be useful in a large analysis of this type.[249] At the same time, we must remember that nearly all diagnostically Jewish and Christian figures would be equally at home in a Muslim text, as a result of the Muslim appropriation of Judaism and Christianity as their own prehistory.

Deities classified as "Christian" are those who only appear in a Christian, but not Jewish, context – often figures from the New Testament or later Christian theology (such as the Trinity). All other figures who, though part of Christian religious culture, were appropriated from Jewish traditions, have been counted as Jewish/Christian (henceforth "Jewish" for brevity) – this includes beings like the archangels and Patriarchs. The category "Magical" is more problematic, given the controversy which the term continues to provoke, but it is intended to cover names such as "Abrasax" and "Maskelli" which are common in magical texts but were not part of any major public cult. Some of these, of course, were part of Gnostic systems, and occasionally show up in literary texts, so that one might argue that they were part of minor religious systems which found their way into magic.[250] Yet their interest, for us here, is that they are found both in texts which are otherwise largely Christian, and those which have explicitly Graeco-Egyptian content; they seem to be transmitted through the magical texts themselves rather than through any other cultic tradition. The next category, that of "Egyptian" names, captures Egyptian deities such as Osiris and Anubis (the most common), but also Sarapis, a "hybrid" Greek-Egyptian form of Osiris-Apis. Finally, "Greek" includes both Greek deities, and figures of Greek history or legend, such as Lycurgus and Erichthonius.[251]

As even this brief outline suggests, there remain major problems with classifications of names – for example, is Davithe, the name of one of the Sethian luminaries, Christian? Is Helios, the solar deity who likely appears regularly in the magical papyri, to be understood as the Greek solar titan, or an interpretatio graeca of the Egyptian Re? I have decided to treat Sethian figures as Christian, since they belong broadly to the 249 This is Cambridge UL T-S 12.207 (Crum 1902; TM 99585; KYP M534; X–XI CE?), in the formula ⲡⲉⲥⲙⲉⲗⲗⲉ (l. 1; i. e., bi-smi llāh); the rest of the Basmala follows, with the usual divine titles (l-raḥmāni l-raḥīmi). The edition of P.Berol. 5744 (KYP M196) in Beltz (1984) no. I 357 includes Allah as a loanword (ⲁⲗⲗⲁ) but an examination of the manuscript by Edward Love suggests that this reading is not plausible (private communication 22/11/2019). The loanword ǧinn (ⲅⲓⲛ) appears in PCM I 21 l. 14 (=P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 680; P.Bad. V 141; KYP M313; TM 102078), a tenth-century formulary; cf. Gardner (2023) 86–87.

250 On these, see Piwowarczyk (2021), xxii, xxiv, 9–23, 323, et passim.

251 Erichthonius appears in SM 34 (KYP M477; TM 65318; VI CE), in a declining triangle formation as part of a fever amulet which invokes Jesus.

Christian tradition, and, although Helios does not appear in the corpus, I treat similarly ambivalent deities (such as Cronus and Hermes) as Greek. These decisions could be questioned, but they do not significantly affect the outcome of the statistics here, because all three figures are very rare in the corpus, and the analysis here focuses, after all, on categories of names rather than individual names.[252]

The most difficult name, perhaps, is Iaō. The name derives quite clearly from the pronunciation of the name of the Jewish god current among Jews in Egypt, Yaho, recorded as far back as the Persian Period,[253] yet it is the most common name in the Greek magical corpus, and very frequent in the Coptic and Demotic ones too.[254] In their recent study of a magico-medical manuscript which they date to the fourth century, Edward Love and Michael Zellmann-Rohrer suggest that Iaō, while susceptible to interpretation by Jews and Christians as the name of their deity, was not always marked as such, and was instead simply part of the general background of the Graeco-Egyptian magical tradition.[255] In some cases they are likely right – SM 41 begins with a long sequence of vowels, which includes the sequence Iao; in this case a meaningful reference to the Jewish-Christian deity seems unlikely.[256] Yet there are many cases where references to Jewish-Christian names and topoi are much clearer, even if they occur in an otherwise clearly non-Jewish/Christian context.[257] I think it would be misleading, in many cases, to see these instances as simply part of the "background noise" of the Graeco-Egyptian magical tradition – rather, the appropriation of specific names from different cultural and religious traditions should usually be considered meaningful, even if the exact meaning must be teased out. Texts with particularly specific or dense references to Jewish topoi, even when produced in non-Jewish contexts, often seem to be attempts to appropriate the ritual power attributed to 252 Since the numbers for Egyptian and Greek deities are so low in this study, I do not think that this imperfect system meaningfully distorts the results, but a fuller study would need to deal with the problem more directly.

253 Van der Toorn (2019) 102–110. That the vocalisation was, at least sometimes, /jaho/ rather than as /jao/ is apparent from sources such as GEMF 16 (PDM xiv; KYP M162; II CE); see e.g., GEMF 16 l.28 (col.1 l.28), where we find in Demotic yʿhʿ glossed in Old Coptic as ⲓⲁϩⲱ, where the third sign is equivalent to standard Coptic hori.

254 In a search through the PGM (excluding "Christian" texts) and SM in the Thesaurus Linguae Graecae (online at https://stephanus.tlg.uci.edu/index.php, seen 30/9/2022), the lemma Ἰαω occurred 208 times; the next most frequent divine name was Helios (Ἥλιος), with 104 attestations, although many of these were likely references to the physical sun rather than the deity; next is Hermes with 74 attestations. In my own search of the published Demotic formularies (GEMF 15–18/PDM xii, xiv, lxi, Suppl.), I found 34 references to Ya(h)ō, a significant number, equal with Horus, though less than Osiris (62), Anubis (60), or Isis (51).

255 Zellmann-Rohrer/Love (2022) 53–54, 70; cf. the more detailed discussions cited in n. 258 below.

256 SM 41 ll. 2–6 (KYP M871; TM 35138; III CE).

257 Cf. e.g., PGM IV.1218–1226, in which Iaō is likewise followed by a string of vowels, but is linked to Jerusalem and the unquenchable lamp of the temple; cf. the discussion in Bohak (2000) 6–7; Bohak (2008) 207.

Jews by non-Jews, and are thus an indication of the presence and/or imagined position of Jews in the cultural context which produced the text.[258]

The purpose of this classification is, therefore, to measure, in very rough terms, the types of influence which appear in different manuscripts over time; each manuscript is thus assigned a 1 or 0 for each of the five categories of names.

3.2 Findings

Tab. 8: Names of deities and cultural figures in corpus by category.

Category of names	No. of names	No. of attestations	No. of manuscripts with attestations
Jewish-Christian	49	346	83
Christian	36	162	66
Magical	23	123	57
Greek	19	45	19
Egyptian	17	41	18
Muslim	1	1	1

My analysis identified 142 "deities" or "groups", and 814 instances of such deities in manuscripts, according to the criteria described above.[259] The most common category was Jewish, followed by Christian, then Magical, Egyptian, and finally Greek names. To some extent, the predominance of Jewish, and even more so, Christian names, is due to the large number of texts post-dating the fourth/fifth century rise of Christianity.

Tab. 9: Names with at least 9 manuscript attestations in the corpus.

Name	No. of Ms. Attestations	Category
Jesus Christ	35	Christian
Iaō	34	Jewish/Christian
Sabaōth	33	Jewish/Christian
Michael	30	Jewish/Christian
Gabriel	27	Jewish/Christian

258 Cf. Bohak (2000) 4–9; Bohak (2008) 196–209; Fauth (2014) 1–11 et passim.

259 This table includes Allah as a "Muslim" name, but I exclude it from the subsequent analysis, since it occurs only once; cf. n. 249 above. 'Allah' was of course also used as the name of the monotheistic god by Arabic-speaking Christians, but in the context of its use in the Basmala it is certainly Muslim (cf. n. 249 above).

Tab. 9 (Continued)

Name	No. of Ms. Attestations	Category
Abrasax	24	Magical
Adōnai	23	Jewish/Christian
Raphael	22	Jewish/Christian
Suriel	22	Jewish/Christian
Father	20	Christian
Son	18	Christian
Ablanathanalba	18	Magical
Akramakhamari	16	Magical
Holy Spirit	15	Christian
Eloe	11	Jewish/Christian
Cherubim	11	Jewish/Christian
3 Hebrews	9	Jewish/Christian
Seraphim	9	Jewish/Christian
Sesengen Bar Pharanges[260]	9	Magical

The two most common names are "Jesus Christ" and "Iaō", with 35 and 34 manuscript attestations each. Of the other names with more than 9 manuscript attestations, three are Christian (the names of the Trinity – Father, Son, and Holy Spirit), four are magical (Abrasax, Ablanathanalba, Akhramakhamari, and Sesengen Barpharanges), but the majority (12) are Jewish – including, prominently, the other Hebrew names and titles of God (Sabaōth, Adōnai, Eloe), and archangels (Michael, Gabriel, Raphael). Egyptian and Greek deity names are relatively rare – the Greek deities are most common in curses and love spells, of which there are relatively few,[261] and the same is true of the most common Egyptian deities – Osiris and Anubis – who appear exclusively as chthonic deities called upon in Greek binding spells.[262] The picture would likely be different if we looked at Demotic-language texts (although there are, unfortunately, no published applied texts from the period studied here)[263] or formularies in Greek, Demotic, or Old Coptic, where Greek and Egyptian divine names are more common. While Egyptian and Greek deities do appear in applied texts, their appearances are few and idiosyncratic, and the most common non-Jewish or Christian figures to appear belong instead to the magical tradition.

260 On this name, see Schwartz (1996).
261 See, e.g., the example mentioned in n. 251 above.
262 See, e.g., SM 42 ll. 23–24 (KYP M486; TM 92863; III–IV CE).
263 Cf. n. 31 above.

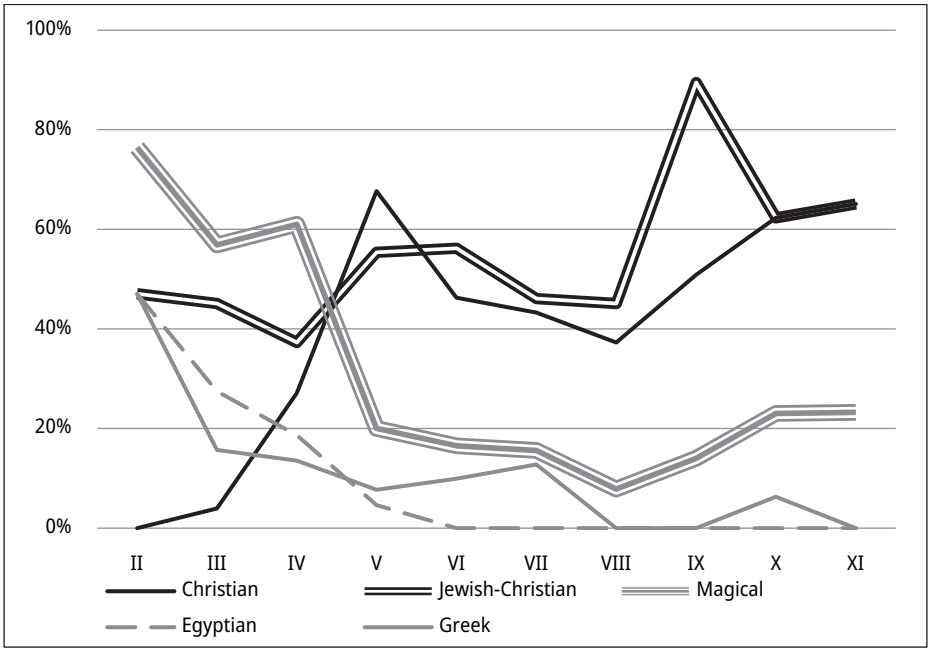

Fig. 9: Percentage of manuscripts containing content belonging to each "cultural" category.

When we examine the temporal attestations of these categories (Table 10), we see some quite clear, if expected, patterns. In the second century CE most magical texts (76 %) contained "magical" names, and large proportions contain Egyptian (59 %), Jewish, and/or Greek names (both 47 %). Over the course of the fourth and fifth centuries, the number of magical and Jewish elements in these texts remains fairly stable, but there is a noticeable decline in Greek and Egyptian elements, accompanied by the appearance of Christian elements in the third century and their rapid rise in the fourth (from 4 % to 27 %). The fifth century sees a significant change, with Christian elements becoming the most common, Jewish elements rising slightly in popularity, and magical, Greek, and Egyptian declining significantly. In the following centuries, however, magical elements do not disappear – from the sixth to eleventh centuries they remain a stable presence, continuing to appear in 16 – 25 % of manuscripts. Greek and Egyptian elements, however, disappear for most practical purposes – their few later appearances are either questionable, in the form of names likely transmitted by the magical tradition, or as representatives of a stereotypical "pagan satanism" of the type found in contemporary Christian hagiographical texts.[264] Jewish and explicitly Christian elements increase in popularity – if we consider them together, as most of their users probably did – with such names appearing consistently in 59 %-100 % of manuscripts of each century from the fifth to the twelfth centuries.

264 See, e. g., Louvre E 14.250 (ACM 109; KYP M367; TM 99997; X CE), a love spell, which apparently invokes Apollo (ⲁⲡⲟⲗⲗⲉ, l. 33), likely understood as a name of the Devil, whose acts are described in ll. 26 – 32; cf. van der Vliet (1995) 413; Blumell/Dosoo (2018) 246 – 249.

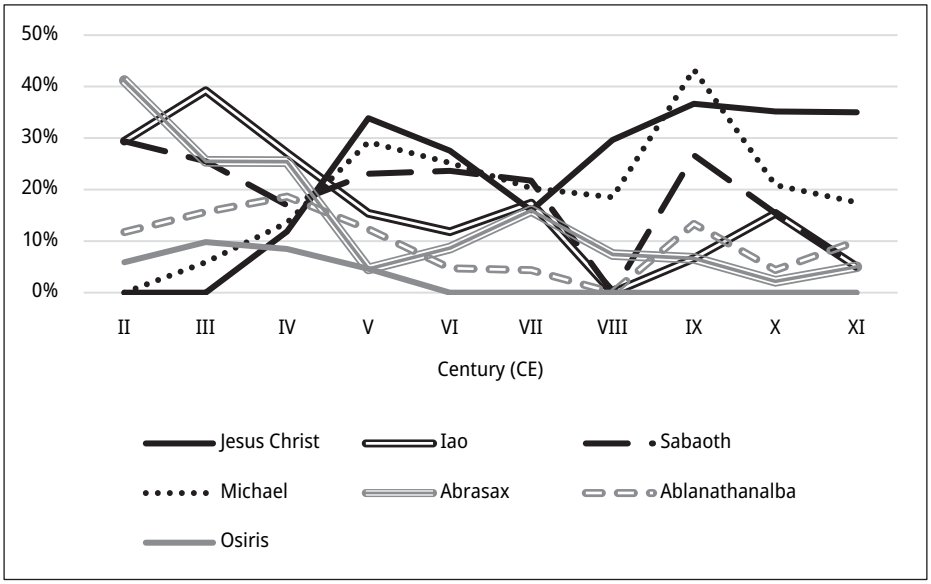

Fig. 10: Percentages of manuscripts in corpus containing particular deities by century.

For finer details we can look at some of the most common names. Osiris, a typical representative of the Greek and Egyptian deities, is a minor but significant presence from the second to the fifth centuries, but disappears by the sixth century. This is more or less what we would expect if the Christianisation of Egypt were largely complete by the fifth century – with the death of the traditional cults, the traditional deities disappear – although an intentional suppression within the magical tradition may have occurred, I suspect that a more important factor was the fact that without their cults they no longer possessed the cultural authority that would have made them worth calling upon in copied or newly composed texts. Abrasax and Ablanathanalba, by contrast, were never attached to cults which were either promoted or suppressed; rather they were transmitted as secret, powerful names within the textual tradition of magic. While there is a visible decline in the presence of Abrasax between the second and fifth centuries, both remain present, to a relatively stable degree, until the eleventh century. Of the remaining names, we seem to see two patterns. The first, represented by Michael and Jesus Christ, is the one we might expect from a process of Christianisation.[265] Both names are absent in the second century before rising rapidly in the fourth and fifth centuries, when they are each found in approximately a third of all manuscripts. They remain stable around this level for as long as Greek and Coptic applied magical texts are attested. These names seem be linked quite straightforwardly to the rise of Christianity. Iaō and Sabaōth, by contrast, seem more similar in their behaviour to the magical names; present already in the second century, they decline very slightly before the fourth, but thereafter remain present alongside Michael and Jesus, albeit to a slightly lesser degree. I would suggest that a fully "Christian" magical practice did not suddenly appear and replace its competitors in the fourth or fifth century; rather, Christianisation consisted of three concurrent processes –the decline of older, less markedly Christian, forms of practice (the pattern of names such as Osiris and Abrasax); the continued use of more markedly Jewish-Christian forms of practice (the pattern of the name Iaō); and the development and promotion of new, more explicitly Christian, practices (the pattern represented by the name Jesus).

265 Note, though, that we do find the name "Michael" in at least one second-century formulary: GEMF 16/PDM xiv.632 (=col.21 l.6; KYP M162; TM 55955; II CE).

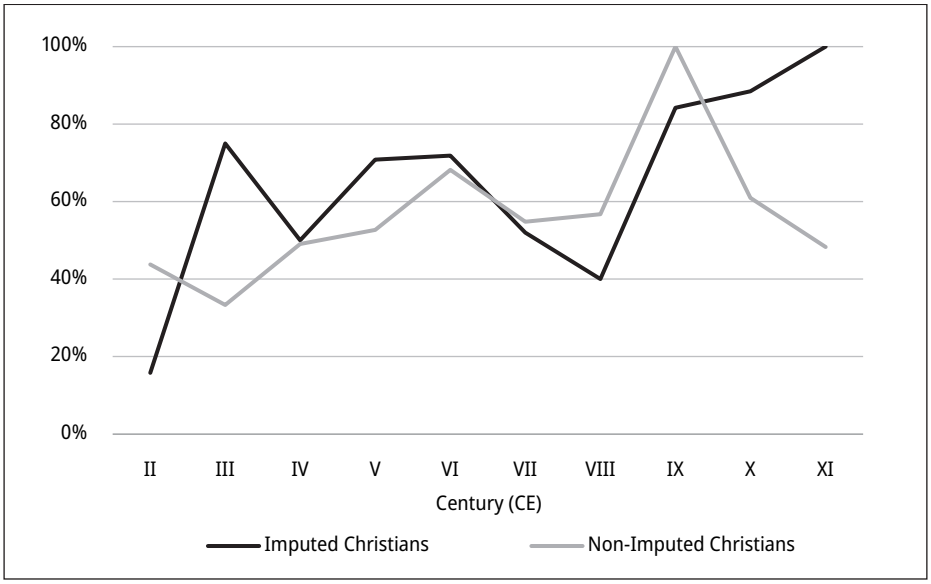

Fig. 11: Presence of Jewish-Christian or Christian content by imputed religious identity of client.

The last question to explore here is the relationship between Christian names and Christian content in applied magical texts.[266] If we compare the presence of Jewish and Christian elements in papyri according to the imputed religious identity of users (Figure 10), we can see that there does not generally seem to be a meaningful correlation between the possession of an imputed Christian identity for clients, and the appearance of Jewish or Christian elements. In the second century, these elements are slightly more common among individuals without an imputed Christian identity (44 % vs 33 %). In the third century, we find a strong inverse tendency – Jewish-Christian elements are much more likely to be associated with identifiably Christian users (75 % vs 33 %). By the fourth century, the trend has become far less pronounced (50 % for 'Christians', 49 % for 'non-Christians'). These results must be interpreted very cautiously; in general we see an increase in the use of Jewish-Christian names in texts used for non-imputed Christians between the third and sixth centuries, but it is true that there is a striking difference is found in the third century. We could hypothesise that this was the century in which Christians begin to become truly onomastically recognisable, and it is in this century that we may first see a distinctively Christian (if non-orthodox) element in an applied magical text.[267] For a brief period, it might be that Christians did have a recognisably distinctive magical practice, before the fourth century saw the increasing Christianisation of both magic and the population as a whole, so that the difference was first less marked, and finally lost. Yet we must take these results with a grain of salt, remembering our very partial dataset, and the fact that many non-imputed Christians may have actually been Christians. There are only four clients with imputed Christian identities whose manuscripts overlap with the third century, of which three feature the mention of Jewish-Christian divine beings, yet two of these are curses in which Iaō is found alongside predominantly non-Christian names; only one really seems to accord closely with a Christian identity.[268] We should remember the cases of the fourth-century owners of magical papyri discussed earlier – the Kellis Manichaeans and Aurelios Philammōn. The former, Christians (according to a generous definition) use both distinctively Jewish-Christian magical practices and non-Christian Graeco-Egyptian practices, while the latter's texts mention a mixture of Jewish, Greek, and "magical" names, with his own religious identity a cipher.

266 Compare the findings of Shandruk (2012) 46–53, discussed above.

We should also remember that there is another invisible variable in these texts: the unnamed individuals who created them, who, in the vast majority of cases, would not be the clients themselves, but professionals – priests, monks, scribes, clerics, or "magicians" – who did so on their behalf. In most cases, it seems likely that these individuals did not compose texts from scratch, but rather copied, or at the least, drew considerable inspiration from, pre-existing texts which they had either memo-267 The Sethian luminary Eleleth (Ηληληθ) appears alongside the names of the Jewish god and the angels in SB XVIII 13603 l. 30 (ed. pr. in Kotansky (1980) 181–184), a manuscript dated to the third century CE: For the origin of Eleleth in Sethian (rather than magical) texts, see Piwowarczyk (2020); Piwowarczyk (2021) 134–137.

268 SM 42 (III–IV CE) is an elaborate curse calling primarily upon chthonic Greek powers, which nonetheless mentions Iaō in l. 56; The same is true of SM 50 (II–III CE), which mentions Iaō in ll. 42, 43 and Adōnaios in l. 36. SM 10 (III–IV CE) is much more Christian in content, consisting of a list including the names and titles of the Jewish god and the angels; SM 11 (III–IV CE) has no clear elements clearly indicative of a religious affiliation, but the mention of 'lord angels' (κύριοι ἄγγελοι in l. 9) might make the contents appealing to a Christian.

rised or possessed as formularies or exemplars. This may be the reason for the slight delay in the Christianisation of content relative to the population – texts may have a longer life than human beings, especially when preserved by copying over time. How much the clients of magical knew, or cared, about the contents of the texts copied for them, is difficult to say; there is often an assumption among scholars that the contents of the texts were chosen and arranged by practitioners specifically to appeal to clients, but, as with modern doctors and their patients, many clients may have chosen practitioners based on their apparent qualifications, and have accepted their proposed courses of action without necessarily understanding them in detail. A few literary texts suggest that clients may have had at times a more active role – reciting formulae or applying materia themselves – but we cannot assume this to have always or even usually been the case.[269] Amulets as well as aggressive texts were typically folded before being either worn or deposited, and so clients may have been unable to read them, even if they were literate. This likely adds an extra layer of confusion – the practice, and thus the assumed "religious identity" which we are seeing may be that of the practitioner, not the client, and while we might expect these to be the same, we cannot take this for granted. We might imagine Christians going to monks for healing, and "pagans" going to "pagan" temples, yet we have already noted that the evidence of modern Egypt suggests that individuals may have often deliberately sought out practices and practitioners from different religious communities.[270] Yet again, though, the cases of known owners of magical texts discussed above confirms that we cannot expect practitioners to possess texts strictly predictable from their own personal religious identity or practice.[271]

4 Conclusions

While I have tried to be open about the shortcomings of the analyses presented here, I think they do permit some cautious conclusions. They have broadly confirmed the previously measured processes of the Christianisation and later Islamicisation of Egypt in the fourth to fifth and later ninth centuries respectively, as well as a concomitant Christianisation of magical texts themselves between the fourth and sixth centuries. These religious shifts are accompanied by other changes: a linguistic shift from Greek to Coptic by the seventh century, and perhaps changes in the types of magical rituals used, or 269 This is rarely explicit in formularies, but suggestions can be found in the literary texts translated in Dosoo (2021b) 53–54.

270 Cf. n. 212.

271 Another interesting example of this can be found in PGM IV.1227–1264 (KYP M3; TM 64343; IV CE), a primarily non-Christian fourth century codex, which contains an exorcistic text in non-standard Coptic which is likely adapted from a Christian liturgical context; see Rist (1938); Love (2016) 190–222; Dosoo (forthcoming).

at least, in the way in which they were used, with the result that aggressive magical practices have left far fewer physical traces.

Naming practices and "magic" are often thought of as reserves of tradition, and yet, as specialists know well, the tradition in both cases is often more imagined than real. Names go through cycles of fashion, while "magic", like other institutions, often uses the cover of claimed tradition to conceal its ability to radically reinvent itself in order to respond to contemporary needs and conditions.[272] This study has demonstrated that, while magical texts represent a distinct genre (or, perhaps, several distinct genres), they are fully a part of the society that produced them. Even more than socially central religious texts, they are produced directly by and for particular individuals at particular moments, emerging from the interaction between the tradition to which they belong, and the moment in time in which they are written.

Abbreviations

ACM = Meyer/Smith (1999).
CBd = Bélyácz et al. (2017).
DT = Audollent (1904).
DTA = Wünsch (1897).
GEMF = Faraone and Torallas Tovar (2022 & forthcoming).
GMA = Kotansky (1994).
KYP = Dosoo et al. (2020).
LGPN = Lexicon of Greek Personal Names (www.lgpn.ox.ac.uk).
PCM I = Dosoo/Preininger (2023).
PDM/PGM = Preisendanz/Henrichs (1973 – 1974) & Betz (1986).
PG: Migne (1857 – 1866).
SM = Daniel/Maltomini (1990 – 1992).
TM = Trismegistos text no. (www.trismegistos.org).
TM People = www.trismegistos.org/ref/index.php.

Bibliography

Alcock (1982): Anthony Alcock, "A Coptic Magical Text", in: Bulletin of the American Society of Papyrologists 19.3 – 4, 97 – 103.

Alcock (2004): Anthony Alcock, "Abracadabra and Pamour: Suggested Etymologies", in: Discussions in Egyptology 58, 9.

Alrudainy/Tillier/Vanthieghem (2024): Reem Alrudainy, Mathieu Tillier, and Naïm Vanthieghem, "The Silence of the Bride: A Fatimid Marriage Contract on Silk", in: Journal of Semitic Studies 69.1, 415 – 456.

Ambasciano (2022): Leonardo Ambasciano, "Zombies Roaming Around the Pantheon: Reconsidering Ancient Roman Belief", in: Implicit Religion 25.1 – 2, 53 – 75.

272 Cf. van der Vliet (2020); Dosoo (2021a).

Anawati (1990): Georges C. Anawati, "The Christian Communities in Egypt in the Middle Ages", in: Michael Gervers and Ramzi Jibran Bikhazi (eds.), Conversion and Continuity: Indigenous Christian Communities in Islamic Lands Eighth to Eighteenth Centuries. Toronto, 237 – 251.

Audollent (1904): Auguste Audollent, Defixionum Tabellae, Paris.

Bagnall (1982): Roger S. Bagnall, "Religious Conversion and Onomastic Change in Early Byzantine Egypt", in: Bulletin of the American Society of Papyrologists 19, 105 – 124.

Bagnall (1987): Roger S. Bagnall, "Conversion and Onomastics: A Reply", in: Zeitschrift fur Papyrologie und Epigraphik 69, 243 – 250.

Bagnall (1995): Roger S. Bagnall, Reading Papyri, Writing Ancient History, London.

Bagnall (1997): Roger S. Bagnall, "Missing Females in Roman Egypt", in: Hannah M. Cotton, Jonathan J. Price, and David J. Wasserstein (eds.), Studies in Memory of Abraham Wasserstein II (Scripta Classica Israelica 16), 121 – 138.

Beck (1972): Edmund Beck, Des Heiligen Ephraem des Syrers. Sermones III, Louvain.

Bélanger Sarrazin (2020): Roxanne Bélanger Sarrazin, Les divinités gréco-égyptiennes dans les textes magiques coptes: Une étude du syncrétisme religieux en Égypte tardo-antique et médiévale, PhD thesis Ottawa/Brussels.

Beltz (1984): Walter Beltz, "Die koptischen Zauberpergamente der Papyrus-Sammlung der Staatlichen Museen zu Berlin", in: Archiv für Papyrusforschung und verwandte Gebiete 30, 83 – 104.

Benaissa (2009): Amin Benaissa, "Greek Polytheophoric Names: An Onomastic Fashion of Roman Egypt", in: Ancient Society 39,71 – 97.

Betz (1986): Hans Dieter Betz, The Greek Magical Papyri in Translation, Including the Demotic Spells, Chicago (2nd edition).

Bélyácz et al. (2017): Katalin Bélyácz, Kata Endreffy and Árpád M. Nagy, The Campbell Bonner Magical Gems Database, Budapest. http://cbd.mfab.hu/visitatori_salutem (seen 16/9/2022)

Bernabé (2013): Alberto Bernabé, "The Ephesia Grammata: Genesis of a Magical Formula" in: Christopher A. Faraone and Dirk Obbink (eds.), The Getty Hexameters: Poetry, Magic and Mystery in Ancient Greek Selinous, Oxford, 107 – 120.

Berkes (2024): Lajos Berkes, "Onomastics as Indicators of Conversion to Islam in Egypt: A Survey of Seventh-to-Ninth-Century Papyri", ARG 26, 51–68 [in the present volume].

Björck (1938): Gudmund Björck, Der Fluch des Christen Sabinus (Pap.Upsaliensis 8), Uppsala.

Blackman (1968): Winifred S. Blackman, The Fellāhīn of Upper Egypt, London.

Blumell (2012): Lincoln Blumell, Lettered Christians. Christians, Letters, and Late Antique Oxyrhynchus, Leiden.

Blumell/Dosoo (2018): Lincoln Blumell and Korshi Dosoo, "Horus, Isis, and the Dark-Eyed Beauty. A Series of Magical Ostraca in the Brigham Young University Collection", in: Archiv für Papyrusforchung 64, 199 – 259.

Bohak (2000): Gideon Bohak, "The Impact of Jewish Monotheism on the Greco-Roman World", in: Jewish Studies Quarterly 7.1, 1 – 21.

Bohak (2003): Gideon Bohak, "Hebrew, Hebrew Everywhere? Notes on the Interpretation of Voces Magicae", in: Scott Noegel, Joel Walker, and Brannon Wheeler (eds.), Prayer, Magic, and the Stars in the Ancient and Late Antique World, University Park, 69 – 82.

Bohak (2008): Gideon Bohak, Ancient Jewish Magic: A History, Cambridge.

Bohak (2016): Gideon Bohak, "The Diffusion of the Greco-Egyptian Magical Tradition in Late Antiquity", in: Ian Rutherford (ed.), Greco-Egyptian Interactions. Literature, Translation, and Culture, 500 BCE-300 CE. Oxford, 357 – 382.

Bohak/Saar (2015): Gideon Bohak and Ortal-Paz Saar, "Genizah Magical Texts Prepared for or Against Named Individuals", in: Revue des Études Juives 174.1 – 2, 77 – 110.

Bonner (1950): Campbell Bonner, Studies in Magical Gems, chiefly Graeco-Egyptian, Ann Arbor.

Borkowski (1990): Zbigniew Borkowski, "Local Cults and Resistance to Christianity", in: Journal of Juristic Papyrology 20, 25 – 30.

Boud'hors (2016): Anne Boud'hors, "Degrés d'arabisation dans l'Égypte du VIIIe siècle. CPR II 228 revisité", in: Jean-Luc Fournet and Arietta Papaconstantinou (eds.), Mélanges Jean Gascou. Textes et études papyrologiques (P.Gascou). Paris, 71 – 89.

Boud'hors/Calament (2015): Anne Boud'hors and Florence Calament, "Pour une étude des archives coptes de Medinet el-Fayoum (P.Louvre E 10253, E 6893, E 6867 et E 7395)", in: Andreas Kaplony, Daniel Potthast and Cornelia Römer (eds.), From Bāwīṭ to Marw. Documents from the Medieval Muslim World. Leiden, 23 – 58.

Boud'hors/Eissa (2022): Anne Boud'hors and Maher A. Eissa, "Draft of a Late Coptic Letter", in: Lajos Berkes (ed.), Christians and Muslims in Early Islamic Egypt, Ann Arbor, 161 – 167.

Bowen (2015): Gillian E. Bowen, "The Environment Within: The Archaeological Context of the Texts from House 3 at Kellis in Egypt's Dakhleh-Oasis", in: Angelo Andrea Di Castro and Colin A. Hope (eds.), Housing and Habitat in the Ancient Mediterranean, Leuven, 233 – 234.

Brand (2021): Mattias Brand, Religion and the Everyday Life of Manichaeans in Kellis. Beyond Light and Darkness, Leiden.

Brand (2023): Mattias Brand, "Introduction: Theorizing Religious Identification in Late Antique Papyri", in: Mattias Brand and Eline Scheerlinck (eds.), Religious Identifications in Late Antique Papyri. 3rd–12th Century Egypt. London, 1 – 26.

Brashear (1983): William M. Brashear, "The Coptic Three Wise Men", in: Chronique d'Égypte 58, 297 – 310.

Brashear (1995): William M. Brashear, "The Greek Magical Papyri: An Introduction and Survey; Annotated Bibliography (1928 – 1994)", in: Wolfgang Haase (ed.), Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt II.18.5, Berlin, 3380 – 3684.

Bremmer (2003): Jan N. Bremmer, "Magic in the Apocryphal Acts of the Apostles", in: Jan N. Bremmer and Jan R. Veenstra (eds.), The Metamorphosis of Magic from Late Antiquity to the Early Modern Period, Leuven, 51 – 70.

Brock/Fitzgerald (2013): Sebastian Brock and Brian Fitzgerald, Two Early Lives of Severos, Patriarch of Antioch, Liverpool.

Bsees (2018): Ursula Bsees, "Dokumentarische Materialien zur Magie aus der Frühzeit des Islams", in: Sebastian Günther and Dorothee Pielow (eds.), Die Geheimnisse der oberen und der unteren Welt. Magie im Islam zwischen Glaube und Wissenschaft, Leiden, 195 – 222.

Bulliet (1979): Richard W. Bulliet, Conversion to Islam in the Medieval Period: An Essay in Quantitative History, Cambridge.

Bulliet (2017): Richard W. Bulliet, "The Conversion Curve Revisited", in: A. C. S. Peacock (ed.), Islamisation: Comparative Perspectives from History, Edinburgh, 69 – 80.

Bulliet (1992): Richard W. Bulliet, "Annales and Archaeology", in: A. Bernard Knapp (ed.), Archaeology, Annales, and Ethnohistory, 131 – 134.

Burns (2014): Dylan Burns, "Twin Healing Amulets", in: Anne Boud'hors, Alain Delattre, Catherine Louis, and Tonio S. Richter (eds.), Coptica Argentoratensia (Strasbourg, 18 – 25 juillet 2010) (CBCo 19) (P- Stras. Copt.), Paris, 117 – 121.

Choat (2006): Malcolm Choat, Belief and Cult in Fourth-Century Papyri, Turnhout.

Clarysse/Paganini (2009): Willy Clarysse and Mario C.D. Paganini, "Theophoric Personal Names in Graeco-Roman Egypt: The Case of Sarapis", in: Archiv für Papyrusforschung 55.1, 68 – 89.

Crum (1902): Walter E. Crum, "A Bilingual Charm", Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology 24, 329 – 331.

Crum (1922): Walter E. Crum, "La magie copte: nouveaux textes", in: Recueil d'études égyptologiques dédiées à la mémoire de Jean-François Champollion à l'occasion du centenaire de la lettre à M. Dacier relative à l'alphabet des hiéroglyphes phonétiques, Paris, 538 – 544.

Crum (1939): Walter E. Crum, A Coptic Dictionary, Oxford.

Curbera (1999): Jaime B. Curbera, "Maternal Lineage in Greek Magical Texts", in: David R. Jordan, Hugo Montgomery, and Einar Thomassen (eds.), The World of Ancient Magic, Bergen, 195 – 203.

Cuvigny (2018): Hélène Cuvigny, "A Survey of Place-Names in the Egyptian Eastern Desert during the Principate according to the Ostraca and the Inscriptions", in: Jean-Pierre Brun, Thomas Faucher, Bérangère Redon, and Steven Sidebotham, The Eastern Desert of Egypt During the Greco-Roman Period: Archaeological Reports, Paris.

Daniel (1988): Robert W. Daniel, "It Started with Eve", in: Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 74, 249 – 251.

Daniel/Maltomini (1990 – 1992): Robert W. Daniel and Franco Maltomini, Supplementum Magicum, Opladen, 2 vols.

Darnton (1999): Robert Darnton, The Great Cat Massacre and Other Episodes in French Cultural History, New York.

Defferari (2005): Roy J. Defferari, Eusebius Pamphili. Ecclesiastical History. Books 6 – 10, Washington.

Delattre (2012): Alain Delattre, "Les onomastiques régionales en Égypte aux VIIe-VIIIe siècles: premiers résultats", in: Paul Schubert (ed.), Actes du 26e Congrès international de papyrologie (Genève 2010). Geneva, 171 – 174.

Depauw/Clarysse (2013): M. Depauw and W. Clarysse, "How Christian was Fourth Century Egypt? Onomastic Perspectives on Conversion", in: Vigiliae Christianae 67, 407 – 435.

Depauw/Clarysse (2015): M. Depauw and W. Clarysse, "Christian Onomastics: A Response to Frankfurter", in: Vigiliae Christianae 69, 327 – 329.

Dieleman (2005): Jacco Dieleman, Priests, Tongues and Rites: The London-Leiden Magical Manuscripts and Translation in Egyptian Ritual (100 – 300 CE), Leiden.

Dieleman (2010): Jacco Dieleman, "What's in a Sign? Translating Filiation in the Demotic Magical Papyri", in: Arietta Papaconstantinou (ed.), The Multilingual Experience in Egypt, from the Ptolemies to the 'Abbāsids, Burlington, 127 – 152.

Dieleman (2019): Jacco Dieleman, "The Greco-Egyptian Magical Papyri", in: David Frankfurter (ed.), Guide to the Study of Ancient Magic, Leiden, 283 – 321.

Dogaer/Depauw (2017): Nico Dogaer and Mark Depauw, "Horion & Co.: Greek Hybrid Names and their Value for the Study of Intercultural Contacts in Graeco-Roman Egypt", in: Historia: Zeitschrift für Alte Geschichte 66.2, 193 – 215.

Dosoo (2016): Korshi Dosoo, "Magical Discourses, Ritual Collections: Cultural Trends and Private Interests in Egyptian Handbooks and Archives", in: Tomasz Derda, Adam Łajtar, and Jakub Urbanik (eds.), Proceedings of the 27th International Congress of Papyrology, Warsaw 29 July–3 Aug. 2013, Warsaw, 699 – 716.

Dosoo (2014): Korshi Dosoo, Rituals of Apparition in the Theban Magical Library. Ph.D. diss., Macquarie University.

Dosoo (2018): Korshi Dosoo, "Zōdion and Praxis. An Illustrated Coptic Magical Papyrus in the Macquarie University Collection", in: Journal of Coptic Studies 20, 11 – 56.

Dosoo (2021a): Korshi Dosoo, "Auteur et autorité, tradition et révélation: études de cas de la magie gréco-égyptienne et de la magie chrétienne copte", in: Revue de l'histoire des religions 238.4, 673 – 697.

Dosoo (2021b): Korshi Dosoo, "Healing Traditions in Coptic Magical Texts", in: Trends in Classics 13.1, 44 – 94.

Dosoo (2021c): Korshi Dosoo, "Magic in the Graeco-Roman World", in: Julia Kostova and John Barton (eds.), Oxford Research Encyclopedia of Religion. https://doi.org/10.1093/acrefore/9780199340378.013.696.

Dosoo (2021d): Korshi Dosoo, "The Powers of Death: Memory, Place, and Eschatology in a Coptic Curse", in: Religion in the Roman Empire 7.2, 167 – 194.

Dosoo (2022): Korshi Dosoo, "Heathen Serpents and Wingless Angels? Some Notes on Images in Coptic Magical Texts", in: Raquel Martín Hernández (ed.), The Iconography of Magic. Images of Power and the Power of Images in Ancient and Late Antique Magic, Leuven, 97 – 136.

Dosoo (2023): Korshi Dosoo, “Two Body Problems: Binding Effigies in Christian Egypt”, in: Jay Johnston and Iain Gardner, Drawing Spirit: The Role of Image and Design in the Magical Practice of Late Antiquity, Berlin, 135 – 184.

Dosoo (2024): Korshi Dosoo, “(Post-)Colonialism and Ancient Magic”, in: Ben Akrigg and Katherine Blouin (eds.), Handbook of Classics and Postcolonial Theory, London, 280 – 300.

Dosoo (forthcoming): Korshi Dosoo, “Egyptian Linguistic Influence in GEMF 57/PGM IV, Part 2: Old Coptic Texts”, in: Christopher A. Faraone and Sofía Torallas Tovar (eds.), New Approaches to the Great Paris Magical Codex (PGM IV/GEMF 57).

Dosoo et al. (2020): Korshi Dosoo, Markéta Preininger, Julia Schwarzer, and Edward O.D. Love (chief editors), Kyprianos Database of Ancient Ritual Texts and Objects. https://www.coptic-magic.phil.uni-wuerzburg.de/index.php/manuscripts-search (seen 15/9/2022).

Dosoo et al. (2022): Korshi Dosoo, Edward O.D. Love, and Markéta Preininger, “The Coptic Magical Papyri Project: Progress Report”, in: Journal of Coptic Studies 24, 43 – 100.

Dosoo/Preininger (2023): Korshi Dosoo and Markéta Preininger, Papyri Copticae Magicae. Coptic Magical Texts, Volume 1: Formularies (PCM I 1), Berlin.

Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022a): Korshi Dosoo and Sofía Torallas Tovar, “The Anatomy of the Magical Archive”, in: Christopher A. Faraone and Sofía Torallas Tovar (eds.), The Greco-Egyptian Magical Formularies: Libraries, Books and Recipes, Grand Rapids, 3 – 63.

Dosoo/Torallas Tovar (2022b): Korshi Dosoo and Sofía Torallas Tovar, “Roll and Codex: The Format of the Magical Handbook”, in: Christopher A. Faraone and Sofía Torallas Tovar (eds.), The Greco-Egyptian Magical Formularies: Libraries, Books and Recipes, Grand Rapids, 64 – 120.

Drioton (1946): Etienne Drioton, “Parchemin magique copte provenant d’Edfou”, in: Le Muséon 59, 479 – 489.

Dufault (2023): Olivier Dufault, “Who Wrote Ritual Formularies from Egypt? A Study of P. Lond. I 121 (= PGM VII) and Its Possible Relationship with Scholarly Patronage in Late Antiquity”, in: Studies in Late Antiquity 7.3, 366 – 406.

Dunand (1963): Françoise Dunand, “Les noms théophores en -ammon. A propos d’un papyrus de Strasbourg du IIIe siècle p.C.”, in: Chronique d’Egypte 38.75, 134 – 146.

Eichler (2014): Raanan Eichler, “The Meaning of ישב הכרבים”, in: Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft 126.3, 358 – 371.

Faraone (2001): Christopher A. Faraone, “The Ethnic Origins of a Roman-Era Philtrokatadesmos (PGM IV 296 – 434)”, in: Paul Mirecki and Marvin Meyer (eds.), Magic and Ritual in the Ancient World, Leiden, 319 – 343.

Faraone (2018): Christopher A. Faraone, The Transformation of Greek Amulets in Roman Imperial Times, Philadelphia.

Faraone (2022): Christopher A. Faraone, “The Traffic in Magical Recipes: Single- Sheet Formularies as Prompts for Oral Performance”, in: Christopher A. Faraone and Sofía Torallas Tovar (eds.), The Greco-Egyptian Magical Formularies: Libraries, Books and Recipes, Grand Rapids, 420 – 453.

Faraone (2023): Christopher A. Faraone, “The Typical and the Outlier in Ancient Greek Cursing: Prayers for Justice, Erotic Curses and other Important Categories”, in: Kim Beerden and Frits Naerebout (eds.), Coping with Versnel: A Roundtable on Religion and Magic in Honour of the 80th Birthday of Henk S. Versnel, Leiden, 161 – 179.

Faraone and Torallas Tovar (2022 & forthcoming): Christopher A. Faraone and Sofía Torallas Tovar, Greek and Egyptian Magical Formularies: Text and Translation, Berkeley.

Fauth (2014): Wolfgang Fauth, Jao-Jawhe und seine Engel: Jahwe-Apellationen und zugehörige Engelnamen in griechischen und koptischen Zaubertexten, Tübingen.

Fournet (1999): Jean-Luc Fournet, Hellénisme dans l’Égypte du VIe siècle. La bibliothèque et l’oeuvre de Dioscore d’Aphrodité (2 vols), Cairo.

Fournet (2015): Jean-Luc Fournet, “At the Desk of a Man of Letters: Literate Practices in Byzantine Egypt according to the Dossier of Dioscorus of Aphrodite”, in: Scott Fitzgerald Johnson (ed.) Languages and Cultures of Eastern Christianity: Greek, Farnham, 221 – 248.

Fournet (2020): Jean-Luc Fournet, The Rise of Coptic. Egyptian versus Greek in Late Antiquity. Princeton.

Frankfurter (1995): David Frankfurter, “Narrating Power: The Theory and Practice of the Magical Historiola in Ritual Spells”, in: by Marvin W. Meyer and Paul A. Mirecki, Ancient Magic and Ritual Power, Leiden, 457 – 476.

Frankfurter (2014): David Frankfurter, “Onomastic Statistics and the Christianization of Egypt: A Response to Depauw and Clarysse”, in: Vigiliae Christianae 68, 284 – 289.

Frankfurter (2017): David Frankfurter, Christianizing Egypt: Syncretism and Local Worlds in Late Antiquity, Princeton.

Frankfurter (2023): David Frankfurter, “Christianization, ‘Identity,’ and the Problem of Internal Commitment. Egypt III–VI CE”, in: Mattias Brand and Eline Scheerlinck (eds.), Religious Identifications in Late Antique Papyri. 3rd–12th Century Egypt, London, 29 – 44.

Frantz-Murphy (1991): Gladys Frantz-Murphy, “Conversion in Early Islamic Egypt: The Economic Factor”, in: Yūsuf Rāġib (ed.), Documents de l’Islam médiéval: Nouvelles perspectives de recherché, Cairo, 11 – 17.

Frazer (1925): James G. Frazer. The Golden Bough: A Study in Magic and Religion (Abridged Edition), New York.

Gardner (2023): Iain Gardner, “An Archive of Coptic Handbooks and Exemplars for the Making of Amulets and the Enacting of Ritual Power from the Tenth Century (P.Heid. Inv. Kopt. 680 – 683 and 685 – 686)”, in: Jay Johnston and Iain Gardner (eds.), Drawing Spirit: The Role of Image and Design in the Magical Practice of Late Antiquity, Berlin, 73 – 134.

Gardner/Johnston (2019): Iain Gardner and Jay Johnston. “‘I, Deacon Iohannes, Servant of Michael’: A New Look at P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 682 and a Possible Context for the Heidelberg Magical Archive”, in: Journal of Coptic Studies 21, 31 – 53.

Gaubert/Mouton (2014): Christian Gaubert and Jean-Michel Mouton, Hommes et villages du Fayyoum dans la documentation papyrologique arabe (Xe–XIe siècles), Geneva.

Genovese (2021): Sal Genovese, “Interview with Richard W. Bulliet, Professor of History Emeritus, Columbia University”, in: Impact (Summer 2021), online at https://sites.bu.edu/impact/previous-issues/impact-summer-2021/interview-with-richard-w-bulliet (seen 29/9/2022).

Godlewski (2000), Włodzimierz Godlewski. “The Hermitage of Apa Phoibamon”, in: Krzysztof M. Ciałowicz and Janusz A. Ostrowski (eds.), Civilisations du Bassin Méditerranéen: Hommages à Joachim Sliwa, Krakow, 91 – 98.

Goitein (1978): S.D. Goitein, A Mediterranean Society: The Jewish Communities of the World as Portrayed in the Documents of the Cairo Geniza. Volume III: The Family, Berkeley.

Berkes/Gonis (2020): Lajos Berkes and Nikolaos Gonis, “Monastic Wine Distributions in the Eighth Century: Papyri from the Catholic University of America”, in: Journal of Coptic Studies 22, 1 – 27.

Gordon (2011): Richard L. Gordon, “Signa nova et inaudita: The Theory and Practice of Invented Signs (charactêres) in Graeco-Egyptian Magical Texts”, in: MHNH 11, 15 – 44.

Gordon (2013): Richard L. Gordon, “Gods, Guilt and Suffering: Psychological Aspects of Cursing in the North-Western Provinces of the Roman Empire”, in: Acta Classica Universitatis Scientiarum Debreceniensis 49, 255 – 281.

Gordon (2014): Richard Gordon, “Charaktêres Between Antiquity and Renaissance: Transmission and Reinvention”, in: Véronique Dasen and Jean-Michel Spieser (eds.), Les savoirs magiques et leur transmission de l’Antiquité à la Renaissance, Florence, 253 – 300.

Hackett (2014): Conrad Hackett, “Seven Things to Consider when Measuring Religious Identity”, in: Religion 44.3, 396 – 413.

Harari (2019): Yuval Harari, “Ancient Israel and Early Judaism”, in: David Frankfurter (ed.), Guide to the Study of Ancient Magic, Leiden, 139 – 174.

Harkins (1979): Paul W. Harkins, St. John Chrysostom. Discourses Against Judaizing Christians, Washington.

Harnack (1905): Adolf Harnack, The Expansion of Christianity in the First Three Centuries, vol. II, trans. James Moffatt, New York.

Harvey (1997): David Harvey, "Contested Cities: Social Process and Spatial Form", in: Nick Jewson and Susanne Macgregor (eds.), Transforming Cities: Contested Governance and New Spatial Divisions, London, 17 – 24.

Harvey (2013): Graham Harvey, Food, Sex & Strangers: Understanding Religion as Everyday Life, Durham.

Hasitzka (2007): Monika Hasitzka, Namen in koptischen dokumentarischen Texten, online at https://www.onb.ac.at/fileadmin/user_upload/PDF_Download/1_PAP_kopt_namen.pdf (seen 28/9/2022).

Hein (2021): Timothy Hein, First Christian 'Magicians': Early Christian Afterlives of Matthew's Magi (Matt 2: 1 – 12). Ph.D. diss., University of Edinburgh.

Heuser (1929): Gustav Heuser, Die Personennamen der Kopten, Leipzig.

Hope/Bowen (2022): Colin A. Hope and Gillian E. Bowen (eds.), Kellis: A Roman-Period Village in Egypt's Dakhleh Oasis, Cambridge.

Hubert/Mauss (1902 – 1903): Henri Hubert and Marcel Mauss, "Esquisse d'une théorie générale de la magie", in: L'Année sociologique 7, 1 – 146.

Hull (1974): John M. Hull, Hellenistic Magic and the Synoptic Tradition, London.

Jordan (2001): David R. Jordan, "A Prayer Copied by Disokoros of Kome Aphrodites (PGM 13a)", Tyche 16, 87 – 90.

Kajanto (1963): Iiro Kajanto, Onomastic Studies in the Early Christian Inscriptions of Rome and Carthage, Helsinki.

Kanavou/Papathomas (2016): Nikoletta Kanavou and Amphilochios Papathomas, "An Alexandrian Murder Case Revisited (P.Philammon = BGU IV 1024, pp. 6.3 – 8.21)", in: Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 200, 453 – 469.

Kaper (2003): Olaf E. Kaper, The Egyptian God Tutu: A Study of the Sphinx-God and Master of Demons with a Corpus of Monuments, Leuven.

Kling (2020): David W. Kling, A History of Christian Conversion, New York.

Kotansky (1980): Roy D. Kotansky, "Two Amulets in the Getty Museum: A Gold Amulet for Aurelia's Epilepsy: An Inscribed Magical-Stone for Fever, 'Chills', and Headache", in: The J. Paul Getty Museum Journal 8, 181 – 188.

Kotansky (1994): Roy D. Kotansky, Greek Magical Amulets: The Inscribed Gold, Silver, Copper, and Bronze Lamellae, 1: Published Texts of Known Provenance. Text and Commentary, Opladen.

Knell (2009): Heiner Knell et al., "Theodorus", in: Hubert Cancik and Helmuth Schneider (eds.), Brill's New Pauly Encyclopaedia of the Ancient World (Sym-Tub), Leiden, 451 – 468.

Kropp (1966): Angelicus Kropp, Der Lobpreis des Erzengels Michael (vormals P.Heidelberg Inv. Nr. 1686), Brussels.

Kugener (1907): M.-A. Kugener, Vie de Sévère, par Zacharie le Scholastique, Paris.

Labrousse (1943): Michel Labrousse, La Crise de l'économie française à la fin de l'ancien régime et au début de la Révolution, Paris.

Lacerenza (2002): Giancarlo Lacerenza, "Jewish Magicians and Christian Clients in Late Antiquity: The Testimony of Amulets and Inscriptions", in: Leonard V. Rutgers (ed.), What Athens has to do with Jerusalem: Essays on Classical, Jewish, and Early Christian Art and Archaeology in Honor of Gideon Foerster, Leuven, 393 – 417.

Lapidus (1972): Ira M. Lapidus, "The Conversion of Egypt to Islam", Israel Oriental Studies II, 248 – 262.

Legendre (2014): Marie Legendre, "Perméabilité linguistique et anthroponymique entre copte et arabe: L'exemple de comptes en caractères coptes du Fayoum fatimide", in Anne Boud'hors, Alain Delattre, Catherine Louis, and Tonio S. Richter (eds.), Coptica Argentoratensia: textes et documents de la troisième université d'été de papyrologie copte (Strasbourg, 18 – 25 juillet 2010): (P.Stras.Copt.), Paris, 325 – 440.

Lipski (1995): John M. Lipski, "Spanish Hypocoristics: Towards A Unified Prosodic Analysis", in: Hispanic Linguistics 6, 387 – 434.

Little (1976): Donald P. Little, “Coptic Conversion to Islam under the Baḥrī Mamlūks, 692 – 755/1293 – 1354”, in: Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London 39.3, 552 – 569.

Love (2016): Edward O. D. Love, Code-Switching with the Gods: The Bilingual (Old Coptic-Greek) Spells of PGM IV (P.Bibliothèque nationale supplement Grec. 574) and their Linguistic, Religious, and Socio-cultural Context in Late Roman Egypt, Berlin.

Love (2021): Edward O. D. Love, “676. A Coptic Curse on Lead”, in: Charikleia Armoni, Thomas Bakhuys, Sandra Lippert, Edward O.D. Love, Eleni Skarsouli, Natalia Vega Navarrete, and Riccardo Vecchiato (eds.), Kölner Papyri. Band 17. (P.Köln XVII), Paderborn, 194 – 205.

Love (2022a): Edward O. D. Love, “Bilingualism and Mono-/Bigraphia at the Nexus of Magical Traditions: From Egyptian-Greek to Coptic-Arabic Magical Texts”, in: Lajos Berkes (ed.), Christians and Muslims in Early Islamic Egypt, Ann Arbor, 169 – 201.

Love (2022b): Edward O.D. Love, Petitioning Osiris: The Old Coptic Schmidt Papyrus and Curse of Artemisia in Context among the Letters to Gods from Egypt, Berlin.

Love (2023): Edward O.D. Love, “Letters to Gods”, UCLA Encyclopedia of Egyptology, online at https://escholarship.org/uc/item/5f98f49c.

Lueddeckens (1980): Erich Lueddeckens, Demotisches Namenbuch, Wiesbaden.

MacCoull (1987): Leslie S. B. MacCoull, “P.Cair.Masp. II 67188 Verso 1 – 5: The Gnostica of Dioscorus of Aphrodito”, in: Tyche 2, 95 – 97.

MacCoull (1988): Leslie S. B. MacCoull, Dioscorus of Aphrodito. His Work and his World, Berkeley.

Malingrey (1972): Anne-Marie Malingrey, Jean Chrysostome. Sur la vaine gloire et l’éducation des enfants, Paris.

Martín Hernández (2012): Raquel Martín Hernández, “Reading Magical Drawings in the Greek Magical Papyri”, in: Paul Schubert, Actes du 26e Congrès international de papyrologie, Genève, 16 – 21 août 2010, Geneva, 491 – 498.

Martín Hernández (2013): Raquel Martín Hernández, “Appealing for Justice in Christian Magic”, in: Sofía Torallas Tovar and Juan Pedro Monferrer-Sala (eds.), Cultures in Contact. Transfer of Knowledge in the Mediterranean Context, Cordoba, 27 – 41.

Mauss (1972): Marcel Mauss, A General Theory of Magic, London.

McClure (2003): Peter McClure, “The Kinship of Jack: I, Pet Forms of Middle English Personal Names with the Suffixes -kin, -ke, -man and -cot”, in: Nomina. Journal of the Society for Name Studies in Britain and Ireland 26, 92 – 117.

Metcalfe (2003): Alexander Metcalfe, Muslims and Christians in Norman Sicily. Arabic-Speakers and the End of Islam, Oxon.

Meyer (1996): Marvin W. Meyer, The Magical Book of Mary and the Angels (P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 685): Text, Translation and Commentary, Heidelberg.

Meyer/Smith (1999): Marvin W. Meyer and Richard Smith, Ancient Christian Magic: Coptic Texts of Ritual Power, Princeton.

Migne (1857 – 1866): Jacques Paul Migne, Patrologiae Cursus Completus, Series Graeca, Paris.

Mikhail (2016): Maghed S.A. Mikhail, From Byzantine to Islamic Egypt: Religion, Identity and Politics after the Arab Conquest, London.

Möller (1918): Georg Möller, “Ein koptischer Ehevertrag”, in: Zeitschrift für Ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde 55.1, 67 – 74.

Morin (1953): D. Germani Morin, Sancti Caesarii Arelatensis Sermones, vol. I.1, Turnhout.

Morony (1990): Michael G. Morony, “The Age of Conversions: A Reassessment”, in: Michael Gervers and Ramzi Jibran Bikhazi (eds.), Conversion and Continuity: Indigenous Christian Communities in Islamic Lands Eighth to Eighteenth Centuries. Toronto, 135 – 150.

Mueller (1956): Mary Magdeleine Mueller, Saint Caesarius of Arles: Sermons. Volume I (1 – 80), Washington, D.C.

Nagy (2015): Árpád M. Nagy, "Engineering Magical Amulets: Magical Gems of the Roman Imperial Period", in: Dietrich Boschung and Jan N. Bremmer (eds.), The Materiality of Magic, Paderborn, 209 – 211.

Németh (2013): György Németh, "The Corpse Daemon Antinoos", in: Archiv für Religionsgeschichte 14.1, 145 – 153.

O'Connell (2022): Elisabeth R. O'Connell (ed.), The Hay Archive of Coptic Spells on Leather: A Multi-disciplinary Approach to the Materiality of Magical Practice, Hockley.

Pachoumi (2013): Eleni Pachoumi, "The Erotic and Separation Spells of the Magical Papyri and Defixiones", in: Greek, Roman, and Byzantine Studies 53, 294 – 325.

Papaconstantinou (2001): Arietta Papaconstantinou, Culte des saints en Égypte des Byzantins aux Abbassides: L'apport des inscriptions et des papyrus grecs et coptes, Paris.

Papaconstantinou (2023): Arietta Papaconstantinou, "Lifting the Cloak of Invisibility: Identifying the Jews of Late Antique Egypt", in: Mattias Brand and Eline Scheerlinck (eds.), Religious Identifications in Late Antique Papyri. 3rd–12th Century Egypt, London, 69 – 91.

Pedersen (2013): Nils Arne Pedersen, "Manichaean Self-Designations in the Western Tradition", in: Johannes van Oort (ed.), Augustine and Manichaean Christianity, Leiden: Brill, 177 – 196.

Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life (2009): Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life, Many Americans Mix Multiple Faiths, online at https://www.pewresearch.org/religion/2009/12/09/many-americans-mix-multiple-faiths (seen 29/9/2022).

Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life (2010): Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life, Tolerance and Tension: Islam and Christianity in Sub-Saharan Africa, online at http://www.pewforum.org/2010/04/15/executive-summary-islam-and-christianity-in-subsaharan-africa (seen 29/9/2022).

Piwowarczyk (2020): Przemysław Piwowarczyk, "Sethians and Their Texts in Christian Egypt in the 4th and 5th Centuries", in: Studi e Materiali di Storia delle Religioni 86, 99 – 116.

Piwowarczyk (2021): Przemysław Piwowarczyk, Lexicon of Spiritual Powers in the Nag Hammadi "Library" in the Light of the Texts of Ritual Power, Katowice.

Piwowarczyk (2024): Przemysław Piwowarczyk, "Coptic Texts of Ritual Power as Voices of Laypeople", in: Yuliya Minets and Paweł Nowakowski (eds.), Shaping Letters, Shaping Communities: Multilingualism and Linguistic Practice in the Late Antique Near East and Egypt, Leiden, 268 – 295.

Poethke et al. (2012): Günter Poethke, Sebastian Prignitz, and Veit Vaelske, Das Aktenbuch des Aurelios Philammon Prozessberichte, Annona militaris und Magie in BGU IV 1024 – 1027, Berlin.

Preisendanz/Henrichs (1973 – 1974): Karl Preisendanz and Albert Henrichs, Papyri Graecae Magicae: Die Griechischen Zauberpapyri (2nd ed.), Stuttgart, 2 vols.

Quecke (1963): Hans Quecke, "Zwei koptische Amulette der Papyrussammlung der Universität Heidelberg", in: Le Muséon 76, 255 – 265.

Quibell (1912): J. E. Quibell, Excavations at Saqqara (1908 – 9, 1909 – 10), Cairo.

Richter (2008): T. Sebastian Richter, "Greek, Coptic, and the 'Language of the Hijra'. Rise and Decline of the Coptic Language in Late Antique and Islamic Egypt", in: Hannah M. Cotton, Robert G. Hoyland, Jonathan J. Price, and David J. Wassserstein (eds.), From Hellenism to Islam: Cultural and Linguistic Change in the Roman Near East, Cambridge, 398 – 443.

Richter (2010): T. Sebastian Richter, "Language choice in the Qurra Dossier", in: Arietta Papaconstantinou (ed.), The Multilingual Experience in Egypt, from the Ptolemies to the ʿAbbāsids, Farnham, 189 – 220.

Richter (2015): Tonio Sebastian Richter, "Markedness and Unmarkedness in Coptic Magical Writing", in: Magali de Haro Sanchez (ed.), Écrire la magie dans l'Antiquité – Scrivere la magia nell'Antichità: Proceedings of the International Workshop (Liège, October 13 – 15, 2011), Liège, 85 – 108, plates VII–XIII.

Richter (2017): T. Sebastian Richter, "Borrowing into Coptic, the Other Story: Arabic Words in Coptic Texts", in: Eitan Grossman, Peter Dils, Tonio Sebastian Richter, and Wolfgang Schenkel (eds.), Greek Influence on Egyptian-Coptic: Contact-Induced Change in an Ancient African Language, Hamburg, 513 – 533.

Rist (1938): Martin Rist, "The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: A Liturgical and Magical Formula", in: Journal of Biblical Literature 57.3, 289 – 303.

Ritner/Scalf (2019): Robert K. Ritner and Foy D. Scalf, "Anubis, Archer Figures, and Demotic Magic" in: Göttingen Miszellen 259, 185 – 212.

Rives (2003): James B. Rives, "Magic in Roman Law: The Reconstruction of a Crime", in: Classical Antiquity 22.2, 313 – 339.

Rives (2006): James B. Rives, "Magic, Religion, and Law: The Case of the Lex Cornelia de sicariis et veneficiis", in: Clifford Ando and Jörg Rüpke, Religion and Law in Classical and Christian Rome, Munich, 47 – 67.

Sanzo (2014): Joseph E. Sanzo, Scriptural Incipits on Amulets from Late Antique Egypt Text, Typology, and Theory, Tübingen.

Sanzo (2017): Joseph E. Sanzo, "Magic and Communal Boundaries: The Problems with Amulets in Chrysostom, Adv. Iud. 8, and Augustine, In Io. tra. 7", in: Henoch 38.2, 227 – 246.

Sanzo (2019): Joseph E. Sanzo, "Early Christianity", in: David Frankfurter (ed.), Guide to the Study of Ancient Magic, Leiden, 198 – 239.

Sanzo (2020): Joseph E. Sanzo, "Deconstructing the Deconstructionists: A Response to Recent Criticisms of the Rubric 'Ancient Magic'", in: Attilio Mastrocinque, Joseph E. Sanzo, and Marianna Scapini (eds.), Ancient Magic: Then and Now, Wiesbaden, 25 – 46.

Scheidel (2001): Scheidel, Walter, Death on The Nile: Disease and The Demography of Roman Egypt, Leiden, 2001.

Schiller (1928): Arthur A. Schiller, "A Coptic Charm. Columbia Coptic Parchment, Numbers 1 and 2", in: Journal of the Society of Oriental Research 12, 25 – 34.

Schwartz (1996): Martin Schwartz, "*Sasm, Sesen, St. Sisinnios, Sesengen Barpharangēs, and… 'Semanglof'", in: Bulletin of the Asia Institute (New Series) 10, 253 – 257.

Schwemer (2019): Daniel Schwemer, "Beyond Ereškigal? Mesopotamian Magic Traditions in the Papyri Graecae Magicae", in: Ljuba Merlina Bortolani, William Furley, Svenja Nagel, and Joachim Friedrich Quack (eds.), Cultural Plurality in Ancient Magical Texts and Practices, Tübingen, 62 – 85.

Shandruk (2012): Walter M. Shandruk, "Christian Use of Magic in Late Antique Egypt", in: Journal of Early Christian Studies 20.1, 31 – 57.

Simpson (2008): Jane Simpson, "Hypocoristics in Australian English", in: Kate Burridge and Bernd Kortmann (eds.), Varieties of English: The Pacific and Australasia, Berlin, 398 – 414.

Soldati (2018): Agostino Soldati, "Some Remarks about Coptic Colophons and Their Relationship with Manuscripts: Typology, Function, and Structure", in: Comparative Oriental Manuscript Studies Bulletin 4.1, 115 – 119.

Sørensen (2007): Jesper Sørensen, A Cognitive Theory of Magic, Lanham.

Stegemann (1933 – 1934): Viktor Stegemann, Die koptischen Zaubertexte der Sammlung Papyrus Erzherzog Rainer in Wien, Heidelberg.

Stegemann (1938): Viktor Stegemann, "Neue Zauber- und Gebetstexte aus koptischer Zeit in Heidelberg und Wien", Le Muséon 51, 74 – 82.

Stratton (2007): Kimberly B. Stratton, Naming the Witch: Magic, Ideology, and Stereotype in the Ancient World, New York.

Suárez de la Torre (2014): Emilio Suárez de la Torre, "Pseudepigraphy and Magic", in: Javier Martínez (ed.), Fakes and Forgers of Classical Antiquity: Ergo decipiatur, Leiden, 233 – 262

Sublet (1991): Jacqueline Sublet, Le voile du nom. Essai sur le nom propre arabe, Paris, 1991.

Swinnen (1968): M.W. Swinnen "Philammon, chantre légendaire, et les noms gréco-égyptiens en -ammôn", in: Antidorum W. Peremans sexegenario ab alumnis oblatum, Louvain, 237 – 262.

Tambiah (1990): Stanley Jeyaraja Tambiah, Magic, Science, Religion, and the Scope of Rationality, Cambridge.

Teigen (2021): Håkon Fiane Teigen, The Manichaean Church in Kellis, Leiden.

Thissen (2006): Heinz-Josef Thissen, "Zum Hieroglyphen-Buch des Chairemon", in: Gerald Moers, Heike Behlmer, Katja Demuß, and Kai Widmaier (eds.), jn.t-dr.w. Festschrift für Friedrich Junge, Göttingen, vol. II, 625 – 634.

Thompson (1912): Herbert Thompson, "A Coptic Marriage Contract", in: Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology 34, 172 – 179.

Vakaloudi (2000): Anastasia D. Vakaloudi, "Δεισιδαιμονία and the Role of the Apotropaic Magic Amulets in the Early Byzantine Empire", in: Byzantion 70.1, 182 – 210.

Valk (2021): Ülo Valk, "What Are Belief Narratives? An Introduction", in: Narrative Culture 8.2, article 2.

Van Beek/Depauw (2009): B. Van Beek and M. Depauw, "People in Greek Documentary Papyri. First Results of a Research Project", in: Journal of Juristic Papyrology 39, 31 – 47.

Putten (2021): Marijn van Putten, "Copto-Arabica: The Phonology of Early Islamic Arabic Based on Coptic Transcriptions", in: Zeitscrhift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellshaft 171, 81 – 100.

van der Toorn (2019): Karel van der Toorn, Becoming Diaspora Jews. Behind the Story of Elephantine, New Haven.

van der Vliet, Jacques (1991): "Varia magica coptica", in: Aegyptus 71.1/2, 217 – 242.

van der Vliet (1995): Jacques van der Vliet, "Satan's Fall in Coptic Magic", in: Marvin Meyer and Paul Mirecki (eds.), Ancient Magic and Ritual Power, Leiden, 401 – 418.

van der Vliet (2000): Jacques van der Vliet, "Les anges du soleil", in: Études Coptes 7, 319 – 337.

van der Vliet (2005a): Jacques van der Vliet, "The Amulet P.Mil.Vogl.Copt.Inv. 22: Some Addenda", in: Journal of Coptic Studies 7, 141 – 145.

van der Vliet (2005b): Jacques van der Vliet, "Review of Sergio Pernigotti, Testi della magia copta (Editrice La Mandragora, Imola, 2000)", in: Bibliotheca Orientalis 62.3 – 4, 276 – 280.

van der Vliet (2019a): Jacques van der Vliet, "Roman and Byzantine Egypt", in: David Frankfurter (ed.), Guide to the Study of Ancient Magic, Leiden, 240 – 276.

van der Vliet (2019b): Jacques van der Vliet, "Christian Spells and Manuals from Egypt", in: David Frankfurter (ed.), Guide to the Study of Ancient Magic, Leiden, 322 – 350.

van der Vliet (2020): Jacques van der Vliet, "Tradition and Innovation: Writing Magic in Christian Egypt", in: Nienke M. Vos and Albert C. Geljon (eds.), Rituals in Early Christianity: New Perspectives on Tradition and Transformation, Leiden, 262 – 281.

Vantieghem (forthcoming): Naïm Vantieghem, "Amulettes et textes magiques médiévaux de la vallée du Nil. Le témoignage de la papyrologie", in: Jean-Charles Coulon (ed.), Magie et sciences occultes dans le monde islamique, Paris.

Versnel (1991): Henk S. Versnel, "Beyond Cursing: The Appeal to Justice in Judicial Prayers", in: Christopher A. Faraone and Dirk Obbink (eds.), Magika Hiera: Ancient Greek Magic and Religion, New York, 60–106.

Versnel (2001): Henk S. Versnel, "The Poetics of the Magical Charm", in: Paul Mirecki and Marvin Meyer (eds.), Magic and Ritual in the Ancient World, Leiden, 105 – 158.

Versnel (2010): Henk S. Versnel, "Prayers for Justice, East and West", in: Richard L. Gordon and Francisco Marco Simón (eds.), Magical Practice in the Latin West, Leiden, 275–354.

Viaud (1978): Gérard Viaud, Magie et coutumes populaires chez les Coptes d'Egypte, Saint-Vincent-sur-Jabron.

Vycichl (1983): Werner Vycichl, Dictionnaire étymologique de la langue copte, Leuven.

Wildman et al. (2021): Wesley J. Wildman, F. LeRon Shults and Saikou Y. Diallo, "Computational Demography of Religion: A Proposal", in: Petra Ahrweiler and Martin Neumann (eds.), Conference of the European Social Simulation Association 2019: Advances in Social Simulation, Groningen, 169 – 180.

Winkler (2022): Andreas Winkler, "Magical Obstetrics: Anubis, Bird Blood, and a Black Shrew", in: Journal of Near Eastern Studies 81.1, 53 – 70.

Wipszycka (1986): Ewa Wipszycka, "La valeur de l'onomastique pour l'histoire de la christianisation de l'Egypte. A propos d'une étude de R. S. Bagnall", in: Zeitschrift fur Papyrologie und Epigraphik 62, 173 – 181.

Wipszycka (1988): Ewa Wipszycka, “La christianisation de l’Égypte aux IVe-VIe siècles. Aspects sociaux et ethniques”, Aegyptus 68, 119 – 165.

Wipszycka (1993): Ewa Wipszycka, “Les ordres mineurs dans l’eglise d’Égypte du IVe au VIIIe siècle”, in: The Journal of Juristic Papyrology 23, 181 – 215.

Worp (1995): Klaas A. Worp, Greek Papyri from Kellis. (P.Kell.Gr.), vol. 1 (Nos. 1 – 90), Oxford.

Wünsch (1897): Richard Wünsch, Defixionum Tabellae Atticae, Berlin.

Youtie/Bonner (1937): H.C. Youtie and Campbell Bonner, “Two Curse Tablets from Beisan”, in: Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association 68, 43 – 77, 128.

Zellmann-Rohrer (2016): Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, “Homeric and Pharmacologic Medical Recipes in a Greek Papyrus Formulary”, in: The Bulletin of the American Society of Papyrologists 53, 5 – 16.

Zellmann-Rohrer (2018): Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, “‘Psalms Useful for Everything’: Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Manuals for the Amuletic Use of the Psalter”, in: Dumbarton Oaks Papers 72, 113 – 168.

Zellmann-Rohrer (2020): Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, “Notes on Magical Handbooks”, in: Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 215, 27 – 50.

Zellmann-Rohrer (2022): Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, “Further Useful Psalms”, in: Byzantinische Zeitschrift 115.3, 1115 – 1124.

Zellmann-Rohrer/Love (2022): Michael Zellmann-Rohrer and Edward O. D. Love, Traditions in Transmission: The Medical and Magical Texts of a Fourth-Century Greek and Coptic Codex (Michigan Ms. 136) in Context, Berlin.

Texte und Studien zum Antiken Judentum

28

Michael D. Swartz

Mystical Prayer in Ancient Judaism

An Analysis of Ma'aseh Merkavah

Texte und Studien zum Antiken Judentum

herausgegeben von
Martin Hengel und Peter Schäfer

28

Mystical Prayer in Ancient Judaism

An Analysis of Ma'aseh Merkavah

by

Michael D. Swartz

J.C.B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck) Tübingen

Die Deutsche Bibliothek – CIP-Einheitsaufnahme

Swartz, Michael D.:
Mystical prayer in ancient Judaism : an analysis of Ma'aseh Merkavah /
by Michael D. Swartz. – Tübingen : Mohr, 1992
(Texte und Studien zum antiken Judentum ; 28)
Einheitssacht. des kommentierten Werkes: Ma'aśe merkāvā <engl.>
ISBN 3-16-145679-3
NE: Ma'aseh Merkavah; EST des kommentierten Werkes; GT
978-3-16-158710-8 Unveränderte eBook-Ausgabe 2019

© 1992 by J. C. B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck), P.O. Box 2040, D-7400 Tübingen.

This book may not be reproduced, in whole or in part, in any form (beyond that permitted by copyright law) without the publisher's written permission. This applies particularly to reproductions, translations, microfilms and storage and processing in electronic systems.

The book was typeset by Gulde-Druck in Tübingen using Baskerville typeface, printed by Gulde-Druck in Tübingen on acid-free paper from Papierfabrik Buhl in Ettlingen and bound by Heinr. Koch in Tübingen.

ISSN 0721-8753

For Suzanne

Preface

This study began as my doctoral dissertation, "Liturgical Elements in Early Jewish Mysticism: A Literary Analysis of Ma'aseh Merkavah," presented to the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Literatures of New York University in May 1986. I have added an introduction and revised several chapters. In the introduction, which is based on the textual analysis carried out in the body of the study, the implications of Ma'aseh Merkavah for the study of the history of Judaism are assessed.

My interest in Ma'aseh Merkavah grows out of my longstanding interest in the language and history of Jewish prayer and in the history of Judaism in Late Antiquity. Upon reading Gershom Scholem's compelling account of Merkavah mysticism, I became interested in the possibilities the Hekhalot texts held for these areas and for examining the relationship between religious experience and literary expression. Upon confronting the texts themselves, and in light of the work done by Peter Schäfer and others on these texts, I became aware that methods needed to be developed for dealing with the historical and textual problems presented by the literature. This study is an effort to address such questions.

Portions of Chapter 11 appeared in my article, "'Alay le-Shabbeaḥ: A Liturgical Prayer in Ma'aseh Merkavah" (JQR 77 [1986–87]). Portions of Chapter 16 appeared as "Patterns of Mystical Prayer in Ancient Judaism: Progression of Themes in Ma'aseh Merkavah," in New Perspectives on Ancient Judaism, edited by Paul V. M. Flescher (Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1990).

Many teachers, colleagues, and friends have contributed to my work. I have had wise and attentive advisers at New York University. Professors Baruch A. Levine, Francis E. Peters of New York University, Ross R. Brann, now of Cornell University, and Martin A. Cohen of Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, served as readers of my thesis. As my principal adviser and as a colleague, Professor Lawrence H. Schiffman, has been exceptionally generous with his time, advice, and knowledge. I am especially grateful for his counsel and encouragement. My research has also benefited from conversations and communications with the late Professor Alexander Altmann and with Professors Peter Schäfer, Martin S. Cohen, Elizabeth Waller, Carol Newsom, Morton Smith, and David Blumenthal. At the University of Virginia, my colleagues Professors Gary Anderson, Benjamin Ray and Robert Wilken have made helpful suggestions and criticisms. My thanks also to Professor Schäfer for his interest in this book, and to Ms. Leslie Kobayashi for preparing the indexes. Of course, I alone am responsible for any errors or shortcomings in my work.

This book is also a product of deeper influences. Rabbi Elihu Schagrin, Emeritus of Temple Concord in Binghamton, New York, is responsible for much of my interest in Jewish religion and its sources. I will always be grateful to my parents, Bernard and Marcella Swartz, for their support, and to my brother Steven for his friendship. It is my hope that my work reflects their integrity and love of learning. This book is dedicated to my wife, Suzanne Silver, whose work and life continue to enrich mine immeasurably.

Jerusalem, November 1990 Michael D. Swartz

Contents

Preface VII
Introduction 1
1. Ma'aseh Merkavah and the Study of Hekhalot Literature 30

Part I
Manuscripts of Ma'aseh Merkavah

2. Manuscripts of Ma'aseh Merkavah: A Description 41
3. Distribution of the Material 53
4. Manuscripts of Ma'aseh Merkavah: Conclusions 59

Part II
The Structure and Redaction of Ma'aseh Merkavah

5. Larger Units of the Text 65
6. Section I of Ma'aseh Merkavah: Outline and Analysis 67
7. Section II 77
8. Section III 91
9. Section IV 101
10. The Redaction of Ma'aseh Merkavah: Conclusions 103

Part III
Prayer Passages in Ma'aseh Merkavah

11. Prayers in Section I 109
12. Prayers in Section II 134
13. Prayers in Section III 149
14. Prayers in Section IV 156
15. Redactional Patterns in Prayer Passages: Conclusions 166

Part IV
Literary Features of Ma'aseh Merkavah

16. Forms and Patterns of Prayer in Ma'aseh Merkavah 171
17. The Poetics of Prayer in Ma'aseh Merkavah 190

Part V
Conclusions

18. Historical Conclusions 211

Appendix: Ma'aseh Merkavah: A Translation 224

Bibliography: Works Cited 252

Indexes 259
Sources 259
Hebrew Terms 263
Authors 264
Angels and Devine Names 265
Subjects 266

Introduction

Prayer is an important part of religious discourse and practice. Yet apart from the disciplines of liturgical history or theology, the study of prayer as a phenomenon in the history of religions has not often received systematic attention. In recent years, scholars have begun to ask how prayer functions in the context of a religious culture. New emphasis has been placed on examining the active or performative function of the language of prayer as against its informational or expressive function. Prayer, we have learned, is not only to supposed to say something; it is supposed to do something.

This study is a form-critical and historical analysis of Ma'aseh Merkavah, an anthology of Jewish mystical prayers of Late Antiquity. It is primarily an evaluation of the place of this text and of the forms of religion it reflects in the history of Jewish religion, and of the relationship of its ideas and literary forms to other liturgies and themes of ancient Judaism. But it is also an inquiry into the changing functions of prayer texts within a tradition of visionary mysticism, and how their literary forms reflect these functions.

I. Prayer and Religious Traditions

Contemporary students of prayer have done much to revise the views of the role of prayer in religion proposed by earlier historians of religion, notably by Frederich Heiler. Heiler, in his classic comparative study Prayer,[1] distinguished personal prayer from ritual prayer as set forth in prayer texts and liturgies. He considered the former to be true, authentic prayer, the latter secondary developments, artificial and of little value for the study of the dynamic relationship of the individual to God:

---

[1] F. Heiler, Prayer: A Study in the History and Psychology of Religion; trans. S. McComb and J.E. Park (1932).

> Prayer is at first a spontaneous, emotional discharge, a free outpouring of the heart. In the course of development, it becomes a fixed formula which people recite without feeling or mood of devotion, untouched both in heart and mind.[2]

Theorists such as Heiler saw such features as the use of repetition, stock formulae, and scriptural citations as marking the degeneration of prayer from the purely spiritual to the merely ritual. In fact, these very characteristics of the language of prayer actually constitute important evidence for the religious meaning and purpose of prayer. Such formulae are essential components of the cultural vocabulary of participants in traditional religions, often inseparable from their common vocabulary. Carl Keller, evaluating the place of prayer in mystical texts, observes:

> Prayers always give voice to a deep sense of God's presence, but they are formulated in traditional religious and theological language, and the praying believer never separates himself from the solid conceptual framework of his spiritual life.[3]

Not only are such formulae integral components of religious expression, they fulfill important functions in achieving the goals of prayer. Current studies of prayer have assigned a new importance to the formulaic language of prayer. Influenced by J. L. Austin's categories of performative language,[4] these scholars stress the power of words and formulae to do what the speaker intends over the information conveyed by those words.[5] A prayer not only expresses the worshipper's state of mind, or proclaims or teaches doctrine; it is an actor in a ritual context.[6] A given prayer is often intended to alter the

---

[2] Heiler, Prayer, 64.

[3] C. Keller, "Mystical Literature," in S. Katz, (ed.), Mysticism and Philosophical Analysis, (1978), 94.

[4] Austin, J. L., How to Do Things with Words, edited by J.O. Urmson and Marina Sbisa (1975). Cf. M. Silverstein, "Language Structure and Linguistic Ideology," in P.R. Clyne, W.F. Hanks, and C.L. Hofbauer, The Elements: A Parasession on Linguistic Units and Levels (1979), 193–247.

[5] For a survey of current research on prayer, see Gill, "Prayer," in The Encyclopedia of Religion. An very useful recent consideration of the problem of prayer and its poetics in anthropology is P. Metcalf, Where are you, Spirits (1989); see especially the introduction, 1–27. The following studies are based on fieldwork and are primarily concerned with the function of ritual language in nonliterate societies: R. Finnegan, "How to Do Things with Words: Performative Utterances among the Limba of Sierra Leone," Man, n.s. 4 (1969) 537–52; S. Gill, "Prayer as Person: The Performative Force in Navaho Prayer Acts," History of Religions 17 (1977), 143–57; Gill, Native American Religious Action: A Performance Approach to Religion (1987); Sacred Words: A Study of Navaho Religion and Prayer (1981); B. Ray, "Performative Utterances in African Ritual," History of Religions 13 (1973), 16–35; see also S.J. Tambiah, "The Magical Power of Words," Man, n.s. 3 (1968) 177–208; cf. W. Wheelock, "The Problem of Ritual Language: From Information to Situation," JAAR 50 (1982), 49–71. On the study of Jewish prayer, see below, n. 8.

[6] On this point see especially Gill, "Prayer as Person."

mood or state of mind of the worshipper or community of worshippers; it may also be intended to affect the relationship between the worshipper and God, the Divine forces, or the world. Analysis of rhetorical and conventional features of a prayer text can uncover these functions.

The role of prayer in mysticism bears on these questions in significant ways. For as mysticism is seen as having its roots in an individual's experience, prayer in mysticism is often seen in terms of its effect on this experience.[7] Prayer may express a mystical state, but it may also serve to engender a mystical state. As we shall see, the latter function has been ascribed to prayer in ancient Jewish mysticism by earlier scholars of the phenomenon. This hypothesis is questioned and tested below in the case of Ma'aseh Merkavah.

II. Prayer Texts in Judaism and Diachronic Analysis

The earlier views of prayer described above have also come under criticism from students of ancient Jewish prayer. R. Sarason argues that prayer in classical Judaism, far from being the "very hearthstone of all piety,"[8] must be seen in the context of the Rabbinic system of worship, which stresses study and the performance of statutory obligations. T. Zahavy argues for a distinction between the study of prayer texts and the treatment of and evidence for prayer as an act.[9]

---

[7] It is not the purpose of this study to address the problem of the terms mysticism and magic. For our purposes the term mysticism will be used heuristically to refer to the active effort of a person or persons to apprehend God directly, especially by means of a vision. The term magic in the context of ancient Judaism will refer to the use of ritual procedures involving divine names for practical purposes. On the problem of magic in ancient and medieval Judaism, see briefly M.D. Swartz, "Scribal Magic and Its Rhetoric: Formal Patterns in Medieval Hebrew and Aramaic Incantation Texts from the Cairo Genizah" HTR 83 (1990), 163–80 and L.H. Schiffman and M.D. Swartz, Hebrew and Aramaic Incantation Texts from the Cairo Genizah: Selected Texts from Taylor-Schechter Box K1 (in press), Introduction. There an argument is made that the term magic is useful in the context of ancient and medieval Judaism as a category describing a distinct set of rhetorical and literary forms. It is not supposed here that there is an essential dichotomy between magic and religion.

[8] Heiler, Prayer, quoted in R. Sarason, "Religion and Worship," in J. Neusner (ed.), Take Judaism, for Example (1983), 49–65.

[9] T. Zahavy, "A New Approach to Early Jewish Prayer," in B. Bokser (ed.), The History of Judaism: The Next Ten Years (1980), 45–60. Gill also urges the consideration of prayer as an act. See "Prayer;" Religious Action; see especially pp. 89–146 on the problem of textuality in relation to prayer acts; and Sacred Words. On methodology in the study of Jewish prayer, see R. Sarason, "The Modern Study of Jewish Liturgy," and "Recent Developments in the Study of Jewish Liturgy," in J. Neusner (ed.), The Study of Ancient Judaism, vol. 1 (1981),

These scholars argue rightly for an approach which stresses placing the texts of prayer in the context of systemic analysis. Yet if the prayer in its legal or liturgical context plays its part in expressing the system of the community doing the praying, the prayer texts themselves often express something different. They express, among other things, the dynamics of the perceived relationship between the worshipper and God. God is referred to in one set of rules of discourse or activity – those of theology or law. But He is approached, addressed, entreated, praised, threatened, or thanked in another – the rhetorical canons of prayer.[10] Texts of prayer can have their own histories, and their own intrinsic formal and substantive characteristics which allow them to be set into their various contexts. The internal rhetoric of a prayer allows it to do something, while subsequent use of the text often makes it do something quite different. In such cases this disparity between a prayer's rhetorical dynamic and its contextual function is often manifest in how that prayer has been altered, truncated, or ornamented to serve its new role.

This problem calls for a distinction between the prayer and its rhetoric on the one hand, and its legal or literary context on the other. Such a distinction is made in the case of an ancient anthology of prayers such as Ma'aseh Merkavah through diachronic form-critical analysis of the text. By separating prayer passages from their redactional context, such an analysis can reveal the criteria and purposes for which the prayers were initially composed, and go on to describe how they were used in the system of the redactors. In addition, this analysis yields evidence for discrete layers of development of a religious phenomenon. It will be seen that prayer was used in Ma'aseh Merkavah for several distinct purposes, and that these purposes stand in significant contrast to the role of prayer in classical Rabbinic Judaism.[11]

Ma'aseh Merkavah also provides evidence for the use of literary units of prayer in contrasting contexts, that of Merkavah mysticism and that of the statutory liturgies of Rabbinic Judaism. The text contains parallels to prayers known from the traditional Jewish Babylonian and Palestinian liturgies. The value of these parallels is both historical and phenomenological; they allow us to determine whether the prayers originated in the mystical or liturgical tradition, and they allow us to see how the prayers operate in both contexts.

The purpose of this analysis of Ma'aseh Merkavah is thus twofold. It is an effort to illumine the historical question of the development of Merkavah

---

107–187; see also S. Reif, "Jewish Liturgical Research: Past, Present, and Future," JJS 34 (1983), 161–170.

[10] On this problem cf. the discussion in Metcalf, Where are You, Spirits, 3–4.

[11] On the form-critical methodology employed in this study and its implications for the study of Hekhalot literature, see Chapter 1 below.

mysticism as a system of apprehension of and communication with the Divine in Judaism of Late Antiquity. It is also an assessment the role of prayer in this process of development.

III. Merkavah Mysticism

Ma'aseh Merkavah is a central example of the texts of Merkavah mysticism, the visionary Jewish mysticism which flourished in Palestine and Babylonia in the second through eighth centuries, C. E. These texts are known as Hekhalot literature. The significance of Merkavah mysticism was first brought to the attention of scholars by Gershom Scholem in his Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism[12] and Jewish Gnosticism, Merkavah Mysticism, and Talmudic Tradition.[13] Scholem demonstrated its importance in the context of Judaism of Late Antiquity and suggested its implications for the study of classical, Rabbinic Judaism. As Scholem demonstrated, the Hekhalot texts contain some of the earliest evidence for Jewish mysticism and theurgy. Unlike other contemporary texts of Rabbinic religion, these texts center not on law, theology, or biblical exegesis, but on journeys purportedly undertaken by their authors through the Hekhalot, the seven heavenly "palaces" or chambers, to the Divine Chariot-Throne, the Merkavah. This journey, how to achieve it, and its dangers and rewards, are the heart of the literature, its organizing principle.

In Ma'aseh Merkavah prayer plays an active role, more so than in any other Hekhalot text. Prayers are seen in the text as the instruments by which the protagonists ascend, experience the vision of the upper realm, and protect themselves from the dangers of that vision. Because of the centrality of prayers and the qualities claimed for them in the text, Ma'aseh Merkavah can illuminate the question of the relationship of prayer to religious experience and mysticism in ancient Judaism.

Ma'aseh Merkavah also provides evidence for the changing function of prayer within the Hekhalot tradition. The form-critical analysis undertaken here demonstrates that the text underwent a process of evolution from a collection of prayers to be recited in community with the heavenly hosts, to a prescription for the active cultivation of the individual's ascent to and vision of the upper realm – that is, an evolution from liturgy to theurgy.

---

[12] Second ed. (1954).

[13] Second ed. (1965). For an account of the modern study of Merkavah mysticism, see chapter 1 below.

IV. Prayer in Hekhalot Literature

Prayer is generally regarded as an important testimony to the experiential, mystical character of Hekhalot literature. Merkavah prayer has been seen to be characterized by the use of repetition of synonyms, a hypnotic rhythm, and a numinous quality. P. Bloch first advanced the idea that Merkavah prayer employed these qualities to induce a trance.[14] He noted that strings of synonyms appear in the prayers without reference to specific concepts or deeds of God, and without any logical progression. These passages were, according to Bloch,

> Purely pleonastic and unisonous words which do not in the least assist the process of thought but merely reflect the emotional struggle.[15]

These characteristics were thus seen as more important to the prayers than semantic and theological considerations.

Scholem took this idea further in his description of the prayer of Merkavah mysticism. Inspired by Rudolf Otto's category of the numinous,[16] Scholem saw in the strings of synonyms and what he termed the "pompous" rhetoric of the prayers a "polylogy" directly intended to aid the mystic in his vision of God.

> Almost all the hymns from the Hekhaloth tracts, particularly those whose text has been preserved intact, reveal a mechanism comparable to the motion of an enormous fly-wheel.
>
> In cyclical rhythm the hymns succeed each other, and within them the adjurations of God follow in a crescendo of glittering and majestic attributes, each stressing and reinforcing the sonorous power of the world. The monotony of their rhythm – almost all consist of verses of four words – and the progressively sonorous incantations induce in those who are praying a state of mind bordering on ecstasy.[17]

Several of the precise patterns which comprise this style have been analyzed in an important series of articles by Johann Maier.[18] Maier shows that the specific forms utilized in Hekhalot Rabbati and related texts – simple repetition, litanies of attributes, short clauses describing God, and the like – generate an

---

[14] P. Bloch, "Die Yorde Merkavah, die Mystiker der Gaonzeit und ihrer Einfluss auf die Liturgie," MGWJ, O.S. 37 (1893), 18–25, 69–74, 257–66, 305–11.

[15] Bloch, Yorde Merkavah, 306, cited in Scholem, Major Trends, 58; Scholem's translation.

[16] R. Otto, The Idea of the Holy (second ed., 1950).

[17] Scholem, Major Trends, 59–60.

[18] J. Maier, "'Attah hu 'Adon (Hekhalot Rabbati XXVI 5)," Judaica 22 (1966), 209–33; "Hekhalot Rabbati XXVII, 2–5," Judaica 21 (1965), 129–33; "Poetisch-liturgische Stücken aus dem 'Buch der Geheimnisse'," Judaica 24 (1968), 172–81; "Serienbildung und 'Numinoser' Eindruckseffekt in den poetischen Stücken der Hekhalot-Literatur," Semitics 3 (1973), 36–66.

accumulative rhythm which, according to Maier, aids in the process Scholem describes. The literary forms can thus be positively identified by these conspicuous features.

The descriptions of the character and function of Merkavah prayer described above were based to a great extent on Hekhalot Rabbati, the text which has been used most often as evidence for Merkavah mysticism.[19] Prayers in Hekhalot Rabbati may indeed have been composed for the purposes of engendering a mystical trance. Ma'aseh Merkavah, however, exhibits a rather different set of stylistic dynamics, with different implications for the role of prayer in Merkavah mysticism. The prayers which formed the basis for Ma'aseh Merkavah were not meant primarily to lift the worshipper from earthly contemplation to heavenly ascent, but to express his participation in an earthly liturgy corresponding to the angelic liturgy. Thus their primary purpose was evocative rather than instrumental. Only later did the authors of the narrative of the text attribute to the prayers the function of producing a vision of the Divine world.

In order to explain this process of evolution, it is necessary to describe Ma'aseh Merkavah, its subjects, themes, and strata of redaction. Once this has been accomplished, the character and function of prayer in the text will be analyzed, and the role of the text in the phenomenon of Merkavah mysticism will be evaluated.

V. Ma'aseh Merkavah

In 1946, Alexander Altmann published, from an important manuscript of Hekhalot literature, excerpts of a previously unpublished Hekhalot text.[20] Later Gershom Scholem published the entire text in Jewish Gnosticism,[21] giving it the name Ma'aseh Merkavah, "the work of the [Divine] Chariot" on the basis of a citation from Eleazar of Worms' Sode Razaya'.[22] Ma'aseh Mer-

---

[19] On Hekhalot Rabbati see Scholem, Gnosticism, 6; I. Gruenwald, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism (1980), 150–173; and M. Smith, "Observations on Hekhalot Rabbati," in A. Altmann, (ed.) Biblical and Other Studies (1963), 142–160; D. Blumenthal, Understanding Jewish Mysticism 1 (1978).

[20]. A. Altmann, "Shire Qedushah be-Sifrut ha-Hekhalot ha-Qedumah," Melilah 2 (1946), 1–24. Scholem, however, did not acknowledge Altmann's prior publication.

[21] Pp. 103–17. On the manuscripts used by Altmann and Scholem, see Chapter 2 below.

[22] See Gnosticism, 76, 101. On this title, see Chapter 1, n. 18 below. The term Ma'aseh Merkavah is used in Rabbinic literature to denote the study and description of the great Chariot-throne of God, first described in the prophetic visions of Isaiah and Ezekiel. This throne is described in great detail in several of the Hekhalot texts, especially Hekhalot kavah is included in Peter Schäfer's definitive synoptic edition of Hekhalot literature. Schäfer's edition forms the basis for this study.[23]

Altmann understood Ma'aseh Merkavah as an anthology of Hekhalot prayers to be recited in conjunction with the liturgical qedushah, the "sanctification," in which Isa. 6:3 is recited. He pointed out the longstanding relationship between visionary literature and hymn, and emphasized the liturgical references in the hymns.[24] He also dated the hymns in the first section of the text[25] to an earlier stage of Hekhalot literature, preceding the second section and preceding the prayers in Hekhalot Rabbati.[26]

A discussion of Ma'aseh Merkavah appears in I. Gruenwald's Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism.[27] Gruenwald distinguishes between two types of prayers in Ma'aseh Merkavah: that type which "lacks the ecstatic quality of the hymns we meet in Hekhalot Rabbati and thus resembles common religious poetry," and those at the end of the text (§ 586–596) which contain extensive magical names and thus "expose their magical function." Gruenwald differed with Altmann's view of the priority of the former type and suggests that the latter type may "represent a more original phase of Hekhalot hymnology than do their counterparts in Hekhalot Rabbati."[28] Gruenwald's case is in part built on Scholem's assertion that theurgic elements of the Merkavah phenomenon are as old as other elements[29] and on the idea described above that the primary purpose of Merkavah prayer is to induce a mystical trance. It will be seen that this study comes to different conclusions about the history and function of prayers in Ma'aseh Merkavah.

Ma'aseh Merkavah is the subject of a recent study by N. Janowitz.[30] In Poetics Rabbati and the later treatise Massekhet Hekhalot. But paradoxically, this description is not prevalent in Ma'aseh Merkavah.

[23] P. Schäfer, Synopse zur Hekhalot-Literatur (1981). Ma'aseh Merkavah extends in the Synopse from § 544–596. All references to Ma'aseh Merkavah in this study will follow the numbering of the Synopse. Other references to Hekhalot literature will also follow the Synopse unless otherwise noted. On the implications of Schäfer's edition and his methods for the study of Hekhalot literature, see Chapter 1 below.

[24] Altmann, "Shire Qedushah," 4–5.

[25] On the divisions of the text, see below.

[26] Altmann, "Shire Qedushah," 8. This dating is based on Scholem's opinion (Major Trends, 46–47) that the term 'aliyah, "ascent [to the Merkavah]," which is prevalent in the first part of Ma'aseh Merkavah, preceded the term yeridah, "descent." Scholem's judgment is based on his unproven theory of the antiquity of Hekhalot Zutarti, where 'aliyah is used, in relationship to Hekhalot Rabbati, in which yeridah predominates. In chapter 18 of this study the dating of Ma'aseh Merkavah is based primarily on stylistic criteria.

[27] Gruenwald, Apocalyptic, 181–90.

[28] Gruenwald, Apocalyptic, 182.

[29] Scholem, Gnosticism, 75.

[30] N. Janowitz, The Poetics of Ascent: Theories of Language in a Rabbinic Ascent Text (1989).

of Ascent, methods developed in structural and ethnographic linguistics are brought to bear on Ma'aseh Merkavah for the purposes of examining the theories of language in the text. Janowitz sees Ma'aseh Merkavah as expressing a distinct ideology of language in which the employment of the name and the reciting of the hymns accomplishes ascent. In the narrative, which frames reported speech, Rabbis Ishamel and Akiba serve as models for the reader, allowing the reader to participate in the act of ascent.

Janowitz's study is notable for its analysis of how magical language and divine names are used in the text as a whole, and of the implications of these conceptions for linguistic and ritual theory. It does not primarily address questions of the historical implications of the literary nature of Ma'aseh Merkavah, of the prior development of the text or of the immediate context in which the prayer materials arose.[31] As is explained in Chapter 1 below on the textual study of Ma'aseh Merkavah, such questions are occasioned by the composite nature of the Hekhalot literature, reflected in the literary evidence for the text. It will be shown that gross variations between the recensions and the inner dynamics of individual units allow us to look into the redactional – and thus the historical – process. In addition, it will be seen that the literary style of the prayers, such as parallelism and the accumulation of synonyms, reflect specific poetic techniques consciously employed by their composers.[32]

Although Janowitz acknowledges that textual variants and the presence of component materials do characterize Ma'aseh Merkavah,[33] her focus is on

---

[31] Janowitz notes that Ma'aseh Merkavah is "a contextless text that cannot be placed in a specific historical community" (Poetics of Ascent, 15). Her approach to this problem is to see the text as "context creating" by virtue of the speech constructions in the narrative which attribute the power of ascent to the name of the deity in the prayers (ibid., 16). While this makes possible her analysis of the narrative's view of the function of the prayers and their magical names, it leaves open the question of the immediate context (the form critic's Sitz im Leben) in which the prayers arose. Cf. her discussion (ibid., 10–11) of Silverstein's distinction between purposive function and indexical function, based on M. Silverstein, "The culture of language in Chinookan narrative texts; or On saying that ... in Chinook," in J. Nichols and A. C. Woodbury, Grammar Inside and Outside the Clause (1985), 132.

[32] J. Fox, "Roman Jakobson and the Comparative Study of Parallelism," in D. Armstrong and C. H. van Schooneveld (eds.), Roman Jakobson: Echoes of His Scholarship (1977), 59–90, following R. Jakobson, "Parallelism and its Russian Facet," in S. Rudy (ed.), Roman Jakobson: Selected Writings (1981), 98, distinguishes between the idea of parallelism as a way of structuring rhetorical language and "canonical parallelism" as a specific poetic technique. Although the parallelism used in Ma'aseh Merkavah is not "compulsory," that is, not strictly followed, the term will be used in this latter sense. This analysis will thus deal with the implications of the canonical parallelism of Hebrew poetry in Late Antiquity for Ma'aseh Merkavah in its cultural context. Cf. Janowitz, Poetics of Ascent, 11–12.

[33] Poetics of Ascent, pp. 4 and 22. Manuscript variations and problems of internal coherence are discussed in an appendix, pp. 113–26.

analyzing those materials in the narrative context of one manuscript's recension. Thus Ma'aseh Merkavah is treated in effect as a unitary document, reflecting a coherent ideology. In Janowitz's view, all elements and genres within the text – prayers, names, and narrative – contribute to this ideology.[34] Janowitz thus sees homologies between the various stylistic elements of the text and its ideological aspects – for example, between the poetic parallelism of the hymns and the framing structure of the narrative which reflects the text's concept of ascent. Likewise, synonyms are piled up in the name formulae and poetry in the way the heavens are piled up in the cosmology.[35]

The present study takes a different approach. Its goals are to uncover the process of development of the text, place Ma'aseh Merkavah primarily in historical context, and from there to consider the contrasting ways in which prayer is used by its composers and redactors. Ma'aseh Merkavah is therefore analyzed here form-critically and diachronically, with particular attention to the role of liturgical literature in the text. Literary and text-critical questions are thus placed at the center of this study. In addition, literary forms and styles, particularly of the prayers in Ma'aseh Merkavah, are analyzed in comparison with their proximate sources in Jewish liturgical literature, the Hekhalot corpus, and the poetry of the Rabbinic period. It will be shown that these corpora are directly relevant for understanding the function of the prayers in Ma'aseh Merkavah as their composers understood it. The results and implications of this inquiry are described in this Introduction below.

A. The Development of the Text

Ma'aseh Merkavah actually consists of three texts, each composed of sayings attributed to Rabbis of the second century C. E. These texts are designated as Sections in this study. These texts consist of prayers framed by narrative. The narrative purports to tell how the these Rabbis acquired Divine visions and secrets. Section I tells how Rabbi Akiba learned the secrets of ascending through the layers of heaven, the Hekhalot, to witness God in His heavenly court and His Merkavah. Sections II and III tell how Rabbi Ishmael conjured the angels who imparted to him the secrets of acquiring wisdom. These angels are known as the "Prince of the Torah" (Sar ha-Torah) and the "Angel of the Presence" (Mal'akh ha-Panim).[36]

---

[34] On Janowitz's approach to the problems of composite composition and historical context, see Poetics of Ascent, 15–16. Janowitz sees many of the components as reflecting "different tactics but similar general strategies" (p. 16).

[35] ibid., 87–88.

[36] On The Sar ha-Torah traditions see Scholem, Major Trends, 77–78; and Gruenwald, Apocalyptic, 143–44, 185–86.

Indexes

I. Sources

Bible

Exodus
8:5 137
15:11 135, 136, 236
16:18 123
33:23 69, 118
34:6 120, 123, 127, 128

Numbers
23:21 123

Deuteronomy
4:39 122, 123
6:4 123
33:5 123

1 Samuel
6:12 193

2 Samuel
7:2 51

1 Kings
18:39 120, 123, 229
19:12 157, 247

Isaiah
6:3 8, 17, 18, 70, 71, 73, 74, 120, 123, 129, 141, 142, 145, 159, 163, 177, 200, 232, 240
30:7 119, 122, 229
44:6 123
45:23 120, 122, 230
51:13 119, 122, 229
55:12 162

Jeremiah
10:5–16 122

Ezekiel
1:10 163
3:12 127–128, 129, 231
23:23 115
34:6 120, 230

Obadiah
1:21 123

Nahum
1:4 162, 250

Zechariah
14:9 120, 123, 150, 229

Psalms
22:29 123
24:7–10 123
41:14 130
89:53 130
91:1 149, 150
93:1 123
104:1 151, 153, 154, 172
106:48 130

Proverbs
8:31 147

Daniel
2:37 119
7:10 20

Ezra
7:12 119

1 Chronicles
16:36 130

Rabbinic Literature

Mishnah
Rosh Ha-Shannah
4:6 124
Avot
3:1 83, 87

Palestinian Talmud
Rosh Ha-Shannah
1:3 122
Avodah Zarah
1:2 122
2:7 108

Babylonian Talmud
Berakhot
6a 69, 82
7a 29, 69, 118
Shabbat
118a 98
Pesaḥim
104a 198
Ḥagigah
13b 69, 92
15a 184
Sanhedrin
4b 135
Avodah Zarah
24b 191, 193
Menaḥot
35b 69, 118

Midrash
Avot de-Rabbi Natan
fol. 11a 29
ch. 34 223
Bereshit Rabbah
40 193
Vayiqra Rabbah (Margulies)
p. 668 122
Mekhilta
Beshallaḥ 1 115
Midrash Mishle
34a 67
Pesiqta' de-Rav Kahana (Mandelbaum)
p. 333 122
Tanḥuma
Ha'azinu 4 122

Hekhalot Literature (according to Synopse number)

3 Enoch
§ 4 51
§ 22 70, 71, 72
§ 20 16, 184
Hekhalot Rabbati
§ 81–105 16
§ 81–306 56
§ 83–93 98
§ 93–106 16
§ 99 15
§ 156 148
§ 160 148
§ 191 205, 206
§ 195 152
§ 198–228 23
§ 199–200 25
§ 201 96, 108
§ 204 152
§ 204–248 214
§ 206 51
§ 213 51
§ 215 51
§ 217 205
§ 249 206
§ 251 155, 199
§ 257 202, 203
§ 260 155
§ 266 202
§ 268 51
§ 272 109

§ 278 96
§ 278–279 86

Pirqe Rabbi Neḥuniah ben Ha-Qannah
§ 311 98
§ 313 89
§ 313–314 77, 86, 87, 89, 94
§ 314 87

Ḥotam Gadol/Keter Nora
§ 318–320 85
§ 318–321 56

Hekhalot Zutarti
§ 335 36, 44
§ 355–374 56
§ 336 44
§ 340–345 43
§ 366–367 57
§ 375–406 56
§ 377 98
§ 407–426 56
§ 410 51
§ 425 98, 99

Seder Rabbah de-Bereshit
§ 429 47

Other
§ 469–499 56
§ 473–474 108
§ 488–499 56
§ 489–496 57
§ 497–499 57
§ 489–499 43, 57
§ 499 45, 46
§ 500 56, 57
§ 501 43, 56, 57
§ 501–517 56
§ 512 43, 56, 57
§ 513–517 44

Seder Rabbah de-Bereshit
§ 518–541 56
§ 522 73
§ 542–543 56, 57

Ma'aseh Merkavah
§ 544 23, 25, 44, 47, 49, 54, 55, 58, 67, 76, 107, 110, 115, 118, 125, 166, 167, 177, 178, 183, 216, 224
§ 544–551 42, 44, 54, 65, 67, 103
§ 544–559 (Section I) 10, 11, 12, 14, 19, 20, 24, 27, 65, 66, 184
§ 544–596 34, 54
§ 545 42, 49, 53, 54, 62, 68, 76, 224–225
§ 545–546 20
§ 546 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 68, 70, 71, 225
§ 546–547 70, 72
§ 547 24, 25, 36, 49, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 102, 107, 216, 225–226
§ 547–549 68
§ 548 14, 124, 133, 159, 172, 173, 175, 177, 180, 184, 206, 218, 221, 226–227
§ 548–549 59, 69, 71, 72, 111, 118, 167, 171, 172, 178, 182, 183, 215
§ 549 76, 112, 125, 227–228
§ 550 23, 24, 69, 107, 111, 118, 229
§ 551 69, 73, 114, 118, 166, 167, 173, 175, 177, 178, 180, 183, 212, 218, 229–230
§ 552 41, 47, 48, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 59, 73, 74, 103, 104, 119, 126, 172, 177, 178, 183, 200, 230–231
§ 552–553 65, 67, 73, 126–127, 167
§ 553 41, 47, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 59, 73, 104, 127, 177, 178, 183, 200, 231
§ 533–555 54
§ 554 20, 21, 42, 46, 49, 51, 53, 55, 62, 73, 76, 104, 231–232
§ 554–555 54, 65, 67, 74, 75
§ 554–559 54, 67
§ 554–570 42, 44, 54
§ 555 50, 51, 54, 55, 70, 104, 119, 127, 128, 172, 177, 178, 180, 183, 232–233
§ 556 49, 64, 65, 233
§ 557 20, 64, 65, 74, 132, 184, 196, 233
§ 558 25, 48, 49, 51, 55, 74, 76, 117, 119, 131, 132, 133, 135, 147, 166, 167, 179, 183, 184, 195, 214, 233–234
§ 558–559 65, 74, 75, 92
§ 559 48, 49, 50, 51, 55, 74, 76, 131, 234–235
§ 560 26, 78, 79, 87, 137, 235
§ 560–570 (Section II) 10, 12, 19, 21, 24, 25, 27, 65, 66, 184
§ 560–562 65, 77, 79
§ 561 26, 77, 79, 80, 82, 88, 134, 235
§ 562 24, 26, 78, 80, 84, 88, 134, 135, 137, 179, 185, 186, 187, 235–237
§ 563 88, 237
§ 563–564 66, 77, 80, 81, 82
§ 564 82, 84, 88, 108, 140, 237
§ 565 26, 88, 134, 138, 237–238
§ 565–568 66, 77, 81, 82
§ 566 83, 84, 138, 140, 142, 179, 185, 238

§ 567 46, 83, 84, 138, 139, 140, 142, 179, 185, 186, 238–239
§ 568 83, 84, 138, 139, 140, 142, 179, 185, 186, 239
§ 569 24, 46, 85, 117, 141, 142, 179, 180, 185, 186, 187, 239–240
§ 569–570 66, 79, 85
§ 570 46, 47, 62, 85, 134, 240
§ 571–577 53
§ 571–578 41, 44, 54, 62, 219
§ 571–592 48
§ 577 102
§ 579 45, 51, 91, 92, 240
§ 579–582 52, 54, 55, 66
§ 579–585 41, 96
§ 579–591 (Section III) 10, 12, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26–27, 41, 47, 53, 54, 65, 66, 91, 184
§ 579–592 47
§ 579–596 42, 44
§ 580 91, 92, 99, 240–241
§ 581 22, 91, 92, 241
§ 582 51, 55, 91, 216, 241
§ 583 22, 93, 94, 100, 216, 242
§ 583–585 66, 144
§ 583–586 93
§ 584 22, 93, 100, 242
§ 584–585 94
§ 585 93, 99, 144, 172, 179, 180, 183, 204, 242
§ 586 95, 97, 242–243
§ 586–587 86
§ 586–591 66, 95
§ 587 95, 133, 136, 146, 148, 166, 167, 172, 174, 176, 179, 181, 182, 183, 184, 216, 243
§ 587–591 171
§ 588 95, 148, 151, 172, 175, 179, 183, 206, 244
§ 589 95, 149, 172, 177, 178, 179, 180, 183, 244–245
§ 590 59, 95, 136, 151, 173, 174, 176, 179, 182, 183, 202, 214, 245–246
§ 591 14, 59, 62, 95, 153, 172, 178, 180, 183, 199, 200, 205, 214, 246–247
§ 591–593 53
§ 591–594 46
§ 591–596 54
§ 592 15, 24, 45, 47, 101, 136, 156, 173, 174, 175, 180, 183, 203, 247–248
§ 592–594 156, 160, 171, 181, 182
§ 592–596 (Section IV) 12, 19, 24, 27, 54, 66, 101, 184, 247
§ 593 157, 177, 180, 183, 203, 248
§ 594 158, 180, 183, 201, 202, 203, 248–249
§ 594–596 54
§ 595 24, 101, 102, 161, 165, 249
§ 596 44, 45, 46, 47, 58, 102, 115, 136, 161, 171, 174, 177, 178, 180, 183, 194, 197, 212, 249–251

Akhatriel story
§ 597 44, 56, 58

Ḥarba' de-Moshe
§ 598–622 56

Sar ha-Panim Incantation
§ 623–639 56, 57, 58

Ḥarba' de-Moshe
§ 640–650 56

Merkavah Rabbah
§ 651 46
§ 651–653 85
§ 651–654 56
§ 654 69
§ 655 92
§ 657 46
§ 659 107
§ 675 111, 166, 216
§ 675–676 109, 110, 177
§ 677 96
§ 677–678 86

Seder Rabbah de-Bereshit
§ 717 57
§ 722 51

Merkavah Rabbah
§ 821 69, 118

Other
§ 854 57

3 Enoch
§ 856 16, 184
§ 873 70, 76
§ 874 76
§ 929 97

Shi'ur Qomah
§ 977 202

Prayers and liturgical compositions

'Alenu le-Shabbeaḥ 14, 35, 118, 119, 122–125, 150, 165, 191, 200
'Amidah 192, 180, 192, 197
'Atah yodea' raze 'olam 116, 166, 175, 218
'El 'Adon 163–165, 212–213
'El barukh gedol 164
ge'ulah 197–198
Minḥah, Afternoon prayer,
Sabbath 127
Musaf, Additional prayer,
Festivals 152
Rosh Ha-Shannah 121, 122
Sabbath 148
Nishmat kol ḥai 165
Pesuqe de-zimra' 174, 203
Qedushah see subject index
Qedushah de-'Amidah 17, 140
Qedushah de-Sidra' 127, 177
Qedushah de-Yoṣer 17, 140, 163, 164
Shaḥarit, Morning prayer
Sabbath 127, 149, 163, 165, 203
Weekday 164, 174, 203
Shema' 197
Shomer Yisra'el 197
Taḥanun 197
Zikhronot 144

Other texts

4Q ShirShabb (Qumran Sabbath Songs) 21, 28, 29, 148, 176, 222–223

Ezekiel Targum
3:12 127, 177
Ḥarba' de-Moshe 42, 43, 44, 56, 157
Havdalah de-Rabbi Akibah 42
Ma'aseh Bereshit 47
Massekhet Hekhalot 49
'Otiot de-Rabbi Akiba 47
Pirqe Hekhalot 49
Pirqe Rabbi Neḥuniah ben Ha-Qannah 98
Razo shel Sandalfon 43, 44, 58
Seder Rabbah de-Bereshit 47, 49
Seder Rav Amram Gaon 192
Sefer ha-Razim 109, 150
Sefer Yeṣirah 42, 45, 47
Sheva' Zutarti 42
Siddur Rav Sa'adia Gaon 192
Sode Razaya' 7, 34, 42, 53, 92, 216–217

II. Hebrew Terms

'aliyah 8 (see also "ascent" in subject index)
'md 82
br' 173, 174
familia 87
gevurah 20, 149, 222
gibbor 115
ḥokhmah 81, 116
kbš 108 ki 82
kwn 173, 174
meshartim 148 (see also index of angels and divine names) nefesh 138
'otiot 81, 97, 134
p'r 137
perishot 149, 150, 206
qomah 135
raz 85, 95, 108, 127
reshut 26, 185–86
shelish 115, 117 (see also index of angels and divine names) shevaḥ 23, 70, 107, 125
sym 173, 174
yoṣer bereshit 121
yrd 8, 77, 84 (see also "descent" in subject index) ysd 173
yṣr 173, 174

III. Authors

Abelson, J. 31
Abrahams, I. 116
Alexander, P. 16, 20, 31, 70, 72, 97, 136, 184, 218, 221
Altmann, A. 7, 8, 17, 34, 42, 66, 107, 123, 146, 163, 164, 243
Austin, J. L. 2, 24

Basser, H. 81, 108
Beit Arie, M. 42, 43, 45, 46
Betz, H. D. 19
Biale, D. 30
Blacker, C. 20
Blau, L. 97
Bloch, P. 6, 12, 117, 123, 192, 199
Blumenthal, D. R. 7
Bokser, B. 223
Brown, P. 219

Chernus, I. 31, 97
Cohen, M. 30, 32, 107, 109, 115, 135, 202, 205, 216, 220

Dan, J. 53, 121
Davidson, I. 190
Dodds, E. R. 18

Elbogen, I. 116, 118, 122
Evans, D. D. 24

Finnegan, R. 2
Fleischer, E. 190
Flusser, D. 118
Fox, J. J. 9

Gaster, M. 42
Gaster, T. H. 21
Gesenius, F. 76
Gill, S. 2, 3
Goldberg, A. 32
Goldschmidt, D. 116, 122
Graetz, H. 30, 190
Greenfield, J. 220, 221
Grözinger, K. E. 75
Gruenwald, I. 7, 8, 10, 16, 25, 31, 49, 69, 80, 91, 93, 96, 98, 118, 137, 214, 218, 219, 221

Halper, B. 46
Halperin, D. J. 32, 33, 81, 184, 218, 220
Heiler, F. 1–2, 3
Heinemann, J. 13, 16, 32, 35, 122, 123, 127, 129, 130, 163, 164, 180, 192, 197, 198, 213
Himmelfarb, M. 97
Hoffman, L. A. 13, 164

Idel, M. 18

Jakobson, R. 9
Janowitz, N. 8–10, 19, 22, 24, 25, 62, 70, 76, 86, 94, 96, 119, 122
Jastrow, M. 82, 150
Jellinek, A. 49, 70
Jeremias, J. 97

Kautsch, E. 76
Keller, C. A. 2
Kohler, K. 119, 122
Kugel, J. L. 190

Levine, B. A. 15, 28, 115, 223
Lewy, H. 18
Lieberman, S. 83, 93, 97, 131
Liebreich, L. J. 116, 122, 123, 127
Loewe, M. 20

Maier, J. 6, 12, 69, 115, 117, 121, 123, 155, 159, 193, 194, 199, 201, 202, 205, 206, 207
Margalioth, M. 109
Marmorstein, A. 174
Metcalf, P. 2, 4
Mirsky, A. 34, 121, 190, 191, 193, 194, 217
Musajoff, S. 45

Neubauer, A. 50, 53
Neusner, J. 29, 31–32, 122, 223
Newsom, C. 21, 136, 148, 176, 222

Odeberg, H. 50, 51, 70, 71, 72, 97, 136, 184
Otto, R. 6, 18, 222

Ray, B. 2, 24
Reif, S. 4

Sarason, R. 3
Schäfer, P. 8, 27–28, 33, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 54, 55, 57, 62, 83, 85, 86, 92, 98, 107, 109, 213, 219, 220
Schechter, S. 192
Schiffman, L. H. 3, 19, 21, 32, 34, 83, 131, 135, 164, 165, 176, 222

Scholem, G. 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, 15, 18, 19, 26, 30–31, 34, 42, 43, 48, 57, 62, 67, 69, 78, 81, 84, 117, 118, 121, 126, 131, 135, 193, 199, 206, 207, 217, 219, 220, 222
Schrire, T. 19
Schultz, J. P. 83
Segal, M. 76
Silverstein, M. 2, 9
Smith, M. 7, 19, 32, 152, 214, 216, 219
Steinschneider, M. 45, 47
Strugnell, J. 21
Swartz, M. D. 3, 14, 19, 35, 118, 164, 165

Ta-Shema, Y.M. 35
Tambiah, S. J. 2
Tigay, J. H. 35
Towner, W. Sibley 130
Trachtenberg, J. 19, 83

Urbach, E.E. 32

van Uchelen, N. 25

Werner, E. 129
Wertheimer, A. 49
Wheelock, W. 2
Wilken, R.L. 18

Zahavy, T. 3
Zunz, L. 122, 190

IV. Angels and Divine Names

'PRDS 77
'RPBS 81
'RPDM 81
'RPDS 81, 90
'RPRS 81
Angel of Gehinnom 216
Angels of Glory 23, 92, 111, 118
Cherubim 175
Demumim Daqin (Gentle Silent Creatures) 157, 159
Elyon 150
'Forty-two letter name 44, 79, 83
Galgalim (Wheels of the Merkavah) 15, 159
Giddudim (Troops) 132, 136, 146, 159, 186
Malakh ha-Panim (Angel of the Presence) 10, 21, 22, 24, 26, 77, 78–80, 84, 85, 91–94, 96, 100, 103, 110, 134, 140, 144
Meshartim (Servants) 148
Metatron 57, 70, 97, 104, 135, 214
MQLS 85
PNQRS 84
PRDQS 140
Prince of Gehinnom 97, 99, 145
Princes of Wisdom 100
PRQDS 77, 81, 83, 84, 90, 138
RWZYY YHWH 115, 172, 215
Sandalfon 92–93
Sar ha-Ḥokhmah (Prince of Wisdom) 65–66
Sar ha-Panim (Prince of the Presence) 98, 152
Sar ha-Torah (Prince of the Torah) 10, 26, 79, 81, 94, 185
Seraphim 102, 161
ŠQDḤWZYH 77–78, 80, 90, 91, 94, 134, 136, 144, 145, 152, 186, 187
SWRY' 80
SWRYH 152
SWWRY'L 77, 134
ṬṬRSYHYY 152
ṬṬRWSY 152–153, 214
ṬWṬRSYY 152
Yofiel 134
Za'afiel 97
Ze'ufiel 97, 145
Zevudiel 91, 94

V. Subjects

3 Enoch (see also source index) 21, 34, 70–73, 176, 214, 220, 221
Aaron 91, 96
Ablutions 134, 136
Acrostic 131, 163–165, 206, 213
Afterlife (see also World to Come) 99, 107
Aggadah see Midrash
Akhatriel 44

'Alay le-Shabbeaḥ 14, 23, 60, 70, 104, 107, 111, 118–125, 165, 166, 167, 175, 177, 178, 200, 212, 218
Amoraic period 191, 207, 213, 217, 218, 220, 221
Amulets 19, 164
Angels (see also Index of angels) 15, 16, 22, 23, 68, 128, 132, 136, 146, 153, 175, 176, 178, 182
– of wisdom 22, 25, 26, 86, 134, 137
–, worship of 16, 184
Anthropomorphism 31
Apocalyptic 28, 218, 220–222
Aramaic 41–45, 53, 56, 62, 87, 127, 150, 219
Ascent 8, 9, 12, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28–29, 32, 67, 86, 98, 128, 184, 215–216, 218, 221, 222
– of Enoch 214
– of Rabbi Akiba 27, 67, 69, 102, 103, 110, 111, 117, 131, 133, 156, 165, 214, 221
– of Rabbi Ishmael 65, 144
–, praxis of 25, 32, 77, 96

Babylonia 4, 5, 11, 16, 41, 42, 44, 118, 192, 218–220 bar Kappara 191
Berakhah (blessing) 14, 15, 16, 83, 93, 110, 114, 121, 123, 128, 130, 133, 136, 139, 142, 145, 147, 149, 150, 154, 159, 163, 165, 172, 178, 180, 181, 182, 185, 188, 196, 211, 217, 221
Biblical period 190
Blessing see Berakhah
Bridges 20, 23, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72, 131, 147

Cairo Genizah 26, 35, 46, 116, 164, 190, 192, 220, 221
Chain of tradition 23, 109–110, 213
Chambers of heaven 6, 7, 67, 108, 180
Chiasmus 12
Circles, drawing of 137
Coptic texts 19

Dangers of ascent 5, 69, 128, 137
Demons 78, 80, 82, 90, 136–137, 140
Demotic texts 19
Descent 8, 78, 84
Divine names, theurgic names 11, 18–19, 23, 26, 75, 79, 84, 89, 100, 110, 115, 121, 125, 134, 137, 138, 139, 140, 142, 145, 148, 149, 151, 152, 154, 155, 159, 160, 165, 166, 167, 168, 174, 177, 181, 185–86, 187, 188, 213, 215, 219, 222, –, "Three letters" 79, 80–81, 84, 182, 140
Doxologies 15–16, 127–130, 154, 158–160, 177, 182, 200–201, 211, 221

Eleazar ha-Kallir 191
Enoch 214
– Book of 21, 34, 49, 50, 52, 70, 72–73, 92, 97, 104, 176, 184, 214–215, 220–221
Eulogy formula 182

Fasting (see also Forty Days) 26, 78, 83, 89, 134, 38
Fire 115, 117, 128, 129, 148, 158, 176
Five prayers 22, 24, 66, 91, 96, 97, 99, 103, 104, 108, 132, 145, 167, 176, 177, 181
Forty days 77, 82, 83, 87
Funeral poems 13, 121, 191, 217

Gan Eden (Paradise) 97, 148
Gates 26
Gehinnom 97–99, 145, 147–148
Geonic period 11, 42, 218, 220
Germany 54, 220
Gnosticism 31, 219
God
–, attributes of 14, 121, 151, 154, 159, 211, 202
–, creative powers of 12, 15, 17, 120–121, 124, 146, 158, 159, 163, 173, 175, 181–182, 184–185, 194, 196, 198, 212
–, Divine Presence of see Shekhinah
–, name of 15, 96, 108, 117, 135, 147, 150, 152, 153, 153, 154, 168, 174, 177 182, 187, 213–14
–, omniscience of 14
–, sovereignty of 108, 115, 120, 122, 124, 125, 141, 149, 153, 154, 157, 159, 174, 184, 203
–, tefillin of 23, 69, 111, 118
–, transcendance 15, 121, 147, 174, 181, 212
–, uniqueness of 16
Great Assembly, men of 122
Great Seal see Hotam Gadol
Greco-Roman religions 18, 31
Greek texts 19

Hai Gaon 49
Halakhah 30–32
Ḥaside Ashkenaz 42–43, 49, 53, 216–217, 220
Heavenly court 18, 23, 24, 28
Hekhalot 20, 67, 75, 128–129
Hekhalot Rabbati (see also source index) 6, 7, 8, 12, 14, 16, 20, 22, 23, 27, 29, 32, 84, 131, 152, 155, 176, 193–94, 207, 211, 214–15, 217, 219, 221, 222
Hekhalot literature 5, 30, 35, 36, 42, 43, 70, 98, 117, 123, 184

Hellenism 31, 219
Honi the Circle-Drawer 137
Ḥotam Gadol (Great Seal) 46, 57, 83, 84–85, 98, 140, 187

Idolatry 124
Immersion 89, 222
Islam 30
Islamic period 190
Israel 108, 124
Italy 50, 220

Joshua 82, 108, 109, 122

King of kings 119, 122, 185

Late Antiquity 30, 31, 37, 165, 192
Liturgy (see also prayer, doxologies, and source index)
– Correspondence between earthly and angelic 5, 7, 11, 15, 16, 23, 25, 28–29, 118, 146, 182, 184, 221, 223
– Earthly 15, 17–18, 121, 154, 177–178, 182, 186, 204, 212, 222
– Heavenly 15, 17, 27, 152, 158–159, 163, 176–177, 222
– High Holiday 35, 116, 117, 125, 175, 197, 218, 221
– Rabbinic 4, 16–17, 32, 34, 36, 127, 193

Magic 3, 11, 18, 19, 27, 83, 98, 137, 165, 219
Malkhiyot 122–123
Master-disciple relationship 22–23, 25, 66, 86, 214, 216
Memorization see under Prayers
Merkavot of fire 20–21, 75, 128
Messianic hope 178
Meter 6–7, 12, 13, 115, 116, 121, 124, 142, 163, 191, 192, 195, 196, 200, 206, 207, 211, 213, 217
Medieval Judaism 31, 35, 42, 43, 47–48, 50
Merkavah Mysticism 4, 5, 6, 7, 22, 28, 33, 35, 37, 184, 220
– in modern study 30–32
– and Hekhalot hymnology 193, 207
Midrash 22, 50, 190–191, 197, 219
Military terminology (see also Troops, Captains) 115
Mishnah (see also Sources Index) 36, 223
– Berakhot 35
– Division of Purities 31–32
Moses 82, 108–110
Mysterium tremendum 18

Mysticism (see also Merkavah Mysticism) 3, 5, 28
– and prayer 1, 2–3, 5

New Testament 32

Oral transmission 212–213

Palestine 4, 5, 11, 16, 190, 207, 217, 218, 220, 221
Parallelism 9, 10, 13, 116, 121, 142, 145, 150–154, 158, 163, 191, 192, 194, 196, 200, 202, 204, 206, 207, 211
Pardes (see also Gan Eden, Paradise) 81
Paths 20, 70, 71
Persian period 119
Piyyut, Synagogue poetry 12–13, 121, 163, 190, 191, 211, 217
Pleroma 31
Praxis 25, 26, 27, 84, 85, 89, 94, 110, 136, 215, 221
Prayer
– and relationship with God 4
– as instrument of ascent 5, 11, 22–25, 29, 111
– as praise 12, 17, 25, 100, 115, 120, 121, 124, 125, 128, 139–140, 142, 145–147, 154, 155, 159–160, 163, 167, 175–176, 182, 184, 185, 212
– as protection 5, 11, 19, 23–27, 67, 69, 85, 90, 96, 99, 100 – confessional 13, 14, 115–117, 125, 159, 166, 218, 221
– for mercy 23–24, 69, 72, 111, 112, 117, 118, 125, 133, 159, 167, 171, 172, 173, 175, 184, 206, 221
– for wisdom 24, 86, 109–110, 142, 186–188, 216 –, function of 1–3, 5, 7, 9, 11, 12, 23, 25
– in morning (see also Prayers Index) 94, 109, 111, 117
– in mystical texts 2–3
–, memorization of 25, 36, 69, 109, 111, 117
– numinous 6, 11, 14, 27, 29, 125, 155, 193, 222
– of petition 12, 18, 26, 86, 110, 128, 131–133, 142, 185–187, 192
– of thanksgiving 23–24, 118
– performative 2, 24
–, repetition of 2, 14, 181, 214, 221
–, rhetoric of 4, 24–26, 182,–84, 188–89
–, study of 1–4
Priests 28, 223

Prince of the Torah see Sar ha-Torah
Psalms 203, 211
Pseudepigraphy 216, 218–219
Purity 20, 25, 28, 107, 118, 125, 131, 137, 187, 214, 222

Qedushah (see also index of prayers) 8, 16, 17, 73, 127–130, 131, 140, 142, 144, 145, 148, 152, 159, 163, 177, 178, 181, 192, 211, 218
Qumran 13, 21, 28, 32, 136, 176
Sabbath Songs 21, 28, 29, 148, 176, 222–223

R. Ishmael, priestly descent of 96
Rabbinic Judaism 4–5, 28–29, 30, 31, 32, 25, 184, 191, 194, 216, 218, 223
Rav 116, 122, 220
Razim, Secrets 26–27, 110, 125, 222
Reshut, Permission 15, 26, 140, 185, 186, 188
Riddles 121, 191
Rivers of fire 11, 20, 23, 67, 72
Roman Empire 218
Rosh Ha-Shannah 118, 121, 122, 124, 125

Sacrifice 29, 223
Sar ha-Panim, Angel of the Presence
– Incantation 46, 57, 66
Sar ha-Torah, Prince of the Torah
– Praxis 24–25, 41, 44, 62, 65, 77, 80, 81, 86, 89, 96, 98, 103, 104, 185, 188, 214–217, 220
Seals 23, 26, 27, 77, 78, 84, 85, 93, 96, 100, 134–137, 140, 142, 167, 186, 187, 218
– Seven seals 138, 142, 187
Secrets see Razim
Shekhinah, Divine Presence 13, 14, 22, 28, 29, 71, 79, 85, 86, 97, 99, 101, 102, 156, 177, 223
Sheol 97
Shi'ur Qomah (see also source index) 57, 98, 108, 115
Shofarot 122–124
Song of the Kine 194, 217
Synagogue poetry see Piyyut
Synonyms 6, 9, 10, 14, 199, 121
Syntax 195

Talmud
– Babylonian (see also Source Index) 32, 219, 220, 223
– Palestinian (see also Source Index) 217, 219, 223
Talmudic period 13, 35, 83, 121, 190, 220
Tannaim and Amoraim 30, 213, 217, 218
Tannaitic period 32, 191, 213, 218
Temple 18, 28–29, 223
Tetragrammaton 19, 123, 152–153, 159
Theurgic names see Divine names
Theurgy 5, 8, 11, 14, 18–19, 27, 29, 213–14, 219, 222
Throne of Glory 20, 102, 103, 108, 112, 115, 126, 156, 159, 160, 177, 182, 193–194, 199, 200
Torah
– acquisition of 19
– study of 3, 29, 65, 110, 223
Trance 6, 7, 8, 12, 17, 18, 207
Twelve utterances 86, 134

Wisdom
–, acquisition of 28, 81, 110, 141–142
–, angels of see under Angels
–, chambers of 26, 136
esoteric 108
–, prayer for see under Prayer
–, secrets of 26, 108
World to come 107, 111, 216

Yom Kippur 115, 116, 118
Yose ben Yose 191

Zikhronot 122–124

Texte und Studien zum Antiken Judentum

Alphabetical Index

Becker, Hans Jürgen: see Schäfer, Peter

Chester, Andrew: Divine Revelation and Divine Titles in the Pentateuchal Targumim. 1986. Volume 14.

Cohen, Martin Samuel: The Shi^{c}ur Qomah: Texts and Recencions. 1985. Volume 9.

Gleßmer, Uwe: Einleitung in die Targume zum Pentateuch. 1992.

Grözinger, Karl: Musik und Gesang in der Theologie der frühen jüdischen Literatur. 1982. Volume 3.

Halperin, David J.: The Faces of the Chariot. 1988. Volume 16.

Herrmann, Klaus: see Schäfer, Peter

Instone Brewer, David: Techniques and Assumptions in Jewish Exegesis before 70 CE. 1992. Volume 30.

Kasher, Aryeh: The Jews in Hellenistic and Roman Egypt. 1985. Volume 7. – Jews, Idumaeans, and Ancient Arabs. 1988. Volume 18. – Jews and Hellenistic Cities in Eretz-Israel. 1990. Volume 21.

Kuhn, Peter: Offenbarungsstimmen im Antiken Judentum. 1989. Volume 20.

Luttikhuizen, Gerard P.: The Revelation of Elchasai. 1985. Volume 8.

Mendels, Doron: The Land of Israel as a Political Concept in Hasmonean Literature. 1987. Volume 15.

Mutius, Hans Georg von: see Schäfer, Peter

Otterbach, Rina: see Schäfer, Peter

Prigent, Pierre: Le Judaisme et l'image. 1990. Volume 24.

Reeg, Gottfried (Hrsg): Die Geschichte von den Zehn Märtyrern. 1985. Volume 10.

Renner, Lucie: see Schäfer, Peter

Rohrbacher-Sticker, Claudia: see Schäfer, Peter

Samely, Alexander: The Interpretation of Speech in the Pentateuch Targums. 1991. Volume 27.

Schäfer, Peter: Der Bar-Kokhba-Aufstand. 1981. Volume 1. – Hekhalot-Studien. 1988. Volume 19.

Schäfer, Peter (Hrsg): Geniza-Fragmente zur Hekhalot-Literatur. 1984. Volume 6.

Schäfer, Peter, Reeg, Gottfried, Herrmann, Klaus, Rohrbacher-Sticker, Claudia, Weyer, Guido (Hrsg): Konkordanz zur Hekhalot-Literatur. Volume 1. 1986. Volume 12.

Schäfer, Peter, Otterbach, Rina, Reeg, Gottfried, Herrmann, Klaus, Rohrbacher-Sticker, Claudia, Weyer, Guido (Hrsg): Konkordanz zur Hekhalot-Literatur. Volume 2. 1988. Volume 13.

Schäfer, Peter, Schlüter, Margarete, Mutius, Hans Georg von (Hrsg): Synopse zur Hekhalot-Literatur. 1981. Volume 2.

Schäfer, Peter, Becker, Hans-Jürgen, Herrmann, Klaus, Rohrbacher-Sticker, Claudia, Siebers, Stefan (Hrsg): Übersetzung der Hekhalot-Literatur. Volume 2: §§ 81–334. 1987. Volume 17.

Schäfer, Peter, Becker, Hans-Jürgen, Herrmann, Klaus, Renner, Lucie, Rohrbacher-Sticker, Claudia, Siebers, Stefan (Hrsg): Übersetzung der Hekhalot-Literatur. Volume 3: §§ 335–597. 1989. Volume 22.

Schäfer, Peter, Becker, Hans-Jürgen, Herrmann, Klaus, Rohrbacher-Sticker, Claudia, Siebers, Stefan (Hrsg): Übersetzung der Hekhalot-Literatur. Volume 4: §§ 598–985. 1991. Volume 29.

Schlüter, Margarete: see Schäfer, Peter

Schmidt, Francis: Le Testament Grec d'Abraham. 1986. Volume 11.

Schwartz, Daniel R.: Agrippa I. 1990. Volume 23

Shatzman, Israel: The Armies of the Hasmonaeans and Herod. 1991. Volume 25.

Siebers, Stefan: see Schäfer, Peter

Swartz, Michael D.: Mystical Prayer in Ancient Judaism. 1992. Volume 28.

van Loopik, Marcus (Übers. u. komm.): The Ways of the Sages and the Way of the World. 1991. Volume 26.

Wewers, Gerd A.: Probleme der Bavot-Traktate. 1984. Volume 5.

Weyer, Guido: see Schäfer, Peter

For a complete catalogue please write to
J. C.B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck) · P.O.Box 2040 · D-7400 Tübingen

JSAI 26 (2002)

REVIEWS

Notes on the Mandaic Incantation Bowls in the British Museum

J. B. Segal, with a contribution by E. C. D. Hunter, Catalogue of the Aramaic and Mandaic Incantation Bowls in the British Museum (British Museum Press, London 2000).[1]

To regard Professor J. B. Segal's Catalogue of the Aramaic and Mandaic Incantation Bowls in the British Museum as a "catalogue" would be a great injustice, for it is actually a detailed edition of the largest corpus of incantation bowls published to date. The study comprises a transliteration (into Roman script) and translation of, and commentary on 75 bowls in Jewish Aramaic, 40 bowls and some fragments in Mandaic and 4 bowls in Syriac, most of which have never been published before. 159 plates containing photographs of all the bowls (including 22 additional bowls in pseudoscripts) are also provided. The photographs are of good quality and allow the reader to check most of Segal's readings.

Segal has supplemented his study with concordances of the fixed formulae and standard texts, the latter referred to as 'refrains'. Indices of the various types of proper names and glossaries of the vocabulary of each of the languages represented in the bowls (including Hebrew) also facilitate the use of the book. All occurrences of the various forms of each word are cited, except in the case of the most common forms. An in-depth study of the grammar of the various dialects, however, is naturally beyond the scope of such a work. For the Jewish Aramaic bowls, see now H. Juusola, Linguistic Peculiarities in the Aramaic Magic Bowl Texts (Studia Orientalia, 86: Helsinki 1999).

The author enjoyed the collaboration of several other scholars, most notably E. C. D. Hunter, who wrote a chapter on the physical features and decorative aspects of the bowls and prepared a Table of Scripts containing examples of the script of all the legible bowls. Hunter also added introductory comments concerning the physical features of the individual bowls at the beginning of each commentary and provided scaled drawings of the cross-sections of the bowls and hand-copies of the drawings of demons and magical symbols, etc., which occur on some of them. C. Walker contributed a Table of Registration Numbers and Provenances and a Table of Clients.

[1] It is a great pleasure and priviledge to dedicate this review to the master of incantation bowls, Professor Shaul Shaked. May there be healing and sealing and arming and protection for his body and his spirit and his soul and for his house and his dwelling and his residence and his building and for his spouse and his sons and his daughters and for all his undertakings.

Professor Segal's study of the British Museum collection of Aramaic, Mandaic and Syriac incantation bowls provides an indispensable tool for further research on this genre. As will be seen below, however, his readings and translations are sometimes problematic, and scholars unfamiliar with the scripts and languages of the bowls should therefore use them with caution. In addition, the author generally refrains from reconstructing the text when the bowl is broken or effaced. Prudence in such matters is a great virtue, but the fomulaic nature of many of the incantations and the occurrence of duplicates often allow reconstruction with a high degree of certainty, and the translations of a number of the bowls would have profited from such an approach. The present author hopes that the following comments will facilitate the use of the Mandaic section.[2]

[2] New readings are based on the photographs published in Segal's study. The author would like to thank Professor Shaked for making available photographs of unpublished bowls from the Martin Schøyen collection (cited as MS), which often facilitated the understanding of the British Museum bowls, and for help in translating several difficult passages. The present author has usually refrained from comment in cases where Segal's reading appears doubtful, but a more likely solution is not evident. An examination of original photographs or a collation of the bowl will hopefully settle such questions. Reconstructions anticipated by Segal's translations are generally not proposed unless the lacuna occurs within a segment of the text otherwise under discussion.

Segal's method of transcription has been followed with the exception of $\bar{d}$, which is here rendered $\underline{d}$ and separated from the following word by a hyphen. When citing Segal's transcription or translation, square brackets containing three dots ([...]) have been used to signify lacunae or unreadable text, regardless of the specific method employed by Segal. Letters and words written above the line are indicated by ^...^. The following abbreviations have been used: AHw. = W. von Soden, Akkadisches Handwörterbuch (Wiesbaden 1965–1981); AIT = J. A. Montgomery, Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur (University of Pennsylvania, The Museum Publications of the Babylonian Section, Vol. 3: Philadelphia 1913); AMB = J. Naveh and S. Shaked, Amulets and Magic Bowls: Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity (³Jerusalem 1998); CAD = The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago (Chicago/Glückstadt 1956⁻); Drower-Macuch = E. S. Drower and R. Macuch, A Mandaic Dictionary (Oxford 1963); Ford (1998) = J. N. Ford, "'Ninety-Nine by the Evil Eye and One from Natural Causes': KTU² 1.96 in its Near Eastern Context," Ugarit-Forschungen 30 (1998), pp. 201–278; Isbell = C. D. Isbell, Corpus of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls (Missoula 1975); McCullough (1967) = W. S. McCullough, Jewish and Mandaean Incantation Bowls in the Royal Ontario Museum (Toronto 1967); Müller-Kessler (1996) = Ch. Müller-Kessler, "The Story of Bguzan-Lilith, daughter of Zanay-Lilith," JAOS 116 (1996), pp. 185-195; Müller-Kessler (1999) = Ch. Müller-Kessler, "Interrelations between Mandaic Lead Rolls and Incantation Bowls," in Tz. Abusch and K. van der Toorn (eds), Mesopotamian Magic: Textual, Historical and Interpretative Perspectives (Ancient Magic and Divination, 1: Groningen 1999), pp. 197–209; Nöldeke, Mandäische Grammatik = Th. Nöldeke, Mandäische Grammatik (Halle an der Saale 1875 [repr. Darmstadt 1964]); MIT = E. M. Yamauchi, Mandaic Incantation Texts (American Oriental Series, 49: New Haven 1967).

076M: Read:

(1) kwlhn lypqwn h[ynw]n wkwlhyn šwrbʾtwn ... (2) myn ʾtrʾywn ʾtʾr ʾtʾr kwlhn lʿkrkwn wlʿqrwn wlypqwn myn (3) ʾtrʾywn wmyn šʾbʾ knpʾ d̲-rqʿhʾ hynwn nʿkrykwn wnʿqrwn wnʿpqwn ʿw (mn tmʾnyʾ) (4) ...ʾkyʾ d̲-ʾrqʾ whynwn nʿknpwn wnʿqrwn (wnʿp)qwn ʿw myn ʾrbyʾ zʾwyʾtʾ d̲-hʾzyn (b)ʾytʾ (5) dyl[yʾ ʾbdrh]mʾ[n br] (m)yšywʾ ʾnʾtwn ʾlʾhyʾ (w)ʿkwryʾ wptykryʾ wʿstrʾtʾ ʾnʾt[wn s]hryʾ šydyʾ wdywyʾ (6) whwmr[yʾ wrwhyʾ (?)] wlylyʾtʾ wmlʾkyʾ wmhšbʾtʾ byšʾtʾ knʾp ʾqʾr wpwq myn [hʾzyn bʾ]ytʾy dylyʾ ʾ(b)drhmʾn br (7) myš[wyʾ ...] ...wn wʿtrʾhʾq myn (h)[ʾ]zyn [b]ʾytʾy dylyʾ

(1) May they all be expelled, [they] and all their tribes ... (2) from their various places! May they all turn back and flee and be expelled from (3) their places, and from the seven edges of the firmament may they turn back and flee and be expelled, or (be it) from the eight (4) ...s of the earth, may they take wing and flee and be expelled, or (be it) from the four corners of this house (5) of [mine, Abdrah]ma[n son of] Mišoya! You, O gods and temple-spirits and idol-spirits and goddesses, you, O sahras and demons and dēws (6) and humarta[s and spirits (?)] and liliths and angels and evil designs: take wing, flee and be expelled from [this] my house of mine, Abdrahman son of (7) Miš[oya...] ... and distance yourself from this my house of mine!

Some of the reconstructions are anticipated by Segal. 1: lypqwn "May they ...be expelled": The verb NPQ (Peʿal) "to go out, come out, leave, depart" (Drower-Macuch, p. 304a) would best be rendered "to be expelled" in the context of the forcible exorcism of demons. 4: d̲-hʾzyn (b)ʾytʾ: Segal reconstructs d̲-[hzyn b]ʾytʾ in his note to line 4, but hʾzyn is readable.

077M: 1: hw[...] (d)ʾkyʾ "Pure [...]" — read: hʾ...mʾkyʾ "...angels". 1–2: rwhʾy (2) wn(ʿš)[...] "spirits (2) and sou[ls]" — read: rwhʾywn (2)... "their spirits (2) ...". 5–6: nʿšdwnh̲ ...npwq "They will cast ...go forth" — read: nʿšdwnh̲ hʾtʾm wnʿngdwnh̲ ʾlmʾ d̲-mwqrʾ myn nhyrh̲ {nʿpwq} nʿpwq "They shall cast it (the demon) thence and torture it until brain matter comes out of its nose". The first occurrence of nʿpwq, if correctly read, is poorly written and would seem to have been intentionally rewritten by the scribe. Note to line 7: The phrase ʾrsh̲ wbysʾdyh̲ "his bed and his pillow" denotes rather the wish for safety from demonic attack while in bed.

078M: 3–4: mwmʾytʾ lyʾswr ...qyryʾtʾ "An oath for Yaswar ...the invocations" — read: qʾrʾyth̲ lyʾswr mlʾkʾ wʾwmyth̲ wʾmrylh̲ lyh̲ wlkwlhyn (4) qryʾtʾ "I hereby call Yaswar the angel, and bid him take an oath, and say to him, to him and to all (4) the imprecations".

ʾmrylḥ is a 1 c.s. perf. form (<ʾmryt); for the loss of the final t, see Nöldeke, Mandäische Grammatik, §170. 5: wmhdrylwn wʾzlyn "and go around and are gone" — read: wmhrbylwn wʾzlyn "and destroy them and go about". 6: yʾdʾ — read: yʾdnʾ. 6–7: kwlhyn qryʾtʾk ... bbtyʾ {(wbgd)yʾ} "all your invocations ... in the houses" — read: kwlhyn qryʾtʾk (7) ˆd-zwtyʾˆ rʾ(ʾ)btʾ(yʾ d-)htyʾ bbtyʾ wʾ(bp)gryʾ "all your imprecations (7) which are small (or) great which harm the houses and the bodies". 7–8: d-lʿqrʾ (8) wlʿkynpʾ (wnʾpqʾ): "for root (8) and for wing! There will go forth" — read: d-lʿqrʾ (8) wlʿkynpʾ (wnʿpqʾ) "that they may flee (8) and take wing and be expelled". Similarly, line 10 (below). Cf. 076M, lines 4 and 6 (above). 8: wmn qwdʾmʾy dylyʾ ʾbdrhmʾn "even before me, Abdrahman": this is probably a dittograph. 9: rʾzʾ wmlʾlʾ "the mystery and the spell" — read: (b)rʾzḥ wmlʾlḥ "by the mystery and the spell". 9: mlʾkʾ wkwlhyn "the angel, and all" — read: mlʾkʾ ʾ(nʾt) wkwlhyn "the angel, you and all". 10: [...]hyn lʿqrʾ wlʿkynpʾ wnʿpqʾn "[...] For root and for wing!" — read: hʿnyn lʿqrʾ wlʿkynpʾ wnʿpqʾn "may they flee and take wing and be expelled". 10: bšnyrʾy — read: bšnyrʾh. Cf. below, lines 15–17. This spelling is apparently a variant of bšnyrʾ, a short form of bšnyrʾy (cf. Segal's note to 077M:8 [p. 104]). It also occurs in 079M:9,10 and 080M:8. 11: šʾhpryd[...]whlyn ʿmwmʾtyʾ "Šahafrid [...] And these adjurations of mine" — read: šʾhpryd ʿw (hʾzyn) rʾzʾ ltysʾb whlyn ʿmwmʾtʾ "Šahafrid. If you do not take this mystery and these adjurations". 11: wnʿšdwn "and cast" — read: wnʿšdwnʾk "and cast you". 12: bm(ʿdyr)tʾ rbtyʾ d-nyrʾ "by the great Share of the Plough" — read: bmrkybtʾ rbtyʾ d-nwrʾ "by a great chariot of fire". 12–13: ʾlh ... bʾythḥ "the god ... the house" — read: ʾlʾ(h)ʾ d-t[...] wtypwq ʾ(nʾ)t wkwlhyn šwrbʾtʾk m(n) hʾz[y]n bʾyth "the god, that you [...] and be expelled, you and all your tribes, from this house". 13: (wmn) [...] "and from [...]" — read: (wmn) bnʾywn (wmyn bnʾ)[twn] "and from their sons and from [their] daughters". 15 17: d-bšny (16) rʾ h (17) (wy) [...] "Belonging to Bašni (16) ra L (17) (ife) — read: d-bšny (16) rʾh (17) h(w) "It (the bowl) belongs to Bašnirah". Cf. above, line 10.

Note to line 3: Segal's claim on p. 31 that "verbs of adjuration in 1st sing perf" are "extended by alef" is fallacious. In the present example (ʾwmytʾ), the alef is in fact the accusative suffix pronoun -ḥ, as noted above (for further examples of YMA [Afʿel] + accusative suffix pronoun, see Drower-Macuch, p. 192b). All of his other examples concern the verb ŠBA (Afʿel) "to adjure," where the alef derives from sandhi writing of the verb and the following preposition (ʿl). Cf. Aramaic ʾšbʿyt ʿl (e.g., 027A:4: ʾšbʿyt ʿlykwn).

079M: 1: hyyʾ "(Victorious is) Life" — read: [bšwmʾ(yhwn)] (d-)h[y]yʾ "[In the name] of Life". 3: ʾbʾn gwšnʾhp — read: ʾbʾn gwšnʾ(s)p. Segal (note to line 3) posits a scribal error for ʾbʾn gwšnʾsp, but this would seem to be the actual reading. 3: wb[...] "and Ba[...] — read: kby[š...] "suppre[ssed is...]." It does not seem possible to read the first letter as w. A reading db[šnyrʾh...] "of Ba[šnirah...]" seems epigraphically less likely than kby[š...] and, moreover, would entail an emendation of the text to <w>db[šnyrʾh...] "<and> of Ba[šnirah...]" (cf. lines 9 and 10 [below]). If the proposed reading is correct, the length of the lacuna suggests the following reconstruction: kby[š hyšwkʾ myn qwdʾm nhwrʾ wkbyš] (4) kwlḥ hylḥ d-hyšwkʾ myn qwdʾm kwlḥ hylḥ d-nhwrʾ ˆrbʾˆ "suppre[ssed is darkness before light and suppressed is] (4) all the power of darkness before all the power of great light". Cf. 084M:18–19 and 023A:4. 6: wʿl: "and to" — translate: "and against". 7: rbʾ zywʾ "great [...] radiance" — read: ...bʾytʾ "...house". 8: wʿl kwlhwn dywʾ "and to all the devils" — read: wʿl kwlhwn ʿ(t)yt "and against all of them I came". 9: dʾbdrhmʾn — read: d-ʾbdrhmʾn. 9: wdbšnyrʾy — read: wdbšnyrʾ(h). 10: wdbšnyrʾy pt šʾhpryd — read: wdbšnyrʾh pt šʾhʾpryd.

080M: Read:

(1) ʾswtʾ whtmtʾ thwylḥ lbʾythḥ (2) d-ʾbdrhmʾn br myšwyʾ ʿsʾ(q) ʿyʾrgyz ʿlwʾykwn (3) lqwdʾm šwmʾ rbʾ wlqwdʾm mymrʾ rbʾ qdmʾyyʾ ʾlwʾykwn (4) mlʾkyʾ d-ʾlmʾ hʾzyn bnḥ d-ptʾhyl d-ʾnʾtwn wʿkwrʾykwn whwmrʾykwn (5) wptykrʾykwn wshrʾykwn wdywyʾkwn wrwhʾykwn whwmrʾykwn wlyly'tkwn wmnklʾtkwn (6)(hʾ)[t]ytwn wmbyštwn brwhyʾ wnʿšymʾtʾ d-bnyʾ ʾnʾšʾ ʿyʾrgyz ʿlwʾykwn lptʾhy[l] d-b... (7) lšwmyʾ wlʾrqʾ wl...wmlkʾywn ldhynkwn (read: ldhwnkwn?) lʿqrwnʾkwn wlʿpyqwnkwn mn hʾzyn bʾythḥ (8) wdwrḥ whyklḥ (wb)[yny'nḥ] d-[ʾbd]rhmʾn br myšwyʾ wdbšnyrʾh pt šʾhʾpryd wmn bnʾywn wmn bnʾt[wn]wmn (9) ʾy(lʾywn) wmn nʾpqwn whyyʾ zʾkyʾ (whyyʾ)

(1) May there be healing and sealing for the house (2) of Abdrahman son of Mišoya. I shall go and (speak) wrathfully against you (3) before the great Name and before the great primeval Word, against you, (4) O angels of this world, sons of Ptahil, you who (together with) your temple-spirits and your humartas (5) and your idol-spirits and your sahras and your dēws and your spirits and your humartas and your liliths and your guileful spirits (6) ha[rm] and do evil to the spirits and souls of humans. I shall (speak) wrathfully against you to Ptahil, who c[reated] (7) the heavens and the earth and ...and their kings. They shall drive you out and extirpate you and expel you from this house (8) and dwelling and residence and b[uilding] of [Abd]rahman son of Mišoya and of Bašnirah daughter of Šahafrid and from their sons and from [their] daughters and from (9) those who enter their (house) and those who leave their (house). And Life is victorious! And Life.

2: ʾbdrhmʾn (Segal: ʾbrhymʾn): Cf. the form of the r in br (line 2) and elsewhere in the text. 6: b... "c[reated]": The translation is suggested by the context (see the bibliography cited by Segal, p. 107). The verb would seem to begin with b, as read by Segal. A derivation from BNʾ "to build" is likely, but the present author is not able to make sense of the subsequent traces. Cf. ptʾhyl bʾnyʾ šwmyʾ wʾrqʾ

"Ptahil, the creator of heaven and earth" (Ginza Yamina [ed. Petermann], 227, 22–23). Cf. also the verb BR' "to create" (Drower-Macuch, p. 69b). Note that Mandaic b'ny' "creator (lit. builder)" parallels Akkadian bānû "creator" (CAD, B, p. 94; cf. banû A, meaning 3 "to create, said of a deity" [CAD, B, pp. 87–89a]) and Ugaritic bny "creator" (G. del Olmo Lete and J. Sanmartín, Diccionario de la lengua ugarítica [Aula Orientalis — Supplementa, 7: Barcelona 1996/2000], p. 114a). 7: l'qrwn'kwn "they shall extirpate you" (<'QR [Drower-Macuch, p. 34]). Segal derives this verb from QR' "to call," translating "their kings will ...denounce you," but the context suggests another verb referring to the expulsion of the demons. Cf. M. H. Lichtenstein, Episodic Structure in the Ugaritic Keret Legend: Comparative Studies in Compositional Technique (Columbia University Ph.D. Thesis: 1979), pp. 311–338, who discusses the use of the Aramaic cognate 'QR "to extirpate" and its interdialectal equivalents in incantations directed against demons. In the corpus of the British Museum bowls, cf. 034A:2. For the intransitive homonym 'QR (<*'RQ) "to flee," see 076M:2,3,4,6.

081M: 5: nqb't- read: nwqb't'. 8: kyy'tyb ... ml'ky' "seated ... angels" — read: kd y'tyb bškynt' d-npš[h w]ml'ky' "seated in [his] own dwelling [and] (I saw) the angels". 9: d-q'ymy' 'l'w' "as they stood on high" — read: d-q'ymy' 'l'wh "who serve him (lit. who stand in his presence)". Cf. d-q'ym qwd'm "who serves (lit. who stands before)" (107M:10' and 17' [below]). The Mandaic expressions parallel Hebrew 'MD 'l "to serve (lit. to stand in the presence of)" (e.g., Gen. 18:8) and Akkadian (ina/ana) pān PN izuzzu "to serve (lit. to stand before) PN" (AHw., p. 409a, meaning I,2: "[dienend] stehen vor"). 9: wmytgmry' l'trw'n 'trw'n "and perfected in diverse places" — translate: "and take possession of diverse places". 9: bh[...]rwh'ywn "with [...] their spirits" — read: bh[wmr'ywn wb]rwh'ywn "with their h[umartas and with] their spirits". 10: wlṣ'wy' "and to defile" — translate: "and to desolate". The parallel with lhrwby' "to destroy" suggests a derivation from the root ṢW', otherwise attested in Mandaic in the Pe'al Stem with the meaning "to languish, pine, wither away, dry up" (see Drower-Macuch, p. 390a). Cf. 107M:14' and 20' (below). 10: wl'šwṭ [...]d' d-hyy' "and to make foolish ...[Man]da dHiia" — read: wl'šwṭ[y' bny' šwrb' r]b' d-hyy' "and to render sense[less the children of the gr]eat [family] of Life". 11: 'n' bhyl'y ... d-lwn mn (byt) by rb' q'dm'yy' d-hw(' 'l'w')y q'd[...] "I, in my power ...that [...] (went forth (?)) from my great primeval house that was above the prim[eval...]" — read: 'n' bhyl'y ... d-lwn mn byt bwrb' q'dm'yy' d-hw(' 'l'w')y q'(m)[yt...] "I, by my power ...that accompanied me from the house of the great primeval father, that was upon me, st[ood...]". Cf. DC 37, 367: bh'yl' d-mn byt 'b lw'n "by the power that accompanied me from the house of my father". The latter text suggests that byt bwrb' q'dm'yy' is a contraction of byt 'bw rb' q'dm'y' "the house of the great primeval father," which occurs in a magical context in DC 26, 60–61: q'l' d-'t'ly' mn byt 'bw rb' q'dm'y' "the voice which came to me from the house of the great primeval father." Cf. also the occurrence of the same expression in Ginza Yamina (ed. Petermann) 208, 10–11 // 209, 20–21 in a mythological context. For additional references to byt 'bw "house of the father," see Drower-Macuch, p. 1a, s.v. ab 3. 12: byt šwby'hy' "(in) the house of the planets," — translate: "The house of the planets". 12: w'š[...] — read: w'š[tw'š...] "and were cast into con[fusion...]". 13: bykl't' "upon brides": The reading seems correct (cf. the k in lml'ky' [line 8]), but this is probably a distortion of bydl't' "among children," as the parallels (e.g., MS 1928/25) read by'ld't' or the like. 13: lnqwpy' "to stab" — translate: "to strike down". 13: ]qr't 'lw'ywn "She invoked against them" — read: gy]mr't 'lw'ywn "she set over them". 13: wlṣ'ywdy' nšy' "and ensare [sic] women" — read: wlṣ'ywry' '(n)šy' "and to molest women". 14–15: d-'pky' ... wmhrby' b'ty' "that overturned ...and destroying houses" — read: d-'pky' 'lbb'[ywn d-bny' 'n'š'...] wbbyny'nwn wmytqry' b'lm' g'ṭly' g'ṭl' wmhrby' b'ty' "that pervert the hearts [of humans...] and in their buildings, and are called in the world 'murderers' and 'destroyers of houses' ". 16: Read: [byt' (...)] (d-)'kwry' wr<wh'> whmrt' 'tbh z(m)' d-ywn' ('w) t'rn'wl['] (h)yw'r' p(w)š bmy' "[the house (...)] in which there are temple-spirits and sp<irit(s)> and humarta(s). Dilute the blood of a dove or a white cock in water". The text contains instructions for a magical praxis. For the use of a "white cock" in Jewish ritual and magic, see D. Levene, "'...and by the name of Jesus ...' An Unpublished Magic Bowl in Jewish Aramaic," Jewish Quarterly Studies 6 (1999), pp. 292–293, and S. Shaked, "Jesus in the Magic Bowls. Apropos Dan Levene's '...and by the name of Jesus ...'," ibid., pp. 309–311. 17: lkwl m'n d-'qr'yt' d-'(t)r' 'ml' "to everyone of the invocations of Uthra 'Amla" — read: lkwl m'n d-'qr'yt' d-'(kwr') 'tlh "for anyone who has (i.e., is suffering from) an imprecation of a temple-spirit". 18: m'šwy' — read: m'šwy'. 18: wlb[...] zykry' "and for their s[ons] [...] male" — read: wlb[n'ywn] (zykry') "and for [their] male so[ns]". 20: d-y'w'r "of Yawar" — read: 'l klyl nhw 'y'r "Upon the wreath of the light of air". This phrase, which is the opening line of the basic incantation (see line 5), is written below a line encircling the incantation and serves as a label for the bowl.

082M: 10–11: mn 'l'n' (11) ... twšbyht' "From a tree (11) ...praise" — read: mn gwpn' (11) d-mly' btryṣwt' wmn 'l'n' d-kwlh twšbyht' "From a vine (11) that is full of uprightness and from a tree that all of it is praise". Contrary to Segal, mly' b "full of" provides an excellent parallel to kwlh "all of it." The pronominal suffix in kwlh refers to 'l'n' "tree," not twšbyht' "praise," as in Segal's translation. Cf. Ginza Yamina (ed. Petermann) 189, 14-15: gwpn' d-kwlh hyy' w'l'n' rb' d-kwlh 's'w't' "a vine that all of it is life and a great tree that all of it is remedies" (cf. Drower-Macuch, p. 85a, s.v. gupna and ibid., p. 351a, s.v. ʿlana), where the pronominal suffix is in each case unambiguous. 11: ṣ'yrn' b'yt' b'rby' z'wy't' "I draw the shape of a house with four corners" — read: ṣ'yrn' b'yt' b'rby' z'wy'tḥ "I encircle the house at its four (inner ?) corners". The verb ṣ'yrn' in this text would appear to be derived from ṢUR II "to surround, hem in, encompass, ..." (Drower-Macuch, p. 391a), not ṢUR I "to form, shape, ..., depict, trace" (Drower-Macuch, ibid.), as implied by Segal's translation, although Segal himself understands the text to refer to the magical encircling of the house (see p. 28). Note the collocation with ṣwrt' "(magic) circle" (line 12) [see below], which Drower-Macuch, p. 391b, derive from ṢUR II, and the parallel ṣ'yrn' "I encircle" // htymn' "I seal" (lines 13–14). 11–12: 'rby' z'wy't' ... 'rby' qrn't' "four corners ... four horns" — read: 'rby' z'wy'tḥ ... 'rby' qrn'tḥ "its four (inner ?) corners ... its four (outer ?) corners". For q'rn' "(outer ?) corner," see Drower-Macuch, p. 403a, s.v. qarna, meaning c: "corner, projection". Cf. the Akkadian word-pair tubqu //šaḫātu "outer corner // inner corner" (see CAD, Š/1, p. 82b, meaning 1a:2'). 12: ṣ'yrn' ... bš'b' ṣb't' "I draw the shape ... with seven fingers" — read: ṣ'yrn' š'b' dmw't' ḏ-hyšwk' bš'b' ṣwr't' "I encircle seven images of darkness with seven (magic) circles". 14–15: bh'zyn pwgd'm' ... bh'zyn b'yt' "by this word ... in this house" — read: bh'zyn pwgd'm' ḏ-qr' hybyl m'ry' ʿl š'b' dmw't' (15) ḏ-h[yšwk' ḏ-]hwbḥ kḏ 'pk' wnpq' mn qwd'mḥ ṭ'bwt' wrw'h' ḏ-š'wy' hybyl tyhwybḥ bh'zyn b'yt' "by this word which the Lord Hibil invoked against the seven images (15) of da[rkness that] were in it (the house), as they (the demonic images) turned and were expelled from before him (or 'it' [the word] ?). May the goodness and ease that Hibil established be in this house". The bottom of the k in h[yšwk'] is visible in the photograph and indicates that there is space in the lacuna for an additional letter (i.e., ḏ) before hwbḥ. 16: w'l pgr' "and for the body" — translate: "and upon the body".

083M: As noted by Segal, much of this bowl parallels McCullough (1967), Bowl C. It also parallels DC 43B. 3–6: ʿsyr[...] ... bnḥ "Bound be ... her sons" — read: ʿsyry['] (b'by') ḏ- šywl br'z' ḏ- ʿsyry' gyrmy' myty' w'[syry]' h(')r[by'...] (ḏ-)byldb'by' mn pgrḥ ḏ-b'š[nyr'y pt] (š)h [...] (zwḥ w)bnḥ "Bound are the gates [of Sheol by the mystery of] Leviathan. Bound are the dead bones and [bound] are the sword[s and....] of the enemies from the body of Baš[niray daughter] of Šahafrid [...] her spouse and her sons". 6–7: pkyr ... h'zyn "fettered ... this..." — read: pkyr h['mš' (7) ml'ky' ḏ-'l]m' h'zyn "tied up are the f[ive (7) angels of] this [wo]rld". Cf. McCullough (1967), Bowl C:4–5. 7: wmn ʿl'yy' mn[...] "and above [...]" — read: wmn ʿl'wy' (my)['ʿsyr h]ylḥ [mn] (r)qʿ(h)' "and from above the wat[ers. Bound is] his [po]wer [from] the firmament". 8–9: gdp'nwyn ... b'šnyr'y "the winged (creatures) ... Bašniray" — read: gdp'(y)hyn ḏ-mrkb['] ḏ-[...] (9) ʿsyr' whtym' b'šnyr'y "the wings of the chariots of [...]. (9) Bound and sealed is Bašniray". There is not enough space in the lacuna for Segal's entire restoration, "fire in which they dwell," although it is based on the parallel passage in McCullough (1967), Bowl C:9 (nwr' ḏ-y'tbybhyn), nor do the traces fit nwr' "fire" alone. Read possibly hšw "darkness." 9: wyldḥ whlb' wbnḥ "and her child and Halba and his sons" — read: wyldḥ whlbḥ wbnḥ "and her infant and her milk and her sons". Segal understands hlb' (here read hlbḥ) to be the husband of Bašniray's (female) child (yldḥ [var. yld'tḥ]). Segal bases his interpretation primarily on several passages in 084M (especially lines 3–4 and 13) where the vocable is followed by zwḥ "her spouse," the latter analyzed by Segal as standing in apposition to hlb'. In the present text, however, no matronym or reference to a relation of hlbḥ with respect to any other person is given, which would be unusual were the vocable to refer to one of the clients. This suggests that hlbḥ is not the name of a person. Furthermore, yldḥ most likely refers to a young child, who would surely not be married. hlbḥ is therefore tentatively understood as "her milk." The bowl was apparently written not long after Bašniray had given birth, at a time when she was particularly concerned for the well-being of her infant, including a sufficient supply of mother's milk. Although "(mother's) milk" is not otherwise known by the present author to occur in such lists of people/objects for whom/which protection is requested in Aramaic incantations, demons are nevertheless sometimes said to harm a woman's milk. See, for example, MS 1928/53:15–16: 'zl' wš'ry' ʿl hdy'yhwn ḏ-ʿnšy' ... wn'sb' hlb'yhwn myn'yhwn wmṭnp'ly' wmṣy'lhyn "(the demon who) goes around and haunts the breasts of women ... and takes their milk from them and pollutes it and sucks them". 10–11: lṭwpr[...] blygr'ywn — read: lṭwpr(y' ḏ-)blygr (11) (wmn ṭw)[p](ry' ḏ-)blygr'ywn. See Segal's translation. 12: ḏ-sm lwn lʿdn'- read: ḏ-sm'lwn lʿwdn'. 13: "and her child and Halba" — translate: "and her infant and her milk". See above, line 9. 14–15: bšwmḥ ḏ-zhyr ... ḏ-hy' "In the name of zhyr ... of Lif[e]" — read: bšwmḥ ḏ-zhyr smyr<...>zyw' rb' q'dm'yy' bš'ršyr' wbz'rzʿyl ʿsyqt' wg' [yl] (15) ml'k' wnydmy' ʿkwr'y(kwn) lmy' (q'ryry') ḏ-(rmy' bp)yry['w]ys (y)'rdn' rb' ḏ-hy[y]' "By the name of Zhir Smir, the great primeval <...> Ziwa, by a chain, and by Zar[ziel the signet-ring, and Gab]riel (15) the angel. And may your temple resemble the cold water that is found in Piryawis, the great Jordan of Life". Cf. DC 43B, 15–18 (unpublished): bš'r šyr' ḏ-'rq' (16) bz'rzyʿyl ʿsyqt' wg'brʿyl m'l'k' bšwmyḥ zhyr wsmyr (17) ywsmyr zyw' rb' q'dm'y' br hyy' rby' ryš'yy' md'my' ʿl (18) kwb'k [read: ʿkwr'k] 'lm<y>' q'ryry' "By a chain of the earth, (16) by Zarziel the signet-ring, and Gabriel the angel, by his name, Zhir and Smir, (17) the great primeval Yusmir Ziwa son of the great first Life. (18) Your temple resembles the cold water."[3] In McCullough (1967), Bowl C:14–15, read similarly: bšwršyr' wbzrz'yl 'syqt' wg'r'yl ml'k' bšwm' d-zhyr smyr yws[m]yn zyw' rb' q(d)m'y(yḥ) br (15) hy^y^'...nydmy' ......ly' q[r]yry'. The parallels suggest that in 083M the name ywsmyr, or the like, has been omitted between smyr and zyw', presumably by haplography. The phrase wnydmy' 'kwr'y(kwn) ... "And may your temple resemble ..." in its entirety is paralleled by MIT, 16:9–11. Cf. also DC 29, 219–220 (// Drower, JRAS [1937], p. 593, lines 26–27): nyd'my' 'kwr'k lmy' q' (220)ryry'. A number of Jewish Aramaic incantation bowls exibit a literary dependence on part of the formula in 083M:14–15 and parallels. E.g., Isbell, 50:2: bš[w]ršyr' bzwzmry b'yzqtyh dywkbrzyw' br rby "by a chain, by zwzmry, by the signet-ring of Yukabar Ziwa son of Rabbi". In addition to bš[w]ršyr', which exactly parallels bšwršyr' in McCullough (1967), Bowl C:14, compare b'yzqtyh with 'syqt' and ywkbrzyw' br rby with ywsmyr zyw' ... br hyy' rby'. Cf. Ch. Müller-Kessler, "Puzzling words and spellings in Babylonian Aramaic magic bowls," BSOAS 62 (1999), pp. 111–112. A Syriac bowl has elements of both the Mandaic and Jewish Aramaic versions (MS 2055/13:8–9): bšyršyr' bzyw zymr' bzrzy'yl ('yz)qt' rbt' dḥtym' bh šmy' w'r' "by a chain, by zyw zymr', by Zarziel the great signet-ring by which are sealed the heavens and the earth." 16–17: Read: w'(s)wt' ... wn wz'kw[t'] wṭ'bwt wn'(ṭ)r' rb' d-šr'r' nyhwy[lḥ] (l)pgrḥ rwhḥ wnyšymtḥ (17) d-(b)'šnyr'y pt šhy wlz[wḥ] ('bd)[rhm'n] br mwy' wlbn'ywn zykry' wlbn'twn nwqb't' [wlby]t'ywn (dw)[r'ywn...] "and may there be hea[ling ... and gu]arding and victor[y] and good[ness] and a great and steadfast protective (charm) for the body, spirit and soul (17) of Ba[šniray daughter of Šaha]frid and for [her] spouse Abd[rahman] son of [M]išoya and for their male sons and for their female daughters and for their [hou]se, [their] dwe[lling...]". For the reading n'ṭr' (Segal: n'wr' "Mirror"), see Müller-Kessler (1996), p. 190. 18: [...] wym'n 'sy' "[...] the healer" — read: b'(swt)[ḥ] d-m'n 'sy' "by the healing of Man, the healer". 19 (beneath the line): ...(hw) "It is ...". This would appear to be a label.

084M: The epigraphic notes are followed by a provisional retranslation of the entire text. The text comprises two independent incantations, which are separated by a line. The first (lines 1–12) parallels 085M (cf. Segal, p. 114). The second (lines 13–20) parallels DC 37, 399–414. On the base of the bowl is a label (lines 21–22). For a commentary to the translation and a discussion of the parallel DC 37, 399–414, see my forthcoming study, "Another Look at the Mandaic Incantation Bowl BM 91715," JANES 29 (2002) 4: hlb' — read: hlbḥ. Cf. 083M:9 (above). 4–5: dyz'ṭ b[...]dy'z'ṭ (5) qbylyk — read: (')z'ṭ (š)[w](myk w'r)w'z'ṭ (5) qrylyk. 5: nqb't' — read: nwqb't'. 6: 'y'dkyry' — read: 'y'dkwry'. 6: lmlkwt' — read: wmlkwt'. The initial w would appear to have been corrected from an original l, the latter read by Segal. Cf. wmlkwt' in the parallel phrase in line 7 and wmlkw't' in 085M:6. 7: hw'yz'k mn b'ytḥ 'pqwyḥ hw'yz'k — read: wh'yz'k mn b'^y^tḥ 'pqwyḥ wh'yz'k. 7: m'g'ṭt — read: {m}<t>'g' <lg'>ṭt. The m is a mistake for t caused by the similarity between the two signs. <lg'> was omitted by haplography. 8: wk'lt hw'yz'k — read: 'k'lt wh'yz'k. 8: wt'nlyk — read: wt'nwlyk. 9: l(k)wnyk — read: ldwnyk. 10: whydymyt — read: whrymyt. 10: whdymy' — read: whrymy'. 12: lhlb' — read: lhlbḥ. 13: lb'šnr'y — read: lb'šnyr'y. 13: hlb' — read: hlbḥ. 14: wdyš'rmyly' — read: wryš' rmyly'. 14: dlyly't' — read: d-lyly't'. 15: ṭypy' — read: ṭwpy'. 15: ···read: ~~'kl'~~. 15: dygb'y — read: (l)ygr'y. 15–16: [...] — read: ['br'yy']. 17: sykyn' sykyn — read: bsykyn' skyn. 18–19: wkbyš (19) 'mhwt' — read: wkbyš' (19) myht'. 19: ldšk'b — read: l(')šk'b. 20: d-s'n'ly — read: d-s'ny'ly'. 21–22: 'syr (22) (h)tym — read: 'syr' (22) 'tw't'.

The following translation may be proposed:

(1) In the name of Life. May there be healing (2) and sealing and arming and protection and victory for the body, (3) spirit and soul of Bašniray daughter of Šahafrid and for her spouse and her infant, (4) her milk, her spouse and her sons and her daughters and her bed and her pillow. Your name is Azaṭ and you are called Arwazaṭ, (5) O youngest of (your) sisters and eldest of the female goddesses. You surely remember, (6) or I shall indeed remind you: when Šamiš took the crown and received the kingship, he reigned three hundred and sixty-(7)one years. Then they expelled him from his house. Then you, evil lilith, <too>k the crown and received the kingship (8) (and) reigned three hundred and sixty-one years. Then they expelled you from your house and they placed your cash box upon your head (9) and the cash box of your dowry upon your mlūg-property and made you take your mlūg-property in your hands and expelled you from the land of the Egyptians. And you said: I am (10) the lilith who has harmed the children of Adam. You are shackled and banned and rebuked and reproved. The mysteries which are in your mouth are shackled and banned. (11) Your arms are tied behind your back, your frame is bent to the earth and a great cord of iron is wrapped about you. You are bound by those mysteries that the fathers of your fathers (12) are bound within them. May there be healing and sealing and arming and protection for her milk, her spouse and her sons and her daughters and her bed and her pillow.

[3] Drower-Macuch, p. 161a, s.v. zarzi'il, incorrectly read z'rzy'yl 'syqt' d-g'bry'yl ml'k' "Zarziel, the signet-ring of Gabriel the angel." The reading bšwm z'rzy'yl 'syqt' d-g'bry'yl m'l'k' "In the name of Zarziel, the signet-ring of Gabriel the angel" does occur, however, in DC 43H, 28. Although DC 43H does not otherwise parallel DC 43B, the corrupt nature of the latter text suggests the possibility that DC 43H may preserve the original reading of the phrase. In such a case, the relevant lacunae in the incantation bowls paralleling DC 43B should be reconstructed accordingly. For š'r šyr' d-'rq', cf. R. Macuch, "Altmandäische Bleirollen (erster Teil)," in F. Altheim and R. Stiehl, Die Araber in der alten Welt, IV (Berlin 1967), p. 130, lines 17–18 and p. 187.

(13) May there be healing and sealing and arming for Bašniray daughter of Šahafrid and for her infant, her milk, her spouse, and her sons and her daughters. The signs that I, Bašniray, saw in my dream: it seemed I was strapped and doubly strapped, strapped (14) with straps of iron and chained with chains of lead, indeed thrown face down beneath a bed of iron, copper and lead, and I was filled with the water of sahras and (my) head was placed upon the skulls of liliths. On my (15) left were torrents of water; on my right a knife, a knife of death, violence (and) destruction; at my pillow a mace of radiance; at my feet a great axe of exorcisms; above my head an (16) [extraordinary] arrow. (17) The dēw which will come against me from the right shall be smitten by the great mace of radiance! The dēw which will come against me from the left shall be smitten by the knife, the knife of death, violence (and) destruction! The dēw that comes against me at my pillow will be smitten by the great axe of exorcisms! (18) The dēw that comes (against me) above (my) head will be smitten by the extraordinary arrow! Suppressed, suppressed is darkness before light, and suppressed is destruction before construction, and suppressed is error before truth and suppressed are (19) blow(s) before healing. And for Bašniray daughter of Šahafrid may there be healing and may she lie down for good and pleasant dreams — but for hateful dreams may my hater, the piṭyaruta-demon (20) that hates me, lie down. And Life is victorious!

[As label:] (21) "Bound are (22) the signs."

085M: For a retranslation of the entire text, see my forthcoming study, "Another Look at the Mandaic Incantation Bowl BM 91715." 1: thwylḥ — read: tyhwylḥ. 3: Read: š'h[p]ryd 'z'ṭ šwmyk w'r(w')z'ṭ qrylyk. 4: ḏ' ... w'hw't' — read: ḏ-'{[h]'w'}hw't'. 5: dkryt — read: ydkryt. This would appear to be a scribal error (cf. 084M:6: 'ydkryk). 7: hw'yz'k ... whw'yz'k — read: wh'yz'k ... wh'yz'k. 8: wṭ'lgwt' wml'kwt' — read: <t'>g' lg('t) wmlkwt'. 8: 'k'lḥ hw'yz'k — read: 'k'(l)[t] wh'yz'k. 9: 'pqw{w}k — read: 'pqwk. 9: lyknyk — read: lydnyk. 10: bg[...]ly' — read: bg'lw'(yy') "among the exiles". 10: 'rq — read: '^r^q'. 11ff: Read:

(11) w'm'r't 'n' h('y)' lylyt' wshr' wdyw' ḏ-h(tyt) [bwn (?)] bbny' ('n'(š)[']) wbbny' ḏ-bšny'r'y sdymyt (12) (wh)rymyt w'kysyt wmksyt wmšm'tyt wm[b'ṭlyt] wmzyhyt m(n) by(t)ḥ w(pg)r[ḥ] ḏ-'bd'r'(m)'n br (13) [m]šwyy' wmn b(šn)[yr'y] zwḥ (sd)[ymyt] whrymyt (sdym)y' wh[y'] (r'z)[y'] ḏ-pwmyk tyby[r'] wpkyr[']) ('dyk l'hwr)[y'] gwbyk (14) ... (mynḥ ḏ-)'bd'(r)['hm'n] g[br' w]byšn'r'y '(t') zwḥ wmn (bn)['yhwn] (zy)kry' [w(mn) bn'twn nwqb't'] ... ... (š)t' ḏ-przl' gbyb' q'm't(yk) ... byšnyr'y wm[']kr'k 'l(h') (15) hbl' r[' ḏ-]prz(l' 'syryt) ... (16) ... qdm'yy' 'syr' whty(m') hwmr't(') (w)m[n'klt'] ... [Exterior:] (17) ... (18) ... lylyt' mn (h'zyn) ... (b'yt) ... (19) ... (20)...

(11) And you said: I am the lilith and the sahra and the dēw who has harmed humans and the children of Bašniray. You are shackled (12) and banned and rebuked and reproved and anathematized and [annull]ed and expelled from the house and body of Abdara<h>man son of (13) Mišoya and from Bašn[iray], his spouse. You are sha[ckled] and banned. The mysteries of your mouth are shackled and banned. Your hands are bro[ken] and tied behind your back. (14) ...from Abdar[ahman, the ma]n, and Bašniray, the woman, his spouse, and from [their] male sons [and (from) their female daughters] ...of iron. Your frame is bent down ...Bašniray and (15) a great cord [of] iron is wrapped about it. You are bound ... (16) ...the primeval.... Bound and sealed are the humartas and the g[uileful spirit] ... (17) ... (18) ...lilith from this ...house ... (19) ... (20)....

086M: Cf. McCullough (1967), Bowl C, lines 1–8 and 16bff. 1: lpgrḥ — read: lp'g(r)[ḥ]. 3: h'zn — read: h'zy(n). 4–5: [...] (5) ... (h'ylḥ. m.) "[...] (5) ...the power of [...]," — read: ['s]yr h'r (5) sh(r') [twty]' my' (t)' 'syr h'ylḥ mn r(q'y') "[bou]nd is [Har]maz (?) (5) the sahra [beneath] the lower waters, bound is his power from the firmament,". Cf. line 14. The reading h'rm'z, both here and in line 14 (see below), is not certain. 7: ... byšy' 'syry' "[...] evil [...], bound be" — read: ... (hylmy') byšy' 'syry' "...evil dreams, bound are". 8: nwkry' ḏ-rwgz' "the strangers of wrath" — read: kwkby' ḏ-rwgz' "stars of wrath". 8–9: brh'q ...h'm't z'wh't "afar ...She grew hot, she was frightened" — read: brh'q h'y[l'] wr'z['] (ḏ-h')[z]'t rwh' 'm['ykw]n h'q't z'h't "by Rhaq, the power and the mystery which Ruha, [your] mother, saw (and) she feared, she was frightened". Cf. line 15 (below). 11: z'nr'('rwn) "Zanara[iron]" — read: z'nq'rdwn "Zan-qardun". 11: nyšymt'y — read: nyšymtḥ. 12: 'sys' wm'rq' "juice and broth" — translate: "pressed down and driven away". Cf. Drower-Macuch, p. 28a, s.v. ASA III / ASS "to press, press down, tread down" and ibid., p. 38b, s.v. ARQ I (Pa'el) "to drive away." 12: b'šnyr'y[...] "Bašniray [...]" — read: b'šnyr'y (whyy' z'kyn twm) "Bašniray. And Life is victorious! Furthermore". Here begins a repetition of most of lines 4–11a. 14: 'syr ... mn 'qry' — read: 'syr (h'rm'z shr)['] 'twty' my' t't'yy' 'syr h'[y]lḥ mn rq'y'. 15: h'ylḥ ... (y'zd'ndwk) — read: h'yl' wr'z' ḏ-hz't ...'m'ykwn h('q)['](t z)[h't] w'tzyh['t] ('syr' s)[dym'] (y'zd'ndwk). 16: 'm'šmyš — read: 'm'š'myš. 16–17: [...] w'syr ...(wm)rdwk – read: (bwzn'y) w'syr(') z['n'y 'm't'](str' pt ṣ)[yp'r kyl'yt'] 's[yr] (š'hr'z) (17) lgyṭ 'syr z'nq(')rdwn. See lines 10–11 (above). Note to line 9: The names of the demons Šipay and Šapapit most likely derive from the root ŠWP/ŠPP "to crawl." See Ford (1998), pp. 234–235, n. 122. References to a similarly named demon, Špwpty, occur in a number of unpublished Jewish Aramaic incantation bowls in the Schøyen collection (see provisionally Ford, ibid., p. 265).

087M: Most of the remaining lacunae can be read or reconstructed with the help of the duplicates 086M and McCullough (1967), Bowl C (noted by Segal). The following comments are limited primarily to what the present author perceives to be incorrect readings. 3: [...] tyḥ [...] lḥ [...] — read: ...ʿs hʾylḥ mn rqʿ(yʾ) w(ʿs)[yr] (dw)[rḥ...]. 4–6: byš[...] ...lylytʾ — read: byš[yʾ ʿsyryʾ] rʾzyʾ ḏ-hšwkʾ bbh(ʾ)q (5) wbhʾq hʾylʾ wrʾzʾ ḏ-hzʾt rwhʾ ʿmʾykwn h(ʾ)qʾt zʾhʾt{t} wʿtzyhʾt ʿsyr[ʾ wsdym]ʾ yʾzdʾndwk lylytʾ {ʿ*s*} {ʿ*syrʾ wsdymʾ yʾzdʾn*(d)wk (6) lylytʾ}. The final phrase would appear to be a dittograph. 7: zʾn[...] — read: zʾn(q)ʾ*r*(d)[w]n. 7: zʾrʾnʾh[...] — read: zʾrʾnʾh[wg] twm.

088M: For a discussion and partial transcription of this bowl, see now Müller-Kessler (1999). A re-edition will be published in Ch. Müller-Kessler, Incantations for the House of Pir Nukraya. Lead Rolls from the British Museum I (Styx: Leiden, in press) [courtesy the author]. 6: ʾkʾt: This is the toponym Akkad. See Müller-Kessler (1999), p. 208. 7: ḏ-šbyqʾlhʾ "that are left to her" — translate: "that she has left". 9: ḏ-hwtbyz bʾyšwmʾ "that is called Hutbiz" — read: ḏ-hw byzbʾy šwmḥ "whose name is Bizbay". 9: zʾmbwr ... byt tyldʾnʾ "the bee ... the house of procreation" — translate: "Zambur ... Bīt Tildana". These are toponyms. See Müller-Kessler (1999), p. 208. Note to line 6: Here bwznʾy is apparently a male demon. See Müller-Kessler (1996), p. 191, n. to line 5.

089M: A re-edition of this bowl will be published in Ch. Müller-Kessler, Incantations for the House of Pir Nukraya. Lead Rolls from the British Museum I (in press) [courtesy the author]. 14: pšʾr "dissolve" — translate: "be exorcised!" In his note to the line, Segal similarly considers the possibility of "be disenchanted, revoked." Cf. pyšrʾ "loosing or breaking a spell, exorcism" (Drower-Macuch, p. 372b). The Akkadian cognate pašāru (G and D) "to release, free" similarly occurs in incantations with the meaning "to undo, release (spell, curse, oath, magic)" (for references, see AHw., pp. 842b and 843a). 12–14: ḏ-ryšʾywn nyšqlwn ... ndʾlwn ... lbyš lskyʾ lmhyʾ wlštqyp wlʿbṭʾl (14) hylḥ wlʿpyl lʿhwryʾ "who shall lift (his) head ...shall raise ...they shall not gaze with evil (intent), they shall not smite and shall not beat themselves; and they shall not annul (14) (their) power, and shall not cause (them) to fall back backwards" — translate: "(any of various demons) who shall (pl.) lift their head(s) and the features (13) of their face(s) shall (pl.) raise, and shall (sing.) gaze with evil intent at these souls of Šrula, the man, and of Qaqay, the woman, and of their sons — it (the demon) shall be smitten and beaten and its power shall be annulled (14) and it shall fall backwards". The scribe passed from plural (nyšqlwn / ndʾlwn) to singular (lskyʾ) in the middle of the sentence. The l in lskyʾ and the following verbs is the 3 m. s. prefix, not the particle of negation as proposed by Segal (cf. Nöldeke, Mandäische Grammatik, §166). lmhyʾ "it shall be smitten" is an (assimilated) Ethpeʿel form (cf. lštqyp "it shall be beaten"). 16: [...]wn zykryʾ wbnʾtwn nwqbʾtʾ "their male [sons] and their female daughters" — read: (ʿ)[ttʾ] (wlb)[nʾy]wn zykryʾ wlbnʾtwn nwqbʾtʾ "the w[oman], and for their male sons and for their female daughters". 17: kbyš bytʾ hw "It is pressed down (in) the house." — translate: "It (the name of the incantation) is 'Suppressed is the house'."

090M: 6: nqbʾtʾ- read: nwqbʾtʾ. Cf. the form of nw in wmyskynwtʾ (line 15). 9: ʿyn "so be it" — translate: "if." ʿyn is a variant form of the conditional particle hyn (cf. Mandaic ʿl "if not" < ʾīn lā* and Aramaic ʾyn "if"). Note that Segal subsequently supplies "if" in his translation in parentheses. In MIT, 20:9, which parallels the present bowl, {ḏn} should similarly be read ʿyn "if." For additional examples in different contexts, see MS 2054/93:9 and Ch. Müller-Kessler, "Dämon + YTB ʿL — Ein Krankheitsdämon: Eine Studie zu aramäischen Beschwörungen medizinischen Inhalts," in B. Bock, et al. (eds), Munuscula Mesopotamica: Festschift für Johannes Renger (AOAT 267: Münster 1999), pp. 345ff and n. 23. 12–13: bšwmʾk kybšwn (13) wdwšwn "In your name! Suppress (13) and trample" — translate: "In your name, O Kibšun (13) and (also) Dušun". Although clearly derived from the verbs KBŠ "to suppress" and DWŠ "to trample," kybšwn and dwšwn are here most likely names of angels. 13: nqbtʾ — read: nwqbtʾ. 13: nqbʾtʾ — read: nwqbʾtʾ. 14: (wgzyrʾ) "and cut" — read: wz(g)[yrʾ] "and restrained". The letter followng the w is definitely z. The same reading occurs in the duplicate bowls 091M:43 and MIT, 20:17. Segal treats zgyr as a metathesized variant of gzyr "cut," which occurs in line 11 of the present bowl and in the parallel bowls (see p. 121, note to line 42). Yamauchi, MIT, p. 229, also translates zgyrʾ as "cut" in Bowl 20:17 (in his edition of the present bowl, Yamauchi, ibid., p. 274, restores wgzyrʾ, following C. H. Gordon, "Aramaic and Mandaic Magical Bowls," Archiv Orientální 9 [1937], p. 101), although in his Glossary (p. 326) he lists the same word under ZGR "to seize," following M. Lidzbarski, Ephemeris für semitische Epigraphik, I: 1900–1902 (Giessen 1902), p. 101 ("gepackt"). It should be noted, however, that in this and the parallel texts the two vocables consistently occur in different contexts; gzyr "cut" occurs following pryṭ "broken apart, separated, cleft open," whereas zgyr occurs in collocation with ʿsyr "bound," htym "sealed" and blym "muzzled, gagged." The meaning "to restrain, hold back, confine" ascribed to ZGR by Drower-Macuch, p. 162a, is thus appropriate for zgyr in the present context. 14: ʾynʾ hʾsmlyʾ ḏ-hwsrʾnʾ wkʿwyhtʾ "the envious and dim eye of want" — translate: "the envious and glaring eye of want". kʿwyhtʾ refers literally to an eye suffering from ectropion. See my article "Two Syriac Terms Relating to Ophthalmology and Their Cognates," Journal of Semitic Studies 47 (2002): 23–35. 14: *rgym*ʾ "stoned" — translate: "immobilized". See Drower-Macuch, pp. 424b-425a, s.v. RGM "in magic documents: to paralyse, immobilize," and note the parallel terms *blym*ʾ "muzzled" and *mskry*ʾ "closed" in the present text. 16: *wsynt*ʾ — read: *wsynty*ʾ. The same reading occurs in MIT, 20:21.

091M: 10: mn — read: wmn. 20: ʿ*yn* "so be it" — translate: "if". See above, 090M:9. 27: ldylwy — read: ldylḫ. 32–34: Read: *wmn zw*ʾ*(y) wbn*ʾ*y wbn*(ʾ*t*)ʾ*y wmn* (33) *byt*ʾ*y wmn kwl ḏ-*ʿ*k*ʾ (b)by(34)*t*ʾ*y bšwm*ʾ*k kybšwn*. 41: *nqb*ʾ*t*ʾ — read: *nwqb*ʾ*t*ʾ. 48: *lyš*ʾ*ny*ʾ — read: (b)[*yšy*ʾ w]*lyš*ʾ*ny*ʾ. 51–55: Read: (*byšy*ʾ wsynty.) wšyqwp (52) (*wlwtt*ʾ) *wmysknwt*ʾ (wṭyr)(53)[*wpt*ʾ] (wdyzw)ʾ*r*ʾ mn byt[ḫ] (54) ḏ-dwn(hqdw<k>t) br ʾ*b*ʾ(55)n(dwk) wmn zwḫ bnḫ. 58–59: ʾ*myn* — read: (w)ʾ*myn*.

093M: 1: bšwmḫ ḏ-(*mr*ʾ*yn t*ʾ*nh*ʾ*t*ʾ) "In the name of [our Lord, sighing]" — read: *bšwmḫ ḏ-m*ʾ*r*ʾ*yn* (ḏ-)ʾ(s)*w*ʾ*t*ʾ "In the name of the Lord of Healings". 15: ʿ*yn* "so be it" — translate: "if". See above, 090M:9. 17: . . . *ḏ-lwṭt*ʾ- read: tyd(*b*ʾ*q*)[bḫ]lwṭt(ʾ). 23: . . . *ḏ-lyṭ*ʾ*y* — read: . . . *wlb*ʾ*yṭḫ ḏ-lyṭ*ʾ*y*. 31: nqb[. . .] — read: *nwqb*ʾ[*t*ʾ]. 37–38: ʾ*yn*ʾ *ḏ-hwsr*ʾ*n*ʾ (38) *wkywyht*ʾ "the envious and dim eye (38) of want" — translate: "the glaring eye of want". "Envious" has no correspondant in the Mandaic text and was apparently inadvertantly carried over by the editor from the translations of the parallel texts. For *kywyht*ʾ, "glaring," see 090M:14 (above). 51: An additional line should be added. Read: hw. This is the copula. Lines 48–51 should be translated "These are the pictures for (the incantation) 'Bound and sealed is the mouth and seized is the tongue!' " (cf. 103M:32–34).

094M: A parallel text from the Iraq Museum (IM 60494) has recently been published by E. C. D. Hunter, "Who are the Demons? The Iconography of Incantation Bowls," Studi epigrafici e linguistici sul Vicino Oriente antico 15 (1998), pp. 95–115. 3: *gbʾry*ʾ "the men" — translate: "strong men". Cf. M. Sokoloff, "Notes on Some Mandaic Magical Texts," Orientalia N.S. 40 (1971), p. 456. Some of the parallel bowls, however, do read *gwbry*ʾ "men" (e.g., IM 60494:4). 6: ʿ*lyʾyn* — read: ʿ*lwʾyn*. 8: shyṭynyn "who squeeze them" — translate: "(who) seized them". For the verb SHṬ, "to seize," see Drower-Macuch, p. 319b (with Hunter, Studi epigrafici e linguistici 15, p. 105). The following verbs, rhyṭ (line 8), lgṭynyn (line 8), mṣrynyn (line 9), and *w*ʾ*mwrlyn* (line 10) are also perfect forms and should likewise be translated in the past tense. 10: *w*ʾ*mwrlyn* "and say to them" — translate: "and said to them". Segal's reading ʾ*mwr* would appear to represent a 3 m. pl. perfect form qtwl, well attested in Jewish Babylonian Aramaic, but the w is most likely part of a poorly formed m (i.e., *w*ʾ*mrlyn*). 10: brwk ḏ-lṭty[. . .] "Blessed is he whom you have cursed" — read: brwk ḏ-lṭty[n] "Bless him whom you have cursed!". Cf. line 43. 11: *w*ʾ*mrlḫ* "and they say to him" — translate: "and they said to him". ʾ*mr* is apparently a f. pl. active participle (in plene writing ʾ*mr*ʾ [see, for example, 103M:19]). For the use of the active participle as a historical present continuing a perfect form in narrative, see Nöldeke, Mandäische Grammatik, p. 375. The "impious women" (line 4) who cursed would now appear to offer an excuse for their actions in an attempt to mitigate their punishment after having been caught. They apparently address a single angel, which suggests that the subject of the preceding verbs rhyṭ. . . *w*ʾ*mwrlyn* may actually be only one of the angels listed in lines 6–8, presumably Sahṭiel (the verbs themselves are morphologically ambiguous). Another possibility is a f. pl. imperative continuing the preceding brwk, i.e., "and say to him". The variant ʾ*mr*ʾ*lḫ* would then preserve the suffix -ā attested in the 3 f. pl. imperfect (Nöldeke, Mandäische Grammatik, p. 228, does not give any examples of 2 f. pl. imperfect forms, which would presumably have originally had the same suffix). The 3 m. s. pronoun would accordingly refer to ḏ-lṭty[n] "whom you cursed," i.e., the client, to whom the "impious women" are commanded to explain their evil actions. 13: *w*ʾ*mrylhyn* "And I say to them" — read: *w*ʾ*mrnlhyn* "And I said to them". For this use of the active participle, cf. above, line 11. 15: wyqrwn — read: wyʾqrwn. 16: *w*ʿ*wrp*ʿ*yl* — read: *w*ʿ*wrp*ʾ*yl*. 21: *ḏ-l*ʾ*ṭtyn wmn* — read: ḏ-lṭtyn mn. 22: lṭtyn — read: *l*ʾ*ṭtyn*. 23–24: *lwṭt*ʾ ḏ- (24) *rbtʾ wšwlyt*ʾ "the curse of (24) the grandmother and the foetus" — translate: "the curse of (24) the mistress and the maid servant". See Drower-Macuch, p. 454b, s.v. šulita 2; M. Sokoloff, Orientalia N.S. 40 (1971), p. 458; J. C. Greenfield, "The Babylonian Forerunner of a Mandaic Formula," in A. F. Rainey (ed.), kinattūtu ša dārâti: Raphael Kutscher Memorial Volume (TEL AVIV: Journal of the Institute of Archaeology of Tel Aviv University, Occasional Publications, 1: Tel Aviv 1993), p. 12; and Hunter, Studi epigrafici e linguistici 15, p. 107. 31: *llwṭ*ʾ*t*ʾ "of the curses" — read: *wllwṭ*ʾ*t*ʾ "and the curses". 33: *ḏ-l*ʾ*ṭy*ʾ "which they cursed" — read: *ḏ-l*ʾ*ṭwḫ* "whom they cursed". 38: wnyshyṭyn — read: wnyshyṭyn(yn). 38: *ḏ-l*ʾ*ṭy*ʾ — read: *ḏ-l*ʾ*ṭwḫ*. The pronominal 3 f. s. object suffix refers to Mahduk (cf. line 33, above, and *ḏ-l*ʾ*ṭwy*ʾ in 095M:43, where the pronominal object suffix refers to the male client). 44 45: šrwn . . . *llwṭt*ʾ "Šrun . . . the curses" — read: šrwn (45) *wšrwlḫ wšyrwy*ʾ *w*ʾ*b*(*dwy*ʾ) *llwṭt*ʾ "release (me?), (45) and release her, and release and destroy the curse". As indicated by the parallel texts in which the words šrwn and šrwlḫ do not occur (e.g., 096M:42), ʾ*twn ml*ʾ*ky*ʾ "You, O angels," refers to the preceding Šariel and Barkiel. The element *-wy*ʾ in *šyrwy*ʾ and ʾ*bdwy*ʾ contains a formally 3 m. s. cataphoric pronominal object suffix referring to the feminine singular *lwṭt*ʾ "curse" (for the use of this form of the 3 m. s. pronominal object suffix to refer to feminine nouns, see Nöldeke, Mandäische Grammatik, p. 279; contrast *ḏ-l*ʾ*ṭwḫ* [above, lines 33 and 38], which uses the original feminine form). 50: qʾl qʾlʾy "Hark! My voice" — read: qʾl qʾlʾ hw "It (the name of the incantation) is 'Hark! A voice'."

095M: 2: For myhrwdyt, read possibly m(')hd(wk)t. For this well attested name, see 093M, note to line 2 (p. 123). 3: nqb't' — read: nwqb't'. 3: qny'nḥ — read: qyny'nḥ. 10: ḏ-ryš('yw)n — read: ḏ-ryš'(yh-w)n. 19: Read: tyš(ršylḥ). 23: ḏ-l'ṭynyn — read: ḏ-l'ṭ(ṭ)yn. 25: Read: ḏ-l('ṭ)tyn wmn lwṭt' {wmn lwṭt'} ḏ-'gyr'. 32: ḏ-m'sy' — read: {['s]y'} ḏ-m'sy'. 40: šylwy' [...] — read: šylwy' ('n'š'). Cf. 094M:39.

096M: 12: gzrn — read: gzrn[yn]. 14–15: b(15)yzrwn "by (15) Yazrun" — read: b('zr)['y] (15) wyzrwn "by Azr[ay] (15) and Yazrun". 25: ḏ-lpl(g') — read: ḏ-lpl('g).

097M: 1: 'k[...]t'- read: 'sw't' "healings". The traces are not clear, but one would expect a phrase similar to bšwmḥ ḏ-m'r'yn ḏ-'sw't' "In the name of the Lord of Healings" (093M:1 [see above]). 5: ('ly')wn — read: 'l(w')ywn. 6: [...] tb'r — read: [...](ṭynyn b'd..y' ḏ-ryš'yn w)tb'r. 7: ...lṭnyn — read: (br)[wk] ḏ-l'ṭtyn [wm]r'lḥ (ḏ-mn kyb') ḏ-[lyb]'n lṭnyn. 8: w'mrnly[...] ḏ-'šbtkyn — read: w'mrnlyn 'šbyt['l'y]kyn. 8: ...wyzd... — read: b('zd)'y wyzr[wn]... 9: wtyšbwq' l... — read: wtyšb(wql)ḥ l(yw)h'n'n [br 'kw']rwy(')... 9: ḏ-lṭnyn wmn — read: ḏ-lṭnyn mn lwṭt' (ḏ-) 'b' wd'm' ḏ-lṭtyn wmn. 10: wšwlyt' ... wmn — read: wšwlyt' (wmn lwṭt' ḏ-'g...wd)... mynḥ wmn. 11: bykwšt' — read: bkwšt'. 11: lwṭt' kwlm'n... — read: lwṭt' ḏ-kwlm'n ḏ-l'ṭ[...]. 11: ...myhy't' — read: ...(m'sy') myhy't'. 12: ḏ-l'ṭwy lywhn'n — read: ḏ-l'ṭwy' lywh'n'n. 13: bšwm brk'yl — read: wbšwm brk'yl. 13: š'ry'[...] — read: š'rywy' (cf. above, 094M:44–45). 14: lywh'nn — read: lywh'n'n. 14: 'myn — read: w'myn. 15: lbry "For my son" — read: lbr'y "For outside (the house)".

098M: 1: 'lsyr' bwgd'n' "The [binding] of Bugdana" — read: 'lsyr 'bwgd'n' "Elsir Abugdana". Cf. Müller-Kessler (1996), p. 193, n. 16. There appears to be a slight discontinuity in the writing between the r and the ' and, moreover, 'bwgd'n' is the usual Mandaic spelling of the name of this demon (for an exceptional writing bwgd'n', see Drower-Macuch, p. 54b). The demon himself would appear to be the speaker. For the divine name Elsir/Elisur, see S. Shaked, "The Poetics of Spells. Language and Structure in Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity, 1: The Divorce Formula and its Ramifications" in Tz. Abusch and K. van der Toorn (eds) Mesopotamian Magic: Textual, Historical, and Interpretative Perspectives (Ancient Magic and Divination, 1: Groningen 1999), p. 185, n. 45, and cf. MS 2053/200:1–2 (reading by S. Shaked): 'wmyt[y w'š]b'yt 'lk ('nth) 'ylyswr b(gdnh) [mlk'] ddywy "I adjure and make you swear, you, Elisur Bagdana, [king] of the dēws...". 099M:3 (see the corrected reading below), however, does indeed seem to be based on an interpretation of the term as referring to the binding of the demon. 3: wš'l'ṭ' — read: wšl'ṭ' (Müller-Kessler [1996], p. 193, n. 16). 6: l{b}k. What Segal reads as an extraneous b is more likely ' written over an original y. 6: l'k" — read: lyk{X}. 7: mš'lṭ — read: mš'lṭ'. 8–9: (dy)d'h"ywty (9) (t'rh'qy)' w(my' d'k'y') "[...] pure water" — read: ty(r)'hšy (9) wtyt'rh'qy' wt(k)'r'k'y' "move (?) (9) and distance yourself and turn back". 9: g't'k — read: g'ṭ'k. 9: g'b'l' — read: (q)'b'l'. 11: nq'bt' — read: nwq'bt'. 12: bšwm' tm'hṣ 'bd hygwt "In the name of Tamahaṣ, slave of Higut" — translate: "In the name TM'HṢ 'BD HYGWT". tm'hṣ 'bd hygwt should be interpreted as part of a magical name, together with the following 'yd 'wd ṭtwz. Cf. the Aramaic version (O13A:8): bšwm hyg(y)h wd(yh) wṭṭm "In the name of HYGYH and DYH and ṬṬM". Cf. also 099M:13 (below) and the parallels listed by Segal (p. 157). 12–13: b'z'qtwn (13) dglyp' 'l'h' "by the signet ring (13) of Glifa the god" — read: b'z'qt (13) ṣwr glyp' 'l'h' "by the signet-ring (13) of Ṣur Glipa the god". 13: lbšwm' ḏ-prwš' "for the ineffable Name": This is surely a scribal error for wbšwm' ḏ-prwš'* "and by the ineffable Name" due to the similarity between l and w.

099M: 2: wlzwyḥ — read: wlz'w(ḥ). 3: 'syry' {bgd'n' 'syry'} bwgd'n' — read: 'syr 'b(wg)d'n' 'syr 'bwgd'n'. Cf. Müller-Kessler (1996), p. 193, n. 16. Segal (note to line 3) claims that 'syry' is for singular 'syr', but the latter is a feminine form, which would not accord with the masculine subject. 5: wmwmyn'lyk — read: wmwmy{y}n'lyk. 8: wnp'q {mn} kwlhyn qyry't' "May all mishaps go forth" — read: wnp'q hw wkwlhyn qyry'tḥ "and he was expelled, he and all his imprecations". The phrase does not accord well with the preceding phrases, but they are also problematic. 10: bzyr' "sowing" — translate: "semen". Segal follows Drower-Macuch, p. 167b, s.v. zira, in translating bzyr' as "sowing" (<"seed"), but bzyr' would appear to be synonymous with zyr' "seed (semen)" in the example that he cites in his note to line 10 (for Jb 202, read DC 43J, 202): mn zyrḥ ḏ-lyly' wmn bzyrḥ ḏ-'wm'm' "from his zyr' by night and from his bzyr' by day". Cf. the frequent pair ḥylm' dlyly' "dream by night" // ḥyzwn' dymm' "vision by day" (e.g., 068A:3–4), where ḥylm' "dream" and ḥyzwn' "vision" are essentially synonymous. 10–12: h'z'y ḏ-kt'blyk ... bb'bḥ "See, they have written for you ... at his door" — read: h'z'y ḏ-kt'blyk (11) gyṭ' km' ḏ-h'zyn g[yṭ'] kytbyt wyhbylḥ ly(w)h'(n)'n wlkwl m'n ḏ-h'zyn pwgd'm' myktyblḥ (12) wmyqb'rlḥ bb'bḥ "See, they (anonymous divine forces) wrote you (11) a bill of divorce, as I have written this bil[l of divorce] and have given it to Yuhanan and to everyone for whom this writ (lit. word) is written (12) and buried at his door". myktyb and myqb'r are understood as (assimilated) Ethpe'el participles. The bowl was evidently intended for burial under the threshold. 13: bšwmḥ ḏ-m'thymṣ h'mṣ "In the name of him that crushes, crush" — read: bšwmḥ ḏ-m't whymṣ h'mṣ "In the name of M'T and HYMṢ H'MṢ (the crusher of?)". Although at one time possibly translatable, at least m't and hymṣ would seem to now be magical names. Cf. 098M:12 (above) and the parallels listed by Segal (p. 157). 14: kryktyn — read:

krykytyn. The preceding word, ṣmyrtyn, should likely be similarly read ṣmyr^y^t(y)n.

100M: Read:
(1) 'swt' thwy(lḥ l)dwr'...(2) ...(3) ...(4) ...bšwm'k (rb') ...(5) ['bwg]-(d')n' mlk' (ḏ-kwl)[hw]n dywy' [wšly]ṭ' (r)b' ḏ-kwlhyn (l'ly')t' (ḏ-hw) [šlyṭ 'l] (kwl)[hw]n (6) [dywy]' zykry' [wnwq]b't'...('l rwhy') byš't['] ...ḏ-y ['l ṭwr'] (7) gzyr' [w](d'yn dyn' mn dywy') zykry' wmš'wy' bz'r' (read: gz'r') mn lyly't' nwqb't' ('n' lkwlkyn q'r)yn' (8) wm'šb'n' w'mrn' hlb's lylyt' 'tkl't lylyt' mš[y]št' lyly[t' DN] lyly[t'] (pyṭy'r' ly-lyt') wpyṭy'rwt' (9) lylyt' p'gdt' lylyt' n'l' lylyt' wn'wl' lylyt' lyly(') [...] lyly'[...] (lylyt' šq)wpt' lylyt' ^lylyt'^ (10) ḏ-l'ly' wl'ly' ḏ-'wm'm' mhy'tyn bṭp'sy[...] (')l kwlh(w)n ...(11) wshry' wšydy' wrwhy' wh-wmry' wlyl[y't'] ...(12) ...[Exterior] (13) ...ḏ-'wm... (14) ...[mn 'rsḥ] wbys'[dḥ] ...(15)...[š]qwpt['] ...(16) ...(17) lyly'[t'] ...(18) ...[br'z'] ('l'yy') wbr[']z' (myṣ')yy' wbr'z' t' ...(19) ...[pryt'] (ḏ-)[my](nḥ pr')[t] ...pr ḏ-[my]nḥ pr('t) ...(20) ...tlt(m') wšyty[n] ...
(1) May there be healing for the dwelling ...(2) ...(3) ...(4) ...in your great name ...(5) [Abug]dana, the king of all the dēws [and] the great [rul]er of all the liliths, who [rules over] all (6) [dēws], male and [fem]ale, [and is appointed] over evil spirits, [the ...who s]its [upon] (7) a split [mountain, and] judges male dēws and condemns female liliths. To all of you I call (8) and I make you swear and I say: Halbas the lilith, Itklat the lilith, Mšišta the lili[th, DN] the lili[th], Piṭyara the lilith and Piṭyaruta (9) the lilith, Pigdta the lilith, Nala the lilith and Niula the lilith, the lili[...] the lili[...] the lilith, Šiqupta the lilith, the lilith (10) of the night and the lili of the day, you are smitten in the membranes [of your hearts, with the spear of the angel Qatrius, who rules] over all [the ...-spirits] (11) and the sahras and the demons and the spirits and the humartas and the liliths ...(12) ...[Exterior] (13) ...of the da[y] ...(14) ...[from his bed and his pi]llow ...(15)...[Š]iqupta ...(16) ...(17) liliths ...(18) ...[By the] upper [mystery] and by the midd[le] mystery and by the low[er mystery]...(19)...(20) ...three hundred and sixty ...

5: 'bwgn' mlk': Cf. Segal, note to line 5. 5: (ḏ-hw) [šlyṭ 'l] "who [rules over]": The parallel bowl MS 2054/86:5 reads: ḏ-hw mš'l'ṭ 'l, but there does not seem to be enough space in the lacuna for mš'l'ṭ or mšl'ṭ. Cf. dhw' šlyṭ 'l in a related context in the parallel Jewish Aramaic bowl 013A:6 (and parallels [see Segal, p. 156, Refrain B, Ib]). 6: [dywy]' zykry' [wnwq]b't' "dēws, male [and fem]ale" is probably an error for dywy' zykry' wlyly't' nwqb't' "male dēws and female liliths". 9: n'l': According to S. Shaked, "Bagdāna, King of the Demons, and Other Iranian Terms in Babylonian Aramaic Magic," Acta Iranica 25, Deuxième Série: Hommages et Opera Minora, Vol. 11: Papers in Honor of Professor Mary Boyce (Leiden 1985), p. 512, this demon is to be identified with Persian nāl "complaint, lamentation." 9: wn'wl': See Drower-Macuch, pp. 297b-298a, s.v. niula 2. Note especially the frequent occurrence of the pair n'ly' wnywly' (see Drower-Macuch, p. 283, s.v. nala), paralleling the present text. 10: mhy'tyn... "you are smitten...": The translation follows MS 2054/86:10–11: mhytwn bṭrpws l'bb'(yk)wn wbmwrnyt' ḏ-qtryws ml'k['] ḏ-hw mšl'ṭ 'l shry'... See also Segal's Refrain B, Ib (p. 156). 19: pryt' ḏ-mynḥ pr't: The same phrase also occurs twice in MS 2054/86, but the context is unclear there as well.

101M: For a discussion and partial transcription of this bowl, see now Müller-Kessler (1999). A re-edition will be published in Ch. Müller-Kessler, Incantations for the House of Pir Nukraya. Lead Rolls from the British Museum I (in press) [courtesy the author]. 1–2: See Müller-Kessler (1999), pp. 206–207. 2–3: (h'w)kwlhwn shr' ...ḏ-myšt'mylḥ "that is, all sorcery spirits ...that hearken" — read: h(w) wkwlhwn shrḥ wdywyḥ (3) whwmrḥ wlyly'tḥ ḏ-myšt'mylḥ "he and all his sahras and dēws and (3) humartas and liliths that hearken to him". h(w) refers to the male demon 'Ulmaya in line 1. 7–8: ḏ-bshry' (zyḳ'r') ...ḏ-hyy' "of (those who are guided) by male (?) sorcery spirits ...dHiia" — read: ḏ-bhyry' (z)ydq' bhylḥ ḏ-mnd' ḏ-hyy' "of the elect of righteousness by the power of Manda ḏ-Hiia". See Müller-Kessler (1999), p. 204, and cf. line 26. 8: 'swt'- read: w'swt'. 9: [...] (lrqḥ) — read: l(b)[yt]ḥ wlpgrḥ "for his ho[use] and for his body". 10: [...]th lzwḥ — read: [...]t wlzwḥ. The t before wlzwḥ is most likely the last letter in the name of the mother of the client. The line ends with the second wlbn'tḥ. 11: Read: [mš'by]*n hyy' rby' s*_____ "The great Life is praised!". 12–16: See Müller-Kessler (1999), pp. 206–207. After lnpšḥ (line 16) read ('syr)['] "Bound are". 19–21: w'zlyn ...b ('{t.}'ythyn 'n'šy' "and depart ...the petitions (of) human kind" — read: w'zlyn q'ryn lnpš'[yhwn] ...('t') (20) w'qry't' ḏ-hynwn .../ (ḏ-š'ry') (21) bbt'yhwn ḏ-'n'šy' "who go about and call themselves '...' (20) and 'imprecations', who are ...who haunt (21) the houses of humans". 22: w(myhrb)y' 'qr'yt' "and corrupt the invocations" — read: wm(tq)ry' 'qr'yt' "and are called 'imprecations' ". 23–24: wb('t') ...h' "and the petition ...Behold" — read: wbr'z' wml'l' ḏ-(24) y'w'r rb' ḏ-hyy' "and by the mystery and word of (24) the great Yawar of Life". See Müller-Kessler (1999), p. 204 (Segal's reading wml'l' is correct). 26–27: [...]š'by'hy' ...hwn "[...]the great planets [...]" — read: (m)š'by' hyy' rby' (27) bnhwr'yhwn "the great Life is praised in its light!". 28–31: See Müller-Kessler (1999), pp. 206–207. At the end of line 31 read 'syr' (Segal: 'syry'). 32–33: lyl(y't') klby't' ḏ-t'yby' (33) b'sr' ḏ-klb('y') "liliths, bitches that return (33) in the tether of dogs" — read: lyl(y't') klby't' ḏ-š('r)y' (33) b'(r)q' ḏ-kl(.'y)y' "the dog-like liliths who haunt (33) the land of the Chaldeans". For lyly't' klby't' "dog-like liliths," see Müller-Kessler (1999), p. 202, with further references. For kl(.'y)y', which is here understood as part of a toponym, Segal reads klb('y'). Cf. the place-name k'lby', cited by Drower-Macuch,

p. 197a. Segal's reading, if correct, would result in a word-play on lyly'ṭ' klby'ṭ'. The b, however, is not at all clear to the present author, and a reading kl(d'yy') "Chaldeans" (Drower-Macuch, p. 197a) seems equally possible. Cf. m'ṭ' k'ld'yy' "country of the Chaldeans" (Aspar Malwašia [ed. Drower], p. 250: penult.).[4] Such a reading seems semantically preferable, as a similarly constructed toponym, 'rq' ḏ-rhym'yy' "the land of the Rahimeans," occurs in a lead roll in a context thematically related to that of the present bowl (see Müller-Kessler [1999], p. 201). 34–35: twty' ʿqb̲[...] ḏ- (35) ywz'ṭdq (mndʿ) ḏ-hyy') "under heel so that (35) Manda ḏHiia will be vindicated" — read: twty' ʿqb̲ ḏ- (35) ywz'ṭ'(q) m(ndʿ)' ḏ-hyy' "under the heel of (35) Yuzaṭaq Manda ḏ-Hiia". Müller-Kessler (1999), p. 205, reads ywz'ṭ'r, but the frequent attestation of the name Yuzaṭaq Manda ḏ-Hiia (see Drower-Macuch, p. 190a, and, in the present corpus, 107M:10', 11') suggests that the final letter is a poorly formed q. 40–43: Read: b'swtḥ ḏ-(m')n 'sy' rb({y}') (41) wqy(')myn hyy' rby' bškyn'twn (42) bn(hw)r'yhwn ḏ-npš'yhwn (43) wbzyw'yhwn ḏ-k'byr "by the healing of Man, the great healer. (41) And the great Life abides in its dwellings (42) in its own light (43) and in its immense radiance".

102M: In the introductory observations (p. 133) attention is appropriately called to the close resemblence between this bowl and a Mandaic bowl published by C. H. Gordon in 1951. Note that the latter bowl subsequently made its way into the British Museum collection and is republished by Segal as 111M (see below). Both bowls are early versions of DC 40, 1086–1113. Read:

(5) ...[ʿsyr' šwmy' ... lylyt' hr'št' ḏ-](š'ry' bb'yṭḥ whnwṭḥ ḏ-gb)[rʿyn] (6) (br m)'m'y ʿsy 'rq' 'l(w')t lylyt' hr'št' ḏ-š'ry' bb'yṭḥ wh ḏ-gbrʿyn br m'm'y (7) ʿsyr (krkw)[m] (...hwn) ḏ-hršy' wm'r'yhwn (ḏ-mb')[dy'] ... b'yṭḥ whn(w)ṭḥ ḏ-gbrʿyn br m'm'y (8) ʿsyr' lylyt' hr'št' ḏ-š'ry' bb'yṭḥ whn(w)ṭḥ ḏ-gbrʿyn br [m'm'y] bmwšpyt' ḏ-(prz)[l'] b'ynḥ (ʿ*s*)yr' lylyt' hr'št' bk(s)t' (9) ḏ-przl' bnhyrḥ ʿsyr' lylyt' hr'št' (skyn') ḏ-przl' (b)[...ḥ ʿsyr'] lylyt' [hr'št' ḏ-]š'ry' bb'yṭḥ wbhn(w)ṭḥ ḏ-gbrʿyn (10) br m'm'y šwšyl(t') ḏ-przl' bʿydḥ ʿsyr' lylyt' hr'št' (bgyry') ḏ-przl' bʿydḥ ʿsyr' lylyt' hr'št' bs'd' ḏ-gl'l' blygrḥ (11) sdymyt 'n('t) lylyt' [hr'št'] ḏ-š'ry' bb'yṭḥ whn(w)ṭḥ ḏ-gbrʿyn br m'm'y bsy[d]m(') rb' ḏ-sydmḥ m'nd' ḏ-h'yy' (lsm)'yyl st̲'n' 'swt' (12) thwylḥ lb'yṭḥ whn(w)ṭḥ ḏ-gbrʿyn br m'm'y wz'wḥ wbnḥ wbn'ṭḥ wqny'nḥ whywny'(ṭḥ) wlh'mḥ wm'ynḥ wk-wlhyn ʿbyd'ṭḥ whyy' z l[wn (13) ʿwb'dy']

(5) ...[Bound are the heavens ... the bewitching lilith that] haunts the house and shop of Gab[rien] (6) son of M[amay. Bou]nd is the earth with regard to the [bewitching] lilith [that haunts the house and] shop of [4] Cited according to Drower's edition. Drower-Macuch, p. 197a, s.v. kaldaia, read m'ṭ' ḏ-k'ld'yy', which would parallel the present text even more closely.

Gabrien son of Mamay. (7) Bound is Karkum, the [father] of witchcraft and the lord of (magical) ac[ts]. ...the house and shop of Gabrien son of Mamay. (8) Bound is the bewitching lilith that haunts the house and shop of Gabrien son of [Mamay] with a spit of iron in her eye. Bound is the bewitching lilith with a pin (9) of iron in her nose. Bound is the bewitching lilith (with) a knife of iron in [her...Bound is] the [bewitching] lilith [that] haunts the house and shop of Gabrien (10) son of Mamay (with) a chain of iron on her hands. Bound is the bewitching lilith with arrows of iron in her hands. Bound is the bewitching lilith with stocks of stone on her legs. (11) You are shackled, you, O [bewitching] lilith that haunts the house and shop of Gabrien son of Mamay, with the great shackle (with) which Manda ḏ-Hiia shackled Simail, the Satan. May there be healing (12) for the house and shop of Gabrien son of Mamay and (for) his spouse and his sons and his daughters and his possessions and his livestock and his food and his water and all his undertakings. [And Life is vi]ctorious [over] all (13) [(magical) acts]!

7: For the demon Karkum, see Drower-Macuch, p. 201b, and DC 37, 8–9: ʿsyry' d'ywy' ḏ-k'rkwm br lywy'tyn "bound are the dēws of Karkum son of Leviathan." The word following krkwm is probably to be read 'bwhwn (cf. 111M:7). 8: bk(s)t': Read bskt' "with a pin"? Cf. 111M:9: bsykt'. 9: (b)[...ḥ]: 111M:9 reads bpwmḥ "in her mouth." The same word may well have occurred here as well, as the length of the lacuna is appropriate and the traces following the b may point to a p. 10: bgyry' "with arrows": The reading is not certain. The corresponding word in 111M:10 is also difficult to read. 11: sm'yyl st̲'n' "Simail, the Satan": As noted by G. Scholem, "Samael," Encyclopaedia Judaica, Vol. 14 (Jerusalem 1971), p. 720, the Mandaic Simail (Drower-Macuch, p. 327b, s.v. simiaiil) is a variant of the Jewish demon Samael, who was likewise identified with Satan. The binding of Simail in the present text recalls the reference to the binding of Samael with šlšl'wt šl brzl "chains of iron" in Midrash Bereshit Rabbati (ed. Albeck), p. 167: myd ymsrnw hb"h lmyk'l wmby'w bšlšl'wt šl brzl wymsrnw byd yśr'l wyʿśw bw krṣwnm "The Holy One, blessed is He, will immediately hand him (Samael) over to Michael, who will bring him in chains of iron and hand him over to Israel, and they will do with him as they please." 12: For m'ynḥ "his water," cf. Drower-Macuch, p. 242b, s.v. maina.

103M: 8: wkbyš' — read: wkbyš<'>. 9: 'ṭ'y "Atay": read possibly (d-)m'y "of (I)mmay". Cf. the PN ʿm'y in lines 11 (see below), 13 and 15. The formula ʿsyr' wkbyš' lwṭṭ' w'qr'yṭ' ḏ-PN pt PN₂ ḏ-l'ṭ't should be rendered "the curse and imprecation of PN daughter of PN_2, who cursed". 9 10: d-w'ṭwy' "of W"ṬWY"" — read: d-l'ṭwy' "whom they cursed". The reading d-w'ṭwy' at the end of line 10 should likewise be corrected to d-l'ṭwy'. 11: 'ṭ'yw — read: ʿm'y. Cf. lines 13 and 15. 11: w'qr'yṭ' — read: w'qryṭ'. Read w'qryṭ' for w'qr'yṭ' in lines 12, 13 (twice) and 15 (twice) as well. 14: s'y.wm — read: q'ywm. The feminine PN q'ywm also occurs in MS 2054/81:11. 14: w'qr'yt — read: w'qryt'. 15: wkbyš — read: wkbyš'. 17: šwm'y "hear!" — translate: "I have heard"? The same writing occurs in MIT, 7:4, where it is translated "I hear" by the editor, but most of the parallels read šwmyt "I have heard" (e.g., 094M:2). šwm'y may therefore be a non-standard 1 c. s. perfect form following the pattern bn'y, frequently attested for III–' verbs in Jewish Babylonian Aramaic. 31: Read: (h)yy' z(')ky. The present author cannot discern the n in the photograph, but it is read by Segal and supported by the context. 34: {wy'.'} — read: (h)y'. This is the copula, grammatically according with dmwt' "picture." Lines 32–34 should be translated "This is the picture for (the incantation) 'Hark, I have heard a voice!' " (cf. above, line 17 and 093M:48–51).

104M: This bowl parallels 106M (see below). Both bowls parallel a section of the Zrazta ḏ-Hibil Ziwa, known from a number of late manuscripts (e.g., DC 14, 139–176 // DC 44, 251–325 // DC 52, 210–260 // J. de Morgan, Études Linguistiques, IIe partie: Textes mandaïtes [Mission scientifique en Perse, V: Paris 1904], pp. 256b:23–257a:21). Read:

(3) [w'l shry' w'l dywy' w'l šydy' w'l rwhy' w](''l hwmry') (4) w'l lyly't' ('rq' ḏ-)[h]('z'tḥ ')[l] (mnd' ḏ-)[hyy'] (n')d't wšw '[mb]yt (5) t'byl (kw)l '(š)trhzt . . . ḏ-h'z'tḥ lm(n)d'' ḏ-hyy' . . . (6) . . . (ny)blmwn mnl'ywn b(p)wm'ywn lbny' t'byl n('h'ybw)n wl(n'h)zywn wln('. . .)šwn (7) wl'š(n)wn n'(t)kbšwn kḏ nwr' mn qdm (my') k'bš' kb'š(yt) . . . (8) . . . lgyṭ hyl'yhwn ḏ-kwlhwn shry' wdywy' w(šydy') wrwhy' hmr[y'] wlylyt' ('s)yry' kwlhwn wmbṭl hyl'yhwn (9) ḏ-kwlhwn [šwby']hy' mn b'b'y(hwn) ḏ-bhyry' zydq' wḏ-[y]l'wy' (pt) b('t' 's)yr wmzrz' byṭḥ (wdwrḥ) ḏ-gyl'wy' pt (b)'t' mn (10) hršy(') ḏ-r[wh](' wm)[n mn]ly' ḏ-hšwk' wmn mnly' 'pykt' wmn mnly' ḏ-hyšwk' (wm)n 'mwmt' s(y)nt' mn hršy' ḏ-tl'tm' wš'tn wyn l'šny' (11) (mn) 'mr' wšym' ḏ-hyšwk' 'syr byṭḥ ḏ-('gwl'wy') pt (b't' b')zy<w>' hytym' bnhwr' wšwm tl't' mtkr 'lḥ ('s)yr{y}' wmhtm' g(yl)'' pt (b't') (12) wmnṭ'r(' ')gyl'wy' pt (b')t' mn shry' wdy<w>y' wšy[dy'] wrw<h>y' hwmry' (wy)lyly't' bšwmḥ ḏ-nbṭ n'bṭ' (w')[s'r] ('s')r' [ḏ-]hyy(' bmnly') <ḏ-hyy'> (bm)lly' (hl)yn ḏ-'l (k)[sy'] [Exterior] (14) 'l ksy' ktyby' bbyṭḥ ḏ-gyl'wy' pt (b')t' wz(r')zy' h(')wy' k(ḏ) 'qr' ḏ-przl' wl('yt) kwl shr' wdyw' wšyd' wrwh' hwmr't' wly<ly>t' ḏ-h[zyl]ḥ ldm . . . (15) rm[']whw mdly' ('štkn'bḥ šk)nt' ḏ-yq(')r' wml'ky' ḏ-hwbḥ '(tb)ls b('rq)' . . . mnly' ḏ-nhwr' wmz(r)z' . . . (wkḏ) klyl (16) . . . (hdyr)lḥ wšwb' šwry' ḏ-przl' {hdrlh} hdrylḥ lbyṭḥ (wdw)rḥ ḏ-l'wy' (pt) [b']('t' wtr')[s'r] (m)l'(k)y' ḏ-nhwr' nṭry' mṭr('t' rbt' ḏ-)šr'r' (17) wb(hylḥ) ḏ-kwšṭ' bmll' . . . bšwmḥ ḏ-g(b)r' q(rb'yy') ywkb'r zyw' šwm hyy' z'kyn

(3) [and against the sahras and against the dēws and against the demons

and against the spirits and] against the humartas (4) and against the liliths. The earth which saw Manda ḏ-[Hiia] sho[ok and the hea]vens trembled, (5) the world in its entirety quaked. . . . which saw Manda ḏ-Hiia . . . (6) . . . may the words (of) the inhabitants of the world be silenced in their mouths, and may they be confuted, and may they not see, and may they not. . . , (7) and may their tongues be suppressed like fire before water. I have performed a (magical) suppression . . . (8) . . . Seized is the power of all the sahras and dēws and demons and spirits and humartas and liliths. They are all bound and the power (9) of all [the seven plan]ets is annulled from the doors of the chosen of righteousness and [of] Gilawiya daughter of Bata. Bound and armed is the house and dwelling of Gilawiya daughter of Bata against (10) the sorcery of Ruha and against (magic) words of darkness and against perverted (magic) words and against (magic) words of darkness and against hateful conjuration(s), against the sorcery of three hundred and sixty-two languages, (11) against speaking and acceptance (lit. [favorable] hearing) of darkness. Bound is the house of Gilawiya daughter of Bata with radiance (and) she is sealed with light and the name(s) of three (divine beings) are proclaimed over her. Bound and doubly sealed is Gilawiya daughter of Bata, (12) and protected is Gilawiya daughter of Bata from sahras and dēws and demons and spirits and humartas and liliths, by the name of Nbaṭ, the . . . sprout (nibṭa), by the name of the formidable man who erected [his thro]ne upon (13) a base of exorcism and b[ound] a bond [of] Life by the words <of Life>, by these words which {upon b[owls]} [Exterior] (14) are written upon bowls in the house of Gilawiya daughter of Bata and they are armed (and) become like a fortress of iron, and there is no sahra or dēw or demon or spirit or humarta or lilith that (can) look upon the form . . . (15) high, and it is lofty. A dwelling of glory was founded in it and the angels that were in it . . . in the world . . . words of light and armed . . . and like a crown (16) . . . surround it . . . and seven walls of iron surround the house and dwe[lling of] Gilawiya daughter of Bata and twel[ve] angels of light guard (it) (with) great vigils of steadfastness, (17) and by the power of truth, by the word [of. . .], by the name of the formidable man, Yukabar Ziwa is his name. Life is victorious!

7: The reading kb'š(yt) is not certain. 11: 'mr' wšym' "speaking and acceptance (lit. [favorable] hearing)": This common expression (Drower-Macuch, p. 353a) is clearly a calque of Akkadian qabû šemû "speaking (and) acceptance (lit. [favorable] hearing)" (see CAD, Š/2, p. 284b) or its semantic equivalent qabû u magāru "speaking and acceptance" (see CAD, M/1, p. 40). Cf. also qabû šemû u magāru "speaking, (favorable) hearing and acceptance" (see CAD, M/1, p. 40b) and qabû u lā šemû "speaking and non-acceptance (lit. not hearing [favorably])" (see CAD, Š/2, p. 284b). Compare Akkadian rema ummna balta lamassa qabâ šemâ šukna yâši "grant me mercy, (answering of) prayers, dignity, protection (lit. a protective spirit), speaking (and) acceptance" (BMS 22 r. 64–65 [cf. CAD, R, p. 262a; CAD, Š/2, p. 284b]) with Mandaic 'swt' wz'kwt' wh'yl' wšr'r' w'mr' wšym' wš'byq h'ṭ'yy' nyhwyly' ldyly' "May there be healing and victory and power and steadfastness and speaking and acceptance and remittance (lit. a remitter) of sins for me" (Ginza Yamina [ed. Petermann], 133, 21–23). For the semantic equivalence of Akkadian šemû and magāru, see CAD, Š/2, p. 277, s. v. šemû (lexical section), CAD, M/1, pp. 34–35, s. v. magāru (lexical section) and ibid., p. 40, meaning 4b. Note especially Antagal III 179: giš.tuk = MIN (šamû) ša magāri "the šemû of acceptance" (CAD, M/1, p. 35a). 11: šwm tl'ṭ' "the name(s) of three (divine beings)": The parallel bowl MS 2054/40:11 refers to Hibil, Šitil and Enuš in the corresponding context. 12: (gbr' qrb)'yy' "formidable man": The first letter of qrb'yy' would seem to definitely be q, both here and in line 17, thereby excluding a reading 'br'yy' "extraordinary" (for 'br'yy', cf. above, 084M:16 and 18). Neither does a reading qdm'yy' "primeval" seem epigraphically possible, although it occurs, for example, in DC 14, 164 (g'br' q'dm'y'). 14: wz(r')zy' h(')wy' "and they are armed (and) become": The reading is not certain. wz(r')z could conceivably be read wzdrz (Etpa'al). Cf. MS 2054/40:14: (w'zdr'z) whw' "it was armed and became." 15: '(tb)ls: The reading is confirmed by the parallels, but the meaning of the verb eludes me at present. Note that the occurrence of this verb in the parallel text DC 44, 315 is incorrectly cited as 'tb'l's by Drower-Macuch, p. 66b, s.v. BLṢ (the manuscript reads 'tb'l's). The reading 'tb'l'ṣ does occur, however, in the parallel passage in DC 52, 253.

105M: This text can be read virtually in its entirety with the help of a number of duplicates in the Schøyen collection (e.g., MS 1928/45, MS 2054/28, MS 2054/39, MS 2054/63, MS 2054/71), soon to be published by Professor Shaked, and Bowl 5205 in the Museo nazionale d'arte orientale a Roma, soon to be published by M. Moriggi. For lines 1–12, cf. provisionally the transcription and discussion of the parallel AIT, 40:1–17a by J. N. Epstein, "Gloses babylo-araméennes," Revue des Études Juives 74 (1922), pp. 62–65 (Epstein's readings and reconstructions will also need to be revised based on the new parallels). The present author will limit his comments to what he perceives to be incorrect readings or interpretations proposed by the editor. 8: 'l'hy' q'hdy' "gods crying out" — translate: "the gods cry out". 9: wlyly't' mthllyy "and purified liliths" — read: wlyly't' mhwll' "and the liliths wail". 10: {w's'rt} is not a scribal error. Read: w's'rt[ḥ l]šwm'ykwn "and I bind your name(s)". 12: [...]rb' wk[...] — read: [']swt' bb'yṯḥ d- "healing in the house of". 13–15: blbwš y'q'r ... "In robes of glory..." — read: blbwš y'q'r q'ymn' blbwšy' rb' d-nhwr' (14) hwmy'n' d-hz'yt' bhl[s]'y ('s)[yr]ly' 'n' h'byl zdyq' d-'štyhlyt w'tyt mn 'lmy' rwrby' ...'l shry' w'l dywy' w'l rwhy' w'l hwmry' (15) w'l lyly't' (w'l) ... b'ty' d-bny' 'n'š' m'ys'r... "I stand

(clothed) in a robe of glory, in great robes of light, (14) (and) I have bound upon my loins a girdle of splendor. I am the righteous Hibil, who was sent and came from the great worlds ... against the sahras and against the dēws and against the spirits and against the humartas (15) and against the liliths and against ... the houses of humans (in order to) bind ...". The l in bhl[s]'y is read following Segal, but cannot be clearly seen in the photograph. hwmy'n' d-hz'yt' is tentatively understood as "a girdle of splendor," based on the parallel terms lbwš y'q'r "robes of glory" and lbwšy' rb' d-nhwr' "great robes of light" and the occurrence of zywyht' "splendor" in the corresponding context in the late (and apparently corrupt) parallel cited below (cf. Drower-Macuch, p. 166b, s.v. ziuihta 2). The rendering of 'štyhlyt as "I was stripped" in the present context is not "less likely," as claimed by Segal (note to line 14), but totally unlikely. Cf. the examples of the expression (')štyhlyt w'tyt "I was sent and came" cited by Drower-Macuch, pp. 450b-451a, s.v. ŠHL II "to send (away), dispatch." A semantically equivalent expression, 'yštgr w'ṭ' "he was sent and came," occurs in a Jewish Aramaic incantation bowl (AMB, Bowl 13:21) in a parallel context. A similar pair of Akkadian verbs, šapāru "to send" and alāku "to go," likewise occurs in a magical context with reference to a (human) emissary on a divine mission against evil beings in Maqlû I, 61–62 (CAD, Š/1, p. 436a): šaprāku allak u"urāku adabbub ana lēt kaššāpiya u kaššāptiya Asalluḫi bēl āšipūti išpuranni "I am sent — I go, I am ordered — I speak, Asalluḫi, god of exorcism, has sent me against my sorcerer and sorceress." A parallel to the Akkadian text (including the subsequent verbal pair wu"uru "to order" and dabābu "to speak") occurs in Hebrew in a nonmagical context with reference to a (human) emissary on a divine mission in Jer 1:7: wy'mr YHWH 'ly 'lt'mr n'r 'nky ky 'l kl 'šr 'šlḥk tlk w't kl 'šr 'ṣwk tdbr "But the Lord said to me: Do not say, 'I am (but) a youth', for to everyone to whom I send you, you shall go and everthing that I order you, you shall speak." Cf. the comparison of the thematically related verse Is. 6:8 with Akkadian mannam lušpur u luwa"ir ... "Whom shall I send with orders..." by N. Wasserman, Syntactic and Rhetorical Patterns in Non-Epic Old-Babylonian Literary Texts (Hebrew University of Jerusalem PhD Thesis, 1993), p. 73, n. 55 (citing an oral communication by A. Shaffer) and Tz. Abusch, "The Socio-Religious Framework of the Babylonian Witchcraft Ceremony Maqlû: Some Observations on the Introductory Section of the Text, Part II," in Z. Zevit et al. (eds), Solving Riddles and Untying Knots: Biblical, Epigraphic and Semitic Studies in Honor of Jonas C. Greenfield (Winona Lake 1995), pp. 479–481. 105M:13–15 parallels part of the Zrazta d-Hibil Ziwa (DC 14, 178–184 [and parallels]): b'lbwšy' d-'rq' (read: d-'q'r') q' (179) yymn' <blbwšy'> d-zyw' hw<my'n' d->zywyht' bh'ls'y <'syrly'> 'n' hw hybyl z (180) 'dyq' 'štyhlyt w'tyt l'lm' d-rwrby' 'l'yy' d- (181) nhwr' wld'ywy' wls'hry'

w̲l̲ w'l rwhy' wlhwmry' w (182) lyly't' wp'tykry<'> wl'ṭyb' d̲-b'ty' 'n'šy' nyst'r (183) mn b'yt' dyly' s'm ywh'n' br h'w' sym't (184) hyy' z'k'yn
"In robes of the earth (read: of glory) (179) I stand, <in robes> of radiance. <I have bound> upon my loins a gi<rdle of> splendor. I am the righteous Hibil. (180) I was sent and came to the world of the great, celestial (beings) of (181) light, and against dēws and against sahras and against spirits and against humartas and (182) liliths and idol-spirits and the no-good one of the houses of humans. May (they) be bound (183) from my, Sam-Yuhana son of Hawa-Simat's, house. (184) Life is victorious!

106M: This bowl parallels 104M (see above). There are traces of an additional line (15) on the interior of the bowl not noticed by Segal. Read:

(1) *bšwm(') d̲-hyy' w(bšwm') (2) d̲-m'ry' d̲-hyy' {'s} (3) 'swt' (wn'ṭr)['] wzkwt' wht'mt' wzr'zt' thwy[l]ḫ (4) lh'zy(n) pgr['] wrwh' wnyšymt' wlh'- zy(n) byt' dwr' (5) whykl' wb(yny)'n(') w'skwpt' whwyny'tḫ wqyny'nḫ
(6) d̲-p... br '... wr'm'y pt d'r' 'nttḫ w'swt' thwylwn lbn'ywn (7) zykr(y') wlbn'twn nwqb't' b'swtḫ d̲-m'n 'sy' h'z' h'y(') zr'(zt') d̲-zryz (8) (m)nd(') d̲-hyy' n(pš)ḫ (w't)' 'l'wyhw(n) d̲-šwb'yhyy' w'l shry' w'l dywy' w'l šydy(') w'l (9) rwh[y]' (w'l hwmr)[y'] w'l lyly't' 'r(q') d̲-hz'tḫ n'd't w{š}šwmy' 'zdr'mbt wt'byl (kwlḫ) 'št'rzl'(t) (10) (kybš') kybyt (brq' l)[g](yṭ hy)l'[y]wn d̲-kwl(hwn sh)ry' wdywy' wšydy' wrwhy[' whwmry'] wlyly't' (11) 'syry'{'} wmb'ṭly['] (mn) by...[... d̲-p... br '...] wr'(m')y pt d'r' 'nttḫ (...) 'syr wmz' bt'ywn (12) (mn) hrš[y]' d̲-(rw)h' wmn ... (wmn) m[nly' ...wmn dm]w'(t)' (s'yn')t' w(m)n hršy' d̲- tl't wšytyn (13) (wtryn) lyš'ny' [wmn 'mr'] (wšy)[m' d̲-hyšwk' ...]
(14) ...bzyw' w(m)h't'(m b)[nhwr' ...] ...(15) ...[Exterior] (16') ...
(17') [...wmn bn'ywn zy](kry' wmn bn'twn nw)qb't' w'swt' [...]

(1) In the name of Life and in the name (2) of the Lord of Life. (3) May there be healing and protection and victory and sealing and arming (4) for this body and spirit and soul and for this house, dwelling (5) and residence and building and threshold and livestock and possessions (6) of P. son of A. and Rimay daughter of Dara, his wife. And may there be healing for their male sons (7) and for their female daughters. By the healing of Man, the healer. This is the charm that (8) Manda d̲-Hiia himself prepared, and he came against the seven planets and against the sahras and against the dēws and against the demons and against the (9) spirits and against the humartas and against the liliths. The earth which saw him shook and the heavens trembled and the world in its entirety quaked. (10) I have performed a (magical) suppression on earth. Seized is the power of all the sahras and dēws and demons and spirits [and humartas] and liliths. (11) They are bound and annulled from the house ...[of P. son of A.] and Rimay daughter of Dara, [his wif]e. [(...) Bound and ar]med is their house (text: houses) (12) against the sorcery of Ruha and against [...] and against w[ords ...and against] hateful [appa]ritions and ag[ainst the sorcery of three] hundred and sixty- (13) two languages [and against speaking] and acc[eptance of darkness]... (14) ...[Bound is...] with radiance and sealed with [light] ...(15) ...[Exterior] ...(16') ...(17') [...and from their ma]le [sons] and from their female daughters, and [may there be] healing [...].

6: "P. son of A.": Segal reads the first name as p(wh'ry'), but the reading is not convincing. Read possibly pyh'dwr'. 9: w{š}šwmy': The extraneous š, if correctly read, is poorly written and may have been intentionally rewritten by the scribe. 9: 'št'rzl't: Cf. Drower-Macuch, p. 475b, s. v. ŠRHZL. 12: (s'yn')t' "hateful": The first three letters are not certain, but the reading is suggested by the parallels (cf. 104M:10: 'mwmt' s(y)nt' "hateful conjuration[s]"). 12: w(m)n hršy' d̲-tl't "and ag[ainst the sorcery of three] hundred": The reconstruction is clearly required by the context and confirmed by 104M:10. The lacuna seems slightly larger than necessary, but there is not enough space for an additional expression.

107M: Note that the photograph of 107M in plate 121 is erroneously labeled as 102M. The signs > and >– represent marks used by the scribe to signify the end of sections. For a discussion and partial transcription, see now Müller-Kessler (1999). A re-edition will be published in Ch. Müller-Kessler, Incantations for the House of Pir Nukraya. Lead Rolls from the British Museum I (in press) [courtesy the author]. Provisionally read as follows[5] :

(3') ...lwṭ'twn w'qr(y')twn mn pgrḫ wnyš(ymtḫ d̲-h'b)[yl] hlwp' [br nn'y]
...(4') ...(5') ...kwšṭ' zyw' rb' ... (h'b)[yl] (hlwp' br nn'y) >– ...(6')
...(7') ...sdy[m mry'] d̲-byt z'm'n 'syr' 'str' 'mš'myš d̲-šwš byrt'
'syr' sdym' 'sp'[nd'r]myd lylyt' h' qr't lnpš['] 'sp'n[d'r]myd b'nwg
... (8') ...'syr' b'nwg ...lylyt' 'm('yn) d̲-kwlhyn hw<mry'> wkwlhyn lwṭ't' w'qry't' ...mn h'(zyn pgrḫ w)...[d̲-h'byl hlwp' br] (nn)['y] (wmn z'wḫ) wbnḫ wbn'[t]ḫ wmn (9') b'ytḫ [d](wrḫ hy)klḫ (wbn)[y'nḫ] ...wm(h)t' twty' lygr'ywn d̲-bhyry' (z)ydq'{'} wdyly' h'byl hlw(p)' br nn'y >– w'syr' wsdym' lylyt' d̲-ytb' ...h'zyn h' d̲-lwṭ't' ...d̲-lwṭ't' ...wqr't lnpšḫ nn'y d̲-y'tb' 'l my' (sy)'wy' 'syr' h(') wlwṭtḫ w'(qr)y'tḫ 'syr... ...wlyly't' (10') d myštmylḫ ...wrgyl' ...wkbyš' h'y' wkwlhyn qyry'tḫ wmtn' twt'
'qb(ḫ d̲-)ywk'b'r kwšṭ' wdyly' ywz'ṭ'q m'nd' d̲-hyy' h'byl hlwp' br [n]n'y >– 'syr' wsdym' nn'y d̲-bwrṣyp 'syr' ^wsdym'^ nn'y d̲-byt gwz-
'yyḫ d̲-bghz'y w's[y]r' hnyn wkwlhyn ...d̲-q'ym' qwd'm'yn d̲-hynyn
r'(my)' gyry' 'l bny' 'n'š[']... (11') ...'syr' wrgyl' hnyn wkwlhyn lwṭtyn

[5] Readings published by Müller-Kessler (1999) are marked below in bold script. Some of Müller-Kessler's readings can not be verified based on the published photograph, but have been provisionally accepted here. To minimize confusion, the line numbering follows Segal as closely as possible, although there would appear to be traces of some additional lines at the beginning of the incantation (so Müller-Kessler).

w'(qry't)yn ('syr' w...wrgyl' wkbyš' wmht' twty' lygrḫ ḏ-yw(k)'b('r) kwšṭ' wdywz'ṭ'q mnd' ḏ-hyy' w(d)yly' h'byl hlwp' br nn'y w'[swt'] thwylḫ (lh)['](byl hlwp' br nn)'y wlz'wḫ wlbnḫ (wlbn'tḫ) wlb'ytḫ (12') (dwrḫ) hyk(lḫ) wbyny'nḫ >- ...n'ryg ḏ-kšk'r w'syr ...š'r [ḏ-k]šk'r w'syry' kwl(hwn) kwmr'ywn w(s'g)dwn (w'syr') kwlhyn hwmr'ywn ḏ-š'ry' ('l) [b'ty'] (ḏ-)bny' 'n'šy' wmsṭy(lwn) kwl...'bwgd'ny' 'syry' kwlhwn shry' wdywy' rwhy' whwmry' wlyly't' ḏ-šbyqylwn b'rq' tybyl wmšṭylwn lgwbry' w['nšy]' wml'ly'... (13') ...wmn by(s)r'ywn 'klyn (wmn) zm'ywn š'ty' bšyh'ywn 'pky' mn ... (blyly' wbym'm') wb'ky' wmrbky' 'l bwrk'ywn wrwh'ywn ḏ-npšywn slqbwn wnhtbwn wl'yṭy' wrwq' r'yqy' b'rq' wqhdy' wṣnpy' wmqrylkwn w'ntwn š'mytwl(wn) wmn hwm(r'ykwn) mgmrytwn 'lw'ywn wmhrbytwlhwn (14') lb't'ywn wm'ṣwytwlwn lhykl'ywn ...'syrytwn wpkyrytwn wrgylytwn wkbyšytwn wmhtytwn t't'y ly(g)r'ywn ḏ-bhyry' zy(d)q' wdyly' h'byl hlwp' br nn'y bhyl' ml'l' ...rb' ḏ-hyy' w'swt' thwylḫ lh'byl hlwp' br nn'y mn hy(y') > 'syr mlk' ḏ-r'dyn šṭwrg' ṭ'z'n' w'syry' ml'ky' kwlhwn w'syr...ṭ'z'n' w's<y>ry' kwl(hw)n shry' wdywy' [wšydy'] wrwhy' (15') whw(m)ry' wlyly't' (ḏ-myštmyl)hw ...[...] (w)m'tqryn g(w)ry' whynwn ...w'zlyn wš(')ryn 'l b'ty' ḏ-bny' 'n'š' ...w-mnkl'twn w'qry'twn {w'qry'twn} kwlhwn mn b'ytḫ wpgrḫ wnymwsḫ ḏ-h'b[y]l hlwp' br nn(')y wbr'zḫ wbhylḫ {ḏ-}wml'(l)ḫ whylḫ <ḏ->šwm' (16') rb['] (ḏ-)hyy' w'swt' thwylḫ lh'b[y]l hlwp' br nn'y>-'syr' 'str' m'rtḫ ḏ-byt zyb(n') ['syr' 'str'] ḏ-m't' hdyt' w('s)yr' lyly't' z'rny' 'ht' ḏ-... (ḏ-šry' bm't' ḏ-)byt 'šk'pyl m'm('y) qr't lnpšḫ 'syr' kwlhyn qyry'tḫ 'syry' tl('t)m' wšytyn šyršy(') ḏ-'str't' whwmr[y'] wrwhy' wlylyt' ḏ-(')tk(') bt(')byl br'z' rb' ḏ-'bwhwn (17') ...wn wtwm 'syr' kwlhyn bhyl' {bḫyl'}w'rwt' ḏ-m'n' rb' kbyr' q'dm'y' w'swt' [thwylḫ lh'byl hlwp' br] nn'y >-...'str' (ḏ-) 'l pr't y'tb' wmwlyt qr't lnpš' 'syry' šytyn wšyt' 'l'hy' p'ndy' ḏ-q'ymy' qwd'(m)ḫ (wh)ynw (m)gmrylwn w-m.šrlwn l't'r 't('r) w'syr' pl'ng' nn'y h'y' wš'b' ('h)w't' ḏ-š(ry' 'l) hwryn' nhr' ḏ-byt h'šwm w'syry' hnwn (18') wkwlhy(n) [q]yry'twn wkwlhwn shr'ywn wdyw'ywn wrwh'ywn whmr'ywn wlyly'twn wmh(šb) ['twn] (by)št' [...] ...w'[r'] kwlhyn qyry't(y)n (w'syr') mnkl('twn) ḏ-š'ry' b... ... (n')zyh' wnyp(q') mn b'ytḫ wpgrḫ ḏ-h'b[yl] hlwp' br nn'y wpkry' wrgyly' wkbyšy' wmhty'<twty'> lygr'ywn ḏ-bhyry' zydq' wdyly' h'byl hlwp' br nn'y {wm} bhyl' ḏ-hyy' wml'lḫ ḏ-(19') mnd' ḏ-hy(y') w'swt' thwylḫ lh'byl hlwp' br nn'y wlzwḫ wlybnḫ wlybn'tḫ wlb'ytḫ wlhmḫ wmy[ḫ ...] w'syr' 'str' ḏ-byt gyrm'y wr'dyn w'syry<'> kwlhwn kwmr(ḫ w)sgdḫ (whw)[m](rḫ ḏ-šry' bb'ty)[' w'](syry' wpkyry' wrgyly') wk(byšy' mn) b'ytḫ pgrḫ wnymwsḫ ḏ-h[']byl hlwp' br nn'y w'swt' thwylḫ <lh'byl hlwp'> br nn'y wlz'wḫ wl{w}bnḫ wlbn'tḫ wlb'ytḫ >- 'syr' 'str(') [Exterior] (20') ...'str' ḏ-'l ṭwr' (y'tb') ...w'syr' 'st'r ṭwr' mskynt(y') [...] (ḏ-)bhd' mdyn' y'tb' ...kwl (dwk)t'...š'ry' l'w lṭ'b š'[ry' (...)] (mygṭl)['] [drdq](y' 'yyk) t'rn('wly') wdrd(q')t' 'yyk trn'wl't' wmhrb' b'ty' wm'ṣ[wy'] (hykly' ḏ-b)ny' 'n'š' mn lhm' wmy' wmytq(')ry' lwṭ't' w'qry't' byš't' (21') w'str' 'syr' 'syr' wrgyl' pkyr' wkbyš' wkryk' wdhy' hnyn wlwṭtyn w'qry'tyn wmyskynwtyn mn h'zyn pgr'{w}wnymws' wb'ytḫ wdwrḫ whyklḫ wby[n]y'nḫ wz'wḫ wbnḫ wbn'tḫ ḏ-h'byl hlwp' br nn'y >-

(3') ...their curses and their imprecations from the body and soul of Hibil-Halupa [son of Nanay]...(4') ...(5') ...truth, great radiance ... Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay.>- ...(6') ...(7') ...shackled [is the Lord] of Bit Zaman. Bound is the Istar Amašamiš of the fortress Šuš. Bound (and) shackled is the lilith Ispa[ndar]mid, who calls herself Lady Is-pan[dar]mid ...(8') ...Bound is the Lady ...the lilith, the mother of all hu<martas> and all curses and imprecations ...from this body and ...[of Hibil-Halupa son of] Nan[ay] and from his spouse and his sons and his daughters and from (9') his house, his dwelling, his residence and his building ...and put down beneath the feet of the chosen of righteousness and of me, Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay.>- And bound and shackled is the lilith that haunts ...and calls herself Nanay who haunts the black water. Bound is she and her curses and imprecations. Bound is ...and the liliths (10') that hearken to her ...and fettered ...and suppressed, she and all her imprecations and put under the heel of Yukabar Kušṭa and of me, Yuzaṭaq Manda ḏ-Hiia Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay.>- Bound and shackled is Nanay of Borsippa. Bound and shackled is Nanay of Bit Guzaya which is in Gahzay. And they are bound, they and all the ...who serve them (lit. stand before them), who cast arrows upon humans ...(11') ...Bound and fettered are they and all their curses and imprecations. Bound and ...and fettered and suppressed and put down under the feet of Yukabar Kušṭa and of Yuzaṭaq Manda ḏ-Hiia and of me, Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay. And may there be [healing] for Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay and for his spouse and for his sons and for his daughters and for his house, (12') his dwelling, his residence and his building.>- [Bound is DN of ...and bound is] Nirig of Kaškar and bound is [DN of Ka]škar and bound are all their priests and worshippers and bound are all their humartas that haunt [the houses] of humans and seduce them. All (...) abugdanas. Bound are all the sahras and dēws, spirits and humartas and liliths which they have left on the earthly world and who render men and [women] senseless, and words ...(13') ...and devour their flesh and drink of their blood. In their lust they turn away from ...at night and by day, and cry and kneel on their knees, and their own spirits are agitated (lit. rise and descend) within them, and they curse and spit spittle upon the ground, and they shout and scream and call out to you, and you hear them and with your humartas you take possession of them and you destroy (14') their houses and desolate their residences ...you are bound and tied up and fettered and suppressed and put down under the feet of the chosen of righteousness and of me, Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay, by the power, the word, the great ...of Life. And may there be healing for Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay from Life.> Bound is the angel of Radin, the reckless Šṭurga, and bound are all the angels, and bound is the reckless... and bound are all the sahras and dēws [and demons] and spirits (15') and humartas and liliths that hearken to them ... and they are called 'adulterers', and they ... and they go about and haunt the houses of humans ... and their guileful spirits and their imprecations, all of them, from the house and body and constitution of Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay, by the mystery and power and word and power <of> (?) the great name (16') of Life. And may there be healing for Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay.>– Bound is Istar, the Mistress of Bīt Zibna. [Bound is the Istar] of the New Town. And bound is the lilith Zarni, sister of ... who haunts the territory of Bīt Iškapil, who calls herself Mamay. Bound are all her imprecations. Bound are the three hundred and sixty tribes of the Istars and the humartas and the spirits and the liliths that are in the world, by the great mystery of their father (17')... And furthermore, they are all bound by the power and illumination of the great, mighty and primeval Mana. And [may there be] healing [for Hibil-Halupa son of] Nanay.>– [Bound is] the Istar that haunts the Euphrates and calls herself Mulit. Bound are the sixty-six gods ... which serve (lit. stand before) her and t[hey] take possession of and ... various places. And bound is the phalanx of Nanay, she and her seven sisters who haunt the river Hurina in Bīt Hašum. And bound are they (18') and all their imprecations and all their sahras and dēws and spirits and humartas and liliths and evil machinations ... [And bound are] all their imprecations and bound are their guileful spirits which haunt ... May they flee and be expelled from the house and body of Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay, and they are tied up and fettered and suppressed and put down <under> the feet of the chosen of righteousness and of me, Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay, by the power of Life and the word of (19') Manda ḏ-Hiia. And may there be healing for Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay and for his spouse and for his sons and for his daughters and for his house and his food and [his] water [...]. And bound is the Istar of Bīt Girmay and Radin, and bound are all her priests and her worshippers and her humartas who haunt houses, and they are bound and tied up and fettered and suppressed from the house, body and constitution of Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay. And may there be healing for <Hibil-Halupa> son of Nanay and for his spouse and for his sons and for his daughters and for his house.>– Bound is the Istar (20') ... the Istar that haunts the mountain ... and bound is the wretched Istar of the mountain [...] that haunts a city ... every place ... haunts, and it is not for good that she ha[unts (...)] she kills [young boy]s like roosters and young girls like hens and destroys houses and desolates the residences of humans of food and water and is called 'curses' and 'evil imprecations' and (21') 'Istar'. Bound, bound and fettered, tied up and suppressed and turned back and repulsed are they and their curses and their imprecations and their wretchedness from this body and constitution and house and dwelling and residence and building and spouse and sons and daughters of Hibil-Halupa son of Nanay.>–

3': hʿbyl hlwpʾ: The name of the client is hʿbyl hlwpʾ (so Müller-Kessler [1999]), not hʿbyl hlypʾ, as read by Segal. 10': ḏ-qʾymʾ qwdʾmʾyn "who serve them (lit. stand before them)": Cf. ḏ-qʾymyʾ ʿlʾwḫ "who serve him" (081M:5 [above]). The same expression occurs in parallel with ŠMŠ (Paʿel) "to serve, minister to" in Ginza Yamina (ed. Petermann) 209, 16–17 (and parallels): ʾlyp ʾlyp qʾymyʾ qwdʾmḫ wrwbʾn rwbʾn ṭʾywtʾ mšʾmšʾlḫ "Thousand(s) upon thousand(s) serve him (lit. stand before him) and myriad(s) upon myriad(s) of evil spirits minister to him." 12': ... nʿryg ḏ-kšḵʾr wʿsyr ... šʾr [ḏ-k]šḵʾr "[Bound is DN of ... and bound is] Nirig of Kaškar and bound is [DN of Ka]škar": This line most likely parallels MS 2054/23:4–5: wʿsyr nyryg ḏ-nhʾr kwpt[yʾ] wʿsyr nyryg ḏ-kšḵʾr wʿsyr nyšʾr ḏ-kšḵ(ʾr) "And bound is Nirig of the river Kupt(ia) and bound is Nirig of Kaškar and bound is Nišar of Kaškar." Parallel references to Nirig of the river Kuptia and Nišar of Kaškar also occur in the unpublished Mandaic lead roll BM 132947+, 170'-171', cited by Ch. Müller-Kessler and K. Kessler, "Spätbabylonisches Gottheiten in spätantiken mandäischen Texten," Zeitschrift für Assyriologie 89 (1999): 79, 68. 13': wrwqʾ rʾyqyʾ "and spit spittle": Segal's proposed emendation, {wrwqʾ} wrʾyqyʾ (incorrectly reading wrʾyqyʾ for rʾyqyʾ), is gratuitous, as the same expression occurs in MIT, 5:6 and 6:6. 15': Segal's reading wrgylyʾ wkbyšyʾ hynwn is most likely correct, but is not visible to the present author in the photograph. 16': byt zyb(nʾ): There would appear to be the remains of a crossed out letter between the two words. 16': For šyršyʾ "tribes," cf. Drower-Macuch, pp. 463b-464a, s.v. širša. In the present context, šyršʾ is equivalent to šwrbtʾ "brood, tribe, family" (see Drower-Macuch, p. 457a, s.v.), which also frequently occurs in incantations with reference to hordes of demons (e.g., 088M:7). 16': ʿtkʾ is an unassimilated variant of the usual ʿkʾ (Drower-Macuch, p. 348b, s.v. ʿka 1). 17': bhylʾ {bhylʾ} wʿrwtʾ "by the power and illumination": See Drower-Macuch, p. 357, s.v. ʿruta "illumination ... brilliance..." Cf. 081M:11: bhylʾy ... wrwtʾy, which Segal himself renders "in my power ... and my illumination." It should be noted that Segal's translation of ʿrwtʾ as "fever" is based on Aramaic ʿryt in the hendiadys ʾštʾ wʿryt "fever and chills," for which see AMB, pp. 47 and 49. ʿryt itself is properly "chill, shivering" (so Segal, p. 216, s.v.), which fits the present context even less than "fever." The cognate Mandaic term ʿšʾtʾ wrwyt "fever and chills," incidently, occurs in E. S. Drower, "A Phylactery for Rue (An Invocation of the Personified Herb)," Orientalia N. S. 15 (1946), p. 325, line 10 (incorrectly rendered "fever and weakness" by the editor [ibid., p. 334] and by Drower-Macuch, p. 429b, s. v. ruita). The same expression also occurs in DC 37, 267 (unpublished). Cf. also the semantic equivalent ʿš'tʾ h'mymtyʾ wq'ryrtyʾ "hot and cold fever" (see Drower-Macuch, p. 403a, s. v. qarir). 17': šytyn wšytʾ "sixty-six": The present author can not discern these words in the photograph, but the same reading is proposed independently by both Segal and Müller-Kessler. 20': The beginning of the line is probably to be read (ʿsyrʾ) ʿstrʾ and comprises a dittograph of the final words of the previous line on the interior of the bowl. The present author can not discern traces of mygṭl' in the photograph, but Segal's reading (except for the final y) must be correct. The demon ʿst'r ṭwrʾ "the Istar of the mountain" also occurs in AMB, Bowl 9:14 (written: 'ystr ṭwrʾ). Cf. ṭwr'yt' lylytʾ "the mountain-lilith" (DC 43F, 54 [cf. Drower-Macuch, p. 179a, s. v. ṭuraita]). The mountains as a home of demons is already attested in Akkadian literature. For references, see CAD, Š/1, p.. 55b, s.v.šadû A, meaning 1i.

109M: 2–3: thwylḥ (3) [...]k "May there be ...(3) [for Daro]k" — read: thwylḥ l[byt]ḥ (3) ḏ-k "May there be ...for the [house (3) of] Farrok". The name of the client would seem to be Farrok, not Darok as read by Segal. 10–15: Read: (b)šmḥ ... ml'kʾ (11) myk(')ʿyyl ml'kʾ (12) bšwmḥ ḏ-(šyt)yl (13) ml'kʾ bšw(m)ḥ (14) ḏ-šmšyyʿyyl (15) ml'kʾ "in the name ...the angel, (11) Michael the angel, (12) in the name of Šitil (13) the angel, in the name (14) of Šamšiel (15) the angel". Segal's reading (ʿ)zʿyl in line 10 seems plausible. 25–28: whtymʾ ... pt[...] — read: whtymʾ (26) [h']zyn nyšmtḥ ḏ-(p) (27) rwk br q'q'y (28) w pt ('h't) "and sealed is (26) [th]is soul of (27) Farrok son of Qaqay (28) [and] Dostoya daughter of Ahat". 38–41: Read: ...(byny') šwmyʾ (39) (w'rq') wmš'by' (40) hyy' w'swt' (41) thwylḥ "...between the heavens (39) and the earth. And Life is praised! (40) And may there be healing (41) for".

110M: The author of this bowl does not seem to have been well versed in the scribal art. Read section I (Segal's lines 1–9) tentatively as follows:

(1) h(')ln dmwtʾ (2) (ḏ-)'d'wn'y (3) b(š)wmʾ ḏ-hy(y') (4) 'swtʾ wyh't'm' (5) t' wnt'rt' thy (6) wylḥ lbytḥ (dybr)(7)(bydyry') br mmy (8) ḏ-'dw <n'y> [at an angle to lines 3–5] (9) 's (10) r' ḏ-pˆrˆ [zl']

(1) These (are) pictures (2) of Adunay. (3) In the name of Life. (4) May there be healing and sealing (5) and protection (6) for the house of Ybr (7) bydyry' son of Mamay. (8) Of Adu<nay>. [at an angle to lines 3–5] (9) Bond (10) of ir[on].

1–2: These lines would appear to explain the drawings. If this interpretation is correct, Segal's line 9 (ḏ-'dy "of Adday") should then be read ḏ-'dw<n'y> "of Adu<nay>", as proposed above, referring to the following drawing. 6–7: The reading of the name of the client is uncertain. A reading dyrḥ "(and) dwelling" for dybr does not seem epigraphically likely.

111M: This bowl parallels 102M (above). As recognized by C. Walker in the Table of Registration Numbers and Provenances (p. 38), 111M was originally published by C. H. Gordon, "Two Magic Bowls in Teheran," Orientalia N.S. 20 (1951), pp. 306–315 (pp. 309–10, 314–15). Segal briefly cites Gordon's study in his note to line 8, but does not appear to have otherwise profited from the earlier edition. This is unfortunate, as Gordon's transcription is for the most part superior to that of Segal. Read:

(3) ...[lyk bšw](myk qr)y (lylyt') (4) (h)rštʾ ḏ-š' [bytḥ] (d-z')kwyʾ 'r(q)b' (n)[']k)[t'] ...(pt) [hywy'] (5) (hyw')r' pt krpw ...(ʿ*syr*' šwmy') ...[lylyt'] (h)rš (6) ḏ-š'ry' bytḥ ḏ-[z]'kwy' (ʿ*syr*') 'rq' (ʿ*lḥ ḏ*-)lylyt' hršt[']) (ḏ-)[š']r[y' byt]ḥ ḏ-z'kwy' (7) ʿ*syr krkwm* 'bhwn ḏ-hršy' wmr(')wn (ḏ-)m'b'd(y') ʿ(s)[yr' lylyt'] h[rštʾ ḏ-]š'ry' (8) bytḥ ḏ-z'kwy' ʿ*syr*' lylyt' hršt' ḏ-(š)'ry' bytḥ (ḏ-z'kw)[y'] ...[ḏ-przl' b'ynḥ] (ʿ*syr*') (9) lylyt' hršt' (b)sykt' ḏ-zl' bnhyrḥ ʿ*syr*' *ly*ˆ*ly*ˆ*t*' hršt' b(s)[kyn' ḏ-przl'] (bpwmḥ) [ʿ*syr*'] (lylyt') hršt' (10) ḏ-š'ry' bytḥ ḏ-z'k(wy') bšwšlyt' ḏ-prz[l]' bṣ(w)rḥ ʿ*syr*' lylyt' hršt' b...[ḏ-]przl' (b'dḥ) ʿ*syr*' (11) lylyt' hršt' bsd' ḏ-gl'l' (b)l (s)dymyt 'n(t) lylyt' hršt' ḏ-š'ry' bytḥ ḏ-z'kwy bsyd[m' rb'] (12) (ḏ-s)dmḥ m[']nd' ḏ-)hyy' (lsm'yy)[l sṭ'n' w']swtʾ) thwylḥ lbytḥ dwrḥ wbyny'nḥ wlz'wḥ wbnḥ (wbn'tḥ) ...(13)...[mš']byn h)[yy'] Exterior: (14) lyk b(š)[wmyk] (15) (qr)[y]tyk lyly[t']

(3) ...[You, by] your na[me], I have called, O be[witching] lilith (4) [that hau]nts [the house] of Zakoya, b[iting] scorpion..., daughter of a (5) white [snake], daughter of a poisonous lizard ...Bound are the heavens ...the be[witching lilith] (6) that haunts the house of Zakoya. Bound is the earth upon the bewitching lilith that h[aunts the house] of Zakoya. (7) Bound is Karkum, the father of witchcraft and the lord of (magical) act(s). Bo[und is the bewitching lilith that] haunts (8) the house of Zakoya. Bound is the bewitching lilith that haunts the house of Zako[ya (with) a ...of iron in her eye]. Bound is (9) the bewitching lilith with a pin [of] iron in her nose. Bound is the bewitching lilith with a k[nife of iron] in her mouth. [Bound is] the bewitching lilith (10) that haunts the house of Zakoya with a chain of iron on her neck. Bound is the bewitching lilith with ...[of] iron on/in her hands. Bound is (11) the bewitching lilith with stocks of stone on her legs. You are shackled, you, O bewitching lilith that haunts the house [of Zakoy]a, with the [great sha]ckle (12) (with) which Manda ḏ-Hiia shackled Simai[l, the Satan. And] may there be healing for his house, his dwelling and his building and for his spouse and his sons and his daughters ...(13) ...L[ife is prai]sed! Exterior (as label): (14) You, by [your na]me, (15) I have called, O lilith.

6: (ʿ*lḥ ḏ*-) "upon": The reading is not certain. (ʿ*lwy*') "upon" also seems possible. 10: (b'dḥ) "on/in her hands": The reading follows Gordon, but the ' in particular is unclear in the photograph. Whatever the precise reading may be, however, the translation "her hands" is to be expected based on 102M:10 (see above).

112M: 7–12: Read:
... mn byt̲h̲ dwr̲h̲ whyklh̲ d̲-(ksr)[w] (br š)[hlwn] (wmy)n [PN] (pt) (8) q'ywmt' wmn b'b'ydwkt pt (šhlwn) wmn PN₂ p (šhrwn) (9) 'syry' wrgyly' wkbyšy' hynwn [w...wn w...wn w...]wn whwmrywn (10) w (rwhywn) (?)wlyly'twn wp('g)'ywn wqry('twn) [w...wn] (wšyqwp)[t'ywn] ('np)<y'> byt̲h̲ (11) d̲-ks(rw) br š(h)lwn 'syry' wrgyly' wkbyš[y'] (hynwn) ...whr byšy' (12) *wmb'dy' mkyry' mn byt̲h̲ d̲-(ksrw b)[r šhlwn...] ...*from the house, dwelling and residence of Khusraw son of Ša[hlun] and from [PN] daughter of (8) Qayyomta and from Babaydukt daughter of Šahlun and from [PN₂ daugh]ter of Šahrun (= Šahlun). (9) Bound and fettered and suppressed are they [and their ...and their ...and] their [...] and their humartas (10) and their spirits (?) and their liliths and their misfortunes and their imprecations [and their...] and [their] (magical) blows (from) before the house (11) of Khusraw son of Šahlun. Bound and fettered and suppressed are they [...and] evil [sor]cery (12) and polluting (magical) practices from the house of Khusraw so[n of Sahlun....]

7–8: PN daughter of Qayyomta is presumably Khusraw's wife. Two sisters of Khusraw are then named; only the name of the first (Babaydukt) is legible. 12: mkyry' "polluting": mkyry' is most likely derived from K'R "to shame, pollute..." (Drower-Macuch, p. 200b). It is tentatively understood as a Pa'el active participle, i. e., "polluting." The root K'R is semnatically related to the root ṬNP "to be impure" (MD, p. 181), and derivatives of the two roots are attested in parallel (see MD, p. 271, s. v. mkairuta and ibid., p. 100, s. v. KAR [Ethpa.]). mb'dy'mkyry' "polluting (magical) practices" may thus be compared with r'zy' mṭ'npy', rendered "defiling mysteries" by MD, p. 181, s. v. ṬNP. The analysis of mkyry' (and mṭ'npy' as Pa'l passive particles, both meaning "polluted, impure," is also morphologically possible. In such a case, compare the resulting parallel byšy' "evil" // mkyry' "polluted, impure" with the parallel byšt' "evil" // ṭmyt' "impure" in AMB, Bowl 13:17 (Jewish Babylonian Aramaic): ḥwmry byšt' ḥwmry ṭmyt' ḥwmry zydnyt' "evil humartas, impure humartas, malicious humartas."

115M: 4: [...]d'ry' wl' l'ty' lm—read: [ld']r d'ry' wl'l'm 'lmy' "in all ages and forever". 6: pt hwl pwn' ...b't'—read: pt hwlpwn' (?) [wb]nh̲ zykry' [wbn'th̲] nwqb't' "daughter of Hulpuna [and] her male [so]ns [and her] female [daughters]".

James Nathan Ford
The Hebrew University of Jerusalem

On Practical Uses of Ten Sefirot: Material Readings in an Early Modern Kabbalistic Collectaneum (MS Michael 473)*

Agata Paluch
Free University of Berlin; agata.paluch@fu-berlin.de

Abstract

By the end of the sixteenth century, textual manifestations of kabbalah—a variety of Jewish mysticism that first emerged in medieval Provence and Catalonia—achieved the status of elite but authoritative lore in Eastern and Central Europe, even if at times they stirred religious opposition. At the same time, and especially in the seventeenth century, the so-called practical kabbalah, associated with magic and a talismanic approach to religious ritual, gained substantial popularity among Ashkenazi (i.e., Eastern and Central European) Jews. This study centers on a multiple-text and composite codex, Oxford-Bodleian MS Michael 473, and throws into relief the dynamics of circulation of various kabbalistic traditions in early modern Eastern and Central Europe. By zooming in on a single codex, this article foregrounds the hermeneutic potential of contextual reading of texts in complex manuscripts and of interpreting material choices taken by their cocreators. It does so with a methodological agenda that goes beyond tracing of authorial genealogies, and beyond the sociology of texts and their producers, toward exploring the interpretive

* This research was generously supported by the German Research Foundation (DFG), in the framework of the Emmy Noether project "Patterns of Knowledge Circulation: The Transmission and Reception of Jewish Esotericism in Manuscripts and Print in Early Modern East-Central Europe" (project no. 401023278).

© The Author(s), 2023. Published by Cambridge University Press on behalf of the President and Fellows of Harvard College. This is an Open Access article, distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivatives licence (http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/4.0/), which permits non-commercial re-use, distribution, and reproduction in any medium, provided the original work is unaltered and is properly cited. The written permission of Cambridge University Press must be obtained for commercial re-use or in order to create a derivative work.

HTR 116:2 (2023) 276–301

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press relations of literary and material form in early modern handwritten kabbalistic texts. The article showcases a single textual unit, Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot, that MS Michael 473 contains, in order to focus on the position of practical kabbalistic texts and practices within the spectrum of kabbalistic traditions of seventeenth- and early eighteenth-century Eastern and Central Europe, ushered in by the contemporary modes of reading and transcription of texts.

Keywords

kabbalah, practical knowledge, Jewish magic, material text, Jewish manuscript cultures, sefirot

Introduction

The Oxford-Bodleian MS Michael 473 is a vast composite manuscript of over 200 folios, predominantly in quarto, cataloged invariably as a kabbalistic collectaneum. Composed of five major codicological units, datable between the mid-seventeenth and early eighteenth century, it contains in its present form over thirty identifiable textual units written in Ashkenazi (Eastern-Central European) cursive, non-square, and occasionally square script.[1] The volume represents a striking and yet very typical material format in which kabbalistic texts recorded in the early modern period have passed down to contemporary library collections. Comprising an array of textual units, from early medieval to early modern, this codex exposes a tour d'horizon of the kabbalistic manuscript culture of Ashkenaz (Eastern and Central Europe) that effectively brought it into its current shape.

In the catalog of Adolph Neubauer, who published his description of the Hebrew manuscript collection of the Bodleian Library in 1886, the manuscript is numbered 1960, quite reasonably under the heading of "other kabbalistic collectanea."[2] The codex appears just before the end of the "Kabbalah" section of the catalog, indeed following other, often lengthy and seemingly haphazardly ordered, kabbalistic

[1] What I refer to as a "codicological unit" is an independent structure that was produced and used independently and only later added to another manuscript; therefore, it does not amount to the "paleographic unit." This understanding of codicological unit follows loosely what has been defined in the context of medieval manuscripts as "booklet"; see Pamela J. Robinson, "The 'Booklet': A Self-Contained Unit in Composite Manuscripts," in Codicologica 3 (ed. Albert Gruijs and J. P. Gumbert; Litterae Textuales; Leiden: Brill, 1980) 46–69. See also J. P. Gumbert, "Codicological Units: Towards a Terminology for the Stratigraphy of the Non-homogeneous Codex," in Il codice miscellaneo. Tipologie e funzioni. Atti del convegno internazionale, Cassino 14–17 maggio 2003 (ed. Edoardo Crisci and Oronzo Pecere; Turnhout: Brepols, 2004) 17–42, at 25; and cf. Marilena Maniaci, "The Medieval Codex as a Complex Container: The Greek and Latin Traditions," in One-Volume Libraries: Composite and Multiple-Text Manuscripts (ed. Michael Friedrich and Cosima Schwarke; Studies in Manuscript Cultures 9; Berlin: de Gruyter, 2016) 27–46.

[2] Adolf Neubauer, Catalogue of the Hebrew Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library and in the College Libraries of Oxford, Including Mss. in Other Languages, Which Are Written with Hebrew Characters, or Relating to the Hebrew Language or Literature; and a Few Samaritan Mss. (Catalogi Codd. Mss. Bibliothecae Bodleianae Pars XII; Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1886) 639.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

collectanea. The precise rationale behind Neubauer's organization of his catalogue might not always be evident, but many of the late, more complex or outwardly convoluted kabbalistic codices of the Bodleian collections closed the catalog list labeled as "other," as opposed to the codices of simpler, less labyrinthine structure, perhaps also of more extraordinary and unique, if not early, content.

Nonetheless, several textual units contained in codex no. 1960 in Neubauer's catalog have drawn scholarly attention in the past, having been recognized as versions of well-known early Jewish mystical texts.[3] This was the case of the piece located on folios 23v–27v, which has been acknowledged in a critical edition as belonging to the so-called Ši'ur Qomah, a textual tradition on the anthropomorphic structure and measurement of the godhead, whose limbs consist of angelic names.[4] Likewise, the text that appears in MS Michael 473 on folios 112r–115v served as the basis for an edition of 'Alfa-Beta de-Metatron, a short medieval commentary of Ashkenazi provenance on the special shapes of letters—a so-called angelic alphabet—whose authorship has been ascribed to the thirteenth-century Nehemiah ben Shlomo, a "prophet" of Erfurt.[5] The "other kabbalistic collectanea" also awoke the curiosity of Gershom Scholem. In his copy of Neubauer's catalog, Scholem noted codex no. 1960 among the sixteen manuscripts of the Bodleian Library of which he wished to secure a photographic reproduction.[6] What perturbed Scholem were two names that appear in passing in the volume: Rabbi Ozer he-Ḥasid[7] and Rabbi Shimshon.[8] Scholem noted the latter name with a question mark in the margin. Next to codex no. 1960 in his copy of Neubauer's catalog, he added a note which was as inquisitive as it is agitated: "Wer ist R. Shimshon!!?" ("Who is rabbi Shimshon!!?").

[3] See a general description of this item in the Neubauer catalog, cited in n. 2, augmented in Catalogue of the Hebrew Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library. Supplement of Addenda and Corrigenda to Vol. 1 (A. Neubauer's Catalogue) (compiled under the direction of Malachi Beit-Arié, ed. R. A. May; Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1994) 354.

[4] See Martin Cohen, The Shi'ur Qomah: Texts and Recensions (TSAJ 9; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1985). See also Asi Farber-Ginat, "Inquiries in Shi'ur Qomah," in Massu'ot: Studies in Kabbalistic Literature and Jewish Philosophy in Memory of Professor Ephraim Gottlieb (ed. Michal Oron and Amos Goldreich; Jerusalem: Bialik Institute, 1994) 361–94 (Hebrew). Part of this text is parallel to that printed in Sefer Raziel ha-Malakh (Amsterdam, 1701), fols. 38r–v.

[5] Israel Weinstock, "The Alphabet of Metatron and Its Interpretations," Temirin 2 (1981) 51–76 (Hebrew); Moshe Idel, "Anonymous Commentary on the Alphabet of Metatron: An Additional Treatise of R. Nehemiah ben Shlomo, the Prophet," Tarbiz 76 (2007) 255–64 (Hebrew).

[6] See Scholem's copy of the catalog in the Scholem Collection of the National Library of Israel, call no. 14247.

[7] The name of Ozer is mentioned in the collection of predominantly Lurianic fragments (tiqqunim and sodot) and practical kabbalistic matters on fols. 35r–93v.

[8] The copyist ascribed the commentary on ten sefirot (on fols. 6r–18v) to Rabbi Shimshon, who Scholem hesitantly identified with Shimshon [ben Pesaḥ] Ostropoler. On this kabbalist, see Yehuda Liebes, "Mysticism and Reality: Towards a Portrait of the Martyr and Kabbalist, R. Samson Ostropoler," in Jewish Thought in the Seventeenth Century (ed. Isadore Twersky and Bernard Septimus; Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1987) 221–55.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Indeed, reading premodern manuscripts to ferret out obscured identities of authorship and works or to resolve perplexing chronological ambiguities in texts and fragments thereof has been a general tendency of modern scholarship of kabbalah, one that had enthralled Scholem in his textual bibliographical explorations and that has dominated critical investigations of kabbalistic texts until today.[9] This modern enchantment of scholars suggests a certain nostalgia for fixed origins, definite sources, and often singular authorship—a propensity that resonates with theological desires and anxieties discoverable in many of the kabbalistic texts themselves—that could validate abundant textual production despite its unruly variability. A methodological tendency to search for the primary or ideal forms of texts imbued with authorial intentionality has had far-reaching consequences for the critical study of handwritten textual sources, including kabbalistic sources.[10] It has habitually cast any relatively late manuscripts as mere depositories of purportedly distorted "variants" or copies of earlier "original" texts and as material that at best contains secondary indications of what is or should have been erstwhile, authentic, or simply "a better reading."[11]

From a different reading perspective—one that arises from the growing field of material text studies—each codex could, and should, be construed as a consequence of textual and material choices predicated on historical circumstances and culturally and epistemically informed assumptions on the part of its producer(s). According to this approach, each textual unit emerges as evidence of multiple decisions of those who engaged in its reading, transcription, and subsequent transmission. Consequently, situating manuscript volumes, be they medieval or postmedieval, in the context of writing and reading practices of the culture that produced them offers a fresh hermeneutic of reading, one that zeroes in on recovering the historical and intellectual conditions that steered the recirculation of particular texts in specific cultural settings, despite any purported textual "distortions" entailed by the mode of their production.[12]

[9] For a critical overview of historical and modern approaches to studying kabbalistic texts and textuality, see Daniel Abrams, Kabbalistic Manuscripts and Textual Theory: Methodologies of Textual Scholarship and Editorial Practice in the Study of Jewish Mysticism (Sources and Studies in the Literature of Jewish Mysticism 36; Los Angeles: Cherub and Jerusalem: Magnes, 2013) 17–117, 555–73. See, however, the more materially grounded study of Malachi Beit-Arié, "Publication and Reproduction of Literary Texts in Medieval Jewish Civilization: Jewish Scribality and Its Impact on the Texts Transmitted," in Transmitting Jewish Traditions: Orality, Textuality, and Cultural Diffusion (ed. Yaakov Elman and Israel Gershoni; New Haven: Yale University Press, 2000) 225–47.

[10] See Abrams, Kabbalistic Manuscripts, 444–90. Cf. the recent volume of Jewish History 34 (2021), dedicated to new perspectives on the study of Sefer Ḥasidim, the book and its context. On the issue of the "authorship" of Sefer Ḥasidim, see, however, important notes of David I. Shyovitz, "Was Judah he-Ḥasid the 'Author' of Sefer Ḥasidim?," Jewish History 34 (2021) 31–52.

[11] See a critical reflection on this type of reading in the volume Textual Distortion (ed. Elaine Treharne and Greg Walker; Essays and Texts 2017; Cambridge: D. S. Brewer, 2017).

[12] On the methodological influence of the studies on material text on various aspects of literary studies and book history in the contexts of the Western European premodern period, see, e.g.: András Kiséry and Allison Deutermann, "The Matter of Form: Book History, Formalist Criticism,

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

MS Michael 473, as a multiple-text and composite codex, tells an intricate story of the circulation and status of certain kabbalistic traditions in early modern Eastern and Central Europe. This story shares its implicit collective authorship between mostly anonymous contemporary copyists, compilers, redactors, and readers, who have all engaged in the fashioning of the codex, and its texts, in its present material form. This article draws on the hermeneutic potential of contextual reading of codicological units in complex manuscripts and of interpreting material choices taken by co-creators of codices by centering on MS Michael 473. It does so with a particular agenda that goes beyond tracing the sociology of texts, their producers, and consumers toward testing the interpretive relations of literary and material form in early modern handwritten kabbalistic texts.[13] In doing so, this article spotlights a single textual unit, Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot, that MS Michael 473 contains, in order to highlight the position of practical kabbalistic texts and performances within kabbalistic traditions of seventeenth- and early eighteenth-century Ashkenaz, steered by the modes of reading and practices of the contemporary transcription of texts. From the graphic format of the text to its location within the textual compilation to its placement in the composite manuscript codex, this article explores how the material shape of a text molds its potential readings inasmuch as its literary form remains in constant interpretive relation and often depends on the manuscript as the material object that holds it.

and Francis Bacon's Aphorisms," in The Book in History, the Book as History: New Intersections of the Material Text; Essays in Honor of David Scott Kastan (ed. Heidi Brayman, Jesse M. Lander, and Zachary Lesser; New Haven: Yale University Press, 2016) 29–63; Arthur Bahr and Alexandra Gillespie, "Medieval English Manuscripts: Form, Aesthetics, and the Literary Text," The Chaucer Review 47 (2013) 346–60; Leah Price, "Reading Matter," in "The History of the Book and the Idea of Literature," special issue, PMLA 121 (2006) 9–16; D. F. McKenzie, "Typography and Meaning: The Case of William Congreve," in Making Meaning: "Printers of the Mind" and Other Essays (ed. Peter D. McDonald and Michael F. Suarez, S.J.; Amherst: University of Massachusetts Press, 2002) 198–236; Textual Cultures: Cultural Texts (ed. Orietta da Rold and Elaine Treharne; Texts and Essays 2010; Cambridge: D. S. Brewer, 2010). Earlier attempts at a similar approach to textual production have been made by Daniel Abrams in, e.g., "A Commentary to the Ten Sefirot from Early Thirteenth-Century Catalonia: Synoptic Edition, Translation and Detailed Commentary," Kabbalah 30 (2013) 7–63, esp. 8, although, paradoxically, with adherence to the notion of the "genealogy of versions" of texts that would constitute "the definition of 'the work.'"

[13] On such a methodological approach in wider contexts, see Peter McDonald, "Ideas of the Book and Histories of Literature: After Theory?," in "The History of the Book and the Idea of Literature," special issue, PMLA 121 (2006) 214–28, at 225; Leah Price, "From the History of a Book to a 'History of the Book,'" Representations 108 (2009) 120–38, esp. 123; Stephen Best and Sharon Marcus, "Surface Reading: An Introduction," Representations 108 (2009) 1–21, esp. 6; Matthew Zarnowiecki, "Reading Shakespeare Miscellaneously: Ben Johnson, Robert Chester, and Varum Chorus of Loves Martyr," in Formal Matters: Reading the Materials of English Renaissance Literature (ed. Allison K. Deutermann and András Kiséry; Manchester: Manchester University Press, 2013) 34–54. See also Henry S. Turner, "Lessons from Literature for the Historian of Science (and Vice Versa): Reflections on 'Form,'" Isis 101 (2010) 578–89.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Textual Makeup of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot: The Written Matter

Among his observations on MS Michael 473, Gershom Scholem noted that one textual unit that was copied on folios 27v–32v has parallels in two other manuscripts: MS NLI 28 251 and MS Michael Add. 18. This text, which encompasses a textual unit on the uses of ten sefirot—that is, of the decadic structure of divine emanation—was included by Scholem in his list of commentaries on ten sefirot at number 105.[14] In MS Michael 473, this "commentary" on ten sefirot is featured within the third codicological unit that consists of thirteen regular quarto folios and sixty-four pages, written in mid-seventeenth-century Ashkenazi non-square script.[15] This entire codicological unit forms a curious assemblage of brief kabbalistic texts and comments. It begins with a short treatise on the matters of reincarnation—whose authorship has been ascribed to Moshe Cordovero, a sixteenth-century kabbalist of Palestinian Safed—copied on folios 6r–19v.[16] Then follows a selection of short pieces on sundry kabbalistic matters, commenting chiefly on liturgical texts and often quoted in the name of Isaac Luria, arguably the most influential kabbalist of early modernity, active in late sixteenth-century Safed. Finally, several passages of Ši'ur Qomah, a late-antique mystical text on the dimensions of the godhead, form a textual unit that occupies folios 23v–27v.[17] This assemblage of early mystical and later kabbalistic texts or excerpts thereof, which at first glance seems haphazardly ordered and thematically incongruous, ends with a text perhaps the most bizarre of all in this gathering—the anonymous commentary noted by Scholem, introduced by the scribe of MS Michael 473 as Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot ("The tradition/wisdom of ten sefirot").[18]

Opening with a square initial word of scribal invocation to the divine, the text of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot follows the preceding textual unit without any title or a page break. In its graphic layout, it forms two visually distinct parts. The first part sets forth the so-called traditions (qabbalot) about ten sefirot—divine energies or emanations that build up the godhead in the majority of kabbalistic theosophies or [14] Gershom Scholem, "Index of the Commentaries on Ten Sefirot," Qiryat Sefer 10 (1933–1934) 498–515, at 509 (Hebrew). Even though the literature of commentaries is often polemical in character, numerous commentaries on ten sefirot display a great deal of similarity. The text included by Scholem in his list under no. 105 stands out among the texts of this genre with regard to its thematic purview.

[15] Two types of paper make up this unit; watermarks on one of them are comparable to those produced in the last decades of the 16th cent. in the papermill of Liegnitz, Lower Silesia (Gravell Watermark Archive Arms.906.1; Briquet no. 1157).

[16] On this text, see Gershom Scholem, Kabbalistic Manuscripts in the National and University Library in Jerusalem (Jerusalem: n.p., 1930) 99–100 (Hebrew); Bracha Sack, "Some Remarks on Rabbi Moses Cordovero's Shemu'ah be-'Inyan ha-Gilgul," in Perspectives on Jewish Thought and Mysticism (ed. Alfred L. Ivry, Elliot R. Wolfson, Allan Arkush; Amsterdam: Harwood Academic, 1998) 277–88.

[17] See n. 2 above.

[18] An edition (Hebrew) of this text by Yoed Kadari has been announced in Yuval Harari, "'Practical Kabbalah' and the Jewish Tradition of Magic," Aries: Journal for the Study of Western Esotericism 19 (2019) 38–83, at 60.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press interpretations of metaphysics. These traditions relate to the first six sefirot of the ten (from Keter, the uppermost sefirah, down to Tif'eret, the middle, or sixth, sefirah). This first section of text formally retains some structural features characteristic of the genre of commentaries on sefirot.[19] As such, it unfolds as a sequence of theoretical explications that pertain to the status and essential characteristics of each of the divine aspects, one by one and in descending order—that is, from the sefirah that is closest to the one that is farthest from the source of emanation.[20] And yet, instead of the anticipated elucidation of the theosophical significance of each sefirah and the implications thereof for liturgy and other ritualistic acts of worship, the text of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot sets out with detailed instructions for practical procedures and linguistic formulas devised to harness the power of the sefirot in the material world for the benefit of its reader-practitioner. The text thus foregrounds the theosophical rationale for practical kabbalistic procedures to be enacted within the human realm, all associated and contingent upon the power of the relevant stratum of the godhead. In practice, Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot instructs a practitioner to reach to, draw down, and manipulate divine energy via the channel of divine names, with which each sefirah is correlated and whose power administers each of the procedures outlined in the initial part of the text. For instance, the passage that prescribes a practice to take vengeance over one's enemies, recommends:

> This is the tradition of the sefirah Geburah: if you want to overcome your foes, recite this prayer as it is written in the sphere of the sefirah Geburah, in clean clothes and prayer shawl. On the third day [of the week] write on goat parchment: "Let it be your will, holy, pure and appointed angels: Gabri'el, the angel in charge of Geburah, Šamaši'el, the angel of the sun, Ṣuri'el, in charge of the power of the names written in the sphere of the sefirah Geburah. And with the power of holy and pure names within the sefirah Geburah, outside [of it], [let it be that] they order to anger and wrath, to the angels of death in charge of humans and animals, to Mašbir, the angel of death in charge of large living creatures, and to Mašḥit,[21] the angel of death in charge of the small, so that they break the power of so-and-so, and subjugate him, and [19] Generally speaking, the commentaries on ten sefirot form a type of explanatory literature that aims at exposing the symbolic meaning of Scripture in its reference to the structure and subtleties of the godhead. This genre is rarely considered to be hermeneutically original, but rather, to reflect the processes of conservation and systematization of thought. Its emergence is thus datable to the 13th cent., when a decadic form of symbolism had already been well accepted as part of the literary kabbalistic tradition. See Moshe Idel, Kabbalah: New Perspectives (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1988) 216–17; Michal Oron, "The Literature of Commentaries to the Ten Sefirot," in Studies in Jewish History Presented to Joseph Hacker (ed. Yaron Ben-Naeh et al.; Jerusalem: Zalman Shazar Center, 2014) 212–29 (Hebrew); cf. Tsahi Weiss and Na'ama Ben-Shahar, "The Order of Emanation Regarding 'The Unity of Our God and Our Torah for Our People'—A Commentary on the Ten Sefirot from the 'Circle of Sefer ha-Temunah,'" Kabbalah 41 (2018) 279–304 (Hebrew).

[20] A well-known exception to this rule is the 13th-cent. commentary Ša'arei 'Orah of Joseph Gikatilla.

[21] The Hebrew word mašḥit (lit., causing damage) appears as a name of an angel in, e.g., Pirqei de-Rabbi 'Eli'ezer, ch. 45.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

bring fire and fever into his body, and pierce his body with evil spirits and demons, and not release him until you exhaust [his] strength, Qafaṣi'el, the angel of youth." Put this writing in the garment or shroud of the dead, pierce a hole in a tree that has not yet borne fruits, and when you place this writing in the hole, recite in the name of Panafi'el, [the angel] in charge of trees, and close the hole with tar or mud, and recite these psalms: "God of retribution, YHVH! God of retribution, appear!" [Ps 94:1], and the psalm: "O God of his praise, do not keep silent" [cf. Ps 109:1].[22] [Figure 1 below]

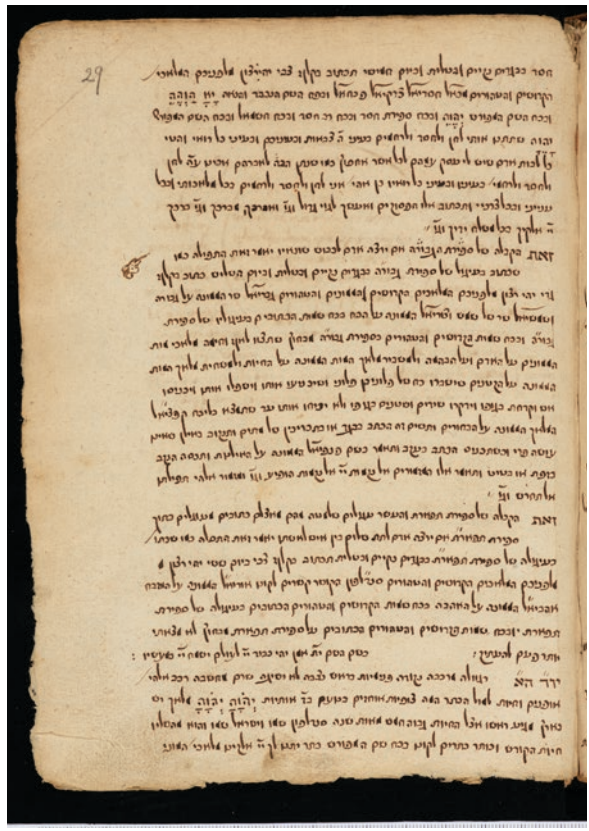

Figure 1
The Bodleian Libraries, University of Oxford. MS Michael 473, folio 29r. Creative Commons licence CC-BY-NC 4.0.

After a series of similarly detailed descriptions of rituals and practical guidelines that pertain to the first six sefirot of the usual decadic structure of the godhead, the text continues with listing the divine and angelic names the practitioner ought to employ during the recommended procedure. Sequences of these names compose [22] MS Michael 473, fol. 29r. Translations are my own. Biblical texts follow the translation of the Jewish Publication Society, with minor modifications.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press the second part of the text. They feature on the subsequent folios of the manuscript inscribed within circular shapes that represent sefirot graphically, with one or two of these shapes per page. The second part of the commentary thus consists of a series of circular schemes embodying the decade of sefirot, from the upper one to the lower one, and of complementary texts written around them. A form or two of Tetragrammaton, accompanied with a particular vowel pattern, heads each of the sefirotic circles. Apart from the Tetragrammaton, each circle also includes a textual formula for the adjuration of angels, with three to four angelic names per circle, that correlate with the divine name and the particular properties of the respective sefirah being referenced.[23] These liturgical and adjuratory formulae ought to be enacted either in writing or vocally, per the reader's understanding, during performances described in the first part of the text:

> YHVH: "Your ways, O God, are in holiness; what god is great as our God?" [Ps 77:13]; O Lord God, the measure of Judgment, the Judgment of fire in Mercy, "the terror of night" [Ps 91:5], "a well of fresh water" [Gen 26:19], "Had not the God of my father, the God of Abraham and the Fear of Isaac, been with me" [Gen 31:42], "Isaac sowed seeds in that land and the same year reaped a hundredfold, because YHVH blessed him" [Gen 26:12], the binding of Isaac, the horn of fear, "There is Solomon's carriage, encircled by sixty warriors, of the warriors of Israel, all of them wearing the sword, all experienced in battle" [Song 3:7–8], Gabri'el, Šamaši'el, Ṣuri'el. Yiṣḥaq.[24]

All three elements involved in the ritual performances advised by the text inside the circles—that is, the variant or variants of the vocalized Tetragrammaton, the name of respective sefirah, and the angelic names—are therefore jointly correlated in the formula, situated intertextually within biblical citations, as well as visually highlighted by the scribe across the entire textual unit. Additionally, next to each of the sefirotic representations there appears another prayer-adjuration, one that includes several further biblical passages, referring both to the power of the respective sefirah and to the angelic and divine names that appear in the adjuratory formula inscribed inside the sefirotic circle:

> Let it be your will, the holy and pure angels, Gabri'el, the warrior angel, Šamaši'el, in charge of the sun, Ṣuri'el, in charge of the power [of the names], so that you bring my soul to the mists of purity and show me in a dream the Garden of Eden and the academies of the righteous, and teach me the following day of the secret wisdom, as the Holy One, Blessed be He, gave this wisdom to Isaac, our forefather, [so too] bring fear and terror on my enemies, through the power of the holy and pure names written within [23] On adjurations and incantations in Jewish magical and early mystical literatures, see Yuval Harari, Jewish Magic before the Rise of Kabbalah (Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 2017) 122–28, 148–49, 170–74, 187–93; and Moshe Idel, "Between Ashkenaz and Castile in the Thirteenth Century: Incantations, Lists, and Gates of Sermons in the Circle of Rabbi Nehemiah ben Shlomo the Prophet, and their Influences," Tarbiz 77 (2008) 475–554 (Hebrew).

[24] MS Michael 473, fol. 31r.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

> the circle of the sefirah Geburah, and in the honorable name of Y'YTHH, and through the power of the ineffable name YHVH YHVH, "maintaining love to thousands maintaining love to thousands [sic!]" [Exod 34:7], overpowered in greatness, "YHVH is good to all" [Ps 145:9] who call upon Him.[25]

The prayer-adjuration and related biblical passages add a further explanatory layer to the recommended performances and draw on an early tradition of mystical ascents on high, granted to humans by angels on account of the adjuration of the proper name. Such visions were to endow the initiate with requested knowledge and wisdom, to be utilized particularly for public preaching and inspired writing, deemed enthused by prophetic spirit.[26] These performances emerge here contingent on the power of the respective sefirah and the divine name, while situated within the textual web of biblical quotations that establish a scriptural anchor for the practical, often very technical, and quite unconventional rituals suggested in the first part of the text. So, the procedure related to Ḥokmah recommends baking a cake of wheat, sugar, and spices and eating a mouthful of it upon reciting the prescribed formula once a day and once a night, for fifteen consecutive days and nights, all while keeping one's hands down, wearing clean clothes, and donning a prayer shawl.[27] The same prayer formula is also claimed to be effective in a related procedure intended to impart knowledge to a youngster, for whom one should write an amulet, dissolve it in white wine, and give the liquid to the youngster to drink. A more intricate technique, the purpose of which is to gain the ability of preaching in public, engages the sefirah Binah by concocting a dough mixed with the flesh of a slaughtered white cock and consuming the prepared mixture at night with the first cock's crow,[28] after cleansing hands with rose water and on reciting the adjuratory formula of proper names.[29]

Indeed, the matters of unusual rituals exposed in Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot may not meet the expectations of readers accustomed to the genre of kabbalistic commentaries on ten sefirot. The first portion of this text explores six performances, all of which voice a human concern with the acquisition of extraordinary abilities through the manipulation of powers associated with the sefirot. All but one of the procedures mentioned in the text recommend crafting amulets, thus concentrating on manual production and enactment of the artifact inscribed with divine names, made of buckskin for Keter and Tif'eret and of goat leather for Ḥesed and Geburah. There is no discussion of the significance of each sefirah within the theosophical order

[25] Ibid.

[26] See Moshe Idel, Ascensions on High in Jewish Mysticism: Pillars, Lines, Ladders (Budapest: CEU Press, 2005) 23–72, and the bibliography adduced there; idem, "Between Ashkenaz and Castile," 493–99, 544–45.

[27] The names of necessary ingredients, such as azucar (sugar), suggest that the text derives from a Spanish-Iberian linguistic area.

[28] On the uses of slaughtered cocks in Jewish magic, see Yuval Harari, "Three Charms for Killing Adolf Hitler: Practical Kabbalah in WW2," Aries 17 (2017) 196–99.

[29] See Harari, "Practical Kabbalah," 57–60.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press of divine emanation—apart from asserting the obvious sequence of sefirot—nor of the symbolic referents of the divine aspects and the dynamics of relations between them, topics that would customarily find their place in the various commentaries on the ten sefirot. Rather, this text focuses exclusively on ritual performances and their accompanying practical procedures and adjurations. The connection between specific performance and the corresponding sefirah rests on an elementary, even idiomatic, understanding of the aspects of decadic divine structure. And so, the highest of sefirot, Keter, controls the process of automatic writing;[30] Ḥokmah, which stands for the attribute of divine wisdom, governs human memory and processes of acquiring eternal knowledge (or, "opening of one's heart" for learning);[31] Binah, the sefirah of the divine intelligence, safeguards the skill of preaching in public;[32] Ḥesed, being the divine aspect of loving-kindness, provides respect and admiration in social contexts; Geburah, the fifth sefirah of harsh judgment, assumes the power of wreaking vengeance and administering punishment on enemies;[33] while Tif'eret, the sefirah that stands for the male companion of Šekinah, or the lowest and female aspect of the godhead, brings about love between husband and wife.[34]

Ten circular shapes that follow the textual exposition of six performances related to the sefirot form the axis of the commentary: they serve the purpose of visual aid for the reader that enables them to correlate properly each of the described procedures with the pertinent level of the godhead. The graphic facet of the commentary—that is, the representation of ten sefirot in circular shapes—draws together all of the parts of the text and emerges to be hermeneutically crucial for construing both the meanings and the enactments of the prescribed ritual performances, especially the amulets. Plausibly, the common idiom of visualizing and representing sefirot in a circular shape, found in the traditional imagining of sefirot in the form of spheres arranged into a more or less complex arboreal schema ('ilan ha-sefirot), and known from kabbalistic manuscripts from the thirteenth century onward, modeled the graphic imagery of the commentary.[35] Likewise, the correlation between the names

[30] Ibid.; Amos Goldreich, Automatic Writing in Zoharic Literature and Modernism (Los Angeles: Cherub, 2010) 85–92.

[31] See Yuval Harari, "To Open One's Heart," in Shefa Tal: Studies in Jewish Thought and Jewish Culture Presented to Bracha Sack (ed. Ze'ev Gries et al.; Be'er Sheva: University of Ben Gurion in the Negev Press, 2004) 303–47 (Hebrew); Gideon Bohak, "A Jewish Charm for Memory and Understanding," in Jewish Education from Antiquity to the Middle Ages: Studies in Honour of Philip S. Alexander (ed. George J. Brooke and Renate Smithuis; Leiden: Brill, 2017) 324–40.

[32] See nn. 21 and 22 above.

[33] On Jewish aggressive magic, see Gideon Bohak, Ancient Jewish Magic: A History (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2007) 123–31; and Alessia Bellusci, "Oneiric Aggressive Magic: Sleep Disorders in Late Antique Jewish Tradition," in Demons and Illness: Theory and Practice from Antiquity to the Early Modern Period (ed. Siam Bhayro and Catherine Rider; Leiden: Brill, 2017) 134–74.

[34] On Jewish love magic, see Ortal-Paz Saar, Jewish Love Magic from Antiquity to the Middle Ages (Leiden: Brill, 2017).

[35] On the development of visual representation of sefirot and its language, see J. H. Chajes, "Spheres, Sefirot, and the Imaginal Astronomical Discourse of Classical Kabbalah," HTR 113 of sefirot and their qualities with the results of their practical employment, effected in the physical world, seems to have been a consequence of a common and almost rudimentary understanding of the entire decadic structure of the godhead and of divine aspects embodied by each of the ten emanations.[36] The aim expressed in the first part of the text, in each individual qabbalah, is fulfilled through ritual performance, one that includes specific bodily preparations and/or technical devices carried out at a designated time and place. Nevertheless, the ritual efficacy of such performances hinges on the enacted formulae placed within the sefirotic circles, included in the second part of the text as it is laid out in MS Michael 473 and performed during the recommended ritual. The adjuratory formulae inscribed within and outside the spherical figures are designed to activate divine energy via the names of angels ("with the power of the holy and pure names inscribed in the circle of the sefirah"), each of which correlates to the relevant sefirah and therefore to the appropriate divine emanation with its attributes. Implicitly, the power that the sefirot channel via the angelic figures derives from the Tetragrammaton and its variant vocalizations. These variants feature in the text in the adjuratory phrases that invoke the higher power of the divine name ("by the esteemed name" or "by the power of the ineffable name, YHVH"), placed within the six introductory descriptions of performances, within the formulae around the circular designs, and on top of each of these circles.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

The text inscribed in and around the circular designs in MS Michael 473 (fols. 29r–32v) supplies the written material—the adjuration formulae in their particular graphic form—for the performance of rituals (qabbalot) exposed in the opening part of the text (fols. 27v–29r), even though the latter pertains only to the first six divine emanations, leaving four formulae without descriptions of their corresponding ritual performances. The anonymous scribe who copied the text of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot in MS Michael 473 acknowledged this dissymmetry with a degree of surprise, stating: "I did not find more of this to copy." This statement appears just after the exposition of the qabbalah of the sixth sefirah (fol. 29r) and before the scribe turns to the adjuratory formula around the circular shape of the first sefirah, Keter. In fact, there are a few other textual inconsistencies that are revealing in terms of the scribe's way of reading and their sensitivity to the form and medium of the text being copied. According to the text, only after a practitioner has properly employed adjurations of angelic names related to a particular sefirah may they draw from its (2020) 230–62; Daniel Abrams, "Kabbalistic Paratext," Kabbalah 26 (2012) 7–24; idem, Kabbalistic Manuscripts, 618–26; idem, "Divine Multiplicity: The Presentation of Differing Sefirotic Diagrams in Kabbalistic Manuscripts," Kabbalah 50 (2021) 81–152; Giulio Busi, "Beyond the Burden of Idealism: For a New Appreciation of the Visual Lore in the Kabbalah," in Kabbalah and Modernity: Interpretations, Transformations, Adaptations (ed. Boaz Huss, Marco Pasi, and Kocku von Stuckrad; Leiden: Brill, 2010) 29–46.

[36] On practical kabbalistic and talismanic uses of scrolls that represent trees of sefirot, see J. H. Chajes, "Kabbalah Practices/Practical Kabbalah: The Magic of Kabbalistic Trees," Aries 19 (2019) 112–45.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

supernatural power. In addition to the names playing a crucial role in how the rituals are structured, they also take center stage in the formal layout of the commentary. The circular shapes representing sefirot, inscribed with divine and angelic names, form the axis of the text's mise-en-page in MS Michael 473. The text references these names at all stages as the source of power for the adjurer and the moving force behind the rituals, but it does so with curious specificity: the supernatural "power of the sefirah" (כח הספירה) derives from "the holy and pure names written inside the circlet of the sefirah" (השמות הקדושים והטהורים הכתובים בעיגולת של ספירה), but also from those inscribed "on/in the sefirah . . . , outside" (השמות הקדושים והטהורים הכתובים על/בספירת . . . מבחוץ). Thus, the text self-references its own written and graphic shape—that is, names positioned in a certain way on the page—as much as it suggests to the reader a tangible reality of the powers it represents in a material format. In the end, the names are copied, as per the scribe's expression "in" and "around" the sefirot, and not "in" and "around" the circular designs that merely represent the sefirot.

Similar formulations appear across the entire textual unit rather consistently, with reference to all the recommended procedures and prayers as inscribed in and around the ten circlets of sefirot, although with slight but telling variations. For instance, when copying the procedures for the second sefirah, the scribe noted the power of names related to it and "written inside the sefirah Ḥok̲mah" (fol. 28v), while skipping the word "circlet" (עיגול or עיגולה, 'igul or 'igulah)—a slip of pen that may suggest a degree of collapse between the graphical and the metaphysical for the copyist. It seems it was already idiomatic by the late Middle Ages to visualize sefirot graphically as spheres, or render them two dimensionally as circles, and also to deploy such depictions to practical kabbalistic or magical ends. In effect, the material (and not symbolic) understanding of sefirot allows for the redeployment of their visual representation in practical contexts of all sorts. It is to this specific graphic convention that the copyist of MS Michael 473 related, and which he actively employed. But more than that, as the whole text references divine names embedded in and related to a specific graphic shape, it suggests to the reader that the textual layer achieves meaning and efficacy when enfolded in a specific formal arrangement. The construing of the text, as much as the ritual experience described within it, is effectively molded by a specific graphic convention, mediated by its material distribution at the heart of the textual unit. At that, the reader's expectations ensuing from the formal features common to the genre of commentary on ten sefirot—indeed, the text establishes itself smoothly within the authoritative tradition referred to as qabbalat 'eser sefirot, "the tradition of ten sefirot"—as much as from the text's graphic disposition, shape the reading experience, even more so when the textual content does not easily conform to these convention-related expectations.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Of Sefirot, Angels, and Divine Names: Textual Precedents and Material Recontextualizations

An interrelation between divine names, sefirot, and angels manifests in practices aimed at harnessing supernatural power for all kinds of earthly purposes, analogous to that transpiring in the Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot, and appears in medieval textual traditions linked to a fourteenth-century kabbalistic Sefer Brit ha-Menuḥah ("The Book of the Covenant of Serenity").[37] This text comprises perhaps the most elaborate Jewish medieval attempt at providing a comprehensive theoretical framework for the kabbalistic concepts of language that underpin much of the practices related to utilizing divine names, in both contemporary and later kabbalistic contexts. Sefer ha-Geḇurah, one of the earliest layers that forms the textual tapestry of Brit ha-Menuḥah, is the closest parallel to the ideas recorded in the second part of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot.[38] In essence, the so-called Sefer ha-Geḇurah consists of a short prayer-adjuration intended for use by those who wish to achieve exceptional learning abilities. The adjuration directed to summon the powers of ten angels dubbed "the ten [mighty] warriors" ('Asarah ha-Gibborim) constitutes its central part, one that ought to be recited before any further performance. Remarkably, after a general invocation, each name of the ten angelic figures reappears in an adjuration formula while linked to one of the ten sefirot whose power or metaphysical status the angel represents.[39] In the context of Sefer ha-Geḇurah, the adjuration of ten gibborim, the mighty warriors, sets out to make practical use of the ontological structure laid out in the earlier parts of the text, presented chiefly in the form of lists of distinct entities that build up the order of the universe. In the passages quoted above, the supernatural power flows from the center of this scheme (i.e., the ineffable divine name) down to the human worshiper, while mediated through the ten angelic figures. Each of these ten supreme angels features within the theosophical structure—that is, as a counterpart to one of the ten sefirot. The powers and abilities transmitted through angels toward the earthly realm correlate, although at times only loosely, with the idiomatic meaning and function of their names or of the name of a related sefirah. And so, for instance, the sefirah Ḥoḵmah (wisdom) provides the highest form of wisdom, the sefirah Binah (intelligence) furnishes one with the abilities of understanding, while the angel Refa'el (of Hebrew root א-פ-ר, to heal) affords good health. The adjuration thus addresses the Tetragrammaton, the preexisting divine name that underlies the whole of created reality, and whose power extends to the lower worlds via angels as conduits of its transmission, identified with sefirot. In this sense, sefirot and the ten angel-warriors appear coterminous if not identical, [37] See Sefer B'rit ha-Menuḥa (Book of Covenant of Serenity): Critical Edition and Prefaces (ed. Oded Porat; Jerusalem: Magnes, 2016) 30–31 (Hebrew).

[38] On the relation between Sefer ha-Geḇurah and Sefer Brit ha-Menuḥah, see ibid., 30–31.

[39] NY Ms 1967, fols. 15r–17r. Cf. Book of Covenant of Serenity (ed. Porat), 369–70: "Ḥaḵami'el and all his camps, with the rank of sefirah Ḥoḵmah, to impart wisdom to me, to save and protect me from all the misery and distress."

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

since—in the larger context of Sefer ha-Geḇurah, as well as other parts of Brit Menuḥah—both the sefirot and the ten angel-warriors essentially result from the first emanative stimulus of the divine and precede the created world.[40]

Strikingly, the association of each sefirah with a specific angelic name in both the prayer-adjuration of Sefer ha-Geḇurah and Qabbalat ʻEser Sefirot of MS Michael 473 is near-exact: thus, in both texts, the sefirah Keter counterparts the angel Yaho'el; sefirah Ḥoḵmah—(Ye)ḥaḵami'el; sefirah Binah—Nuri'el; sefirah Geḇurah—Gaḇri'el; sefirah Neṣaḥ—Pani'el/Pami'el; sefirah Hod—Aza'el/Asa'el; sefirah Yesod—Refa'el; and sefirah Malkhut—Bar(a)ḵi'el.[41] This similarity suggests a close link between the two textual units, even if the angelic lineup in one of these texts is slightly more elaborate: each of the sefirot is paralleled in Qabbalat ʻEser Sefirot, not with one central angelic name but with at least two or three. Moreover, parts of Qabbalat ʻEser Sefirot contain invocations of angelic names whose powers seem to be conferred to the worshiper directly, by the command of the angelic powers ("May it be your will, the holy and pure angels," fol. 28v), who in turn receive nourishment from the source of power within the Tetragrammaton, via the dynamics of its vocalization. In both texts, the angelic, the sefirotic, and the divine names ought to be effectively adjured side by side and seem to play the same coercive role in the recommended adjuratory formulae. Indeed, the text of Qabbalat ʻEser Sefirot distributes both the angelic and the divine names derivative of Tetragrammaton equally within the circles of sefirot, which unambiguously suggests the notion of angels and sefirot as equal channels for the transmission of power that has its source and seat within the Tetragrammaton. Last,

[40] On pre-kabbalistic interpretations of the continuity between the divine and its various manifestations, or attributes representing God in the world (referring to the interpretation of b Ber. 7a; b Hag. 15a), see A. T. Segal, Two Powers in Heaven: Early Rabbinic Reports about Christianity and Gnosticism (Leiden: Brill, 1977) x; Peter Hayman, "Monotheism: A Misused Word in Jewish Studies," JJS 42 (1991) 1–15; Yehuda Liebes, The Sin of Elisha: The Four Who Entered the Pardes and the Nature of Talmudic Mysticism (Jerusalem: Academon, 1990) (Hebrew); Guy Stroumsa, "Aher: A Gnostic," in The Rediscovery of Gnosticism: Proceedings of the Conference at Yale, March 1978 (ed. Bentley Layton; 2 vols.; Numen Book Series 41; Leiden: Brill, 1981) 2:808–18; David Halperin, Faces of the Chariot (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1988) 31–37, 202–5; Menahem Kister, "Metatron and God, and the Problem of Two Powers: Toward an Explanation of the Dynamics of Traditions, Interpretation, and Ritual," Tarbiz 82 (2013) 43–88 (Hebrew). On various reformulations of the status of special angels, especially Metatron, as an elevated being, deemed coterminous and yet dependent on God, see, e.g., Daniel Abrams, "The Boundaries of the Divine Ontology: The Inclusion and Exclusion of Metatron in the Godhead," HTR 87 (1994) 291–321; Elliot R. Wolfson, "Metatron and Shi'ur Qomah in the Writings of Haside Ashkenaz," in Mysticism, Magic, and Kabbalah in Ashkenazi Judaism: International Symposium Held in Frankfurt am Main in 1991 (ed. Karl E. Grözinger and Joseph Dan; Berlin: de Gruyter, 1995) 60–92; Moshe Idel, Ben: Sonship and Jewish Mysticism (Jerusalem: Continuum, 2007); idem, The Angelic World: Apotheosis and Theophany (Tel Aviv: Yedi'ot Aharonot, 2008) (Hebrew); Tsahi Weiss, Cutting the Shoots: The Worship of the Shekhinah in the World of Early Kabbalistic Literature (Jerusalem: Magnes, 2015) 24–39 (Hebrew).

[41] For the sefirah Ḥesed and its counterpart in angel Ṣedaqi'el of Sefer ha-Geḇurah there is a precedent in the first part of Qabbalat ʻEser Sefirot, so that only sefirah Tif'eret has two different angelic equivalents in both texts: Michael in Sefer ha-Geḇurah and Sandalfon in Qabbalat ʻEser Sefirot.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press the focus on internal dynamics between sefirot, so characteristic of theosophical kabbalah in general and of the genre of commentaries on ten sefirot in particular, is not to be found in either Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot or early texts associated with Brit ha-Menuḥah, such as Sefer ha-Geburah, which instead focus entirely on the dynamics of the fluctuating vocalizations of the divine name and on the influence of these on the created world.[42]

Both textual traditions, of Brit ha-Menuḥah and of the related Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot, are reminiscent of the medieval kabbalistic experiment of fitting two ostensibly different if not competing conceptualizations of the divine within one comprehensive metaphysical system, in which the theosophical idea of the ten sefirot overlaps with the intricate yet hierarchical angelology.[43] This attempt, advanced textually in the fullest manner by Brit ha-Menuḥah, foregrounded the significance of sefirot and, crucially, their names as powers that operate in the universe either on a par with, and at times as, angels, within the boundaries delimited by the law of divine onomastics. Such an understanding of the sefirot as independent of their nuanced roles in the theosophical system of divine emanation—typical of medieval kabbalah of Spanish derivation, and as supra-angelic figures that conjoin the human and the divine realm, well-grounded in ancient Jewish mystical and magical vision of metaphysics—subsequently allowed for multifarious appearances of the sefirotic design in new and often unexpected literary contexts, particularly those practically oriented. These textual and performative traditions that appropriated a conceptualization of ten sefirot as angelic counterparts were fundamentally underlain by the view of the Tetragrammaton as a central symbol and overarching framework of the divine structure ready to be influenced and actively deployed by human agents.

Indeed, these kabbalistic textual traditions, especially in the form of smaller textual units and short excerpts of longer treatises, were deployed by scribes and readers in a number of ways in handwritten anthologies and compilations of practical character, where situatedness within new literary and material contexts often offered these texts radically distinctive meanings.[44] And so, apart from its usual setting within the larger Brit ha-Menuḥah treatise, the text of Sefer ha-Geburah appears to have been independently copied into magical and practical kabbalistic manuscript compilations. This is, for instance, the case of a fifteenth-century collectaneum of [42] See Book of Covenant of Serenity (ed. Porat), 9–21, 35–42.

[43] On other types of relations between sefirot and angels as reflected in early kabbalistic texts, especially in performative contexts, see Tsahi Weiss, "Prayers to Angels and the Early Sefirotic Literature," JSQ 27 (2020) 22–35. See also Yoed Kadari, "The Debate about Prayers to Angels, R. Abraham Halevi and the Kabbalistic Circle in Jerusalem" (MA thesis; Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 2008) 22–28 (Hebrew).

[44] See further in Agata Paluch, "Copying, Compiling, Commonplacing: Sefer ha-Heshek and the Kabbalah of Divine Names in the Early Modern Ashkenaz," in Representing Jewish Thought: Proceedings of the 2015 Institute of Jewish Studies Conference Held in Honour of Professor Ada Rapoport-Albert (ed. Agata Paluch; IJS Studies in Judaica 21; Leiden: Brill, 2021) 100–25.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Middle Eastern derivation, wherein Sefer ha-Geburah features among numerous traditions of linguistic kabbalah combined with magical texts and recipes (viz. NY Public Library MS 190 [formerly MS Sassoon 56]), in between excerpts from Sefer ha-Razim, short kabbalistic sodot (secrets) on divine names, and formulae of angelic adjurations.[45] It is, however, the early modern Ashkenazi manuscript culture in which the texts of Brit ha-Menuḥah burgeoned, copied in full, excerpted into compilations, or abridged, especially into books of practical kabbalistic recipes and how-to books. The circulation of Brit ha-Menuḥah or parts of its textual layers in the early modern Ashkenazi compilations of kabbalistic and practical handbooks found its curious counterpart in the distribution of practical formulae that employ sefirot as entities that may be adjured and coerced by humans aiming to harness sefirotic powers for their own, often mundane, ends. One such exemplary practical handbook, a late seventeenth- to early eighteenth-century Ashkenazi product of mostly singular scribal and compilatory work, Oxford-Bodleian MS Opp. 485, comprises in its current form the full text of Brit ha-Menuḥah (following the printed edition of Amsterdam 1648), encompassed by an assemblage of recipes and short magical and kabbalistic textual units or excerpts thereof. Among the latter, there appear several textual pieces in which adjurations of ten sefirot were recommended for the practitioner for the purposes of annihilation of evil spirits and forces. These adjurations would be designed to affect the ten sefirot directly, as in formulae against powers of impurity addressed to them ("I adjure you, ten sefirot . . . ," fols. 239v–240r), and followed by formulations toward their counterpart angelic classes. Similarly structured adjurations feature in recipes against illnesses caused by sorcery, either of human (natural) or spiritual (preternatural) provenance, and resulting in the possession of a person by evil spirits, male or female (e.g., "We beseech you, ten sefirot, and ten classes [of angels], and ten [supreme] angels, with the names of angels," fol. 227v).[46]

Adjurations against evil forces that appear in the codex Opp. 485 refer also to a medieval kabbalistic idea of the emanation of the left side—that is, the mirror reflection of the sefirotic structure that sustains the powers of evil.[47] This idea gained traction in the early to mid-seventeenth century, particularly in Ashkenaz, to some degree thanks to the circulation of texts accrued in compendia of Lurianic kabbalah, such as 'Emeq ha-Melek (first printed in Amsterdam, 1648), that entertained interest

[45] Gideon Bohak, A Fifteenth-Century Manuscript of Jewish Magic: Ms New York Public Library, Heb. 190 (Formerly Sassoon 56); Introduction, Annotated Edition and Facsimile (2 vols.; Los Angeles: Cherub 2014), fols. 72–73 (Hebrew). See a parallel version in New York JTS MS 1967, fol. 13r.

[46] On exorcism formulae in this manuscript, see Sara Zfatman, Jewish Exorcism in Early Modern Ashkenaz (Jerusalem: Magnes, 2015) 375–430 (Hebrew).

[47] For medieval kabbalistic conceptualizations of evil and the divine, see, recently, Moshe Idel, Primeval Evil in Kabbalah: Totality, Perfection, Perfectibility (New York: Ktav, 2020) 189–236, with further bibliography adduced there. On some early conceptualisations of demonic forces in Ashkenazi kabbalistic traditions, see Boaz Huss, "Demonology and Magic in the Writings of R. Menahem Ziyyoni," Kabbalah 10 (2004) 55–72.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press in explanations of the metaphysical status of evil.[48] The recipes of MS Opp. 485 recommend invoking the names of ten classes of preexistent angelic figures in order to gain protection from their demonic counterparts that control the evil powers. In the same vein, some recipes in the codex advise adjurations of ten sefirot for the procedure of annihilating the influence of the left emanation ("I adjure you, ten sefirot, Keter, Ḥokmah, Binah, etc., so that the sefirot of impurity disappear," fol. 230r, cf. also fol. 239v). A more practical and somewhat simpler recipe suggested that, in instances when a person needs to be ridden of evil spirits who possessed them, the names of ten sefirot should be written down in a bowl inside a drawing of the Star of David, followed by the verses of Ps 109:6 and 91:10 in reverse. The procedure concludes once the possessed person drinks from the bowl: the liquid wipes the text from the bowl's surface and allows ingestion of the verses and the names of sefirot, whose power literally wipes the negative influences from the affected individual (fol. 419v, cf. also Oxford-Bodleian MS Opp. 432, fol. 150r, MS St Petersburg 326, fol. 34r).

The latter recipe, well-distributed in other Ashkenazi codices, is perhaps the most acute example of the materialization of sefirot in practical procedures that involve coercion of sefirotic powers by means of physical action, and not (or not only) via symbolic, mental, and intellectual effort on the part of humans. Equally well represented in the MS Opp. 485 are the adjuratory formulae that list ten supreme angelic figures "in charge of ten sefirot" (e.g., fol. 232v), that is, those that ought to be adjured in order to influence sefirot. These lists accurately reproduce the order of sefirot and the ten names of warrior-angels known from Sefer ha-Geḇurah, subsequently deployed in the text of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot.[49] As the main textual unit that MS Opp. 485 holds is the full copy of Sefer Brit ha-Menuḥah, it seems only reasonable that smaller texts copied in the same compilation (and by the hand of the same scribe-compiler) would practically engage the theoretical spectrum of the text situated in the center of the compiled volume. The short formulae of adjurations of angels and sefirot, evidently extracted from texts belonging to Brit ha-Menuḥah and copied into the recipes in MS Opp. 485, are thus fully integrated within the sundry textual make-up of this Ashkenazi practical and kabbalistic manual.

[48] See Gershom Scholem, Lurianic Kabbalah: Collected Studies (ed. Daniel Abrams; Los Angeles: Cherub, 2008) 368–69 (Hebrew). A similar type of textual matter frequently copied and recast in early 17th-cent. Ashkenaz was the so-called Sefer 'Amud ha-Sma'li attributed to the 13th-cent. Spanish kabbalist Moses of Burgos. See Avi Kallenbach, "A Reworking of R. Moses of Burgos' Treatise on the Left Emanation: The Interpolation of Kabbalistic Documents in Later Manuscript Witnesses and Prints," Kabbalah 41 (2018) 251–78 (Hebrew); Oded Porat, "Who Is the Beautiful Maiden Without Eyes" and the Riddle of the Tay'a: A Chapter in the History of Kabbalah in the Second Half of the Thirteenth Century (Los Angeles: Cherub, 2019) 288–93 (Hebrew); Na'ama Ben Shahar, "The Author of 'Sefer ha-Qelippot' (The Book of Shells)," Kabbalah 50 (2021) 153–72.

[49] Other recipes that engage ten sefirot and bear textual resemblances to parts of Brit ha-Menuḥah and Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot employ vocalization patterns of the Tetragrammaton matched with specific sefirah and its counterpart class of angels. See, e.g., MS Opp. 485, fol. 241v.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Compiled Matter: Reading a Textual Unit Heterogeneously

Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot, the text in which the adjurations of sefirot (based on parts of Brit ha-Menuḥah) develop perhaps into the fullest literary form, is, to the best of my knowledge, preserved in three manuscripts, all of which display an integrating compilatory intent and at least partial Ashkenazi provenance. The Oxford-Bodleian MS Michael Add. 18 contains apparently the earliest of the still extant copies of the text, and also the shortest one.[50] The manuscript consists of sixty-five parchment folios (sixty-five folios in foliation) forming a uniform codicological unit, of which 117 pages (up to fol. 59r) are written with fifteenth-century Sephardi non-square script. These pages have been used as material support for a portion of Ḥayyei ha-'Olam ha-Ba' of Abraham Abulafia, a key text of this medieval peripatetic kabbalist's oeuvre that details the techniques of achieving a prophetic experience on meditating the seventy-two-letter divine name arranged into twenty-four units of nine letters each.[51] Folios that had been left empty after the initial assemblage of the quires of the codex were, however, continuously filled with the text of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot written in an Italian-Ashkenazi script dating approximately to the early sixteenth century. The text smoothly begins on top of folio 59v. This textual unit consists of four folios, in its first part inscribed in Italian cursive script and in square script with clear Ashkenazi features deployed to highlight initial words and divine and angelic names. The same square script was also used to write the second part of the text that includes adjuration formulae, inscribed both within and outside the ten circular shapes of sefirot. The second part of text that contains the sequence of circles representing sefirot, with their surrounding prayer-adjurations, is clearly planned on the page and meticulously executed (fig. 2 below).[52] The scribe's choice of writing style and scribal register emphasizes the ritual character of the second part of the text, as the square script evokes the manner of representing canonical texts used for liturgical purposes. Even if of small size, the compilation of MS Michael Add. 18 appears entirely coherent. The later, Italian-Ashkenazi (likely, northern Italian) scribe based their copying project on the principle of transcribing texts that actively deploy divine names in kabbalistic performances, even if these performances were primarily intended to lead to dissimilar ends.[53] The same scribe

[50] Neubauer, Catalogue, 552 no. 1581; Beit-Arié, Supplement, 267.

[51] See Moshe Idel, The Mystical Experience in Abraham Abulafia (Albany: SUNY Press, 1988) 22–28, 34–37, 88–92, 120–22.

[52] In the present condition, the pair of seventh and eighth sefirot appears at the end of the text as if out of sequence, without prayer-formulae around the circles that were provided on earlier folios. From the current damage to fol. 63 and its marks of folding, it appears that the last folio was misbound, probably during the process of modern rebinding of the manuscript, and should appear before fol. 62, on whose recto side the text of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot ends.

[53] On Abulafia's negative approach to using divine names in practical kabbalistic performances, pronounced especially in his Geṭ ha-Šemoṭ, see Moshe Idel, "Between Magic of the Holy Names and the Kabbalah of the Divine Names: R. Abraham Abulafia's Criticism," Mahanayim 14 (2002) 79–95 (Hebrew); Harari, "Practical Kabbalah," 45–48.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

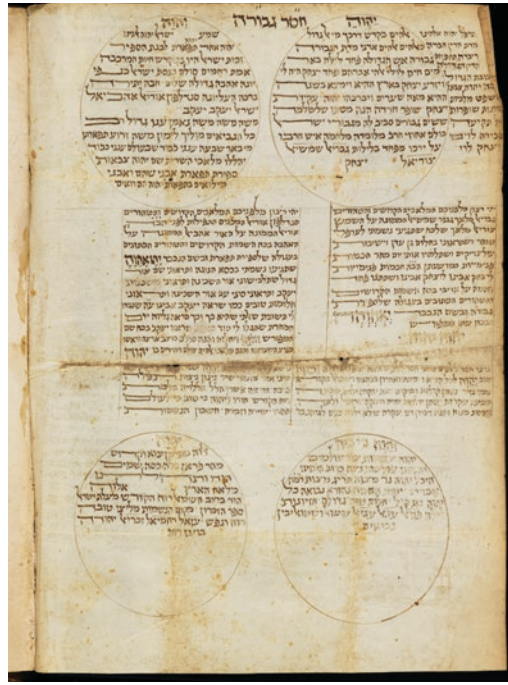

Figure 2
The Bodleian Libraries, University of Oxford. MS Michael Add. 18, folio 63v. Creative Commons licence CC-BY-NC 4.0.

not only copied Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot, but also read and annotated the Abulafian Ḥayyei ha-'Olam ha-Ba' in the first part of the codex, placed two poetical pieces at the beginning and end of the volume, and finally adduced on its last page four short magical pieces that seek the divine name to achieve supernatural protective power over harming spirits.[54] The overarching principle for the compilatory project, one that connects practical kabbalistic commentary on the deployment of angelic names and ten sefirot with the Abulafian text on performative uses of the divine name, can be read out of the scribe's highlight on folio 54v, where their handsome manicula points to the line: "through the gradual emergence of the name you will comprehend everything that I mentioned to you on this matter, and through the knowledge of the name you will comprehend everything."[55]

The second of the manuscripts that contain Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot was almost certainly copied in Italy, in late sixteenth- or early seventeenth-century Ashkenazi cursive script with a visible Italian influence (NLI 8° 151).[56] In this volume, the [54] Poems by Solomon ben Isaac, edited in Ha-Paliṭ (Berlin, 1850) 34–36, and partly by Ben-Zion Dinur, Yisra'el be-Golah II.4 (Tel Aviv, 1969) 370.

[55] MS Michael Add. 18, fol. 54v.

[56] Scholem, Kabbalistic Manuscripts, no. 28.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press graphic representation of sefirot is fully integrated within the flow of its explanatory textual parts. It contains circular shapes assigned to sefirot Keter, Ḥokmah, Binah, Ḥesed, Geburah, Tif'eret, and Neṣaḥ, with the figures of Yesod, Hod, and Malkut missing; all the parts of the instructive text are, nevertheless, present in full. Here, the first part of the text describing six procedures related to the sefirotic circles, as well as adjuratory formulae, constitutes one cohesive textual block. Some of the graphic representations of sefirotic circles seem to be mere accompaniments to this textual block but do not constitute a hermeneutically independent and visually separate part of the text, to the point that the copyist seems to have had no awareness of the graphic elements that are clearly lacking, and which would have made some of the recommended procedures coherent. The compilatory intent of the entire one-hundred-folio manuscript, which was copied and compiled by a single scribe, transpires from the selection and order of the assembled textual units. The volume opens and closes with a series of recipes and adjurations (fols. 1r–34, 103v–107v, partially in Italian written in Hebrew script), whose larger part includes a practical guide to using three-letter components of seventy-two-letter divine names for various—mainly therapeutic and apotropaic—ends. Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot follows the introductory recipes in the compilation (fols. 34v–44r) and precedes an anthology of four astrological-magical and medical treatises, juxtaposed with magical and practical kabbalistic recipes.[57] All of the textual units in this codex seem to have been pulled together for a pragmatic reason: the compilation of texts exposes astrological, apotropaic, and medical character in such a manner that the textual pieces in the center of the codex provide a learned, theoretical backdrop for the practical guidelines and more quotidian recommendations for everyday lay use that enclose the whole compilation.

MS Michael 473 presents by far the most complex organizational enterprise. It is a composite manuscript—a manuscript formed of several originally separate codicological units, arranged together only at the stage of binding or rebinding the material. This process is normally carried out by first owners of manuscripts, and later by book collectors and librarians. In the case of MS Michael 473, the moment of putting all of its textual contents within one binding remains unknown; however, it had already assumed its current composite state before Moritz Steinschneider [57] It includes the Hebrew translations of Arnaldus de Villanova, On the Judgement of Astronomy (Panim be-Mišpaṭ, trans. Solomon ben Avigdor); Pseudo-Hippocrates, De Esse Aegrotorum (Panim le-Fanim, trans. Tanḥum ben Moses of Beaucaire); Sefer ha-Tamar (Book of the Date Palm); and Immanuel ben Jacob Bonfils, Tequfot (Solistices). On these texts, see Reimund Leicht, "Toward a History of Hebrew Astrological Literature," in Science in Medieval Jewish Cultures (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2011) 278–89. See also Sefer ha-Tamar, ed. Gershom Scholem, in Qiryat Sefer 3 (1926) 181–222 (Hebrew); Raphael Patai, The Jewish Alchemists (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1994) 98–118; Reimund Leicht, Astrologoumena Judaica: Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der astrologischen Literatur der Juden (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2006) 306–8. The correlation of angelic names as they transpire in Sefer ha-Geburah and the order of planets and stars as they appear in several collections of Jewish astrological texts, primarily of practical character, requires a separate study.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

compiled a first brief description of the Michael Collection of Hebrew manuscripts in 1847, shortly after the death of their owner, Heimann Josef Michael, and before its transfer to the Bodleian Library in Oxford.[58] The arrangement of the current codex, now in modern binding, seems to preserve an arbitrary collection of codicological and paleographic units, written in four distinct hands. The largest of these units spans a mid-seventeenth-century compilation of magical fragments and recipes pooled together with a series of short early Ashkenazi mystical commentaries—predominantly on various divine names—and early kabbalistic sodot ("secrets"), distributed across the current volume in three separate segments. Two other sizeable units consist of an anonymous Seder 'Aṣilut ("The Order of Emanation") and a commentary reminiscent of the teachings of Israel Sarug (fols. 28r–242v)—one of the main proponents of the kabbalah of Isaac Luria in sixteenth- and early seventeenth-century Europe—as well as a staggering collection of short moralistic instructions for kabbalistically oriented practices, also of Lurianic provenance, well integrated with various practical recipes and excerpts of magical texts (fols. 35r–93v, 183r–192v).[59]

Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot features in the codex Michael 473 in the third codicological unit (fols. 20r–32v), preceded by a part that holds a compilation headed 'Inyenei qabbalah ("Matters of Kabbalah," fols. 7r–19v). Crucially, the two neighboring codicological segments had featured together long before they reached the current composite arrangement, since both bear consistent signs of systematic reading and marking of noteworthy passages. While the earlier unit contains marginal annotations by the scribe of its main text, the second lacks such marginalia. However, both units contain identically shaped maniculae in brown ink of the same quality as that of the text of the second unit.[60] For one, these pointers highlight references to subject matters that occupy both codicological segments: on the one hand, the issue of the transmigration of parts of human souls (fol. 21r, emphasis in the text Šemu'ah be-'Inyenei ha-Gilgul, attributed to Moses Cordovero); on the other hand, the practical expiatory effect of the use of specific kavvanot (emphases within a collection of Lurianic provenance, fols. 17v, 18v, 22r, twice on 22v), grounded in the theory of the structural-ontological interrelation of sefirot with [58] Moritz Steinschneider, Ozrot Chajim. Katalog der Michael'schen Bibliothek, herausgegeben von den Michael'schen Erben (Hamburg: J. J. Halberstadt, 1848) 63, no. 742 (Hebrew): "A collectaneum of several matters in kabbalah, especially of the kabbalah of Ar"i (Isaac Luria), a commentary on (a piyyuṭ) Ha'ohez, spells and remedies." See also Saverio Campanini, "The Michael Collection," in Jewish Treasures from Oxford Libraries (ed. Rebecca Abrams and Cesar Merchán-Hamann; Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2020) 206–29, 295–97.

[59] For a more detailed, although not yet full, enumeration of these excerpts, see Beit-Arié, Supplement, 534.

[60] Identical maniculae and other reading marks are found in another codex from the Michael Collection of the Bodleian Library, in most part written by the same scribe, who copied the first and the penultimate codicological units of MS Michael 473. The textual, codicological, and paleographic makeup of this volume, its historical setting, and its affinities with MS Mich. 473 will be the subject of a separate study.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press divine names (exposed on fols. 7r, 8r, 9v, 11r). Indeed, the reader who distributed the maniculae throughout texts in these two units responded with vivid interest to the issues that inform the everyday penitentiary performance, notwithstanding whether these originated within "Cordoverian" or "Lurianic" kabbalistic theories.

The passages that were highlighted most frequently in these two interrelated units of MS Michael 473 refer to the question of the ever-changing balance between the power of mercy and of stern judgment, embedded within the sefirotic ontologies, and which, within the human reality, manifestly incline toward the side of judgment (fol. 16r). In continuation with these highlights, the reader also marked up sections on receiving an additional soul (nešamah) on the night of shabbat that equally may be good or may be contaminated by evil and sin, leaving one's constitution with a lasting negative imprint (fol. 21r).[61] Another of the spotlighted excerpts explains the idea of a dividing screen (masaḵ) between each of the four upper worlds of the kabbalistic metaphysics, extending vertically from the source of emanation toward the material world, each of which prevents some of the divine light from fully penetrating into the lower world.[62] The reader's mark, however, highlighted a sentence that clarifies that, in spite of the separating screen between the world of emanation (that is, the uppermost divine level of so-called aṣilut) and the world of making (i.e., the lowest, called 'asiyah), there still exists a direct, even if fine, connection between the two (fol. 16v). This remark adds an instructive layer to the reading of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot, the text situated at the end of the two related codicological units. Here, the same manicula points to three passages on using the adjuration of sefirot that may directly impact the material reality, all apparently emphasized by the reader on the grounds of the connection between the upper and the lower worlds, despite an ontological divide between these two realms—an issue that drew their attention in the previous textual units. It seems not without reason that one of the maniculae in the margin of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot directs attention to the direct, practical use of the sefirah Geḇurah that stands for the aspect of divine judgment. According to the underscored text, in order to gain the upper hand over one's enemies, it is necessary to engage the power of harsh divine judgment—and this was the predominance of harsh judgment in the material world that preoccupied the same reader in the texts assembled across several quires of the two codicological units.

Certainly, this motley of texts and excerpts annotated with the same maniculae but stemming from various kabbalistic and intellectual traditions need not have been initially—and some of them surely were not—interrelated, historically or otherwise. They were cogently put together by a reader (likely, the scribe of the [61] On this matter of the so-called evil 'ibbur (incarnation) in Moses Cordovero's thought, see J. H. Chajes, Between Worlds: Dybbuks, Exorcists, and Early Modern Judaism (Philadelphia: Pennsylvania University Press, 2003) 17–22.

[62] Cf. J. H. Chajes, "Imaginative Thinking with a Lurianic Diagram," JQR 110 (2020) 48. On the idea of the "screen" or "veil" between the worlds, see, e.g., Scholem, "The Garment of the Soul and Ḥaluqa de-Rabanan," Tarbiz 24 (1956) 297–306 (Hebrew).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press second unit) who expressed much interest in the matters of evil and its rectification by humans, but equally so in accessing the supernatural powers to steer the divine structure, including its penchant toward stern judgment, in accordance with their needs. Thus, the collection of these textual units became less haphazard for the reader than it appears to the modern eye that is shaped by dominant narratives of the historiography of kabbalah and that has tended to separate the "practical kabbalistic sensu stricto" from other types of discourse ingrained in kabbalistic literatures,[63] or simply, to read textual units out of the contexts of their material genre. As it appears in early modern multitext codices of various origins—and kabbalistic codices are no exception to this fashion—one subject matter may be treated by texts grappling with it from various angles, be they conflicting or incongruous for a contemporary reader, across a given compilation. The reader's responses lock this potential polyvalence of texts often by providing a unifying trait or by discerning some commonalities, thus overcoming the sense of interpretive unease. This was the case of the reader-scribe who marked off the margins of the two-unit compilation in MS Michael 473. By reshaping the literary and material aspects of the compilation for their own use and according to their own intellectual agendas, they co-composed the compilation's textual identity, or one of its meaningful layers, thus partaking in a project of its collective textual authorship.[64]

Readings in Composite Matter

In this regard, it is not only the reader-maker of the text in its material format that assumes a role in the collective enterprise of its "authorship"; as parts of one textual entity that share common features, the compiled texts constitute that entity integrally as much as they are shaped by its particular organization. In this sense, the compiled matter displays an interdependent, collective identity, while conveying meanings specific to the time and culture of their copyists and contemporary readers. Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot—a text whose supposed origins reach the fourteenth century and the theologies of the divine name that much precede the medieval period—features in the compilation of MS Michael 473, while coherently and purposely continuing discourses on engaging with divine (sefirotic) powers. The theoretical basis of these discourses provides more speculative texts placed within the same compilation and ascribed by the copyists to Moses Cordovero and Isaac Luria—the two key figures of the kabbalistic panorama in early modernity. In effect, Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot and MS Michael 473 as a whole expose intellectual interests rooted in kabbalistic traditions of diverse provenance but textually reworked and materially [63] Cf. Harari, "Practical Kabbalah," 57.

[64] On an elevated role of readers to that of "authors" in premodern Western European literary contexts, see Roger Chartier and Peter Stallybras, "Reading and Authorship: The Circulation of Shakespeare 1590–1619," in A Concise Companion to Shakespeare and the Text (ed. Andrew Murphy; Oxford: Blackwell, 2007) 35–56. For the ideas of "dispersed authorship" in early modern English literature, see Adam Smyth, Material Texts in Early Modern England (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2018).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press redeployed according to reading interests manifest in the learning/scribal centers of mid-seventeenth-century Eastern and Central Europe. The clout of Moses Cordovero or Isaac Luria plays an important role in the politics of crafting textual matter, but neither one of these individuals stands as the only participant in the process of textual creation.[65]

The text of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot centers on a detailed description of rituals whose efficacy rests on ontological assumptions latent in kabbalistic theosophy that allow the practitioners to access the dynamics of the godhead directly and consequently to assume control over perceivable reality with the use of divine power. As marked out by the scribe who transcribed Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot in MS Michael 473, the text and its prescribed procedures depend on a particular graphic arrangement of the text, one that ought to be replicated in the performances of writing divine and angelic names and one that shapes the practitioner's relation to the matters and powers referred to in the text. Even if not simply effecting it, the (material) form of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot in MS Michael 473 amplifies and highlights its potential performative import.[66] As any text is only available in its material form, and this particular text exists in three material renditions, the current article has set each of those three formats forth, highlighting the similarities and idiosyncrasies of their compilatory intent. As it appeared, locating Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot in its immediate material contexts enabled its "miscellaneous reading,"[67] which showcased various ways in which it was integrated into textual compilations and the role this textual unit achieved in codices oriented toward practical knowledge of all kinds.

The material format of multiple-text manuscripts (often labeled as collectanea)—especially uniform compilations of miscellaneous type that respond to a related range of topics—allows for the recontextualizing of traditions and shifting of purported thematic import of any individually conceived textual unit. So, for instance, pieces of text that belonged to Brit ha-Menuḥah and that underlay Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot were reworked into early modern recipe books as integral parts of practical (magical) and medical know-how (such as Opp. 485) in such a way that the kabbalistic and magical traditions effectively blended in semivernacular contexts. Likewise, the same traditions related to ten supreme angels and ten sefirot that developed into Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot featured in larger early modern compilations, especially those originating as miscellaneous compilations. This material format of compiled short texts and excerpts thereof enabled particular modes of textual consumption that could confront new and contemporarily dominant types of kabbalistic knowledge by blurring their literary and authorial boundaries. These heterogenous ways of [65] See, e.g., Agata Paluch, "Intentionality and Kabbalistic Practices in Early Modern East-Central Europe," Aries (2019) 83–111.

[66] Paraphrasing D. F. McKenzie's now idiomatic expression "form effects meaning," in his Bibliography and the Sociology of Texts (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1999) 13.

[67] To apply the phrase coined by Zarnowiecki, "Reading Shakespeare Miscellaneously," 34–36.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press reading and crafting texts not only resulted from the "unfixed" material format of a miscellaneous collectaneum that had the potential to be expanded and assembled by readers through binding and rejoining of quires (as was the case of MS Michael 473); rather, it made them possible.

It is through a reading of the textual unit of Qabbalat 'Eser Sefirot as materially situated, trailing its scribe's and early reader's footprints, that we may recover a partial vestige of the otherwise lost compilatory intent behind the gatherings of MS Michael 473, and the layers of meaning that it had assumed and fashioned close to the time of its creation. Anonymous compilers' and editors' intentions in creating meaningful volumes are usually ambiguous in the case of nonuniform composite volumes, which to all appearances seem disorderly and unsystematic, especially as they underwent subsequent rebinding and repositioning of quires. And yet, active involvement in the contents of composite textual arrangements bestrides the layers of meanings anchored in the material form of the text, at times escaping the forethought of their producers, with that of their modern readers (both sides unfailingly conditioned, historically and culturally).[68] Each codex ensues from a historically embedded procedure predicated on certain epistemic and cultural presumptions. And so, multiple-text and composite manuscripts, aptly described by scholars as "corpus organizers,"[69] might be perceived as practical strategies of organizing and communicating the divergent corpora of knowledge that they carry and thus (re)produce in time. As objects of the transmission of kabbalistic knowledge, miscellaneous and composite volumes (collectanea) involve readings that reach beyond texts as individualized or idealized objects and toward their reframing within the compilatory context of each codex—a material evidence of decisions taken by those involved in their making and transmission. In the study of premodern Jewish kabbalistic literatures, appreciating texts from the perspective of their material genre offers a fresh hermeneutic of reading kabbalah as a multifaceted textual tradition, one that zooms in on how and why some of its layers circulated in miscellaneous cultural milieus across centuries.

[68] See, further, Arthur Bahr, Fragments and Assemblages: Forming Compilations of Medieval London (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2013) 1–50, for a mode of "compilatory" reading in the context of English medieval literature. See also a thought-provoking attempt at such reading of a composite codex by Naomi Howell, "Reflecting (on) the Other: Jewish-Christian Relations in Cligès and Ms. Michael 569 (*)," Speculum 91 (2016) 374–421.

[69] Alessandro Bausi, "A Case for Multiple Text Manuscripts Being 'Corpus-Organisers,'" Manuscript Cultures Newsletter 3 (2010) 34–36.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0017816023000147 Published online by Cambridge University Press

AMULETS AND MAGIC BOWLS

Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity

by

JOSEPH NAVEH SHAUL SHAKED

THE MAGNES PRESS, THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY, JERUSALEM
E. J. BRILL, LEIDEN

Distributed by E.J. Brill
Leiden, Holland

©
By The Magnes Press
The Hebrew University
Jerusalem 1985

PJ
5208
A2
N38

UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA
LIBRARIES

ISBN 965-223-531-8

Printed in Israel
Typesetting: Yael Kaplan, Jerusalem

CONTENTS

Preface 9

Introduction

1. Aramaic Magic Texts: General Description 13
2. History of Research: Bowls 19
3. Amulets Published So Far 21
4. The Newly Found Amulets 24
5. Magic Bowls in the Present Volume 26
6. Other Texts of Magic and the Geniza Material 29
7. Notes on the Language of the Texts 30
8. Magic in the Palestinian Amulets and their Religious World 35

Texts and Commentary

I. Amulets from Palestine and Syria

Amulet 1. Provenance unknown. Dr. R. Hecht Collection, Haifa 40
Amulet 2. Ḥorvat Kanaf. Golan Archaeological Museum, Qaṣrin, No. 3164 44
Amulet 3. Ḥorvat Kanaf, Golan Archaeological Museum, Qaṣrin, No. 3163 50
Amulet 4. Aleppo. Museum of the Flagellation Convent, Jerusalem 54
Amulet 5. Emmaus. Present location unknown 60
Amulet 6. Syriac. Provenance and present location unknown 62
Amulet 7. Ağabeyli, Turkey. Present location unknown 68
Amulet 8. Teqoaʿ (?). Museum of the Flagellation Convent, Jerusalem 78
Amulet 9. Oxyrrhynchus (?). University of Cologne, T. Colon, Inv. No. 6 82
Amulet 10. Ḥorvat Rimmon. Israel Department of Antiquities, No. 80.880 84
Amulet 11. Nirim. Israel Department of Antiquities, No. 57.733 90
Amulet 12. Nirim. Israel Department of Antiquities No. 57.739 94
Amulet 13. Nirim. Israel Department of Antiquities, No. 57.744 98

Amulet 14. Provenance unknown. Collection of J. Sammel, Munich 102
Amulet 15. Provenance unknown. Israel Museum, No. 69.3.146 104
Appendix to Amulet 15 111

II. Incantation Bowls from Mesopotamia

Bowl 1. Syriac. Formerly in the possession of V. Barakat, Jerusalem 124
Bowl 2. Hebrew University, Institute of Archaeology, No. 1401 134
Bowl 3. Hebrew University, Institute of Archaeology, No. 1399 146
Bowl 4. Hebrew University, Institute of Archaeology, No. 1042 152
Bowl 5. Israel Museum, No. 80.1.1 158
Bowl 6. Israel Museum, No. 80.1.2 164
Bowl 7. Israel Museum, No. 80.1.3 168
Bowl 8. Israel Museum, No. 69.20.265 172
Bowl 9. Formerly in the possession of V. Barakat, Jerusalem 174
Bowl 10. Syriac. Jewish Historical Museum, Belgrade, No. 243 180
Bowl 11. Jewish Historical Museum, Belgrade, No. 242/1 184
Bowl 12. 12a: Jewish National and University Library, Jerusalem, No. Heb. 4°, 6079
12b: Metropolitan Museum, New York, No. 86.11.259 188
Bowl 13. Collection of V. Klagsbald, Jerusalem 198

III. Amulets and Fragments of Magic Books from the Cairo Geniza

Geniza 1. Amulet on cloth. T-S A.S. 142.174 216
Geniza 2. Two pages from a magic book. T-S A.S. 143.229 216
Geniza 3. Amulet. T-S A.S. 143.403 220
Geniza 4. Amulet.T-S K 1.68 222
Geniza 5. Four pages from a magic book. T-S K 1.70 224
Geniza 6. Four pages from a magic book. T-S K 1.73 230
Geniza 7. Amulet. T-S K 1.127 237
Geniza 8. Amulet. T-S K 1.137 239

Abbreviations 242
Bibliography 243
Glossary 265
Indices 285

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

Figures

(All drawings by Ada Yardeni, unless otherwise noted)

Fig. 1. Amulet 1 43
Fig. 2. Amulet 2 48
Fig. 3. Amulet 3 53
Fig. 4. Amulet 4. After Testa 1962, p. 53, Fig. 12 59
Fig. 5. Amulet 5. After Vincent 1908, p. 382 63
Fig. 6. Amulet 6. From Dupont-Sommer 1946, Pl. III 65
Fig. 7. Amulets 7a and 7b. From Dupont-Sommer 1950/51, pp. 202, 211, Figs. 1,2 73
Fig. 8. Amulets 7a and 7b 77
Fig. 9. Amulet 8 80
Fig. 10. Amulet 8. From Milik 1967, p. 450 81
Fig. 11. Amulet 9 85
Fig. 12. Amulet 10 86
Fig. 13. Amulet 11 93
Fig. 14. Amulet 12 97
Fig. 15. Amulet 13 100
Fig. 16. Amulet 14 101
Fig. 17. Amulet 15 109
Fig. 18. ʿAbd-Išoʿ and "the accursed Satan", who wears "the likeness of a hateful woman of dark appearance". From a Syriac magic book; Gollancz 1912, facing p. 60 117
Fig. 19. A Jewish amulet printed in Germany in the 18th century. From Shachar 1917, No. 3 119
Fig. 20. A fresco at Bawit, Egypt. From Perdrizet 1922, p. 14, Fig. 6 120
Fig. 21. A Jewish amulet printed in Warsaw in 1867 133
Fig. 22. The text on Bowl 4 155

Plates

(Photos on Pls. 1, 12, 14–20, 25, 30–31 by Z. Radovan)

Plate 1. Amulet 1: container, rolled and unrolled. Courtesy of Dr. R. Hecht, Haifa
Plate 2. Amulet 2: rolled and unrolled. Ḥorvat Kanaf. Courtesy of the Israel Department of Antiquities (=IDA)
Plate 3. Amulet 3. Ḥorvat Kanaf. IDA
Plate 4. Amulet 4. Aleppo. Courtesy of the Museum of the Flagellation Convent, Jerusalem (=MFC)

Plate 5.	Amulet 6. Courtesy of the A. Dupont-Sommer Archives (=DSA)
Plate 6.	Amulets 7a and 7b. Ağabeyli. DSA
Plate 7.	Amulet 8. Teqoaᶜ (?). MFC
Plate 8.	Amulet 9. Oxyrrhynchus (?). Courtesy of Prof. F. Klein-Franke
Plate 9.	Amulet 10: en face and from the side. Ḥorvat Rimmon. IDA
Plate 10.	Amulet 11. Nirim. IDA
Plate 11.	Amulets 12 and 13. Nirim. IDA
Plate 12.	Amulet 14. Courtesy of J. Sammel, Munich
Plate 13:	Amulet 15. Courtesy of the Israel Museum (=IM)
Pls. 14–15.	Bowl 1. Courtesy of V. Barakat, Jerusalem (=VB)
Pls. 16–17.	Bowl 2. Courtesy of the Hebrew University Institute of Archaeology (=HUIA)
Pls. 18–19.	Bowl 4. HUIA
Plate 20.	Bowl 3. HUIA
Plate 21.	Bowl 5. IM
Plate 22.	Bowl 6. IM
Plate 23.	Bowl 7. IM
Plate 24.	Bowl 8. IM
Plate 25.	Bowl 9. VB
Plate 26.	Bowl 10. Courtesy of the Jewish Historical Museum, Belgrade (=JHM)
Plate 27.	Bowl 11. JHM
Plate 28.	Bowl 12a. Courtesy of the late Prof. G.G. Scholem
Plate 29.	Bowl 12b. Courtesy of the Metropolitan Museum, New York
Pls. 30–31.	Bowl 13. Courtesy of V. Klagsbald, Jerusalem
Plate 32.	Geniza 1. Courtesy of the Cambridge University Library (=CUL)
Plate 33.	Geniza 2. CUL
Plate 34.	Geniza 3 and Geniza 4. CUL
Pls. 35–36.	Geniza 5. CUL
Pls 37–38.	Geniza 6. CUL
Plate 39.	Geniza 7. CUL
Plate 40.	Geniza 8. CUL

*

Signs used in the transliteration of texts

( ) Uncertain readings
[ ] Restoration of lost writing
< > Omitted by the scribe by mistake
⌜ ⌝ Written above (or outside) the line
{ } Superfluous writing in the text (e.g. in case of dittography)

PREFACE

It was a widespread practice in the area of Palestine, Syria and Asia Minor during the fourth to the seventh centuries of the current era to use talismans written on metal sheets in order to ward off the powers of evil, to heal people, or to gain the love of a person. The common Babylonian practice of the same period was to write incantation texts on earthenware bowls. The number of Mesopotamian texts written in Jewish Aramaic, Syriac and Mandaic on clay bowls published to date reaches about one hundred and fifty, whereas less than ten Aramaic amulets from Palestine and its vicinity have been published so far.

This book developed from the desire of the two authors to do a modest work on a number of Aramaic magic bowls which at that time (almost ten years ago) were in Jerusalem in the hands of dealers and in the collection of the Institute of Archaeology of the Hebrew University. It has developed to its present dimensions as more texts have turned up. Work on some newly found metal amulets has made it necessary to study and revise the readings of the whole corpus of Aramaic amulets from the area of the Holy Land. Thus fifteen amulets have been edited in this volume — all those which can be deciphered with some confidence — and twelve new bowl texts written in Babylonian Jewish Aramaic and Syriac.

In order to understand the terminology and praxis of the texts discussed in this volume, it is essential to refer to contemporary and later texts from other sources: the Greek magic papyri, the early magic literature in Hebrew, and the magic fragments in the Cairo Geniza. Of the last group, so far almost completely neglected, a few selected texts are included in this work: five amulets, and three fragments from books of magic recipes.

The texts are provided with translations and commentaries, and a detailed glossary of all words is given. All newly published texts are accompanied by photographs. It has been our wish to make available to scholars material for the study of popular religious life of Jews and pagans in the crucial period which corresponds to that of the Talmud. Our primary aim has been to provide philologically reliable material, and not to offer a detailed study of the religious implications of these texts.

It is out pleasant task to acknowledge the help received from various institutions and persons in the course of preparing the present study.

The following institutions provided us with photographs and allowed us to publish these texts and we should like to extend our thanks to their directors and staff: the Institute of Archaeology and the National University Library of the Hebrew University; the Israel Department of Antiquities; the Israel Museum; Museum of the Flagellation Convent, Jerusalem; the Jewish Historical Museum of Belgrade; the Metropolitan Museum; the New York Public Library; the Geniza Research Unit, Cambridge University Library.

The persons who made it possible for us to publish texts from their collections are Mr. Victor Barakat, Dr. Reuven Hecht, Mr. Victor Klagsbald, Dr. Wladimir Rosenbaum and Mr. Joseph Sammel.

Dr. Amos Kloner and Mr. Zvi Maoz of the Israel Department of Antiquities, the excavators of Ḥorvat Rimmon and Ḥorvat Kanaf, placed at our disposal their finds and their notes.

Mme. Hélène Lozachmeur has found and put at our disposal the original photos of Amulets 7a and 7b which were used by the late Professor A. Dupont-Sommer. We are very grateful for this help, which came when the book was nearly ready in the press.

Several friends and colleagues have given valuable advice. We should like to mention in particular the late Professor G.G. Scholem, as well as J.C. Greenfield, M. Sokoloff, G. Stroumsa and Y. Sussman.

Mrs. Ada Yardeni has contributed to this volume much more than drawings and layout; in several places she has improved the readings of the text. Mrs. Tamar Naveh has typed the manuscript and has rendered great assistance in the preparation of the book. Mrs. Miriam Shaked has done the editing of the typescript and prepared it for the press.

The staff of the Magnes Press, and in particular its director, Mr. B. Yehoshua, who has taken personal interest in this book, have done their utmost to produce an attractive-looking volume.

Jerusalem, February 1984 J.N., S.S.

INTRODUCTION

BRILL

SCRINIUM 18 (2022) 49–84

SCRINIUM
Journal of Patrology and Critical Hagiography

brill.com/scri

Syriac Spells for a Mill and Their Historical Context

Anna Cherkashina | ORCID: 0000-0003-4412-4788
Beth Mardutho: The Syriac Institute, Piscataway, NJ, USA Corresponding author tanandajubeo@gmail.com

Dmitry Cherkashin | ORCID: 0000-0002-2387-3483
Faculty of Humanities, Institute for Oriental and Classical Studies (IOCS), HSE University, Moscow, Russia dcherkashin@hse.ru

Ortal-Paz Saar | ORCID: 0000-0002-1000-0763
Department of History and Art History, Utrecht University, Utrecht, The Netherlands o.p.saar@uu.nl

Abstract

This article considers a text-unit known in five Syriac codices and consisting of up to three magical recipes. The target of all these recipes is a mill: two of them are curses (ʾassārā 'binding spell') and intend to stop the mill, while the third one is a counter-spell (šeryānā 'loosening spell'), which aims to annul the curse. One of the two binding spells includes a rare example of an Arabic incantation written in Garshuni. The main purpose of this article is to make these texts available via critical editions. In addition, light is shed on the broader context of magical practices, by drawing attention to Syriac recipes for an oven and their Jewish parallels, and by presenting two Jewish parallels of spells related to a mill: a Judaeo-Arabic text from the Cairo Genizah and a spell from a Byzantine manuscript. We offer a reconsideration of the interpretation of the Judaeo-Arabic text, as our reading differs from that of the Editio Priceps.

Keywords

Syriac charms – Book of Protection – binding spell – magic – Syriac-Arabic – Garshuni – Cairo Geniza – Judaeo-Arabic – Aramaic

© ANNA CHERKASHINA ET AL., 2022 | DOI:10.1163/18177565-BJA10062
This is an open access article distributed under the terms of the CC BY 4.0 license.
Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

1 Introduction

Syriac charms[1] collected in codices widely known as Book of Protection did not receive much scholarly attention and as noted by A. Pearson, "the field is still in its early stage".[2] Pearson states that in order for the field to progress, "our first task is to publish more source material".[3] An edition of these three recipes is thus valuable, not only to bring more source material to light, but for three more reasons. First, although they have not yet been truly edited, they have been interpreted incorrectly by previous scholars, H. Gollancz and K. Fr. Krämer (see below). Second, two of the recipes belong to the category of aggressive magic,[4] which is even less studied than other types of Syriac magical texts. Third, one of the binding spells contains an Arabic incantation written in Syriac script. Only two Syriac recipes of this kind have been edited before the current publication.[5]

Though this article focusses on Syriac recipes for the mill, attention is paid to the broader context of related magic practices. A separate section is devoted to Syriac recipes for the oven and their Jewish parallels, and another one to Jewish and Coptic recipes for the mill. Such contextualization assists in better understanding the place of magic within Syriac culture, and sheds further light on connections between Syriac Christianity and other cultures.

2 The Manuscripts

Below we provide short catalogue descriptions of the Syriac manuscripts[6] in which the recipes for the mill are found.

---

1 Our credits go to Maria C. H. Cioată for proof-reading this article and Nikita Kuzin (Freie Universität Berlin) for his valuable remarks.

2 Abigail Pearson, "Syriac Magic: an Overview of Previous Approach and Prospects for the Future," in: Studies in the Syriac Magical Traditions, eds. Marco Moriggi & Siam Bhayro (Magical and Religious Literature of Late Antiquity, 9), Leiden, 2022, p. 13.

3 Ibid., p. 25.

4 Since the usage of the term 'magic' remains a subject of discussions, we affirm that it is being used in this paper for the sake of convenience and without implying negative connotations.

5 See Cod. A §19 (Hermann Gollancz, The Book of Protection: Being a Collection of Charms, Now Edited for the First Time from Syriac mss, London, 1912, p. 14) and a dream-request recently published by Zellmann-Rohrer (Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, "A Syriac-Arabic Dream-Request and Its Jewish Tradition," Journal of Near Eastern Studies, 78/1 (2019), pp. 59–74.

6 Images of the relevant folios of the manuscripts at our disposal are provided in the Appendix.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

Houghton Syr. 160[7] (H)

Harvard University (Cambridge MA), Houghton Library, ms. Syriac 160. Former owner: I. H. Hall (1837–1896). Title: kṯīḇtā da-nṭuryā 'Protective Amulet'.[8] Paper, 49 leaves, bound, 12 × 8 cm. Up to 18 lines to page. Script: unvocalized East Syriac. 74 chapters, 17 coloured illustrations. Date and place: 1804, the village of Shibāni, Tergawar district (Hakkari, Turkey). Scribe: Gewargis bar Zayʿa from Shamsdin.

BL Or. 6673[9] (BLa[10])

London, British Library Ms. Or. 6673. Paper, 12.5 × 9.0 cm, 48 leaves. Script: unvocalized East Syriac. Date and place: 1804, the village of Shibāni, Tergawar district (Hakkari, Turkey). 67 chapters and illustrations. Up to 18 lines to page. Scribe: Gewargis.[11] Described by Gollancz, who collated the ms. with Cod. A, and edited most of the additional content, which was not in Cod. A. This part of the manuscript is available to us only via Gollancz's edition.

7 A recent description with further references can be found in Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, "More on the 'Book of Protection' and the Syriac 'Charms': New Texts and Perspectives for the Study of Magic and Religion," in: Studies in the Syriac Magical Traditions, eds. Marco Moriggi & Siam Bhayro (Magical and Religious Literature of Late Antiquity, 9), Leiden, 2022, p. 83; and Anna Cherkashina & Alexey Lyavdansky, "Syriac Love Charms. Part I. The Recipe-Type," Scrinium 17 (2021), p. 85.

8 We prefer this translation instead of the common "Book of Protection". Syriac magic codices are very rarely entitled with the Syriac term for "book", i.e., kṯāḇā (for which see, e.g., StP18 in Michael Zellmann-Rohrer "More on the 'Book of Protection'," p. 88). Instead, most of them are titled with ܚܡܛܐ (so, e.g., H and I), while in NH3 we find its supposedly orthographic variant ܚܡܛܬܐ (NH3). Following Alexey Lyavdansky's suggestion, we regard these words as rendering the Neo-Aramaic terms for "amulet, talisman": kṯəwta/kṯuṯa (and similar), see e.g., Geoffrey Khan, The Neo-Aramaic Dialect of the Assyrian Christians of Urmi, Vol. 3, Leiden–Boston, 2016, p. 123; Shabo Talay, Neuaramäische Texte in den Dialekten der Khabur-Assyrer in Nordostsyrien, Wiesbaden, 2009, p. 444; Hezy Mutzafi, The Jewish Neo-Aramaic Dialect of Betanure (Province of Dihok), Wiesbaden, 2008, p. 358.

9 Former "BM Or. 6673". For the description of the manuscript see Hermann Gollancz, Book of Protection, p. 93; more recently Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, "More on the 'Book of Protection'," pp. 85–86.

10 Hermann Gollancz, The Book of Protection, pp. 101–102, §64.

11 Michael Zellmann-Rohrer suggests, that BLa and H can be written by the same scribe, which seems improbable. The two manuscripts are visibly written in two different hands.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

BL Or. 5281[12] (Blb)

London, British Library Ms. Or. 5281. Paper, 38 × 23 cm, 146 leaves. A convolute volume consisting of three manuscripts written in three different hands. It contains magical, divinatory, and astrological sections. The magical section has no beginning. The first two manuscripts contain magical texts (ff. 1–2 and ff. 2–41). This part consists of 62 chapters with 1 illustration in black. Up to 16 lines to page. Script: sporadically vocalized East Syriac. Date: unknown, paleographically dated to the 18th century. The codex also contains 47 chapters of the Book of the Bee.

IOM 4[13] (I)

Russia, St. Petersburg, Institute of Oriental Manuscripts,[14] Osnovnoy fond, ms. Sir. 4. Title: kṯīḇtā d-nuṭṭār bnaynāšā 'Amulet for protecting people'. Paper, 10.5 × 6.5 cm, 40 leaves, bound. Script: sporadically vocalized East Syriac. Up to 14 lines on page. 46 sections, 13 colored illustrations. Colophon lacking. Paleographically dated to the 17th–18th century by Pigulevskaya; later ownership notes of Yoḥannan bar Tērō, and of Saggō bar Merzā.

NH3[15]

New Haven, CT, Beinecke Library, Hartford Seminary collection no. 3. Title: kṯāḇtā[16] d-nuṭṭār bnaynāšā 'Amulet for protecting people'. Paper, 11 × 7 cm, 41 leaves. Script: vocalized East Syriac. Colophon lacking; assigned to the 19th century. 50 chapters, 14 illustrations. Up to 14 lines to page. The ms. belongs to the same textual tradition as I but is written in a less skilled hand.

12 For the most recent and full description and further references see Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, "More on the 'Book of Protection'," p. 93.

13 Described by Нина Викторовна Пигулевская, "Каталог сирийских рукописей Ленинграда" [Nina Viktorovna Pigulevskaya, Catalogue of the Syriac Manuscripts in Leningrad], Палестинский сборник [Palestinian Collection], 6 (69) (1960), pp. 124–128 (ms. XXXIX). For a Russian edition see the MA thesis of Мария Чамурлиева, Сирийская заклинательная традиция на примере рукописи из рукописного фонда ИВР РАН Сир. 4 [Mariya Chamurliieva, Syriac Magical Tradition by the Example of the Manuscript Syr. 4 from the IOM RAS Manuscript Collection], PFTY [RSUH], 2009. For the most recent mention see Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, "More on the 'Book of Protection'," p. 88.

14 Contra Zellman-Rohrer, ibid.: "Institute of Oriental Studies".

15 See further Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, "More on the 'Book of Protection'," p. 87.

16 Ms.: ktdt[?].

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

3 Text and Translation

Among the five manuscripts at our disposal, we have chosen H as the main manuscript. Since NH3 follows I, but is less reliable, we do not address it separately. The text-critical discrepancies between the four compared manuscripts are provided in the footnotes. A synopsis of all four versions is presented in the next section.

MS Syriac 160, Houghton Library, Harvard University, f. 44r, ll. 1–17

1	ܗܳܕܹܐ ܕܓܕܢ[a] ܕܒܓ	Binding of a mill. Say
2	ܗܳܠܹܝܢ[b] ܕܐܡܪ̈ܝܢ[c] ܒܗ ܕܕܘܝܕ	these words from the psalm
3	ܕܐܡܪ̈ܬ ܠܝ ܕܪܡܝܬ[d] ܘܫܕܬ ܠܝ ܘܐܪܚܩ ܐܢܐ[e]:[f]	of David: "For You have lifted me up and cast me away"[g] –
4	ܐ̈ܢ: ܘܐܡܪ ܥܠ ܥܦܪܐ ܕܐܬܪ[h] ܬܠܬ ܙܒܢ̈	three times. Bless[j] upon the dust
5	ܘܫܕ ܒܥܝܢ ܕܪܚܝܐ[k] ܕܒܓ[l] ܣܡ[m] ܀	and throw [it] into the eye of the mill. [Another recipe] Take
6	ܣܒ ܙܪ̈ܥ ܚܛ̈ܐ[n] ܕܒܓ ܬܠ	seven grains of wheat. Bless

---

a Here and in all the following occurrences of this word Gollancz reads ܕܓܫ.

b Absent from BLa.

c These three words are absent from I. In BLb they are placed after the citation from the Psalm ending in ܐܢܐ.

d The last three words are absent from BLb.

e BLa: ܘܐܪܚܩ ܐܢܐ with an odd syāmē.

f BLa: ܘܫܕܬ ܠܝ 'and you have loosened me', which contradicts the text of Ps. 102:11. In I after these we find a prescription similar to that of the second spell (ll. 5–13):

ܘܩܪܐ ܥܠ ܫܒܥ ܙܪ̈ܥ ܚܛ̈ܐ ܘܫܕ ܒܬܪ ܥܝܢ ܕܪܚܝܐ ܕܬܚܬ̈ܝܬ ܀

"And recite [it] seven times above seven grains of wheat and throw them in the lower part of the mill". On the meaning of reglā see commentary to ʿayna d-raḥyā in section 5 below. The text of the charm in I ends here.

g Ps 102:11 according to the Peshitta numeration.

h BLb: ܐ̈ܢ ܘܐܡܪ ܥܠ, the words are placed after ܥܦܪܐ.

i BLa: ܥܦܪܐ with an odd syāmē.

j On the meaning of this word see section 5.

k BLb: ܒܚܫܕܬ with the same meaning.

l BLa has no punctuation mark, while BLb puts a colon and adds ܐܚܪܢ 'another [charm]' after it.

m BLb: ܣܡ with an unusual mark of abbreviation.

n BLb: ܚܛ̈ܐ prīḏē. The word does not mean 'grain' or 'seed' in Syriac, but a very close meaning is attested for its cognate in Jewish Babylonian Aramaic, see pryd' 'pomegranate seed' in Michael Sokoloff, A Dictionary of Jewish Babylonian Aramaic of the Talmudic and Geonic Periods, Ramat-Gan, 2002, p. 932.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

(cont.)

MS Syriac 160, Houghton Library, Harvard University, f. 44r, ll. 1–17

7	ܥ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈ܗ̈ ܘ[o]ܟ̈ܬ̈ܒ̈ܐ ܟ̈ܬ̈ܒ̈ܐ[p]	upon them <<upon them>> [with the following] words
8	ܕ̈ܒ̈ܪ̈ܟ̈ ܒ̈ܪ̈ܕ̈ܘ̈ܟ̈ ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ܪ̈ܟ̈[r] ܫ̈ܒ̈ܥ̈[q]:	seven times: "sndwk bndwk
9	ܐ̈ܠ̈ܗ̈ܐ̈[t] ܘ̈ܟ̈ܬ̈ܒ̈ܐ̈ ܕ̈ܝ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈[u] ܗ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈ ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܟ̈ܬ̈ܒ̈ܐ̈[v] ܕ̈ܒ̈ܪ̈ܟ̈[w]:	and God is the greatest. These words of mine
10	ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ܪ̈ ܐ̈ܠ̈ܗ̈ ܘ̈ ܗ̈ܢ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܗ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈[x] ܘ̈ ܗ̈ܢ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܗ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈[y] ܘ̈ ܗ̈ܢ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܗ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈[z]:	and this [word] with which was entrusted? Solomon
11	ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܕ̈ܘ̈ܝ̈ܕ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܝ̈ܫ̈ܝ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܫ̈ܠ̈ܡ̈ ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܕ̈ܘ̈ܝ̈ܕ̈[aa] ܕ̈ܒ̈[ab]:	son of David. I have sealed [the mill?] with the seal
12	ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܪ̈ܒ̈ܥ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈[ac] ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈[ad] ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈[ae] ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈[af]:	of the four jinn from the master of its opening?".
13	ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈[ag] ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈[ah]	And throw [the grains] into the eye of the mill, and it will stop.

o Absent from BLa, which has ܗ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈ܗ̈ 'these' instead.

p Starting from ܟ̈ܬ̈ܒ̈ܐ̈, BLb reads instead: ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈.

q BLa: ܫ̈ܒ̈ܥ̈ 'five'.

r BLa has a colon.

s BLa has a colon.

t Absent from BLb.

u BLb: ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ for which see section 5.

v BLa: ܗ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈ܗ̈.

w BLb: ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈. BLa: ܕ̈ܒ̈ܪ̈ܟ̈.

x BLa: ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈.

y BLb: ܗ̈ܢ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈.

z BLa: ܗ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈ܗ̈ ܘ̈ ܗ̈ܢ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܗ̈ܠ̈ܝ̈. BLb: ܗ̈ܢ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈.

aa BLa: ܕ̈ܒ̈. BLb: ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈.

ab BLa reads the same but has no punctuation mark. BLb: ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈.

ac BLa reads the same, but Gollancz provides a note: "or ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈".

ad BLa: ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈.

ae BLa reads the same but has no punctuation mark; Gollancz provides a note: "or ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈". BLb: ܗ̈ܘ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈.

af BLa: ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈. It adds:

ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ... ܘ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈

'And if you can, repeat [this for] the period of forty ... times.'

BLb adds:

ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ❖ ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈ ❖

'And [say] another word many times: "Give me this!" And if you can repeat [it] forty times.' In BLb the text ends here.

ag BLa provides a grammatically correct form ܕ̈ܒ̈ ܐ̈ܡ̈ܬ̈.

ah Absent from BLa.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

(cont.)

MS Syriac 160, Houghton Library, Harvard University, f. 44r, ll. 1–17

14	ܫܒܝܩ ܕܟܣܝ ܫܒ̈ܝ ܐܣܝܪ	Loosening of a mill. [Recite:] "The Lord releases
15	ܐܣܝܪ̈ ܕܒܨܠܚ ܡܙܡܪܐ[ai]:	the prisoners"[aj] till the psalm ends,
16	ܫܒ̈ܝ ܒܟ ܥܠ ܚܛܐ ܫܒ̈ܝ ܒܥܝܢ ܕܪ̈ܚܝ	bless upon the wheat and throw it into the eye of the 17	ܕܟܣܝ	mill.

ai BLa: ܐܣܝܪ ܐܣܝܪ. One can suspect a typographic mistake, rather than a scribal one.
aj Ps 146:7.

4 Synopsis of the Four Versions

In the table below, we provide the text of the four manuscripts divided into eight verses and presented synoptically.

In what follows, we outline the most significant discrepancies between the four manuscripts. Two of them (H and BLa) preserve three recipes: two binding spells (verses 1, 2 and 3–7) and one loosening spell (verse 8). In BLb, the text stops at verse 7, before the end of the second recipe. In I, only one binding spell has been preserved. This textual variant contains a few remarkable traits. First, its beginning is similar to the other manuscripts, alluding to Psalm 102, but what follows does not correspond to the text of the first binding spell. Instead, it proceeds with instructions similar to the second binding spell (verses 3 and 7), prescribing to recite the psalm above 7 grains of wheat 7 times. Then the grains are to be thrown into reglāh d-raḥyā '… of the mill' which refers either to the torrent of the watermill, or to some unidentified part of the mill.

Each of the other three manuscripts (H, BLb and BLa) contains scribal mistakes, but, as a whole, the texts of H and of BLb are more reliable, while BLa contains mistakes even in the biblical citations. It appears that BLa has only one considerable advantage: it provides a better reading for klmwy in H and BLb – klmty (Arb. kalimātī 'my words').

The difference between the ways in which this text-unit has been segmentated in the different manuscripts is significant for its interpretation: in H, the beginning of each recipe is marked in red, while in BLa only the first and the third spell have separate headings. At the same time, in H, there are some other words written with red ink: barreḵ 'bless' (ll. 4, 16), wa-ʾrmī? 'throw' (l. 13, instead of wa-ʾrmā), which do not correspond to the segmentation of the text.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

Verse number	H H 160 f. 44r	BLa BL (BM) Or. 6673 (Gollancz 1912, 101–102, §64)	BLb BL Or. 5281 f. 40v–41r	I IOM 4 f. 35v (= NH3 f. 35)
1	ܟܠܡ ܒܟ ܐܡܪ ܐܢܐ ܒܥܕ ܡܪܝ ܕܟܠ ܒܪܝܬܐ ܕܐܬܒܪܝ ܒܥܕ ܡܪܝ ܕܟܠ ܒܪܝܬܐ	ܐܢܐ ܒܥܕ ܐܡܪ ܐܢܐ ܒܥܕ ܡܪܝ ܕܟܠ ܒܪܝܬܐ ܕܐܬܒܪܝ ܒܥܕ ܡܪܝ ܕܟܠ ܒܪܝܬܐ	ܒܥܕ ܡܪܝ ܕܟܠ ܒܪܝܬܐ ܕܐܬܒܪܝ ܒܥܕ ܡܪܝ ܕܟܠ ܒܪܝܬܐ.. ܐܡܪ ܠܟ ܡܢܐ ܕܥܒܕܬ.	ܐܢܐ ܒܥܕ ܡܪܝ ܕܟܠ ܒܪܝܬܐ ܕܐܬܒܪܝ ܒܥܕ ܡܪܝ ܕܟܠ ܒܪܝܬܐ: ܐܡܪ ܠܟ ܡܢܐ ܕܥܒܕܬ:
2	ܟ: ܘܬܠܬ ܙܒܢ ܟܠ ܚܕܐ ܡܢܟ ܒܥܐ ܕܐܬܝ ܠܘܬܝ ❖	ܟ: ܘܬܠܬ ܙܒܢ ܟܠ ܚܕܐ ܡܢܟ ܒܥܐ ܕܐܬܝ ❖	ܟ ❖ ܘܐ[a]❖ ܙܒܢ ܒܟ ܚܕܐ ܒܥܐ ܡܢܟ ❖ ❖ ❖

The crucial place is l. 5, where we think the second spell begins. In BLa the first two spells are not divided even by a punctuation mark. In H the second piece can be distinguished as a separate spell not only due to the red ink, highlighting the words šḳol šabʿā perdē d-ḥeṭṭē 'take seven grains of wheat', but also because of the mark of the end of a paragraph (❖). However, it is BLb which distinguishes the second spell in the most explicit way, introducing it with Syr. ʾḥrēnā 'another [recipe]'.

Where BLb is concerned, a few important features of this variant can be noticed. Though it lacks the ending of the ritual instruction in the second recipe and omits the whole third recipe, it expands the text of the second recipe with a few lines (verse 6). This reading is partly supported by BLa. This verse expands the ritual instruction by adding "another word" in BLb (see section 5 under * below) and increasing the number of times the spell should be recited to up to forty (in BLb and BLa). While in BLa this last instruction contradicts the recommendation to recite the spell five times (compared with seven in H), in BLb no such contradiction is found, since this is the only place where the number of utterances is mentioned. Although the assumptions on the reconstruction of the proto text are usually vulnerable, here it seems highly probable that this contradiction was present in the original text of the recipe, which in this aspect was close to the text as preserved in BLa, but it was eliminated in the course of transmission. H and BLb represent two different decisions: to keep only the first prescription (H), or only the second one (BLb). Second, BLb provides partial vocalization of the text. Third, its manner of rendering Arabic words seems closer to the Garshuni scribal system than the manner of BLa and H. The clearest case is rendering of Arb. خ with Syr. ܟ (with or without rukkāḵā) which is found twice in w-ktmt b-ktmt ʾlgyn (wa-xatamtu bi-xātimatʾ al-ǧinni 'I seal with the seal of jinn') instead of ḫtmt b-ḫtymt ʾlgyn* in H and BLa.[17] Finally, rendering the Arabic incantation, H and BLa use a colon sign as a word divider, while BLb uses either no word divider at all, or uses it rarely. The only certain case is sndwk bndwk: BLb places a horizontal colon between the two words, and a dot after the second word – most probably to mark the end of the phrase.

17 Other possible cases are ʾlkbrʾ which probably stands for ʾlh ʾkbr* (ʾaḷḷāhu ʾakbar 'God is the greatest'). Here Syriac ܟ renders Arabic ك, while in H and BLa ـك is used instead.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

5 Philological Commentary

ll. 4, 6, 16: brk (barreḵ) 'bless'

In what follows we place the word between quotation marks, because its meaning is not easy to establish. Two questions arise here:

1) Does the word refer to the words mentioned before/after it, or does it refer to the separate blessing which is to be pronounced besides the other words?
2) What does "blessing" mean in the context of the two supposedly aggressive spells?

Concerning the first question, if we look at all the three passages, it appears that barreḵ refers to the words mentioned before or after it. A schematic representation of the three passages seems to be helpful.

ll. 1–4: "say these words from the psalm" – [the words from the psalm] – "bless upon the dust" – "throw it"

ll. 5–13: "take 7 grains" – "bless upon them [with the following] words" – [the Arabic incantation] – "throw them"

ll. 14–17: [the words from the psalm] – "bless upon the wheat" – "throw it"

The second passage presumably gives a clue to our question, because it allows us to equate the following incantation with the "blessing words". If we expand this interpretation to the other two passages, we can argue that in the three texts the object of the verb barreḵ is the words mentioned before or after it. Turning to the second question, the problem is that when barreḵ occurs in two passages that we attribute to aggressive magic, we hardly can render it as "bless". Similarly, if we ascribe to the verb a euphemistic meaning and render it as "curse",[18] the meaning does not fit the third passage from the loosening spell. We suggest, that in these three texts barreḵ designates an action of pronouncing words which have magic power, be it a citation from the Bible or an Arabic incantation – with a good intention, same as with an evil one. However, the issue requires further investigation based on the corpus of Syriac charms.

18 Cf. the Rabbinic corpus, where both Heb. brk and Aram. brk have a meaning "to blaspheme", see Marcus Jastrow, A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi, and the Midrashic Literature, Vol. 1, London–New York, 1903, p. 195.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

ll. 5, 13, 16–17: ʿyn' d-rḥy' (ʿaynā d-raḥyā) 'the mill's eye', i.e., the opening in a hand mill where the grain is put

Our main interpretation of this expression is based on metaphorical usages of ʿaynā 'eye' in Aramaic languages, such as JPA ʿyyn 'draft hole of an oven'.[19] Though we are unable to confirm or refute this interpretation based on the Syriac lexical data, a similar usage is found in JBA: bt ʿyn 'pupil of the eye', 'hole in the millstone'.[20]

Another interpretation worth considering is based on the second core meaning of ʿaynā, i.e., 'spring'. In this case, raḥyā would mean 'watermill' and ʿaynā d-raḥyā would denote a spring, or a water source, which refers to this watermill.[21] A support for this interpretation may be found in I, where instead of ʿaynā we see reḡlā. The term's core meaning is 'foot', but it can also denote a stream, which would fit this interpretation. However, we cannot exclude that reḡlā refers to some other part of the mill, since the term can also mean 'foundation' or 'leg (e.g., of a table)'. Also, our main interpretation is supported by the external evidence, the recipe from the Cairo Geniza, which also requires throwing dust into the opening in the upper mill, which is denoted by Arb. ḥalq-.

l. 8: sndwk bndwk (sundūk bundūk)

All three manuscripts give the same writing, and, as it seems, here we have a beginning of an Arabic spell. Initially this phrase probably was an Arabic paronomastic construction called itbāʿ. According to Pellat, this figure of speech is used in Classical Arabic when one wants to reinforce the meaning of a word. Usually, the phrase consists of two words the second of which has no existence in the language and is formed by alteration of mainly the first radical, for example ḥasan basan 'wonderfully attractive'.[22] The reconstruction

19 Michael Sokoloff, A Dictionary of Jewish Palestinian Aramaic of the Byzantine Period. Ramat-Gan, 1990, p. 403, cf. also īnu in Akkadian: meaning 2. 'hole (of a kiln)', 'interstice (of a net)', 'hub (of a wheel)' (The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, Vol. 7 (I and J), eds. Ignace J. Gelb, Benno Landsberger & A. Leo Oppenheim, Chicago, 1960, p. 157).

20 Michael Sokoloff, A Dictionary of Jewish Babylonian Aramaic of the Talmudic and Geonic Periods, Ramat-Gan–Baltimore, 2002, p. 249, see also Gustaf Dalman, Arbeit und Sitte in Palästina, Vol. 3, Gütersloh, 1933, p. 227.

21 We owe this idea to Sergey Minov (personal communication).

22 See Charles Pellat, "Muzāwajah," in: Encyclopaedia of Islam, 2nd edition, ed. P. Bearman, Th. Bianquis, C. E. Bosworth, E. van Donzel, and W. P. Heinrichs, Vol. 7, Leiden, 1960–2007, p. 823.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

of the original Arabic phrase would supposedly give ṣundūq bundūq, which indeed is attested in Classical Arabic texts.[23] Given this the phrase should mean 'an impressive chest' which is not supported by the context and does not fit our text. However, Schorch in his study of puns in the prophetic books of the Hebrew Bible in a wider context argues that paronomasia has more functions than merely creating emphasis.[24] He also states that some kinds of "paronomasia are related in a certain way to the use of paronomasia in imitative magic, well attested in the neighbouring cultures of ancient Israel".[25] Moreover, this phrase occurs in a children's game, in which a player exclaims ṣundūq bundūq beside other incomprehensible words and phrases in a colloquial Arabic, loosely connected with each other.[26]

l. 9: wʾlh ʾgbr (wa-ʾaḷḷāh ʾakbar) 'and God is the greatest'

The BLb's reading ʾlkbrʾ could be interpreted as the Arabic word al-kubrā,[27] but this does not seem to fit the context. Two other manuscripts agree with each other and give what we assume to be a more spontaneous rather than a systematic rendering of the Arabic exclamation (الله أكبر).[28] If it were transliterated according to the Garshuni scribal system, the second word would have looked as ʾkbr (ܐܟܒܪ).[29] Krämer gives the whole Arabic part of the spell under the title "Ein unverschtändlicher Text zur Beschwörung des Windes" where he renders this phrase in Arabic as "اجبر(!)والله".[30] This rendering is obscure to us.

23 See, e.g., a commentary to ibn al-Farīd's verse in Šarḥ Dīwān al-Fāriḍ liš-Šayḥ Hasan al-Būrīnī wa-liš-Šayḥ ʿAbda al-Ġanī an-Nābulusī, Arnaud, 1853, p. 508.

24 Stephan Schorch, "Between Science and Magic: the Function and Roots of Paronomasia in the Prophetic Books of the Hebrew Bible," in: Pun and Pundits. Word Play in the Hebrew Bible and Ancient Near Eastern Literature, ed. Scott B. Noegel, Maryland, 2000, pp. 206–7.

25 Ibid., p. 218.

26 See, e.g., Muḥammad Rajab al-Sāmarrāʾī, "ʾIṣdārāt Nādī Turāṭ al-ʾImārāt," al-Ṭaqāfah al-Šaʿbiyyah 5 (2009), p. 190, https://www.folkculturebh.org/upload/issues/issue5.pdf (2022, May 4).

27 But for use of y instead of al-ʾalif bi-ṣūrat al-yāʾ in Garshuni see, e.g., Joseph Moukarzel, "Le Garchouni. Remarques sur son Histoire et son Évolution," in: Scripts beyond Borders: A Survey of Allographic Traditions in the Euro-Mediterranean World, ed. Heijer, J., Schmidt, A. & Pataridze, T., Louvain-la-Neuve, 2014, p. 135.

28 On phonetic rendering of the word aḷḷāh in Garshuni see, e.g., ibid.

29 See, e.g., ibid., p. 133.

30 Karl Friedrich Krämer, Textstudien zu Ostsyrischen Beschwörungsgebeten (unpubl. diss.), Berlin, 1924, p. 84.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

l. 9: klmwy (kalimātī) 'my words'

BLa has klmty, while H and BLb read klmwy which we assume to be a mistake. Considering the possibility of incomprehension of the scribe, which will be mentioned below, this mistake could also be attributed to peculiarities of the scribal hand, in which shapes of t and w are alike.

l. 9: hdʾll 'these?'

All three manuscripts give different sequences of letters, none of which makes any sense in this context (H: hdʾll, BLa: hll, BLb: bhdʾll). The syntax of the phrase suggests that we have here a demonstrative pronoun with kalimātī 'my words' as its antecedent. It is hard to equate this with Classical Arabic hāḏihī or hāʾulāʾī. The probable interpretation is to consider these letters as a distorted form of a colloquial demonstrative pronoun, cf. hadōl(e)[31] in dialects of Levant, hāḏōl(ah)/hāḏoḷḷayn, hāḏōl/hāḏēl, hāḏōl in Bedouin Arabic dialects of Arabian Peninsula and Near East.[32]

l. 10: wldy (wa-llāḏī) 'and which'

Both manuscripts agree and the reading of the phrase is clear.[33]

l. 10: tkyl bh (ittakal bihi) 'relied on this?'

Two manuscripts read tkl (BLa, BLb) and one has tkyl (H). It is quite hard to understand this word especially with the next word (H and BLa: bh, but BLb: bhh, the last h of which is without doubt taken from the next word). The context suggests that we have here a verb with the meaning "to rely upon". The writing of the assumed verb is not only unclear, but also it cannot be easily construed with the following alleged preposition b-. Although the verb ittakala occurs in Arabic with the preposition fī, in other stems of the root w-k-l the preposition b- is used in reference to things which someone is put in charge of.[34]

31 Peter Behnstedt, "Árabe Levantino," in: Manual de Dialectología Neoárabe, ed. Federico Corriente & Ángeles Vicente, Zaragoza, 2008, p. 163.

32 Peter Behnstedt, "Árabe Beduino (Península Arábiga y Oriente Próximo)," p. 81.

33 For this kind of spelling see, e.g., Joseph Moukarzel, "Le Garchouni. Remarques sur son Histoire et son Evolution," p. 135.

34 For Classical Arabic see, e.g., Albert de Biberstein-Kazimirski, Dictionaire Arabe-Français, Vol. 4, Barrois, 1860, p. 1599 (ʾittakala 'Se fier entierement à quelqu'un, s'en remettre de

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

ll. 10–11: slmwn ʾbn dwwd (sulaymān ʾibn dawūd) 'Solomon, son of David'

Every manuscript has different writing (H: hlmwn ʾbn dwwd, BLa: hslmn ʾb dwwd, BLb: slmn ʾbn dwwd, note the previous commentary about h), but its reading is obvious.

l. 11: ḥtmt (xatamt) 'I hereby seal'

Two manuscripts have ḥtmt (H and BLa) and the last has wktmt (BLb). It is remarkable that in these manuscripts both recorded possibilities for rendering Arabic x are present, namely with the letters ḥ and k.[35] Here we apparently have the performative use of the verb ḥtm ('I hereby seal').[36]

ll. 11–12: bḥtymt ʾlgyn (bi-xātimatʾ ʾal-ǧinn) 'with the seal of the jinn'

H and BLa agree with each other (bḥtymt ʾlgyn) against BLb (bktmt ʾlgyn). The context suggests "with the seal of the jinn", but the Arabic word xātimah which fits the writing usually means 'end, conclusion'[37] with the only exception we found being 'signature, caractère'.[38] Both meanings do not allow to get the assumed meaning of the phrase. The interpretation of ʾlgyn as Arabic الجنّ 'the jinn' is of no doubt.[39] tout à sa volonté, av. على de la p. et في de la ch.,' wakkala 'Constituer quelqu'un son agent, son fondé de pouvoirs, son avocat, son homme d'affaires, av. acc. de la p. et ب de la ch.'); Reinhart Pieter Anne Dozy, Supplément aux Dictionnaires Arabes, Vol. 2., Leyden, 1881, p. 837 (tawakkala bi- 'se charge de'), and for the colloquial Arabic see, e.g., D. R. Woodhead, Dictionary of Iraqi Arabic, Washington, D.C., 1967, p. 502 (ttikal 'to rely, depend, place one's trust', ʾāni ʾattikil ʿalēk ib-hal-qaḍiyya 'I'm depending on you in this matter,' note the use of the preposition b-); Hamdi Qafisheh, NTC's Gulf Arabic-English Dictionary, Chicago, 1997, p. 637 (twakkal with ب b- 'to act as a counsel for (a case)'; Adrien Barthélemy, Dialectes de Syrie: Alep, Damas, Liban, Jérusalem, Paris, 1969, p. 906 (əttákal).

---

35 Joseph Moukarzel, "Le Garchouni. Remarques sur son Histoire et son Évolution," p. 133 and Emanuela Braida, "Neo-Aramaic Garshuni: Observations Based on Manuscripts," Hugoye, 17/1 (2014), p. 21.

36 See, e.g., Wolfdietrich Fischer, A Grammar of Classical Arabic, New Haven–London, 2002, p. 103.

37 See, e.g., J. Milton Cowan (ed.), Arabic-English Dictionary: The Hans Wehr Dictionary of Modern Written Arabic, Urbana, 1993, p. 265; and Martin Hinds & El-Said Badawi, A Dictionary of Egyptian Arabic Arabic-English, Beirut, 1986, p. 241.

38 Reinhart Pieter Anne Dozy, Supplément aux Dictionnaires Arabes, Vol. 1., p. 352.

39 Michael Zellman-Rohrer, "A Syriac-Arabic Dream-Request and Its Jewish Tradition," p. 65; and Michael Zellman-Rohrer, "More on the 'Book of Protection'," p. 123.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

l. 12: ʾrbʿ (ʾarbaʿ) 'four'

The reading is obvious (H and BLb: ʾrbʿ, but BLa: ʾrbʿ), but the syntax is obscure. There could be at least two interpretations. First, it could be in apposition to the previous word 'the jinn' meaning 'the four jinn'.[40] This interpretation suggests that the object (the mill) of the verb xatamt 'I seal' is omitted. In this case the loss of the definite article before the number must be assumed. Second, it could be construed as a direct object of the verbal form "I seal", but then it is unclear what four things are sealed especially considering unclarity of the following phrase.

l. 12: mn sʾyt (min as-sayyid)

The writing of the two manuscripts (H and BLa: sʾyt) does not lend itself to understanding.[41] The interpretation of the third manuscript's writing (BLb: syd) is clear (sayyid 'master, owner'), nevertheless its syntactic position is difficult to comprehend. Also, the absence of the article in writing complicates interpretation of the phrase even more although this kind of recording is possible in Garshuni.[42]

l. 12: dfwhʾ (ḏī-fūhāʾ) 'of its opening (lit. "mouth")'

Two manuscripts agree in writing (H and BLb: dfwhʾ, but BLa: wfwhʾ). Although the grammatical rules of Classical Arabic seem to permit such a use of the Arabic nota genitivi ḏū still it seems here redundant and clumsy.[43] One can reasonably suppose contamination with Syriac particle di-. Combination of the letters fwhʾ according to the context should refer to the mill and prompts to 40 Ibid.

41 For possible reading of sʾyt see the word sāyah in Edward Lane, An Arabic-English Lexicon, Vol. 1, London–Edinburgh, 1877, p. 1458 (ḍaraba fulānun ʿalā fulānin sāyatan 'Such a one did to such a one a thing that caused displeasure to him, such a one made a way to do what he desired to such a one'). Other possible interpretations that assume corruption are reading the word saʾt 'side of the throat' (J. G. Hava, Arabic-English Dictionary for the Use of Students, Beirut, 1899, p. 296) or the word saʾaʾah 'cambrure au bout de l'arc retourné en dehors' (Albert de Bibrestein-Kazimirski, Dictionaire Arabe-Français, Vol. 1, p. 1039). None of these interpretations easily fits the context.

42 Joseph Moukarzel, "Le Garchouni. Remarques sur son Histoire et son Évolution," p. 135.

43 For the use of ḏū in Classical Arabic see, e.g., Hermann Reckendorf, Arabische Syntax, Haidelberg, 1921, p. 152 (note the attributive use: الحَبُّ ذو العُصْفِ 'das Korn mit der Hülse,' and the use with pronominal suffix: ذُو ضُرِّهِمْ 'ihr Schädiger').

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

read it as 'a mouth (of the mill)'. This naming of the opening of the upper stone indeed occurs in Arabic,[44] but nevertheless the exact form of a used Arabic word (or a combination with the pronominal suffix hā)[45] as well as the syntax of the whole phrase are obscure.

* verse 6

In BLa we find an additional instruction to repeat the spell given in the previous lines "for a period of forty times". In BLb there is one more sentence. It says: "And one other word [you repeat] for many times". The interpretation of the following two words, bh ʾytyn (vocalised as bēh ʾaytyān) is complicated, since they can be understood either as a Syriac, or as an Arabic phrase – in each case, the text seems corrupted and requires emendations.

A. If a Syriac hypothesis is considered, there are a few possibilities. Here we discuss the two which do not require changing the consonantal text.

A1. bēh ʾaytīn 'which we adduced [above]'

A2. bēh ʾaytyan 'with which he came upon us'

Both suggestions involve a few problems. First, the verb ʾty in C-stem is not normally used with b-, instead the object of bringing is introduced as a second direct object. Second, any Syriac interpretation of this phrase would imply a disruption in normal Syriac syntax, since a subordinate clause, i.e., "the word, which …", is to be marked with a relative pronoun d-. Third, none of these two makes sense in our context, because none of them mentions this another word or phrase which should be uttered.

B. Alternatively, the phrase can be explained as another corrupted rendering of Arabic. The most attractive interpretation is, probably, bihi ʾtinī (به ائتني) 'give me this', i.e., 'do this for me'. In this case we must suppose omitting of alif al-waṣl in writing of the imperative of the verb ʾatā, as well as a specific syntax of the phrase possibly for the emphasis, when the preposition with the pronoun (bihi) goes before the verb (ʾti). Nevertheless, assuming an Arabic citation has an advantage compared 44 See, e.g., al-Murtaḍā al-Ḥusaynī al-Zabīdī, Tāj al-ʿArūs min Jawāhir al-Qāmūs, Vol. 39, al-Kuwait, 2001, p. 498 (اللُّهْوَةُ ... ما أُلْقِيَتْهُ فِي فَمِ الرَّحَى). Also note the use in Colloquial Arabic of the words ḥalq and tumm both meaning 'mouth' for the same part of a hand mill (Gustaf Dalman, Arbeit und Sitte in Palästina, Vol. 3, p. 222).

45 For possible variants see, e.g., the whole article under fūhun in Edward Lane, An Arabic-English Lexicon, Vol. 6, p. 2464.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht with a Syriac one, because it allows us to avoid the problem of syntactic disruption. Also, another Arabic phrase in this charm would fit the context better.

6 Interpretation

In this section we provide a short overview of the three Syriac recipes for the mill followed by our interpretation. As already mentioned, in every place where we read raḥyā 'mill', Gollancz reads *ryḥ*ʾ, which corresponds to Syr. rīḥā 'smell'. Even though this reading is supported by K. Fr. Krämer, to whose interpretation we will turn further on, we would rather suspect an editorial mistake, made by Gollancz and replicated by Krämer, than a scribal one, since the two words look very similar in the Syriac script: ܪܝܚܐ 'smell' vs. ܪܚܝܐ 'mill'. Evidently following Gollancz's reading of raḥyā 'mill' as rīḥā 'smell', Krämer interprets the whole text-unit as "Psalmen zur 'Bindung' und 'Lösung' des Windes".[46] Since the Syriac term does not mean 'wind', such translation could be possible only if we interpret rīḥā not as a Syr. term for 'smell', but as an Arabic word rīḥ- 'wind'.[47] In this case, the Syriac ending -ā, typical for the inherited Aramaic lexica or well-adapted loanwords, requires an explanation.

There are a few reasons to treat Gollancz's reading as erroneous. First, in the case of H, the consonantal writing is clear enough to eliminate any doubts, while in BLb the word is vocalized as reḥyā. Though not found in Syriac dictionaries,[48] this vocalization is supported by the lexical data of other Aramaic idioms.[49] Second, the sphere of usage of the textual block can be deduced from the content of the recipes, abundant with agricultural lexica.[50]

46 Karl Friedrich Krämer, Textstudien zu Ostsyrischen Beschwörungsgebeten, pp. 8–9, §13. See also p. 84, §40 "Ein unverständlicher Text zur Beschwörung des Windes", which also refers to our block of texts, namely, the Arabic charm.

47 J. Milton Cowan (ed.), Arabic-English Dictionary: The Hans Wehr Dictionary of Modern Written Arabic, Urbana, 1993, p. 432.

48 Robert Payne Smith, Thesaurus Syriacus, Oxonii, 1879–1901, p. 3878, Michael Sokoloff, A Syriac Lexicon. A Translation from the Latin. Correction, Expansion, and Update of C. Brockelmann's Lexicon Syriacum, Winona Lake–Piscataway, 2009, p. 1455.

49 Cf. Jewish Babylonian Aramaic *ryḥy*ʾ 'mill, millstone' (Michael Sokoloff, A Dictionary of Jewish Babylonian Aramaic, p. 1075), Jewish Palestinian Aramaic rḥy, det. ryḥyyh 'millstone, mill' (Michael Sokoloff, A Dictionary of Jewish Palestinian Aramaic, p. 520). Both forms go back to riḥy-*.

50 See ʿ*aynā d-r*^{a}/$_{e}$ḥyā 'mill's eye' in ll. 5, 13, 16–17; (perdē d-)ḥeṭṭē '(grains of) wheat' in ll. 6, 16. Also see presumably *pwh*ʾ 'its (i.e. the mill's) opening' in l. 12. See also what follows on the Geniza parallel.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

The lexical issues, together with the text-critical data and comparative data from Jewish and Coptic magic discussed below, makes the reading offered by Gollancz and Krämer's interpretation unconvincing.

If the most extensive textual variants are considered (H and BLa), the text-unit consists of three fragments, each of them containing a ritual prescription.

1) ʾassārā d-raḥyā 'Binding of a mill' (verses 1–2)

The first binding spell prescribes reciting Psalm 102:11 three times above the dust[51] and throwing it, most probably, into the opening in the upper mill, or "mill's eye" (see the commentary to l. 5 below in section 5). The cited words from Ps. 102:11 are probably connected with the following prescription to take and throw dust into the mill's eye. However, one cannot leave unmentioned the fact that the previous verse of the psalm (Ps. 102:10 according to the Peshitta numeration) reminds us of the aim of the spell: "For I was eating ashes like bread and was mingling tears with my drink". Although, in the Syriac Peshitta we find the term qeṭmā 'ashes', while in the spell for a mill (verse 2) in all the manuscripts ʿaprā 'dust, clay' is used, we still find probable that alluding to Ps. 102:11 both verses 10 and 11 were meant here. It is also worth mentioning that the Hebrew terms for "ashes" (ʾēpär), used in the Hebrew version of the verse, and "dry earth, dust" (ʿāpār) can sound similar and have close semantics.

2) ʾḥrēnā 'Another [recipe]' (verses 3–7)

The second fragment, also a binding spell, starts with a prescription, involving manipulations with seven wheat grains that should be thrown into the mill after being "blessed" five, seven or up to forty times – depending on the manuscript.

Verses 4–5 contain an Arabic spell written in Syriac script (Garshuni) with a supposed infusion of colloquial Arabic traits (on which see above). The scribal manner of H and BLa to separate each Arabic word with a word divider was discussed above in the text-critical section. It seems, that both scribes were uncertain as to where the Arabic text ends and ritual instructions in Syriac begin (verse 5). In H, the last word with a colon is ʾlgyn 'the jinn', while in BLa the last colon is found two words before, after ḥtmt '[hereby] I seal'. Though the language of these last sentences appears to be corrupted and, in some cases, may represent a mixture of Syriac and Arabic, according to our interpretation the Arabic text ends no earlier than after the word pwhʾ '(its?) opening'.

51 Here all the manuscripts but I agree, the peculiarities of which were discussed above.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

Some Arabic words were correctly interpreted by K. Fr. Krämer in his unpublished doctoral thesis (see section 5 above). We cannot restore the exact wording of the original Arabic spell based on the current form of the text, but the general meaning is obvious. The form of the Arabic part indicates that at some stage the text became completely incomprehensible for the copyists of the recipes.[52] If they would have had any command of Arabic, the scribes would not have misspelled the name Solomon or written 'father' (ʾb) instead of 'son' (ʾbn in "Solomon son of David") not to mention the facts that only a few words in this spell are clearly readable in Arabic and the syntax is sometimes impenetrable.

The Arabic spell alludes to the legend of king Solomon's magic ring, which frequently occurs in both Syriac[53] and Arabic[54] magic. According to our interpretation the opening in the upper mill is claimed to be sealed by the seal of the four jinn. The four jinn here most probably symbolize the four cardinal points, i.e., the mill is intended to be bound from all four sides. Each cardinal point is thus governed by its jinn. This reminds us of a protective Jewish formula used in magic and in prayers: "May Michael be at my right hand, Gabriel at my left; in front of me, Uriel, behind me, Raphael; and above my head the Presence of God". Bearing the exact opposite goal, i.e., protection instead of harm, the formula also implies positioning of the named supernatural beings according to the four cardinal points. Notably, a similar protective formula is found in Syriac and in Muslim magic texts.[55]

52 Zellmann-Rohrer plausibly assumes "successive cycles of copying by uncomprehending scribes" (Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, "A Syriac-Arabic dream-request and its Jewish tradition," p. 70).

53 For the Syriac charms which mention Solomon and their Jewish parallels see Hermann Gollancz, The Book of Protection, pp. xii–xix; for a Syriac charm, belonging to Solomonic tradition, specifically close to the Testament of Solomon, and not attested in Gollancz's corpus, see Анна Черкашина, "Соломон и демоны в заклинаниях сирийских христиан" [Anna Cherkashina, "Solomon and the Demons in the Charms of Syriac Christians"], Христианский Восток [Christian Orient], 9 (XV) (2021), pp. 149–162.

54 Hans Alexander Winkler, Siegel und Charaktere in der Muhammedanischen Zauberei, Berlin–Leipzig, 1930, especially pp. 110–114, 127–132, for Solomon's ring in Arabic literature see Georg Salzberger, Die Salomo-Sage in der Semitischen Literatur, Berlin–Nikolassee, 1907, pp. 120–129; see also Allegra Iafrate, The Long Life of Magical Objects: A Study in the Solomonic Tradition, Pennsylvania, 2019, pp. 50–59.

55 Alexey Lyavdansky, "Syriac Charms in Near Eastern Context: Tracing the Origin of Formulas," in: Oral Charms in Structural and Comparative Light. Proceedings of the Conference of the International Society for Folk Narrative Research's (ISFNR) Committee on Charms, Charmers and Charming, 27–29 October, Moscow, eds. T. A. Mikhailova, J. Roper, A. L. Toporkov, D. S. Nikolayev, Moscow, 2011, pp. 17–18; Hans Alexander Winkler, Siegel und Charaktere in der Muhammedanischen Zauberei, p. 17.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

Also, it is worth to mention that seven grains occur in a Muslim story about the origins of first breadmaking.[56] In this story God, via Gabriel, gave Adam after his exile from Heaven seven grains which he then sowed and harvested. After that Gabriel gave him two stones with which Adam made a hand mill. He ground the wheat and kneaded it. Gabriel taught him how to kindle a fire, so Adam was able to bake the first loaf of bread.

3) šeryānā d-raḥyā 'loosening of a mill' (verse 8)

The last spell is a counter-spell to the two previous ones or to any other curse intended to affect one's mill. The recipe requires the user to recite Psalm 146 over wheat (without specifying the quantity required) which, just as in the two cursing rituals, is to be thrown into the mill's eye.

7 The Broader Context

The first two recipes supposedly aim to stop (cf. Syr. bṭl in l. 13) the mill that belongs to the spell beneficiary's adversary. The final goal of the two spells is presumably to harm the adversary. By causing problems with the production of flour, the spell beneficiary may seek to affect the sustenance of the spell target and his family. These considerations allow us to attribute the two recipes to aggressive magic and to compare them with various cursing techniques attested in magical texts from Egypt, both in Coptic[57] and in Jewish[58] contexts.

The textual variant of the text-unit found in BLb has been mentioned recently by M. Zellmann-Rohrer, who also ascribes an aggressive intention to these recipes, assuming their usage in a context of commercial rivalry[59] and comparing them with recipes aimed to hinder the heating of an oven.

56 See, e.g., The History of al-Tabari. An Annotated Translation. General Introduction and from the Creation to the Flood, Vol. 1., translated and annotated by Franz Rosenthal, Albany, 1989, p. 298 (English translation); Annales quos Scripsit Abu Djafar Mohammed Ibn Djarir at-Tabari, Vol.1, ed. M. J. De Goeje, Leiden, 1979–1881, p. 127 (original text).

57 Cf. Text 106 ("Curse to bring seventy different diseases upon victim") in Marvin W. Meyer & Richard Smith, Ancient Christian Magic: Coptic Texts of Ritual Power, Princeton–New Jersey, 1999, pp. 215–216, Text 110 ("Curse to harm a person through the use of wax dolls") in ibid., pp. 222–223, and other curses against enemies (Texts 88–112) in ibid.

58 Cf., e.g., Geniza 16 7:1–13 ("causing fire") in Joseph Naveh & Shaul Shaked, Magic Spells and Formulae: Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity, Jerusalem, 1993, pp. 174–181, Geniza 24 2:8–12 ("for hatred") ibid., pp. 222–225, Geniza 26 2:1–8 ("meant for every need, for causing disease, for killing, for causing fire, also for hatred") ibid., pp. 230–232.

59 Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, "More on the 'Book of Protection'," pp. 122–123.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

There are three text-units related to a furnace found in three manuscripts, which notably also contain the binding spells for a mill. The first text-unit is found in BLb (ff. 22v–23v), the first recipe is titled ʾAssārā d-ʾattūnā w-mānay d-ʾīṯ bēh 'Binding of a furnace and the implements which are in it'. The second text-unit is contained in I (f. 37r), where only the ending of the binding spell has been preserved, but the full text is found in the closely related manuscript NH3, where it is called ʾAssārā d-ṭannūrā 'Binding of the oven' (f. 36v). The third text-unit for an oven is found in I (f. 35, partly lost due to the torn page) and NH3 (f. 35r): ʾAssārā d-ḵūrā d-pārzlā 'Binding of an iron smelter' (NH3, I 35). All three text-units contain both a binding and a loosening spell. Sharing a similar target, they are completely different on the formulaic and structural level, allowing us to regard them as three different text-units designed for similar purposes. These texts deserve to be the subject of a separate research, therefore, below we cite only a few excerpts from the recipes.

In BLb (the 1st text-unit) the text reads:

> (…) I bind this furnace (ʾattūnā) and the smelter (kūrā). Let it be like snow and hail. (…) I bind the furnace and everything that is in the smelter. (…) And all the utensils that are in it. (…) And let them not burn but let them get broken and become like chaff that the wind carries away (BLb ff. 22v–23r).

The respective loosening spells for a furnace (šeryānā dīlēh 'Loosening spell for it') in BLb reads:

> (…) Let this binding of the furnace and the smelter disappear, let [the furnace] return to its initial state. Let the utensils in it be heated (or inflamed), let them not be pierced?, nor broken, the small [ones] together with the big [ones] (BLb f. 23v).

The binding spell of the second text-unit contains a ritual prescription to recite the incantation above a piece of wood and throw it into the furnace, absent from BLb. As for the loosening spell, instead of a mid-length text found in BLb, in I and NH3 there is only a short prescription to recite Psalm 146 three times. Notably, the same psalm is used in the 'Loosening of a mill' (verses 8–9). The binding spell says:

> They are igniting the furnace in vain, let [the fire in it] go out as [the fire in] the furnace of the house of Hananiah.[60] By that power let the fire not 60 Dan. 3.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

> burn in it and not be ignited in the furnace of so-and-so son of so-and-so (I f. 37r).

A prescription to recite the spell over three pieces of wood is found in the third text-unit, found in NH3 and I. The spell says:

> "He rode upon the cherubim and flew[61]" – three sentences (lit. "words"). Cut three pieces of wood, recite [the words] over them and throw them into the furnace (NH3 35r).

Indeed, at least the first and the third text-units appear to refer to an industrial furnace for firing pottery or smelting metals, while the second can be designed for a baking oven – either domestic or industrial. One should note, however, that also at household level the binding of an oven could have had adverse economic implications, since this would result in more wood needing to be used and more work invested in attempting to kindle the fire. This is evident when we consider the reverse type of magical practices: those intended to hasten the cooking of food, presumably to require less wood and work. Examples of this type are found in rabbinic literature, for instance Tosefta Shabbat 7.7–8, where several practices are adduced (and prohibited) for hastening the cooking of food.[62] Similarly, the Babylonian Talmud Shabbat 67b mentions "A woman who urinates in front of her pot so it will cook quickly: that action contains an element of the ways of the Amorite."[63] To conclude, whether the aggressive charms in the Syriac manuscripts referred to industrial or to home ovens, preventing them from burning would have harmed their owners.

A parallel to these oven-binding charms is found in a recipe for binding the furnace of a bathhouse from the Jewish composition Sefer ha-Razim (The Book of Secrets). The recipe begins with the words "If you wish to extinguish (the fire which heats) a bathhouse so it will neither flare up nor burn", and continues with a practice involving the adjuration of a salamander dipped in oil.[64] The

---

61 Ps. 18:10.

62 "She who shouts at the oven so that the bread does not fall (…), she who silences for the lentils and she who cools/sucks for the rice" (המצוחת לתנור שלא תנפל הפת …; המשתקת לעדשים והמצננת / והמוצצת לאורז hmṣwḥt ltnwr šlʾ tnpl hpt…; hmštqt lʿdšym whmṣnnt/ whmwṣṣt lʾwrz). It is not entirely clear what the last two practices, for the lentils and rice, entailed.

63 המשתנת בפני קדירתה בשביל שתתבשל מהרה יש בו משום דרכי האמורי. (hmštnt bpny qdyrth bšbyl šttbšl mhrh yš bw mšwm drky hʾmwry).

64 Sefer ha-Razim, Third firmament, §186–188 (Bill Rebiger & Peter Schäfer, Sefer ha-Razim i und ii: Das Buch der Geheimnisse i und ii, 2 vols, Tübingen, 2009. Vol. 1, in collaboration with E. Burkhardt, G. Reeg and H. Wels: Edition, pp. *64–*65): אם בקשת לכבות

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

oil is then dripped at the four corners of the bathhouse, with the intention to "make it like cold snow or cold water".[65] This spell is followed by a loosening formula, meant to ignite the furnace again: "I adjure you, angel of fire and angel of conflagration, that you will undo what I have bound".[66] Obviously, preventing the furnace from heating the bathhouse would have inflicted economic damage on its owners, just as the binding of an industrial or home-oven would. However, the target addressed in all the above spells is not the owner but the fire.

Additional parallels to the oven-binding and releasing recipes can be found in another Jewish composition, Ḥarba de-Moshe (The Sword of Moses), in a recipe titled "If you wish to close an oven or a basin or a pot so that (foods) will not be put (in them)".[67] This binding recipe is followed by a counter one, so that "they will be (released for) cooking".

8 Historical Context

Aggressive magic, both in antiquity and in later periods, was usually meant to directly affect human targets. Some examples would be practices for causing bodily harm, such as disease, fever, impotence, bareness, and inability to speak, along with more psychologically oriented practices, such as those meant to cause memory loss and a change of feelings from love to hatred or vice versa. A smaller number of aggressive magical practices were directed at animals, with the intention to obliquely affect a human target. Prominent examples of this category are curses and binding spells directed at racing horses.[68] Lastly, 66 Sefer ha-Razim, Third firmament, §189 (Rebiger & Schäfer, Sefer ha-Razim i und ii, Vol. 1, p. *66): משביע אני עליך מלאך אש ומלאך שלהבת שתתיר את מה שאסרתי (mšbʿ ʾny ʿlk mlʾk ʾš wmlʾk šlhbt šttr ʾt mh šʾsrt). English translation from Morgan, Sepher Ha-Razim, p. 63.

מרחץ שלא תעלה ותלהט (ʾm bqšt lkbwt mrḥṣ šlʾ tʿlh wtlhṭ). English translation from Michael A. Morgan, Sepher Ha-Razim: the Book of Mysteries, Chico (CA), 1983, p. 62.

65 ועשוה כצנת שלג וכמים קרים (wʾswh kṣnt šlg wkmym qrym).

67 אם בעית למיצר תנור או כיור או קידרא דלא נטמיין (ʾm bʿyt lmyṣr tnwr ʾw kywr ʾw qydrʾ dlʾ nṭmyyn). For the English translation, see Yuval Harari, "The Sword of Moses (Harba de-Moshe): A New Translation and Introduction," Magic, Ritual & Witchcraft, 7 (2012), pp. 58–98 (90).

68 See, e.g., PGM III. 1–164 (Hans Dieter Betz (ed.), The Greek Magical Papyri in Translation, Including the Demotic Spells, Chicago–London, 1992, pp. 18–22). For recipes for binding wild animals, see Sefer ha-Razim, Second Firmament, §155 (Rebiger & Schafer, Sefer ha-Razim i und ii, Vol. 1, p. *52}; Ḥarba de-Moshe (Yuval Harari, "The Sword of Moses," p. 91).

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

some aggressive practices focused on inanimate targets. Here, too, the ultimate intention was to affect humans, as shown in the examples below. However, the notion of binding an inanimate entity is particularly intriguing, as it addresses the inanimate as a living being.

Binding and aggressive magical practices targeting inanimate entities could include natural formations such as rivers or seas,[69] agricultural products,[70] and also objects and installations, such as a ship[71] or the mill which is the focus of this article. The latter type of practices is found already in Late Antiquity, as evidenced by the recipes for binding the furnace of a bathhouse mentioned above. Further parallels to this type of practices can be found in Coptic magic, for instance in a manuscript currently located in the Egyptian Museum in Cairo, inventory number JdE 42573, roughly dated between the tenth and the twelfth century.[72] The aim of this magical text is to affect a water-wheel and prevent it from supplying water. A water-wheel is a type of revolving installation similar to the mill mentioned in the recipes we discuss. In the Coptic text, the binding of the water-wheel is to be effected by pouring a mixture of liquids onto it: acacia juice (?) and snake water, the latter possibly meaning venom. This practice is similar in form to that attested in the Syriac recipes, but lacks the verbal element.

Aggressive magic against a water-wheel is also mentioned in another Coptic text currently located in Heidelberg, P. Heid. Inv. Kopt. 408. This magical procedure – which also involves pouring a mixture of liquids – is accompanied by a historiola in which a supernatural entity named Khoubin Harpak describes himself to King Solomon and claims: "My work is destruction. (…) A thresher, 69 See, e.g. Sefer ha-Razim, Second Firmament, §155 (Rebiger & Schafer, Sefer ha-Razim i und ii, Vol. 1, p. *52): "(if you wish to quell) a river or a sea which is rising and washing against buildings" (נהר או ים העולה ושטף בבתים, nhr ʾw ym hʿwlh wštp bbtym) (English translation from Morgan, Sepher Ha-Razim, p. 53).

70 This category may have been alluded to in the Twelve Tables law on "enchanting" crops (qui fruges excantassit), that was interpreted in later periods either as stealing crops with the help of magic, or ruining them by invoking storms. For a recent treatment of this law, with reference to previous literature, see J. B. Rives, "Magic in the XII Tables Revisited," Classical Quarterly, 52 (2002), pp. 270–290. Conversely, for examples of magical practices meant to positively affect agricultural products, see Ḥarba de-Moshe: "For trees that do not produce fruit" "For white rot that afflicts fruit", "For blight that afflicts the field" (Yuval Harari, "The Sword of Moses," pp. 87–88, 92).

71 See Ḥarba de-Moshe, a binding recipe "to detain a ship at sea", followed by a releasing recipe: למיכלא אילפא בימא (*lmykl*ʾ ʾylpʾ bymʾ) (Yuval Harari, "The Sword of Moses," p. 90).

72 See Korshi Dosoo, Edward O. D. Love & Markéta Preininger (chief editors). "KYP T55: Destruction of a water-wheel," Kyprianos Database of Ancient Ritual Texts and Objects, www.coptic-magic.phil.uni-wuerzburg.de/index.php/text/kyp-t-55. Accessed on 07/04/2022. We are grateful to Korshi Dosoo for this reference and the following one.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

I destroy it, a […] I destroy it, a shovel, I lay waste to it, a water-wheel, I destroy it, a garden, I destroy it, […] I destroy it, a storehouse, I destroy it (…)."[73] As can be seen from the above list, this Coptic text was meant to affect a variety of inanimate entities (both objects and installations) and presumably ultimately to harm their human owners.

Moving now to the Jewish parallels to the mill spells, we start with the observation that two parallels have been found. The first is part of a bifolio with magical recipes from the Cairo Geniza, T-S Ar. 49.54 1:12–3:5, that has been published by Joseph Naveh and Shaul Shaked.[74] Below we revise the reading of Naveh and Shaked.

Cambridge T-S Ar. 49.54 1:12–3:5. Paper bifolio, ca. 13.5 × 19.5 cm, each leaf measures ca. 13.5 × 10 cm. Inscribed in black ink by one or two hands. Oriental square script. The text contains Judaeo-Arabic, Hebrew and Aramaic.

Our reading revises that offered by the first editors of this text, Naveh and Shaked, on several points. In the first recipe, lines 14–15, they read the last letters of the magic names as a final mem, while we suggest reading samekh. The scribe wrote these two letters in nearly identical form (cf. 4, line 8: המקום ואסף). However, a comparison with the releasing recipe found in this manuscript, where similar magic words end with a clear samekh, as well as with the parallel recipe from NYPL 190, tips the scales in favor of a samekh. Second, in line 15 the previous editors read "לפנונים" (lpnwnym), but the first nun is mistaken, and the word is לפוניס (lpwnys). Third, in line 16 the last word begins with a clear ṭet, the first letter in the noun טחונתה, but this part was not reconstructed nor translated by Naveh and Shaked. The last line of the recipe, line 17, is poorly preserved. It clearly contains the goal of the recipe, namely that the mill should not function, but the verb is missing. We reconstruct here תהלך (thlk) based on two indications: a partially preserved lamed in the middle of the sequence, and the verb found in the releasing recipe, which is תהלך. The parallel from NYPL 190 contains two different verbs: תסוב ותרגיש (tswb w-trgyš). Neither seems to fit the lacuna in T-S Ar. 49.54 due to the presence of the lamed. Lastly, we reconstruct the preposition ב (b) 'at' in the phrase "at this moment (lit. hour)". The expression בהדא שעתה (bhdʾ šʿth) is found in other magic recipes, e.g., T-S Misc. 27.4.11, 1:14 (עבידו לי צביוני בהדא שעתא ʿbydw ly ṣbywny bhdʾ šʿtʾ).[75]

73 See Korshi Dosoo, Edward O. D. Love & Markéta Preininger (chief editors). "KYP T174: Curse to destroy a business (?)," Kyprianos Database of Ancient Ritual Texts and Objects, www.coptic-magic.phil.uni-wuerzburg.de/index.php/text/kyp-t-174. Accessed on 07/04/2022.

74 Joseph Naveh & Shaul Shaked, Magic Spells and Formulae, pp. 227–230, Geniza 25.

75 Joseph Naveh & Shaul Shaked, Magic Spells and Formulae, pp. 216–219, Geniza 22.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

T-S Ar. 49.54 1:12–17

12	bʾb l-ṭḥwnh	[a]באב לטחונה	A section for a mill.[b]
13	kwd twrʾb mn tḥt rǧlk	כוד תוראב מן תחת רגלך	Take some dust from
	ʾl-ysʾr w-ʾlqyh	אליסאר[c] ואלקיה	under your left foot, and throw it
14	py ḥlqhʾ w-qwl b-šm	פי חלקהא וקול בשם[d] אלפוניס	into its opening and say:
	ʾlpwnys		"In the name of ʾlpwnys
15	lpwnys w-ʾkpwnys ʾtwn	לפוניס ואכפוניס אתון אתיה	lpwnys and ʾkpnwnys!
	ʾtyh qd[yšyh]	קד[ישיה]	You, holy letters
16	w-šmhtʾ qdyšyh ʾswrw	ושמהתא קדישיה אסורו הדא	and holy names, bind
	hdʾ ṭ[ḥwnth]	ט[חונתה]	this mill,
17	dl[ʾ thlk b-h]ʾdʾ šʿtʾ:	דל[א תהלך(?) ב(?)ה]אדא	so that it does not [move,
		שעתא :	at] this moment!"

T-S Ar. 49.54 2:1–5

1	[...]	[e][...]	[...][f]
2	qwl ʾnpynws ʾpntpynws	קול אנפינוס אפנתפינוס	Say: "ʾnpynws ʾpntpynws!
3	ʾtwn šmhth qdyšyh	אתון שמהתה קדישיה	You, holy names,
4	šrwn hdʾ ṭḥwnth xx	שרון הדא טחונתה[g]	loosen this mill xx
5	w-thlk: mǧrb	ותהלך: מגרב	and let it move". Proven.

a The title is emphasized with supralinear clusters of three dots/short strokes.

b The translation provided by Naveh and Shaked is as follows:
12) <<A chapter for a lame woman (?)
13) Take dust from underneath your left foot and throw it
14) into her gullet, and say:>> "In the name of (magic
15) words). You, holy characters
16) and holy names, bind this ...
17) that he may not ... this hour."

c Both here and in the following word the "al" is written as ligature.

d From this word until the word הדא in line 16 (including) all the words are emphasized with supralinear clusters of three dots.

e The missing text is centered and was probably the title of the recipe.

f The translation provided by Naveh and Shaked is as follows:
1) <<Say:>> (magic names)
2) you, holy names,
3) release this female lame (?) person
4) that she may walk. <<Tested.>>

g The word is followed by two smaller signs resembling the qamatz of the Babylonian vocalization system. These might have functioned as graphic line fillers.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

Alternatively the preposition could have been מן (mn), "from (this moment)", but the space seems rather small for two letters (although it is not impossible that they were tightly spaced). The scribe could have used the preposition מ, in its Hebrew form, thus mixing Hebrew with Aramaic. This, too, is not impossible, given other imprecisions in the text, such as the spelling of הדא with an extra aleph, האדא.

Naveh and Shaked, while noting that the term טחונה (ṭḥwnh) relates to the Aramaic noun "miller", interpret it as an Arabic word "meaning something like 'lame' or 'cripple'" based on the context (p. 230). It seems that they were confused by the verb in the releasing recipe, ותהלך (w-thlk), "and it shall move (lit. walk)", and did not think of the possibility of a mill "walking", consequently interpreting the text as referring to a person, not an installation. The Syriac parallel clearly shows this to be otherwise.

The Genizah recipe for releasing a mill found on the verso of this leaf (2:1–5) seems to be written by a different hand, or by the same scribe but in a very different form. The letters are much larger, thicker and less cursive, and there are no supralinear dots for emphasis. If the recipe was indeed written by the same person as the previous one, the reason for the change in writing style is unclear. We should note that the writing changes again on the following leaf, in the middle of a recipe (3: 3).

The first line of the releasing recipe probably consisted of one word, its title, which could have been the Aramaic לשריה 'To release it', or a Judaeo-Arabic version thereof. Such a title would stress its connection with the previous recipe for binding a mill. The practice is entirely oral, as opposed to the previous one, which involved a manipulation of materials. It consists of a simple invocation of two magical names, that are asked to "release this mill". The result (or perhaps part of the spell to be uttered) is that the mill "shall walk", that is, begin to turn and function again.

The two magical names in the releasing recipe closely resemble those in the binding one. However, while the binding recipe contains three variations of the sequence פוניס (pwnys), the releasing spell contains two variations of the sequence פינוס (pynws). It is probable that both spells were meant to invoke similarly sounding names, built on the basis of פינוס (suggesting that the releasing spell preserved the more accurate forms). This assumption is based on the parallel found in NYPL 190, where the magical names are clearly based on the sequence פינוס (pynws) and not on פוניס (pwnys).

Both recipes on T-S Ar. 49.54 contain a mixture of languages: Judaeo-Arabic, Aramaic, and a couple of Hebrew words. This situation will be discussed further below, after presenting the second parallel.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

NYPL 190, fol. 180: 20–23[76]

https://digitalcollections.nypl.org/items/8cfbe0d0-a5ee-0133-e6a4-00505686d14e

This recipe is part of a paper manuscript of 258 pages, ca. 27 × 17 cm. Date: 1468. Hand: Byzantine. Scribe: Moshe ben Yaakov ben Mordechai and Marḥaba. The manuscript contains two works by Abraham Abulafia, Ḥaye ha-Nefesh and Matsref ha-Ḥokhmah, followed by a long compendium of magical recipes in a combination of Judaeo-Arabic, Aramaic and Hebrew (pp. 58–258 of the manuscript). The magic manuscript, including the recipe below, was edited by Gideon Bohak,[77] who noted the partial parallel to T-S Ar. 49.54 but did not provide an alternative interpretation.

The NYPL 190 recipe consists of a simple invocation of four magical names, followed by a series of synonym verbs denoting binding effects on the mill. The subsequent results, "it will not turn and not move" prove that the interpretation of טחונה as a mill is the correct one. The invocation is concluded by the name of the great and holy God and an abbreviated sequence of Amen.

20	lʿqd ʾlṭʾḥwn tqwl hdh	לעקד אלטאחון[b] תקול הדה	To bind a mill. Say these
	ʾlʾsmʾ llpynws ʾlpynws	אלאסמא ללפינוס אלפינוס	names: "llpynws ʾlpynws
21	pynws wkpynws ʾtwn	פינוס וכפינוס אתון שמהתא	pynws and kpynws", You
	šmhtʾ qdyšyʾ	קדישיא	holy names,
22	ʾswrw hdʾ ṭḥwntʾ wkptwh	אסורו הדא טחונתא וכפתוה	bind this mill and tie it wʾwqmwh wlʾ tswb wlʾ	ואוקמוה ולא תסוב ולא תרגיש	and stop it and it will trgš bʾlhʾ	באלהא	not turn and it will not move. By God
23	rbʾ wqydšʾ ʾ’ ʾ’ sʾ	רבא וקדישא א'א'ס'	the great and the holy.
			A(men) A(men) S(ela).

a The recipe is numbered on the margin, שפח, "378". The title is repeated on the margin.

b Under the title a different hand inscribed two letters (?) that resemble רן (rn) but their meaning is unclear.

76 Gideon Bohak, A Fifteenth-Century Manuscript of Jewish Magic, Ms New York Public Library Heb. 190 (formerly Sassoon 56): Introduction Annotated Edition and Facsimile (in Hebrew), 2 vols., Los Angeles, 2014.

77 Ibid., Vol. 1, p. 222.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

As opposed to the Genizah recipe, NYPL 190 only consists of an incantation to be uttered, whereas T-S Ar. 49.54 also involves a practical action (taking dust and feeding it to the mill). The magical words to be uttered, however, resemble each other and clearly reflect the same incantation:

T-S Ar. 49.54 binding	NYPL 190 binding	T-S Ar. 49.54 releasing
אלפוניס	ללפינוס
לפוניס	אלפינוס
	פינוס	אנפינוס
ואכפוניס	וכפינוס	אפנתפינוס

The core of the magic words in NYPL 190 and in the releasing recipe from T-S Ar. 49.54 is פינוס (pynws), and (probably) this also was the original form of the core of the names of the T-S Ar. 49.54 binding recipe, where they were changed in the course of its transmission. Given the aim of the recipe, namely binding a mill, an installation meant to produce flour and consequently bread, could this core have a related meaning? It is perhaps possible to relate it to the Greek πεινών, meaning "hungry". However, to date we have not found any Greek magic recipes that are directed against a mill or a similar installation.

In terms of chronology, both the Aramaic text preserved in NYPL 190 and that in the middle of the Judaeo-Arabic version from T-S Ar. 49.54 attest to the antiquity of these spells. In the medieval period most Jews were no longer using Aramaic. Hence, in both manuscripts the title and instructions of the recipes are provided in Judaeo-Arabic, while the actual incantation remains in the original Aramaic.[78]

78 For a broader discussion of the division of languages in magic texts, see Gideon Bohak, "Towards a Catalogue of the Magical, Astrological, Divinatory and Alchemical Fragments from the Cambridge Genizah Collections," in: "From a Sacred Source": Genizah Studies in Honour of Professor Stefan C. Reif, ed. Ben Outhwaite and Siam Bhayro, Leiden, 2011, pp. 53–79 (62–64, 68–69).

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

9 Conclusions

In this study of the Syriac text-unit for a mill we have shown that the magical practices attested in these recipes have a much broader cultural and historical context. Comparing the Syriac texts with Jewish recipes, we can try to identify the core of the binding and loosening practices shared by both magical traditions. In the case of the binding spell the core-practice is throwing dust into the opening in the upper mill, while reciting the incantation. In the case of the loosening spell, in both traditions Psalm 146:7 is used for this purpose.

Notably, both in the Syriac and in the Jewish text-units for a mill a part of the recipe is written in Arabic. As we have mentioned before, Arabic was frequently used as a language of both written and spoken communication for Oriental Jews in medieval times (written often in the form of Judaeo-Arabic). However, as has also been mentioned above, the Arabic language is a highly marginal phenomenon for Syriac magical manuscripts. It is worth mentioning here that the Arabic spell (verses 5–7) in the Syriac text-unit shows not only the kind of scribal mistakes which occur during the transmission of a poorly understood text, but also mistakes and discrepancies which clearly demonstrate that this incantation was written down from hearing. In addition to the arguments presented above, it should be outlined that unlike the Jewish recipes for a mill, the Arabic spell found in the Syriac manuscripts contains clear indications of its circulation in Muslim context, cf. ʾaḷḷāh ʾakbar (l. 9), bi-xātimatʾ ʾal-jinn (l. 11), sundūk bundūk (l. 8). Taken together this evidence suggests that the binding practice for a mill was shared by Arabic-speaking Muslims, Jews and Syriac Christians. The Arabic spell written down in Garshuni attests to oral practice. To sum up, we do not assume, though it cannot be refuted either, that the Arabic magical tradition was a source for this practice in both the Syriac and the Jewish manuscripts. The available evidence allows us only to deduce that similar practices occurred in Arabic, Syriac and Jewish magical traditions.

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

Appendix

FIGURE 1 MS Syriac 160, Houghton Library, Harvard University, f. 44r (H)

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

FIGURE 2 BL Or. 5281, f. 40v (Blb)
© BRITISH LIBRARY BOARD (BL OR. 5281, F. 40V)

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

FIGURE 3 BL Or. 5281, f. 41r (Blb)
© BRITISH LIBRARY BOARD (BL OR. 5281, F. 41R)

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

FIGURE 4 Cambridge University Library T-S Ar. 49.54 (recto)
REPRODUCED BY KIND PERMISSION OF THE SYNDICS OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

FIGURE 5 Cambridge University Library T-S Ar. 49.54 (verso)
REPRODUCED BY KIND PERMISSION OF THE SYNDICS OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Downloaded from Brill.com05/23/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

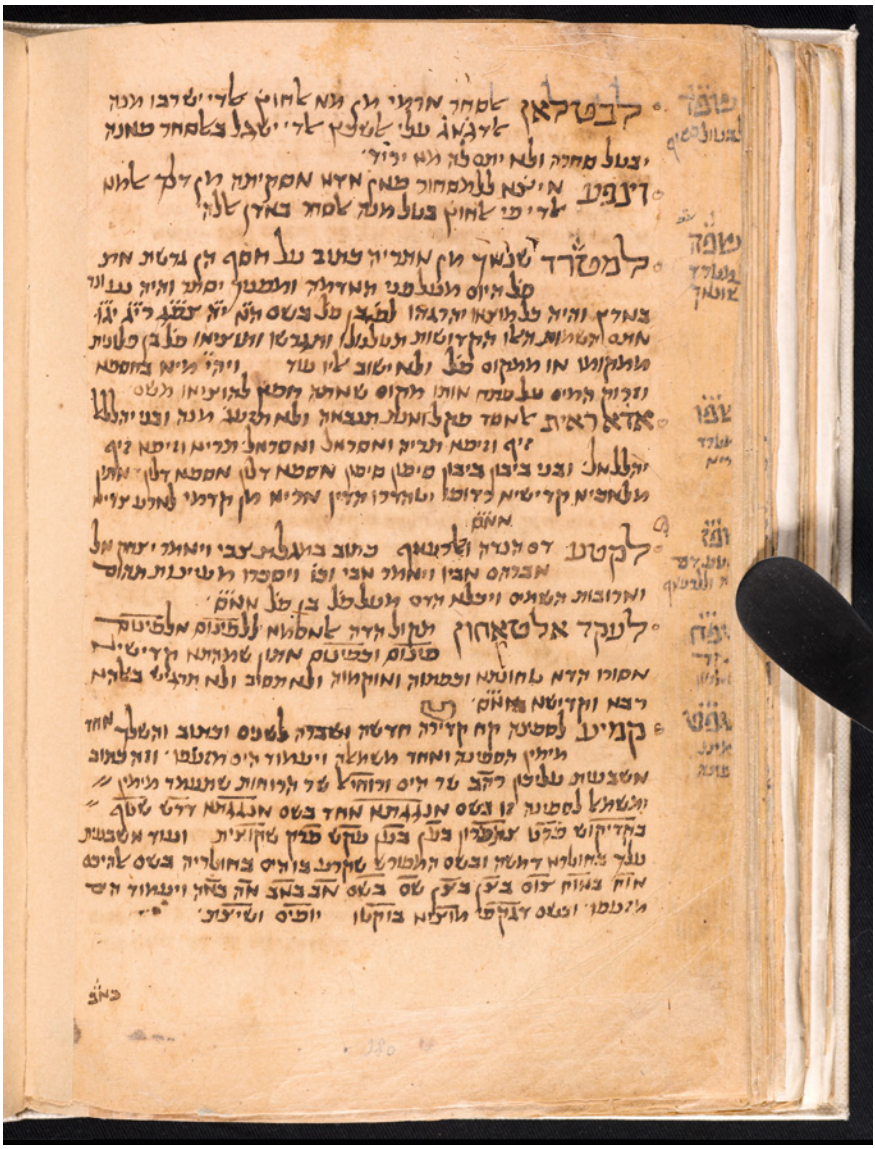

FIGURE 6 NYPL 190, fol. 180: 20–23. Dorot Jewish Division, The New York Public Library "ḤAYE HA-NEFESH" NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY DIGITAL COLLECTIONS. ACCESSED APRIL 19, 2022. HTTPS://DIGITALCOLLECTIONS.NYPL.ORG/ITEMS/8CFBE0D0-A5EE-0133-E6A4-00505686D14E

Downloaded from Brill.com05/28/2023 10:15:59AM
via Universiteit Utrecht

ספר

החידות

ספר שני.

מאת

יהואש זאלודסקי.

דפוס „עקספרעס",
84a, היי סטריט, ווייטשעפעל,
1928.

red C Fr.

unknown to Both Bibl. S-J. Wannieja and Rensin

ספר החידות חלק שני

פתח דבר, אל הקוראים.

התורה הקדושה שצוה לנו משה מורשה צותה אותנו „השמר לך פן תעזוב את הלוי"... ובחלק הראשון מספרי ספר החידות, בין יתר האנשים הגדולים והמפורסמים שהזכרתי לטוב עזבתי את הלוי, ועפי „שניאה" לא מצדי אך מצד הדפוס, לא נמצא שם המטיף המצוין והנפלא מר שלמה בן התורני והחכם הגדול מר חיים יהודה,* ושניאות מי יבין? לכן אמרתי אכפרה נא פניו במנחה מנחת מרחשת רחשי לבי, ואני נותן לו מקום בראש, והלוי יהיה לכהן, לא לעלות לתורה ראשון; רק לוי במקום כהן, יען כי הוא איננו ממשפחת הלוים רק ראשון בסוד חכמים ונבונים. להודות לו בתודה וברכה על כל הטוב והחסד שעשה עמדי, והיה לי לאחיעזר ואחיסמך להוציא גם את החלק השני מספרי ספר „החידות", ולכבודו הרם והנעלה אשיר לו שיר תהלה.

* The Rev. S. Lucz, M.A.

שיר לשלמה שהשלום שלו.

בן אב יקר תלמודי נפלא המצוין
במדות ובמעלות טובות הנודע
שבל ימיו הקדיש לתורה ולתעודה
מר חיים יהודה.

שמך שלמה נאה לך ואתה נאה לשמך
אוהב שלום ורודף שלום תמיד היית
בתורה ובחכמה יומם ולילה הגית
זה יותר משלשים שנה, במקדש מעט
נפת תטפנה שפתיך שפתי משרים
על גרם המעלות עלית לאט לאט
גם על ראש פסגת החכמה והמדעים
איתן מושבך, גם „בבקרת" רב לך ידיך
חן ושכל טוב מצאת גם בעיני חכמי הגוים
פועל צדק דובר אמת בלבבך, תמים במעשיך
דבריך דברי חכמה ודעת, ישרים ויקרים
קח נא ברכתי ממני אחד מאלפי אלפים
מכבדיך ומעריצך
דשן ורענן שתול בבית ד' תזריח ותפריח
כל ימי חייך, ותזכה, להטיף אמרותיך גם
לימות המשיח.

יהואש זאלודסקי
המכונה ב'ר'מ'י'ז'א.

חידה א.

ראשיתי היא בארץ מתחת
ואחריתי לא ביגון אך בנחת
„כל" מכל תשים בקרבי בידיך
תראה את שמי מפרש בעיניך
מה אני? מגיד הרקיע
הביטה על מראיתי ושמי לפניך יופיע.

חידה ב.

ראשיתי היא בין בין הפרשים
אחריתי היא בין התרשישים
תוכי היא בין רוכבי הרכש
גם בכלך, גם בלכש
במלאכת המשבן נבראתי בתחלה
עתה תמצאני בכל קְהִלָה.

חידה ג.

יש לי פה, אך אלם אנכי

איננני מדבר, צומח, או, חי

בכל זאת חזק ואמיץ כְּחִי

לקנות לב כל איש עד בלי די

יקר אני כאבנים טובות ומרגליות

על כפים ישאיני בראשי הומִיות.

———

חידה ד.

ראשית שמי, במעשה בראשית תראני

ואחריתי בארץ החוילה תמצאני

אמנם, לפעמים דל הנני

בכל זאת תריח בו ריח נחוח

מה חדל אני לא נם ממני לח.

———

חידה ה.

בראשיתי ואחריתי עלה עלי על

הזק אנכי ובידי יש לאל.

אמנם שמי לשמצה בפי כל

מה אנכי, חפצים אתם לדעת הגברים,

שאו עיניכם אל מרום הרים,

תכירוני ותדעוני, קוראים יקרים.

———

חידה ו.

בראשיתי אני בין החיים
ולא בין המתים
באחריתי אני בין המתים
וגם בין החיים
בתוכי אני בין רמי המעלה
בלי תוכי אני איש בן נח
הבאתי עלי חרפה וקללה
פעם תראני לבעל מח
ופעם לבעל מום משחתי בי
פעם בתקופת תמוז קרירא לי
ופעם אני משחית ומחבל
תחרימני, ושמי תנבל
מה אני? נקבה או זכר
ק־אני בשמי היום, גם מחר
תדע כי איננני נקבה, אך זכר.

———

חידה ז.

בשמי במלואו אני מביא ברכה,
ואוביל שי עד בלי די,
בשדה ובגרן יש לי יד
פעם אביא שד ואנחה,
פעם אני חולץ שַׁד
לאלפי אלפים ולרבבות,
ואת שמי האמיתי, הראיתי להאבות.

———

בדיחה לפורים.

חידה ח.

כרות ראש פרשנדתא

וגם ראש הקטן ויזתא

וחקרת ודרשת

וקח קרב פרמשתא

ותוסיף גם רגל ארידי

כי נכון וכדַי

לשאל במשפט האורים

ותדע כי חיב אינש לבסומי בפורים.

———

חידה ט.

בבקר תראני כשחר פרוש על ההרים
ופעמים תמצאני בין ערדי הבקרים
פעם כריתי לי קבר בין הקברים
ופעם רקב בעצמותי בין הנרקבים
פעם תראני בקולות וברקים
לא תראני לא בהרים ולא בעמקים
אני בין הזכרים ובין הנקבות
לאשה נשאתי לאחד מראשי האבות
בדרך נכשלתי ונפלתי קרני אסון
קמתי מהרה והאסון נהפך לששון.

———

חידה י.

באבות הנשיאים, תראה את שמי בכל.

אמנם כן, בשמי אני מוצא חן,

אך לא בקדש רק בחל

פעם תראוני בין הנחלים

ופעם תמצאוני בין הנחשלים

אני שואג בקול כלביא

וקורא אלי, אלי ואבי!

הידה יא.

אינני מן היקב, אך מן הגרן
תראני ותבירני בחבצלת השרון
הרם קולך וקרא את שמי בגרון
אני הבכור, משלשה אחי הנורעים
במשפחות הלוים, תמצאני שמה
במשמרת המשכן בחצר, בין הקלעים
בין המחנות, אני חונה ימה.

חידה יב.

בראשיתי ואחריתי תדמיוני כמו אל

מחציי ומעלה, אש עצור בי

ומחצי ולמטה, יש לי כל

בימי אברהם, כאיש נקראתי בשמי

בימי המרגלים, בשם צומח תקראוני

דרשו בספרי בראשית ובמדבר ותמצאוני.

———

חידה יג.

שמי אך משלש אותיות,
על כפים ישאוני בראשי הומיות
ראשיתי ואחריתי בין עניים אומללים,
תוכי ראשון בין גבירים גדולים.
תראני גם בימים ובנחלים,
במים רבים במשברי ים,
בנושאי המשכן במדבר, תמצאני שם.

———

חידה יד.

בשם עצם פרטי אני בפי כל לשמצה

ובשם תאר, במלא רהב הארץ אני נמצא

בשמי תמצא חברותא, גם מיהותא

ברח ממיתותא, ובחר חברותא;

אם תכירני, השמר להזכיר את שמי פעמים

פן תאונה אליך דבר בלהי נעים

דרוש בנביאים, תמצאני ותראני בעינים.

———

חידה טו.

כצל היו ימי עלי ארץ

ברית עולם הפרתי, הבאתי עלי קרץ

יען כי הייתי גודר פרץ

לא הלכתי בדרך כל הארץ

בשמי אפיל אימה ופחד

אני אדם, ועץ השדה יחד

פעם פלץ ובעתה תאחזני

בדור המדבר תבקשני ותכירני.

———

חידה טז.

לדעת שמי בכל עת תמצאני

אך הבא לי עזרת מצר,

אל תוך ביתך תביאני והעצרני

תכבדני בששון ושמחה ויקר

קשה תהיה עליך פרידתנו

נגילה ונשמחה בזמן שמחתנו.

———

חידה יז.

בין יתר עשרת הדברים גבראתי
ליוצאי מצרים במדבר נלויתי
פעם מקומי מתחת לארץ במים
פעם אשא אבר כיונה תחת השמים
פעם נאספו אלי צאן ועדר
פעם ארב יושב לי בחדר
לולי אנכי, לשונך מצמא נשתה
קרא „חידתי" באר היטב, יגעת ומצאת.

———

חידה יח.

בשמי האמיתי, בדמות איש תראני

ובשמות הערים בשם עיר תמצאני

פעם אני מוצא חן בעיניך

ופעם ככלב רע תגרשני מפניך

פעם כעפל ובחן תכירני

בגלעד תבקשני תדרשני ותדעני.

———

חידה יט.

בראשיתי ואחריתי כאם תראני
מחציו ומעלה, כאב תכבדני,
בימי משה נולדתי, בין העם
נתגדלתי לאיש נשא ורם.
איש ריב ומדון תמיד הייתי,
בריתי־אחים הפרתי, שגאתי בזיתי,
אולתי סלפה דרכי, חיי קפדתי,
התחברתי לרשעים, ולשאול ירדתי.

———

חידה כ.

השמר לך, פן תדרוש לחידתי

ולא תאמר יגעתי ולא מצאתי

כן שים פאר תחת אפר

דרוש בספר דברים אמרי שפר

במחנות ישראל בין המסעות

בין נטעי „ארן" תמצא לחידתי תוצאות.

———

חידה כא.

בראשיתי ואחריתי תראוני כפסל ואליל
בול עץ, מסבה, אין בי מועיל
אך אם אגלה לכם רז
הראו כי כחי רב ועז
אמנם גם זר אהיה בעיניכם
פעם אני מביא תועלת וברכה
פעם אני גורם יגון ואנחה
בהוכחה, בשמי יקללו שמיכם
דרשוני באבני ארצנו הקדושה והטהורה
תמצאוני תכירוני ותדעוני עד מהרה.

———

חידה כב.

אמנם כי בעיניך דבר חרש אנכי
בכל זאת כבר הייתי לעולמים
פעולתו רבה וחזקה ורב כחי
בי בחר יעקב אבינו התמים
טעם זקנים אקח, משיב אחור חכמים
פעם שח עינים שפל הנני
פעם כש'ד משדי תראני
לא תכבדני אך תחשדני
השמר לך, בידיך לנגוע בי
הרחק ממני אם תדע את שמי.

———

חידה כג.

יש לי פה ומדבר אינני

לבי עלי גם כלי סג הנני

שאו מרום עיניכם להר גבוה

מי ומה אני מי מכם יודע?

———

חידה, מענינא דיומא.

חידה כד.

ראשיתי ואחריתי נותנים לי לחם
עליהם השלכתי יהבי בצאתי מרחם
השלישי העומד ביניהם,
הוא ראש להכתובים משני עבריהם
קרא את שמו פנים ואחור
בתפלתך היום, גם מחר
בקברות מלכים, כבר נקברתי
בכל זאת, בחיים נשארתי.

———

חידה כה.

שמי אך משלש אותיות
וכבר נודעתי בשנים קדמוניות
ראשיתי ואחריתי בטללי אורות
תוכי תחפשני תראני בנרות
נהדר בכבוד על מרכבה
בשור מקרין זהב פרוים
המון אלפי אלפים ורבבה
ברנה וצהלה הובילוני לירושלים
במקדש עולמים כברוני באורים
בשמחה וששון חג הבכורים.

———

חידה כו.

איה אנכי? אם תשאלני

אם פה תראני, בביתך תביאני

אך אחת תשימני, ולא שתים

כמצוה עלינו בתורה פעמים

במדה טובה, שמי כבר ידוע

תמצאני ותראני, בפרשת השבוע.

———

חידה כז.

ראשית שמי בשם אדם הראשון

תראני באור גם באישון

השניה—בנחל קדומים בנחל קישון

השלישית—תמצא תמושני בידים

הרביעית—איננה במתים אך בחיים

את שמי במלואו תראני בעינים

בימות המשיח, באבני שערי ירושלים.

חידה מעניני דיומא.

חידה כח.

בראשיתי ואחריתי קניתי שם
תוכי, בשרי מעלה במרום
רוחי נשברה, בקראי בגרון
גונח ומילל ביום הזכרון
לקולי יחרד כל העם
כי שברי גדול כים.

———

חידה כט.

ראשיתי ואחריתי בין הגמולים
לא תראני בין הערלים
תוכי מקומי בין הגדולים
פעם גם בין הגמדים
פעם תמצאני בפרי מגדים
שמי תזכיר אך בקדש
בשבת בחג, גם בחדש
קראני במהון, לא בחפזון
תכירני גם בברכת המזון.

חידה מעניני דיומא.

חידה ל.

ביוצאי מצרים במדבר נולדתי
לבני ישראל שמי הגדתי
ברכתי אל תהי בעיניך קלה
לכל מכבדי לא תארע תקלה
יעקב אבינו בשמי קבע דירתו
כסה את אהלו. ולמד את תורתו.

———

פתרון החידות:

א.	תכלת	3	טז.	עצרת	17
ב.	פרכת	3	יז.	באר	18
ג.	ישפה	4	יח.	כלב	19
ד.	בדלח	5	יט.	אבירם	20
ה.	עזאזל	6	כ.	פארן	21
ו.	חרם	7	כא.	ברזל	22
ז.	שדי	8	כב.	שׁחר	23
ח.	פורים	9	כג.	פסגה	24
ט.	רבקה ברק	10	כד.	דוד	25
י.	חלן	11	כה.	טנא	26
יא.	גרשון	12	כו.	איפה	27
יב.	אשבל	13	כז.	אקדח	28
יג.	דגל	14	כח.	שברים	29
יד.	רחב	15	כט.	מגדול	30
טו.	צלפחד	16	ל.	סכות	31

המחיר הוא חצי כתר

2/6

וכל המרבה לספר הרי זה משבח.

אדריסתי היא כן:
J. Zaludsky. 2, Exeter Road, Brondesbury, N.W. 6.

FORM AND PURPOSE IN ARAMAIC SPELLS: SOME JEWISH THEMES

[The poetics of magic texts][1]

Shaul Shaked

The Aramaic magic texts from Babylonia, which belong to the end of the Sasanian period or the late Talmudic period, are now available in dramatically increased quantities, with about 800 new texts that have now joined those already published.[2] The present paper is the outcome of work carried out by the present writer on the collection of incantation bowls in the Schøyen Collection, Oslo and London, but some further unpublished material is quoted from other sources. It is too early to attempt at this stage a general synthesis of the texts available, as many of them have not yet been read and interpreted in a definitive manner. Still, it is possible already at this stage to single out certain patterns that keep coming up, and some that are so far unique, and to try to make some sense out of them. Everything said on the basis of the material so far available is subject to revision when the full corpus has been properly studied.

I should like to concentrate here on some specifically Jewish material in the texts under consideration.[3] This may lead us to a discussion of the relationship between the Jewish themes and the common syncretistic stock that characterized the popular religion of Sasanian Babylonia.[4] It is quite clear that we are dealing with a type of religion that does not directly represent any of the established religious groups. The Jewish magic texts, although they have undeniable

---

[1] This is an expanded version of a paper delivered in 1995 at a conference on "Magic and magic in Judaism", held in Jerusalem and Tel-Aviv. Other papers in this series are Shaked 1997; 1999a; 2002c. A more general presentation of the material is in Shaked 1999b. Relevant to the theme of this article are also the publications Shaked 2000a; 2002b.

[2] Previously published texts make up not much more than about 100 texts.

[3] An edition and a translation of these texts are to be provided in a separate publication (Shaked, forthcoming). Full documentation, with all the known variants of any given text, will be listed there.

[4] On this point cf. Shaked 1997.

affinities with the liturgy and canon of scriptures of Judaism, have never been recognized as part of the "legitimate" Jewish literature. If normative Jewish texts contain magic sections (and they do), they usually occur in marginal situations and in books which do not have full canonical standing.[5] The same applies to Christian and Mandaean texts (although the borderline is more difficult to define with the Mandaean material). While they are not in any sense heretical or sectarian, they are also not part of mainstream Judaism, Christianity, Manichaeism or Mandaism. It is impossible to define the notion of popular religion in the present context except by using such negative descriptions. By popular religion we do not necessarily mean the faith and practice of the unlearned or underprivileged layers of sociey. For all we know, some of the learned and influential were actively engaged in, and may have zealously promoted, the composition and copying of magic texts. One can only understand this notion in terms of the type of worship and belief that was considered unsuitable to be incorporated into the mainstream order of prayer and study.

The existence of a specifically Jewish stock of themes and motifs in the magic texts of Late Antiquity has been noticed before. It is particularly prominent in the Greek magical papyri and amulets,[6] and examples for this can also be found in Syriac magic texts.

The Jewish brand of Aramaic, written in Hebrew characters, is a typical Jewish language. It frequently contains a mixture of Hebrew phrases with the Aramaic, and makes use of biblical quotations in the original Hebrew (sometimes, though seldom, in Aramaic paraphrase). The quotations, while quite faithful to the Hebrew original, contain spelling variations indicating that they were not normally copied from a written model but from memory, derived to all appearances from oral recitation.[7] It seems possible to establish that Jewish and Mandaean bowls were written respectively by Jews or Mandaeans,

---

[5] These remarks are not clear-cut. The marginal situations are typically those of healing and personal distress, which are very close to the magic usage, but there is a certain amount of sharing of material between "normative" texts and magic writings.

[6] Cf. recently Betz 1997. It is possible to quote Marcel Simon's formulation: "In the opinion of the ancients, magic was, as it were, congenital in Israel" (Simon 1996:349).

[7] Cf. the striking case of Naveh and Shaked 1985:27, B3, which contains a quotation from Num 10:35 with many deviations from the standard spelling. For comments on the transmission of the spells, cf. Naveh and Shaked 1985:140.

in other words, by writers well versed in their religious traditions, often at the order of members of other population groups.[8]

Several examples may be mentioned for formulae that are evidently derived from Jewish sources but which are not preserved in the extant Jewish literature. One of these is the frequent allusion to Joshua ben Peraḥya, a prominent Talmudic figure (second century BCE), who is said to have initiated the practice of a deed of divorce served on the demons. The use of the formula of an act of divorce "that comes from across the sea", a halakhic construct that was applied to the situation of the combat against the demons, is another example.[9] The occasional use of prayer formulae, like those occurring in the Jewish prayer book, also betrays the Jewish background of the texts.[10]

One or two further points are relevant to the present discussion. The existence of a considerable body of texts that belong to the genre of Hekhalot literature raises the question of the relationship between Jewish magic and the early Jewish mystical literature known as Hekhalot. It is also relevant to the discussion as to the history of the Hekhalot literature, its place and time. The presence of such themes in the bowl texts[11] shows that the Jewish magical literature in Babylonia had close affinity with this genre of Jewish literature. Since the discovery of that text, two other versions of the same formula have come to light in other bowls.[12]

Of particular interest is the occurrence of mishnaic texts in two of the incantation bowls. Although some talmudic phrases have already been noticed in the Jewish Aramaic texts, this is the first time that a complete text is given, and these are the earliest Mishna manuscripts known so far.[13] Their interest is enhanced by the fact that they come from Babylonia. The bowls presumably belong to the late Sasanian period, that is to say, between the fourth and the seventh centuries CE;[14] the use of bowls for writing Aramaic incantation

[8] The same conclusion is also that of Harviainen 1993.
[9] Cf. Shaked 1999a.
[10] Further to this point Naveh and Shaked 1985:17f.; Naveh and Shaked 1993:22–31.
[11] Cf. Shaked 1995.
[12] These are MS 1927/63; 2046. A full publication will be included in Shaked (forthcoming).
[13] The other early attestation of a Mishna text is on a mosaic from Rehob, near Beit Shean, which is probably later than our bowls; cf. Sussmann 1974, 1975, 1976.
[14] The first evidence of a dated bowl (in the sixth century CE) has now come to light. It will be published separately soon.

texts seems to have stopped, for some unknown reason, with the advent of Islam.[15] The fact that during that period mishnaic passages could already serve as a sacred text to be quoted and used like verses from the Bible adds to the interest of this find. Its use is even more striking when we consider the fact that it serves not merely as a sacred text, but as a powerful name.

I. MS 1929/6[16]

1 Bound and sealed are the demons and *dēv*s and liliths and destructive spirits
2 and sorcerers and shutting-up spirits and curses and vows and misfortunes. May you be removed from this
3 house of Adib son of Bat-Šabbeta and from the dwelling of Fra<da>dukh daughter of Mamai, his wife. By the name of: "The sin-offerings
4 of the congregation and of individuals. These are the sin-offerings of the congregation: the he-goats offered at the new moons and at the set feasts[17] are to be slaughtered
5 on the north side, and their blood is received in a vessel of ministry <on> the north side. Their blood is required to be sprinkled by four acts of sprinkling on the four horns (of the altar). In what manner? The priest goes up the ramp and goes around
6 the circuit. He comes to the south-eastern horn, then to the north-eastern, then to the north-western, and then to the south-western. The residue of the blood he would 7 pour over the southern base. The offerings were consumed within the curtains, by males of the priestly stock, and cooked for food in any fashion during that day and night until midnight".[18]

---

[15] Some bowls written in Arabic in the early Islamic period and now kept at the British Museum have come to light.

[16] All numbers with the prefix MS denote bowls in the Schøyen Collection, Oslo and London.

[17] Cf. Num 28:15, 22, 30; 29:5, 11, 16, 19, 22, 25, 28, 31, 34, 38.

[18] Mishna Zebaḥim 5:3. The English version of Danby 1933 has been used with slight modifications.

II. MS 2053/170

1 . . . evil thing. Healing from heaven . . .
2 . . . and the house . . .
3 . . . by the seal of . . . not . . . in . . .
4 . . . lfa (?), his wife. By the name of: "The burnt offering [is (in) the holy of ho]lies. It [is slaught]ered in the no[rth and its blood is received in a vessel of] offering
5 in the north. Its blood requires t[w]o sacrificial gifts [that are fou]r, and they require stripping (of the skin) and dis[membering] and whole-offering [in fire]".[19] . . . Amen, Selah,
6 Hallelujah.

The name of the client is not visible in the badly preserved Bowl II, but it could well be the same as that of Bowl I. The same client, Adib son of Bat-Shabbeta, is the owner of a third bowl, which may have been written by the same hand (this is uncertain), and which shares a few other peculiarities with this bowl.[20] The importance of this text from our present point of view is that it makes use of a non-biblical authoritative Jewish text. The text is quoted here perhaps not as a Mishna passage, but probably from the Jewish liturgy; it figures even today as part of the morning service.[21] Its earliest attestation seems to be in the Seder of Rav ʿAmram Gaʾon (9th century CE).[22] The text is associated with the sacrifice service in the Temple. It reflects the fact that worship in the synagogue is based on a re-enactment of the sacrifices performed in the Jerusalem Temple. Its occurrence in this magic context shows that one of the most powerful symbols of Jewish sanctity, the Temple, is used as a weapon

[19] Mishna Zebaḥim 5:4.

[20] Moussaieff 108; see Appendix, Text IIa. Some of the features that are common are: the quotation of a sacred text with the introductory formula "By the name of" (be-šum), as if the text were a powerful name to be invoked; this is very unusual in other bowl texts (perhaps unique to these two bowls); the fact that the spell, after a brief introduction stating the purpose of the formula, consists solely of quotations, with no other magic formula added.

[21] Cf. for example Baer 1937:50f.

[22] Cf. Albeck 1956, Seder qodašim, 9; Encyclopaedia Judaica II:891ff. Cf. Goldschmidt 1971, p. dalet; an English translation is in Hedegård 1951:6, 16. The history of the text of ʿAmram Gaʾon's prayer-book is rather complicated and somewhat debatable, but it may be assumed that by the ninth century CE the text of Zebaḥim 5 had been incorporated in the normative order of prayer. Our Aramaic bowl may suggest that this was already the case in the sixth century, if not earlier.

against the onslaught of the demons. It was readily available to a Jewish sorcerer presumably because he was in the habit of reciting it daily. It may be pointed out that another Mishna text used in the Jewish liturgy occurs in a magical manuscript; this is Shabbat 2:7, contained in a mediaeval book of magic from the Cairo Geniza.[23]

Two further points may be made. Who are the clients of this bowl, and what can we deduce from their names? The suggestion that they were Jewish, Christian, or pagan should be considered. The man is called Adib (Adyab?, Adayyab?); this is not an Iranian name, and may be of Arabic origin. His mother's name is clearly Aramaic with a Jewish-Christian association, Bat-Šabbeta, "daughter of the Sabbath". One cannot exclude the possibility that the man and his mother were Jewish, but these names and, in particular, the name-pattern of the mother's name, are not otherwise attested for Jews. The name of his wife and her mother are Persian: *Fradadukh.[24] It is possible to assume, with a certain degree of probability, as has been done for the majority of the Jewish bowls,[25] that the bowl could have been manufactured for non-Jewish clients. The family in question may represent a mixed Persian-Semitic household, a situation often encountered among the clients of incantation bowls at this period. Onomastics, however, cannot be a safe guide to the ethnic or religious affiliation of individuals, because we do not know to what extent Persian or Semitic names were used by members of the various linguistic and religious communities. The name Bat-Šabbeta has a chance of being Christian rather than Jewish, as names based on the days of the week, and in particular Sabbath and Sunday, seem to have been common among Christians of the period.[26]

The other point concerns the structure of this incantation. The text is rather unusual in that it has two clearly distinguishable parts.

---

[23] Cf. Naveh and Shaked 1993:193, 206 (G18:11) for that text and some further comments.

[24] Written prdwk, perhaps to be read alternatively Farra-dukh, *Paridukh, *Frayād-dukh, or *Pīr-dukh. For the reading Frādadukh cf. the well-attested names Frāda, Frādad-xwarra, etc., Justi 1895:101; for Frayād-dukh, cf. Justi 1895:101 ff., s.v. Frahāta; Gignoux 1986, No. 373 (where Gignoux reads Frahād, though it seems better to read Frayād "help, assistance"); for Pīr-dukh cf. Gignoux 1986, No. 770.

[25] Cf. Naveh and Shaked 1985:18.

[26] Cf. the names Bar-Šabba (e.g. Hoffmann 1880:270, where it is transcribed Bar Šabbē), Bar-Ḥad-be-Šabba (e.g. Hoffmann 1880:49, 115).

An introduction, contained in Part I, sets out the purpose of the spell: to protect the household from the threats presented by various demons. These threats are not defined in more detail, and we may take it that they refer to health hazards. The introduction also specifies the names of the persons for whom the spell was prepared. The main part of the spell (Part II) consists of only one magic "name", a name that happens to be a long quotation from the Mishna or from a liturgical text. The spell text breaks off abruptly at the end of the Mishna. We could normally expect a further part or parts, where some additional elaboration of the spell might occur. This could contain a repetition of some of the elements contained in Part I, or a further adjuration of the powers, and perhaps a proper conclusion, with words such as "Amen, Amen, Selah" or the like, that are often employed at the ending of spells. In contrast to most other bowl texts, the formula stops here.

This structure constitutes a departure from the majority of texts, although there are no strict rules about structure and length in the spell texts. Some texts can run to considerable length, with many repetitions, or they may contain several model-formulae combined in a string, while others are quite short. The way in which different formulae are put together in a single text should be the object of a separate study, which has not yet been undertaken. One has the feeling, though, that a long text can evolve out of a fairly free juxtaposition of separate elements, that are used like building blocks. The present text is not typical in that it is based on a single theme and in being rather abrupt. We may indeed wonder whether this special style has a significance. Since this text is so far unique, it is difficult to comment further on its style.

Another spell formula, so far without parallels, may be quoted. It serves a purpose not often served by bowls: it is designed for gaining popularity and favour with people in general and with people in a position of high power and authority in particular. This aim of magic activity becomes quite popular in the mediaeval period; a large number of amulets and spell formulae from the Cairo Geniza are dedicated to this purpose. In Late Antiquity, however, this theme is seldom attested. The most prominent single purpose of spells in Late Antiquity is to help with health problems, while social or economic motives are much less conspicuous.

III. MS 1927/2

1 ʿAniel, answer her,[27] i.e. Mahdukh daughter of Ispendarmed; Michael, teach (her) by a visitation (?);[28] Hadariel, clothe her with glory; Karmiel, clothe her with mercy;[29] Ziviel, add your splendour to Mahdukh daughter of Ispendarmed.

2 Waḥi, Yaḥuš, . . ., Yaḥuš, YHWH Sabaoth, ʿIpuzrael, Zartael, Qanael, Qantael: You, holy angels, who are appointed over the shape of the countenance of a person, and who give that person grace and love: put

3 grace in Mahdukh daughter of Ispendarmed in the eyes of all those who see her and gaze at her. May she speak and be heard, may she come to trial and win it, may she ask and take (that which she has asked for), may she say (something) and be listened to. By the name of Ruspa, Salṭa, Ṭum'a.

4 This magic act is for reviving . . . of Mirdukh daughter of Mamai, of Gušnazdukh daughter of Mama, of Burzanai, Gušnazdad and Bustai sons of Mirdukh, of Zebina and ʿAbda sons of Gušnazdukh,

5 so that their eyes should not be torn open (?) . . . Namuel, Laqoṭe. (By that which) was said (in the scripture): "And may he find grace and good understanding in the eyes of God and man" (Prov 3:4). This is the mystery that Zarpiel,

6 the prince of the countenance, revealed to Moses . . . all the mysteries, when he ascended Mount Sinai, and the people of Israel asked that his eyes be filled[30] with love. They said

7 to him: "O Son of Amram! May they be filled by our love! We shall (then) hold you and fulfil your desire. For our soul is smashed within yours, and our spirit within 8 your splendour". So you too, Zarpiel the angel, give grace to Ḥilion[31] daughter of Ispendarmed in the eyes of all those who see her and gaze at her.

---

[27] ytyh is the form of the third person masculine singular.

[28] The translation is doubtful.

[29] Many of the requests here are based on a play of sounds. With Karmiel this would work only if we assume that the name Karmiel is here a corruption of Raḥmiel.

[30] The translation is uncertain. The verb may be taken to be from the root KWL, which means, among other things "to contain, have within it". Cf. the phrase myṭly dlmykl ml'kyn qdyšyn "covers which are for encompassing holy angels" (Montgomery 1913, No. 4:1, and Sokoloff 2002:559). In line 8 we may assume an elliptical expression: yk(w)lw <ʿynyk> brḥmyn.

[31] One might have expected here lmhdwk, as in line 1.

9 By the name of two mysteries, one of desire and the other of burning.[32] May that (mystery) of burning turn for her to good
10 and not to evil, and may that (mystery) of desire (also) turn for her to good and not to evil. And by four 11 mysteries that stand over the division of the sky.

In a separate section, close to the outer rim:

12 Burzanai, Gušnazdad and Bustai sons of Mirdukh
13 and Zebina and ʿAbda sons of Gušnazdukh.

There are several difficulties in the interpretation of this text, but it is remarkable for a number of reasons. It contains an otherwise unknown midrash concerning Moses, a midrash based on a dialogue in which Moses took part when he went up Mount Sinai. Unlike some of the other legends told about Moses, however, this is not a conversation conducted with the angels or God, but one between the people of Israel and Moses, where they ask him to plead on their behalf to gain favour with God. The midrashic historiola draws on the analogy of this story for the purpose of the spell: the client of the amulet seeks to gain favour with the people around.

The incantation consists of four parts:

> Part I presents a group of angels and their functions, with a strong emphasis on those functions that have to do with the ultimate purpose of the amulet, namely, to acquire good-will and popularity for the client. The functions of the angels are usually related to them by verbal associations, by way of etymology or pseudo-etymologies.[33] This section may well have existed independently of the amulet.
>
> Part II consists of a direct appeal to a group of angels who are requested to grant the client her desire.
>
> Part III contains the legendary story of Moses. The theme of the amulet is presented indirectly by the words of the people of Israel to Moses.
>
> Part IV, the final part, makes again an appeal to the angel Zarpiel, with a similar request.

---

[32] For šyḥ' and šgr' cf. Montgomery 1913, bowl 28:4 (reading according to Epstein 1921:55): 'd dnyštwḥn wnyštbb btr 'ḥt [bt nb'zk bšyg]r['] wybšyḥ'h wbrzy rḥmth.

[33] It is possible that the name Karmiel, which carries no association with what follows, is a corruption from *Raḥmiel, see above, note 29.

The text is based on angel names taken from the Jewish tradition, on a quotation from the Hebrew Bible, and on a legend connected with Moses, which may well derive from a lost Jewish source, probably oral, like the rest of the midrashic literature. We may again raise the question of the identity of the clients. They could easily be non-Jews of Persian or Semitic stock. It is typical of many Mesopotamian bowls that the names of the women are Persian, while the names of at least some of the men in the same family are Semitic. This observation is not based on an exhaustive study of the names on bowls, but it may indicate a peculiar situation of cross marriages between Semites and Persians. It could alternatively indicate a fashion for Persian names in the Babylonian population.

The Persian names in this particular text are connected with notions derived from the Zoroastrian tradition. The name Māhdukh denotes "daughter of the Moon", a Zoroastrian deity; her mother's name, Ispendarmed, is that of the Zoroastrian deity of the earth, Spenta Ārmati. Gušnazdukh signifies "the daughter of Gušnasp"; the latter is a venerable name in Zoroastrian history. The name of her mother, Mamai, is a Persian term of endearment for "mother". Among the other names, Burzanai is a Persian name that signifies "high", "elevated". Gušnazdad, *Gušnasp-dād, "created by Gušnasp", is another typically Zoroastrian name. The name Bōstai (or Khwāstai?) is more difficult to interpret. Khwāstai may be explained as a fond form from the word Khwāst, "desired, wanted"; if the reading Bōstai is correct, it could be a shortened form of Bōstān "a garden". Mirdukh is probably Mihrdukh, "daughter of the deity Mihr" (or, in his older form, Mithra). Zebina and ʿAbda are two Semitic names that are almost synonymous in sense. Both can denote something like "slave", a person bought for money, and may indicate piety in whatever religious tradition, if the names are shortened from theophoric names which signify "slave of . . .". A preponderance of Iranian names is at any rate evident.

Another Jewish Aramaic bowl that deserves to be analyzed in this context belongs to a lady who left us a whole archive of bowls made at her command. Her name is Māhdukh (a Persian name signifying "daughter of the Zoroastrian Moon-deity") daughter of Nēwāndukh (Persian: "daughter of the brave, of the valiant"). The translation is as follows:

IV. MS 1927/8

1 By your name I act, great
2 holy one. May there be healing from heaven to Mahdukh daughter of 3 Newandukh. May she be healed and protected from all spirits, from all blast-demons and harmful beings
4 that exist in the world. By the name of Yah, King of all kings of kings, Raphael, Miṭal Milas, who are appointed over the smiting
5 of evil spirits: the spirit that lies among the graves, the spirit that lies among the roofs, the spirit that lies in the body, the head,
6 the temples, the ear, and the sockets of the eyes of Mahdukh daughter of Newandukh, and the spirit whose name is Agag daughter of Baroq daughter of Baroqta daughter of 7 Naqor daughter of Namon, daughter of the evil eye. They call you the Blinding one, the Shaker (?),[34] the Blind one; they call you the Lame one, they call you the Itchy one, they call you the Crushed one.
8 I adjure you, you, evil spirit, [who met Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa], and at that time Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa said to her the verse
9 that is written: "You make darkness [and it becomes night, a time at which] all the animals of the forest creep" (Ps 104:20). Again I adjure you, and again I beswear you, you, evil spirit, that you should not go or become to Mahdukh daughter of Newandukh, either
10 a companion by night or a companion by day or by night. [If you go] and pursue the body, head, temples, ear, thigh, and sockets of the eye of Mahdukh daughter of Newandukh, you, [evil spirit]
11 [you will be banned and broken and set apart just as] mighty cities were broken, against whom Nura'el, Raphael and Michael were sent. By the name of Yah Yah, "YHWH mighty in battle" (Ex 15:3). YHWH is his name. "YHWH

[34] mṭryt' is perhaps from the root ṬRY.

12 [mighty and strong, YHWH mighty in battle" (Ex 15:3). The Lord reigns,] the Lord reigned, ["the Lord] shall reign for ever and for ever" (Ex 15:18). [Magic words]
13 [Magic words]
14 [Magic words]

This spell consists of several distinct parts:

I A general address (line 1).
II The purpose of the invocation: to heal the client from all the harmful spirits that are in the world.
III The names of the individual spirits or groups of spirits that cause damage to the health of the person in question. Some of these names, or nicknames, are peculiar to this spell (or rather to this group of spells).
IV This is the backbone of the spell: a historiola, a little magical story, concerning a Talmudic sage, Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa, who met an evil spirit. The evil spirit is addressed in the feminine gender (perhaps because the word for spirit, ruḥa in Aramaic, is feminine) and quoted a powerful verse that was meant to divest her of her power.
V An invocation against the evil spirit, spoken by the practitioner, who follows the model of Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa.
VI Some additional verses quoted, and some nomina barbara.

The Jewish character of the spell is incontestable. It is based on a midrash-story involving a well-known talmudic sage, Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa, a Tanna of the first century CE. The only patently non-Jewish element in the text is the name of the client which is, as we have seen, Persian.

The figure of Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa has attracted considerable scholarly attention.[35] One of the prominent features of his personality in the Tannaitic and Amoraic literature consists of the fact that a large number of wonder stories are connected with his person. They involve healing, the ability to bring rain, the ability to stop the plague, miraculous far-sightedness, miraculously fast journeys. These are coupled with accounts of great piety and voluntary poverty. He is characterized as one of the last of the "men of praxis" (anše maʿaśe), an obscure expression that refers to holy men of extraordinary powers. One of the hyperbolic expressions about him says that a heavenly voice proclaimed: "The whole world is nourished through the existence of my son, Ḥanina ben Dosa, but my son, Ḥanina, finds sufficiency in eating one qab of carobs from one sabbath eve to the other".[36]

[35] Cf. especially Sarfatti 1957; Hyman 1964:481–484; Vermes 1975:178–214; Urbach 1979:109–110; Freyne 1980; Bokser 1985; Safrai 1985:135ff.; Bar-Ilan 1995:19–21.

Some stories make him an associate of angels.[37] It is possible to interpret this figure, and other Talmudic figures like him, as being used in the rabbinic sources mostly in order to demonstrate God's power, as Urbach is inclined to do.[38] It is equally legitimate to regard the stories as demonstrating the idea that certain exceptional men in the Talmudic period were considered to possess powers beyond the ordinary, powers that were given to them because of their great piety and intimate relationship to God and to the angels. Bokser (1985) tried to differentiate between the treatment of some of these stories in Palestinian and Babylonian sources. The emphasis on the virtuoso power of Ḥanina ben Dosa seems to be more prominent in the latter than in the former, in line with the general difference between the two Talmuds. Bokser tries to account for this contrast by assuming a difference in the status of rabbis as part of more general social phenomena, but it is doubtful whether this can account for the problem. We do know that magic practices were as much in evidence in Palestine as in Babylonia.[39] Bokser may have tried to read too much into literary differences, assuming as a matter of course that they reflect a contrast in real life, but this may not be warranted.

The story in our bowl concerns an encounter of Ḥanina ben Dosa with an unnamed evil spirit, and the dialogue between them, in which Ḥanina chides the spirit away by quoting an appropriate biblical verse. This version of the story seems like a shortened allusion to what might have possibly been a more elaborate exchange of words between the sage and the female demon. It is extremely popular in the magic bowls, appearing as it does in well over ten texts. Although the story as told here is unknown from Talmudic literature, the Babylonian Talmud carries a related story:

---

[36] Bavli Taʿanit 24b.
[37] Šir ha-Širim Rabba 1:4.
[38] Cf. Urbach 1979:104, and throughout chapter 6 of his book.
[39] See Naveh and Shaked 1993:20–22.

> A man should not go out alone at night, either on the eves of Wednesdays or on the eves of Sabbaths, because Agrat bat Maḥlat, she (herself) together with one hundred and eighty thousand injurious angels, go out (on those nights), and each one of them separately has the authority to cause damage on their own.
>
> Originally, they were out and about every day, but once she (Agrat bat Maḥlat) encountered Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa, and said to him: Were it not for the fact that there is a proclamation about you in heaven, "Be careful with Ḥanina and his learning!", I would be causing you trouble.
>
> Ḥanina said to her: If I am valued in heaven, I decree against you that you should never pass through an inhabited place.
>
> She said to him: By your favour, allow me a little space. He thereupon allowed her Sabbath eves and Wednesday eves.[40]

This is an etiological story. According to popular belief two nights in the week are particularly dangerous, and the story of Ḥanina ben Dosa provides the fictional background to this faith. At the same time, however, it seems clear that a theme associated with the figure of Ḥanina ben Dosa was that he had mysterious encounters with a female demon, or with more than one such demon, and that he had the power to curb their activity. This is the common denominator between the two stories.

A story of another encounter of this same sage with an evil spirit occurs in a late rabbinical source:

> There is a story that occurred with R. Ḥanina ben Dosa. He went down to bathe in a cave, and then some Kutheans came and placed a big stone at the entrance to the cave, but certain spirits came and rolled it away. When an evil spirit took possession of a poor woman in the neighbourhood of R. Ḥanina ben Dosa, his disciples said to him: Rabbi, look at how this poor woman is tormented by an evil spirit. R. Ḥanina said to the spirit: Why do you torment this daughter of Abraham? The spirit replied: Is it not you who went down to bathe in a cave, [and . .], and then I came with my brothers and the family of my father, and we rolled it [= the stone] away. Is this the way you reward me for the favour I rendered you? He said to her: I decree . . .[41]

---

[40] Bavli Pesaḥim 112b.

[41] The story ends abruptly at this point. (R. Judah berabbi Kalonimos 1963:438; cf. Bar-Ilan 1995:19f.).

The version of the story quoted in this mediaeval source is strongly abbreviated. It deliberately skips parts of the direct speech of the two parties. It has been suggested that despite the late source in which this story is quoted it has a chance of being an early story that was excised from the talmudic literature.[42] For our purpose, we notice again a variant on the theme of the encounter of Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa. Here he tries to restrict the power of the female spirit, but has to contend with the argument that he is in debt to the spirit. We do not know the final part of the story, which may have ended in a compromise, as in the preceding text from Pesaḥim.

The R. Ḥanina ben Dosa story with its different variants recalls a very popular historiola of later Jewish magic, where the person who goes out and meets a terrifying female demon is the Prophet Elijah, who enquires of the demon's business and when he finds out that she is going to kill a woman in childbirth and strangle her baby, he casts a spell against her. That story seems like a composite of the theme of the encounter of the holy man with a female demon with another theme, that of the baby-snatching and baby-killing witch.[43] It is not easy to tell whether the figure of R. Ḥanina ben Dosa was grafted on a story that was originally associated with Elijah the Prophet, or whether these are two independent versions of a similar story. Ultimately it makes little difference.[44]

The historiolae in these spells can be regarded as foundation-myths, giving as they do the mythical precedents for the procedures followed by the spell. Narrating them is part of the spell itself: the narration is supposed to bring about the desired effect. The act of reciting these stories causes them to be re-enacted. It re-establishes the power that was brought to bear on a difficult situation by a mighty saint, a great hero of magic, like R. Ḥanina ben Dosa. There is a certain analogy between the telling of the stories and the recitation of the details of the temple sacrifice in the daily service of the synagogue, which is also borrowed as a magical device in Text I above. Talking of the temple sacrifice brings it to life and makes it

---

[42] Cf. Safrai 1985:133–154; 1990:1–7.

[43] Cf. Naveh and Shaked 1985:118f. The text was originally edited in Shachar 1971, Nos. 2,3,4. A recent discussion is in Yassif 1985:63–71.

[44] An essay in comparing the stories of Ḥanina ben Dosa and other anše maʿaśe ("men of praxis") with those of the early prophets is made by Sarfatti 1957.

present, whether this is done in the liturgy or in magic. No negative power can stand against the power inherent in the holiness of the Temple. No impure spirit can pursue its aim when the story of the holy man is invoked.

Some of the allusions in the bowls concern King Solomon, who is known to have been a favourite figure for stories of associations with supernatural beings. With him is connected the cycle of stories about Ashmedai. A cryptic allusion to a piece of magical lore that is otherwise lost is contained in the following text:

V. MS 1927/9

1 May there be healing from heaven to Mahdukh
2 daughter of Newandukh. Šekobit Šekobanita, who snatches sons away from women,
3 roasts them and drinks of their fat, daughter of Ṭasat Lilita. Shut yourself away from Mahdukh daughter
4 of Newandukh. Do not drink of her fat, do not knead it together with your blood. Turn back on your path just as the primordial demon turned back,
5 the one who was at the time of King Solomon son of David. If you do not turn back from your path, I shall cast you to the axe that has cut the log at the place of[45] all the Dudman
6 demons.[46] By the name of Yukson, Yukson, be strong and reliant. O Dudman demons, accept this charm of ours and take away the evil spirit from the entrails of this Mahdukh daughter of 7 Newandukh, and (remove) your shape from her front. The shape of the maiden, the daughter of fornication, sits in the sand (?),[47] I smashed (?) (it) in the presence of the demon and the male 'wdns' (?), and she raises also the daughter of Ṭasat Lilita.
8 Go away, move away, be rebuked, go out, leave, be banished, pass away, go up, be off, move out of Mahdukh daughter of Newandukh, from her house, from her dwelling, from her . . ., from her grandsons,

---

[45] Or: "after, in the manner of" (?). This translation would be based on the assumption that 'tr equals b'tr.

[46] The translation of this phrase is not entirely certain. The text seems to allude to a story that is unknown to us. Dudman, which is used here like a proper name, is probably derived from the Persian word dūdmān "family".

[47] Or: "in vinegar" (?).

9 from her great-grandsons, and from the 66 limbs of her body. May she be healed by the mercy of heaven from this day and for ever, in speed and and in the shortest time. Amen Amen Selah. May Mahdukh daughter of Newandukh be sealed and doubly sealed

10 with regard to all evil things, all idols, no-good-ones, *yaror*s, evil pebble-spirits, malicious spirits. By the name of the Lord, Yehoya, Yehoya is his great and exalted name. Gil Yagil [nomina barbara].

11 [. . .] "This is my name for ever and this is my remembrance for generation after generation" [Ex 3:15]. Yah Yah Yah Yah Yah Yah YYY is his blessed name [. . .] for ever (?). And say: ["The Lord bless you and keep you. The Lord make his face shine upon you] and be gracious unto you. [The Lord lift up his countenance towards you and give you peace"] [Num 6:24–26].

The allusion in line 5 may be to a story concerning demons, which might have been in some details similar to that in which a prophet, Isaiah, was hiding in a tree and being cut in two by the king's men:

> "Elijah took twelve stones"—this is what was said by God to Israel: "Heaven is my throne, and the earth is my foot-rest" (Is 66:1). This verse was spoken by prophecy at the end of Isaiah's prophethood. When was that? At the time of Menasseh. When Menasseh introduced an idol into the Temple, Isaiah started to speak prophecies to Israel, saying: "Why do you boast of this house that you built for me? As neither the superior nor the inferior (parts of the universe) hold me, do I need this house that you have built for me? What is the house that you should build for me? (cf. Is 66). Nebuchadnezzar will surely come up, destroy it and drive you into exile!" Menasseh thereupon was filled with anger against him and told (his people): "Catch him!". They hurried after him to catch him, but he ran away and the carob-tree opened itself and swallowed him. Rabbi Isaac son of Ḥanina son of Papa son of Isaac said: "He brought carpenters and (bade them) saw the carob tree. Blood was spilling (out of the tree). This is (the sense) of the verse: "Menasse spilt so much innocent blood that he filled Jerusalem full to the brim" (2 Kings 21:16). Is this thing possible? No, but he killed Isaiah, who was the equal of Moses, with whom (God) spoke "face to face", as it is written: "I speak to him face to face" (Nu 12:8).[48]

It is conceivable that there existed a story concerning certain demons who hid in a log and who were cut in two by an axe. A somewhat similar story is known from the Zoroastrian tradition concerning [48] Pesiqta Rabbati, ed. Ish-Shalom, Parasha 4, section beginning: Wayyiqqaḥ Eliyyahu.

Jamšēd,[49] who had committed a sin and tried to escape punishment by hiding in a tree. The place where the demons are to be cut up is specified as that of the Dudman demons, who, I suggest, are a group called by the Persian word for "family".[50] The demons in this culture are regularly grouped in families and tribes; cf., for example, the constant reference to the family and companions of the demons in the Hekhalot-type incantation.[51]

Another allusion where we miss the background is one in which "mighty cities" that were broken is mentioned; cf. Text IV, quoted above, line 11. The way these cities are alluded to suggests that their story was quite familiar to the milieu of the writer. The story of the three angels Nura'el, Raphael and Michael sent against the cities could be a midrashic amplification of the story of Sodom and Gomorrah in the Bible, or a different narrative.

An otherwise lost midrash seems also to lie at the background of the following text:

VI. MS 2053/183

14 I adjure you and beswear you, you, O evil spirit, and (evil) encounters and no-good ones and demons and *yarod*s and error-spirits and idols and complaint-spirits and imaginings. By the name of the great Yahoq Yahoq,

15 who pushed his chariot over the Sea of Reeds, (I adjure you) that you may move away and flee and change your place and remove yourselves and go out and be annulled [and be sealed away] from Mihranahid daughter of Aḥat, known as Kuṭus, from the two hundred and fifty-two limbs that she has, from the two hundred and six (?) limbs of 16 her body, and may she be healed by heaven from this day and for ever, swiftly and at a near period of time. By the name of the great Yah, YHWH Sabaoth, sanctified and exalted over the elevated and lofty throne.[52]

---

[49] Cf. Christensen 1934:73–74.

[50] Cf. the bowl in the Schøyen Collection, MS 2053/175:6–7 and parallel texts.

[51] Cf. Moussaieff Bowl 6, published and translated in Shaked 1995:211–216 [note however that in line 20, the word read dytqyk should read dwtqyk and translated: "your family", from Middle Persian dūtak, dūdag].

[52] The quotation given here is from a composite text. The first part of the text contains the story of Ḥanina ben Dosa, as in Text IV above.

There are a number of points that are worth making with regard to this text. God is here mentioned by the peculiar name Yahoq Yahoq, or, if transliterated as it is written in Hebrew characters, yhwq repeated twice. The transliteration shows that we probably have a deliberate play on the sequence of letters that constitute the tetragrammaton, yhwh. It is this person who is said to have pushed his chariot[53] over the Red Sea. This presumably alludes to a midrashic tale that may have explained how the Egyptians initially hesitated whether they should enter the Red Sea in pursuit of the Israelites, but then became bold when they saw the chariot of yhwq yhwq being pushed across the sea. A similar notion underlies Ex. 15:1.

Apart from the crumbs of legendary Jewish lore that the bowls contain, there is one other aspect of Jewish relevance in some of these texts. We of course would like to get as much information as possible about the practitioners who wrote these texts, and to know to what extent they may have been lay people or members of the religious and intellectual elite, represented mainly by the rabbis. The information provided by the texts on bowls is very scanty, and we may have to wait before some more concrete information turns up. That ambivalent feelings were often expressed among the rabbis concerning magical practices[54] does not tell us much about their attitude with regard to texts such as we have on bowls. They are "magical" in our classification, but they may not have been seen in the same light by the sages of the Talmud, who could have regarded them as inoffensive acts of healing or even as acts of piety.

A few people with the title "rabbi" come up in the texts. In one of the bowls there is a client by the name of Rav Aḥma son of Aḥat.[55] Another person carrying such a title is Rav Maḥlafa son of Khwardukh.[56] On a Palestinian amulet we have the name Rabbi El'azar son of Esther.[57] None of these names is familiar to us from any other source, but it may be assumed that the title Rav or Rabbi was not used lightly in the period under consideration. The bowl [53] The language of the text is very pithy and may be elliptical. It is thus possible to explain the possessive pronoun as referring not to yhwq yhwq but to Pharaoh, although the latter is not mentioned in the text.

[54] Cf. Urbach 1979:97 and further on in chapter VI.

[55] Schøyen Collection, bowl No. MS 1927/49.

[56] Schøyen Collection, MS 2053/222.

[57] Cf. Naveh and Shaked 1985, A3.

texts avoid, as a rule, honorific titles; the social position of the person seems to be irrelevant to them. The rare occurrence of the title 'Rav' is therefore all the more striking. It may be surmised that some other clients on amulets and bowls may have belonged to the group called rabbis, but that the title was left out. We should recall that clients are mentioned not with their patronymics, which were the standard way of identifying people socially, but are only identified by their mother's name, a much more private and intimate mode of identifying a person, one which may have been particularly useful in polygamous families—and the society of this period was familiar with sporadic polygamy. I tend to explain the predilection for using the matronym in Jewish magical texts, as well as in liturgical texts for healing a sick person, by recalling the custom widespread in many cultures of invoking the mother in contexts of great emotional stress, hence more particularly in blessings, expressions of terror, and curses. This usage is not restricted to Jewish texts. It is also prevalent in Christian and pagan texts of the period.

Apart from these rabbis there is one other figure that gets the title of rabbi. That is Rav Yosef Šeda,[58] known also from the Talmud,[59] where however he is not endowed with the title Rav. For all we know, he is a fictitious figure.

One curious case of a person with a rabbinical title that has come up in one of the bowls is Rav Aḥa bar Rav Huna, where both the person himself and his father carry the title of Rav. The text of the bowl in question is badly faded, and at first it was not clear what his function was in the text. Closer reading made it clear that he does not figure as a client or a practitioner, but as what may be termed an innocent bystander:

VII. MS 1928/49

1 . . .
2 . . . demons, *dēv*s, afflictions and satans, from the four . . . borders,
3 and in the eight corners. In the external border . . . Adai son of Dukrai, and the other

[58] Schøeyn Collection, MS 1928/43.
[59] Bavli Eruvin 43a; Pesaḥim 110a.

4 border is the house of Rabi son of Baraš . . ., [and the other bord]er is the house of Rav Aḥa
5 son of Rav Huna, and the other border is . . . Sealed is 6 this house by the name of Anparimta (?) . . . . from this 7 'yprst rmrst . . . this other
8 . . .

The writing is largely washed off, and yet it is clear that a famous name of the Babylonian Talmud figures in this text. Rav Aḥa bar Rav Huna, who is called in exactly the same form and with the same two honorific titles, is quoted about twelve times in various tractates of the Talmud. He comes up in this bowl not as a sorcerer or owner of the bowl, but merely as the landlord of a house adjacent to that of the client, and his property helps in delineating the borders of the land to be magically protected by the bowl. The text, which is unique in specifying the borders of a land property in this manner, is of great historical interest. Rav Aḥa bar Rav Huna was a contemporary of Rava and of Rav Ḥisda, which means that he flourished in the fourth century CE. We know that his son's name was Rava. If this is the person mentioned in our text, we can date the bowl to the fourth century. Unfortunately we have no information about the place of his activity, or, for that matter, about the exact location where the bowl was discovered.

We have no way of establishing the authenticity of pottery vessels, apart from certain considerations of form as used by archaeologists. The form of the vessels is simple enough, and a modern imitation is not difficult to make. The writing is a different matter. It takes considerable skill to compose a text that would have the shape of letters, the appearance of the ink, and the style of inscription as found on authentic bowls. Skilful forgers, who can of course be found, would obviously go for more valuable objects in terms of the antiquities market. Incantation bowls do not belong to this category. The bowl in question was purchased as part of a large lot, without either seller or buyer being aware of any special significance that it possessed. The script and language, as well as the ink, conform well to the style of the other bowls of the same provenance.

The name Aḥa as well as his father's name, Huna, are both fairly common in Jewish Babylonia of the Talmudic period. It is not unlikely that there may have been more than one person with this name and patronymic. One such person can indeed be recalled. In the chronicle of events contained in the Epistle of Rav Sherira Gaon (fl. 906–1006 CE) we read of a sage, Rav Aḥai son of Rav Huna, who died on Sunday, 4 Adar, 816 Sel., which corresponds to 505 CE.[60] The slight difference between the name of this person and the one on our bowl is not very significant: Aḥai is a hypocoristicon of Aḥa, and the variation between them may have been common. The latter date is slightly more likely, as we have now two dated bowls within the sixth century CE, but this does not necessarily impose a sixth-century dating on all Babylonian bowls. The possibility that there were other father-and-son sequences with the same popular names, Huna and Aḥa, cannot be excluded. But the fact that both father and son were members of the rabbinical establishment, as evidenced by their titles, must somewhat narrow down the possibilities. We may conclude that in all probability the bowl was written at the time of one of the two historical persons: Rav Aḥa bar Rav Huna of the fourth century, or Rav Aḥai bar Rav Huna of the sixth century.

There is another bowl with an inscription that seems to be written by the same quite distinctive handwriting as the one mentioning Rav Aḥa bar Rav Huna:

IX. MS 2053/125

1 By your name I act. May this seal be for healing to the house of Simru Khusro and of . . . Farrokhdad son of Dukhtbeh and of Tilula (?)
2 daughter of Midia, his wife. And may he be sealed from all demons and dēvs and afflictions and satans and from all spirits and from[61] all mysteries and all
3 the *limbs[62] of his (?) body. May this house be bound and sealed by seven bonds and by eight seals. By the name of 4 'npr the prince, of ṣrh pṣy rz 'ḥyṭ rz 'dm zmn qdwm zdwn 'yprst
5 rmrst mhydwst 'tydwst. "And so you shall draw water with joy from the springs of deliverance" (Is. 12:3). Amen, Amen, Selah. True.

[60] Rav Sherira Gaon, Epistle, p. 89.
[61] For wmd read wmn.
[62] For ywmy read hdmy.

We have seen that the confessional boundaries between Jews and members of other religions were not very rigidly observed in so far as the use of magical material was concerned. Non-Jews often availed themeselves of the magical materials that originated in the Jewish milieu in the same geographic area, and Jews, for their part, borrowed magical themes from their neighbours. When we are talking of "magical themes" or "magical materials" the reference is to materials that were often used in a magical context, although they were also part of the culture in general. One can hardly assume that there were themes that were considered suitable for use only in magical situations, or that were never referred to in other circumstances.

The sharing of materials between Jews and other communities of Late Antiquity is one aspect of the magic phenomenon. Another aspect that is important to emphasize is the fact that Jews seem to have been regarded as expert amulet-writers, and that non-Jews must have often turned to them when they wanted amuletic texts. The Jewish practitioners, for their part, felt no inhibitions about using the most intimate Jewish materials in texts that were prepared for use by members of other religious groups. Among the most powerful magical weapons in their arsenal were such devices as recounting significant incidents from the lives of some of the ancient Jewish sages, quoting biblical and liturgical texts in Hebrew and Aramaic, and alluding to midrashic materials that circulated, one imagines, orally within the community.

Appendix

I. MS 1929/6

1 אסירין וחתימין שידי ודיוי וליליתה ומבכלתה
2 וחרשי וסכרתה ולוטתא ונידרא ואישתקופתה דתיזיחון מן הדין
3 ביתיה דאדיב בר בתשבתה ומן דירתה דפרדוך בת ממא איתתיה בשום חטאות
4 הציבור והיחיד ואילו הן חטאות הציבור שעירי ראשי חודשים ושל מועדות שחיטתן
5 בצפון וקיבול דמן בכלי שרת צפון ודמן טעון ארבע מ[תנו]ת על ארבע קרנות כאיזה צד עלה בכבש ופניו
6 לסובב בא לו לקרן דרומית מזרחית מזרחית צפונ[ית צפונית] מערבית מערבית דרומית [שיר]י הדם היה

7 שופיך אל יסוד דרומי נאכלין לפני מן הקלעין לזכרי [כהונה בכל מא]כל יום [ולי]לה עד חצות

II. MS 2053/170

1 . . . אסותה מן ש[מיה] . . .
2 . . . ניסתת . . . . . ודיני . . .
3 . . . . . א . . . . דוסתי וד . . . . . תון . . . לאי . . .
4 . . . א איתתיה בשום העולה קדשי קדשים [שחיט]תה בצפ[ון ו]קיבול [דמה בכלי] שרת
5 בצפון ודמה טעון שתי מת<נ>ות שהאן ארבע [וט]עונ[ה] הפשט ונ[תוח] וכליל [לאשים] . . . אמין סלה
6 הללויה

IIa. Moussaieff Collection 108[63]

1 הושיענו יהוה אלהינו וקבצינו והצילינו מן הגוים להודות לשם קדשך להשתבח בתהלתיך
2 קמיעה למיסר שידי ודיוי וסיוטי וספני מן הדין ביתיה דאדיב בר בתשבתה מן [. . .]
3 בשום ויאמר יהוה אל הסטן ינער יהוה בך הסטן ינער יהוה בך הבחר בירושלים
4 הלוא זה אוד מוצל מאש ברוך יהוה לעולם אמן אמן ברוך יהוה
5 אלהי ישראל מן העולם ועד העלום ואמר כל העם אמן הללויה
6 ברוך יהוה אלהים אלוהי ישראל עושה נפלאות לבדו
7 וברוך שם כבודו לעולם וימלא כבודו את
8 כל הארץ אמן אמן יהי כבוד יהוה לעולם
9 ישמח יהוה במעשיו

[63] This text was edited by Dan Levene (Levene, 2003: 71–72). It is only given here for comparison with the other texts.

Translation

1 "Save us, O Lord our God, and gather us together, and deliver us from the nations, that we may give thanks to thy holy name and glory in thy praise" (1Chr 16:35, conflated with Ps 106:47).
2 An amulet for binding demons, *dēv*s, frights and satans away from this house of Adib son of Bat-Shabbeta, from . . .
3 By the name of: "And the Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke you, O Satan, even the Lord that has chosen Jerusalem rebuke you.
4 Is this not a brand plucked out of the fire?" (Zach 3:2). "Blessed be the Lord for ever, Amen and Amen" (Ps 89:53). "Blessed be the Lord
5 God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting, and let all the people say, Amen, Hallelujah" (Ps 106:48).
6 "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only does wondrous things.
7 And blessed be his glorious name for ever, and let the whole earth be filled
8 with his glory, Amen and Amen" (Ps 72:18–19). "The glory of the Lord shall endure for ever, 9 the Lord shall rejoice in his works" (Ps 104:31).

III. MS 1927/2

1 עניאל עני יתיה [ל]מהדוך בת איצפינדרמיד מיכאל תני בסערה הדריאל אלביש יתה הדרא כרמיאל אלביש יתה רחמתא זיויאל אטיף זיוך על מהדוך בת איצפינדרמיד
2 וחי יהוש א . . . יחוש יהוה צבאות עיפוזראל זרחאל קנאל קנחאל אחון מלאכין קדישין דימנן על צורת אפוהי דאינשא ויהבין עלוהי חיסדה ורחמי אחון טעוניה
3 חיסדה למהדוך בת איצפינדרמיד באפי כל חזה ומחזה תימר ותישתמע תידון ותיזכי תישאול ותיסב ותישתעי ותיחצית בשום רוספא סלטה טומאה
4 הדין עובדא למינפש . . . דמירדוך בת מאמי ודנושנזדוך בת ממא ודבורזני ונושנזדד ובוסתי בני מירדוך ודזובינא ועבדא בני נושנזדוך
5 ועיניהון דלא יפרעון . . . ן . . . נמואל לקוטי נאמר ומצא חן ושכל טוב בעיני אלהים ואדם דין הוא רוא דינלא ליה זרפיאל
6 סר הפנים למשה . . . . . אין כל רזיא כד סליק לטורא דסיני ובעו עמא דבית ישראל דניכל עיניה ברחמתא אמרו

7 ליה בר עמרם יכלו בר[ח]מין ונחסן לך ונעביד בעותך דישחקת נפשנא
בת נפשך ורוחנא[64] בת
8 זיוך ואף אנתה זרפיאל מלאכה נמול חיסדה לחיליון בת איצפינדרמיד
באפי כל חזה ומחזה
9 בשום תרין רזין חד דשיחא וחד דשנרא דשיחא ליהפיך עליה לטב
10 ולא לביש ודשנרא ליהפיך עליה לטב ולא לביש ובשום ארבעה
11 רזין דקימין [על] פלנותה דרקיעה

Written on the margin near the rim in two groups, each one consisting of two lines. Each group is here given, for the sake of clarity, as one line, and the limits of the lines in each group are marked by a vertical stroke:

12 בורזני[65] ונושנזדד | ובוסתי בני מירדוך
13 ונושנזדוך בת ממא | וזבינא ועבדא בני נושנזדוך

IV. MS 1927/8

1 לשמך אני עושה קדישה
2 רבה אסותא מן שמיה תיהוי לה למהדוך בת
3 ניונדוך ותיתסי ויתנטר מן כל רוחין מן כול זיקין ומזיקין
4 דאית בעלמא בשום יה מלך מלכי מלכיה רפאל מיטל מילס דמפקדין
אינון על מחת
5 רוחתא בישתא רוחא דשכבא בן קברי ורוחא דשכבא בין אינירי רוחא
דשכבא בפנרה בראשה
6 בצידעה באודנה ובבית גילגלוחי דעינה דמהדוך בת ניונדוך ורוחא
דישמה אנג בת ברוק בת ברוקתא בת
7 נקור בת נמון בת עין רעה מסמיתא מטריתא עוירתא קרן לכי מתנרתא
קרן לכי נרבניתא קרן לכי שפופתי קרן לכי
8 מומינה עלכי אנתי רוחא בישתא [די פנע ביה ב]רבי חנינא בן דוסא
ואמר לה רבי חנינא בין דוסא לרוחא בישתא דיפנע ביה בהה{ה}יא
שעתא קראה
9 די כתיב תשית חושך . . . כל חיתו יער ותוב מומינה ותוב משבענא
עלכי אנתי רוחא בישתא דלא תיזלין ולא תיהוין לה למהדוך בת
ניונדוך לא
10 צותא דליליה ולא צותא דליליה ודיממא דאם אזלת ורדפת בפנרה
בראישה בצידעה באודנה באטמה ובבית גילגלוחי דעינה דמהדוך בת
ניונדוך אנת[י רוחא בישתא]

---

[64] This seems the only possible reading. One might have expected wzywn'.

[65] The two lines 12–13 are written near the rim, apparently without relationship to the main inscription.

11 [ישמתון יתיכי ויתברון יתיכי ויחרמון יתיכי כמה ד]איתברו כרכין
תקיפין דאשתדרו עליהון נוראל רפאל ומיכאל בשמיה דיהיה יהוה
{ו}איש מלחמה יהוה שמו יהוה
12 [עיזוז וגיבור יהוה גיבור מלחמה יהוה מלך] יהוה מ[לך יהוה י]מלוך
[לעול]ם ועד האש אשתוק סשמורו מטמון פסקון פסקו[ן] . . . קלשק . . .
14 . . . [מט]מון אטרינל אטרינל | קלשק קלשק חיתחית חיתחית . . .
15 חית חית אם עפר בניץ

V. Schøyen Collection, MS 1927/9

1 אסותא מן שמיה תיהוי לה למהדוך
2 בת ניונדוך שכובית שכובניתא דנסבא בנין מן נשיא
3 וקליא יתהון ושתיא מן חלביהון בת טסת לילית סכוריכי מן מהדוך בת
4 ניונדוך ולא תישתין מן חלבה ולא תלושין יתיה בידמכי שנא שבילכי
כמה דשני שידא קדמאה
5 דהוא ביומי שלמה מלכא בר דויד שבילכי אם לא תשני אירמי יתיכי
לחציץ דחצב נובא אתר דודמן שידייא
6 כולהון בשום יוכסון יוכסון אתחזקו תסמוכו שידייא דודמן קבילו קיבלא
דנן וסבו ית רוחא בישתא מן מעה דמהדוך בת
7 ניונדוך דא וצורת אפכי מן אפה וצורת בת נוריתא רביתא בחלה יתבא
פילקית קמי שידא ואודנסא דיכרא מסקא אף בת טסת לילית
8 זהי וזעי נעורי ופוקי ועיקורי ואטירדי וחלופי ואיסתליקי ואיפטירי
ועיקורי מן מהדוך בת ניונדוך מן ביתה מן דירתה מן ש . . . ה מן
נינה מן
9 ניכדה מן שיתין ושיתא הדמי קומתה ותיתסי ברחמי שמיה מן יומה
דן ולעלם בעגלה ובזמן קריב אמן אמן סלה חתימה וימחתמה מ[הדוך
בת] ניונדוך
10 מן מ[ידעם] ביש מן כל פתכרין מן לטבין מן יריורין מן חומרין בישן
מן רוחין זידנין בשום אדון יהויה יהויה שמו הנדול והניכבד גיל יגיל
ידונסיה [. . .]
11 . . . זה שמי לעלם וזה זכרי לדר דר יה יה יה יה יה יי שמו
מבורך . . . לעלם ואמרת א . . . ויתניך . . .

VI. MS 2053/183

14 מומינא ליכי ומשבענה עלכי אנתי רוחא בישתא ופנעין ולטבין ושידין
ירודין וטעון ויפתכרין ונאלין והרהורין בשמיה דיהוק יהוק רבה
15 די דחק מרכבתיה על ימה דסוף דתיזחון ותינזחון ותיתחלפון ותעדון
ומיפקון (!) ותיתבטלון ות . . . ון מינה מן מיהרנחיד בת אחת דמיתקריא

כוטוס מן מתין חמשין ותרין הדמין דאית לה מן מתן חמשין ותרין
הדמין דאית לה מן מאתין ושיתא הדמי
16 קומתה ותיתסי מן שמיה מן יומה דן ולעלם בענלה ובזמן קריב בשום
יה רבה יהוה צבאות מקודש ומפואר על כיסי רם ונישא

VII. MS 1928/49

1 . . . התמא . . .
2 . . . [ש]די ודיוי ופנעי וסטני מן ארב[עה] . . . . . מיצריה
3 ובתמני זויתה במיצרא דבריתא . . . אדי בר דוכרי ומיצרא
4 אוחרנא ביתא דראבי בר בראש . . . . . [ומיצרא אוחר]נא ביתא דרב אחא
5 בר רב הונא ומיצרא אוחרנא טט . . . . . די התים הדין
6 ביתא בשום אנפרימתא . . . אדי מן דין
7 איפרסת רמרס[ת] . . . [ה]דין אחרן
8 וא . . .

VIII. MS 2053/125

1 לשמך אני עושה {ה} הדין התמא יהי לאסו לביתא דסימרו כוסרו
ודמ . . . . . פַּרַוכדד בר דוכתביה ודתילַלא
2 בת מידיה אינתתיה ויתחתם מן כל שידי ודיוי ופנעי וסטני ומן כל רוחי
ומד (!) כל ראזי וכל
3 יומי קמתא אסיר והתים הדין ביתא בשבעה איסרין וביתמניא התמין
בשום
4 אנפר איסרה דצרה פצי רז אחיט רז אדם זַמן קַדום זַדון איפרסת
5 רמרסת מהידוסת אתידוסת וש<א>בתם מים
6 בששון ממעיני הישועה אמן
7 אמן סלה שרירה

References Cited

Albeck, Chanoch חנוך אלבק. 1956. ששה סדרי משנה, מפורשים בידי חנוך אלבק ומנוקדים בידי חנוך ילון. Jerusalem and Tel-Aviv: Mosad Bialik and Devir.

Baer, Seligmann יצחק בן אריה יוסף דב. 1937 [originally published Rödelheim 1868]. סדר עבודת ישראל. כולל התפלות והברכות לכל השנה עם סדר הפרשיות והמעמדות וזי-וצרות לשבתות והסליחות לתעניות והוספות אחרות ועליהן באור הנקרא יכין לשון. Berlin: Schocken.

Bar-Ilan, Meir מאיר בר-אילן. 1995. נידוש שדים על-ידי רבנים. משהו על עיסוקם של חכמי החלמוד בכשפים. Da'at 34:17–31.

Betz, Hans Dieter. 1997. "Jewish magic in the Greek magical papyri (PGM VII.260–71)", in: Envisioning magic. A Princeton seminar and symposium, ed. P. Schäfer and H.G. Kippenberg, Leiden, New York, Köln: Brill, pp. 45–63.

Bokser, Baruch M. 1985. "Wonder-working and the rabbinic tradition: The case of Ḥanina Ben Dosa", Journal for the Study of Judaism 16:42–92.

Christensen, A. 1934. Les types du premier homme et du premier roi dans l'histoire légendaire des Iraniens. Leiden.

Danby, Herbert, trans. 1933. The Mishnah. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Epstein, J.N. 1921/22. "Gloses babylo-araméennes", REJ 73 (1921):27–58; 74 (1922):40–72.

Freyne, S. 1980. "The charismatic", in: G.W.E. Nickelsburg and J.J. Collins (eds), Ideal figures in ancient Judaism. Profiles and paradigms, Ann Arbor, Michigan, pp. 223–258.

Gignoux, Philippe. 1986. Noms propres sassanides en moyen-perse épigraphique (Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Phil.-hist. Klasse. Sonderpublikation der iranischen Kommission, Bd 2), Wien: Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften.

Goldschmidt, Daniel דניאל גולדשמידט. 1971 סדר רב עמרם נאון ערוך ומונה לפי כתבי יד ודפוסים. חשל"ב, Jerusalem: Mossad Harav Kook.

Harviainen, Tapani. 1993. "Syncretistic and confessional features in Mesopotamian incantation bowls", Studia Orientalia Edited by the Finnish Oriental Society (L'ancien Proche-Orient et les Indes. Parallélismes interculturels religieux), 29–37.

Hedegård, David. 1951. Seder R. Amram Gaon, Part I. Hebrew text with critical apparatus, translation with notes and introduction, Lund: A.-B. Lindstedts Universitets-Bokhandel.

Hoffmann, Georg. 1880. Auszüge aus syrischen Akten persischer Märtyrer (Abhandlungen für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, VII. Band, No. 3), Leipzig.

Hyman, Aaron אהרון הימאן. 1964. תולדות תנאים ואמוראים, 3 vols. Jerusalem.

Judah b. Kalonimos of Speyer יהודה ברבי קלונימוס משפירא. 1963. יחוסי תנאים ואמוראים, ed. Y.L. Hakohen Maimon. Jerusalem: Mossad Harav Kook.

Justi, Ferdinand. 1895 [reprinted Hildesheim 1963]. Iranisches Namenbuch, Marburg.

Levene, Dan. 2003. A corpus of magic bowls—Incantation texts in Jewish Aramaic from Late Antiquity, London: Kegan Paul; N.Y.: Bookman.

Montgomery, James A. 1913. Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur, University Press. The Museum: Publications of the Babyl. Sect. vol. III Philadelphia.

Naveh, Joseph, and Shaul Shaked. 1985. Amulets and magic bowls. Aramaic incantations of Late Antiquity, Jerusalem and Leiden: Magnes and Brill.

—— 1993. Magic spells and formulae. Aramaic incantations of Late Antiquity. Jerusalem: Magnes Press.

Safrai, Shmuel שמואל ספראי. 1985. חסידים ואנשי מעשה, Zion 50:133–154.

—— 1990. ישו והתנועה החסידית. Proceedings of the tenth World Congress of Jewish Studies, Section B, vol. 1:1–7.

Sarfatti, G.B. נד בן-עמי צרפתי. 1957. חסידים ואנשי מעשה והנביאים הראשונים, Tarbiz 26:126–153.

Shachar, Isaiah ישעיהו שחר. 1971. אוסף פויכטוונגר. מסורת ואמנות יהודית, Catalogue. Jerusalem: Israel Museum.
Shaked, Shaul. 1995. "'Peace be upon you, exalted angels': On Hekhalot, liturgy and incantation bowls", Jewish Studies Quarterly 2:197–219.
—— 1997. "Popular religion in Sasanian Babylonia", Jerusalem Studies in Arabic and Islam 21:103–117.
—— 1999a. "The poetics of spells. Language and structure in Aramaic incantations of Late Antiquity. 1: The divorce formula and its ramifications", in: T. Abusch and K. van der Toorn (eds.), Mesopotamian magic: textual, historical, and interpretative perspectives (Ancient Magic and Divination, 1), Groningen: Styx, 173–195.
—— 1999b. "Parole des dieux, parole des anges: à propos des coupes magiques de la Babylonie sassanide", in: Union Académique Internationale. Soixante-treizième session annuelle du Comité. Cracovie, du 20 au 26 juin 1999. Compte rendu, Bruxelles: Secrétariat administrative de l'UAI, pp. 17–33. [Also published in: Bullein de la Classe des Lettres, Académie Royale de Belgique, 6e série, tome X, 1999, pp. 285–301].
—— 2000a. "Manichaean incantation bowls in Syriac", Jerusalem Studies in Arabic and Islam 24:58–92.
—— 2002b. "Healing as an act of transformation", in: David Shulman and G.G. Stroumsa (eds.), Self and self-transformation in the history of religions, Oxford: University Press, pp. 121–130.
—— 2002c. "Jews, Christians and pagans in the Aramaic incantation bowls of the Sasanian period", in: Adriana Destro and Mauro Pesce (eds.), Religions and cultures. First International Conference of Mediterraneum (Academic Studies in Religion and the Social Order), Binghamton: Global Publicatons, Binghamton University, pp. 61–89.
—— [Forthcoming]. Aramaic magic bowls (Manuscripts in the Schøyen Collection, 5), Oslo: Hermes Publications.
Sherira Ga'on. 1921. Iggeret. אגרת רב שרירא גאון, מסודרת בשני נוסחאות, [מהדורת בנימין מנשה לוין] (מתקופת הגאונים ב; החברה לספרות היהדות בפרנקפורט דמיין), חיפה, פפד"מ וברלין, תרפ"א
Simon, Marcel. 1996. Verus Israel. A study of the relations between Christians and Jews in the Roman Empire (AD 135–425), tr. H. McKeating (The Littman Library of Jewish Civilization), London: Vallentine Mitchell & Co. [First published in French, Paris 1964]
Sokoloff, Michael. 2002. A Dictionary of Jewish Babyl. Aramaic of the Talmudic and Gaonic Periods, Bar Ilan University Press, Ramat-Gan; Johns Hopkins University Press, Baltimore & London.
Sussmann, Yaacov יעקב זוסמן. 1974. כתובת הלכתית מעמק בית-שאן, Tarbiz 43:88–158.
—— 1975. תוספות ותיקונים ל'כתובת הלכתית מעמק בית שאן', Tarbiz 44:213–257.
—— 1976. ברייתא דתחומי ארץ ישראל', Tarbiz 45:213–257.
Urbach, Ephraim E. 1979. The Sages. Their concepts and beliefs (tr. I. Abrahams), Second edition, Jerusalem: Magnes.
Vermes, Geza. 1975. Post-Biblical Jewish studies, Leiden: Brill.
Yassif, Eli עלי יסיף. 1985. סיפורי בן-סירא בימי הבינים. מהדורה ביקורתית ופרקי מחקר, Jerusalem: Magnes.

OFFICINA MAGICA

Essays on the Practice of Magic in Antiquity

EDITED BY

SHAUL SHAKED

BRILL
LEIDEN · BOSTON
2005

Aramaic Bowl Spells

Jewish Babylonian Aramaic Bowls
Volume One

By

Shaul Shaked
James Nathan Ford
Siam Bhayro

With contributions from

Matthew Morgenstern
Naama Vilozny

BRILL

LEIDEN · BOSTON
2013

Dedicated to the memory of Joseph Naveh (1928–2011), for his immense contribution to the study of magic bowls and amulets.

CONTENTS

Preface xiii
List of Figures xvii
List of Photographs xix
Abbreviations xxi
List of Other Bowls xxv
Sigla xxvii

Introduction 1
The Historical, Literary and Religious Context 1
Terms Designating "Bowl", "Amulet" and "Spell" 8
The Structure of an Incantation 8
Single-Spell Incantations 9
Multi-Spell Incantations 10
Literary Features 13
Historiolae 13
Biblical Quotations 18
Echoes of Biblical Themes 20
Prayer Book Quotations and Allusions 21
Mishnaic Quotations 22
Echoes of Hekhalot 23

The Art of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls (Naama Vilozny) 29
Stylistic Aspects of the Figures Appearing on the Incantation Bowls 30
The Artists' Sources 33
The Link between the Texts and the Drawings 35
The Drawings of the Incantation Bowls—A Magic Art 36
Summary 37

Linguistic Features of the Texts in This Volume (Matthew Morgenstern) 39
Orthography and Phonology 40
Use of 'aleph and he 40
Shewa 41
/ā/ 41
Assimilation, Dissimilation, and Other Sound Changes 41
Affixed Pronouns 42
The Verb 43
Perfect 43
Imperfect 44
Imperative 44
Participles 45
Numerals 45
Syntax 46
Particles 46

Vocabulary 46
Conclusion 49

I.1 RABBI ḤANINA BEN DOSA

Introduction 53
JBA 1 (MS 1927/8) 56
JBA 2 (MS 1927/29) 59
JBA 3 (MS 1927/45) 62
JBA 4 (MS 1927/47) 65
JBA 5 (MS 1927/64) 68
JBA 6 (MS 2053/10) 71
JBA 7 (MS 2053/12) 74
JBA 8 (MS 2053/55) 77
JBA 9 (MS 2053/183) 79
JBA 10 (MS 2053/185) 83

I.1.1 Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa: Omitted by Haplography

Introduction 89
JBA 11 (MS 2053/79) 91
JBA 12 (MS 2053/178) 94

I.2 DIVORCE TEXTS

Introduction 99

I.2.1 Divorce Texts: Joshua bar Peraḥia

Introduction 103
JBA 13 (MS 1927/5) 105
JBA 14 (MS 1927/39) 107
JBA 15 (MS 1927/43) 110
JBA 16 (MS 1929/16) 114
JBA 17 (MS 2053/33) 117
JBA 18 (MS 2053/103) 119
JBA 19 (MS 2053/132) 123
JBA 20 (MS 2053/150) 126
JBA 21 (MS 2053/164) 129
JBA 22 (MS 2053/165) 132
JBA 23 (MS 2053/206) 134
JBA 24 (MS 2053/251) 137
JBA 25 (MS 2053/280) 140

I.2.1.1 Divorce Texts: Joshua bar Peraḥia (with Magical Excommunication rather than Divorce)

Introduction 151
JBA 26 (MS 1928/43) 152

I.2.2 Divorce Texts: Elisur Bagdana

Introduction 157
JBA 27 (MS 1927/16) 160
JBA 28 (MS 1927/25) 162
JBA 29 (MS 1927/51) 164
JBA 30 (MS 1928/47) 166
JBA 31 (MS 2053/41) 169
JBA 32 (MS 2053/64) 172
JBA 33 (MS 2053/83) 174
JBA 34 (MS 2053/86) 177
JBA 35 (MS 2053/89) 181
JBA 36 (MS 2053/110) 183
JBA 37 (MS 2053/123) 185
JBA 38 (MS 2053/151) 187
JBA 39 (MS 2053/162) 190
JBA 40 (MS 2053/167) 192
JBA 41 (MS 2053/184) 195
JBA 42 (MS 2053/190) 197
JBA 43 (MS 2053/193) 200
JBA 44 (MS 2053/213) 202
JBA 45 (MS 2053/237) 204
JBA 46 (MS 2053/249) 208
JBA 47 (MS 2053/258) 211

I.2.2.1 Divorce Texts: Elisur Bagdana (Divorce Formula not Present)

Introduction 217
JBA 48 (MS 2053/200) 218
JBA 49 (MS 2053/270) 221

I.2.3 Divorce Texts: The Lilith Zanay, the Fornicating Singing-Girl

Introduction 225
JBA 50 (MS 2053/207) 226
JBA 51 (MS 2053/209) 229
JBA 52 (MS 2053/231) 232
JBA 53 (MS 2053/253) 235
JBA 54 (MS 2053/273) 238

I.2.4 Divorce Texts: Other Divorce Texts

Introduction 243
JBA 55 (MS 1928/1) 245
JBA 56 (MS 1928/8) 249
JBA 57 (MS 2053/36) 254
JBA 58 (MS 2053/166) 258
JBA 59 (MS 2053/174) 260
JBA 60 (MS 2053/212) 263
JBA 61 (MS 2053/214) 266

JBA 62 (MS 2053/242) 268
JBA 63 (MS 2053/250) 270
JBA 64 (MS 2053/256) 273

Glossary 279
List of Divine Names, Names of Angels, Demons and Exemplary Figures, and nomina barbara 333
List of Clients and Adversaries 345
List of Biblical Quotations 353
List of Texts 355
Bibliography 359
Index 367

PREFACE

The magic bowls in the Schøyen Collection form part of a vast and unique collection of written documents on various surfaces assembled from many parts of the globe and representing a large number of cultures, languages, religions, and periods.

Some statistical data may be quoted from the description given in the internet site of the Schøyen Collection (http://www.schoyencollection.com):

> The whole collection comprises 13,717 manuscript items, including 2,269 volumes. 6,860 manuscript items are from the ancient period, 3300 BC–500 AD; 3,844 are from the medieval period, 500–1500; and 3,013 are post-medieval. There are manuscripts from 134 different countries and territories in 120 languages and 184 scripts.

For the incantation bowls in the Schøyen Collection, the following data, borrowed from the same site (with slight modifications), may be given:

> The collection comprises 654 Aramaic incantation bowls and jugs from the Near East, dated between the fifth and the seventh or eighth centuries AD. In the majority of bowls there are written texts of spells and incantations against demons in several varieties of Aramaic. Bowls with Jewish Aramaic texts very often contain quotations from the Hebrew Bible. Some of these quotations are not attested in the Dead Sea Scrolls, and this makes them the earliest witnesses to the original text of the Old Testament.
>
> The bowls are not only part of our common heritage and that of the Sasanian Empire but, more specifically, of the Jewish, Christian and Mandaic communities. The Jewish Aramaic bowls also have the earliest examples of Hekhalot or Jewish mystical texts, as well as part of the Shemaʿ prayer or extracts from the Mishna. We also find named Jewish rabbis and demons as well as information about Jewish legal practice.

The earlier bowls acquired for the collection carry numbers starting with MS 1911, MS 1927, MS 1928, MS 1929, MS 2046. In these groups, the bowls in different languages were put together. Subsequent numbers were designated for a specific language: MS 2053 contains Jewish Babylonian Aramaic bowls; MS 2054 contains Mandaic; MS 2055 has Syriac; MS 2056 has Middle Persian, and MS 2057 comprises bowls with artificial scripts and drawings.

No study of this kind can succeed without the help and support of many people. I began work on the collection in 1995, when I spent a year at NIAS, the Netherlands Institute for Advanced Studies, as member of a research group working on magic in Antiquity. The papers delivered at a conference at the end of that year in a volume with the title Mesopotamian magic: textual, historical, and interpretive perspectives, ed. by T. Abusch and K. van der Toorn, Groningen 1999, convey an idea of the work done by the group.

The Schøyen Collection of bowls was at first deposited temporarily at University College London to facilitate the scholarly work, carried out with Martin Schøyen's support. I would like to express my deepest appreciation to Mr Schøyen for the opportunity to study these fascinating documents and for his patience in the face of the very prolonged period of gestation that this work demanded.

Students from the Department of Hebrew and Jewish Studies at University College London generously helped organize the bowls and facilitate my study of them. Dan Levene, now Reader in History at the University of Southampton and an expert in the Aramaic magic bowls, was my first assistant. He was followed in 1997 by Siam Bhayro. Dr Bhayro, now Senior Lecturer in Early Jewish Studies at the University of Exeter, has continued to be associated with this project in various ways up to the present. In 2008 I asked him to join the publication team. He has undertaken, to my great relief, the arduous charge of editing the complex text of this series of volumes, and I am deeply grateful to him.

Professor Mark Geller of University College London was of enormous help in getting the work started and in facilitating the process of studying the bowls. As head of the Department of Hebrew and Jewish Studies at UCL, he helped with logistics and provided a congenial intellectual and physical environment; most of all, he contributed his great enthusiasm for the subject-matter of the magic bowls. I am deeply grateful for his friendship and kindness. Other heads of the department, the late Professor John Klier and his successor, Professor Ada Rapoport-Albert, were also kindly disposed to provide help and advice.

Wolfson College, Cambridge, provided warm hospitality to the present writer on a number of occasions. I worked there in 1988 on the Cambridge Geniza collection, and in 2000/1 on the Schøyen Collection. This enabled me to work on the magic bowls in a congenial scholarly environment. In particular I would like to thank Professors Nicholas de Lange and Geoffrey Khan for their friendship and help, as well as Professor Stefan Reif, former head of the Taylor-Schechter Genizah Research Unit in the Cambridge University Library.

In 2001 I finished the first stage of the work, with most of the bowls in the three major languages transcribed and provided with provisional translations. The sheer size and complexity of the undertaking was quite daunting. I was, besides, engaged in other large-scale projects, which prevented me from devoting the necessary time to this edition.

Luckily there were, among the students who took part in my courses on the Aramaic incantation bowls at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, a number of young scholars who have since distinguished themselves in this and related fields. Dr James Nathan Ford, who is also an expert in Ugaritic, deserves particular mention. He has since proved himself to be an outstanding Semitic philologist and one of the foremost specialists in the study of the bowls. He possesses detailed knowledge of bowl texts, published and unpublished, more than any other person I know. He undertook to review and revise my readings and translations, and contributed numerous philological comments that have been embedded in the work. Beyond this, he has given this work its shape and structure. I am profoundly grateful to him.

Dr Matthew Morgenstern contributed to the Introduction a chapter on language issues in the bowls. His contribution, however, goes far deeper, as he read and commented on a considerable number of the bowls and has been frequently consulted regarding their language. His extraordinary sensitivity to the nuances of Aramaic has been the basis for many valuable suggestions concerning the reading and interpretation of the texts. In addition, in 2010, he volunteered to undertake the enormous task of taking fresh photographs of the entire Schøyen collection of bowls. The result was over 10,000 high-resolution digital images that significantly improved our ability to study the bowls and set a new standard for the documentation of incantation bowls. Dr Morgenstern's photographs are being published in the volumes of this series in conjunction with our editions. They are of a quality that will allow other scholars to check the readings proposed in our study without the necessity of going back to the originals.

Dr Naama Vilozny, who recently completed a Ph.D. thesis at the Hebrew University on the artistic aspects of the bowls, undertook to provide a chapter on this topic for the Introduction and also kindly put at our disposal her hand copies of the drawings that are on the bowls. Her thesis constitutes a pioneering attempt to interpret the illustrations on the bowls against the background of the artistic conventions of Sasanian Iran.

We consulted Dr Ada Yardeni on the script and the terminology to use in order to describe the various types of hand that may be distinguished on the bowls, and she gave us advice that can only come from an expert in this field.

I should also like to express my tribute to Joseph Naveh, with whom I worked for many years on amulets and magic bowls. I learned a great deal in the course of our joint work. May he rest in peace.

I feel an immense sense of gratitude to all the people mentioned above. Without their labour of love, their expertise and their dedication, this book would have never seen the light of day.

Finally, I would also like to express my indebtedness to Miriam, my wife, for the unfailing support she has given me over the years when I worked on these materials and often felt unsure whether I could ever bring the project to completion.

The plan of this publication of magic bowls in the Schøyen Collection consists of some nine volumes, distributed as follows: five volumes of bowls in Jewish Babylonian Aramaic; two volumes in Mandaic; one volume in Syriac; and one volume for the rest of the collection, where bowls in Pahlavi and in artificial scripts and bowls that have no text will be published.

The introduction to this volume discusses selected topics relating to the study of the bowls in general, their language, their design, their illustrations, and their historical setting. The introductions to subsequent volumes will probably take up other topics.

With the present volume a new series is launched with E.J. Brill, called Magical and Religious Literature of Late Antiquity (MRLA). We are planning to publish in this series texts and studies relating to ancient and medieval magic, besides studies in the religious literatures of the Mediterranean and in particular the Iranian environment.

The study of the Aramaic magic bowls is a matter of great interest and importance: they constitute the only direct epigraphical documents of Mesopotamia written mostly by some of the most important minority groups, Jews, Christians, Mandaeans, Manichaeans and others. Since the bowls are original manuscripts, they can teach us a great deal about the languages spoken (mostly varieties of Aramaic); popular religious practices, that take the form of magical texts; and certain aspects of social life, family structure and dwellings.

The last few decades have been a period of lively and fertile activity in the field of the magic bowls. Full publication of several large collections, and book-length editions of selected bowls from other large collections have appeared recently. To mention just a few major publications of this period: the publication of the Aramaic bowls in the British Museum (Segal 2000);[1] the publication of the Aramaic bowls in the Museo Nazionale d'Arte Orientale in Rome (Moriggi 2001); a selection of JBA bowls from the Shlomo Moussaieff Collection (Levene 2003a); the Aramaic bowls in the Hilprecht Collection in Jena (Müller-Kessler 2005). In addition, numerous lengthy articles containing editions of new bowls or studies of aspects of the language, contents and structure of the texts of bowls have been published (see the Bibliography under J.N. Ford, D. Levene, M. Morgenstern, C. Müller-Kessler, and S. Shaked).

Two large-scale surveys of Jewish magic, which deal inter alia with the magic bowls, have also appeared (Bohak 2008; Harari 2010), and additional books have been published as a result of conferences on themes connected to the magic of the bowls and on magic in Antiquity in general, among them the conferences convened by P. Schäfer and H.G. Kippenberg in Princeton (1997); G. Bohak and others in Jerusalem (see Bohak et al. 2011); and by I. Csepregi and C. Burnett in London (see Csepregi and Burnett 2012). This intellectual productivity has brought about a real revolution in the perception of the languages used on bowls, the structure of the magic texts, their contents, and their importance for the history of religion in Mesopotamia and in Palestine in Late Antiquity.

Shaul Shaked
Jerusalem

[1] Curiously carrying the title Catalogue of the Aramaic and Mandaic incantation bowls in the British Museum, as if Mandaic was not a dialect of Aramaic, and Syriac (another form of Aramaic) not deserving mention.

I began working on the bowls in the Schøyen Collection in 1997 as a doctoral student at the Hebrew University after taking a course on incantation bowls given by Prof. Shaked. The work, which mainly involved checking the transcriptions of the bowls from photographs, was intended as a supplement to my study of Ugaritic magic, but eventually developed into my main field of research. I am sincerely grateful for the continuing privilege of working with the leading scholar in the discipline on this remarkable corpus of texts.

Dr Siam Bhayro has been the catalyst that ensured that this volume finally went to press. Were it not for his prodigious efforts, tenacity and expertise, the publication of this book would likely have been delayed for years.

I would like to express my appreciation to Dr Matthew Morgenstern for his support and unfailing willingness to share with me his profound knowledge of the Aramaic language.

The decipherment and interpretation of many of the bowls in the Schøyen Collection has been facilitated by magic bowls in various private collections that I am editing. These have occasionally been cited in the present volume with the labels JNF, Wolfe, and Davidovitz. I would particularly like to thank Ms Lisa Marie Knothe, Mr Lenny Wolfe, Ms Ester Davidovitz and Mr Gil Davidovitz for access to bowls in their collections.

My work on the bowls was partially supported by a Kreitman post-doctoral fellowship (2002–2004) from Ben-Gurion University and a Lady Davis post-doctoral fellowship (2004–2005) from the Hebrew University and by Israel Science Foundation grant No. 1306/12 (2012–2013).

Finally, I wish to thank my mother for her love and support over the years.

James Nathan Ford
Petach Tiqwa

It has been a great privilege for me to work on this project for the past four years. I would like to express profound gratitude to Shaul Shaked, who has been the very best of mentors, both professionally and personally. I am also grateful to Miriam Shaked, who looked after me during my many research visits, showing great hospitality and patience, especially when I was "volcanoed" and ended up staying much longer than planned.

It has also been an honour to work with James Nathan Ford, from whom I continue to learn much. For the most part, the wider community of "bowls scholars" is very much like a family and, in many respects, I esteem James like an older brother—I hope I have not been too annoying a younger sibling. I would like to take this opportunity to thank some members of the extended family: Mark Geller, Dan Levene, Matthew Morgenstern, Marco Moriggi and Ortal-Paz Saar.

I was given two terms of research leave by the University of Exeter, which allowed me to devote myself to the preparation of this volume. I am grateful to my colleagues in Exeter, particularly those in the Department of Theology and Religion, who, despite being compelled to put up with me for the past six years, have been the epitome of grace and humour.

I am grateful to the British Academy, particularly Ken Emond, for a Small Research Grant (SG-52081), which funded my numerous visits to Israel among other things. I am particularly grateful to Geoffrey Khan for his support in this respect.

Our publisher, E.J. Brill, has been very supportive in establishing the new series devoted to the bowls and related literatures. I would like to express my sincere thanks to Jennifer Pavelko, Katelyn Chin and, more recently, Julia Berick for their support and patience with this and other projects.

Finally, I would like to express my thanks to Lisa, my wife, for her constant love and support.

Siam Bhayro
Exeter

Aramaic Bowl Spells

Jewish Babylonian Aramaic Bowls
Volume One

By

Shaul Shaked
James Nathan Ford
Siam Bhayro

With contributions from

Matthew Morgenstern
Naama Vilozny

BRILL

LEIDEN · BOSTON
2013

Dedicated to the memory of Joseph Naveh (1928–2011), for his immense contribution to the study of magic bowls and amulets.

CONTENTS

Preface xiii
List of Figures xvii
List of Photographs xix
Abbreviations xxi
List of Other Bowls xxv
Sigla xxvii

Introduction 1
The Historical, Literary and Religious Context 1
Terms Designating "Bowl", "Amulet" and "Spell" 8
The Structure of an Incantation 8
Single-Spell Incantations 9
Multi-Spell Incantations 10
Literary Features 13
Historiolae 13
Biblical Quotations 18
Echoes of Biblical Themes 20
Prayer Book Quotations and Allusions 21
Mishnaic Quotations 22
Echoes of Hekhalot 23

The Art of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls (Naama Vilozny) 29
Stylistic Aspects of the Figures Appearing on the Incantation Bowls 30
The Artists' Sources 33
The Link between the Texts and the Drawings 35
The Drawings of the Incantation Bowls—A Magic Art 36
Summary 37

Linguistic Features of the Texts in This Volume (Matthew Morgenstern) 39
Orthography and Phonology 40
Use of 'aleph and he 40
Shewa 41
/ā/ 41
Assimilation, Dissimilation, and Other Sound Changes 41
Affixed Pronouns 42
The Verb 43
Perfect 43
Imperfect 44
Imperative 44
Participles 45
Numerals 45
Syntax 46
Particles 46

Vocabulary 46
Conclusion 49

I.1 RABBI ḤANINA BEN DOSA

Introduction 53
JBA 1 (MS 1927/8) 56
JBA 2 (MS 1927/29) 59
JBA 3 (MS 1927/45) 62
JBA 4 (MS 1927/47) 65
JBA 5 (MS 1927/64) 68
JBA 6 (MS 2053/10) 71
JBA 7 (MS 2053/12) 74
JBA 8 (MS 2053/55) 77
JBA 9 (MS 2053/183) 79
JBA 10 (MS 2053/185) 83

I.1.1 Rabbi Ḥanina ben Dosa: Omitted by Haplography

Introduction 89
JBA 11 (MS 2053/79) 91
JBA 12 (MS 2053/178) 94

I.2 DIVORCE TEXTS

Introduction 99

I.2.1 Divorce Texts: Joshua bar Peraḥia

Introduction 103
JBA 13 (MS 1927/5) 105
JBA 14 (MS 1927/39) 107
JBA 15 (MS 1927/43) 110
JBA 16 (MS 1929/16) 114
JBA 17 (MS 2053/33) 117
JBA 18 (MS 2053/103) 119
JBA 19 (MS 2053/132) 123
JBA 20 (MS 2053/150) 126
JBA 21 (MS 2053/164) 129
JBA 22 (MS 2053/165) 132
JBA 23 (MS 2053/206) 134
JBA 24 (MS 2053/251) 137
JBA 25 (MS 2053/280) 140

I.2.1.1 Divorce Texts: Joshua bar Peraḥia (with Magical Excommunication rather than Divorce)

Introduction 151
JBA 26 (MS 1928/43) 152

I.2.2 Divorce Texts: Elisur Bagdana

Introduction 157
JBA 27 (MS 1927/16) 160
JBA 28 (MS 1927/25) 162
JBA 29 (MS 1927/51) 164
JBA 30 (MS 1928/47) 166
JBA 31 (MS 2053/41) 169
JBA 32 (MS 2053/64) 172
JBA 33 (MS 2053/83) 174
JBA 34 (MS 2053/86) 177
JBA 35 (MS 2053/89) 181
JBA 36 (MS 2053/110) 183
JBA 37 (MS 2053/123) 185
JBA 38 (MS 2053/151) 187
JBA 39 (MS 2053/162) 190
JBA 40 (MS 2053/167) 192
JBA 41 (MS 2053/184) 195
JBA 42 (MS 2053/190) 197
JBA 43 (MS 2053/193) 200
JBA 44 (MS 2053/213) 202
JBA 45 (MS 2053/237) 204
JBA 46 (MS 2053/249) 208
JBA 47 (MS 2053/258) 211

I.2.2.1 Divorce Texts: Elisur Bagdana (Divorce Formula not Present)

Introduction 217
JBA 48 (MS 2053/200) 218
JBA 49 (MS 2053/270) 221

I.2.3 Divorce Texts: The Lilith Zanay, the Fornicating Singing-Girl

Introduction 225
JBA 50 (MS 2053/207) 226
JBA 51 (MS 2053/209) 229
JBA 52 (MS 2053/231) 232
JBA 53 (MS 2053/253) 235
JBA 54 (MS 2053/273) 238

I.2.4 Divorce Texts: Other Divorce Texts

Introduction 243
JBA 55 (MS 1928/1) 245
JBA 56 (MS 1928/8) 249
JBA 57 (MS 2053/36) 254
JBA 58 (MS 2053/166) 258
JBA 59 (MS 2053/174) 260
JBA 60 (MS 2053/212) 263
JBA 61 (MS 2053/214) 266

JBA 62 (MS 2053/242) 268
JBA 63 (MS 2053/250) 270
JBA 64 (MS 2053/256) 273

Glossary 279
List of Divine Names, Names of Angels, Demons and Exemplary Figures, and nomina barbara 333
List of Clients and Adversaries 345
List of Biblical Quotations 353
List of Texts 355
Bibliography 359
Index 367

PREFACE

The magic bowls in the Schøyen Collection form part of a vast and unique collection of written documents on various surfaces assembled from many parts of the globe and representing a large number of cultures, languages, religions, and periods.

Some statistical data may be quoted from the description given in the internet site of the Schøyen Collection (http://www.schoyencollection.com):

> The whole collection comprises 13,717 manuscript items, including 2,269 volumes. 6,860 manuscript items are from the ancient period, 3300 BC–500 AD; 3,844 are from the medieval period, 500–1500; and 3,013 are post-medieval. There are manuscripts from 134 different countries and territories in 120 languages and 184 scripts.

For the incantation bowls in the Schøyen Collection, the following data, borrowed from the same site (with slight modifications), may be given:

> The collection comprises 654 Aramaic incantation bowls and jugs from the Near East, dated between the fifth and the seventh or eighth centuries AD. In the majority of bowls there are written texts of spells and incantations against demons in several varieties of Aramaic. Bowls with Jewish Aramaic texts very often contain quotations from the Hebrew Bible. Some of these quotations are not attested in the Dead Sea Scrolls, and this makes them the earliest witnesses to the original text of the Old Testament.
>
> The bowls are not only part of our common heritage and that of the Sasanian Empire but, more specifically, of the Jewish, Christian and Mandaic communities. The Jewish Aramaic bowls also have the earliest examples of Hekhalot or Jewish mystical texts, as well as part of the Shemaʿ prayer or extracts from the Mishna. We also find named Jewish rabbis and demons as well as information about Jewish legal practice.

The earlier bowls acquired for the collection carry numbers starting with MS 1911, MS 1927, MS 1928, MS 1929, MS 2046. In these groups, the bowls in different languages were put together. Subsequent numbers were designated for a specific language: MS 2053 contains Jewish Babylonian Aramaic bowls; MS 2054 contains Mandaic; MS 2055 has Syriac; MS 2056 has Middle Persian, and MS 2057 comprises bowls with artificial scripts and drawings.

No study of this kind can succeed without the help and support of many people. I began work on the collection in 1995, when I spent a year at NIAS, the Netherlands Institute for Advanced Studies, as member of a research group working on magic in Antiquity. The papers delivered at a conference at the end of that year in a volume with the title Mesopotamian magic: textual, historical, and interpretive perspectives, ed. by T. Abusch and K. van der Toorn, Groningen 1999, convey an idea of the work done by the group.

The Schøyen Collection of bowls was at first deposited temporarily at University College London to facilitate the scholarly work, carried out with Martin Schøyen's support. I would like to express my deepest appreciation to Mr Schøyen for the opportunity to study these fascinating documents and for his patience in the face of the very prolonged period of gestation that this work demanded.

Students from the Department of Hebrew and Jewish Studies at University College London generously helped organize the bowls and facilitate my study of them. Dan Levene, now Reader in History at the University of Southampton and an expert in the Aramaic magic bowls, was my first assistant. He was followed in 1997 by Siam Bhayro. Dr Bhayro, now Senior Lecturer in Early Jewish Studies at the University of Exeter, has continued to be associated with this project in various ways up to the present. In 2008 I asked him to join the publication team. He has undertaken, to my great relief, the arduous charge of editing the complex text of this series of volumes, and I am deeply grateful to him.

Professor Mark Geller of University College London was of enormous help in getting the work started and in facilitating the process of studying the bowls. As head of the Department of Hebrew and Jewish Studies at UCL, he helped with logistics and provided a congenial intellectual and physical environment; most of all, he contributed his great enthusiasm for the subject-matter of the magic bowls. I am deeply grateful for his friendship and kindness. Other heads of the department, the late Professor John Klier and his successor, Professor Ada Rapoport-Albert, were also kindly disposed to provide help and advice.

Wolfson College, Cambridge, provided warm hospitality to the present writer on a number of occasions. I worked there in 1988 on the Cambridge Geniza collection, and in 2000/1 on the Schøyen Collection. This enabled me to work on the magic bowls in a congenial scholarly environment. In particular I would like to thank Professors Nicholas de Lange and Geoffrey Khan for their friendship and help, as well as Professor Stefan Reif, former head of the Taylor-Schechter Genizah Research Unit in the Cambridge University Library.

In 2001 I finished the first stage of the work, with most of the bowls in the three major languages transcribed and provided with provisional translations. The sheer size and complexity of the undertaking was quite daunting. I was, besides, engaged in other large-scale projects, which prevented me from devoting the necessary time to this edition.

Luckily there were, among the students who took part in my courses on the Aramaic incantation bowls at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, a number of young scholars who have since distinguished themselves in this and related fields. Dr James Nathan Ford, who is also an expert in Ugaritic, deserves particular mention. He has since proved himself to be an outstanding Semitic philologist and one of the foremost specialists in the study of the bowls. He possesses detailed knowledge of bowl texts, published and unpublished, more than any other person I know. He undertook to review and revise my readings and translations, and contributed numerous philological comments that have been embedded in the work. Beyond this, he has given this work its shape and structure. I am profoundly grateful to him.

Dr Matthew Morgenstern contributed to the Introduction a chapter on language issues in the bowls. His contribution, however, goes far deeper, as he read and commented on a considerable number of the bowls and has been frequently consulted regarding their language. His extraordinary sensitivity to the nuances of Aramaic has been the basis for many valuable suggestions concerning the reading and interpretation of the texts. In addition, in 2010, he volunteered to undertake the enormous task of taking fresh photographs of the entire Schøyen collection of bowls. The result was over 10,000 high-resolution digital images that significantly improved our ability to study the bowls and set a new standard for the documentation of incantation bowls. Dr Morgenstern's photographs are being published in the volumes of this series in conjunction with our editions. They are of a quality that will allow other scholars to check the readings proposed in our study without the necessity of going back to the originals.

Dr Naama Vilozny, who recently completed a Ph.D. thesis at the Hebrew University on the artistic aspects of the bowls, undertook to provide a chapter on this topic for the Introduction and also kindly put at our disposal her hand copies of the drawings that are on the bowls. Her thesis constitutes a pioneering attempt to interpret the illustrations on the bowls against the background of the artistic conventions of Sasanian Iran.

We consulted Dr Ada Yardeni on the script and the terminology to use in order to describe the various types of hand that may be distinguished on the bowls, and she gave us advice that can only come from an expert in this field.

I should also like to express my tribute to Joseph Naveh, with whom I worked for many years on amulets and magic bowls. I learned a great deal in the course of our joint work. May he rest in peace.

I feel an immense sense of gratitude to all the people mentioned above. Without their labour of love, their expertise and their dedication, this book would have never seen the light of day.

Finally, I would also like to express my indebtedness to Miriam, my wife, for the unfailing support she has given me over the years when I worked on these materials and often felt unsure whether I could ever bring the project to completion.

The plan of this publication of magic bowls in the Schøyen Collection consists of some nine volumes, distributed as follows: five volumes of bowls in Jewish Babylonian Aramaic; two volumes in Mandaic; one volume in Syriac; and one volume for the rest of the collection, where bowls in Pahlavi and in artificial scripts and bowls that have no text will be published.

The introduction to this volume discusses selected topics relating to the study of the bowls in general, their language, their design, their illustrations, and their historical setting. The introductions to subsequent volumes will probably take up other topics.

With the present volume a new series is launched with E.J. Brill, called Magical and Religious Literature of Late Antiquity (MRLA). We are planning to publish in this series texts and studies relating to ancient and medieval magic, besides studies in the religious literatures of the Mediterranean and in particular the Iranian environment.

The study of the Aramaic magic bowls is a matter of great interest and importance: they constitute the only direct epigraphical documents of Mesopotamia written mostly by some of the most important minority groups, Jews, Christians, Mandaeans, Manichaeans and others. Since the bowls are original manuscripts, they can teach us a great deal about the languages spoken (mostly varieties of Aramaic); popular religious practices, that take the form of magical texts; and certain aspects of social life, family structure and dwellings.

The last few decades have been a period of lively and fertile activity in the field of the magic bowls. Full publication of several large collections, and book-length editions of selected bowls from other large collections have appeared recently. To mention just a few major publications of this period: the publication of the Aramaic bowls in the British Museum (Segal 2000);[1] the publication of the Aramaic bowls in the Museo Nazionale d'Arte Orientale in Rome (Moriggi 2001); a selection of JBA bowls from the Shlomo Moussaieff Collection (Levene 2003a); the Aramaic bowls in the Hilprecht Collection in Jena (Müller-Kessler 2005). In addition, numerous lengthy articles containing editions of new bowls or studies of aspects of the language, contents and structure of the texts of bowls have been published (see the Bibliography under J.N. Ford, D. Levene, M. Morgenstern, C. Müller-Kessler, and S. Shaked).

Two large-scale surveys of Jewish magic, which deal inter alia with the magic bowls, have also appeared (Bohak 2008; Harari 2010), and additional books have been published as a result of conferences on themes connected to the magic of the bowls and on magic in Antiquity in general, among them the conferences convened by P. Schäfer and H.G. Kippenberg in Princeton (1997); G. Bohak and others in Jerusalem (see Bohak et al. 2011); and by I. Csepregi and C. Burnett in London (see Csepregi and Burnett 2012). This intellectual productivity has brought about a real revolution in the perception of the languages used on bowls, the structure of the magic texts, their contents, and their importance for the history of religion in Mesopotamia and in Palestine in Late Antiquity.

Shaul Shaked
Jerusalem

[1] Curiously carrying the title Catalogue of the Aramaic and Mandaic incantation bowls in the British Museum, as if Mandaic was not a dialect of Aramaic, and Syriac (another form of Aramaic) not deserving mention.

I began working on the bowls in the Schøyen Collection in 1997 as a doctoral student at the Hebrew University after taking a course on incantation bowls given by Prof. Shaked. The work, which mainly involved checking the transcriptions of the bowls from photographs, was intended as a supplement to my study of Ugaritic magic, but eventually developed into my main field of research. I am sincerely grateful for the continuing privilege of working with the leading scholar in the discipline on this remarkable corpus of texts.

Dr Siam Bhayro has been the catalyst that ensured that this volume finally went to press. Were it not for his prodigious efforts, tenacity and expertise, the publication of this book would likely have been delayed for years.

I would like to express my appreciation to Dr Matthew Morgenstern for his support and unfailing willingness to share with me his profound knowledge of the Aramaic language.

The decipherment and interpretation of many of the bowls in the Schøyen Collection has been facilitated by magic bowls in various private collections that I am editing. These have occasionally been cited in the present volume with the labels JNF, Wolfe, and Davidovitz. I would particularly like to thank Ms Lisa Marie Knothe, Mr Lenny Wolfe, Ms Ester Davidovitz and Mr Gil Davidovitz for access to bowls in their collections.

My work on the bowls was partially supported by a Kreitman post-doctoral fellowship (2002–2004) from Ben-Gurion University and a Lady Davis post-doctoral fellowship (2004–2005) from the Hebrew University and by Israel Science Foundation grant No. 1306/12 (2012–2013).

Finally, I wish to thank my mother for her love and support over the years.

James Nathan Ford
Petach Tiqwa

It has been a great privilege for me to work on this project for the past four years. I would like to express profound gratitude to Shaul Shaked, who has been the very best of mentors, both professionally and personally. I am also grateful to Miriam Shaked, who looked after me during my many research visits, showing great hospitality and patience, especially when I was "volcanoed" and ended up staying much longer than planned.

It has also been an honour to work with James Nathan Ford, from whom I continue to learn much. For the most part, the wider community of "bowls scholars" is very much like a family and, in many respects, I esteem James like an older brother—I hope I have not been too annoying a younger sibling. I would like to take this opportunity to thank some members of the extended family: Mark Geller, Dan Levene, Matthew Morgenstern, Marco Moriggi and Ortal-Paz Saar.

I was given two terms of research leave by the University of Exeter, which allowed me to devote myself to the preparation of this volume. I am grateful to my colleagues in Exeter, particularly those in the Department of Theology and Religion, who, despite being compelled to put up with me for the past six years, have been the epitome of grace and humour.

I am grateful to the British Academy, particularly Ken Emond, for a Small Research Grant (SG-52081), which funded my numerous visits to Israel among other things. I am particularly grateful to Geoffrey Khan for his support in this respect.

Our publisher, E.J. Brill, has been very supportive in establishing the new series devoted to the bowls and related literatures. I would like to express my sincere thanks to Jennifer Pavelko, Katelyn Chin and, more recently, Julia Berick for their support and patience with this and other projects.

Finally, I would like to express my thanks to Lisa, my wife, for her constant love and support.

Siam Bhayro
Exeter

Routledge
Taylor & Francis Group

Symbolae Osloenses
Norwegian Journal of Greek and Latin Studies

ISSN: 0039-7679 (Print) 1502-7805 (Online) Journal homepage: http://www.tandfonline.com/loi/sosl20

Historical and Textual Notes on Magical Texts in the Papyrus Collection of the University of Oslo Library

Todd Hickey, Anastasia Maravela & Michael Zellmann-Rohrer

To cite this article: Todd Hickey, Anastasia Maravela & Michael Zellmann-Rohrer (2015) Historical and Textual Notes on Magical Texts in the Papyrus Collection of the University of Oslo Library, Symbolae Osloenses, 89:1, 156-182

To link to this article: http://dx.doi.org/10.1080/00397679.2015.1111576

Published online: 12 Jan 2016.

Submit your article to this journal

View related articles

View Crossmark data

Full Terms & Conditions of access and use can be found at http://www.tandfonline.com/action/journalInformation?journalCode=sosl20

Download by: [University of Oslo] Date: 12 January 2016, At: 09:20

Symbolae Osloenses, 2016
Vol. 89, No. 1, 156–182, http://dx.doi.org/10.1080/00397679.2015.1111576

Historical and Textual Notes on Magical Texts in the Papyrus Collection of the University of Oslo Library[†]

Todd Hickey[1], Anastasia Maravela[2] and Michael Zellmann-Rohrer[1]
[1]The Center for Tebtunis Papyri, University of California, Berkeley, usa;
[2]Department of Philosophy, Classics, History of art and Ideas, University of Oslo, Norway

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

This article, which concerns the history and texts of some of the magical papyri in the collection of the University of Oslo Library, has two parts. The first part (Hickey and Maravela) sheds light on the acquisition of the celebrated Oslo magical roll, P.Oslo I 1, by drawing on Samson Eitrem's account of the purchase in the Norwegian daily Aftenposten and the correspondence of Francis W. Kelsey, who had sought to buy the papyrus for the University of Michigan. The second part (Zellmann-Rohrer) offers critical remarks on the formats and texts of the magical papyri P.Oslo I 1, 4–5 and II 15.

Keywords: magical papyri; papyrus collection of the University of Oslo Library; Samson Eitrem; Francis W. Kelsey

Part I: the acquisition of P.Oslo 1

P.Oslo 1, the magnificent magical formulary that is the "crown jewel" of the papyrus collection of the University of Oslo Library, was purchased by Samson Eitrem late in 1920. In the preface to his editio princeps of 1925,[1] Eitrem reveals almost nothing regarding the provenance of the roll, noting only that it was part of "a set of papyri acquired by myself during a visit to Egypt four years ago" using monies from the University's [†]Part I has been authored jointly by Todd Hickey and Anastasia Maravela. Part II has been authored by Michael Zellmann-Rohrer. The article stems from collaborative research that occurred in the context of a 2013 seed grant from the Peder Sather Center for Advanced Study at the University of California, Berkeley. We remain grateful to the Center for its support of our work.

© 2016 Symbolae Osloenses

Jubilee Fund and the Nansen Fund.[2] In the commentary to the formulary itself, however, he elaborates a bit: The roll was purchased in the Fayum and "was said to have come originally from Batn-Harît" [the ancient Theadelphia].[3]

Eitrem's reserve in his scholarly publication stands in contrast to the account of the acquisition that he had presented to the Norwegian public in the leading daily Aftenposten. His vivid narrative, the relevant excerpt of which we translate in full ("warts and all") because its language of publication has hindered its accessibility,[4] occupied a prominent position in the edition of 16 April 1921, appearing on the first two pages:

> An ancient Greek black book on papyrus in the University Library
>
> It was in the month of December [1920] that the undersigned [i.e., Eitrem] acquired in Egypt a very interesting manuscript that sheds new light on ancient magic. The scene is in Fayoum [Eitrem's spelling], Egypt. We had spent the day going around to all those who during the long years of the war had amassed Greek papyri, now sought by everyone, and who had not yet sold them to Europeans. My Arab guide had postponed the best for the end, he reassured me. "I hear that a Greek has a two-meter-long papyrus." As expected, we found the owner in the only decent restaurant of the place.[5] Together with a friend of his, we four wandered up to his flat. A small box with nice things was produced on the table and went immediately for 5 Egyptian pounds.[6] There follows a cup of tea, liqueur and sweets, as the custom is. The owner then goes out and, to my great surprise, returns with a plank that he lays on his living room table. Without a word – yet he is a Greek – he places an old papyrus roll at the end of the plank and rolls it out with great ceremony on the plank to a length of two and a half meters. He then devotes himself to studying in my face the impression that this new text made. I went from studying a photo of Venizelos hanging on the wall to being confronted with a Greek "black book" five hundred years older than the Oseberg ship.[7] I had to compose myself. I got permission to copy part of the text so that I could research the content of the papyrus later in the libraries in Cairo. "The friend" interrupted this, apparently afraid lest the value of the papyrus should diminish if I published any of it before it was sold. I offered 100 Egyptian pounds, but the owner wanted to have 200 pounds, and I returned to Cairo very disappointed with the outcome. But my Arab guide found a way out of the impasse. He traveled back to Fayoum, sat again in the aforementioned restaurant, and the papyrus owners flocked around him like flies on a > sugar cube. And Egyptian flies are something apart. They knew that he represented "the European." That same evening the guide sent a telegram that he had got hold of the magical papyrus for 165 Egyptian pounds. The owner had been in dire straits as a result of speculation in cotton.[8] So the papyrus was secured for the University Library in Kristiania.[9] Next evening I sat in a hotel room in Fayoum,[10] examined for the last time the authenticity of the manuscript in the light of two candles, and paid the sum.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Though Eitrem ended up with the formulary, he was not the first westerner to whom it had been offered. In the autumn of 1919, Francis W. Kelsey, Professor of Latin at the University of Michigan, had set out on what came to be known as the "First Expedition", the goals of which included "the acquisition of ancient artifacts and manuscripts, more especially papyri, for research and teaching".[11] He arrived in Cairo, via rail from Jerusalem, late on 6 February 1920, but had already laid the groundwork for a successful foray into the market through his friend David Askren, a missionary doctor in the Fayum.[12] Kelsey later described the commercial landscape in a letter to his benefactress Mary Beecher Longyear[13]:

> Some months before I came to Cairo, a friend in Egypt [Askren] wrote to the dealers asking them to save all manuscripts and ~~P~~papyri until I should come. This request was particularly made of Maurice Nahman, whom you probably know as cashier of the Crédit Foncier Egytien [sic] and the most enterprising dealer in antiquities among them all, and he did as requested, though a wealthy Greek of A~~m~~lexandria was trying to negotiate for the purchase of his ~~P~~papyri as a gift to the University of Athens.[14]

> I was amazed to find that Nahman had one of the most important collections of papyri ever made. There were no scholars in quest of papyri in Egypt after 1913; and meanwhile the destruction of the mounds [at ancient sites to obtain organic material for fertilizer] has almost completely eliminated the principal source from which papyri come, and has brought to light a great number of papyri, among which are some of much importance.[15]

Kelsey's connections to men like Askren and Nahman and the financial backing (though not without limit) that he received from philanthropists like Longyear – to say nothing of his own unflagging energy and enthusiasm – put him in a rather favourable position. What he lacked was technical papyrological "know how", but in the event this was furnished in spades by one of the field's founders, Bernard P. Grenfell, who fortuitously was present in Egypt for the first time since his nervous breakdown in 1907.[16]

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Grenfell had reached Cairo on 20 January.[17] Based in the southern suburb of Helwan, he was occupied at the Egyptian Museum revising transcriptions of Byzantine texts for what would become the 16th volume of the Oxyrhynchus Papyri. But he was also shopping for papyri, albeit with mixed results.[18] On 6 February, he wrote to Idris Bell at the British Museum:

> I have now seen probably all the Cairo dealers who have any papyri. Off one man [Ismail Abdallah] I have bought ^(for nearly £60)^ about 20 papyri,[19] none of any great length, chiefly from Oxyrhynchus: there is a fragment of the Nicene Creed and a damaged roll of 3rd cent B.C. official accounts concerning land.[20]

But the largest group of papyri was in Giza, in the hands of the dealer Ali, "now very old and more unreasonable than ever, since his big deal with Pierpont Morgan over the Hamuli Coptic books", and Ali had rebuffed Grenfell's offer of £100 for 30 "respectable" pieces.[21]

With many tasks requiring attention – some directly concerning the aims of the Expedition and some, like his visit to the dentist, not[22] – Kelsey made it to the Egyptian Museum only on 17 February.[23] It was on his return, the following day, that he seems to have first met Grenfell. Kelsey's diary records the encounter matter-of-factly: "I called on Dr. Bernard P. Grenfell, who was working on papyri in a special room, and asked him to go with me to see Nahman's papyri at twelve".[24] Given Kelsey's temperament, it is appealing to construe this as a "cold" call, albeit one delivered with his characteristic aplomb; in any case, Grenfell accepted the invitation. Thus began an extraordinary and fruitful partnership that in the space of a mere few weeks would establish the papyrus collections at the Universities of Michigan and Wisconsin and add substantial and important manuscripts to the papyrological holdings of the British Museum and the John Rylands Library.[25] On 15 March, Grenfell would declare to Bell, "The American and I are practically making a clean sweep of the Greek papyri on the market".[26] Concerning just the material that would end up in Ann Arbor, Kelsey would write, "Dr. Grenfell says that such a collection of ancient documents can never again be made ~~from~~ in Egypt".[27]

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

For the present purpose, Grenfell and Kelsey's richly documented acquisitions need not be elaborated.[28] It is sufficient to note that their activities included a visit to the Fayum (25–28 February), during which time they were offered and examined the future P.Oslo 1. Quite remarkably, Kelsey omits any mention of this occurrence in his diary. Since the diary is ample and detailed during this period in its description of each day's events, and because Kelsey's correspondence (see further below) makes it clear that he was present for the viewing, and that the roll left an impression (i.e. was not something that would have slipped his mind), it would seem that his silence is intentional.

The earliest reference to the formulary comes not from Kelsey but from Grenfell, in a letter to Bell dated 1 March:

> On Wednesday ~~I~~ last [25 February] I came down to the Fayum. Prof Kelsey, the American with whom I have gone into temporary partnership, also came down there to stay with an American doctor [Askren] who lives in the Fayum and is interested in anticas. He had collected some papyri for Kelsey but these did not amount to much. We found however a good deal at the dealers, and spent about £150 in b~~y~~uying up practically all the papyri in the Fayum, including £80 for a rather good Oxyrhynchus lot, which contained about 30 complete Roman documents and as many other fairish pieces.[29] ~~So~~ On an average the ^complete^ papyri cost us £1–2 each || Kelsey provided the money (having spent £160 on papyri I am rather short till fresh supplies arrive from England,)[30] and has taken the papyri back to Cairo, but I am going to claim part of them when our division takes place at the end of March. A big roll (a 3rd–4th cent magical papyrus in excellent preservation, 12 columns on recto and a good deal of writing on the verso: divided into sections containing ^gnostic^ invocations of the deity or spells of various kinds) we did not get. I offered £50 but the owner (a Greek called Soteris at Medinet el Fayum) said he had paid £200 for it – which is absurd.[31] If you want to make an offer (£100 or £150 might get it) please let me know at once.[32]

Grenfell and Kelsey were not compelled to seek out Soteris because the dealer had left the roll with Askren for the men to examine.[33] This makes it difficult to pinpoint the date on which the viewing occurred; indeed, it may not have been confined to a single day.[34]

A little more than two weeks after Grenfell's letter, on 16 March, Kelsey, seeking assistance from William W. Bishop, the University of Michigan's librarian, in raising money for purchases of papyri, gave the

"gnostic roll" pride of place in his argument for funding. According to his description, it is "perfectly preserved", and he adds:

> It is just the kind of document that [Campbell] Bonner would delight in;[35] though several similar rolls are known, this does not appear to be a duplicate. The owner says that he paid £200 for it, and he wants £300, though I think he would take a more reasonable price.[36]

Still, Kelsey was less interested in the possession of manuscripts than in the rights of Michigan scholars like Bonner to publish them,[37] and when money was not forthcoming from his Detroit backers, magnates like John R. Russel,[38] he proposed to hand over all of his papyrological acquisitions to Mary Beecher Longyear's Zion Research Foundation at cost, with the stipulation that his colleagues be permitted to edit them.[39] In another communication pertaining to this proposition he added:

> If you are disposed to take for the Zion Research Foundation, [sic] the papyri which were offered to you, you might be pleased to consider the purchase of two additional items, which are probably availabelle, and fall directly within the field of the history of the Church in the ealrlier centuries.
>
> One is a papyrus roll of some 12 pages, admirably preserved, containing Gnostic formulae, and dating in the 4th Century A.D. It is in possession of a Banker [sic] in Fayum, who paid for it 200 Egyptian pounds. I believe that he would sell it for 250 Egyptian pounds, or about 1.000 Dollars [sic].[40] I saw the roll, because the banker sent it over for me to look at; it is very interesting as a bit of evidence. I was staying with a missionary friend [Askren], who is a friend of the Banker [sic]; I lately wriote asking whether the banker would be willing to part with the roll for a reasonable advance upon his purchase money.[41]

Longyear would decline Kelsey's proposal through her secretary on 23 July, leaving him to his own devices as regards the acquisition of the roll.[42] About a fortnight later, he received a letter from Askren (in "Alexandria on summer holiday") that included an update about the formulary:[43]

> Two of the Greeks who were formerly in Fayum have opened a pharmacy down near where I garage my car so I went to them to ask about the owner of the papyri and found he is in Alex so I made an appointment for him to meet me yesterday morning.
>
> I met him and found that he has the roll in Alex with him nbut he says he has not yet showed it to anyone.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

> I made him no offer whatever as I found that he thinks he has a small fortune tied up in it and he does not seem to be able to realize that it has no literary value; in fact candidly he places no credit on Grenfell's valuation.
>
> When I found he ~~w~~was still soaring in the clouds I thought it best not to arouse his cupidity by making him any offer whatever as I feel sure that he will bring it back to ~~F~~Fayum with him and then we ca~~h~~n deal with him more satisfactorily and he will probably be more reasonable.
>
> There is one or two other rolls loose in Fayum I am hoping to get a chance at as soon as the Compensation Board finish their allotments but just at present the rolls are among the articles lost during the troubles, you understand the Greeks well enough to know what I mean.[44]

Kelsey agreed with Askren's plan of attack. "You are quite right about the roll", he replied. "[I]t is best not to seem anxious to get it. In any case, please do not buy it outright, unless I send the money. Exchange is very uncertain at the present time".[45]

The waiting game continued into the autumn. In a letter written at the beginning of November, Askren reported:

> The big roll of Doteris [sic] is still with him and he failed to sell it last summer in Alex. or Cairo.[46]
>
> I am not trying to buy it as I do not believe he will be unable [sic] to sell it but I met him [the] other day at a house where I was called professionally and asked him about it and told him would give him L.E. 150 but he refused it.[47]

Kelsey's acknowledgement, written from London on 13 December, confirms his sustained interest:

> I am writing to the United S~~P~~tates to see if I can secure an appropriation for the Gnostic Roll. I dislike to pay such a high price, and on the other hand, the roll, although not so valuable as the material obtained from Nahman,[48] does represent an important class.[49]

Around this time Kelsey also mentioned the formulary as among "the odds and ends" still in Egypt "which are most important" in communications to William Westermann and A.S. Hunt.[50] The correspondence with Westermann adds the detail that Soteris had acquired the roll from an Arab, whom he had "paid more than he ought to have paid".

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Another report about the formulary was included in a letter sent by Askren on 13 December:

> The large roll is still here and several have priced it to him [Soteris] at prices much less than your offer so I am just letting him stew.[51]
>
> I think however if you are not coming out [to Egypt] and really want the roll that L.E. 200 will buy it later nearer the close of the season.[52]

Askren's closing paragraphs suggest a reason for his optimism regarding the price; these are "very hard times in Egypt", and in particular the "poor price of cotton" has everyone "so depressed … that they cant think of anything else", including political and social unrest of the sort that spring 1919 had witnessed.[53]

Soteris' financial situation, however, seems to have been worse than even Askren had imagined, for sometime around or shortly after the doctor had dispatched his report, Eitrem managed to acquire the roll. Askren relayed the bad news to Kelsey in letter penned on 18 January 1921:

> Now as to the large Gnostic roll.
>
> The Danish professor slipped in one night and bought it for L.E. 190.[54] I was very sorry when I heard of it but I feel sure that it was not worth so much money especially after the valuation Dr. Grenfell placed upon it.
>
> I regret I did not push the sale harder but as I knew you had not arranged the money I felt it was not as important as other documents that the same money would purchase.[55]

The price that Askren reports differs significantly (by L.E. 25) from that presented by Eitrem in his Aftenposten account. Since Askren is clearly trying to save face with his friend (and, increasingly, benefactor) Kelsey,[56] probably more stock should be put in Eitrem's figure, though it is not out of the question that Eitrem wanted to portray himself as getting a better bargain – L.E. 10 perhaps seemed too paltry a discount. Of course all of this assumes that Askren recollected (or was told) the sales price accurately.[57]

Kelsey, in any case, put a positive spin on his reverse. Writing, 5 February, in response to Askren's news – and going so far as to call Askren's letter a "pleasure to have"[58] – he stated:

> The point in regard to the gnostic roll is this: I suppose if it had been held after a time I might have paid about £ 200 for it. At the same time I am glad that the matter was adjusted as it was, because I hope to continue purchasing > manuscripts and papyri and it spoils the market if one pays too much for a single item of this kind. I should gladly have paid £100 last year, but was deterred from closing the matter up for the reason that it really was better to let a thing of this sort go than to put the prices of all such material at so high a figure that one does not feel like purchasing.[59] I should like to know who the Danish Professor was that obtained the roll, if you can find out. I take it that he is an occasional visitor;[60] on the other hand I should like to be in a position to have the first chance of any good material that you or your friends or Nauhman may get on the trakck of.[61]

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

In the event, Kelsey would come to know the identity of the "Danish professor", though whether this was through Askren is unclear. Eitrem himself eventually contacted Kelsey, sending him a copy of P.Oslo I as well as other publications.[62] Kelsey thanked Eitrem for these in a letter dated 27 August 1925, adding:

> I have read with unusual interest the monograph, Fasc. I. The papyrus No. 1 was offered to me in the Fayoum in 1920. The price asked was two hundred pounds, and I refused to pay more than one hundred pounds. Professor Bernard Grenfell and I visited the Fayoum together, and he thought my offer was as high as I ought to go, for the reason that we were both purchasing papyri and if we had paid so high a price at the time it would have raised the offerings of papyri generally to a high figure; for word of such purchases travels rapidly, and often with exageration [sic].
>
> I am exceedingly glad that this papyrus came into your hands, and you have published it more promptly than would have been possible here, where the papyrus containing the Minor Prhophets and the fragments of Hermas and the Archive from Tebtunis must take precedence in publication.[63]

This passes muster for courtesy – one would expect nothing less from Kelsey – but he compresses the narrative of his involvement with the roll (rendering it misleading), and the hint of "sour grapes" is unmistakable. Perhaps understandably: The Minor Prophets codex, the Shepherd of Hermas, and Tebtunis grapheion archive would become major Michigan contributions to scholarship (the last two of them also being key acquisitions for the growing collection in Ann Arbor),[64] but Kelsey himself had admitted that the Oslo formulary was "the finest piece of papyrus writing I ever saw".[65] And it was the one that got away.[66]

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Part II: notes on Oslo magical texts

During a recent visit to the University of Oslo, I had the opportunity to inspect four texts, three papyri and an ostrakon, in the collection of the University Library.[67] Each has previously appeared in the series Papyri Osloenses (P.Oslo) and been reprinted in the corpus Papyri Graecae Magicae (Pap.Graec.Mag.).[68] I offer here the results of my study, which has yielded some new readings and observations on the physical disposition of the papyri; images are available for consultation through the OPES portal (<http://ub-fmserver.uio.no/home.php>). The observations on each text (P.Oslo I 1 = Pap.Graec.Mag. P XXXVI; P.Oslo I 4 = Pap.Graec.Mag. P XXXIX; P.Oslo I 5 = Pap.Graec.Mag. P 3; P.Oslo II 15 = Pap.Graec.Mag. O 2) are presented in separate sections below.[69]

(I)

P.Oslo I 1 (P.Oslo inv. 420), the well-known magical formulary in book-roll format, was purchased by Samson Eitrem and inaugurated the series P.Oslo in 1925.[70] The commentary accompanying Eitrem's editio princeps of the piece, a detailed explication of "these interesting relics of degenerate religions and of the human mind gone astray" and the headpiece of P. Oslo I, is worth quoting in part:

> That fine paper such as we find in our papyrus could be used in such an extravagant and pretentious way sufficiently shows how popular this special form of magic had grown amongst well-to-do people. It certainly throws a sidelight on the interesting chapter of the history of morals in those days.[71]

This interest continues to flourish. Eitrem's edition was reprinted by Karl Preisendanz in the corpus Pap.Graec.Mag.,[72] with substantial improvements to the text combining the contributions of other scholars in the intervening years with his own work. Other emendations, through 1994, are collected by William Brashear along with bibliography on more general discussions.[73] I add a few of my own below. The ed. pr. remains valuable because, besides its detailed commentary, it accounts better for lectional signs (printed in the main text) than the Pap.Graec. Mag. version. But even this account is incomplete: the apostrophe in particular is neglected, its use being signalled only in general terms in the introduction.[74] I note those lectional signs, and scribal corrections, omitted by the ed. pr. along with my new readings.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

But first I wish to turn to the "fine paper", on which the disposition of the writing is remarkable in several respects. The text, in fact a collection of some 19 recipes for magical practices, is written in a single hand on front and back of a premade bookroll, which has survived virtually intact. It begins on the recto, where the first 13 recipes are arranged in 12 columns, each afforded its own column except in col. xi, which contains two recipes separated by a paragraphos (below line 263).

Unusually, the first column is on the protocol (against the fibres), while the rest of the text on the recto is along the fibres. With respect to the 13 kolleseis visible on the recto,[75] the scribe in general sought to bound the columns within the kolleseis; otherwise the width of the columns varies widely.[76] Both circumstances stand in marked contrast to scribal practice observed in literary bookrolls,[77] and mark the Oslo roll as an eccentric product. The kollesis-justification holds good in the first three columns, but the extra width of col. iv, at bottom right, disrupts the pattern. The unusually large space between coll. xi and xii can be accounted for by this same tendency: col. xi goes over the right bounding kollesis slightly, and the scribe elects to start the next column at a new left bounding kollesis. In two cases, the scribe has added vertical lines to separate columns.[78]

Another unusual feature appears on the verso of the roll. There the scribe has added six more recipes. There is a short sequence of text on the protocol, along the fibres: a magical logos in a single line (282) and faint traces of another line of writing just above it, not previously noted.[79] But for the rest of the text on the verso, the scribe has rotated the roll 90° clockwise, and, beginning c. 9.5 cm below the protocol-join, written along the fibres in a single wide column, a method for which I can find no parallels in Greek papyri.[80] The motivation may simply be a preference for writing with the fibres, on aesthetic or practical grounds (i.e. as line-guides). Each of the six recipes is closed by a paragraphos with a left terminus curved into the left margin;[81] there is a plain horizontal line above the first recipe (283).

Here follow my notes on the text, following the line numbers of ed. pr., combining a record of lectional signs and scribal corrections not noted in ed. pr. with suggestions for new readings (marked by →):

Col. i 9 αονκον: ν² overwritten.
Col. ii 44 αγ'γελοι pap.
Col. iii 69 βελ'τιστον pap.
74 πιτ'τακιον pap.
Col. iv 106 γενάμενος: ν corr. from γ.
112 τυγ'χανουσαν pap.
Col. v 138 ἀνάλεσθαι: ι overwritten.
140 ᾧα: α corr. from θ.
146 δαίμονες: ο corr. from ω.
148 τυγ'χανουσαν pap.
152 ϊνα pap.
154 τεταγ'μενους pap.
159 αλλουδανε[..]ρανου. – φυλακτήριον περιπόη ed. pr. (cf. app. cr.) → ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἂν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ φυλακτήριον περιπόη (l. περιποιῴη), "but not even a phylactery from heaven would save [you]". Letters that ed. pr. considered lost are clear even without microscopy. The form ποιῴη is noted as a koine by-form for Attic ποιοίη in the lexicon of Moeris π 74 s.v. (ed. Hansen 1998) and confirmed by Philodemus Περὶ μουσικῆς 4, fr. 152.19 (ed. Delattre 2007). The reason for the omission of οι is unclear, but cf. the note below on θεώσας for θειώσας in line 267, with omission of what probably constitutes the same /i/ phoneme in Greek of this period; the η may represent a correction overwriting an original ι. Pap.Graec.Mag. prints ἀλλ' οὐδὲν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ φυλακτήριον περὶ πᾶν, giving the reading of the papyrus in the first part as αλλουδανεξορανου [sic]. Col. vi 167 ϊναν pap. The horizontal ligature from the σ of the preceding word has a diagonal strike-through, perhaps to mark word-division.
172 κατ'τιηλ pap.
176 αγ'γελοι pap.
177 πραγ'ματος pap.
Col. vii 179 μονοῳθουν ed. pr. → μονοπέουν (l. μονόπουν), "one-footed". The figure that appears at the bottom of this column (vii) has of course more than one foot, but note the shackle-like band between its legs; there are other disparities between the prescribed drawings and those that actually accompany the text, cf. the app. cr. of Pap.Graec.Mag. on this line. The ε is somewhat faded but not intentionally obliterated. The form may represent conflation between πούς and πέδη, "fetter", especially in light of the drawing, but phonological confusion cannot be ruled out, cf. οετος for οὗτος in 247 and Gignac (1976–1981, 1:216) on interchange of ου and ευ.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

182 ϊερακες pap.
182, 183 ϋπο pap.
Col. ix 223 ϋγιαν pap.
Col. x 232 ϋποκιμενα pap.
246 αγ'γελοι pap.

Col. xi 258 {γ}ῥῖψον ed. pr. → [[γ]] ῥῖψον. The γ is cancelled with a diagonal stroke. The scribe's confusion was perhaps occasioned by γρ(άφε) above in 257.

267 I can confirm the reading of ed. pr. καὶ ἅμα θεώσας εἰς τοῖχον καθαρόν. This is a supralinear insertion, to be read between εἰς πιττάκιον καθαρόν and εἰς ἀνατολήν in 268: hence it would have been better to delete line 267 and simply print line 268 as εἰς πιττάκιον καθαρὸν \καὶ ἅμα θεώσας εἰς τοῖχον καθαρὸν/ εἰς ἀνατολήν, "[write it] on a clean sheet, at the same time fumigating it with sulfur against a clean wall, facing east". Pace Preisendanz et al. (see Pap.Graec.Mag. app. cr.), θεωσας is inevitable; ed. pr. leaves it untranslated and unexplained in the commentary. I think that most likely we have a reference to fumigation with sulphur (so l. θειώσας, or simply understand θεώσας as a form of θεόω, an alternate to θειόω, cf. LSJ s.v. θεόω II). For the use of sulphur, cf. the ἀγωγὴ ἔνπυρον ἐπὶ θείου ἀπύρου in 295–311.

Col. xii 276 δημονϊοπληκτους pap.

Verso
282a om. edd. The very faint traces can be tentatively resolved as ιιιια vac. ǫǫǫ, but it may be that they were intentionally washed out or accidentally applied as offsets from another text against which the papyrus once rested.
294 μονου // pap.
318 αρχεφρενεψου // φιριγχ pap. The diagonal punctuation strokes are smaller than they appear elsewhere, but still present.
322, 325 ϊνα pap.
328 ἀπομύσης (l. ἀπομύξεις) ed. pr. → ἀπομούσης (l. ἀπομύξεις). Pap.Graec. Mag. gives the reading of the papyrus as απομǫυης [sic]. On the interchange of υ and ου see Gignac (1976–1981, 1:214–215); according to id. 1:141n3 the interchange of ξ and σ is not paralleled in contemporary papyri.
339 ϊσιδος pap.
340–341 οὕτως ϙᾳ̣ὶ [σὺ καύ]|σης ed. pr. → οὕτως κᾳ̣ύ|σης. The writing in 340 does not seem to continue after what is read here as υ², though there is stripping of the papyrus in the right margin and a form of the compound κατακαίω, as Anastasia Maravela suggests to me, cannot be excluded.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

345 αναγ'κης pap.

349 ϊθιπεσκουθι pap.

354 ϋπαγε pap.

355 εισελθε: ε^2 is blotted, perhaps corr. from θ.

361 μονοημέρος: o^3 corr. from α.

362 ϋποκιμενα pap.

370 καταναγ'κης pap.

(II)

P.Oslo I 4 (P.Oslo inv. 434) is an instance of applied magic, the inscription of text and image on papyrus to create an activated object. It clearly served a ritual to inflict sexual desire (ἔρως) on a male target for the benefit of a female user, specifically to draw him to her (an ἀγωγή).[82] The papyrus is part of a lot of papyri purchased in 1923 in the Fayum region of Egypt (the ancient Arsinoite nome).[83] The editio princeps was again done by Eitrem and reprinted in Pap.Graec.Mag.[84]

Beginning again with the physical disposition of the papyrus, I note that the text on the front is written in brown ink along the fibres, accompanied by a drawing of two figures, one holding a knife and severed head, the other, apparently the Egyptian god Bes, sticking out its tongue, which is coloured red. The back is blank but for exiguous traces probably from a washed-out text. There is a kollesis on the front, c. 1 cm from the right edge. Five vertical lines of cracking in the papyrus suggest the manner in which it was folded up, probably for deposition as part of the ritual: the sheet was folded inwards from both left and right, twice on each side, then once more along the vertical to yield a compact packet.

Next I present new readings and an account of lectional signs omitted by ed. pr.:

18 στυκίων ed. pr. → στυχίων (l. στοιχείων). The letter read as κ in ed. pr. has a prominent leftward bend to its lower leg, which is not consistent with the form of κ anywhere else in the text: the vertical may be slanted to the left, and its top may curl to the left, but not the bottom. Similarly in lines 19–20 (see below).

19 ϊκοσι τεσσερα pap.

19–20 στυκί|ων ed. pr. → στυχί|ων (l. στοιχεί|ων). See line 18 above.

20 ϊνα pap.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

20–21: the reading Τα|επις already attributed to the suggestion of Leiv Amundsen in the ed. pr. (Ṭạepις, only in app. cr.), is secure. Pap.Graec.Mag. prints [Τα]|αῖπις.

(III)

P.Oslo I 5 (P.Oslo inv. 303) is also an example of applied magic, a protective amulet for a house. No information on its provenance is recorded; Eitrem again produced the first edition, which was reprinted in Pap. Graec.Mag.[85]

The text is written against the fibres, and the papyrus is generally well preserved, though close examination reveals an interesting case of modern "repair". A tear runs vertically along the full length, such that the piece was torn in two. It has been mended, surely by a modern dealer, by pasting scraps from another papyrus on the back, which is otherwise blank. Five separate patches appear along the tear, each with traces of ink in an early Byzantine cursive hand. On the most legible can be read]ρυ[. The re-join is fair but not perfect: the right edge is c. 1 mm higher than it should be to align with the left edge, as seen in particular in the second κ in κακοῦ (line 4). Other purchased pieces in the Oslo collection show less successful applications of a similar method: e.g. P.Oslo inv. 1545, catalogued as "literary prose … wrongly glued together by the native papyrus dealer", and inv. 1423, "fragments of a document, wrongly glued together by one of the fellahin or Egyptian dealers".[86]

I next present one new reading and several observations on lectional signs:

2 ϊαω pap.

2 αδωναι: $α^{1}$ overwritten.

6 ὄφεως διά ed. pr. → ὄφεως \κ(αὶ) κυ̣ν̣[ὸς]/ διά. The supralinear addition expands the series of noxious creatures against whose bites the amulet protects into a tricolon: scorpion, snake, and dog.

7 ὐψιστου pap.

7: Daniel (1977, 151–153) reads γ̣α̣ιας μελι ζ̣ ξορο ωρο ααααααα with commentary and reference to the parallel text P.Pal.Rib. inv. 126. The resolution of ξορο ωρο is an improvement, but the ink to the right of the ζ is not a numeral stroke, but rather the descender from the final υ in σκορπίου, as appears also in the υ

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

of κακοῦ in line 4.

8 υἱε pap.

10: the scribe changes styles and adopts a markedly angular and serifed script in the writing of the second α and ω, approximating a type familiar from monumental stone inscriptions. The sixth-century Christian amulet P.Köln inv. 521a (ed. Wortmann 1968, 106) has alphas of a similar lapidary style: there is no photograph in ed. pr., but this feature can be observed on the fine digital image made available online by the Köln Papyrussammlung. On the more general use of such forms outside of stone inscriptions, probably for "monumental effect", see the introduction of P.J. Parsons to P.Oxy. LXVIII 4670, a fourth-century notice which features a similar alpha with broken cross-bar. The omega as it now stands here is distorted by the imperfect rejoining of the two halves of the papyrus; below I present a reconstructed drawing with the necessary shift of the right half c. 1 mm downward, beside a tracing of the intact alpha:

On the script compare the "Memorial of Theodorus" inscription from Petrie's tomb 46 at Oxyrhynchus (Petrie et al. 1925, 12–18; repr. in Bowman et al. 2007, 50–69, with photograph p. 69, fig. 5.13.3); ed. pr. Bingen (1980, 319), dated to the fifth or sixth century AD (SEG XXX 1748).

In this line appear also three crosses in three different styles, which can plausibly be read as a transformation from left to right. First, a simple form of two intersecting lines; second, the same with an expanded upper terminus bulging to the right, reminiscent of the christogram but without the addition of the "chi"; third, the same rounded upper terminus, now centred, with the other three termini expanded into wedges, and a gap left in the middle. The second form recalls the Egyptian ankh, and the third, a blending of the latter with the so-called Latin cross. On the forms in inscriptions from Egypt cf. Lefebvre (1907, xxxiii–xxxiv).

(IV)

P.Oslo II 15 (P.Oslo inv. 570) is an ostrakon, and like P.Oslo I 3 an instance of erotic magic applied by a man upon a married woman. It was purchased from Ali Mahmud in Behnasa (ancient Oxyrhynchus) on 25 April 1928, first edited by L. Amundsen,[87] revised by Eitrem for inclusion in P.Oslo, and reprinted in Pap.Graec.Mag.[88] The ed. pr. of Amundsen remains useful for its description of the physical disposition of the artefact. The sherd is from the shoulder and rim of a bowl, and as described in all previous editions, the writing begins on the convex side and continues on the concave. I note that the five lines of the concave side are virtually centred, leaving extensive margins above and below, in contrast to the convex side, where the text begins at the very top and fills nearly the entire surface down to the bottom. An alternate ordering of the text is worth considering, however, in which the concave side text is in fact to be read first. This order is suggested by the fact that the text on the concave side consists of a request in connected Greek prose (that the female target be made so dissatisfied with her husband that she leaves home), and the text on the convex side begins with 26½ lines of vowels and other un-syntactical magic logoi before proceeding to a related request in connected Greek (that the target be inflamed with erotic passion, surely for the user, until she leaves home). That is, a request is followed by logoi and then recapitulated with a different modus operandi.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Finally I present a new reading based on inspection of the original. I can also confirm the absence of any lectional signs.

> 35 ἀσίτῳ ed. pr. → ἀ̣ησσίτῳ (l. ἀησσήτῳ). The exact division of the traces among the first three letters of the proposed reading is somewhat uncertain. There is plainly too much space to the left at the beginning of this line for the reading of ed. pr., which would place only a single letter before the sigma. The scribe consistently begins each line at the far left edge, and indeed here the ink continues all the way to the left. The vowel interchange is widely paralleled (Gignac 1976–1981, 1:235–239); the new epithet is unparalleled in the Pap. Graec.Mag. and Suppl.Mag. corpora, but then so is ἄσιτος, and Eitrem in the commentary to his P.Oslo edition acknowledges the lack of evidence anywhere else for the seemingly required sense "causing ἀσιτία" (now see further Adrados 1991, s.v.). It seems better to understand all three privative compounds in this portion of the text (33–36) in a neutral or passive rather than causative sense, referring to the infliction of a sickness (νόσος) that is ἀκατάπαυστος ("incessant"), ἀήσσητος ("insuperable"), and ἀσύνετος ("incomprehensible", i.e. to the victim). For the application of ἀήσσητος to νόσος cf. Gr. Naz. Ep. 142.1 ἀλλ' ἡ νόσος ἀήττητος; Jo. Mal. Chron. 10.12 τὴν ἀήττητόν μου νόσον.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Notes

1. Eitrem (1925). Hereafter: P.Oslo I.
2. P.Oslo I, [p. 3]. Eitrem's successful funding applications to the University [of Oslo] Jubilee Fund of 1911 (Universitetets Jubileumsfond av 1911) are documented in the protocol of the Jubilee Fund (Riksarkivet, Universitetet i Oslo, Kollegiet, Ffd Universitetets jubileumsfond av 1911, Forhandlingsprotokoll, 1913–1933, meeting 3 November 1917, p. 50, no. 10, and meeting 9 November 1918, p. 60, no. 11) and by two letters of notification, dated November 1917 and 18 November 1918, respectively. The first letter is in the Riksarkivet (Riksarkivet, Universitetet i Oslo, Kollegiet, Ffd Universitetets jubileumsfond av 1911, Kopibok 1913–1954, p. 203), while the other is in the archive of the Papyrus Collection of the University of Oslo Library. These grant him 2400 Norwegian kroner, payable in two instalments, "for the purchase of Greek papyrus documents during a possible trip to Egypt". Eitrem's application to the Nansen Fund was submitted 17 January 1921 and was entered in the journal (Riksarkivet, Pa 683, Nansenfondet, C-Journaler 1897–1924, journal no. 1255) with the following note: "He applies to cover expenses incurred in connection with the purchase of papyri in Egypt. Earlier he received 1500 Norwegian kroner as an advance. It appears from the paperwork submitted that his expenses amount to 2300 kroner". The total amount at Eitrem's disposal was thus 4700 Norwegian kroner (approximately $700; cf. n. 6 below). The University's Jubilee Fund of 1911 was initiated by a subscription that brought in 700,000 Norwegian kroner. Its aim is to support the work of the University in areas other than those that are covered by state funding. The Fridtjof Nansen Fund for the Promotion of Science (Fridtjof Nansens fond til videnskabens fremme) was started, also by subscription, in 1897 (in the aftermath of Nansen's Fram expedition) in close collaboration with the Norwegian Academy of Science and Letters. Its aim is to promote research through grants and prizes for research excellence.
3. P.Oslo I, p. 31.
4. Yet even the Norwegian text has not been reprinted frequently; the excerpts quoted by Haaland (1986, 142; 2011, 137) are recent instances.
5. Might this restaurant have been in the "very fair hotel, the Grand Hotel Karoun (kept by a Greek, but distinctly better than most of its kind), in Medina" [the capital of the Fayum]? The description is that of Francis (1912, 157); note also Baedeker (1914, 191), where the "landlord" is identified as Athanase Tasco. B.P. Grenfell (on whom see further below) had recommended that his American visitor E.J. Goodspeed lunch at the "Hotel Karoon" some two decades earlier (letter dated 5 December 1899, E.J. Goodspeed papers, box 4, folder 9, Special Collections Research Center, University of Chicago Library).
6. The Egyptian pound had an average exchange rate of $3.758 in 1920 and $3.948 in 1921; see U.S. Department of Commerce (1926, 642). For the Norwegian krone, these values were $.1653 and $.1491, respectively (U.S. Department of Commerce 1926, 696).

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

7. Venizelos: considered by many to be the father of the Greek nation; recently prime minister, he had fallen from power in the November 1920 elections. See further Kitromilides (2006). Oseberg ship: a signal find from the Viking age (constructed ca. 820, it was employed for two female burials in 834). It had been excavated in 1904. The results of the excavation have been published in Brøgger, Falck, and Shetelig (1917–1928) (for the datings given above, see Bonde (1997)). For the fourth century date, "say in the first half of that century", that Eitrem assigned to the "black book", see P.Oslo I, p. 31.
8. Cf. U.K. Board of Trade (1921), which notes (at p. 696):

> If ever the overworked word "phenomenal" were legitimately employed it would be in dealing with the events in Egypt of 1920–21. There has been in the economic history of this ancient country, so far as we know it, nothing to compare with the fluctuations in the staple industry of cotton production and the embarrassments which these fluctuations have caused.

9. Kristiania: Oslo's name before it was changed in 1925.
10. See n. 5 above.
11. See Pedley (2012, 254–257) (255 cited).
12. Kelsey had introduced himself to Askren, among whose patients were farmers who had handled the Hamuli Coptic manuscripts acquired by J.P. Morgan, on board the liner S. S. Canopic during a transatlantic voyage in 1915. The two men, eventually close friends, came to an arrangement before they disembarked. Askren describes it to Kelsey as follows:

> In view of your interest in the discovery of manuscripts in this region [the Fayum] I will make inquiry from time to time of the Fellahin [sic] who come to me as patients and if I can get track of any manuscripts now in hiding or hereafter discovered I will try to get possession of them, and hold them till I can send you an account of them with photographs or one or more sample pages and this I will do with the understanding that if you desire the manuscripts you will come or send for them within a reasonable period, making a price which shall bear a fair relation to the price which I shall have to pay the Fellahin [sic]. (Typed letter dated 11 February 1915 and bearing the heading "Steamship 'CANOPIC'", box 82, folder 2, Kelsey Museum of Archaeology [hereafter KMA] Papers, Francis Willey Kelsey [hereafter FWK] subgroup, Bentley Historical Library [hereafter BHL], University of Michigan [hereafter UM]).

For the agreement from Kelsey's perspective, cf. Pedley (2012, 236).

13. Longyear: a devotee of Christian Science (she would eventually establish a museum dedicated to the religion and its foundress Mary Baker Eddy) and an exponent of British Israelism (she sent Kelsey a copy of the Watchman of Israel, a periodical of the movement, to which she had contributed an article). She was the wife of mining and timber magnate John Munro Longyear. Cf. Longyear Museum (2014).
14. For Nahman, see Bierbrier (2012, 397). Kelsey had become acquainted with him through his work on behalf of the industrialist and collector Charles Lang Freer;

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

cf. Pedley (2012, 235–236). A study of Nahman's career as a dealer of papyri is currently in preparation by Hickey.

15. Letter (annotated "file copy"), 5 July 1920, box 21, folder 11, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM.
16. For Grenfell, see Lehnus (2007, esp. 115–120).
17. See British Library, Add MS 59511, f. 95 (Idris Bell Papers).
18. Cf. Pintaudi (2012, 253–254): "I leave Marseilles for Alexandria on the 'Assaye', an ambulance transport, on Jan. 14, and shall spend a couple of months at Helouan (c/o Miss James, Carton House) working at Oxyrhynchus papyri in the Museum". Note also Grenfell's letter to Henry Guppy (John Rylands Library), 24 February 1920:

    > I reached Egypt a month ago, and have been very long working at the Museum. I have also now started the dealers … thoroughly. There are a good many papyri around, owing to accumulations during the war, but prices of antiquities are high like those of everything else in this country, and papyri in particular by all accounts have gone up in value considerably since I was here 12 years ago. (We thank Roberta Mazza for sharing her transcription of this document.)

19. The identity of the dealer is revealed in Kelsey's detailed diary, 6 March 1920, box 4, FWK Papers, BHL, UM. The English pound had an average exchange rate of $3.664 in 1920 and $3.849 in 1921 (see U.S. Department of Commerce 1926, 735), slightly lower than the Egyptian pound (which was essentially fixed at £1.026 during the period in question; cf. Bresciani-Turroni (1934, 374–376)).
20. British Library, Add MS 59511, ff. 95–96.
21. British Library, Add MS 59511, f. 96. Grenfell would seem to be confused about ʿAlī al-ʿArabī, who was not the lead dealer in the main Hamuli purchase (1911); see Depuydt (1993, 1:lvii–lxi), and note also Askren's letter cited above (n. 12), in which ʿAlī plays a secondary rôle to Nahman. Morgan did purchase 12 Hamuli leaves from ʿAlī through the Copticist Henri Hyvernat in February 1912 (Depuydt 1993, 1:lxix–lxxii).
22. Cf. Pedley (2012, 270).
23. Kelsey diary (n. 19), 17 February.
24. Kelsey diary (n. 19), 18 February.
25. In 1918, the ancient historian William Linn Westermann, then at Wisconsin, and Kelsey had exchanged letters concerning the acquisition of papyri for Westermann's institution. On the day after Kelsey and Grenfell made their first (joint) visit to Nahman's, Kelsey wrote a letter to Westermann that began, "I was yesterday pleasantly reminded of you and our correspondence in regard to papyri. Mr. Grenfell and myself had an appointment with the leading collector here, and were surprised at what we found". Before the end of March, Westermann would be sending money to Kelsey. (See box 35, folder 9, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM, for all of this correspondence and related documentation.) Grenfell bought on behalf of both the British Museum and the Rylands Library.
26. British Library, Add MS 59511, f. 113.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

27. Letter to Mary Beecher Longyear, 5 July 1920, box 21, folder 7, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM.
28. Grenfell and Kelsey's collaboration is discussed thoroughly in the introduction to Hickey's forthcoming volume of London papyri, which presents editions of texts that came to the British Museum in 1920 through Grenfell.
29. Box 15, folder 3, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM, contains documents concerning the Fayum (and other) acquisitions. A "Memorandum of papyri purchased by Prof F. W. Kelsey and B.P.G.", written in Grenfell's hand, indicates that L.E. 151 was the actual sum spent in the Fayum. The eighty-pound lot, described as "mostly well preserved", was acquired from Andrea Girgis on 26 February. In Grenfell's tally of papyri Girgis' material is lumped together with a six-pound lot from Ayyub ("well preserved"); altogether the two lots had 54 pieces, of which 43 were distributed to Kelsey. Kelsey's diary (n. 19), 27 February, records the dealer as Andrious Girgis and the number of "specimens" as "about 80". Grenfell does not distinguish between English and Egyptian pounds, presumably because their values were fixed at almost 1:1 (see n. 19 above).
30. The tens and units digits of the amount spent by Grenfell are corrected (the tens from "5"; the units digit may have originally been "2"). Grenfell apparently wrote a comma before adding the closing parenthesis, which is followed by two short marks – one horizontal at the base of the line, the other beneath it, and vertical – of an indeterminate nature.
31. The dealer's name was Σωτήρης; presumably this was his first name, not a deformation of his surname. In a letter to W.W. Bishop (University Librarian), 1 June 1921, box 1, folder 8, KMA Papers, Campbell Bonner subgroup, BHL, UM, Kelsey reports that he himself had offered L.E. 60 in the wake of the inspection.
32. British Library, Add MS 59511, f. 108. Hickey thanks Nick Gonis for discussing this letter with him and sharing his transcription and Cillian O'Hogan for sending a colour image of the document.
33. Kelsey, letter to W.W. Bishop (cited in n. 31). Girgis' papyri (n. 29) had also been left with Askren for inspection (Kelsey diary [n. 19], 27 February).
34. Kelsey's diary (n. 19) indicates that 27 February was "wholly devoted to the examination and purchase of papyri" and that they "finished work with papyri" on the 28th (see entry for 29 February).
35. For Bonner, whose interests included ancient magic, see, e.g., Nock (1955).
36. Box 83, folder 1, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM.
37. In this regard, Kelsey's arrangement with Charles Freer to publish Freer's manuscripts in the Humanistic Series is paradigmatic. Kelsey would in fact approach the executors of the Freer estate per litteras proposing "purchase of Gnostic scroll in Fayoum, for which 300 £.E. is asked" (diary [n. 19], 27 March 1920; we thank Michael Zellmann-Rohrer for bringing this entry to our attention).
38. For Russel, cf. "John R. Russel Dies: A Leader in Detroit Industrial and Financial Circles," New York Times, 3 April 1932.
39. Letter (from Rome) dated 5 July 1920, box 21, folder 7, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM. Kelsey was so forward that he included a contract ("[i]n view of the fact that, quite frankly, you will probably want them").

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

40. In his 1921 letter to Bishop (n. 31), Kelsey reports that "the banker believed that ~~un~~ltimately he would get £ 225".
41. Letter from Paris ("here in Paris"), dated 12 June 1920, same folder as item in preceding note. The date must be erroneous because Kelsey did not reach Paris until 8 July (so his diary [n. 19]); moreover, the content of this letter suggests that it postdates the one sent on 5 July. In this regard, note Kelsey's diary for 12 July, which mentions a letter dictated for "Mrs. J. M. Longyear, about Gnostic roll in Fayoum & Greek-Coptic parchment offered by [the Copticist Henri] Hyvernat". The dictation could have led to an error in the month. The other purchase proposed to Longyear in the "12 June" letter was "a bilingual fragment in Greek and Coptic" that otherwise will go to the library of Mr. Pierpoint [sic] Morgan in New York". This may have been part of P.MorganLib. 263.
42. Same folder as preceding item.
43. Letter from Kelsey to Askren, 6 August 1920: "I make haste to acknowledge receipt of your ~~w~~very welcome letter of July 20" (box 82, folder 4, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM).
44. Letter dated 20 July, same folder as preceding note. Askren's mention of "the troubles" is no doubt a reference to the Egyptian revolt of 1919; cf. Goldberg (1992, esp. 272) and Schulze (1991, esp. 188–197).
45. Same item as that in n. 43. "Exchange": See the discussion in Tsiang (1959).
46. The reading "Doteris" is uncertain. The first letter of the name is not an exact match for any other capital in the sample of Askren's handwriting that we have examined. "D" seems the closest fit, but if it is correct, it appears to have been overwritten. "S" seems impossible.
47. Letter dated 1 November, same folder as n. 43. Kelsey's letter to Bishop (n. 31) seems contradictory: "Dr. Askren was watching the case, in order to offer one hundred pounds for me at the ~~ph~~sychological moment". Note also Kelsey's 5 February 1921 letter to Askren, quoted in the main text below.
48. Nahman had furnished most of the newly acquired Michigan papyri, including an astrological treatise (inv. 1) and substantial remains of a roll with Iliad Σ (inv. 2).
49. Item in same folder as that in n. 43.
50. The quoted words are from the letter to Westermann (cf. n. 25), 8 December 1920 (box 35, folder 9, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM). We have not been able to locate an original copy of the letter to Hunt (for whom see the article cited in n. 16). This was sent 10 December 1920 and is preserved through a typewritten transcript in box 81, folder 1, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup.
51. "Your offer": Presumably Askren means the L.E. 150 mentioned in his 1 November letter, not the offer of L.E. 50–60 that was made in the spring. Cf. also n. 47.
52. Item in same folder as that in n. 43.
53. Askren does, however, note an increase in crimes like "burglaries and highway robberies".
54. "L.E." has been squeezed in between "for" and "190".
55. Item in same folder as that in n. 43.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

56. In brief, Askren's avocation ("archaeology" in a loose sense) came to eclipse his vocation (medicine), a transformation that simply would have not been possible absent Kelsey. Kelsey furthermore arranged funding for the education of Askren's sons in America; see Pedley (2012, 305, n. 22, 352, 382).
57. Note also that Kelsey's letter to Bishop (n. 31), reports the sale price as "one hundred and eighty nine pounds".
58. Askren's four-page letter had admittedly addressed other matters, but the roll's prominence for Kelsey is telegraphed by the fact that he broaches it immediately after his "upbeat" greeting.
59. Handwringing about "spoiling the market" is commonplace in the writings of papyrologists of this era. Americans themselves could be considered the problem; Hunt would declare to Bell in May 1930, "The American combination of wealth and ignorance has spoilt the market, and as long as they will go on paying inflated prices the dealers will ask them" (British Library, Add MS 59512, f. 202).
60. Kelsey's query is illuminated by a remark in his letter to Bishop (n. 31): "During the past winter Italy has been full of Danes and Swedes who got rich during the war". Eitrem, however, journeyed to Egypt on more than one occasion: His first visit was in 1910 (when he bought his own small collection of papyri); after 1920 he paid the country a final visit in 1936, again with the mission of purchasing papyri for the University of Oslo Library.
61. Item in same folder as that in n. 43.
62. According to Kelsey's letter of acknowledgement (ref. in n. 63):

> [a] reprint on the Magical Papyrus B. M. CXXI [JEA 11 (1925) 80–83] and the Symbolae Osloenses [presumably vol. 3 of 1925, in which Eitrem himself has an article on lekythoi; G. Rudberg, an edition of an Iliadic fragment from the Oslo collection; and Karl Schmidt, an article with textual remarks on magical papyri] and Varia [a series of articles with this title encompassing Eitrem's textual remarks on and interpretations of Greek and Latin passages].

63. Kelsey's letter: box 83, folder 7, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM. Kelsey logged the letter in his diary (box 4, FWK Papers, BHL, UM): "S. Eitrem, magical papyrus purchased in the Fayoum, with request to send copies [of P.Oslo I] to [the Michigan Copticist William H.] Worrell, Bonner, Askren".
64. See Sanders and Schmidt (1927), Bonner (1934), Boak (1933), and Husselman, Boak, and Edgerton (1944).
65. Letter to Bishop (n. 31).
66. Kelsey states to Bishop (ref. in n. 31), "This is the only firstrate [sic] papyrus that I know of that has recently left Egypt without coming in our direction". Later the Oslo and Michigan collections would twice purchase papyri in partnership: in 1923, as part of a "Papyruskartell" in which they combined funds with the British Museum and Columbia University; and in 1928, when the same institutions, with the addition of Princeton University, again bought papyri. In both cases, the papyri were divided among the participating institutions by Idris Bell of the British Museum, who compiled the relevant inventory lists. Kelsey himself permitted

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Leiv Amundsen to participate in the Michigan excavations at Karanis during the 1927–1928 and 1928–1929 seasons and also entrusted him with the publication of some ostraka in the Michigan collection (see Amundsen 1935).

67. I owe thanks to Federico Aurora for facilitating my access to the collection, to the Department of Classics at the University of Oslo for its warm hospitality, and to Todd Hickey and the Center for the Tebtunis Papyri for supporting my travel to Oslo. Anastasia Maravela kindly checked my proposed readings on the originals before publication; any remaining errors are my own responsibility.
68. For papyrological publications I use the abbreviations recommended in Oates et al. (2015). All references to Pap.Graec.Mag. are to the edition revised by A. Henrichs (1974), unless otherwise noted.
69. The four are included in the Leuven Trismegistos Magic database (<http://www.trismegistos.org/magic/index.php>), under the following numbers (respectively): 64479, 64481, 64592, 63587.
70. On the purchase, with further information on the provenance, see the preceding study by Todd Hickey and Anastasia Maravela.
71. P.Oslo I, p. 31.
72. Pap.Graec.Mag. P XXXVI, with additional corrections by A. Henrichs.
73. Brashear (1995, 3552–3553). See recently Bohak (2008, 202–206), specifically on Jewish influence in the incantation in lines 295–311.
74. On the use of the apostrophe in the papyri in general, which still awaits a thorough study, cf. Fournet (2004) and Gignac (1976–1981, 1:162–165).
75. At c. 21, 38.5, 57.5, 76, 94, 110.5, 129, 146.5, 164.5, 182.5, 200.5, and 218 cm from left edge; the precise location of the rightmost, thirteenth kollesis cannot be precisely determined due to surface damage.
76. Col. i: 17.5 cm; ii: 13–15 cm; iii: 13–17.5 cm; iv: 16–22.5 cm; v: 14.5–19 cm; vi: 13 cm; vii: 12 cm; viii: 10.5–14 cm; ix: 16–19.5 cm; x: 11.5–17 cm; xi: 11–14 cm; xii: 13 cm.
77. On disregard of kollesis joins in the manufactured roll in laying out columns, see Johnson (2004, 50–54); on uniformity of column and intercolumn width, see Johnson (2004, 88). Of the other Pap.Graec.Mag. texts which preserve significant portions of bookrolls: Pap.Graec.Mag. P I has five narrower columns of more regular width (c. 10 cm); Pap.Graec.Mag. P II, four wide columns (three at 30–32 cm, one at 22 cm); the best parallel is Pap.Graec.Mag. P III, 22 columns ranging from 8.5 to 25.5 cm wide; Pap.Graec.Mag. P VII, 32 columns, keeps for the most part to a column width of 12–15 cm, with a few outliers; in Pap.Graec.Mag. P XII (with Daniel 1991), the 13 Greek columns are between 18 and 20 cm except coll. 10 and 13 (16 and 11 cm, respectively).
78. Between coll. i and ii, from the top extending down c. 10 lines; and between coll. iv and v, from line 10 of col. iv to the bottom, curving to follow the protruding text in the lower right corner of col. iv.
79. See below, numbered here 282a. The extensive fading could suggest an erasure or even, as Anastasia Maravela suggests to me, a chance offset from a separate text against which the present roll once rested; the hands are very similar if not identical.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

80. Pap.Graec.Mag. P III and P VII are also opisthographic, but on the verso the text is arranged in columns similarly to the recto (but across the fibres). Pap.Graec.Mag. P XII is a case of re-use, on the back of an earlier demotic text; the verso is arranged in the usual series of narrower columns across the fibres.
81. Between lines 294 and 295; 311 and 312; 320 and 321; 332 and 333; 360 and 361; and after 371.
82. This time the commentary in ed. pr. is minimal; on the genre of text and ritual practice represented here, see Faraone (1999). Examples deployed by women on male targets are distinctly in the minority.
83. The purchase was made through H.I. Bell and the British Museum, for a total of 240 (presumably Egyptian) pounds; see also Eitrem's preface to P.Oslo II. On the partnership with Bell see the discussion of Hickey and Maravela above, n. 66.
84. Pap.Graec.Mag. P XXXIX.
85. Pap.Graec.Mag. P 3; included in De Bruyn and Dijkstra (2011), text no. 18.
86. For an analogous case in a papyrus purchased by the British Museum, see Zellmann-Rohrer (2014).
87. Amundsen (1928), with brief commentary of S. Eitrem added on p. 37.
88. Pap.Graec.Mag. O 2.

References

Adrados, F. R., ed. 1991. Diccionario griego-español 3. Madrid: Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Científicas.

Amundsen, L. 1928. "Magical Text on an Oslo Ostracon." Symbolae Osloenses 7: 36–37.

Amundsen, L. 1935. Greek Ostraca in the University of Michigan Collection, Part I: Texts, University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 34. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.

Baedeker, K., ed. 1914. Egypt and the Sûdân: Handbook for Travellers. 7th ed. Leipzig: Baedeker.

Bierbrier, M. L., ed. 2012. Who Was Who in Egyptology. 4th ed. London: Egypt Exploration Society.

Bingen, J. 1980. "Notes d'épigraphie grecque." Chronique d'Égypte 55: 314–319.

Boak, A. E. R., ed. 1933. Papyri from Tebtunis, Part I. University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 28. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.

Bohak, G. 2008. Ancient Jewish Magic: A History. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Bonde, N. 1997. "Dendrochronological Dating of the Viking Age Ship Burials at Oseberg, Gokstad and Tune, Norway." In Archaeological Sciences 1995, edited by A. Sinclair, E. Slater, and J. Gowlett, 195–200. Oxford: Oxbow Books.

Bonner, C. A. 1934. A Papyrus Codex of the Shepherd of Hermas, University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 22. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.

Bowman, A. K., R. A. Coles, N. Gonis, D. Obbink, and P. J. Parsons, eds. 2007. Oxyrhynchus: A City and its Texts. London: Egypt Exploration Society.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Brashear, W. M. 1995. "The Greek Magical Papyri: An Introduction and Survey; Annotated Bibliography (1928–1994)." In Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt: Geschichte und Kultur Roms im Spiegel der neueren Forschung 2.18.5, edited by H. Temporini, 3380–3730. Berlin: W. de Gruyter.

Bresciani-Turroni, C. 1934. "Egypt's Balance of Trade." Journal of Political Economy 42: 371–384.

Brøgger, A. W., H. Falck, and H. Shetelig, eds. 1917–1928. Osebergfundet, Vols. 1–3 and 5. Oslo: Universitetet Oldsaksamling.

Daniel, R. W. 1977. "Some ΦΥΛΑΚΤΗΡΙΑ." Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 25: 145–154.

Daniel, R. W. 1991. Two Greek Magical Papyri in the National Museum of Antiquities in Leiden. Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag.

De Bruyn, T. S., and J. H. F. Dijkstra. 2011. "Greek Amulets and Formularies from Egypt Containing Christian Elements: A Checklist of Papyri, Parchments, Ostraka, and Tablets." Bulletin of the American Society of Papyrologists 48: 163–216.

Delattre, D., ed. 2007. Philodème de Gadara: Sur la musique, livre IV. Paris: Belles lettres.

Depuydt, L. 1993. Catalogue of Coptic Manuscripts in the Pierpont Morgan Library. 2 vols. Leuven: Peeters.

Eitrem, S. 1925. Papyri Osloenses, Fascicle 1, Magical Papyri. Oslo: Jacob Dybwad.

Faraone, C. A. 1999. Ancient Greek Love Magic. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

Fournet, J.-L. 2004. "L'influence des usages littéraires sur l'écriture des documents: Perspectives." In Proceedings of the 20th International Congress of Papyrologists, Copenhagen 23–29 August 1992, edited by A. Bülow-Jacobsen, 418–422. Copenhagen: Museum Tusculanum Press.

Francis, R. 1912. Egyptian Aesthetics. Chicago: Open Court.

Gignac, F. T. 1976–1981. A Grammar of the Greek Papyri of the Roman and Byzantine Periods. 2 vols. Milan: Istituto editoriale Cisalpino – La Goliardica.

Goldberg, E. 1992. "Peasants in Revolt – Egypt 1919." International Journal of Middle East Studies 24: 261–280.

Haaland, G. 1986. "Papyrussamlingen." In Universitetsbiblioteket i ord og bilder, edited by B. Norlin and B. Rugaas, 138–143. Oslo: Universitetsforlaget.

Haaland, G. 2011. "Papyrussamlingen." In Kunnskap – samlinger – mennesker: Universitetsbiblioteket og forskningen gjennom 200 år, edited by S. Brandsæter and S. Engelstad, 135–141. Oslo: Universitetsbiblioteket i Oslo.

Hansen, D. U., ed. 1998. Das attizistische Lexikon des Moeris, Sammlung griechischer und lateinischer Grammatiker 9. Berlin: W. de Gruyter.

Husselman, E. M., A. E. R. Boak, and W. F. Edgerton, eds. 1944. Papyri from Tebtunis, Part II, University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 29. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.

Johnson, W. A. 2004. Bookrolls and Scribes in Oxyrhynchus. Toronto, ON: University of Toronto Press.

Kitromilides, P. M., ed. 2006. Eleftherios Venizelos: The Trials of Statesmanship. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Lefebvre, G. 1907. Recueil des inscriptions grecques-chrétiennes d'Égypte. Cairo: Institut français d'archéologie orientale.
Lehnus, L. 2007. "Bernard Pyne Grenfell e Arthur Surridge Hunt." In Hermae: Scholars and Scholarship in Papyrology, edited by M. Capasso, Vol. 1, 115–141. Pisa: Giardini.
Longyear Museum. 2014. "Mrs. Mary Beecher Longyear (1851–1931)." Accessed October 1, 2015. https://www.longyear.org/exhibits-archives-media/historic-articles/early-workers/mary-beecher-longyear.
Nock, A. D. 1955. "Necrology: Campbell Bonner." American Journal of Archaeology 59: 179.
Oates, J. F., W. H. Willis, J. D. Sosin, R. Ast, R. S. Bagnall, J. M. S. Cowey, M. Depauw, A. Delattre, R. Maxwell, and P. Heilporn. 2015. Checklist of Editions of Greek, Latin, Demotic, and Coptic Papyri, Ostraca, and Tablets. Accessed October 7, 2015. http://papyri.info/docs/checklist.
Pedley, J. G. 2012. The Life and Work of Francis Willey Kelsey: Archaeology, Antiquity, and the Arts. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.
Petrie, W. M. F., A. H. Gardiner, H. Petrie, and M. A. Murray. 1925. Tombs of the Courtiers and Oxyrhynkhos. London: British School of Archaeology in Egypt.
Pintaudi, R. 2012. "Grenfell-Hunt e la papirologia in Italia." Quaderni di storia 75: 205–298.
Sanders, H. A., and C. Schmidt, eds. 1927. The Minor Prophets in the Freer Collection and the Berlin Fragment of Genesis, University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 21. New York: Macmillan.
Schulze, R. C. 1991. "Colonization and Resistance: The Egyptian Peasant Rebellion in 1919." In Peasants and Politics in the Modern Middle East, edited by F. Karzemi and J. Waterbury, 171–202. Miami: Florida International University Press.
Tsiang, S. C. 1959. "Fluctuating Exchange Rates in Countries with Relatively Stable Economies: Some European Experiences After World War I." Staff Papers (International Monetary Fund) 7: 250–256.
U.K. Board of Trade. 1921. "Egypt: Effects of the Cotton Crisis." Board of Trade Journal and Commercial Gazette 106: 696–698.
U.S. Department of Commerce. 1926. Commerce Yearbook 1925. Washington, DC: Government Printing Office.
Wortmann, D. 1968. "Neue magische Texte." Bonner Jahrbücher des Rheinischen Landesmuseums in Bonn und des Vereins von Altertumsfreunden im Rheinlands 168: 56–110.
Zellmann-Rohrer, M. 2014. "Patched and Peeled in London: A Memorandum for a Trip to Constantinople." Archiv für Papyrusforschung und verwandte Gebiete 60: 217–222.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Routledge
Taylor & Francis Group

Symbolae Osloenses
Norwegian Journal of Greek and Latin Studies

ISSN: 0039-7679 (Print) 1502-7805 (Online) Journal homepage: http://www.tandfonline.com/loi/sosl20

Historical and Textual Notes on Magical Texts in the Papyrus Collection of the University of Oslo Library

Todd Hickey, Anastasia Maravela & Michael Zellmann-Rohrer

To cite this article: Todd Hickey, Anastasia Maravela & Michael Zellmann-Rohrer (2015) Historical and Textual Notes on Magical Texts in the Papyrus Collection of the University of Oslo Library, Symbolae Osloenses, 89:1, 156-182

To link to this article: http://dx.doi.org/10.1080/00397679.2015.1111576

Published online: 12 Jan 2016.

Submit your article to this journal

View related articles

View Crossmark data

Full Terms & Conditions of access and use can be found at http://www.tandfonline.com/action/journalInformation?journalCode=sosl20

Download by: [University of Oslo] Date: 12 January 2016, At: 09:20

Symbolae Osloenses, 2016
Vol. 89, No. 1, 156–182, http://dx.doi.org/10.1080/00397679.2015.1111576

Historical and Textual Notes on Magical Texts in the Papyrus Collection of the University of Oslo Library[†]

Todd Hickey[1], Anastasia Maravela[2] and Michael Zellmann-Rohrer[1]
[1]The Center for Tebtunis Papyri, University of California, Berkeley, usa;
[2]Department of Philosophy, Classics, History of art and Ideas, University of Oslo, Norway

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

This article, which concerns the history and texts of some of the magical papyri in the collection of the University of Oslo Library, has two parts. The first part (Hickey and Maravela) sheds light on the acquisition of the celebrated Oslo magical roll, P.Oslo I 1, by drawing on Samson Eitrem's account of the purchase in the Norwegian daily Aftenposten and the correspondence of Francis W. Kelsey, who had sought to buy the papyrus for the University of Michigan. The second part (Zellmann-Rohrer) offers critical remarks on the formats and texts of the magical papyri P.Oslo I 1, 4–5 and II 15.

Keywords: magical papyri; papyrus collection of the University of Oslo Library; Samson Eitrem; Francis W. Kelsey

Part I: the acquisition of P.Oslo 1

P.Oslo 1, the magnificent magical formulary that is the "crown jewel" of the papyrus collection of the University of Oslo Library, was purchased by Samson Eitrem late in 1920. In the preface to his editio princeps of 1925,[1] Eitrem reveals almost nothing regarding the provenance of the roll, noting only that it was part of "a set of papyri acquired by myself during a visit to Egypt four years ago" using monies from the University's [†]Part I has been authored jointly by Todd Hickey and Anastasia Maravela. Part II has been authored by Michael Zellmann-Rohrer. The article stems from collaborative research that occurred in the context of a 2013 seed grant from the Peder Sather Center for Advanced Study at the University of California, Berkeley. We remain grateful to the Center for its support of our work.

© 2016 Symbolae Osloenses

Jubilee Fund and the Nansen Fund.[2] In the commentary to the formulary itself, however, he elaborates a bit: The roll was purchased in the Fayum and "was said to have come originally from Batn-Harît" [the ancient Theadelphia].[3]

Eitrem's reserve in his scholarly publication stands in contrast to the account of the acquisition that he had presented to the Norwegian public in the leading daily Aftenposten. His vivid narrative, the relevant excerpt of which we translate in full ("warts and all") because its language of publication has hindered its accessibility,[4] occupied a prominent position in the edition of 16 April 1921, appearing on the first two pages:

> An ancient Greek black book on papyrus in the University Library
>
> It was in the month of December [1920] that the undersigned [i.e., Eitrem] acquired in Egypt a very interesting manuscript that sheds new light on ancient magic. The scene is in Fayoum [Eitrem's spelling], Egypt. We had spent the day going around to all those who during the long years of the war had amassed Greek papyri, now sought by everyone, and who had not yet sold them to Europeans. My Arab guide had postponed the best for the end, he reassured me. "I hear that a Greek has a two-meter-long papyrus." As expected, we found the owner in the only decent restaurant of the place.[5] Together with a friend of his, we four wandered up to his flat. A small box with nice things was produced on the table and went immediately for 5 Egyptian pounds.[6] There follows a cup of tea, liqueur and sweets, as the custom is. The owner then goes out and, to my great surprise, returns with a plank that he lays on his living room table. Without a word – yet he is a Greek – he places an old papyrus roll at the end of the plank and rolls it out with great ceremony on the plank to a length of two and a half meters. He then devotes himself to studying in my face the impression that this new text made. I went from studying a photo of Venizelos hanging on the wall to being confronted with a Greek "black book" five hundred years older than the Oseberg ship.[7] I had to compose myself. I got permission to copy part of the text so that I could research the content of the papyrus later in the libraries in Cairo. "The friend" interrupted this, apparently afraid lest the value of the papyrus should diminish if I published any of it before it was sold. I offered 100 Egyptian pounds, but the owner wanted to have 200 pounds, and I returned to Cairo very disappointed with the outcome. But my Arab guide found a way out of the impasse. He traveled back to Fayoum, sat again in the aforementioned restaurant, and the papyrus owners flocked around him like flies on a > sugar cube. And Egyptian flies are something apart. They knew that he represented "the European." That same evening the guide sent a telegram that he had got hold of the magical papyrus for 165 Egyptian pounds. The owner had been in dire straits as a result of speculation in cotton.[8] So the papyrus was secured for the University Library in Kristiania.[9] Next evening I sat in a hotel room in Fayoum,[10] examined for the last time the authenticity of the manuscript in the light of two candles, and paid the sum.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Though Eitrem ended up with the formulary, he was not the first westerner to whom it had been offered. In the autumn of 1919, Francis W. Kelsey, Professor of Latin at the University of Michigan, had set out on what came to be known as the "First Expedition", the goals of which included "the acquisition of ancient artifacts and manuscripts, more especially papyri, for research and teaching".[11] He arrived in Cairo, via rail from Jerusalem, late on 6 February 1920, but had already laid the groundwork for a successful foray into the market through his friend David Askren, a missionary doctor in the Fayum.[12] Kelsey later described the commercial landscape in a letter to his benefactress Mary Beecher Longyear[13]:

> Some months before I came to Cairo, a friend in Egypt [Askren] wrote to the dealers asking them to save all manuscripts and ~~P~~papyri until I should come. This request was particularly made of Maurice Nahman, whom you probably know as cashier of the Crédit Foncier Egytien [sic] and the most enterprising dealer in antiquities among them all, and he did as requested, though a wealthy Greek of A~~m~~lexandria was trying to negotiate for the purchase of his ~~P~~papyri as a gift to the University of Athens.[14]

> I was amazed to find that Nahman had one of the most important collections of papyri ever made. There were no scholars in quest of papyri in Egypt after 1913; and meanwhile the destruction of the mounds [at ancient sites to obtain organic material for fertilizer] has almost completely eliminated the principal source from which papyri come, and has brought to light a great number of papyri, among which are some of much importance.[15]

Kelsey's connections to men like Askren and Nahman and the financial backing (though not without limit) that he received from philanthropists like Longyear – to say nothing of his own unflagging energy and enthusiasm – put him in a rather favourable position. What he lacked was technical papyrological "know how", but in the event this was furnished in spades by one of the field's founders, Bernard P. Grenfell, who fortuitously was present in Egypt for the first time since his nervous breakdown in 1907.[16]

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Grenfell had reached Cairo on 20 January.[17] Based in the southern suburb of Helwan, he was occupied at the Egyptian Museum revising transcriptions of Byzantine texts for what would become the 16th volume of the Oxyrhynchus Papyri. But he was also shopping for papyri, albeit with mixed results.[18] On 6 February, he wrote to Idris Bell at the British Museum:

> I have now seen probably all the Cairo dealers who have any papyri. Off one man [Ismail Abdallah] I have bought ^(for nearly £60)^ about 20 papyri,[19] none of any great length, chiefly from Oxyrhynchus: there is a fragment of the Nicene Creed and a damaged roll of 3rd cent B.C. official accounts concerning land.[20]

But the largest group of papyri was in Giza, in the hands of the dealer Ali, "now very old and more unreasonable than ever, since his big deal with Pierpont Morgan over the Hamuli Coptic books", and Ali had rebuffed Grenfell's offer of £100 for 30 "respectable" pieces.[21]

With many tasks requiring attention – some directly concerning the aims of the Expedition and some, like his visit to the dentist, not[22] – Kelsey made it to the Egyptian Museum only on 17 February.[23] It was on his return, the following day, that he seems to have first met Grenfell. Kelsey's diary records the encounter matter-of-factly: "I called on Dr. Bernard P. Grenfell, who was working on papyri in a special room, and asked him to go with me to see Nahman's papyri at twelve".[24] Given Kelsey's temperament, it is appealing to construe this as a "cold" call, albeit one delivered with his characteristic aplomb; in any case, Grenfell accepted the invitation. Thus began an extraordinary and fruitful partnership that in the space of a mere few weeks would establish the papyrus collections at the Universities of Michigan and Wisconsin and add substantial and important manuscripts to the papyrological holdings of the British Museum and the John Rylands Library.[25] On 15 March, Grenfell would declare to Bell, "The American and I are practically making a clean sweep of the Greek papyri on the market".[26] Concerning just the material that would end up in Ann Arbor, Kelsey would write, "Dr. Grenfell says that such a collection of ancient documents can never again be made ~~from~~ in Egypt".[27]

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

For the present purpose, Grenfell and Kelsey's richly documented acquisitions need not be elaborated.[28] It is sufficient to note that their activities included a visit to the Fayum (25–28 February), during which time they were offered and examined the future P.Oslo 1. Quite remarkably, Kelsey omits any mention of this occurrence in his diary. Since the diary is ample and detailed during this period in its description of each day's events, and because Kelsey's correspondence (see further below) makes it clear that he was present for the viewing, and that the roll left an impression (i.e. was not something that would have slipped his mind), it would seem that his silence is intentional.

The earliest reference to the formulary comes not from Kelsey but from Grenfell, in a letter to Bell dated 1 March:

> On Wednesday ~~I~~ last [25 February] I came down to the Fayum. Prof Kelsey, the American with whom I have gone into temporary partnership, also came down there to stay with an American doctor [Askren] who lives in the Fayum and is interested in anticas. He had collected some papyri for Kelsey but these did not amount to much. We found however a good deal at the dealers, and spent about £150 in b~~y~~uying up practically all the papyri in the Fayum, including £80 for a rather good Oxyrhynchus lot, which contained about 30 complete Roman documents and as many other fairish pieces.[29] ~~So~~ On an average the ^complete^ papyri cost us £1–2 each || Kelsey provided the money (having spent £160 on papyri I am rather short till fresh supplies arrive from England,)[30] and has taken the papyri back to Cairo, but I am going to claim part of them when our division takes place at the end of March. A big roll (a 3rd–4th cent magical papyrus in excellent preservation, 12 columns on recto and a good deal of writing on the verso: divided into sections containing ^gnostic^ invocations of the deity or spells of various kinds) we did not get. I offered £50 but the owner (a Greek called Soteris at Medinet el Fayum) said he had paid £200 for it – which is absurd.[31] If you want to make an offer (£100 or £150 might get it) please let me know at once.[32]

Grenfell and Kelsey were not compelled to seek out Soteris because the dealer had left the roll with Askren for the men to examine.[33] This makes it difficult to pinpoint the date on which the viewing occurred; indeed, it may not have been confined to a single day.[34]

A little more than two weeks after Grenfell's letter, on 16 March, Kelsey, seeking assistance from William W. Bishop, the University of Michigan's librarian, in raising money for purchases of papyri, gave the

"gnostic roll" pride of place in his argument for funding. According to his description, it is "perfectly preserved", and he adds:

> It is just the kind of document that [Campbell] Bonner would delight in;[35] though several similar rolls are known, this does not appear to be a duplicate. The owner says that he paid £200 for it, and he wants £300, though I think he would take a more reasonable price.[36]

Still, Kelsey was less interested in the possession of manuscripts than in the rights of Michigan scholars like Bonner to publish them,[37] and when money was not forthcoming from his Detroit backers, magnates like John R. Russel,[38] he proposed to hand over all of his papyrological acquisitions to Mary Beecher Longyear's Zion Research Foundation at cost, with the stipulation that his colleagues be permitted to edit them.[39] In another communication pertaining to this proposition he added:

> If you are disposed to take for the Zion Research Foundation, [sic] the papyri which were offered to you, you might be pleased to consider the purchase of two additional items, which are probably availabelle, and fall directly within the field of the history of the Church in the ealrlier centuries.
>
> One is a papyrus roll of some 12 pages, admirably preserved, containing Gnostic formulae, and dating in the 4th Century A.D. It is in possession of a Banker [sic] in Fayum, who paid for it 200 Egyptian pounds. I believe that he would sell it for 250 Egyptian pounds, or about 1.000 Dollars [sic].[40] I saw the roll, because the banker sent it over for me to look at; it is very interesting as a bit of evidence. I was staying with a missionary friend [Askren], who is a friend of the Banker [sic]; I lately wriote asking whether the banker would be willing to part with the roll for a reasonable advance upon his purchase money.[41]

Longyear would decline Kelsey's proposal through her secretary on 23 July, leaving him to his own devices as regards the acquisition of the roll.[42] About a fortnight later, he received a letter from Askren (in "Alexandria on summer holiday") that included an update about the formulary:[43]

> Two of the Greeks who were formerly in Fayum have opened a pharmacy down near where I garage my car so I went to them to ask about the owner of the papyri and found he is in Alex so I made an appointment for him to meet me yesterday morning.
>
> I met him and found that he has the roll in Alex with him nbut he says he has not yet showed it to anyone.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

> I made him no offer whatever as I found that he thinks he has a small fortune tied up in it and he does not seem to be able to realize that it has no literary value; in fact candidly he places no credit on Grenfell's valuation.
>
> When I found he ~~w~~was still soaring in the clouds I thought it best not to arouse his cupidity by making him any offer whatever as I feel sure that he will bring it back to ~~F~~Fayum with him and then we ca~~h~~n deal with him more satisfactorily and he will probably be more reasonable.
>
> There is one or two other rolls loose in Fayum I am hoping to get a chance at as soon as the Compensation Board finish their allotments but just at present the rolls are among the articles lost during the troubles, you understand the Greeks well enough to know what I mean.[44]

Kelsey agreed with Askren's plan of attack. "You are quite right about the roll", he replied. "[I]t is best not to seem anxious to get it. In any case, please do not buy it outright, unless I send the money. Exchange is very uncertain at the present time".[45]

The waiting game continued into the autumn. In a letter written at the beginning of November, Askren reported:

> The big roll of Doteris [sic] is still with him and he failed to sell it last summer in Alex. or Cairo.[46]
>
> I am not trying to buy it as I do not believe he will be unable [sic] to sell it but I met him [the] other day at a house where I was called professionally and asked him about it and told him would give him L.E. 150 but he refused it.[47]

Kelsey's acknowledgement, written from London on 13 December, confirms his sustained interest:

> I am writing to the United S~~P~~tates to see if I can secure an appropriation for the Gnostic Roll. I dislike to pay such a high price, and on the other hand, the roll, although not so valuable as the material obtained from Nahman,[48] does represent an important class.[49]

Around this time Kelsey also mentioned the formulary as among "the odds and ends" still in Egypt "which are most important" in communications to William Westermann and A.S. Hunt.[50] The correspondence with Westermann adds the detail that Soteris had acquired the roll from an Arab, whom he had "paid more than he ought to have paid".

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Another report about the formulary was included in a letter sent by Askren on 13 December:

> The large roll is still here and several have priced it to him [Soteris] at prices much less than your offer so I am just letting him stew.[51]
>
> I think however if you are not coming out [to Egypt] and really want the roll that L.E. 200 will buy it later nearer the close of the season.[52]

Askren's closing paragraphs suggest a reason for his optimism regarding the price; these are "very hard times in Egypt", and in particular the "poor price of cotton" has everyone "so depressed … that they cant think of anything else", including political and social unrest of the sort that spring 1919 had witnessed.[53]

Soteris' financial situation, however, seems to have been worse than even Askren had imagined, for sometime around or shortly after the doctor had dispatched his report, Eitrem managed to acquire the roll. Askren relayed the bad news to Kelsey in letter penned on 18 January 1921:

> Now as to the large Gnostic roll.
>
> The Danish professor slipped in one night and bought it for L.E. 190.[54] I was very sorry when I heard of it but I feel sure that it was not worth so much money especially after the valuation Dr. Grenfell placed upon it.
>
> I regret I did not push the sale harder but as I knew you had not arranged the money I felt it was not as important as other documents that the same money would purchase.[55]

The price that Askren reports differs significantly (by L.E. 25) from that presented by Eitrem in his Aftenposten account. Since Askren is clearly trying to save face with his friend (and, increasingly, benefactor) Kelsey,[56] probably more stock should be put in Eitrem's figure, though it is not out of the question that Eitrem wanted to portray himself as getting a better bargain – L.E. 10 perhaps seemed too paltry a discount. Of course all of this assumes that Askren recollected (or was told) the sales price accurately.[57]

Kelsey, in any case, put a positive spin on his reverse. Writing, 5 February, in response to Askren's news – and going so far as to call Askren's letter a "pleasure to have"[58] – he stated:

> The point in regard to the gnostic roll is this: I suppose if it had been held after a time I might have paid about £ 200 for it. At the same time I am glad that the matter was adjusted as it was, because I hope to continue purchasing > manuscripts and papyri and it spoils the market if one pays too much for a single item of this kind. I should gladly have paid £100 last year, but was deterred from closing the matter up for the reason that it really was better to let a thing of this sort go than to put the prices of all such material at so high a figure that one does not feel like purchasing.[59] I should like to know who the Danish Professor was that obtained the roll, if you can find out. I take it that he is an occasional visitor;[60] on the other hand I should like to be in a position to have the first chance of any good material that you or your friends or Nauhman may get on the trakck of.[61]

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

In the event, Kelsey would come to know the identity of the "Danish professor", though whether this was through Askren is unclear. Eitrem himself eventually contacted Kelsey, sending him a copy of P.Oslo I as well as other publications.[62] Kelsey thanked Eitrem for these in a letter dated 27 August 1925, adding:

> I have read with unusual interest the monograph, Fasc. I. The papyrus No. 1 was offered to me in the Fayoum in 1920. The price asked was two hundred pounds, and I refused to pay more than one hundred pounds. Professor Bernard Grenfell and I visited the Fayoum together, and he thought my offer was as high as I ought to go, for the reason that we were both purchasing papyri and if we had paid so high a price at the time it would have raised the offerings of papyri generally to a high figure; for word of such purchases travels rapidly, and often with exageration [sic].
>
> I am exceedingly glad that this papyrus came into your hands, and you have published it more promptly than would have been possible here, where the papyrus containing the Minor Prhophets and the fragments of Hermas and the Archive from Tebtunis must take precedence in publication.[63]

This passes muster for courtesy – one would expect nothing less from Kelsey – but he compresses the narrative of his involvement with the roll (rendering it misleading), and the hint of "sour grapes" is unmistakable. Perhaps understandably: The Minor Prophets codex, the Shepherd of Hermas, and Tebtunis grapheion archive would become major Michigan contributions to scholarship (the last two of them also being key acquisitions for the growing collection in Ann Arbor),[64] but Kelsey himself had admitted that the Oslo formulary was "the finest piece of papyrus writing I ever saw".[65] And it was the one that got away.[66]

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Part II: notes on Oslo magical texts

During a recent visit to the University of Oslo, I had the opportunity to inspect four texts, three papyri and an ostrakon, in the collection of the University Library.[67] Each has previously appeared in the series Papyri Osloenses (P.Oslo) and been reprinted in the corpus Papyri Graecae Magicae (Pap.Graec.Mag.).[68] I offer here the results of my study, which has yielded some new readings and observations on the physical disposition of the papyri; images are available for consultation through the OPES portal (<http://ub-fmserver.uio.no/home.php>). The observations on each text (P.Oslo I 1 = Pap.Graec.Mag. P XXXVI; P.Oslo I 4 = Pap.Graec.Mag. P XXXIX; P.Oslo I 5 = Pap.Graec.Mag. P 3; P.Oslo II 15 = Pap.Graec.Mag. O 2) are presented in separate sections below.[69]

(I)

P.Oslo I 1 (P.Oslo inv. 420), the well-known magical formulary in book-roll format, was purchased by Samson Eitrem and inaugurated the series P.Oslo in 1925.[70] The commentary accompanying Eitrem's editio princeps of the piece, a detailed explication of "these interesting relics of degenerate religions and of the human mind gone astray" and the headpiece of P. Oslo I, is worth quoting in part:

> That fine paper such as we find in our papyrus could be used in such an extravagant and pretentious way sufficiently shows how popular this special form of magic had grown amongst well-to-do people. It certainly throws a sidelight on the interesting chapter of the history of morals in those days.[71]

This interest continues to flourish. Eitrem's edition was reprinted by Karl Preisendanz in the corpus Pap.Graec.Mag.,[72] with substantial improvements to the text combining the contributions of other scholars in the intervening years with his own work. Other emendations, through 1994, are collected by William Brashear along with bibliography on more general discussions.[73] I add a few of my own below. The ed. pr. remains valuable because, besides its detailed commentary, it accounts better for lectional signs (printed in the main text) than the Pap.Graec. Mag. version. But even this account is incomplete: the apostrophe in particular is neglected, its use being signalled only in general terms in the introduction.[74] I note those lectional signs, and scribal corrections, omitted by the ed. pr. along with my new readings.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

But first I wish to turn to the "fine paper", on which the disposition of the writing is remarkable in several respects. The text, in fact a collection of some 19 recipes for magical practices, is written in a single hand on front and back of a premade bookroll, which has survived virtually intact. It begins on the recto, where the first 13 recipes are arranged in 12 columns, each afforded its own column except in col. xi, which contains two recipes separated by a paragraphos (below line 263).

Unusually, the first column is on the protocol (against the fibres), while the rest of the text on the recto is along the fibres. With respect to the 13 kolleseis visible on the recto,[75] the scribe in general sought to bound the columns within the kolleseis; otherwise the width of the columns varies widely.[76] Both circumstances stand in marked contrast to scribal practice observed in literary bookrolls,[77] and mark the Oslo roll as an eccentric product. The kollesis-justification holds good in the first three columns, but the extra width of col. iv, at bottom right, disrupts the pattern. The unusually large space between coll. xi and xii can be accounted for by this same tendency: col. xi goes over the right bounding kollesis slightly, and the scribe elects to start the next column at a new left bounding kollesis. In two cases, the scribe has added vertical lines to separate columns.[78]

Another unusual feature appears on the verso of the roll. There the scribe has added six more recipes. There is a short sequence of text on the protocol, along the fibres: a magical logos in a single line (282) and faint traces of another line of writing just above it, not previously noted.[79] But for the rest of the text on the verso, the scribe has rotated the roll 90° clockwise, and, beginning c. 9.5 cm below the protocol-join, written along the fibres in a single wide column, a method for which I can find no parallels in Greek papyri.[80] The motivation may simply be a preference for writing with the fibres, on aesthetic or practical grounds (i.e. as line-guides). Each of the six recipes is closed by a paragraphos with a left terminus curved into the left margin;[81] there is a plain horizontal line above the first recipe (283).

Here follow my notes on the text, following the line numbers of ed. pr., combining a record of lectional signs and scribal corrections not noted in ed. pr. with suggestions for new readings (marked by →):

Col. i 9 αονκον: ν² overwritten.
Col. ii 44 αγ'γελοι pap.
Col. iii 69 βελ'τιστον pap.
74 πιτ'τακιον pap.
Col. iv 106 γενάμενος: ν corr. from γ.
112 τυγ'χανουσαν pap.
Col. v 138 ἀνάλεσθαι: ι overwritten.
140 ᾧα: α corr. from θ.
146 δαίμονες: ο corr. from ω.
148 τυγ'χανουσαν pap.
152 ϊνα pap.
154 τεταγ'μενους pap.
159 αλλουδανε[..]ρανου. – φυλακτήριον περιπόη ed. pr. (cf. app. cr.) → ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἂν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ φυλακτήριον περιπόη (l. περιποιῴη), "but not even a phylactery from heaven would save [you]". Letters that ed. pr. considered lost are clear even without microscopy. The form ποιῴη is noted as a koine by-form for Attic ποιοίη in the lexicon of Moeris π 74 s.v. (ed. Hansen 1998) and confirmed by Philodemus Περὶ μουσικῆς 4, fr. 152.19 (ed. Delattre 2007). The reason for the omission of οι is unclear, but cf. the note below on θεώσας for θειώσας in line 267, with omission of what probably constitutes the same /i/ phoneme in Greek of this period; the η may represent a correction overwriting an original ι. Pap.Graec.Mag. prints ἀλλ' οὐδὲν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ φυλακτήριον περὶ πᾶν, giving the reading of the papyrus in the first part as αλλουδανεξορανου [sic]. Col. vi 167 ϊναν pap. The horizontal ligature from the σ of the preceding word has a diagonal strike-through, perhaps to mark word-division.
172 κατ'τιηλ pap.
176 αγ'γελοι pap.
177 πραγ'ματος pap.
Col. vii 179 μονοῳθουν ed. pr. → μονοπέουν (l. μονόπουν), "one-footed". The figure that appears at the bottom of this column (vii) has of course more than one foot, but note the shackle-like band between its legs; there are other disparities between the prescribed drawings and those that actually accompany the text, cf. the app. cr. of Pap.Graec.Mag. on this line. The ε is somewhat faded but not intentionally obliterated. The form may represent conflation between πούς and πέδη, "fetter", especially in light of the drawing, but phonological confusion cannot be ruled out, cf. οετος for οὗτος in 247 and Gignac (1976–1981, 1:216) on interchange of ου and ευ.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

182 ϊερακες pap.
182, 183 ϋπο pap.
Col. ix 223 ϋγιαν pap.
Col. x 232 ϋποκιμενα pap.
246 αγ'γελοι pap.

Col. xi 258 {γ}ῥῖψον ed. pr. → [[γ]] ῥῖψον. The γ is cancelled with a diagonal stroke. The scribe's confusion was perhaps occasioned by γρ(άφε) above in 257.

267 I can confirm the reading of ed. pr. καὶ ἅμα θεώσας εἰς τοῖχον καθαρόν. This is a supralinear insertion, to be read between εἰς πιττάκιον καθαρόν and εἰς ἀνατολήν in 268: hence it would have been better to delete line 267 and simply print line 268 as εἰς πιττάκιον καθαρὸν \καὶ ἅμα θεώσας εἰς τοῖχον καθαρὸν/ εἰς ἀνατολήν, "[write it] on a clean sheet, at the same time fumigating it with sulfur against a clean wall, facing east". Pace Preisendanz et al. (see Pap.Graec.Mag. app. cr.), θεωσας is inevitable; ed. pr. leaves it untranslated and unexplained in the commentary. I think that most likely we have a reference to fumigation with sulphur (so l. θειώσας, or simply understand θεώσας as a form of θεόω, an alternate to θειόω, cf. LSJ s.v. θεόω II). For the use of sulphur, cf. the ἀγωγὴ ἔνπυρον ἐπὶ θείου ἀπύρου in 295–311.

Col. xii 276 δημονϊοπληκτους pap.

Verso
282a om. edd. The very faint traces can be tentatively resolved as ιιιια vac. ǫǫǫ, but it may be that they were intentionally washed out or accidentally applied as offsets from another text against which the papyrus once rested.
294 μονου // pap.
318 αρχεφρενεψου // φιριγχ pap. The diagonal punctuation strokes are smaller than they appear elsewhere, but still present.
322, 325 ϊνα pap.
328 ἀπομύσης (l. ἀπομύξεις) ed. pr. → ἀπομούσης (l. ἀπομύξεις). Pap.Graec. Mag. gives the reading of the papyrus as απομǫυης [sic]. On the interchange of υ and ου see Gignac (1976–1981, 1:214–215); according to id. 1:141n3 the interchange of ξ and σ is not paralleled in contemporary papyri.
339 ϊσιδος pap.
340–341 οὕτως ϙᾳ̣ὶ [σὺ καύ]|σης ed. pr. → οὕτως κᾳ̣ύ|σης. The writing in 340 does not seem to continue after what is read here as υ², though there is stripping of the papyrus in the right margin and a form of the compound κατακαίω, as Anastasia Maravela suggests to me, cannot be excluded.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

345 αναγ'κης pap.

349 ϊθιπεσκουθι pap.

354 ϋπαγε pap.

355 εισελθε: ε^2 is blotted, perhaps corr. from θ.

361 μονοημέρος: o^3 corr. from α.

362 ϋποκιμενα pap.

370 καταναγ'κης pap.

(II)

P.Oslo I 4 (P.Oslo inv. 434) is an instance of applied magic, the inscription of text and image on papyrus to create an activated object. It clearly served a ritual to inflict sexual desire (ἔρως) on a male target for the benefit of a female user, specifically to draw him to her (an ἀγωγή).[82] The papyrus is part of a lot of papyri purchased in 1923 in the Fayum region of Egypt (the ancient Arsinoite nome).[83] The editio princeps was again done by Eitrem and reprinted in Pap.Graec.Mag.[84]

Beginning again with the physical disposition of the papyrus, I note that the text on the front is written in brown ink along the fibres, accompanied by a drawing of two figures, one holding a knife and severed head, the other, apparently the Egyptian god Bes, sticking out its tongue, which is coloured red. The back is blank but for exiguous traces probably from a washed-out text. There is a kollesis on the front, c. 1 cm from the right edge. Five vertical lines of cracking in the papyrus suggest the manner in which it was folded up, probably for deposition as part of the ritual: the sheet was folded inwards from both left and right, twice on each side, then once more along the vertical to yield a compact packet.

Next I present new readings and an account of lectional signs omitted by ed. pr.:

18 στυκίων ed. pr. → στυχίων (l. στοιχείων). The letter read as κ in ed. pr. has a prominent leftward bend to its lower leg, which is not consistent with the form of κ anywhere else in the text: the vertical may be slanted to the left, and its top may curl to the left, but not the bottom. Similarly in lines 19–20 (see below).

19 ϊκοσι τεσσερα pap.

19–20 στυκί|ων ed. pr. → στυχί|ων (l. στοιχεί|ων). See line 18 above.

20 ϊνα pap.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

20–21: the reading Τα|επις already attributed to the suggestion of Leiv Amundsen in the ed. pr. (Ṭạepις, only in app. cr.), is secure. Pap.Graec.Mag. prints [Τα]|αῖπις.

(III)

P.Oslo I 5 (P.Oslo inv. 303) is also an example of applied magic, a protective amulet for a house. No information on its provenance is recorded; Eitrem again produced the first edition, which was reprinted in Pap. Graec.Mag.[85]

The text is written against the fibres, and the papyrus is generally well preserved, though close examination reveals an interesting case of modern "repair". A tear runs vertically along the full length, such that the piece was torn in two. It has been mended, surely by a modern dealer, by pasting scraps from another papyrus on the back, which is otherwise blank. Five separate patches appear along the tear, each with traces of ink in an early Byzantine cursive hand. On the most legible can be read]ρυ[. The re-join is fair but not perfect: the right edge is c. 1 mm higher than it should be to align with the left edge, as seen in particular in the second κ in κακοῦ (line 4). Other purchased pieces in the Oslo collection show less successful applications of a similar method: e.g. P.Oslo inv. 1545, catalogued as "literary prose … wrongly glued together by the native papyrus dealer", and inv. 1423, "fragments of a document, wrongly glued together by one of the fellahin or Egyptian dealers".[86]

I next present one new reading and several observations on lectional signs:

2 ϊαω pap.

2 αδωναι: $α^{1}$ overwritten.

6 ὄφεως διά ed. pr. → ὄφεως \κ(αὶ) κυ̣ν̣[ὸς]/ διά. The supralinear addition expands the series of noxious creatures against whose bites the amulet protects into a tricolon: scorpion, snake, and dog.

7 ὐψιστου pap.

7: Daniel (1977, 151–153) reads γ̣α̣ιας μελι ζ̣ ξορο ωρο ααααααα with commentary and reference to the parallel text P.Pal.Rib. inv. 126. The resolution of ξορο ωρο is an improvement, but the ink to the right of the ζ is not a numeral stroke, but rather the descender from the final υ in σκορπίου, as appears also in the υ

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

of κακοῦ in line 4.

8 υἱε pap.

10: the scribe changes styles and adopts a markedly angular and serifed script in the writing of the second α and ω, approximating a type familiar from monumental stone inscriptions. The sixth-century Christian amulet P.Köln inv. 521a (ed. Wortmann 1968, 106) has alphas of a similar lapidary style: there is no photograph in ed. pr., but this feature can be observed on the fine digital image made available online by the Köln Papyrussammlung. On the more general use of such forms outside of stone inscriptions, probably for "monumental effect", see the introduction of P.J. Parsons to P.Oxy. LXVIII 4670, a fourth-century notice which features a similar alpha with broken cross-bar. The omega as it now stands here is distorted by the imperfect rejoining of the two halves of the papyrus; below I present a reconstructed drawing with the necessary shift of the right half c. 1 mm downward, beside a tracing of the intact alpha:

On the script compare the "Memorial of Theodorus" inscription from Petrie's tomb 46 at Oxyrhynchus (Petrie et al. 1925, 12–18; repr. in Bowman et al. 2007, 50–69, with photograph p. 69, fig. 5.13.3); ed. pr. Bingen (1980, 319), dated to the fifth or sixth century AD (SEG XXX 1748).

In this line appear also three crosses in three different styles, which can plausibly be read as a transformation from left to right. First, a simple form of two intersecting lines; second, the same with an expanded upper terminus bulging to the right, reminiscent of the christogram but without the addition of the "chi"; third, the same rounded upper terminus, now centred, with the other three termini expanded into wedges, and a gap left in the middle. The second form recalls the Egyptian ankh, and the third, a blending of the latter with the so-called Latin cross. On the forms in inscriptions from Egypt cf. Lefebvre (1907, xxxiii–xxxiv).

(IV)

P.Oslo II 15 (P.Oslo inv. 570) is an ostrakon, and like P.Oslo I 3 an instance of erotic magic applied by a man upon a married woman. It was purchased from Ali Mahmud in Behnasa (ancient Oxyrhynchus) on 25 April 1928, first edited by L. Amundsen,[87] revised by Eitrem for inclusion in P.Oslo, and reprinted in Pap.Graec.Mag.[88] The ed. pr. of Amundsen remains useful for its description of the physical disposition of the artefact. The sherd is from the shoulder and rim of a bowl, and as described in all previous editions, the writing begins on the convex side and continues on the concave. I note that the five lines of the concave side are virtually centred, leaving extensive margins above and below, in contrast to the convex side, where the text begins at the very top and fills nearly the entire surface down to the bottom. An alternate ordering of the text is worth considering, however, in which the concave side text is in fact to be read first. This order is suggested by the fact that the text on the concave side consists of a request in connected Greek prose (that the female target be made so dissatisfied with her husband that she leaves home), and the text on the convex side begins with 26½ lines of vowels and other un-syntactical magic logoi before proceeding to a related request in connected Greek (that the target be inflamed with erotic passion, surely for the user, until she leaves home). That is, a request is followed by logoi and then recapitulated with a different modus operandi.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Finally I present a new reading based on inspection of the original. I can also confirm the absence of any lectional signs.

> 35 ἀσίτῳ ed. pr. → ἀ̣ησσίτῳ (l. ἀησσήτῳ). The exact division of the traces among the first three letters of the proposed reading is somewhat uncertain. There is plainly too much space to the left at the beginning of this line for the reading of ed. pr., which would place only a single letter before the sigma. The scribe consistently begins each line at the far left edge, and indeed here the ink continues all the way to the left. The vowel interchange is widely paralleled (Gignac 1976–1981, 1:235–239); the new epithet is unparalleled in the Pap. Graec.Mag. and Suppl.Mag. corpora, but then so is ἄσιτος, and Eitrem in the commentary to his P.Oslo edition acknowledges the lack of evidence anywhere else for the seemingly required sense "causing ἀσιτία" (now see further Adrados 1991, s.v.). It seems better to understand all three privative compounds in this portion of the text (33–36) in a neutral or passive rather than causative sense, referring to the infliction of a sickness (νόσος) that is ἀκατάπαυστος ("incessant"), ἀήσσητος ("insuperable"), and ἀσύνετος ("incomprehensible", i.e. to the victim). For the application of ἀήσσητος to νόσος cf. Gr. Naz. Ep. 142.1 ἀλλ' ἡ νόσος ἀήττητος; Jo. Mal. Chron. 10.12 τὴν ἀήττητόν μου νόσον.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Notes

1. Eitrem (1925). Hereafter: P.Oslo I.
2. P.Oslo I, [p. 3]. Eitrem's successful funding applications to the University [of Oslo] Jubilee Fund of 1911 (Universitetets Jubileumsfond av 1911) are documented in the protocol of the Jubilee Fund (Riksarkivet, Universitetet i Oslo, Kollegiet, Ffd Universitetets jubileumsfond av 1911, Forhandlingsprotokoll, 1913–1933, meeting 3 November 1917, p. 50, no. 10, and meeting 9 November 1918, p. 60, no. 11) and by two letters of notification, dated November 1917 and 18 November 1918, respectively. The first letter is in the Riksarkivet (Riksarkivet, Universitetet i Oslo, Kollegiet, Ffd Universitetets jubileumsfond av 1911, Kopibok 1913–1954, p. 203), while the other is in the archive of the Papyrus Collection of the University of Oslo Library. These grant him 2400 Norwegian kroner, payable in two instalments, "for the purchase of Greek papyrus documents during a possible trip to Egypt". Eitrem's application to the Nansen Fund was submitted 17 January 1921 and was entered in the journal (Riksarkivet, Pa 683, Nansenfondet, C-Journaler 1897–1924, journal no. 1255) with the following note: "He applies to cover expenses incurred in connection with the purchase of papyri in Egypt. Earlier he received 1500 Norwegian kroner as an advance. It appears from the paperwork submitted that his expenses amount to 2300 kroner". The total amount at Eitrem's disposal was thus 4700 Norwegian kroner (approximately $700; cf. n. 6 below). The University's Jubilee Fund of 1911 was initiated by a subscription that brought in 700,000 Norwegian kroner. Its aim is to support the work of the University in areas other than those that are covered by state funding. The Fridtjof Nansen Fund for the Promotion of Science (Fridtjof Nansens fond til videnskabens fremme) was started, also by subscription, in 1897 (in the aftermath of Nansen's Fram expedition) in close collaboration with the Norwegian Academy of Science and Letters. Its aim is to promote research through grants and prizes for research excellence.
3. P.Oslo I, p. 31.
4. Yet even the Norwegian text has not been reprinted frequently; the excerpts quoted by Haaland (1986, 142; 2011, 137) are recent instances.
5. Might this restaurant have been in the "very fair hotel, the Grand Hotel Karoun (kept by a Greek, but distinctly better than most of its kind), in Medina" [the capital of the Fayum]? The description is that of Francis (1912, 157); note also Baedeker (1914, 191), where the "landlord" is identified as Athanase Tasco. B.P. Grenfell (on whom see further below) had recommended that his American visitor E.J. Goodspeed lunch at the "Hotel Karoon" some two decades earlier (letter dated 5 December 1899, E.J. Goodspeed papers, box 4, folder 9, Special Collections Research Center, University of Chicago Library).
6. The Egyptian pound had an average exchange rate of $3.758 in 1920 and $3.948 in 1921; see U.S. Department of Commerce (1926, 642). For the Norwegian krone, these values were $.1653 and $.1491, respectively (U.S. Department of Commerce 1926, 696).

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

7. Venizelos: considered by many to be the father of the Greek nation; recently prime minister, he had fallen from power in the November 1920 elections. See further Kitromilides (2006). Oseberg ship: a signal find from the Viking age (constructed ca. 820, it was employed for two female burials in 834). It had been excavated in 1904. The results of the excavation have been published in Brøgger, Falck, and Shetelig (1917–1928) (for the datings given above, see Bonde (1997)). For the fourth century date, "say in the first half of that century", that Eitrem assigned to the "black book", see P.Oslo I, p. 31.
8. Cf. U.K. Board of Trade (1921), which notes (at p. 696):

> If ever the overworked word "phenomenal" were legitimately employed it would be in dealing with the events in Egypt of 1920–21. There has been in the economic history of this ancient country, so far as we know it, nothing to compare with the fluctuations in the staple industry of cotton production and the embarrassments which these fluctuations have caused.

9. Kristiania: Oslo's name before it was changed in 1925.
10. See n. 5 above.
11. See Pedley (2012, 254–257) (255 cited).
12. Kelsey had introduced himself to Askren, among whose patients were farmers who had handled the Hamuli Coptic manuscripts acquired by J.P. Morgan, on board the liner S. S. Canopic during a transatlantic voyage in 1915. The two men, eventually close friends, came to an arrangement before they disembarked. Askren describes it to Kelsey as follows:

> In view of your interest in the discovery of manuscripts in this region [the Fayum] I will make inquiry from time to time of the Fellahin [sic] who come to me as patients and if I can get track of any manuscripts now in hiding or hereafter discovered I will try to get possession of them, and hold them till I can send you an account of them with photographs or one or more sample pages and this I will do with the understanding that if you desire the manuscripts you will come or send for them within a reasonable period, making a price which shall bear a fair relation to the price which I shall have to pay the Fellahin [sic]. (Typed letter dated 11 February 1915 and bearing the heading "Steamship 'CANOPIC'", box 82, folder 2, Kelsey Museum of Archaeology [hereafter KMA] Papers, Francis Willey Kelsey [hereafter FWK] subgroup, Bentley Historical Library [hereafter BHL], University of Michigan [hereafter UM]).

For the agreement from Kelsey's perspective, cf. Pedley (2012, 236).

13. Longyear: a devotee of Christian Science (she would eventually establish a museum dedicated to the religion and its foundress Mary Baker Eddy) and an exponent of British Israelism (she sent Kelsey a copy of the Watchman of Israel, a periodical of the movement, to which she had contributed an article). She was the wife of mining and timber magnate John Munro Longyear. Cf. Longyear Museum (2014).
14. For Nahman, see Bierbrier (2012, 397). Kelsey had become acquainted with him through his work on behalf of the industrialist and collector Charles Lang Freer;

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

cf. Pedley (2012, 235–236). A study of Nahman's career as a dealer of papyri is currently in preparation by Hickey.

15. Letter (annotated "file copy"), 5 July 1920, box 21, folder 11, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM.
16. For Grenfell, see Lehnus (2007, esp. 115–120).
17. See British Library, Add MS 59511, f. 95 (Idris Bell Papers).
18. Cf. Pintaudi (2012, 253–254): "I leave Marseilles for Alexandria on the 'Assaye', an ambulance transport, on Jan. 14, and shall spend a couple of months at Helouan (c/o Miss James, Carton House) working at Oxyrhynchus papyri in the Museum". Note also Grenfell's letter to Henry Guppy (John Rylands Library), 24 February 1920:

    > I reached Egypt a month ago, and have been very long working at the Museum. I have also now started the dealers … thoroughly. There are a good many papyri around, owing to accumulations during the war, but prices of antiquities are high like those of everything else in this country, and papyri in particular by all accounts have gone up in value considerably since I was here 12 years ago. (We thank Roberta Mazza for sharing her transcription of this document.)

19. The identity of the dealer is revealed in Kelsey's detailed diary, 6 March 1920, box 4, FWK Papers, BHL, UM. The English pound had an average exchange rate of $3.664 in 1920 and $3.849 in 1921 (see U.S. Department of Commerce 1926, 735), slightly lower than the Egyptian pound (which was essentially fixed at £1.026 during the period in question; cf. Bresciani-Turroni (1934, 374–376)).
20. British Library, Add MS 59511, ff. 95–96.
21. British Library, Add MS 59511, f. 96. Grenfell would seem to be confused about ʿAlī al-ʿArabī, who was not the lead dealer in the main Hamuli purchase (1911); see Depuydt (1993, 1:lvii–lxi), and note also Askren's letter cited above (n. 12), in which ʿAlī plays a secondary rôle to Nahman. Morgan did purchase 12 Hamuli leaves from ʿAlī through the Copticist Henri Hyvernat in February 1912 (Depuydt 1993, 1:lxix–lxxii).
22. Cf. Pedley (2012, 270).
23. Kelsey diary (n. 19), 17 February.
24. Kelsey diary (n. 19), 18 February.
25. In 1918, the ancient historian William Linn Westermann, then at Wisconsin, and Kelsey had exchanged letters concerning the acquisition of papyri for Westermann's institution. On the day after Kelsey and Grenfell made their first (joint) visit to Nahman's, Kelsey wrote a letter to Westermann that began, "I was yesterday pleasantly reminded of you and our correspondence in regard to papyri. Mr. Grenfell and myself had an appointment with the leading collector here, and were surprised at what we found". Before the end of March, Westermann would be sending money to Kelsey. (See box 35, folder 9, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM, for all of this correspondence and related documentation.) Grenfell bought on behalf of both the British Museum and the Rylands Library.
26. British Library, Add MS 59511, f. 113.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

27. Letter to Mary Beecher Longyear, 5 July 1920, box 21, folder 7, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM.
28. Grenfell and Kelsey's collaboration is discussed thoroughly in the introduction to Hickey's forthcoming volume of London papyri, which presents editions of texts that came to the British Museum in 1920 through Grenfell.
29. Box 15, folder 3, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM, contains documents concerning the Fayum (and other) acquisitions. A "Memorandum of papyri purchased by Prof F. W. Kelsey and B.P.G.", written in Grenfell's hand, indicates that L.E. 151 was the actual sum spent in the Fayum. The eighty-pound lot, described as "mostly well preserved", was acquired from Andrea Girgis on 26 February. In Grenfell's tally of papyri Girgis' material is lumped together with a six-pound lot from Ayyub ("well preserved"); altogether the two lots had 54 pieces, of which 43 were distributed to Kelsey. Kelsey's diary (n. 19), 27 February, records the dealer as Andrious Girgis and the number of "specimens" as "about 80". Grenfell does not distinguish between English and Egyptian pounds, presumably because their values were fixed at almost 1:1 (see n. 19 above).
30. The tens and units digits of the amount spent by Grenfell are corrected (the tens from "5"; the units digit may have originally been "2"). Grenfell apparently wrote a comma before adding the closing parenthesis, which is followed by two short marks – one horizontal at the base of the line, the other beneath it, and vertical – of an indeterminate nature.
31. The dealer's name was Σωτήρης; presumably this was his first name, not a deformation of his surname. In a letter to W.W. Bishop (University Librarian), 1 June 1921, box 1, folder 8, KMA Papers, Campbell Bonner subgroup, BHL, UM, Kelsey reports that he himself had offered L.E. 60 in the wake of the inspection.
32. British Library, Add MS 59511, f. 108. Hickey thanks Nick Gonis for discussing this letter with him and sharing his transcription and Cillian O'Hogan for sending a colour image of the document.
33. Kelsey, letter to W.W. Bishop (cited in n. 31). Girgis' papyri (n. 29) had also been left with Askren for inspection (Kelsey diary [n. 19], 27 February).
34. Kelsey's diary (n. 19) indicates that 27 February was "wholly devoted to the examination and purchase of papyri" and that they "finished work with papyri" on the 28th (see entry for 29 February).
35. For Bonner, whose interests included ancient magic, see, e.g., Nock (1955).
36. Box 83, folder 1, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM.
37. In this regard, Kelsey's arrangement with Charles Freer to publish Freer's manuscripts in the Humanistic Series is paradigmatic. Kelsey would in fact approach the executors of the Freer estate per litteras proposing "purchase of Gnostic scroll in Fayoum, for which 300 £.E. is asked" (diary [n. 19], 27 March 1920; we thank Michael Zellmann-Rohrer for bringing this entry to our attention).
38. For Russel, cf. "John R. Russel Dies: A Leader in Detroit Industrial and Financial Circles," New York Times, 3 April 1932.
39. Letter (from Rome) dated 5 July 1920, box 21, folder 7, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM. Kelsey was so forward that he included a contract ("[i]n view of the fact that, quite frankly, you will probably want them").

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

40. In his 1921 letter to Bishop (n. 31), Kelsey reports that "the banker believed that ~~un~~ltimately he would get £ 225".
41. Letter from Paris ("here in Paris"), dated 12 June 1920, same folder as item in preceding note. The date must be erroneous because Kelsey did not reach Paris until 8 July (so his diary [n. 19]); moreover, the content of this letter suggests that it postdates the one sent on 5 July. In this regard, note Kelsey's diary for 12 July, which mentions a letter dictated for "Mrs. J. M. Longyear, about Gnostic roll in Fayoum & Greek-Coptic parchment offered by [the Copticist Henri] Hyvernat". The dictation could have led to an error in the month. The other purchase proposed to Longyear in the "12 June" letter was "a bilingual fragment in Greek and Coptic" that otherwise will go to the library of Mr. Pierpoint [sic] Morgan in New York". This may have been part of P.MorganLib. 263.
42. Same folder as preceding item.
43. Letter from Kelsey to Askren, 6 August 1920: "I make haste to acknowledge receipt of your ~~w~~very welcome letter of July 20" (box 82, folder 4, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM).
44. Letter dated 20 July, same folder as preceding note. Askren's mention of "the troubles" is no doubt a reference to the Egyptian revolt of 1919; cf. Goldberg (1992, esp. 272) and Schulze (1991, esp. 188–197).
45. Same item as that in n. 43. "Exchange": See the discussion in Tsiang (1959).
46. The reading "Doteris" is uncertain. The first letter of the name is not an exact match for any other capital in the sample of Askren's handwriting that we have examined. "D" seems the closest fit, but if it is correct, it appears to have been overwritten. "S" seems impossible.
47. Letter dated 1 November, same folder as n. 43. Kelsey's letter to Bishop (n. 31) seems contradictory: "Dr. Askren was watching the case, in order to offer one hundred pounds for me at the ~~ph~~sychological moment". Note also Kelsey's 5 February 1921 letter to Askren, quoted in the main text below.
48. Nahman had furnished most of the newly acquired Michigan papyri, including an astrological treatise (inv. 1) and substantial remains of a roll with Iliad Σ (inv. 2).
49. Item in same folder as that in n. 43.
50. The quoted words are from the letter to Westermann (cf. n. 25), 8 December 1920 (box 35, folder 9, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM). We have not been able to locate an original copy of the letter to Hunt (for whom see the article cited in n. 16). This was sent 10 December 1920 and is preserved through a typewritten transcript in box 81, folder 1, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup.
51. "Your offer": Presumably Askren means the L.E. 150 mentioned in his 1 November letter, not the offer of L.E. 50–60 that was made in the spring. Cf. also n. 47.
52. Item in same folder as that in n. 43.
53. Askren does, however, note an increase in crimes like "burglaries and highway robberies".
54. "L.E." has been squeezed in between "for" and "190".
55. Item in same folder as that in n. 43.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

56. In brief, Askren's avocation ("archaeology" in a loose sense) came to eclipse his vocation (medicine), a transformation that simply would have not been possible absent Kelsey. Kelsey furthermore arranged funding for the education of Askren's sons in America; see Pedley (2012, 305, n. 22, 352, 382).
57. Note also that Kelsey's letter to Bishop (n. 31), reports the sale price as "one hundred and eighty nine pounds".
58. Askren's four-page letter had admittedly addressed other matters, but the roll's prominence for Kelsey is telegraphed by the fact that he broaches it immediately after his "upbeat" greeting.
59. Handwringing about "spoiling the market" is commonplace in the writings of papyrologists of this era. Americans themselves could be considered the problem; Hunt would declare to Bell in May 1930, "The American combination of wealth and ignorance has spoilt the market, and as long as they will go on paying inflated prices the dealers will ask them" (British Library, Add MS 59512, f. 202).
60. Kelsey's query is illuminated by a remark in his letter to Bishop (n. 31): "During the past winter Italy has been full of Danes and Swedes who got rich during the war". Eitrem, however, journeyed to Egypt on more than one occasion: His first visit was in 1910 (when he bought his own small collection of papyri); after 1920 he paid the country a final visit in 1936, again with the mission of purchasing papyri for the University of Oslo Library.
61. Item in same folder as that in n. 43.
62. According to Kelsey's letter of acknowledgement (ref. in n. 63):

> [a] reprint on the Magical Papyrus B. M. CXXI [JEA 11 (1925) 80–83] and the Symbolae Osloenses [presumably vol. 3 of 1925, in which Eitrem himself has an article on lekythoi; G. Rudberg, an edition of an Iliadic fragment from the Oslo collection; and Karl Schmidt, an article with textual remarks on magical papyri] and Varia [a series of articles with this title encompassing Eitrem's textual remarks on and interpretations of Greek and Latin passages].

63. Kelsey's letter: box 83, folder 7, KMA Papers, FWK subgroup, BHL, UM. Kelsey logged the letter in his diary (box 4, FWK Papers, BHL, UM): "S. Eitrem, magical papyrus purchased in the Fayoum, with request to send copies [of P.Oslo I] to [the Michigan Copticist William H.] Worrell, Bonner, Askren".
64. See Sanders and Schmidt (1927), Bonner (1934), Boak (1933), and Husselman, Boak, and Edgerton (1944).
65. Letter to Bishop (n. 31).
66. Kelsey states to Bishop (ref. in n. 31), "This is the only firstrate [sic] papyrus that I know of that has recently left Egypt without coming in our direction". Later the Oslo and Michigan collections would twice purchase papyri in partnership: in 1923, as part of a "Papyruskartell" in which they combined funds with the British Museum and Columbia University; and in 1928, when the same institutions, with the addition of Princeton University, again bought papyri. In both cases, the papyri were divided among the participating institutions by Idris Bell of the British Museum, who compiled the relevant inventory lists. Kelsey himself permitted

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Leiv Amundsen to participate in the Michigan excavations at Karanis during the 1927–1928 and 1928–1929 seasons and also entrusted him with the publication of some ostraka in the Michigan collection (see Amundsen 1935).

67. I owe thanks to Federico Aurora for facilitating my access to the collection, to the Department of Classics at the University of Oslo for its warm hospitality, and to Todd Hickey and the Center for the Tebtunis Papyri for supporting my travel to Oslo. Anastasia Maravela kindly checked my proposed readings on the originals before publication; any remaining errors are my own responsibility.
68. For papyrological publications I use the abbreviations recommended in Oates et al. (2015). All references to Pap.Graec.Mag. are to the edition revised by A. Henrichs (1974), unless otherwise noted.
69. The four are included in the Leuven Trismegistos Magic database (<http://www.trismegistos.org/magic/index.php>), under the following numbers (respectively): 64479, 64481, 64592, 63587.
70. On the purchase, with further information on the provenance, see the preceding study by Todd Hickey and Anastasia Maravela.
71. P.Oslo I, p. 31.
72. Pap.Graec.Mag. P XXXVI, with additional corrections by A. Henrichs.
73. Brashear (1995, 3552–3553). See recently Bohak (2008, 202–206), specifically on Jewish influence in the incantation in lines 295–311.
74. On the use of the apostrophe in the papyri in general, which still awaits a thorough study, cf. Fournet (2004) and Gignac (1976–1981, 1:162–165).
75. At c. 21, 38.5, 57.5, 76, 94, 110.5, 129, 146.5, 164.5, 182.5, 200.5, and 218 cm from left edge; the precise location of the rightmost, thirteenth kollesis cannot be precisely determined due to surface damage.
76. Col. i: 17.5 cm; ii: 13–15 cm; iii: 13–17.5 cm; iv: 16–22.5 cm; v: 14.5–19 cm; vi: 13 cm; vii: 12 cm; viii: 10.5–14 cm; ix: 16–19.5 cm; x: 11.5–17 cm; xi: 11–14 cm; xii: 13 cm.
77. On disregard of kollesis joins in the manufactured roll in laying out columns, see Johnson (2004, 50–54); on uniformity of column and intercolumn width, see Johnson (2004, 88). Of the other Pap.Graec.Mag. texts which preserve significant portions of bookrolls: Pap.Graec.Mag. P I has five narrower columns of more regular width (c. 10 cm); Pap.Graec.Mag. P II, four wide columns (three at 30–32 cm, one at 22 cm); the best parallel is Pap.Graec.Mag. P III, 22 columns ranging from 8.5 to 25.5 cm wide; Pap.Graec.Mag. P VII, 32 columns, keeps for the most part to a column width of 12–15 cm, with a few outliers; in Pap.Graec.Mag. P XII (with Daniel 1991), the 13 Greek columns are between 18 and 20 cm except coll. 10 and 13 (16 and 11 cm, respectively).
78. Between coll. i and ii, from the top extending down c. 10 lines; and between coll. iv and v, from line 10 of col. iv to the bottom, curving to follow the protruding text in the lower right corner of col. iv.
79. See below, numbered here 282a. The extensive fading could suggest an erasure or even, as Anastasia Maravela suggests to me, a chance offset from a separate text against which the present roll once rested; the hands are very similar if not identical.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

80. Pap.Graec.Mag. P III and P VII are also opisthographic, but on the verso the text is arranged in columns similarly to the recto (but across the fibres). Pap.Graec.Mag. P XII is a case of re-use, on the back of an earlier demotic text; the verso is arranged in the usual series of narrower columns across the fibres.
81. Between lines 294 and 295; 311 and 312; 320 and 321; 332 and 333; 360 and 361; and after 371.
82. This time the commentary in ed. pr. is minimal; on the genre of text and ritual practice represented here, see Faraone (1999). Examples deployed by women on male targets are distinctly in the minority.
83. The purchase was made through H.I. Bell and the British Museum, for a total of 240 (presumably Egyptian) pounds; see also Eitrem's preface to P.Oslo II. On the partnership with Bell see the discussion of Hickey and Maravela above, n. 66.
84. Pap.Graec.Mag. P XXXIX.
85. Pap.Graec.Mag. P 3; included in De Bruyn and Dijkstra (2011), text no. 18.
86. For an analogous case in a papyrus purchased by the British Museum, see Zellmann-Rohrer (2014).
87. Amundsen (1928), with brief commentary of S. Eitrem added on p. 37.
88. Pap.Graec.Mag. O 2.

References

Adrados, F. R., ed. 1991. Diccionario griego-español 3. Madrid: Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Científicas.

Amundsen, L. 1928. "Magical Text on an Oslo Ostracon." Symbolae Osloenses 7: 36–37.

Amundsen, L. 1935. Greek Ostraca in the University of Michigan Collection, Part I: Texts, University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 34. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.

Baedeker, K., ed. 1914. Egypt and the Sûdân: Handbook for Travellers. 7th ed. Leipzig: Baedeker.

Bierbrier, M. L., ed. 2012. Who Was Who in Egyptology. 4th ed. London: Egypt Exploration Society.

Bingen, J. 1980. "Notes d'épigraphie grecque." Chronique d'Égypte 55: 314–319.

Boak, A. E. R., ed. 1933. Papyri from Tebtunis, Part I. University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 28. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.

Bohak, G. 2008. Ancient Jewish Magic: A History. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Bonde, N. 1997. "Dendrochronological Dating of the Viking Age Ship Burials at Oseberg, Gokstad and Tune, Norway." In Archaeological Sciences 1995, edited by A. Sinclair, E. Slater, and J. Gowlett, 195–200. Oxford: Oxbow Books.

Bonner, C. A. 1934. A Papyrus Codex of the Shepherd of Hermas, University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 22. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.

Bowman, A. K., R. A. Coles, N. Gonis, D. Obbink, and P. J. Parsons, eds. 2007. Oxyrhynchus: A City and its Texts. London: Egypt Exploration Society.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Brashear, W. M. 1995. "The Greek Magical Papyri: An Introduction and Survey; Annotated Bibliography (1928–1994)." In Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt: Geschichte und Kultur Roms im Spiegel der neueren Forschung 2.18.5, edited by H. Temporini, 3380–3730. Berlin: W. de Gruyter.

Bresciani-Turroni, C. 1934. "Egypt's Balance of Trade." Journal of Political Economy 42: 371–384.

Brøgger, A. W., H. Falck, and H. Shetelig, eds. 1917–1928. Osebergfundet, Vols. 1–3 and 5. Oslo: Universitetet Oldsaksamling.

Daniel, R. W. 1977. "Some ΦΥΛΑΚΤΗΡΙΑ." Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 25: 145–154.

Daniel, R. W. 1991. Two Greek Magical Papyri in the National Museum of Antiquities in Leiden. Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag.

De Bruyn, T. S., and J. H. F. Dijkstra. 2011. "Greek Amulets and Formularies from Egypt Containing Christian Elements: A Checklist of Papyri, Parchments, Ostraka, and Tablets." Bulletin of the American Society of Papyrologists 48: 163–216.

Delattre, D., ed. 2007. Philodème de Gadara: Sur la musique, livre IV. Paris: Belles lettres.

Depuydt, L. 1993. Catalogue of Coptic Manuscripts in the Pierpont Morgan Library. 2 vols. Leuven: Peeters.

Eitrem, S. 1925. Papyri Osloenses, Fascicle 1, Magical Papyri. Oslo: Jacob Dybwad.

Faraone, C. A. 1999. Ancient Greek Love Magic. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

Fournet, J.-L. 2004. "L'influence des usages littéraires sur l'écriture des documents: Perspectives." In Proceedings of the 20th International Congress of Papyrologists, Copenhagen 23–29 August 1992, edited by A. Bülow-Jacobsen, 418–422. Copenhagen: Museum Tusculanum Press.

Francis, R. 1912. Egyptian Aesthetics. Chicago: Open Court.

Gignac, F. T. 1976–1981. A Grammar of the Greek Papyri of the Roman and Byzantine Periods. 2 vols. Milan: Istituto editoriale Cisalpino – La Goliardica.

Goldberg, E. 1992. "Peasants in Revolt – Egypt 1919." International Journal of Middle East Studies 24: 261–280.

Haaland, G. 1986. "Papyrussamlingen." In Universitetsbiblioteket i ord og bilder, edited by B. Norlin and B. Rugaas, 138–143. Oslo: Universitetsforlaget.

Haaland, G. 2011. "Papyrussamlingen." In Kunnskap – samlinger – mennesker: Universitetsbiblioteket og forskningen gjennom 200 år, edited by S. Brandsæter and S. Engelstad, 135–141. Oslo: Universitetsbiblioteket i Oslo.

Hansen, D. U., ed. 1998. Das attizistische Lexikon des Moeris, Sammlung griechischer und lateinischer Grammatiker 9. Berlin: W. de Gruyter.

Husselman, E. M., A. E. R. Boak, and W. F. Edgerton, eds. 1944. Papyri from Tebtunis, Part II, University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 29. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.

Johnson, W. A. 2004. Bookrolls and Scribes in Oxyrhynchus. Toronto, ON: University of Toronto Press.

Kitromilides, P. M., ed. 2006. Eleftherios Venizelos: The Trials of Statesmanship. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

Lefebvre, G. 1907. Recueil des inscriptions grecques-chrétiennes d'Égypte. Cairo: Institut français d'archéologie orientale.
Lehnus, L. 2007. "Bernard Pyne Grenfell e Arthur Surridge Hunt." In Hermae: Scholars and Scholarship in Papyrology, edited by M. Capasso, Vol. 1, 115–141. Pisa: Giardini.
Longyear Museum. 2014. "Mrs. Mary Beecher Longyear (1851–1931)." Accessed October 1, 2015. https://www.longyear.org/exhibits-archives-media/historic-articles/early-workers/mary-beecher-longyear.
Nock, A. D. 1955. "Necrology: Campbell Bonner." American Journal of Archaeology 59: 179.
Oates, J. F., W. H. Willis, J. D. Sosin, R. Ast, R. S. Bagnall, J. M. S. Cowey, M. Depauw, A. Delattre, R. Maxwell, and P. Heilporn. 2015. Checklist of Editions of Greek, Latin, Demotic, and Coptic Papyri, Ostraca, and Tablets. Accessed October 7, 2015. http://papyri.info/docs/checklist.
Pedley, J. G. 2012. The Life and Work of Francis Willey Kelsey: Archaeology, Antiquity, and the Arts. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.
Petrie, W. M. F., A. H. Gardiner, H. Petrie, and M. A. Murray. 1925. Tombs of the Courtiers and Oxyrhynkhos. London: British School of Archaeology in Egypt.
Pintaudi, R. 2012. "Grenfell-Hunt e la papirologia in Italia." Quaderni di storia 75: 205–298.
Sanders, H. A., and C. Schmidt, eds. 1927. The Minor Prophets in the Freer Collection and the Berlin Fragment of Genesis, University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 21. New York: Macmillan.
Schulze, R. C. 1991. "Colonization and Resistance: The Egyptian Peasant Rebellion in 1919." In Peasants and Politics in the Modern Middle East, edited by F. Karzemi and J. Waterbury, 171–202. Miami: Florida International University Press.
Tsiang, S. C. 1959. "Fluctuating Exchange Rates in Countries with Relatively Stable Economies: Some European Experiences After World War I." Staff Papers (International Monetary Fund) 7: 250–256.
U.K. Board of Trade. 1921. "Egypt: Effects of the Cotton Crisis." Board of Trade Journal and Commercial Gazette 106: 696–698.
U.S. Department of Commerce. 1926. Commerce Yearbook 1925. Washington, DC: Government Printing Office.
Wortmann, D. 1968. "Neue magische Texte." Bonner Jahrbücher des Rheinischen Landesmuseums in Bonn und des Vereins von Altertumsfreunden im Rheinlands 168: 56–110.
Zellmann-Rohrer, M. 2014. "Patched and Peeled in London: A Memorandum for a Trip to Constantinople." Archiv für Papyrusforschung und verwandte Gebiete 60: 217–222.

Downloaded by [University of Oslo] at 09:20 12 January 2016

THE GREEK MAGICAL PAPYRI IN TRANSLATION

Contributors

D.E.A. David E. Aune, Professor of Religion, Saint Xavier College, Chicago

J.B. Jan Bergman, Professor of the History of Religions, University of Uppsala

H.D.B. Hans Dieter Betz, Professor of New Testament, The Divinity School, University of Chicago

W.B. Walter Burkert, Professor of Classical Philology, University of Zürich

J.M.D. John M. Dillon, Professor of Classics, Trinity College, Dublin

W.C.G. William C. Grese, Professor of Religion, Olivet College, Olivet, Michigan

J.P.H. Jackson P. Hershbell, Professor of Classics, University of Minnesota

R.F.H. Ronald F. Hock, Professor of Religion, University of Southern California

J.H.J. Janet H. Johnson, Professor of Egyptology, The Oriental Institute, University of Chicago

R.D.K. Roy D. Kotansky, Research Specialist, The Divinity School, University of Chicago

H.M. Hubert Martin, Jr., Professor of Classics, University of Kentucky

M.W.M. Marvin W. Meyer, Professor of Religion, Chapman College, Orange, California

E.N.O. Edward N. O'Neil, Professor of Classics, University of Southern California

R.K.R. Robert K. Ritner, Lecturer in Egyptology, The Oriental Institute, University of Chicago

J.S. John Scarborough, Professor of History, University of Kentucky

M.S. Morton Smith, Professor of Ancient History, Columbia University

THE GREEK MAGICAL PAPYRI IN TRANSLATION

INCLUDING THE DEMOTIC SPELLS

Edited by
HANS DIETER BETZ

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS
Chicago & London

HANS DIETER BETZ
is professsor of New Testament and chairman of the Department of New Testament and Early Christian Literature at the University of Chicago.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS, CHICAGO 60637
THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS, LTD., LONDON
© 1986 by The University of Chicago
All rights reserved. Published 1986
Printed in the United States of America
95 94 93 92 91 90 89 88 87 86 5 4 3 2 1

This project has been supported by the National Endowment for the Humanities, a federal agency which supports the study of such fields as history, philosophy, literature, and languages.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS CATALOGING-IN-PUBLICATION DATA
Main entry under title:

The Greek magical papyri in translation, including the Demotic spells.

Translation of Greek, Demotic, and Coptic texts found in: Papyri graecae magicae, 2nd ed., with translations of fifty additional texts.
Includes bibliographical references.
1. Magic, Greek. 2. Manuscripts, Greek (Papyri)
I. Betz, Hans Dieter. II. Papyri graecae magicae.
English. 1985.
BF1622.G8G74 1986 133.4'3'0938 85-1137
ISBN 0-226-04444-0

Shall we write about the things not to be spoken of?
Shall we divulge the things not to be divulged?
Shall we pronounce the things not to be pronounced?

Julian, Hymn to the Mother of the Gods

Contents

Preface ix

Table of Spells xi

List of Papyri in Preisendanz xxiii

List of New Papyri Not in Preisendanz xxvii

Note on Editions xxix

Explanation of References and Textual Signs xxxi

Abbreviations of Periodicals, Series Titles, and General Reference Works xxxv

Abbreviations of Major Titles Used in This Volume xxxvii

Introduction to the Greek Magical Papyri xli
Hans Dieter Betz

Introduction to the Demotic Magical Papyri xlv
Janet H. Johnson

Translations, with Notes 3

Glossary 331

Preface

This volume of translations of the Greek magical papyri has been a long time in the making. The project began in a planning colloquium at Claremont, California, May 31 to June 4, 1978. At this meeting, a team of scholars resolved to produce this translation volume as part of a research project on the Greek magical papyri, the project as a whole being designed as a contribution to the Corpus Hellenisticum Novi Testamenti.

The translations turned out to be more difficult and time-consuming than had been expected. Since it seemed desirable to expand the Preisendanz collection to include as many newly discovered and newly published magical papyri as possible, the number of papyri increased from 81 to 131. In this respect, the translation volume differs from the Preisendanz volumes. It differs also in that while Preisendanz reproduced only the Greek sections of bilingual Greek-Demotic papyri, this volume includes the full translations of all bilingual texts.

All translations are based on the Greek, Demotic, and Coptic texts. PGM I–LXXXI follow the Preisendanz edition, while PGM LXXXII–CXXX and PDM Supplement follow their critical editions, which are indicated in the notes. Translators were free to make changes in the texts when they thought it necessary; these changes are also indicated in the notes. Where earlier translations exist, they have been consulted, but all the translations included in this volume are new.

Unlike the Preisendanz edition, this new volume does not have an apparatus criticus. Instead, it has notes explaining difficulties in the text and the translation, and notes alerting readers to important information. It has been necessary to limit these notes to a degree which many readers may find drastic, but the team decided not to attempt what could only be a lengthy commentary on the papyri. Instead, they agreed that other research tools should be developed to encourage and assist further research on the papyri. The following research tools are presently being prepared:

1. An index of Greek words is being prepared by Professor Edward O'Neil.
2. A subject index based on the English translation is being worked out by Ms. Marjorie Menaul.
3. A collection of parallels between the magical papyri and early Christian literature is being prepared by the research team. This part of the project is most directly related to the task of the Corpus Hellenisticum Novi Testamenti, namely, the collection of parallels from ancient literature to the New Testament and the other Christian literature up to approximately A.D. 150.
4. A comprehensive bibliography, including editions and investigations of the magical papyri, is being assembled by Professor David Hellholm.

The present volume would not have come about without the generous support of institutions and individuals. The National Endowment for the Humanities has funded the entire venture from the beginning by substantial grants from 1978 to 1983. Without this financial assistance, the project would simply not exist; scholarly team projects of this magnitude cannot live on enthusiasm alone. Apart from the purely financial aspect, the officers of the NEH have helped more than they may realize by their quiet encouragement and confidence expressed over a number of years.

A great deal of assistance also came from the institutions where the project was initiated and where it is now based. These include the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity at Claremont, where the project was based during the years 1977 and 1978, and the Institute for the Advanced Study of Religion at the University of Chicago, where it has been from 1978 to the present. Thanks are especially due to the officers of these institutions, Professors James M. Robinson and James Brashler of the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity; and Professors Joseph M. Kitagawa, formerly dean, and Franklin I. Gamwell, currently dean, of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, as well as to Martin E. Marty, program coordinator for the Institute for the Advanced Study of Religion of the University of Chicago.

The present project could not have succeeded without the unfailing loyalty and generosity of the members of the team, both contributors and consultants. Among these should be named Professors Jan Bergman, Walter Burkert, Franco Maltomini, and P. J. Sijpesteijn. The research specialists of the project, Professor William C. Grese (1977–80), and Mr. Roy Kotansky and Ms. Marjorie Menaul (1980–83), not only helped to carry the burdens of administration and editorship, but made substantial contributions to the project as well. To all of them sincere thanks are due.

H. D. Betz

Table of Spells

This list of spells presupposes the divisions in the texts and the identification of section titles made by the editor. In the Demotic spells, section titles are sometimes indicated by red lettering (but this is not done consistently). If no titles are given, this fact is stated (No title) and a short description of content is added.

Reference	Translator	Short Title
PGM I		(No title) Magical handbook
PGM I. 1–42	E.N.O.	[Rite] for acquiring an assistant daimon
PGM I. 42–195	E.N.O.	The spell of Pnouthis (for acquiring an assistant daimon)
PGM I. 195–222	E.N.O.	Prayer of deliverance
PGM I. 222–31	E.N.O.	Invisibility spell
PGM I. 232–47	E.N.O.	Memory spell
PGM I. 247–62	E.N.O.	Spell for invisibility
PGM I. 262–347	E.N.O.	Apollonian invocation
PGM II		(No title) Magical handbook
PGM II. 1–64	J.M.D. / E.N.O.	(No title) Spell for revelation
PGM II. 65–183	J.M.D. / E.N.O.	(No title) Alternative spell for revelation
PGM III		(No title) Magical handbook
PGM III. 1–164	J.M.D.	(No title) Cat ritual for many purposes
PGM III. 165–86	J.M.D.	(No title) Oracular request (?)
PGM III. 187–262	J.M.D. / E.N.O.	(No title) Spell for revelation
PGM III. 263–75	W.C.G.	Foreknowledge charm
PGM III. 275–81	E.N.O.	[Horoscope]
PGM III. 282–409	W.C.G. / M.W.M.	(No title) Spell for foreknowledge
PGM III. 410–23	W.C.G.	(No title) Memory spell
PGM III. 424–66	W.C.G.	A copy from a holy book (spell for foreknowledge and memory)
PGM III. 467–78	W.C.G.	Memory spell
PGM III. 479–83	W.C.G.	Foreknowledge charm
PGM III. 483–88	W.C.G.	Another (foreknowledge charm to detect a thief)
PGM III. 488–94	W.C.G.	Another (spell to detect a thief?)
PGM III. 494–611	W.C.G. / E.N.O.	[Spell to establish a relationship with] Helios
PGM III. 612–32	J.M.D.	(No title) Spell for gaining control of one's shadow
PGM III. 633–731	M.W.M.	(No title) Spell for a direct vision
PGM IV		(No title) Magical handbook
PGM IV. 1–25	M.W.M.	(No title) Spell for revelation
PGM IV. 26–51	H.M.	Initiation
PGM IV. 52–85	H.M. / M.W.M.	(No title) Spell for revelation
PGM IV. 86–87	M.W.M.	Phylactery against daimons

PGM IV. 88–93	W.C.G. / M.W.M.	Another, to Helios
PGM IV. 94–153	M.W.M.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM IV. 154–285	J.P.H. / E.N.O.	Nephotes to Psammetichos (letter concerning bowl divination)
PGM IV. 286–95	E.N.O.	Spell for picking a plant
PGM IV. 296–466	E.N.O.	Wondrous spell for binding a lover
PGM IV. 467–68	R.F.H.	Charm to restrain anger
PGM IV. 469–70	H.M.	(Charm) to get friends
PGM IV. 471–73	H.M.	(No title) Verses from Homer
PGM IV. 474	H.M.	(No title) Verse from Homer
PGM IV. 475–829	M.W.M.	(No title) The "Mithras Liturgy"
PGM IV. 830	H.M.	(No title) Verse from Homer
PGM IV. 831–32	R.F.H.	Charm to restrain anger
PGM IV. 833–34	H.M.	(Charm) to get friends
PGM IV. 835–49	W.C.G.	(No title) Astrological text
PGM IV. 850–929	W.C.G.	Charm of Solomon that produces a trance
PGM IV. 930–1114	W.C.G. / E.N.O.	Charm that produces direct vision
PGM IV. 1115–66	W.C.G.	Hidden stele (prayer)
PGM IV. 1167–1226	W.C.G.	Stele (spell for deliverance)
PGM IV. 1227–64	M.W.M.	Rite for driving out daimons
PGM IV. 1265–74	E.N.O.	Aphrodite's name (love spell)
PGM IV. 1275–1322	W.C.G.	Bear charm
PGM IV. 1323–30	W.C.G.	Another (Bear charm)
PGM IV. 1331–89	W.C.G.	Bear charm
PGM IV. 1390–1495	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM IV. 1496–1595	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM IV. 1596–1715	M.S.	Consecration for all purposes
PGM IV. 1716–1870	E.N.O.	Sword of Dardanos (love spell)
PGM IV. 1872–1927	E.N.O.	(No title) Fetching charm
PGM IV. 1928–2005	E.N.O.	King Pitys' spell of attraction
PGM IV. 2006–2125	E.N.O.	Pitys' spell of attraction
PGM IV. 2125–39	M.S.	A restraining seal
PGM IV. 2140–44	W.C.G.	Pitys the Thessalian's spell for questioning corpses
PGM IV. 2145–2240	H.M.	Divine assistance from three Homeric verses
PGM IV. 2241–2358	E.N.O.	Document to the waning moon
PGM IV. 2359–72	R.F.H.	Business spell
PGM IV. 2373–2440	R.F.H.	Charm for acquiring business
PGM IV. 2441–2621	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM IV. 2622–2707	E.N.O.	Slander spell to Selene
PGM IV. 2708–84	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM IV. 2785–2890	E.N.O.	Prayer to Selene
PGM IV. 2891–2942	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM IV. 2943–66	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM IV. 2967–3006	E.N.O.	(No title) Spell for picking a plant
PGM IV. 3007–86	W.C.G.	Charm of Pibechis for those possessed by daimons
PGM IV. 3086–3124	W.C.G.	Oracle of Kronos, called "little mill"
PGM IV. 3125–71	M.S.	(No title) Spell for favor
PGM IV. 3172–3208	W.C.G.	Dream-producing charm
PGM IV. 3209–54	J.P.H.	Saucer divination of Aphrodite
PGM IV. 3255–74	E.N.O.	(No title) Spell to induce insomnia
PGM V		(No title) Magical handbook

PGM V. 1–53	W.C.G.	Oracle of Sarapis
PGM V. 54–69	W.C.G.	Direct vision spell
PGM V. 70–95	W.C.G.	(No title) Spell to catch a thief
PGM V. 96–172	D.E.A.	Stele of Jeu the hieroglyphist (letter)
PGM V. 172–212	W.C.G.	Another way (spell to catch a thief)
PGM V. 213–303	M.S.	Hermes' ring
PGM V. 304–69	M.S.	(No title) Defixio
PGM V. 370–446	E.N.O.	(No title) Spell for revelation
PGM V. 447–58	M.S.	(No title) Instruction concerning a magical ring
PGM V. 459–89	D.E.A.	Another way (spell for many purposes)
PGM Va. 1–3	H.M.	(No title) Spell for direct vision
PGM VI. 1–47	E.N.O.	(No title) Prayer for encounter with Helios
PGM VII		(No title) Magical handbook
PGM VII. 1–148	H.M.	Homer oracle
PGM VII. 149–54	W.C.G.	To keep bugs out of the house
PGM VII. 155–67	W.C.G.	Days and hours for divination
PGM VII. 167–86	R.D.K.	Demokritos' "table gimmicks"
PGM VII. 186–90	R.F.H.	Favor and victory charm
PGM VII. 191–92	E.N.O.	Spell for binding a lover
PGM VII. 193–96	J.S.	For scorpion sting
PGM VII. 197–98	J.S.	For discharge of the eyes
PGM VII. 199–201	J.S.	For migraine headache
PGM VII. 201–2	J.S.	Another (for migraine headache)
PGM VII. 203–5	J.S.	For coughs
PGM VII. 206–7	J.S.	Another (for coughs)
PGM VII. 208–9	J.S.	For hardening of the breasts
PGM VII. 209–10	J.S.	For swollen testicles
PGM VII. 211–12	J.S.	For fever with shivering fits
PGM VII. 213–14	J.S.	For daily fever and nightly fever
PGM VII. 215–18	H.M.	Stele of Aphrodite (spell for favor)
PGM VII. 218–21	J.S.	Phylactery for daily fever with shivering fits
PGM VII. 222–49	W.C.G.	Request for a dream oracle from Besas
PGM VII. 250–54	W.C.G.	Request for a dream oracle
PGM VII. 255–59	W.C.G.	Another to the same lamp
PGM VII. 260–71	J.S.	For the ascent of the uterus
PGM VII. 272–83	W.C.G.	(No title) Astrological calendar
PGM VII. 284–99	E.N.O.	Orbit of the moon (horoscope)
PGM VII. 300	W.C.G.	(No title) Spell of uncertain purpose
PGM VII. 300a–310	E.N.O.	Love charm
PGM VII. 311–16	M.S.	Phylactery
PGM VII. 317–18	M.S.	Another phylactery
PGM VII. 319–34	W.C.G.	Charm for direct vision
PGM VII. 335–47	W.C.G.	Charm for direct vision
PGM VII. 348–58	W.C.G.	Divination by means of a boy
PGM VII. 359–69	W.C.G.	Request for a dream oracle
PGM VII. 370–73	W.C.G.	(Spell) against every wild animal
PGM VII. 374–76	R.F.H.	Charm to induce insomnia
PGM VII. 376–84	R.F.H.	Another (charm to induce insomnia)
PGM VII. 385–89	E.N.O.	Cup spell (love spell)
PGM VII. 390–93	R.F.H.	Victory charm for the races
PGM VII. 394–95	R.F.H.	Coercive spell for restraining
PGM VII. 396–404	R.F.H.	Spell for silencing, subjecting, and restraining

PGM VII. 405–6	E.N.O.	Love spell
PGM VII. 407–10	E.N.O.	(No title) Dream spell
PGM VII. 411–16	E.N.O.	Spell for causing talk while asleep
PGM VII. 417–22	M.S.	Restraining spell
PGM VII. 423–28	R.F.H.	To win at dice
PGM VII. 429–58	M.S.	Restraining spell
PGM VII. 459–61	E.N.O.	Love charm
PGM VII. 462–66	E.N.O.	Love charm
PGM VII. 467–77	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM VII. 478–90	H.M.	(No title) Spell for dream revelation
PGM VII. 490–504	M.S.	(No title) Spell for protection
PGM VII. 505–28	H.M.	Meeting with your own daimon
PGM VII. 528–39	R.F.H.	Victory charm
PGM VII. 540–78	J.P.H.	Lamp divination
PGM VII. 579–90	M.S.	Phylactery
PGM VII. 591–92	W.C.G.	(No title) Prayer of invocation
PGM VII. 593–619	D.E.A.	Fetching charm
PGM VII. 619–27	E.N.O.	From the Diadem of Moses (spells for invisibility and love)
PGM VII. 628–42	M.S.	(No title) Rite involving a magical ring
PGM VII. 643–51	E.N.O.	Cup spell (love spell)
PGM VII. 652–60	R.F.H.	Spell to induce insomnia
PGM VII. 661–63	E.N.O.	Love spell
PGM VII. 664–85	E.N.O.	Request for dream revelations
PGM VII. 686–702	H.D.B.	Bear charm
PGM VII. 703–26	W.C.G.	Request for dream oracle
PGM VII. 727–39	W.C.G.	Charm for a direct vision of Apollo
PGM VII. 740–55	W.C.G.	[Request for a dream oracle]
PGM VII. 756–94	W.C.G.	Prayer
PGM VII. 795–845	J.P.H.	Pythagoras' request for a dream oracle and Demokritos' dream divination
PGM VII. 846–61	W.C.G.	Shadow on the sun (spell for revelation)
PGM VII. 862–918	E.N.O.	Lunar spell of Klaudianos
PGM VII. 919–24	R.F.H.	Hermes' wondrous victory charm
PGM VII. 925–39	R.F.H.	Another, charm to subject
PGM VII. 940–68	R.F.H.	Charm to restrain anger and to subject
PGM VII. 969–72	E.N.O.	A good potion (love spell)
PGM VII. 973–80	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction . . .
PGM VII. 981–93	E.N.O.	[Love spell of attraction]
PGM VII. 993–1009	W.C.G.	(No title) Spell of uncertain purpose
PGM VII. 1009–16	W.C.G.	Divination by a dream
PGM VII. 1017–26	R.F.H.	[No title] Spell for favor and victory
PGM VIII. 1–63	E.N.O.	Binding love spell of Astrapsoukos
PGM VIII. 64–110	W.C.G. / E.N.O.	Request for a dream oracle of Besas
PGM IX. 1–14	R.F.H. / E.N.O.	(No title) Spell to subject and silence
PGM X. 1–23	E.N.O.	(No title [?]) Love spell
PGM X. 24–35	R.F.H.	Charm to restrain anger
PGM X. 36–50	R.F.H.	Apollo's charm to subject
PGM XIa. 1–40	H.M.	Apollonius of Tyana's old serving woman
PGM XIb. 1–5	R.D.K.	(No title) "Table gimmick" (?)
PGM XIc. 1–19	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell
PDM xii (PGM XII)		(No title) Magical handbook
PDM xii 1–5	J.H.J.	(No title) Invocation
PDM xii 6–20	J.H.J.	A ring to cause praise

PDM xii 21–49	J.H.J.	(No title) Prayer for a revelation of a remedy for a disease
PGM XII. 1–13	H.M.	Rite (to produce an epiphany of Kore)
PGM XII. 14–95	H.M.	Eros as assistant daimon
PGM XII. 96–106	R.F.H.	Himerios' recipes
PGM XII. 107–21	W.C.G.	Charm of Agathokles for sending dreams
PGM XII. 121–43	R.D.K.	Zminis of Tentyra's spell for sending dreams
PGM XII. 144–52	W.C.G.	Request for a dream
PGM XII. 153–60	W.C.G.	Spell for a divine revelation
PGM XII. 160–78	R.F.H.	(No title) Spell to release from bonds
PGM XII. 179–81	R.F.H.	(No title) Spell for restraining anger
PGM XII. 182–89	R.F.H.	(No title) Spell for gaining favor
PGM XII. 190–92	W.C.G.	Request for a dream oracle spoken to the Bear
PGM XII. 193–201	J.S.	[To make] a tincture of gold
PGM XII. 201–69	M.S.	A ring
PGM XII. 270–350	M.S.	A little ring for success and favor and victory
PGM XII. 351–64	J.P.H.	Demokritos' "sphere"
PGM XII. 365–75	R.F.H.	Charm for causing separation
PGM XII. 376–96	R.F.H.	Charm to induce insomnia
PGM XII. 397–400	H.M.	To gain favor and friendship forever
PGM XII. 401–44	H.D.B. / J.S.	Interpretations
PDM xii. 50–61 [PGM XII. 445–48]	J.H.J.	Spell for separating one person from another
PDM xii. 62–75 [PGM XII. 449–52]	J.H.J.	Another (spell for separation)
PDM xii. 76–107 [PGM XII. 453–65]	J.H.J. / R.F.H.	Another (spell for separation)
PDM xii. 108–18 [PGM XII. 466–68]	J.H.J.	A spell [to] cause a woman to hate a man
PDM xii. 119–34 [PGM XII. 469–73]	J.H.J. / E.N.O.	A spell for it (fetching spell?)
PDM xii. 135–46 [PGM XII. 474–79]	J.H.J. / E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PDM xii. 147–64 [PGM XII. 480–95] [PGM XII. 480–95]	J.H.J. / E.N.O.	Another (love spell of attraction)
PGM XIII. 1–734	M.S.	A sacred book called "Unique" or "Eighth Book of Moses"
PGM XIII. 1–343	M.S.	[Part A: Initiation ritual and magical handbook]
PGM XIII. 343–646	M.S.	[Part B: A second, different version of the initiation ritual]
PGM XIII. 647–734	M.S.	[Part C: A third, different version of the initiation ritual]
PGM XIII. 734–1077	M.S.	(No title) A collection of miscellaneous spells
PDM xiv		(No title) Magical handbook
PDM xiv. 1–92	J.H.J.	[A vessel divination]
PDM xiv. 93–114 [PGM XIVa. 1–11]	J.H.J. / W.C.G.	(No title) Spell for revelation
PDM xiv. 115	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for vision (?)
PDM xiv. 116	J.H.J.	Another spell for vision (?)

PDM xiv. 117–49	J.H.J.	A "god's arrival"
PDM xiv. 150–231	J.H.J.	An inquiry of the lamp
PDM xiv. 232–38	J.H.J.	A "god's arrival"
PDM xiv. 239–95	J.H.J.	The vessel inquiry of Khonsu
PDM xiv. 295–308	J.H.J.	[A] vessel [inquiry]
PDM xiv. 309–34	J.H.J.	A spell for causing favor
PDM xiv. 335–55	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM xiv. 355–65	J.H.J.	Another love spell
PDM xiv. 366–75	J.H.J.	The method (spell for separating man and woman)
PDM xiv. 376–94	J.H.J.	(No title) Various recipes
PDM xiv. 395–427	J.H.J.	[A vessel divination]
PDM xiv. 428–50	J.H.J.	(No title) Two love potions
PDM xiv. 451–58 [PGM XIVb. 12–15]	J.H.J. / R.F.H.	(No title) Spell for going before a superior
PDM xiv. 459–75	J.H.J.	(No title) Lamp divination
PDM xiv. 475–88	J.H.J.	(No title) Lamp divination
PDM xiv. 489–515	J.H.J.	Another (lamp divination)
PDM xiv. 516–27	J.H.J.	Another (lamp divination)
PDM xiv. 528–53	J.H.J.	(No title) Vessel divination
PDM xiv. 554–62	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for dog bite
PDM xiv. 563–74	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for removal of poison
PDM xiv. 574–85	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for removal of bone stuck in the throat
PDM xiv. 585–93	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for dog bite
PDM xiv. 594–620	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for sting
PDM xiv. 620–26	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for removal of bone stuck in the throat
PDM xiv. 627–35	J.H.J.	(No title) Vessel divination
PDM xiv. 636–69	J.H.J.	(No title) Love potion
PDM xiv. 670–74	J.H.J.	(No title) Introduction to a collection of spells (?)
PDM xiv. 675–94 [PGM XIVc. 15–27]	J.H.J. / R.F.H.	A spell (to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 695–700	J.H.J.	(No title) Vessel divination
PDM xiv. 701–5	J.H.J.	(No title) Vessel divination
PDM xiv. 706–10	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell against "evil sleep"
PDM xiv. 711–15	J.H.J.	Prescription (to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 716–24	J.H.J.	Another (spell to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 724–26	J.H.J.	Another (spell to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 727–36	J.H.J.	A prescription (three prescriptions to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 737–38	J.H.J.	A prescription (to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 739–40	J.H.J.	Another (spell to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 741	J.H.J.	Another (spell to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 742	J.H.J.	Another (spell to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 743–49	J.H.J.	Another (spell to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 750–71	J.H.J.	(No title) Lamp divination
PDM xiv. 772–804	J.H.J.	A method (love spells)
PDM xiv. 805–40	J.H.J.	Another (vessel inquiry)
PDM xiv. 841–50	J.H.J.	Another method (vessel inquiry)
PDM xiv. 851–55	J.H.J.	Another (vessel inquiry)
PDM xiv. 856–75	J.H.J.	(No title) Inquiry of the sun
PDM xiv. 875–85	J.H.J.	Here is another (inquiry of the sun)

PDM xiv. 886–96	J.H.J.	(No title) Recipes involving herbs
PDM xiv. 897–910	J.H.J.	(No title) List of herbs and minerals
PDM xiv. 912–16	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell to cause "evil sleep"
PDM xiv. 917–19	J.H.J.	Prescription (to cause "evil sleep")
PDM xiv. 920–29	J.H.J.	(No title) Information concerning mineral
PDM xiv. 930–32	J.H.J.	A prescription (love spell)
PDM xiv. 933–34	J.H.J.	(No title) Information concerning mineral
PDM xiv. 935–39	J.H.J.	(No title) Prescription for a watery ear
PDM xiv. 940–52	J.H.J.	(No title) Information concerning salamander and herbs
PDM xiv. 953–55	J.H.J.	A prescription (to stop blood)
PDM xiv. 956–60	J.H.J.	(No title) Test of pregnancy
PDM xiv. 961–65	J.H.J.	A prescription (two prescriptions to stop blood)
PDM xiv. 966–69	J.H.J.	(No title) Information concerning herbs
PDM xiv. 970–77	J.H.J.	A prescription (two prescriptions to stop liquid in a woman)
PDM xiv. 978–80	J.H.J.	Another (prescription to stop liquid in a woman)
PDM xiv. 981–84	J.H.J.	Another (prescription to stop liquid in a woman)
PDM xiv. 985–92	J.H.J.	Gout (prescription)
PDM xiv. 993–1002	J.H.J.	Another (prescription for gout)
PDM xiv. 1003–14	J.H.J.	(No title) Amulet for gout
PDM xiv. 1015–20	J.H.J.	(No title) Prescription for unidentifiable ailment
PDM xiv. 1021–23	J.H.J.	(No title) Prescription for a stiff foot
PDM xiv. 1024–25	J.H.J.	(No title) Another prescription for a stiff foot
PDM xiv. 1026–45	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM xiv. 1046–47	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM xiv. 1047–48	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM xiv. 1049–55	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM xiv. 1056–62	J.H.J.	(No title) Spells involving voces magicae
PDM xiv. 1063–69	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM xiv. 1070–77	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell to send dreams and make a woman love
PDM xiv. 1078–89	J.H.J.	(No title) Request for revelation
PDM xiv. 1090–96	J.H.J.	(No title) Fetching spell
PDM xiv. 1097–1103	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell to heal an eye disease
PDM xiv. 1104–9	J.H.J.	(No title) Recipe concerning eye ointment
PDM xiv. 1110–29	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell to open eyes for divination
PDM xiv. 1130–40	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM xiv. 1141–54	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for lamp divination
PDM xiv. 1155–62	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM xiv. 1163–79	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for vessel divination
PDM xiv. 1180–81	J.H.J.	(No title) Fragment from invocation
PDM xiv. 1182–87	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell to cause madness
PDM xiv. 1188–89	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell (?)
PDM xiv. 1190–93	J.H.J.	(No title) Another love spell
PDM xiv. 1194–95	J.H.J.	(No title) Another love spell
PDM xiv. 1196–98	J.H.J.	(No title) Another love spell
PDM xiv. 1199–1205	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for lamp divination
PDM xiv. 1206–18	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell

PDM xiv. 1219–27	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for fever
PGM XV. 1–21	R.F.H.	(No title) Charm to bind a lover
PGM XVI. 1–75	E.N.O.	(No title) Charm to bind a lover
PGM XVIIa. 1–25	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM XVIIb. 1–23	E.N.O.	(No title) Prayer
PGM XVIIc. 1–14	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet
PGM XVIIIa. 1–4	J.S.	(No title) Amulet for headache
PGM XVIIIb. 1–7	J.S.	(No title) Fever amulet
PGM XIXa. 1–54	E.N.O. / R.D.K.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM XIXb. 1–3	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM XIXb. 4–18	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM XX. 1–4	E.N.O.	[Spell for] headache
PGM XX. 4–12	E.N.O.	[The charm] of the Syrian woman of Gadara for any inflammation
PGM XX. 13–19	E.N.O.	The charm of the Thessalian Philinna, [for] headache
PGM XXI. 1–29	W.C.G.	(No title) Invocation
PGM XXIIa. 1–27	J.S.	(No title) Magico-medical recipes
PGM XXIIb. 1–26	D.E.A.	Prayer of Jacob
PGM XXIIb. 27–31	D.E.A.	Request for a dream oracle
PGM XXIIb. 32–35	D.E.A.	Request for a dream oracle
PGM XXIII. 1–70	E.N.O.	Fragment of the Kestoi of Julius Africanus
PGM XXIVa. 1–25	W.C.G.	(No title) Oracle
PGM XXIVb. 1–15	R.D.K.	(No title) Love spell
PGM XXVa–d	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulets (?)
PGM XXVI. 1–21	———	(No title) Sortes Astrampsychi (omitted)
PGM XXVII. 1–5	R.F.H.	Victory charm
PGM XXVIIIa. 1–7	R.D.K.	(No title) Spell for scorpion sting
PGM XXVIIIb. 1–9	R.D.K.	(No title) Spell for scorpion sting
PGM XXVIIIc. 1–11	R.D.K.	(No title) Spell for scorpion sting
PGM XXIX. 1–10	E.N.O.	(No title) Prayer (poem)
PGM XXX a–f	———	(No title) Oracle questions (omitted)
PGM XXXI a–c	———	(No title) Oracle questions (omitted)
PGM XXXII. 1–19	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM XXXIIa. 1–25	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM XXXIII. 1–25	J.S.	(No title) Fever amulet
PGM XXXIV. 1–24	E.N.O.	(No title) Fragment from a novel
PGM XXXV. 1–42	R.F.H.	Charm for favor and victory
PGM XXXVI. 1–34	M.S.	Charm to restrain
PGM XXXVI. 35–68	R.F.H.	Charm to restrain anger and to secure favor
PGM XXXVI. 69–101	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM XXXVI. 102–33	E.N.O.	Divination by fire (love spell)
PGM XXXVI. 134–60	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM XXXVI. 161–77	R.F.H.	Charm to restrain anger, and for success
PGM XXXVI. 178–87	M.S.	Charm to break spells
PGM XXXVI. 187–210	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM XXXVI. 211–30	R.F.H.	Prayer to Helios: charm to restrain anger, and for victory and favor
PGM XXXVI. 231–55	R.F.H.	(No title) Charm to inflict harm
PGM XXXVI. 256–64	M.S.	(No title) Charm to break enchantment
PGM XXXVI. 264–74	R.F.H.	(No title) Charm of uncertain purpose
PGM XXXVI. 275–83	H.M.	Charm for gaining favor
PGM XXXVI. 283–94	E.N.O.	Pudenda key spell

PGM XXXVI. 295–311	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM XXXVI. 312–20	R.F.H.	Charm to open a door
PGM XXXVI. 320–32	J.S.	Contraceptive spell
PGM XXXVI. 333–60	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM XXXVI. 361–71	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM XXXVII. 1–26	R.D.K.	(No title) Spell of uncertain purpose
PGM XXXVIII. 1–26	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM XXXIX. 1–21	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM XL. 1–18	R.F.H.	(No title) Curse
PGM XLI. 1–9	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet (?)
PGM XLII. 1–10	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet (?)
PGM XLIII. 1–27	J.S.	(No title) Amulet against fever
PGM XLIV. 1–18	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet against fever (?)
PGM XLV. 1–8	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet (?)
PGM XLVI. 1–4	R.F.H.	(No title) Request for revelation (?)
PGM XLVI. 4–8	R.F.H.	Spell to silence and subject
PGM XLVII. 1–17	M.S.	(No title) Amulet against fever
PGM XLVIII. 1–21	M.W.M.	(No title) Amulet (?)
PGM XLIX	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet
PGM L. 1–18	R.D.K.	(No title) Oracle (?)
PGM LI. 1–27	R.F.H.	(No title) Charm to inflict harm
PGM LII. 1–9	R.D.K.	(No title) Love spell (?)
PGM LII. 9–19	R.D.K.	(No title) Love spell (?)
PGM LII. 20–26	R.D.K.	Spell to induce insomnia
PGM LIII–LVI	———	(No titles) Spells (?) of uncertain purpose (omitted)
PGM LVII. 1–37	R.F.H.	(No title) Rite to acquire an assistant daimon (?)
PGM LVIII. 1–14	R.F.H.	(No title) Spell to inflict harm
PGM LVIII. 15–39	R.F.H.	(No title) Spell of uncertain purpose
PGM LIX. 1–15	M.S.	(No title) Phylactery
PGM LX. 1–5	M.S.	(No title) Amulet
PDM lxi. 1–30	R.K.R.	(No title) Spell for revelation
PDM lxi. 30–41	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell of uncertain purpose
PDM lxi. 42	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell of uncertain purpose
PDM lxi. 43–48 [PGM LXI. i–v]*	J.H.J. / R.D.K.	Remedy for [an] ulcer (?) of the head
PDM lxi. 49–57	J.H.J.	[Remedy for the] head (?)
PDM lxi. 58–62 [PGM LXI. xi, x]*	R.D.K.	For an erection
PDM lxi. 63–78	J.H.J.	(No title) Spell for a dream revelation
PDM lxi. 79–94	J.H.J.	Way of finding a thief
PDM lxi. 95–99	J.H.J.	Spell of giving praise and love in Nubian
PDM lxi. 100–105	J.H.J.	The red cloth of Nephthys
PDM lxi. 106–11	J.H.J.	Prescription for a donkey not moving
PDM lxi. 112–27	J.H.J.	Prescription for making a woman love
PDM lxi. 128–47	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM lxi. 148–58	J.H.J.	(No title) Love spell
PDM lxi. 159–96 [PGM LXI. 1–38]	E.N.O.	Love charm
PDM lxi. 197–216 [PGM LXI. 39–71]	E.N.O.	Love spell of attraction
PGM LXII. 1–24	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction

PGM LXII. 24–46	W.C.G. / J.P.H.	(No title) Saucer divination
PGM LXII. 47–51	M.S.	(No title) Oracle
PGM LXII. 52–75	R.D.K.	(No title) Horoscope
PGM LXII. 76–106	J.S.	(No title) Spell (or two spells), to inflict harm (?)
PGM LXIII. 1–7	E.N.O.	(No title) Love-potion (?)
PGM LXIII. 7–12	E.N.O.	[Spell to make a woman] confess the name of the man she loves
PGM LXIII. 13–20	E.N.O.	(No title) Spell of uncertain purpose
PGM LXIII. 21–24	E.N.O.	(No title) Spell of uncertain purpose
PGM LXIII. 24–25	J.S.	Contraceptive
PGM LXIII. 26–28	J.S.	Contraceptive
PGM LXIV. 1–12	R.F.H.	(No title) Charm to inflict harm
PGM LXV. 1–4	J.S.	Spell to [prevent pregnancy]
PGM LXV. 4–7	J.S.	For migraine headache
PGM LXVI. 1–11	R.F.H.	(No title) Charm to cause separation
PGM LXVII. 1–24	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell (?)
PGM LXVIII. 1–20	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell
PGM LXIX. 1–3	D.E.A.	(No title) Victory spell (?)
PGM LXX. 1–4	H.D.B.	Charm for favor, etc.
PGM LXX. 4–25	H.D.B.	Charm of Hekate Ereschigal against fear of punishment
PGM LXX. 26–51	H.D.B.	Against fear and to dissolve spells
PGM LXXI. 1–8	M.S.	Phylactery
PGM LXXII. 1–36	W.C.G.	[Rite concerning the Bear]
PGM LXXIII–LXXVI	———	(No titles) Oracle questions (omitted)
PGM LXXVII. 1–24	W.C.G.	(No title) Charm for getting a revelation
PGM LXXVIII. 1–14	E.N.O.	(No title) Love spell of attraction
PGM LXXIX. 1–7	R.F.H.	Charm to restrain anger
PGM LXXX. 1–5	R.F.H.	Charm to restrain anger
PGM LXXXI. 1–10	W.C.G.	(No title) Greetings to deities
PGM LXXXII. 1–12	R.D.K.	(No title) Recipe for ingredients (fragment of formulary?)
PGM LXXXIII. 1–20	R.D.K.	For fever with shivering fits
PGM LXXXIV. 1–21	R.D.K.	(No title) Fetching charm
PGM LXXXV. 1–6	R.D.K.	(No title) For daimon possession
PGM LXXXVI. 1–2	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet
PGM LXXXVI. 3–7	R.D.K.	(No title) Rite
PGM LXXXVII. 1–11	R.D.K.	(No title) Fever amulet
PGM LXXXVIII. 1–19	R.D.K.	(No title) Fever amulet
PGM LXXXIX. 1–27	R.D.K.	(No title) Phylactery for fever, phantoms, daimons, etc.
PGM XC. 1–13	H.D.B.	(No title) Rite or phylactery
PGM XC. 14–18	H.D.B.	Salve for fever
PGM XCI. 1–14	R.D.K.	(No title) Fever amulet (?)
PGM XCII. 1–16	R.D.K.	[Charm] for favor
PGM XCIII. 1–6	R.D.K.	(No title) Sacrificial rite
PGM XCIII. 7–21	R.D.K.	(No title) Rite
PGM XCIV. 1–3	R.D.K.	(No title) Voces magicae
PGM XCIV. 4–6	R.D.K.	Drying powder made with saffron [for] sharp eyesight
PGM XCIV. 7–9	R.D.K.	For excellent health
PGM XCIV. 10–16	R.D.K.	A phylactery for [fever]

PGM XCIV. 17–21	R.D.K.	For those possessed by daimons
PGM XCIV. 22–26	R.D.K.	For the eyes
PGM XCIV. 27–35	R.D.K.	[For] tumors [and] . . .
PGM XCIV. 36–38	R.D.K.	[For . . .] and strangury
PGM XCIV. 39–60	R.D.K.	Another, for migraine headache
PGM XCV. 1–6	R.D.K.	(No title) Spell for subjugation
PGM XCV. 7–13	R.D.K.	Concerning the mole-[rat]
PGM XCV. 14–18	R.D.K.	A remedy for all cases of . . . [epilepsy]
PGM XCVI. 1–8	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet
PGM XCVII. 1–6	H.D.B.	(No title) Spell against eye disease (?)
PGM XCVII. 7–9	H.D.B.	Another (spell)
PGM XCVII. 10–13	H.D.B.	Another (spell)
PGM XCVII. 15–17	H.D.B.	For every [disease]
PGM XCVIII. 1–7	H.D.B.	(No title) Amulet
PGM XCIX. 1–3	H.D.B.	(No title) Amulet
PGM C. 1–7	H.D.B.	(No title) Amulet
PGM CI. 1–53	H.D.B.	(No title) Fetching charm
PGM CII. 1–17	H.D.B.	(No title) Request for a dream oracle
PGM CIII. 1–18	R.D.K.	(No title) Fetching charm
PGM CIV. 1–8	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet for fever with shivering fits
PGM CV. 1–15	R.D.K.	(No title) Invocation of Sarapis
PGM CVI. 1–10	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet for fever with shivering fits
PGM CVII. 1–19	R.D.K.	(No title) Fetching charm
PGM CVIII. 1–12	R.D.K.	(No title) Fetching charm
PGM CIX. 1–8	H.D.B.	(No title) Love spell
PGM CX. 1–12	R.D.K.	(No title) Horoscope
PGM CXI. 1–15	R.D.K.	(No title) Instruction for making magical figures
PGM CXII. 1–15	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet for scorpion sting
PGM CXIII. 1–4	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet for scorpion sting
PGM CXIV. 1–14	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet for attacks by daimons and for epilepsy
PGM CXV. 1–7	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet for fever with shivering fits
PGM CXVI. 1–17	H.D.B.	(No title) Invocation of Typhon-Seth
PGM CXVII. Fr. 1–23	R.D.K.	(No title) Fetching charm
PGM CXVIII	———	(No title) Magical scroll (omitted)
PGM CXIXa. 1	R.D.K.	(No title) Fragment from formulary
PGM CXIXa. 2–3	R.D.K.	Love spell through touch
PGM CXIXa. 4–6	R.D.K.	Fetching charm
PGM CXIXa. 7–11	R.D.K.	Charm to subject
PGM CXIXb. 1–3	R.D.K.	(No title)
PGM CXIXb. 4–5	R.D.K.	[For fever with shivering fits]
PGM CXX. 1–13	R.D.K.	(No title) Amulet (for inflammation of the uvula?)
PGM CXXI. 1–14	R.D.K.	(No title) Phylactery for a variety of evils
PGM CXXII. 1–5	H.D.B.	An excerpt for enchantments
PGM CXXII. 5–25	H.D.B.	Enchantment using apples
PGM CXXII. 26–50	H.D.B.	(No title) Love spell (fetching charm?)
PGM CXXII. 51–55	H.D.B.	For headache
PGM CXXIIIa. 1–23	R.D.K.	(No title) Voces magicae

PGM CXXIIIa. 24–47	R.D.K.	Erotylos
PGM CXXIIIa. 48–50	R.D.K.	For childbearing
PGM CXXIIIa. 51–52	R.D.K.	For sleep
PGM CXXIIIa. 53–55	R.D.K.	For strangury
PGM CXXIIIa. 56–68	R.D.K.	For a shivering fit
PGM CXXIIIa. 69–72	R.D.K.	For victory
PGM CXXIIIb	R.D.K.	(No title) Voces magicae
PGM CXXIIIc	R.D.K.	(No title) Voces magicae
PGM CXXIIId	R.D.K.	(No title) Voces magicae
PGM CXXIIIe	R.D.K.	(No title) Parallel of CXXIIIa. 24–47
PGM CXXIIIf	R.D.K.	(No title) Parallel of CXXIIIa. 24–47
PGM CXXIV. 1–5	R.D.K.	(No title) Charm to inflict harm (?)
PGM CXXIV. 6–43	R.D.K.	Charm to inflict harm
PGM CXXVa–f	R.D.K.	(No title) Fragments of spells
PGM CXXVIa. 1–21	H.D.B.	(No title) Spell to cause separation
PGM CXXVIb. 1–17	H.D.B.	(No title) Spell to cause separation
PGM CXXVII. 1–12	R.D.K.	(No title) Fragment of formulary of magico-medical prescriptions
PGM CXXVIII. 1–12	R.D.K.	Phylactery for fever
PGM CXXIX. 1–7	R.D.K.	(No title) Fragment of unidentifiable spell
PGM CXXX. 1–13	H.D.B.	(No title) For a shivering fever
PDM Supplement
1–6	J.H.J.	[Spell for] sending a dream
7–18	J.H.J.	[Spell for] sending a dream
19–27	J.H.J.	Spell for sending a dream
28–40	J.H.J.	[Spell for] sending a dream
40–60	J.H.J.	Spell for sending a dream
60–101	J.H.J.	Spell for sending a dream
101–16	J.H.J.	Spell for sending a dream
117–30	J.H.J.	[Spell] for sending a dream
130–38	J.H.J.	A "god's arrival" of Osiris
138–49	J.H.J.	Spell for . . . (subjection?)
149–62	J.H.J.	A "god's arrival" of Thoth
162–68	J.H.J.	Spell for finding your house of life
168–84	J.H.J.	Spell for reciting a document
185–208	J.H.J.	(No title) Fragments of rites and formulae

List of Papyri in Preisendanz

Reference	Location	Number	Date
I	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	P.Berol. inv. 5025	IV^{p}/V^{p}
II	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	P.Berol. inv. 5026	IV^{p}
III	Paris, Musée du Louvre	no. 2396 (P.Mimaut frgs. 1–4)	IV^{p}
IV	Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale	P.Bibl.Nat. Suppl. gr. no. 574	IV^{p}
V	London, British Museum	P.Lond. 46	IV^{p}?
Va	Uppsala, Victoriamuseet	P.Holm., p. 42
VI	London, British Museum	P.Lond. 47	II^{p} or III^{p}
VII	London, British Museum	P.Lond. 121	III^{p}/IV^{p}
VIII	London, British Museum	P.Lond. 122	IV^{p} or V^{p}
IX	London, British Museum	P.Lond. 123	IV^{p} or V^{p}
X	London, British Museum	P.Lond. 124	IV^{p} or V^{p}
XIa	London, British Museum	P.Lond. 125 verso	V^{p}
XIb	London, British Museum	P.Lond. 147	III^{p}
XIc	London, British Museum	P.Lond. 148	II^{p}/III^{p}
XII	Leiden, Rijksmuseum van Oudheden	P.Lugd.Bat. J 384 (V)	IV^{p}
XIII	Leiden, Rijksmuseum van Oudheden	P.Lugd.Bat. J 395 (W)	IV^{p}
XIV	London, British Museum	P.Lond.demot. 10070	III^{p}
	Leiden, Rijksmuseum van Oudheden	P.Lugd.Bat. J 383	III^{p}
XV	Alexandria, Musée gréco-romain d'Alexandrie	P.Alex. inv. 491	III^{p}
XVI	Paris, Musée du Louvre	no. 3378	I^{p}
XVIIa	Strasbourg, Bibliothèque universitaire et régionale	P.gr. 1167	IV^{p}
XVIIb	Strasbourg, Bibliothèque universitaire et régionale	P.gr. 1179	II^{p}
XVIIc	Strasbourg, Bibliothèque universitaire et régionale	P.gr. 574
XVIIIa	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	BGU III 955	III^{p}/V^{p}
XVIIIb	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	BGU III 956	III^{p}/V^{p}
XIXa	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	P.Berol. inv. 9909	IV^{p} or V^{p}
XIXb	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	P.Berol. inv. 11737	IV^{p}
XX	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	P.Berol. inv. 7504 + P.Amh. ii, Col. II (A) + P.Oxy. inedit. (=Pack^{2} 1872)	I^{a}
XXI	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	P.Berol. inv. 9566 verso	II^{p} or III^{p}
XXIIa	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	BGU IV 1026 (inv. no. 9873)	IV^{p} or V^{p}
XXIIb	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	P.Berol. inv. 13895	IV^{p}

XXIII	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 412	III^{p}
XXIVa	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 886	III^{p}
XXIVb	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 887	III^{p}
XXVa	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 959	III^{p}
XXVb	Freiburg i. Br., Universitätsbibliothek	P. Un.Bibl.Freib. (w/o no.)	VI^{p}
XXVc	Cairo, Musée des antiquités égyptiennes	P.Cairo 10434
XXVd	Florence, Società Italiana per la ricerca de papiri	P.Flor. (w/o no.)
XXVI	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 1477	III^{p}/IV^{p}
XXVII	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 1478	III^{p}/IV^{p}
XXVIIIa	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 2061	V^{p}
XXVIIIb	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 2062	VI^{p}
XXVIIIc	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 2063	VI^{p}
XXIX	Oxford, Bodleian Library	P.Oxy. 1383	III^{p}
XXXa–f	[omitted]
XXXIa–c	[omitted]
XXXII	London, University College Institute of Archaeology	P.Haw. 312	II^{p}
XXXIII	Berkeley, University of California	P.Tebt. II 275	III^{p}
XXXIV	Ann Arbor, University of Michigan Library	P.Fay. 5	II^{p}/III^{p}
XXXV	Florence, Università degli Studi, Istituto di Papirologia	PSI I 29	V^{p}
XXXVI	Oslo, Universitetsbiblioteket	P.Osl. I, 1	IV^{p}
XXXVII	Oslo, Universitetsbiblioteket	P.Osl. I, 2	IV^{p}
XXXVIII	Oslo, Universitetsbiblioteket	P.Osl. I, 3	IV^{p}
XXXIX	Oslo, Universitetsbiblioteket	P.Osl. I, 4	IV^{p}
XL	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 1	IV^{p}
XLI	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 339 = P.Rain. 4	V^{p}/VI^{p}
XLII	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 331 = P.Rain. 8	VI^{p}
XLIII	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 335 = P.Rain. 9	V^{p}
XLIV	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 328 = P.Rain. 10	NA
XLV	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 334 = P.Rain. 11	VI^{p}/VII^{p}
XLVI	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 332 = P.Rain. 12	V^{p}
XLVII	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	inv. no. 8034 = P.Rain. 2 [no. 526, Wessely]	NA
XLVIII	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	inv. no. 8031 = P.Rain. 6 [no. 529, Wessely]	VI^{p}/VII^{p}
XLIX	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	inv. no. 8035 = P.Rain. 7 [no. 525, Wessely]	NA
L	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	inv. no. 8033 = P.Rain. [no. 527, Wessely]	VI^{p}
LI	Leipzig, Universitätsbibliothek	P.gr. 9.418	III^{p}
LII	Leipzig, Universitätsbibliothek	P.gr. 9.429	III^{p}
LIII–LVI	[omitted]
LVII	Ann Arbor, University of Michigan	cryptogr. pap. [otherwise uncataloged]	I^{p}/II^{p}
LVIII	Giessen, Universitätsbibliothek	inv. no. 266 = P. Iand. 87	IV^{p}
LIX	Cairo, Musée des antiquités égyptiennes	P.Cairo 10563	II^{p} or III^{p}
LX	Brussels, Fondation Egyptologique Reine Elisabeth	P.Brux. in. E 6390, 6391	VI^{p}

LXI	London, British Museum	P.Brit.Mus. inv. 10588 (Egyptian Dept.)	III^P
LXII	Leiden, Institutum Papyrologicum Universitatis Lugduno-Batavae	P.Warren 21	III^P
LXIII	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 323	II^P/III^P
LXIV	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 29273	IV^P
LXV	Vienna, Nationalbibliothek	P.gr. 29272	VI^P/VII^P
LXVI	Cairo, Musée des antiquités égyptiennes	P.Cairo 60139	III^P/IV^P
LXVII	Cairo, Musée des antiquités égyptiennes	P.Cairo 60140	NA
LXVIII	Cairo, Musée des antiquités égyptiennes	P.Cairo 60636	II^P/III^P
LXIX	Ann Arbor, University of Michigan	inv. no. 1463 = P.Mich. III, 156	II^P
LXX	Ann Arbor, University of Michigan	inv. no. 7 = P.Mich. III, 154	III^P or IV^P
LXXI	Ann Arbor, University of Michigan	inv. no. 193 = P.Mich. III, 155	II^P or III^P
LXXII	Oslo, Universitetsbiblioteket	inv. no. 75 = P.Osl. III, 75	I^P/II^P
LXXIII–LXXVI	[omitted]
LXXVII	Birmingham, Woodbroke College	P.Harr. 55	II^P
LXXVIII	Heidelberg, Universitätsbibliothek	P.Heid. 2170	III^P
LXXIX	Prague, National and University Library	P.gr. I, 18	III^P or IV^P
LXXX	Prague, National and University Library	P.gr. I, 21	III^P or IV^P
LXXXI	London, Egypt Exploration Society	P.Oxy. 1566	IV^P

List of New Papyri Not in Preisendanz

Note: Bibliographical references are provided at the end of the translation of each spell.

Reference	Location	Number	Date
LXXXII	Warsaw, Uniwersytet Warszawski	P.Vars. 4	III^{p}
LXXXIII	Princeton, Princeton University AM 8963	P.Princ. II 107
LXXXIV	Princeton, Princeton University Garrett Dep. 7665	P.Princ. II 76	III^{p}
LXXXV	Birmingham, Selly Oak Colleges Central Library	P.Harris 56	I^{p}/II^{p}
LXXXVI	Paris, L'Institut de Papyrologie de l'Université de Paris	P.Rein. II 89 inv. 2176	IV^{p}
LXXXVII	Erlangen, Universitätsbibliothek	P.Erlangen 37	IV^{p}
LXXXVIII	Princeton, Princeton University AM 11230	P.Princ. III 15	III^{p} or IV^{p}
LXXXIX	Lund, Universitetsbiblioteket	P.Lund Univ.Bibl. IV 12 inv. no. 32	IV^{p}
XC	Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore	P.Med. inv. no. 23	IV^{p}/V^{p}
XCI	Collection, G. A. Michaïlidis	P.Michael. 27	III^{p} or IV^{p}
XCII	Dublin, Chester Beatty Library	P.Merton II 58	III^{p}
XCIII	London, Egypt Exploration Society	P.Ant. II 65	V^{p}
XCIV	London, Egypt Exploration Society	P.Ant. II 66	V^{p}
XCV	London, Egypt Exploration Society	P.Ant. III 140	V^{p}/VI^{p}
XCVI	Barcelona, Seminario di papirologia . . . San Cugat del Valles	P.Palau Rib. inv. 126	IV^{p}/V^{p}
XCVII	Köln, Institut für Altertumskunde	P.Köln inv. 1886	III^{p}/IV^{p}
XCVIII	Köln, Institut für Altertumskunde	P.Köln inv. 1982	III^{p}
XCIX	Köln, Institut für Altertumskunde	P.Köln inv. 2283	V^{p}/VI^{p}
C	Köln, Institut für Altertumskunde	P.Köln inv. 2861	V^{p}/VI^{p}
CI	Köln, Institut für Altertumskunde	P.Köln inv. 3323	V^{p}

CII	London, Egypt Exploration Society	P.Oxy. 2753	IV^{p}
CIII	Athens, Archaeological Society	P.S.A. Athen. 70	II^{p}
CIV	Genoa, Università di Genova	PUG I 6	III^{p}
CV	Berlin, Sammlung des Ägyptischen Museums	P.Berol. 21227	III^{p}/IV^{p}
CVI	Berlin, Sammlung des Ägyptischen Museums	P.Berol. 21165	III^{p}/IV^{p}
CVII	Köln, Institut für Altertumskunde	P.Köln inv. 5512	III^{p} or IV^{p}
CVIII	Köln, Institut für Altertumskunde	P.Köln inv. 5514	III^{p} or IV^{p}
CIX	London, Egypt Exploration Society	P.Oxy. 50.4 B23 J(1–3)b	ca. A.D. 300
CX	Washington, Washington University	P.Wash. Univ. inv. 181	II^{p} or III^{p}
CXI	Washington, Washington University	P.Wash. Univ. inv. 139	III^{p}/IV^{p}
CXII	Washington, Washington University	P.Wash. Univ. inv. 242	IV^{p}/V^{p}
CXIII	Amsterdam, Bibliotheek der Universiteit van Amsterdam	P.Amst. inv. 16	V^{p}
CXIV	Yale, Yale University Library	P.Yale inv. 989	III^{p}/IV^{p}
CXV	Budapest, Collection of Erno Gaál	P.(Mag.) Gaál. ined.	IV^{p}
CXVI	Florence, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana	P.Laur. inv. 54	VI^{p}
CXVII	Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Handschriftenabteilung	P.Mon.Gr. inv. 216	I^{a}
CXVIII	Barcelona, Seminario di papirologia . . . San Cugat del Valles	P.Palau Rib. inv. 200	before X^{p}?
CXIX	Florence, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana	P. Laur. III 57 (PL II/52)	III^{p}
CXX	Florence, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana	P.Laur. III 58 (PL III/442)	III^{p}
CXXI	Milan, Università Cattolica di Milano	P.Med. inv. 71.58	III^{p}/IV^{p}
CXXII	Berlin, Staatliche Museen	P.Berol. inv. 21243	I^{a}/I^{p}
CXXIIIa–f	Pisa, Università di Pisa	P.Cazzaniga, nos. 1–6	V^{p}
CXXIV	Pisa, Università di Pisa	P.Cazzaniga, no. 7	V^{p}
CXXVa–f	Pisa, Università di Pisa	P.Cazzaniga, nos. 8–13	V^{p}–VI^{p}
CXXVI	Florence, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana	P.Laur. III/472	V^{p}
CXXVII	Yale, Yale University Library	P.Yale inv. 1206	III^{p} or IV^{p}
CXXVIII	Heidelberg, Universitäts-Papyrussammlung	P.Heid.G. 1386	V^{p}
CXXIX	Berlin, Sammlung des Ägyptischen Museums (?)	P.Berol. 21260	III^{p}
CXXX	Ann Arbor, University of Michigan	P.Mich. inv. 6666	III^{p}
PDM Supplement	Paris, Musée du Louvre	P.Louvre E3229	III^{p}

Note on Editions

For the editions of the Greek papyri as cited, see the bibliography in E. G. Turner, Greek Papyri, an Introduction (Oxford: Oxford University Press, ²1980), pp. 154–77, with the following exceptions:

PGM XC: A. Traversa, Aegyptus 33 (1953): 57–62
PGM XCVI: R. W. Daniel, ZPE 25 (1977): 150–53
PGM XCVII–CI: D. Wortmann, BoJ 168 (1968): 85–111
PGM CV–CVI: W. Brashear, ZPE 17 (1975): 25–33
PGM CVII–CVIII: R. Daniel, ZPE 19 (1975): 249–64
PGM CIX: P. Gorissen, ZPE 37 (1980): 199–200
PGM CX–CXII: Z. M. Packman, BASP 13 (1976): 175–80
PGM CXIII: P. J. Sijpesteijn, ZPE 22 (1976): 108
PGM CXIV–CXV: R. W. Daniel, ZPE 25 (1977): 145–54
PGM CXVI: R. Pintaudi, ZPE 26 (1977): 245–48
PGM CXVII: P. Fabrini and F. Maltomini, in A. Carlini, ed., Papiri Letterari Greci (Pisa: Giardini, 1978), no. 34
PGM CXVIII: J. O'Callaghan, StPapy 17 (1978): 85–87
PGM CXIX–CXX: R. Pintaudi, Dai Papiri della Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana (P.Laur. III), Papyrologica Florentina 5 (Firenze: Gonnelli, 1979), nos. 57–58
PGM CXXI: G. Geraci, Aegyptus 33 (1979): 63–72
PGM CXXII: W. Brashear, ZPE 33 (1979): 261–78
PGM CXXIII–CXXV: F. Maltomini, Studi Classici e Orientali 29 (1979): 55–124
PGM CXXVI: F. Maltomini, in R. Pintaudi, ed., Dai Papiri della Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana (P.Laur. IV), Papyrologica Florentina 12 (Firenze: Gonnelli, 1983): 46–53
PGM CXXVII: G. M. Parássoglou, Hellenica 27 (1974): 251–53
PGM CXXVIII–CXXIX: F. Maltomini, Studi Classici e Orientali 31 (1981): 111–117
PGM CXXX: R. W. Daniel, ZPE 50 (1983): 147–54

For the Demotic magical papyri, see Janet H. Johnson's Introduction to the Demotic Magical Papyri below, pp. 00–00. The editions are accordingly:

PDM xii: J. H. Johnson, OMRM 56 (1975): 29–64
PDM xiv: F. Ll. Griffith and H. Thompson, The Demotic Magical Papyrus of London and Leiden, 3 vols. (London: Grevel, 1904)
PDM lxi: Bell, Nock, and Thompson, Magical Texts
PDM Supplement: J. H. Johnson, Enchoria 7 (1977): 55–102

Explanation of References and Textual Signs

PGM I. 262–347

References cited thus refer to translations of the corresponding Greek text of Preisendanz's Papyri Graecae Magicae, with each roman numeral (including those with appended letters, e.g., PGM Va) corresponding to a separate papyrus manuscript. Roman numerals after PGM LXXXI refer to texts whose translations are based on editions published since, and sometimes overlooked by, Preisendanz. The bibliographies of these editions are mentioned in the introductory note (*) to each spell. Arabic numerals usually delineate the compass of individual spells within the papyrus manuscript. The use of the separate designations for each independent spell or charm represents a new feature designed to enable easy identification and ready reference to an individual spell.

PDM xxi. 6–20

References listed thus refer to Demotic (bilingual) spells corresponding to the texts whose editions are listed in the introductory note (*) to each spell. PDM stands for Papyri Demoticae Magicae, referring to this volume and not to be confused with DMP, an abbreviation for Griffith and Thompson, Demotic Magical Papyri, a work often referred to in the notes. Lowercase roman numerals are used simply to avoid confusion with spells labeled PGM. Arabic numerals are used as above.

[PGM XII. 445–48]

PGM references bracketed thus come immediately after references for bilingual Greek sections with the given spell. The references correspond to the appropriate Greek portions in Preisendanz, whose edition contained only the Greek sections of the Greek/Demotic spells. Since this translation volume contains all the Demotic spells, Preisendanz's numbering system is retained, but it is subsumed under the new Demotic collation.

A,b,c

Texts set in roman type represent spells and portions of spells whose original language was Greek.

A,b,c

Texts set with leader dots beneath represent spells and portions of spells whose original language was Demotic (Egyptian).

A,b,c

Texts with a thin underscore represent spells and portions of spells whose original language was Old Coptic. Coptic is found both in the Greek texts of Preisendanz's edition and as glosses in portions of the Demotic/Greek bilingual spells; however, the purely Coptic magical spells form a separate corpus not dealt with in this volume.

* An asterisk introduces an independent spell or a spell that contains most of the constituent parts necessary to effect the whole charm, though organic connections with adjacent spells can be recognized (e.g., spells entitled "Another . . ," or the like). The asterisk directs the reader to the contributor, whose name is given at the end of the spell. Some introductory comments may be found here as well. Bibliographical data, if appropriate, may also be listed.

Tr.: This abbreviation stands for "translator" or "transcriber" (if the text contains no recognizable words that can be translated).

Victory spell: Phrases set in roman boldface type refer to general titles of charms which usually stand at the beginning of the spell and which are often followed by one or more subtitles. Many spells do not possess a title, either because of a scribal omission or because it has been lost in a lacuna in the text.

Spell to be spoken Phrases set in italic boldface type refer to various subtitles and a number of types of rubrics (subsumed under the main title) that function in a titular sense to introduce a component feature of a spell. These may introduce ingredients, additional instructions, invocations, figures, magical names and characters, and so on, which are mentioned in the instructions in the text. In a long, multifunctional spell (cf. PGM IV. 2145–2240 and PGM XIII. 1–343), general titles are subordinate to the larger title, which describes an often elaborate ritual. In description, these general titles are identical to the main titles of most spells but are set as subtitles since they usually depend on a prior set of conditions to guarantee their efficacy.

IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI Small capital letters indicate magical names (voces magicae) which are usually untranslatable and often meaningless to the reader. In some instances, small capital letters preserve recognizable Greek, Egyptian, or Semitic words that merit special attention. Portions of texts whose fragmentary nature precludes the possibility of proper translation, but which may in fact have been readable in the original, are also set in small capitals.

A diagonal slash indicates every fifth line of translated text, corresponding to the number given in the left-hand margin. Usually these are numbered consecutively until a new papyrus number is introduced.

35 [5] A bracketed number alongside the regular number refers to the line number of the original edition (in a Greek/Demotic text). Occasionally at the beginning the column number and line are also cited (e.g., [Col. III,5].

30 (4) A number in parentheses refers to the original line of Preisendanz in a Greek/Demotic spell. The number corresponds to the PGM reference given within the bracketed number at the head of the spell.

. . .	An ellipsis in the body of the text refers to a lost portion regardless of the size of the lacuna. Some punctuation (e.g., a comma or a period) may also be added at the end of the ellipsis.
[spell]	Brackets enclosing words indicate that the words are not preserved in the original text. These include (1) suggested restorations of lacunae; (2) editorial expansions of the text to elucidate the sense of the original language; and (3) phrases traditionally set off by pointed brackets ⟨ ⟩, namely, modern corrections to scribal omissions or errors. Scholars interested in determining which use the bracketed text refers to are recommended to consult the texts of the original editions. As a general rule, bracketed texts will not divide a word, but will surround the whole word if its reading is fairly uncertain.
(add the usual)	Parentheses enclosing words simply indicate material in the original texts best understood as parenthetical comments of the ancient authors and redactors.
"Come to me . . ."	Quotation marks enclosing words indicate material that is spoken (or intended to be spoken) or written (or intended to be written). Material not enclosed in quotation marks usually refers to parts of a formulary that contain instructions and directions apart from the material to be written or spoken. Such instructions are peculiar to the papyri that have preserved magical formularies, whereas the actual amulets and phylacteries found on papyrus usually contain simple invocations that have been transcribed as a result of following the instructions in such magical handbooks. Incantations originally written in Greek meter are set as verse, that is, they are indented en bloc, with the first letter of each line capitalized. In cases where the meter falters within such a hymnic portion, the original margin is restored to indicate prose.
NN	In the magical formularies, this abbreviation stands for a name or names to be inserted by the reader, the names of the persons against or for whom the magic is to be carried out. In the case of "(the) NN matter," the reader understands that specific requests are to be named at this point.
[R.K.R.]	At the end of each footnote, the bracketed initials refer to the contributing scholar responsible for the material immediately preceding. Notes that carry no initials represent the joint efforts of the contributors and scholars.

Abbreviations of Periodicals, Series Titles, and General Reference Works

AJA	American Journal of Archaeology
AKA	Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte
APAW	Abhandlungen der (K.) preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften
APAW.PH	Philosophisch-historische Klasse
ANET	J. B. Pritchard, Ancient Near Eastern Texts Related to the Old Testament (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969)
ANRW	Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt
ARW	Archiv für Religionswissenschaft
BASP	Bulletin of the American Society of Papyrologists
Bauer	W. Bauer, W. F. Arndt, and F. Wilbur Gingrich, A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature. 2d ed. (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1979)
BCH	Bulletin de correspondance hellénique
BIFAO	Bulletin de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, Le Caire
BoJ	Bonner Jahrbücher
Bonnet, RÄRG	Hans Bonnet, Reallexikon der ägyptischen Religionsgeschichte (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1952)
ByZ	Byzantinische Zeitschrift
CAH	Cambridge Ancient History
CEg	Chronique d'Égypte
Černý, Coptic Etymological Dictionary	J. Černý, Coptic Etymological Dictionary (Cambridge: Cambridge University, 1976)
ClR	Classical Review
Crum, Coptic Dictionary	W. E. Crum, A Coptic Dictionary (Oxford: Clarendon, 1962)
DMP	Demotic Magical Papyri (see Griffith and Thompson)
EPRO	Études préliminaires aux religions orientales dans l'empire romain
Erman and Grapow, Wörterbuch	A. Erman and H. Grapow, Wörterbuch der aegyptischen Sprache im Auftrage der deutschen Akademien 5 vols. (Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1971 repr.)
GGA	Göttingische gelehrte Anzeigen
GM	Göttinger Miszellen
HR	History of Religions
HSCP	Harvard Studies in Classical Philology
HTR	Harvard Theological Review
JAC	Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum
JBL	Journal of Biblical Literature

JEA	Journal of Egyptian Archaeology
JHS	Journal of Hellenic Studies
JNES	Journal of Near Eastern Studies
JWCI	Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institute
KP	Der kleine Pauly
Kropp, Koptische Zaubertexte	A. M. Kropp, Ausgewählte Koptische Zaubertexte 3 vols. (Brussels: Fondation Reine Elisabeth, 1930–31)
LCL	Loeb Classical Library
LdÄ	Lexikon der Ägyptologie, ed. by W. Helck and E. Otto (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1975–)
LSJ	Liddel-Scott-Jones, A Greek-English Lexikon (Oxford: Clarendon, 1968)
N.F.	Neue Folge
NHSt	Nag Hammadi Studies
NT.S	Novum Testamentum, Supplements
OMRM	Oudheidkundige mededelingen uit het rijksmuseum van oudheden te Leiden
Orph. Frag.	Orphicorum Fragmenta, ed. O. Kern (Dublin and Zürich: Weidmann, ^{3}1972)
P.Oxy.	Papyrus Oxyrhynchus
PDM	Papyri Demoticae Magicae (as cited in this volume only)
PGM	Papyri Graecae Magicae. Die Griechischen Zauberpapyri, 2 vols., ed. K. Preisendanz, et al. (Stuttgart: Teubner, ^{2}1973–74)
PRE	Pauly-Wissowa, Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Altertumswissenschaften
PRE.S	Pauly-Wissowa, Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Altertumswissenschaften, Supplementa
Preisendanz	See PGM; on Preisendanz, vol. III, see the Introduction below, n. 37
RAC	Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum
RÄRG	See Bonnet, RÄRG
RhM	Rheinisches Museum für Philologie
Roscher	W. H. Roscher, Ausführliches Lexicon der griechischen und römischen Mythologie
RVV	Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten
SCHNT	Studia ad Corpus Hellenisticum Novi Testamenti
SO	Symbolae Osloenses
StPapy	Studia papyrologica
TAPA	Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association
TDNT	Theological Dictionary of the New Testament
TU	Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur
WSt	Wiener Studien
ZÄS	Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde
ZPE	Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik

Abbreviations of Major Titles Used in This Volume

Ancient authors are cited with name and title, the latter following the customary abbreviations. In cases of doubt, see LSJ, pp. xvi–xxxviii: "Authors and Works."

Abt, Apologie	A. Abt, Die Apologie des Apuleius von Madaura und die antike Zauberei. Beiträge zur Erläuterung der Schrift de magia (Giessen: Töpelmann, 1908)
Audollent, Defixionum Tabellae	A. Audollent, Defixionum Tabellae quotquot innotuerunt . . . (Paris: Fontemoing, 1904)
Bell, Nock, and Thompson, Magical Texts	H. I. Bell, A. D. Nock, and Herbert Thompson, Magical Texts from a Bilingual Papyrus in the British Museum (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1933)
Bergman, Ich bin Isis	J. Bergman, Ich bin Isis. Studien zum memphitischen Hintergrund der griechischen Isisaretologien, Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis 3 (Uppsala: Almqvist and Wiksell, 1968)
Berthelot and Ruelle, Collection des anciens alchimistes grecs	M. Berthelot and C.-E. Ruelle, Collection des anciens alchimistes grecs (Paris: Steinheil, 1888)
Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen	L. Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen (Strassburg: Trübner, 1898)
Betz, "The Delphic Maxim"	H. D. Betz, "The Delphic Maxim 'Know Yourself' in the Greek Magical Papyri," HR 21 (1981): 156–71
Betz, "Fragments"	H. D. Betz, "Fragments from a Catabasis Ritual in a Greek Magical Papyrus," HR 19 (1980): 287–95
Betz, Lukian	H. D. Betz, Lukian von Samosata und das Neue Testament, TU 76 (Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1961)
Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth	C. J. Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth (Leiden: Brill, 1973)
Bonner, SMA	C. Bonner, Studies in Magical Amulets Chiefly Graeco-Egyptian (Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1950)
Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts	J. F. Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts, Nisaba 9 (Leiden: Brill, 1978)
Bousset, Hauptprobleme	W. Bousset, Hauptprobleme der Gnosis (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck and Ruprecht, 1907)

Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien	W. Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien. Aufsätze zur Religionsgeschichte des hellenistischen Zeitalters, ed. A. F. Verheule, NT.S 50 (Leiden: Brill, 1979)
Budge, Amulets and Talismans	E. A. Wallis Budge, Amulets and Talismans (New York: Dover, 1978)
Burkert, Griechische Religion	W. Burkert, Griechische Religion der archaischen und Klassischen Epoche, Die Religionen der Menschheit 15 (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1977)
Cook, Zeus	A. B. Cook, Zeus: A Study in Ancient Religion, 3 vols. (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1914–40)
Darby, Food: The Gift of Osiris	W. T. Darby et al., Food: The Gift of Osiris, 2 vols. (London, New York, and San Francisco: Academic Press, 1977)
Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East	A. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1978, repr.)
Delatte, Anecdota Atheniensia	A. Delatte, Anecdota Atheniensia, vol. I (Paris: Champion, 1927)
Delatte and Derchain, Les intailles	A. Delatte and Ph. Derchain, Les intailles magiques gréco-égyptiennes de la Bibliothèque Nationale (Paris: Bibliothèque Nationale, 1964)
Dieterich, Abraxas	A. Dieterich, Abraxas. Studien zur Religionsgeschichte des spätern Altertums (Leipzig: Teubner, 1891)
Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie	A. Dieterich, Eine Mithrasliturgie (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, ^{3}1966)
Dornseiff, Das Alphabet	F. Dornseiff, Das Alphabet in Mystik und Magie (Leipzig: Teubner, ^{2}1925)
Faulkner, Coffin Texts	R. O. Faulkner, The Ancient Egyptian Coffin Texts, 3 vols. (Warminster, England: Aris and Phillips, 1973–78)
Festugière, La révélation	A. J. Festugière, La révélation d'Hermès Trismégiste, 4 vols. (Paris: Société d'édition "Les belles lettres," ^{3}1981)
Gager, Moses in Greco-Roman Paganism	J. G. Gager, Moses in Greco-Roman Paganism, Society of Biblical Literature Monograph Series 16 (Nashville and New York: Abingdon, 1972)
Gardiner, Onomastica	A. H. Gardiner, Ancient Egyptian Onomastica, 2 vols. (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1947)
Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews	L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews, 7 vols. (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society of America, 1909–38)
Griffith and Thompson, The	F. Ll. Griffith and H. Thompson, eds., The

Leyden Papyrus	Leyden Papyrus: An Egyptian Magical Book (New York: Dover, 1974; repr. of 1904 ed.)
Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride	J. G. Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride (Cambridge: University of Wales Press, 1970)
Griffiths, The Isis-Book	J. G. Griffiths, Apuleius of Madauros: The Isis-Book (Metamorphoses, Book XI), EPRO 39 (Leiden: Brill, 1975)
Gundel, Astrologumena	W. Gundel and H. G. Gundel, Astrologumena. Die astrologische Literatur in der Antike und ihre Geschichte, Sudhoffs Archiv 6 (Wiesbaden: Steiner, 1966)
Gundel, Dekane und Dekansternbilder	W. Gundel, Dekane und Dekansternbilder (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, ^{2}1969)
Harris, Minerals	J. R. Harris, Lexicographical Studies in Ancient Egyptian Minerals, Deutsche Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin. Institut für Orientforschung, 54 (Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1961)
Hopfner, OZ	T. Hopfner, Griechisch-ägyptischer Offenbarungszauber, 2 vols., Studien zur Palaeographie und Papyruskunde, 21, 23 (Leipzig: Haessel, 1921, 1924)
Hornung, Das Amduat	E. Hornung, Das Amduat oder die Schrift des verborgenen Raumes, 3 vols., Ägyptologische Abhandlungen 7; 13 (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1963–67)
Johnson, "Dialect"	J. H. Johnson, "The Dialect of the Demotic Magical Papyrus of London and Leiden," in Studies in Honor of George R. Hughes, January 12, 1977, ed. by J. H. Johnson and E. F. Wente (Chicago: The Oriental Institute, 1977), pp. 110–25
Johnson, Verbal System	J. H. Johnson, The Demotic Verbal System, Studies in Oriental Civilization 38 (Chicago: The Oriental Institute, 1976)
Klauck, Herrenmahl	H.-J. Klauck, Herrenmahl und hellenistischer Kult. Eine religionsgeschichtliche Untersuchung zum ersten Korintherbrief, NTA, N.F. 15 (Münster: Aschendorff, 1982)
Lichtheim, Ancient Egyptian Literature	M. Lichtheim, Ancient Egyptian Literature, 3 vols. (Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, 1973–80)
Morenz, Egyptian Religion	S. Morenz, Egyptian Religion (London: Methuen, 1973)
Nilsson, GGR	M. P. Nilsson, Geschichte der griechischen Religion, 2 vols. (München: Beck, ^{3}1967, ^{2}1961)
Nock, Essays	A. D. Nock, Essays on Religion and the An- cient World, 2 vols. (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1972)

Nock and Festugière, Hermès Trismégiste	A. D. Nock and A.-J. Festugière, Hermès Trismégiste. Corpus Hermeticum, 4 vols. (Paris: Les belles lettres, 1946–54)
Preisigke, Namenbuch	K. Preisigke, Namenbuch (Heidelberg: Selbstverlag des Herausgebers, 1922)
Ranke, Ägyptische Personennamen	H. Ranke, Die ägyptischen Personennamen, 2 vols. (Hamburg: Selbstverlag des Verfassers, 1932–52)
Reitzenstein, Poimandres	R. Reitzenstein, Poimandres. Studien zur griechisch-ägyptischen und frühchristlichen Literatur (Leipzig: Teubner, 1904)
Robinson, The Nag Hammadi Library in English	J. M. Robinson, ed., The Nag Hammadi Library in English (Leiden: Brill, 1977)
Smith, Jesus the Magician	M. Smith, Jesus the Magician (San Francisco: Harper and Row, 1978)

Introduction to the Greek Magical Papyri

Hans Dieter Betz

"The Greek magical papyri" is a name given by scholars to a body of papyri from Greco-Roman Egypt containing a variety of magical spells and formulae, hymns and rituals. The extant texts are mainly from the second century B.C. to the fifth century A.D. To be sure, this body of material represents only a small number of all the magical spells that once existed.[1] Beyond these papyri we possess many other kinds of material: artifacts, symbols and inscriptions on gemstones, on ostraka and clay bowls, and on tablets of gold, silver, lead, tin and so forth.[2]

I

The history of the discovery of the Greek magical papyri is a fascinating subject.[3] We know from literary sources that a large number of magical books in which spells were collected existed in antiquity. Most of them, however, have disappeared as the result of systematic suppression and destruction. The episode about the burning of the magical books in Ephesus in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts 19:10) is well known and typical of many such instances. According to Suetonius,[4] Augustus ordered 2,000 magical scrolls to be burned in the year 13 B.C. Indeed, the first centuries of the Christian era saw many burnings of books, often of magical books, and not a few burnings that included the magicians themselves.

As a result of these acts of suppression, the magicians and their literature went underground. The papyri themselves testify to this by the constantly recurring admonition to keep the books secret.[5] Yet the systematic destruction of the magical literature over a long period of time resulted in the disappearance of most of the original texts by the end of antiquity. To us in the twentieth century, terms such as "underground literature" and "suppressed literature" are well known as descriptions of contemporary phenomena. We also know that such literature is extremely important for the understanding of what people are really thinking and doing in a particular time, geographical area, or cultural context. Magical beliefs and practices can hardly be overestimated in their importance for the daily life of the people. The religious beliefs and practices of most people were identical with some form of magic, and the neat distinctions we make today between approved and disapproved forms of religion—calling the former "religion" and "church" and the latter "magic" and "cult"—did not exist in antiquity except among a few intellectuals.[6]

Thus the suppression of this magical literature has deprived us of one of our most important sources of ancient religious life. Modern views of Greek and Roman religions have long suffered from certain deformities because they were unconsciously shaped by the only remaining sources: the literature of the cultural elite, and the archeological remains of the official cults of the states and cities.

But not everything was lost.[7] At the end of antiquity, some philosophers and theologians, astrologers and alchemists collected magical books and spells that were still available. Literary writers included some of the material in their works, if only to make fun of it. It is known that philosophers of the Neopythagorean and Neoplatonic schools, as well as Gnostic and Hermetic groups, used magical books and hence must have possessed copies. But most of their material vanished and what we have left are their quotations.

The Greek magical papyri are, however, original documents and primary sources. Their discovery is as important for Greco-Roman religions as is the discovery of the Qumran texts for Judaism or the Nag Hammadi library for Gnosticism.[8]

Like these manuscript discoveries, the discovery of the Greek magical papyri was and often still is the outcome of sheer luck and almost incredible coincidences. In the case of the major portion of the collection, the so-called Anastasi collection, the discovery and rescue is owed to the efforts (and, if one may use the term, cooperation) of two individuals separated by more than a thousand years: the modern collector d'Anastasi and the original collector at Thebes.

In the nineteenth century, there was among the "diplomatic" representatives at the court in Alexandria a man who called himself Jean d'Anastasi (1780?–1857). Believed to be Armenian by birth, he ingratiated himself enough with the pasha to become the consular representative of Sweden.[9] It was a time when diplomats and military men often were passionate collectors of antiquities, and M. d'Anastasi happened to be at the right place at the right time. He succeeded in bringing together large collections of papyri from Egypt, among them sizable magical books, some of which he said he had obtained in Thebes.[10] These collections he shipped to Europe, where they were auctioned off and bought by various libraries: the British Museum in London, the Bibliothèque Nationale and the Louvre in Paris, the Staatliche Museen in Berlin, and the Rijksmuseum in Leiden. Another papyrus was acquired by Jean François Mimaut (1774–1837), also a diplomat, whose acquisition ended up in the Bibliothèque Nationale (PGM III).[11] Unfortunately, we know almost nothing about the circumstances of the actual findings. But it is highly likely that many of the papyri from the Anastasi collection came from the same place, perhaps a tomb or a temple library.[12] If this assumption is correct, about half a dozen of the best-preserved and largest extant papyri may have come from the collection of one man in Thebes. He is of course unknown to us, but we may suppose that he collected the magical material for his own use. Perhaps he was more than a magician. We may attribute his almost systematic collections of magica to a man who was also a scholar,[13] probably philosophically inclined, as well as a bibliophile and archivist concerned about the preservation of this material.[14]

Although the person who collected the Anastasi papyri remains unknown, comparable figures are known from later Egyptian literature. In the Demotic Papyrus no. 30646 in the Cairo Museum, there appears Prince Khamwas, the fourth son of King Ramses II and high priest of Ptah in Memphis. This legendary figure belongs to the Stories of the High Priests of Memphis, published by Francis Llewelyn Griffith,[15] stories that in many ways can serve as illustrative companions to the Greek magical papyri. Miriam Lichtheim has given this summary portrait in the third volume of her Ancient Egyptian Literature:

> Prince Khamwas, son of King Ramses II and high priest of Ptah at Memphis, was a very learned scribe and magician who spent his time in the study of ancient monuments and books. One day he was told of the existence of a book of magic written by the god Thoth himself and kept in the tomb of a prince named Naneferkaptah (Na-nefer-ka-ptah), who lived in the distant past and was buried somewhere in the vast necropolis of Memphis. After a long search, Prince Khamwas, accom> panied by his foster brother Inaros, found the tomb of Naneferkaptah and entered it. He saw the magic book, which radiated a strong light, and tried to seize it. But the spirits of Naneferkaptah and of his wife Ahwere rose up to defend their cherished possession. . . .[16]

The collection of the Anastasi papyri, if it was brought together by one person, may have been buried with him, either in his tomb or in the rubble of collapsed buildings. At any rate, when d'Anastasi came to Thebes and the papyri were offered to him, he sensed their value and acquired them, thus saving them from destruction.

It took almost another century, however, before scholars learned to appreciate the value of the papyri and started investigating them. It is noteworthy that the auction catalog of d'Anastasi's collection calls the material simply "fromage mystique."[17] Until the middle of the nineteenth century, the papyri were stored in the museums simply as curiosities.

Scholarly investigations began when the great Dutch scholar Caspar Jacob Christiaan Reuvens (1793–1835) described some of the content of the Leiden papyrus J 395 (PGM XIII) in his Lettres à M. Letronne published in 1830.[18] This work was reviewed almost immediately by the German historian of religion Karl Otfried Müller (1797–1840), who also translated Reuvens's excerpts into German.[19] But Reuvens died before his edition of the Leiden papyri could appear. It was forty years before another Dutch scholar, the Egyptologist Conrad Leemans (1809–93), published the edition (PGM XII, XIII)[20] together with a Latin translation (1885).[21]

The first publication, however, is due to the efforts of the British scholar Charles Wycliffe Goodwin (1817–78), who published one of the papyri (PGM V) together with an English translation and commentary for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society in 1853.[22] Then the German philologist Gustav Parthey (1798–1872) edited the two papyri from Berlin in 1865 (PGM I, II).[23] A very important new phase began when the Viennese papyrologist Carl Wessely (1860–1931) published in 1888 a transcription of the great magical papyrus of Paris (PGM IV), the London papyrus (PGM V), and the Mimaut papyrus (PGM III),[24] followed in 1889 by corrections.[25] In 1893 both Wessely[26] and Frederick George Kenyon (1863–1952)[27] independently edited and published the magical papyri of London (PGM VII–X). The last major papyrus was published in 1925 by the Norwegian scholar Samson Eitrem (1872–1966),[28] who had acquired in Egypt a valuable magical scroll with many drawings (PGM XXXVI).

With these important publications, the major pieces of the Greek magical papyri known to this period had become available. It seems to have been a suggestion first made by the great scholar of Greek religion, Albrecht Dieterich (1866–1908), that all the available papyri should be published in a handy study edition. But this idea developed only gradually after Dieterich began teaching a seminar on the subject of the magical papyri at the University of Heidelberg in 1905.[29]

Today it is astonishing to learn that teaching such a seminar at that time was quite a daring enterprise. Magic was so utterly despised by historians and philologists that the announcement of the seminar did not mention the word "magic" but was simply phrased as "Selected Pieces from the Greek Papyri."[30]

How far the dislike of the magical papyri could go is illustrated by a remark made by Ulrich von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff: "I once heard a well-known scholar complain that these papyri were found because they deprived antiquity of the noble splendor of classicism."[31]

Dieterich,[32] however, was at the edge of a wave of interest generated by the new discipline of history of religions. His seminar therefore had a surprising attraction for students, some of whom wrote their dissertations on related subjects and became contributors to the study edition. The plan for such a study edition was seriously threatened by Dieterich's sudden death on 6 May 1908, but the work was taken over by Dieterich's students, foremost of whom was Richard Wünsch, chief editor. Adam Abt, Ludwig Fahz, Adolf Erman, Georg Möller, and other contributors[33] stepped in to carry on the work.

When the body of the material of PGM I–IV was almost ready, World War I broke out and interrupted the work. Wünsch, Abt, and Möller were killed in the war. Despite these terrible losses and the desperate economic situation following the war, the publisher, B. G. Teubner of Leipzig, did not give up the project, but decided to start over. The edition was entrusted to Karl Preisendanz (1883–1968), another of Dieterich's former students.[34] Scholars at that time faced difficulties scarcely conceivable to us today, yet they persisted. In addition, a remarkable degree of international cooperation existed among the scholars.[35] Sam Eitrem from Oslo and Adolf Jacoby from Luxemburg joined the team, and British, French, and Dutch scholars gave their support to the effort. The Notgemeinschaft der Deutschen Wissenschaft as well as other governmental agencies gave financial support, so that despite all the problems the first volume of the first edition of the Papyri Graecae Magicae could appear in 1928, with a second volume following in 1931.[36]

While all this was happening, new magical papyri were being discovered and published. A third volume, which was also supposed to contain extensive indexes, therefore became necessary. But this volume never appeared, for World War II broke out.

Despite the war, the work had progressed to the actual production of galley proofs, with the preface dated "Pentecost, 1941,"[37] when on 4 December 1943 the publishing house of Teubner in Leipzig was bombed and everything was destroyed.[38] Fortunately, however, the galley proofs survived the war and are at present being used by a number of scholars in the form of xerox copies. When Karl Preisendanz, the editor of the first edition and tireless promoter of the study of the Greek magical papyri before and after World War II, died on 26 April 1968, the publishing house of Teubner, which had in part been relocated in Stuttgart, West Germany, decided to bring out a new edition. This new edition was prepared by Albert Henrichs, a papyrologist from Cologne, who has been on the faculty of Harvard University since 1973.[39] It appeared in two volumes in 1973–74.[40] The first volume is mostly a reprint of the first edition, though many corrections have been made. The second volume, however, is considerably different from the first edition. A number of papyri were reedited completely, and the papyri originally planned to appear in vol. III were added so that vol. II of the 1974 edition contains all pieces up to PGM LXXXI. The idea of a third volume containing the indexes was postponed because all indexes would have to be redone in view of the changes and additions in the material.

II

What is the significance of the Greek magical papyri? Scholars since Albrecht Dieterich have consistently pointed out the importance of the Greek magical papyri to the study of ancient religions; thus we can limit ourselves here to a summary of the issues.[41]

Historians of religion are intrigued by the Greek magical papyri for a number of reasons. If, as Dieterich rightly says,[42] the papyri are a depository of a great religious literature over many centuries, the recovery of the sources becomes a task of primary interest. In fact, throughout these sources we find citations of hymns, rituals, formulae from liturgies otherwise lost, and little bits of mythology called historiolae. These older materials are now embedded in a secondary context, but by careful application of the methods of literary criticism they are often recoverable.[43]

Taken as a whole, the material presents a plethora of interesting problems for modern scholarship. One must realize first that the material assembled under the name Greek magical papyri represents a collection of texts of diverse origin and nature. This collection includes individual spells and remedies, as well as collections made by ancient magicians, from the early Hellenistic period to late antiquity. Since the material comes from Greco-Roman Egypt, it reflects an amazingly broad religious and cultural pluralism. Not surprising is the strong influence of Egyptian religion throughout the Greek magical papyri, although here the texts nevertheless show a great variety. Expressed in Greek, Demotic, or Coptic, some texts represent simply Egyptian religion. In others, the Egyptian element has been transformed by Hellenistic religious concepts. Most of the texts are mixtures of several religions—Egyptian, Greek, Jewish, to name the most important.

The picture presented by the Greek magical papyri has been changed substantially by the inclusion of the translation of the Demotic magical papyri. In Preisendanz's edition, the Demotic material was deleted, even when it occurred in the same papyrus as Greek sections apparently written by the same scribe. The inclusion of the Demotic material in the present translation raises new and intriguing questions regarding the relationship between the Greek texts and the antecedent Egyptian sources. Further studies must clarify the process of transmission and transformation of these texts. Such studies will gain new insights into the complex phenomena of the hellenization of religious traditions. (See also the Introduction to the Demotic texts below.)

Another interesting problem is posed by the fact that this material from Greco-Roman Egypt contains many sections that are Greek in origin and nature.[44] How did this older Greek religious literature find its way into Egypt? We do not, and probably never shall, know. In this older material, the Greek gods are alive and well. But Zeus, Hermes, Apollo, Artemis, Aphrodite, and others are portrayed not as Hellenic and aristocratic, as in literature, but as capricious, demonic, and even dangerous, as in Greek folklore.[45] The gods and their activities resemble those in the popular myths and local cults, as reported by mythographers or by Pausanias. Therefore, strange as it may sound, if we wish to study Greek folk religion, the magical papyri found in Egypt are to be regarded as one of the primary sources.[46]

Questions similar to those appropriate to the study of Greek religion must be raised in view of the material (divine names as well as entire passages) that comes from some form of Judaism. Jewish magic was famous in antiquity,[47] and more sources have come to light in recent years; but the origin and nature of the sections representing Jewish magic in the Greek magical papyri is far from clear. Did this material actually originate with Jewish magicians? How did it get into the hands of the magicians who wrote the Greek magical papyri? What kind of transformation took place in the material itself? If the texts in question come from Judaism, what type of Judaism do they represent?

The historian of religion will be especially interested in the kind of syncretism represented in the Greek magical papyri.[48] This syncretism is more than a mixture of diverse elements from Egyptian, Greek, Babylonian, and Jewish religion, with a few sprinkles of Christianity.[49] Despite the diversity of texts, there is in the whole corpus a tendency toward assimilation and uniformity. Such assimilation and uniformity, however, includes primarily the religious traditions already mentioned: the Romans, although in control of Egypt by the time most of the papyri were written, left only a few traces in the material. Thus the papyri represent a Greco-Egyptian, rather than the more general Greco-Roman, syncretism.

In this syncretism, the indigenous ancient Egyptian religion has in part survived, in part been profoundly hellenized.[50] In its Hellenistic transformation, the Egyptian religion of the pre-Hellenistic era appears to have been reduced and simplified, no doubt to facilitate its assimilation into Hellenistic religion as the predominant cultural reference. It is quite clear that the magicians who wrote and used the Greek papyri were Hellenistic in outlook.

Hellenization, however, also includes the egyptianizing of Greek religious traditions. The Greek magical papyri contain many instances of such egyptianizing transformations, which take very different forms in different texts or layers of tradition. Again, working out the more exact nature of this religious and cultural interaction remains the task of future research.

The papyri also provide many insights into the phenomenon of the magician as a religious functionary, in both the Egyptian and the Hellenistic setting. One must be cautious, however, in making generalizing statements in regard to the figure of the magician in the Greek magical papyri.[51] Some of the magicians writing and using the spells may have been associated with temples of Egyptian and Greek deities. According to Egyptian practice, the magician was a resident member of the temple priesthood. Genuine understanding of the older Egyptian and Greek languages and traditions can be assumed in some of the material, but by no means in all instances.

There are texts reflecting perhaps a different type of magician, a type we know from the Greek religious milieu.[52] This type of wandering craftsman seems keen to adopt and adapt every religious tradition that appeared useful to him, while the knowledge and understanding of what he adopted was characterized by a certain superficiality. This type of magician no longer understood the old languages, although he used remnants of them in transcription. He recited and used what must at one time have been metrically composed hymns; but he no longer recognized the meter, and he spoiled it when he inserted his own material. In the hands of magicians of this type, the gods from the various cults gradually merged, and as their natures became blurred, they often changed into completely different deities. For these magicians, there was no longer any cultural difference between the Egyptian and the Greek gods, or between them and the Jewish god and the Jewish angels; and even Jesus was occasionally assimilated into this truly "ecumenical" religious syncretism of the Hellenistic world culture.

We should make it clear, however, that this syncretism is more than a hodgepodge of heterogeneous items. In effect, it is a new religion altogether, displaying unified religious attitudes and beliefs. As an example, one may mention the enormously important role of the gods and goddesses of the underworld. The role of these underworld deities was not new to Egyptian religion or, to some extent, to ancient Greek religion; but it is characteristic of the Hellenistic syncretism of the Greek magical papyri that the netherworld and its deities had become one of its most important concerns. The goddess Hekate, identical with Persephone, Selene, Artemis, and the old Babylonian goddess Ereschigal, is one of the deities most often invoked in the papyri. Through the egyptianizing influence of Osiris, Isis, and their company, other gods like Hermes, Aphrodite, and even the Jewish god

Iao, have in many respects become underworld deities. In fact, human life seems to consist of nothing but negotiations in the antechamber of death and the world of the dead. The underworld deities, the demons and the spirits of the dead, are constantly and unscrupulously invoked and exploited as the most important means for achieving the goals of human life on earth: the acquisition of love, wealth, health, fame, knowledge of the future, control over other persons, and so forth. In other words, there is a consensus that the best way to success and worldly pleasures is by using the underworld, death, and the forces of death.

Apart from this fascination with the control of death and the underworld powers, there is an equally important fascination with the universe. The older gods of the Greco-Egyptian pantheon now mostly represent the forces of the universe. Thus the Greek god most often invoked is Apollo Helios, a fact consistent with the enormous expansion of the worship of the sun in the Greco-Roman era. Besides other astral deities such as Selene, the constellation of the Bear, and the like, abstract deities, new and old, demand attention. These abstract deities personify Nature (Physis), Time (Kronos, Chronos), Destiny (the Moirai), and most important, the All (Aion). Popular Egyptian gods and goddesses are, however, called upon just as often. Yet the god most often employed is Iao, the Jewish god.

The people whose religion is reflected in the papyri agree that humanity is inescapably at the whim of the forces of the universe. Religion is nothing but taking seriously this dependency on the forces of the universe. Whether the gods are old or new, whether they come from Egyptian, Greek, Jewish, or Christian traditions, religion is regarded as nothing but the awareness of and reaction against our dependency on the unfathomable scramble of energies coming out of the universe. In this energy jungle, human life can only be experienced as a jungle, too. People's successes and failures appear to be only the result of Chance (Tyche). Individuals seem to be nothing but marionettes at the end of power lines, pulled here and there without their knowledge by invisible forces.

If this world view takes hold of people, what hope can there be for human life? How could ordinary men and women in the small towns of Egypt get something out of their lives? It is at this point that the magician enters the picture. In a transitional culture like Greco-Roman Egypt, a religious functionary who operated as a crisis manager became a necessity to the lives of ordinary people. This role the magician was able to fulfill.

Applying his craft, the magician could give people the feeling that he could make things work in a world where nothing seemed to work the way it used to. He had handbooks of magic,[53] which contained the condensed wisdom of the past, wisdom made effective to solve the problems of the present.

The magician claimed to know and understand the traditions of various religions. While other people could no longer make sense of the old religions, he was able to. He knew the code words needed to communicate with the gods, the demons, and the dead. He could tap, regulate, and manipulate the invisible energies.[54] He was a problem solver who had remedies for a thousand petty troubles plaguing mankind: everything from migraine to runny nose to bedbugs to horse races, and, of course, all the troubles of love and money.

In short, it was this kind of world in which the magician served as a power and communications expert, crisis manager, miracle healer and inflicter of damages, and all-purpose therapist and agent of worried, troubled, and troublesome souls.[55]

To raise one final question: It is one of the puzzles of all magic that from time immemorial it has survived throughout history, through the coming and going of entire religions, the scientific and technological revolutions, and the triumphs of modern medicine. Despite all these changes, there has always been an unbroken tradition of magic. Why is magic so irrepressible and ineradicable, if it is also true that its claims and promises never come true? Or do they? Do people never check up on the efficiency of magicians?

The answer appears to be that, in general, people are not interested in whether or not magicians' promises come true. People want to believe, so they simply ignore their suspicions that magic may all be deception and fraud. The enormous role deception plays in human life and society is well known to us.[56] In many crucial areas and in many critical situations of life, deception is the only method that really works. As the Roman aphorism sums it up, "Mundus vult decipi, ergo decipiatur" ("The world wishes to be deceived, and so it may be deceived"). To an immeasurable extent, people's lives carry on by what they decide they want to believe rather than by what they should believe or even know, by what appears to be real rather than by what is really real, by props and by fads, and by gobbledygook of this kind today and that kind tomorrow.

Magicians are those who have long ago explored these dimensions of the human mind. Rather than decrying the facts, they have exploited them. Magicians have known all along that people's religious need and expectations provide the greatest opportunity for the most effective of all deceptions. But instead of turning against religion, as the skeptics among the Greek and Roman philosophers did, the magicians made use of it. After all, magic is nothing but the art of making people believe that something is being done about those things in life about which we all know that we ourselves can do nothing.

Magic is the art that makes people who practice it feel better rather than worse, that provides the illusion of security to the insecure, the feeling of help to the helpless, and the comfort of hope to the hopeless.

Of course, it is all deception. But who can endure naked reality, especially when there is a way to avoid it? This is why magic has worked and continues to work, no matter what the evidence may be. Those whose lives depend on deception and delusion and those who provide them have formed a truly indissoluble symbiosis. Magic makes an unmanageable life manageable for those who believe in it, and a profession profitable for those who practice the art.

Notes

1. For a survey of the material, see the indispensible work by T. Hopfner, Griechisch-ägyptischer Offenbarungszauber, 2 vols. (Leipzig: Haessel, 1921, 1924); idem, "Mageia," PRE 14.1 (1928):201–393; S. Sauneron, Le papyrus magique illustré de Brooklyn (Brooklyn Museum 47.218.156) (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1970); idem, "Le monde du magicien égyptien," in Le monde du sorcier, Sources Orientales VII (Paris: Edition du Seuil, 1966) 27–65; J. F. Borghouts, The Magical Texts of Papyrus Leiden I 348 (Leiden: Brill, 1971); idem, "Magical Texts," in Textes et Langages de l'Egypte Pharaonique; Hommage à J.-F. Champollion (Le Caire: Institut d'Egypte, 1974), 3:7–19. See also J. F. Borghouts, "Magie," LdÄ 3 (1980):1137–51; H. Altenmüller, "Magische Literatur," LdÄ 3 (1980):1151–62. A wider range of literature is discussed by D. E. Aune, "Magic in Early Christianity," ANRW II. 23. 2 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1980) 1507–57.

2. See the collections by Campbell Bonner, Studies in Magical Amulets Chiefly Graeco-Egyptian, University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series XLIX (Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1950); idem, "Amulets Chiefly in the British Museum," Hesperia 20 (1951):301–45, pls. 96–100; idem, "A Miscellany of Engraved Stones," Hesperia 23

(1954): 138–57; A. Delatte and P. Derchain, Les intailles magiques gréco-égyptiennes (Paris: Bibliothèque Nationale, Cabinet des Medailles, 1964). On the latter, see especially the reviews by H. Seyrig, Syria 42 (1965): 409–10; K. Preisendanz, ByZ 59 (1966): 388–92; M. Smith, AJA 71 (1967): 417–19; A. A. Barb, Gnomon 41 (1969): 298–307. On the relationship between gems and papyri see M. Smith, "Relations between Magical Papyri and Magical Gems," Papyrologica Bruxellensia 18 (1979): 129–36; J. Schwartz, "Papyri Graecae Magicae und magische Gemmen," in M. J. Vermaseren, ed., Die orientalischen Religionen im Römerreich, EPRO 93 (Leiden: Brill, 1981) 485–509. For the magical tablets, see A. Audollent, Defixionum tabellae, quotquot innotuerunt . . . praeter Atticas . . . (Paris: Fontemoing, 1904); K. Preisendanz, "Fluchtafel (Defixion)," RAC 8 (1972): 1–29.

3. See especially K. Preisendanz, "Zur Überlieferungsgeschichte der spätantiken Magie," in Aus der Welt des Buches. Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, Beiheft 75 (Leipzig: Harrassowitz, 1951) 223–40.

4. Suetonius, Augustus 31.1. See Hopfner, OZ II, section 67; K. Preisendanz, "Dans le monde de la magie grecque," Chronique d'Egypte 10 (1935): 336–37; W. Speyer, "Büchervernichtung," JAC 13 (1970): 123–52, with bibliography.

5. PGM LVII and LXXII are even written in cryptography. See also my article "The Formation of Authoritative Tradition in the Greek Magical Papyri," in Jewish and Christian Self-Definition, vol. 3: Self-Definition in the Graeco-Roman World, ed. B. F. Meyer and E. P. Sanders (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1982), 161–70.

6. A definition of the notion of magic cannot be attempted here. In order to provide an adequate definition, the complexities of the notion, its relations with "religion" and "science," and the rather frustrating history and literature of the problem would have to be discussed first. For a good introduction to the question, see A. A. Barb, "The Survival of Magic Arts," in The Conflict between Paganism and Christianity in the Fourth Century, ed. A. Momigliano (Oxford: Clarendon, 1963) 100–125; G. Widengren, Religionsphänomenologie (Berlin: De Gruyter, 1969) 1–19; cf. also Aune, ANRW II. 23.2, 1510–16 and G. E. R. Lloyd, Magic, Reason and Experience, Studies in the Origin and Development of Greek Science (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1979).

7. On the survival of magic, see Barb's stimulating article mentioned in note 6 above. Also important for this question is the autobiographical account of the physician Thessalos and its discussion by J. Z. Smith, "The Temple and the Magician," in his Map Is Not Territory: Studies in the History of Religions (Leiden: Brill, 1978) 172–89.

8. For the circumstances connected with the discoveries of the Qumran texts, see F. M. Cross, The Ancient Library of Qumran and Modern Biblical Studies (Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1961); for the Nag Hammadi Library, see J. M. Robinson, "The Jung Codex: The Rise and Fall of a Monopoly," Religious Studies Review 3 (1977): 17–30.

9. C. J. C. Reuvens, Lettres à M. Letronne, sur les Papyrus bilingues et Grecs, et sur quelques autres Monumens Gréco-Egyptiens du Musée d'Antiquités de l'Université de Leide (Leiden: Luchtmans, 1830), 1: "M. le chevalier D'ANASTASY, vice-consul de Suède à Alexandrie." For bibliographical information, see W. R. Dawson, "Anastasi, Sallier, and Harris and Their Papyri," JEA 35 (1949): 158–66.

10. See the remark by F. Lenormant in his catalog of the Anastasi collection entitled Catalogue d'une collection d'antiquités égyptiennes. Cette collection rassemblée par M. d'Anastasi, Consul général de Suède à Alexandrie, sera vendue aux enchères publiques Rue de Clichy, N° 76, les Mardi 23, Mercredi 24, Jeudi 25, Vendredi 26 & Samedi 27 1857 à une heure, etc. (Paris: Maulde et Renou, 1857) 84: "M. Anastasi, dans ses fouilles à Thèbes avait découvert la bibliothèque d'un gnostique égyptien du second siècle, et une partie de cette bibliothèque avait passé avec sa première collection dans le musée de Leide; c'est de là que venait le fameux texte magique en écriture démotique et deux petits papyrus grecs pliés en forme de livres qui font plusieurs des plus beaux ornements de ce musée."

11. See J.-F. Dubois, Description des antiquités égyptiennes grecques et romaines, monuments cophtes et arabes composant la collection de Feu M.J.-F. Mimaut (Paris: Panckoucke, 1837) pp. Vff.

12. Cf. the report of another collector who speaks of his "residence of eighteen years at Thebes, entirely devoted to its objects of antiquity" (p. IX). This man, a Greek named Giovanni d'Athanasi, from the island of Lemnos, the son of a Cairo merchant, wrote his story at the suggestion of English travelers: Giovanni d'Athanasi, A Brief Account of the Researches and Discoveries in Upper Egypt, made under the direction of Henry Salt, Esq., to which is added a detailed catalogue of Mr. Salt's collection of Egyptian Antiquities; illustrated with twelve engravings of some of the most interesting objects, and an enumeration of those articles purchased for the British Museum (London: John Hearne, 1836). As d'Athanasi reports, the papyri are found mostly in or near tombs; so he says about the Demotic papyri: "they are very rare, and are found not in the mummies, but in the terra-cotta urns which are found closed up and buried in the earth around the tombs" (p. 79). See also the Catalogue of the Very Magnificent and Extraordinary Collection of Egyptian Antiquities, the Property of Giovanni d'Athanasi, which will be sold by auction by Mr. Leigh Sotheby, at his house, 3, Wellington Street, Strand, on Monday, March 13th, 1837, and the Six following Days (Sunday excepted), at One o'Clock precisely (London: J. Davy, 1837) 23–24: "Manuscript Rolls of Papyrus, found in the tombs at Thebes." On the whole subject, see Wolfgang Speyer, Bücherfunde in der Glaubenswerbung der Antike (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck and Ruprecht, 1970), esp. 44ff.: books placed as gifts in tombs.

13. PGM V.a is a loose page stuck into a work on chemistry, the Papyrus graecus Holmiensis in Stockholm. This indicates that the owner and collector of the magical material also possessed works on chemistry. See also B. Olsson, "Zwei Papyrusstellen besprochen," Aegyptus 12 (1932): 355–56; Preisendanz, Papyrusfunde und Papyrusforschung 91–92.

14. See my article mentioned in note 5 above.

15. Francis Llewelyn Griffith, Stories of the High Priests of Memphis, 2 vols. (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1900).

16. Miriam Lichtheim, Ancient Egyptian Literature, vol. 3: The Late Period (Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, 1980) 127; cf. also 8–9. See also Farouk Gomaà, Chaemwese. Sohn Ramses' II. und Hoherpriester von Memphis, Ägyptologische Abhandlungen 27 (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1973), esp. 70ff. The papyrus was found in a Christian (!) tomb in Thebes. It should be noted that the story dealing with the search for the secret book has a parallel in Pseudo-Democritus, who may be identical with Bolos of Mendes. According to this text, Democritus went to Memphis where he was received by Ostanes and his students in the temple of Ptah, but Ostanes died before he initiated Democritus into his mysteries and handed his secret books over to him. Democritus also brought up the shadow of Ostanes from Hades and asked him about the books. Ostanes replied that they were in the temple, where they were finally discovered. Both names occur also in PGM (Democritus: VII.167, 795; XII. 351; Ostanes: IV.2006; XII.122). The text is given in J. Bidez and F. Cumont, Les mages hellénisés II (Paris: Société d'édition "Les belles lettres," 1938) 317–18; see J. H. Waszink, "Bolos," RAC 2 (1954): 502–8; Speyer, Bücherfunde 26–27, 72–73.

17. Lenormant, Catalogue 87 about PGM IV: "En tête sont trois pages de copte, qui débutent par l'histoire d'un fromage mystique pour la composition duquel s'associent Osiris, Sabaoth, Iao, Jésus et tous les autres éons. Ce fromage n'est autre que la gnose."

18. See note 9 above.

19. GGA, 56. Stück, den 9. April 1831, pp. 545–54. Müller remarks (p. 547): "Es gibt wohl keine Urkunde, die es so deutlich machte, wie die Magie, diese Seuche der Geister, vor allem in Aegypten sich entwickelt, und von dem alten Religionssystem dieses Volkes ausgehend, mit Hülfe metaphysischer Speculationen und verworrener Naturkenntnisse, sich zu einem Schrecken erregenden Umfange ausgebildet habe."

20. Leemans's edition was based upon Reuvens's manuscript. See Preisendanz, "Zur Überlieferungsgeschichte," 225 n.13.

21. C. Leemans, Papyri graeci musei antiquarii publici Lugduni-Batavi. Regis augustissimi jussu edidit, interpretationem latinam, annotationem, indicem et tabulas addidit C. L., 2 vols. (Lugduni Batavorum: Brill, 1843, 1885). On Leemans, see L'Egyptologue Conrade Leemans et son correspondence. Contribution à l'histoire d'une science, à l'occasion du cent-cinquantième an- niversaire du déchiffrement des hiéroglyphes et du centennaire des Congrès des Orientalistes (Leiden: Brill, 1973).

22. C. W. Goodwin, Fragment of a Graeco-Egyptian Work upon Magic: From a Papyrus in the British Museum, Edited for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, with a Translation and Notes. Publications of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, no. II (Cambridge: Deighton, 1852).

23. G. Parthey, "Zwei griechische Zauberpapyri des Berliner Museums," Philologische und historische Abhandlungen der Kgl. Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin 1865 (Berlin: Kgl. Akademie der Wissenschaften, 1866) 109–80.

24. C. Wessely, "Griechische Zauberpapyrus von Paris und London," Denkschriften der Akademie der Wissenschaften in Wien, philosophisch-historische Klasse 36 (1888): 27–208. On Wessely's achievements in particular, see H. Gerstinger, Aegyptus 12 (1932): 250–55; Preisendanz, Papyrusfunde 120–22.

25. K. Wessely, "Zu den griechischen Papyri des Louvre und der Bibliothèque nationale," Fünfzehnter Jahresbericht des K. K. Staatsgymnasiums in Hernals (Wien: Verlag des K. K. Staatsgymnasiums in Hernals, 1889) 3–23. See the review by A. Dieterich, Berliner Philologische Wochenschrift 11 (1891): 9–10.

26. "Neue griechische Zauberpapyri," Denkschriften der Kaiserlichen Akademie der Wissenschaften [Wien], philosophisch-historische Klasse 42 (1893), II. Abhandlung.

27. F. G. Kenyon, Greek Papyri in the British Museum, vol. I (London: British Museum, 1893).

28. S. Eitrem, Papyri Osloenses, I: Magical Papyri (Oslo: Dybwad, 1925).

29. See A. Dieterich, Abraxas (Leipzig: Teubner, 1891), p. 164 n.1, and his remark in a review article, "Griechische und römische Religion," ARW 8 (1905): 486–87:

> Es nimmt mich immer wieder wunder, dass der unermeßliche Gewinn, der aus den Zauberpapyri nach so vielen Seiten hin zu erlangen ist, nur so wenige Arbeiter lockt. Wie mancher, der religionsgeschichtliche Arbeit tun will, täte besser hier sich zu bemühen als um Probleme herumzureden, zu deren Lösung er doch nichts beitragen kann. Nach dem Schema der 'Papyrologie' gehören sie weder zu den Urkunden noch zu den literarischen Papyri; denn daß sich hier die große religiöse Literatur von Jahrhunderten niedergeschlagen hat, ist nur sehr wenigen deutlich. Die Unbekanntschaft mit den magischen Papyri macht sich zum Schaden so mancher religionshistorischer Arbeiten, auch der letzten Jahre, bemerklich, und da die wichtigste Publikation von Wessely in den Denkschriften der Wiener Akademie, philos.-hist. Klasse XXXVI Band 1888, allerdings ohne eigene recensio und emendatio kaum benutzbar ist, habe ich es mit einem meiner Schüler zusammen unternommen, zunächst wenigstens das kapitalste Stück dieser Literatur, das grosse Pariser Zauberbuch, in einer neuen Ausgabe vorzulegen.

See also K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae. Die griechischen Zauberpapyri I (Leipzig and Berlin: Teubner, 1928), p. VI.

30. S. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae I, p. V.

31. U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, Reden und Vorträge (Berlin: Weidmann, ²1902) 254–55. The remark in full reads as follows:

> Ich habe einmal gehört, wie ein bedeutender Gelehrter beklagte, dass diese Papyri gefunden wären, weil sie dem Altertum den vornehmen Schimmer der Klassizität nehmen. Dass sie das thun, ist unbestreitbar, aber ich freue mich dessen. Denn ich will meine Hellenen nicht bewundern, sondern verstehen, damit ich sie gerecht beurteilen kann. Und selbst Mahadöh, der Herr der Erden,—soll er strafen, soll er schonen, muss er den Menschen menschlich sehn.

32. It should be noted, however, that Dieterich's doctoral dissertation was already devoted to the subject, a work that posed most of the pertinent problems. The dissertation was published in an expanded form under the title "Papyrus magica musei Lugdunensis Batavi . . . ," Jahrbücher für klassische Philologie, Supplementband 16 (1888): 749–830; its prolegomena were reprinted in his Kleine Schriften (Leipzig: Teubner, 1911) 1–47.

Dieterich's commentary on the Leiden papyrus J 395 (=PGM XIII) followed under the title Abraxas. Studien zur Religionsgeschichte des spätern Altertums (Leipzig: Teubner, 1891). Related is the work entitled Nekyia. Beiträge zur Erklärung der neuentdeckten Petrusapokalypse (Leipzig: Teubner, 1893, ²1913; reprinted Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1969). Still indispensable is his commentary on PGM IV. 475–834, entitled Eine Mithrasliturgie (Leipzig: Teubner, 1903; ²1909 ed. R. Wünsch; ³1923 ed. O. Weinreich; reprinted Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1966). For biographical details and a bibliography see R. Wünsch, "Albrecht Dieterich," in Dieterich, Kleine Schriften pp. IX–XLII; H. J. Mette, "Nekrolog einer Epoche: Hermann Usener und seine Schule. Ein wirkungsgeschichtlicher Rückblick auf die Jahre 1856–1979," Lustrum 22 (1979–80): 5–106.

33. See Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae I (1928) pp. VIII–IX.

34. Ibid., p. IX.

35. Ibid., pp. IX–XII.

36. Papyri Graecae Magicae. Die griechischen Zauberpapyri, herausgegeben und übersetzt von Karl Preisendanz, vol. I (Leipzig: Teubner, 1928), vol. II (Leipzig: Teubner, 1931).

37. See the Vorrede to vol. III (Leipzig: Teubner, 1941), reprinted in the new edition of vol. II, ed. A. Henrichs (Stuttgart: Teubner, 1974), pp. VII–XVII.

38. See K. Preisendanz, "Zur Überlieferung der griechischen Zauberpapyri," in Miscellanea critica Teubner (Leipzig: Teubner, 1964) 215 n.1.

39. See the Vorwort zur Neuausgabe by Henrichs in vol. I of the new edition (see n. 40 below), pp. XIII–XIV.

40. Papyri Graecae Magicae. Die griechischen Zauberpapyri, herausgegeben und übersetzt von Karl Preisendanz. Zweite, verbesserte Auflage, mit Ergänzungen von Karl Preisendanz, durchgesehen und herausgegeben von Albert Henrichs (Stuttgart: Teubner, 1973, 1974).

41. See A. Dieterich, "Der Untergang der antiken Religion," Kleine Schriften 449–539; A. D. Nock, "Greek Magical Papyri," JEA 15 (1929): 219–35, reprinted in his Essays on Religion and the Ancient World, ed. Z. Stewart (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1972), 1: 176–94; A. J. Festugière, "La valeur religieuse des papyrus magiques," in his L'Idéal religieux des grecs et l'évangile (Paris: Gabalda, 1932) 281–328; M. P. Nilsson, "Die Religion in den griechischen Zauberpapyri," Opuscula selecta 3 (Lund: Gleerup, 1960) 129–66; S. Eitrem, "Aus 'Papyrologie und Religionsgeschichte': Die magischen Papyri," Papyri und Altertumswissenschaft. Vorträge des 3. internationalen Papyrologentages in München vom 4. bis 7. September 1933, hrsg. von W. Otto und L. Wenger, Münchener Beiträge zur Papyrusforschung und antiken Rechtsgeschichte 19 (München: Beck, 1934) 243–63.

42. See note 29 above.

43. See, e.g., the attempt to recover ritual fragments from PGM LXX in my article "Fragments of a Catabasis Ritual in a Greek Magical Papyrus," HR 19 (1980): 287–95.

44. Cf. Nilsson's remark concerning the magical hymns, "Die Religion," 132: "Jedoch sind die Hymnen das Griechischste der Zauberliteratur. Ich kann mich des Eindrucks nicht erwehren, dass es ein älteres Zauberwesen gegeben hat, das an die griechischen Götter anschloss, von dem die auf uns gekommene ägyptische Zauberliteratur Brocken sich einverleibt hat."

45. Since then fundamental changes have occurred in the interpretation of Greek religion, of which the success of the book by E. R. Dodds, The Greeks and the Irrational (Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, 1951) was symptomatic. See also on this point E. R. Dodds, Missing Persons: An Autobiography (Oxford: Clarendon, 1977) 180–81. For recent developments, see W. Burkert, Griechische Religion der archaischen und klassischen Epoche (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1977) 21ff.; idem, Structure and History in Greek Mythology and Ritual, Sather Classical Lectures 47 (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1979).

46. Cf. the comment made by A. A. Barb, "Three Elusive Amulets," JWCI 27 (1964): 4 n.16: "Much that we are accustomed to see classified as late 'syncretism' is rather the ancient and original, deep-seated popular religion, coming to the surface when the whitewash of 'classical' writers and artists began to peel off. . . ."

47. On Jewish magic and related bibliography, see L. Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen

(Strassburg: Trübner, 1898, ²1914); J. Trachtenberg, Jewish Magic and Superstition: A Study in Folk-Religion (New York: Behrman, 1939); G. G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism, and Talmudic Tradition (New York: The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, ²1965); J. Neusner, A History of the Jews in Babylonia, vols. 4 and 5 (Leiden: Brill, 1969, 1970); I. Gruenwald, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism (Leiden: Brill, 1980).

48. See for surveys A. A. Barb, "Mystery, Myth, and Magic," in The Legacy of Egypt, ed. J. R. Harris (Oxford: Clarendon Press, ²1971) 138–69; Nilsson, GGR II, 520–43 and passim; K. Preisendanz, "Zur synkretistischen Magie im römischen Ägypten," Mitteilungen aus der Papyrussammlung der Österreichischen Nationalbibliothek (Papyrus Erzherzog Rainer), Neue Serie, V. Folge, ed. H. Gerstinger (Wien: Rohrer/Österreichische Nationalbibliothek, 1956) 111–25.

49. On Jesus and early Christian magic, with related bibliography, see Morton Smith, Jesus the Magician (San Francisco: Harper and Row, 1978).

50. On Egyptian magic of the later periods, see the collection by Lichtheim (see note 16 above); G. Roeder, Volksglaube im Pharaonenreich (Stuttgart: Spemann, 1952); idem, Der Ausklang der ägyptischen Religion mit Reformation, Zauberei und Jenseitsglauben, = Die ägyptische Religion in Text und Bild, vol. 4 (Zürich and Stuttgart: Artemis, 1961).

51. On the figure of the magician, see Smith, Jesus the Magician, pp. 81–89.

52. See W. Burkert, "Craft versus Sect: The Problem of Orphics and Pythagoreans," in Jewish and Christian Self-Definition, vol. 3 (see note 5 above), 1–22.

53. Some of these handbooks are among the PGM. How they were made can still be seen from the partly unfinished, late Byzantine (16th c.) copy in the Gennadios Library in Athens (Codex Gennadianus 45), the text of which was published by A. Delatte, "Un nouveau témoin de la littérature salomonique, le codex Gennadianus 45 d'Athènes," Bulletin de l'Académie royale de Belgique, Classe des lettres, 5ᵉ série, tome 45 (1959): 280–321.

54. As I have tried to show, even the human self was regarded as a daimon which could be handled by the magician in the same way as all the other energies of the universe. See H. D. Betz, "The Delphic Maxim 'Know Yourself' in the Greek Magical Papyri," HR 21 (1981): 156–71.

55. A beautiful testimony of this self-understanding is cited by D. Wildung, Egyptian Saints: Deification in Pharaonic Egypt (New York: New York University Press, 1977) 84–85, where the great magician Amenhotep says about himself:

> I am really magnificent among any people, one with a heaving heart when he is looking for a plan in some unknown problem, like one whose heart knows it already; who finds a sentence even if it was found destroyed; master of wisdom, friend of the ruler, who does useful things for the Horus, who makes his monuments splendid in order to cause everybody to remember him forever at the august place. Who guides the ignorant through the events since the primeval times, who shows their place to everybody who forgot about it; useful in his ideas, when he is looking for monuments to make immortal the name of his lord; who relates the proverb and acts with his fingers; leader of mankind, of engaging manners as a pleasant one. Who venerates the name of the king and his power, who praises his Majesty at any time of the day, who is on his guard in all his decisions. . . ."

56. A good illustration of the phenomenon is the social and psychological syndrome called "cognitive dissonance." The syndrome can be observed among persons of strong conviction who, when faced with evidence to the contrary of their convictions ("disconfirmation"), become more intense and close themselves off from their social context, rather than develop doubts about these convictions. See the study by Leon Festinger, Henry W. Riecken, and Stanley Schachter, When Prophecy Fails: A Social and Psychological Study of a Modern Group that Predicted the Destruction of the World (New York: Harper and Row, 1964). The authors of this study themselves may have become another instance of the syndrome: apparently they entered into the project armed with strong convictions about the origins of religion and, without ever becoming suspicious, found nothing but confirmation.

Introduction to the Demotic Magical Papyri

Janet H. Johnson

As important as the Greek magical papyri are to the understanding of Greco-Roman religion, as noted by Betz in his Introduction to the Greek magical texts, their full significance can be perceived only when it is realized that these texts written in Greek are part of a larger corpus that also includes texts written in that stage of the Egyptian language known as "Demotic," and that the corpus as a whole derives in very large measure from earlier Egyptian religious and magical beliefs and practices. The interrelationship between the Greek and Egyptian aspects of these magical texts is emphasized by the fact that not only did the major find of such texts, the collection of Anastasi noted by Betz, occur in Egypt, in the ancient capital of Thebes (modern Luxor) and include both Greek and Egyptian documents, but it also included documents that were bilingual—some of the spells were written in Greek, others in Egyptian, all within the same texts and all for use by the same magician. Perhaps even more telling is the fact that even in the spells written in Greek, the religious or mythological background and the methodology to be followed to ensure success may be purely Egyptian in origin. Thus it is only with the inclusion of the Egyptian materials together with the Greek, and the study of the complete corpus, that the full ramifications of this extraordinary body of material can be studied and appreciated.

All four of the Demotic magical texts appear to have come from the collections that Anastasi gathered in the Theban area. Most have passages in Greek as well as in Demotic, and most have words glossed into Old Coptic (Egyptian language written with the Greek alphabet [which indicated vowels, which Egyptian scripts did not] supplemented by extra signs taken from the Demotic for sounds not found in Greek); some contain passages written in the earlier Egyptian hieratic script or words written in a special "cipher" script, which would have been an effective secret code to a Greek reader but would have been deciphered fairly simply by an Egyptian.

The longest of the four Demotic texts was at some time torn into two sections (PDM xiv; PGM XIV). The longer second section was acquired by the Leiden Museum of Antiquities in 1828; it now bears number P.Lugd.Bat.J 383 (formerly Anastasi 65). The shorter beginning section was purchased by the British Museum in 1857; it now bears number P.Lond.demot. 10070 (formerly Anastasi 1072). The definitive publication of the two sections, including hand copy, transliteration, and translation, with extensive commentary and glossary, is the work of F. Ll. Griffith and Herbert Thompson.[1] Attention was attracted to the Leiden section very early when Reuvens recognized the value that the glosses into Greek letters provided for the deciphering of Demotic script.[2] The entire preserved text (both the beginning and the end of the original manuscript are lost) consists of twenty-nine large columns on the recto and thirty-three smaller columns on the verso. All are in Egyptian with the exception of three short passages in three separate columns, which are written in Greek. Elsewhere occasional Greek words occur as glosses to Egyptian words or are written in the Egyptian text in an alphabetic Demotic script apparently developed for writing magical and foreign words. Much more common than the Greek passages is the use of the older Egyptian hieratic script in the midst of Demotic passages (as if the scribe were transcribing from an earlier manuscript and occasionally forgot to update what he was copying) and glosses into Old Coptic, most frequently for the writing of magical names and presumably to indicate proper pronunciation (which would have been very difficult to do given the abbreviated nature and great age of the traditional Egyptian scripts). Each column of the recto is written within a frame of horizontal and vertical lines; chapter or section headings are written in red ink (a tradition in Egyptian literature from Old Kingdom times[3]). In some cases, the scribes, while writing the body of the text in black ink, left room for the heading to be added later in red ink but failed to do so. Such headings can easily be restored.

The same scribe who wrote the London and Leiden text also wrote a second manuscript in the Leiden Museum (PDM xii; PGM XII) that contains Demotic magical texts—the verso of P.Lugd.Bat.J 384 (formerly Anastasi 75).[4] Of the nineteen columns of magical spells on the verso, the two columns at the beginning (the left end of the manuscript) are purely Demotic, the following thirteen columns are in Greek (although two headings are written in Demotic), the next two columns are again in Demotic, and the last two columns at the right end of the papyrus are largely in Demotic although they have short passages in Greek cited in the middle. (Note that the papyrus is broken at both ends, so it is impossible to determine how many more columns there were originally and in what language.) Within the Demotic sections of the manuscript are occasional passages written in the earlier hieratic script and in alphabetic Demotic as well as Old Coptic glosses. It appears that this text was written before the London and Leiden text since it is in this text that one can see the development of the Old Coptic script being used for glosses. In the columns at the left end of the papyrus, the Old Coptic glosses were written letter by letter above the corresponding Demotic letter. Since the Demotic runs right to left, the glosses run the same direction. This would have been quite confusing to someone reading what appeared to be Greek, so by the glosses in the second group of Demotic spells, at the right end of the papyrus, the scribe had taken to writing the glosses word for word, left to right, over the appropriate Demotic word. It is this latter system that is found throughout the papyrus of London and Leiden. In Leiden J 384, the scribe did not write within a frame or use red ink for headings. That both the papyri of London and Leiden and Leiden J 384 were written in Thebes, where they were found and sold to Anastasi, is indicated further by the fact that the dialect of Coptic to which the glosses and other alphabetic spellings most closely correspond has been identified as "archaic Theban."[5]

The British Museum also contains a second bilingual Greek and Demotic magical text (PDM lxi; PGM LXI), P.Brit.Mus. inv. 10588.[6] The recto contains eight columns of Demotic; two have occasional magical names written in Old Coptic and one has the names of some ingredients written in Greek in addition to two Greek sections within the Demotic. The verso contains two columns of Demotic with occasional Old Coptic and four columns of Greek. The Demotic sections use red ink for chapter headings (italicized in the translations), as in the papyrus of London and Leiden.

The fourth Demotic magical text is P.Louvre E3229 (formerly Anastasi 1061).[7] The preserved fragments (PDM Supplement) contain seven columns of Demotic on the recto and one column on the verso; the papyrus is broken at both ends. Both the earlier hieratic script and Old Coptic are used, together with the alphabetic Demotic script developed for writing magical names and attested in each of these texts except P.Brit.Mus. inv. 10588. Section headings are written in red ink on the recto (italicized in the translations); the columns on the recto are written within a red frame, as in the papyrus of London and Leiden.

In all four of these texts, all of which can be dated paleographically to the third century A.D. or only slightly later, there is every indication that all the various scripts were written by, and for, the same scribe, a bilingual person equally at home in Egyptian (old, current, and future) and Greek. The contents and the methodology are overwhelmingly Egyptian. Most of the material is completely Egyptian and its origins are easily traceable in earlier Egyptian religious and magical literature. The methods used are likewise standard Egyptian practices. Some of this is indicated in the notes to the translations.

By contrast, Egyptian divinities (in their own names or in the guise of their Greek counterparts) and Egyptian mythological references abound in the Greek texts and Egyptian methodology is also frequent. For example, although threats against gods who might fail to do what one wants go back to the earliest Egyptian religio-magic literature (Old Kingdom Pyramid Texts), but are unparalleled in classical Greece, they are frequent in the Greek magical texts as well as those written in Egyptian. Much of the Egyptian background of the Greek texts has been pointed out in the numerous textual notes added by Robert K. Ritner. The common source of the Greek and Egyptian language texts is also indicated by their frequent use of identical strings of invocation names, including, in addition to Egyptian and Greek divinities, western Asiatic divinities, "abracadabra" names, and what appear to the modern reader as gibberish.

Because the bulk of the texts is written in Greek, and because there are short passages of Greek in some of the Egyptian texts,[8] it has been suggested that the Egyptian texts are translations from the Greek. But there are passages in Egyptian, written in Old Coptic, within many of the Greek texts and, as indicated above, the religious and magical background of many of the spells, both Greek and Egyptian, is decidedly Egyptian. In discussing the Egyptian texts, Griffith and Thompson concluded: "even where there are reasons for believing that the demotic is a translation from the Greek, the original source, in relation to magic at any rate, was probably Egyptian."[9] The same may be true for much of the Greek material. One must, at any rate, be leery of overstating the Greek case and attributing too much to Greek influence.

The present collection of all the texts, Greek and Egyptian, in one easily usable volume, points this out conclusively. This will, in turn, allow and encourage the comparative study of the purposes, methods, props, magical names, and the like, of the Greek and Egyptian spells and encourage the study of the antecedents of the material in both cultures. This work will add greatly to our understanding of the cultural milieu in which these magical texts were produced and copied. Thus it is the hope of all those who have collaborated on the production of this volume that it will both further our knowledge of a dynamic period in the history of man and also encourage future study of cultural contact and cross-fertilization.

Notes

1. The Demotic Magical Papyrus of London and Leiden, 3 vols. (London: Grevel, 1904).
2. See n. 9 to Betz's Introduction, above.

3. See Georges Posener, "Sur l'emploi de l'encre rouge dans les manuscrits égyptiens," JEA 37 (1951):75–80.

4. The recto contains a long Demotic literary composition known variously as the "Tefnut Legend" or the "Myth of the Sun's Eye"; for a short summary and bibliography, see Lichtheim, Ancient Egyptian Literature, vol. 3, pp. 156–57. The magical spells on the verso were published by Janet H. Johnson, "The Demotic Magical Spells of Leiden J 384," OMRM 56 (1975):29–64; for the identification of the scribe, see ibid., pp. 51–53.

5. Janet H. Johnson, "The Dialect of the Demotic Magical Papyrus of London and Leiden," in Studies in Honor of George R. Hughes, ed. Janet H. Johnson and Edward F. Wente, Studies in Ancient Oriental Civilization, vol. 39 (Chicago: The Oriental Institute, 1977), pp. 105–32.

6. Published by H. I. Bell, A. D. Nock, and Herbert Thompson, Magical Texts from a Bilingual Papyrus in the British Museum (London: Humphrey Milford, 1933).

7. Published by Janet H. Johnson, "Louvre E3229: A Demotic Magical Text," Enchoria 7 (1977):55–102.

8. But note that, e.g., one of the passages in Greek in London and Leiden concerns the purely Egyptian divinity Osiris and his burial in Abydos.

9. Demotic Magical Papyrus, vol. 1, p. 12.

THE GREEK MAGICAL PAPYRI IN TRANSLATION

INCLUDING THE DEMOTIC SPELLS

PGM I. 1–42

*[Rite]: A [daimon comes] as an assistant who will reveal everything to you clearly and will be your [companion and] will eat[1] and sleep with you.

Take [together, therefore,] two of your own fingernails and all the hairs [from] your head, and take a Circaean[2] falcon / and deify it[3] in the [milk] of a black [cow] after you have mixed Attic honey with the milk. [And once you have deified it,] wrap it[4] with an undyed piece of cloth and place [beside] it your fingernails along with your hairs; and take [a piece of choice papyrus], and inscribe in myrrh the following, and set it in the same manner [along with the] hairs and fingernails, and plaster / it with [uncut] frankincense [and] old wine.

So, the writing on/[the strip] is: "A EE ĒĒĒ IIII OOOOO YYYYYY ŌŌŌŌŌŌŌ." [But write this, making] two figures:[5]

A
E E
Ē Ē Ē
I I Ī I
O O O O O
Y Y Y Y Y Y
Ō Ō Ō Ō Ō Ō Ō

Ō Ō Ō Ō Ō Ō Ō
Y Y Y Y Y Y
O O O O O
I I I I
Ē Ē Ē
E E
A

/ And take the milk with the honey[6] and drink it before the rising of the sun, and there will be something divine in your heart. And take the falcon and set it up as a statue in a shrine made of juniper wood. And after you have crowned the shrine itself, make an offering of non-animal foods and have on hand some old wine. And before you recline, speak directly to the bird itself after you have made / sacrifice to it, as you usually do, and say the prescribed spell:

"A EE ĒĒĒ IIII OOOOO YYYYYY ŌŌŌŌŌŌŌ, come to me, Good Husbandman,[7] Good Daimon, HARPON KNOUPHI BRINTANTĒN SIPHRI BRISKYLMA AROUAZAR [BAMESEN] KRIPHI NIPOUMICHMOUMAŌPH. Come to me, O holy Orion, [you who lie] in the north, / who cause [the] currents of [the] Nile to roll down and mingle with the sea, [transforming them with life] as it does man's seed in sexual intercourse, you who have established the world on an indestructible . . .

1. For meals with deities see below, ll. 23–24, 85–89; III. 424–30; IV. 750–75; VII. 644–51. For the background and further material, see H.-J. Klauck, Herrenmahl und hellenistischer Kult, Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, N.F. 15 (Münster: Aschendorff, 1982), esp. 156–58, 190.

2. The adjective κιρκαῖος is not attested elsewhere. Cf. LSJ s.v. "κίρκος," I: "a kind of hawk or falcon." See S. Eitrem, "Sonnenkäfer und Falke in der synkretistischen Magie," in Pisciculi. Festschrift für F. Dölger (Münster: Aschendorff, 1939) 94–101; Bonnet, RÄRG 178–80, s.v. "Falke."

3. The magical rite of drowning effects deification. See F. L. Griffith, "Herodotus II. 90: Apotheosis by Drowning," ZÄS 46 (1909): 132–34; W. Spiegelberg, "Zu dem Ausdruck ḥsj 'Εσιῆς," ZÄS 53 (1917): 124–25; A. Hermann, "Ertrinken," RAC 6 (1966): 370–409; idem, "Ertrinken, Ertränken," LdÄ 2 (1977): 17–19; Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 273. See also PGM III. 1 and n. [R.K.R.]

4. The ritual suggests that the falcon is to be mummified. See Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

5. The translation of the term κλίματα is uncertain here. The triangular formation, found also elsewhere in the PGM and called "grapelike," "heart-shaped" or "winged," may be an example of technopaignion, the technique of writing words pictorially in the shape of objects. See on this subject Dornseiff, Das Alphabet 63–67; C. Lenz, "Carmina figurata," RAC 2 (1954): 910–12; Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte" 104; G. Wojaczek, Daphnis. Untersuchungen zur griechischen Bukolik (Meisenheim am Glan: Hain, 1969) 59ff., esp. 62 and n. 12.

6. For milk and honey in sacred meals, see Klauck, Herrenmahl 193–96; Bonnet, RÄRG 459–61, s.v. "Milch."

7. Cf. for the title also Anubis "the good oxherd": PDM xiv. 17; xiv. 35, 400. See Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus 24 and n. [R.K.R.]

[foundation], who are young in the morning and [old in the evening], who journey through the subterranean sphere and [rise], breathing fire,[8] you who have parted the seas in the first / month, who [ejaculate] seeds[9] into the [sacred fig]tree of Heliopolis[10] continually. [This] is your authoritative name: ARBATH ABAÔTH BAKCHABRÊ."

[But] when you are dismissed, [go without shoes] and walk backwards[11] and set yourself to the enjoyment of the food [and] dinner and the prescribed food offering, [coming] face to face as companion [to the god]. / [This] rite [requires complete purity]. Conceal, conceal the [procedure and] for [7] days [refrain] from having intercourse with a woman.

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM I. 42–195

The spell of Pnouthis, the sacred scribe, for acquiring an assistant:[12] . . . Pnouthios to Keryx,[13] a god[-fearing man], greetings. As one who knows, I have prescribed for you [this spell for acquiring an assistant] to prevent your failing / as you carry out [this rite]. After detaching all the prescriptions [bequeathed to us in] countless books, [one out of all . . .] I have shown you this spell for acquiring an assistant [as one that is serviceable] to you . . . for you to take this holy [assistant] and only . . . O friend of aerial / spirits [that move] . . . having persuaded me with god-given spells . . . but [now] I have dispatched this book so that you may learn thoroughly. For the spell of Pnouthis [has the power] to persuade the gods and all [the goddesses]. And [I shall write] you from it about [acquiring] an assistant.

[The] traditional rite [for acquiring an assistant]: After the preliminary purification, / [abstain from animal food] and from all uncleanliness and, on whatever [night] you want to, go [up] onto a lofty roof after you have clothed yourself in a pure garment . . . [and say] the first spell of encounter as the sun's orb is disappearing . . . with a [wholly] black Isis band on [your eyes], and in your right hand / grasp a falcon's head [and . . .] when the sun rises, hail it as you shake its head [and] . . . recite this sacred spell as you burn [uncut] frankincense and pour rose oil, making the sacrifice [in an earthen] censer on ashes from the [plant] heliotrope. And as you recite the spell there will be / this sign for you: a falcon will [fly down and] stand in front of [you], and after flapping its wings in [mid-air and dropping]

8. The section describes the voyage of the sun god, his changing age, and his journey through the underworld. See E. Hornung, Das Amduat (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1963). For the forms of the sun god, see H. Brugsch, Thesaurus Inscriptionum Aegyptiacarum (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1883) 405–33. [R.K.R.]

9. The reference is to Ra-Atum emerging from the seas of chaos in the primal month and his creation of the gods by masturbation. In the Egyptian view of time this cosmic event occurs continually (διηνεκέως). Cf. also Pritchard, ANET 6. [R.K.R.]

10. Ancient religion knew of a large number of sacred fig trees, but little is known about the one in Heliopolis. The reference may point to another sacred tree as well, such as the jšd tree (see L. Kákosy, "Ischedbaum," LdÄ 3 [1980]: 182–83) or the tree "in which is life and death" (idem, LdÄ 2 [1977]: 112). Or the tree is the persea tree sacred to Ra (see Herodotus 2. 73; and LdÄ 3 [1980]: 182–84; Bonnet, RÄRG 83–84, s.v. Darby, Food: The Gift of Osiris 736–40). [R.K.R.]

11. Walking backwards as a magical rite. See PGM IV. 44, 2493; XXXVI. 273.

12. The term refers to an assistant daimon; see Glossary. Pnouthis and Pnouthios refer to the same person.

13. Keryx, which means "herald," may refer to a real or to an ideal person of priestly or holy status. See W. Quandt, "Keryx," PRE 21 (1921): 348–49.

an oblong stone,[14] it will immediately take flight and [ascend] to heaven. [You] should pick up this stone; carve it at once [and engrave it later]. Once it has been engraved, bore a hole in it, pass a thread through and wear it around your neck. But in the evening, / go up to [your] housetop [again] and, facing the light of the god- 70 dess, address to her this [hymnic spell] as you again sacrifice myrrh troglitis[15] in the same fashion. Light [a fire] and hold a branch of myrtle . . . shaking it, [and salute] the goddess.

At once there will be a sign for you like this: [A blazing star] will descend and come to a stop in the middle / of the housetop, and when the star [has dissolved] 75 before your eyes, you will behold the angel[16] whom you have summoned and who has been sent [to you], and you will quickly[17] learn the decisions of the gods. But do not be afraid: [approach] the god and, taking his right hand, kiss him and say these words to the angel, for he will quickly respond to you about whatever you want. But you / adjure him with this [oath] that he meet you and remain inseparable 80 and that he not [keep silent or] disobey in any way. But when he has with certainty accepted this oath of yours, take the god by the hand and leap down, [and] after bringing him [into] the narrow room where you reside, [sit him] down. After first preparing the house / in a fitting manner and providing all types of foods 85 and Mendesian wine,[18] set these before the god, with an uncorrupted boy[19] serving and maintaining silence until the [angel] departs. And you address preliminary (?) words[20] to the god: "I shall have you as a friendly assistant, a beneficent god who serves me whenever I say, 'Quickly, by your / power now appear on earth to 90 me, yea verily, god!'"

And while reclining, you yourself quickly speak about what you propose.[21] Test this[22] oath of the god on [what] you wish. But when 3 hours have passed, the god will immediately leap up. Order the boy to run [to] the door. And say, "Go, lord, blessed god, / where you live eternally, as you will," and the god vanishes. 95

This is the sacred rite for acquiring an assistant. It is acknowledged that he is a god; he is an aerial spirit which you have seen. If you give him a command, straightway he performs the task: he sends dreams, he brings women, men without the use of magical material, he kills, he destroys, he stirs up winds from the earth, he carries / gold, silver, bronze, and he gives them to you whenever the need arises. And 100

14. For the relationship between amulets and the magical papyri, see M. Smith, "Relations between Magical Papyri and Magical Gems," Papyrologica Bruxellensia 18 (1979): 129–36; J. Schwartz, "Papyri Graecae Magicae und magische Gemmen," in M. J. Vermaseren, ed., Die orientalischen Religionen im Römerreich, EPRO 93 (Leiden: Brill, 1981) 485–509.

15. This statement shows that something has fallen from the text, for this is the first extant reference here to myrrh troglitis. [E.N.O.] The name may be commonly referred to as "Ethiopian myrrh."

16. This angel or messenger (ἄγγελος) is also referred to as "the god" throughout this spell.

17. The adverb, which occurs in PGM I. 76, 79, 91, 108, 111, 113, 116, 121, can mean "precisely" or "in detail."

18. This is not to be confused with the famous Mendaean wine. Mendesian refers to the Egyptian city of Mendes in the Nile Delta. For a discussion of the confusion between the names, see Darby, Food: The Gift of Osiris II, 600.

19. Apparently this boy serves as a child medium. Cf. for this form of medium PGM II. 56; V. 376; VII. 544, etc.

20. προπεμπε with an inanimate (and esp. abstract) object is poetic. Here the prefix seems to have its literal meaning: "first," hence "preliminary words." [E.N.O.]

21. πρὸς ἃ φράζει should be read as second-person middle (cf. l. 79) and not third-person active, as Preisendanz translates.

22. The position of the word "this" is awkward in the Greek text; perhaps "the oath itself" is preferable. Cf. I. 156: "the same spell."

he frees from bonds a person chained in prison, he opens doors, he causes invisibility so that no one can see you at all, he is a bringer of fire, he brings water, wine, bread and [whatever] you wish in the way of foods: olive oil, vinegar—with the single exception of fish[23]—and he will bring plenty of vegetables, / whatever kind you wish, but as for pork,[24] you must not ever tell him to bring this at all! And when you want to give a [dinner], tell him so. Conjure up in your mind any suitable room and order him to prepare it for a banquet quickly and without delay. At once he will bestow chambers with golden ceilings, and you will see their walls covered with marble—and you consider these things partly real / and partly just illusionary—and costly wine, as is meet to cap a dinner splendidly. He will quickly bring daimons, and for you he will adorn these servants with sashes. These things he does quickly. And [as soon as] you order [him] to perform a service, he will do so, and you will see him excelling in other things: He stops ships and [again] / releases them, he stops very many evil [daimons], he checks wild beasts and will quickly break the teeth of fierce reptiles, he puts dogs to sleep and renders them voiceless. He changes into whatever form [of beast] you want: one that flies, swims, a quadruped, a reptile. He will carry you [into] the air, and again hurl you into the billows / of the sea's current and into the waves of the sea; he will quickly freeze rivers and seas and in such a way that you can run over them firmly, as you want. And [especially] will he stop, if ever you wish it, the sea-running foam, and whenever you wish to bring down stars[25] and whenever you wish to make [warm things] cold and cold things / warm,[26] he will light lamps and extinguish them again.[27] And he will shake walls and [cause] them to blaze with fire; he will serve you suitably for [whatever] you have in mind, O [blessed] initiate of the sacred magic, and will accomplish it for you, this most powerful assistant, who is also the only lord of the air. And the gods will agree to everything, for without him / nothing happens. Share this great mystery with no one [else], but conceal it, by Helios, since you have been deemed worthy by the lord [god].

This is the spell spoken [seven times seven] to Helios as an adjuration of the assistant: "ŌRI PI . . . AMOUNTE[28] AINTHYPH PICHAROUR[29] RAIAL KARPHIOUTH YMOU ROTHIRBAN OCHANAU MOUNAICHANAPTA/ZŌ ZŌN TAZŌTAZŌ PTAZŌ MAUIAS SOUŌRI SOUŌ ŌOUS SARAPTOUMI SARACHTHI A. . . RICHAMCHŌ BIRATHAU ŌPHAU PHAUŌ DAUA AUANTŌ ZOUZŌ ARROUZŌ ZŌTOUAR THŌMNAŌRI AYŌI PTAUCHARĒBI AŌUOSŌBIAU PTABAIN AAAAAAA AEĒIOYŌYŌOIĒEA CHACHACH CHACHACH CHARCHARACHACH AMOUN Ō ĒI[30] / IAEŌBAPHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEYEAIPHIRKIRALITHON OMENERPHABŌEAI CHATHACH PHNESCHĒR PHICHRŌ PHNYRŌ PHŌCHŌCHOCH IARBATHA GRAMMĒ PHIBAŌCHNĒMEŌ." This is the spell spoken seven times seven to Helios.

23. For the taboo on fish in ancient Egypt, see Darby, Food: The Gift of Osiris I, 380–404. [R.K.R.]

24. The prohibition against eating pork was well known in Egypt (see also IV. 3079). The pig was considered unclean because it was related to Seth/Typhon (see also IV. 3115, 3260). See Bonnet, RÄRG 690–91, s.v. "Schwein"; J. Bergman, "Isis auf der Sau," Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis 6 (1974): 81–109; Darby, Food: The Gift of Osiris I, 171–209; cf. also Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 8, 353F and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 281.

25. Pulling down stars was a feat for which the Thessalian witches were famous. See H. Reiche, "Myth and Magic in Cosmological Polemics," Rheinisches Museum 114 (1971): 296–329.

26. This magical operation is similar to the table gimmick of Demokritos (see PGM VII. 177).

27. Cf. the table gimmick in PGM VII. 171–72.

28. This is Egyptian for Horus . . . Amon. [R.K.R.]

29. This is Egyptian pikrour, "the frog." [R.K.R.]

30. This is Egyptian meaning "Amon the Great." [R.K.R.]

And engraved on the stone[31] is: Helioros[32] as a lion-faced figure, holding in the left / hand a celestial globe and a whip, and around him in a circle is a serpent biting its tail. And on the exergue of the stone is this name (conceal it): "ACHA ACHACHA CHACH CHARCHARA CHACH." And after passing an Anubian string[33] through it, wear it around your neck.

Spell to Selene: "INOUTHŌ[34] PTOUAUMI ANCHARICH CHARAPTOUMI ANOCHA ABITHROU / ACHARABAUBAU BARATHIAN ATEB DOUANANOU APTYR PANOR PAURACH SOUMI PHORBA PHORIPHORBARABAU BŌĒTH AZA PHOR RIM MIRPHAR ZAURA PTAUZOU CHŌTHARPARACHTHIZOU ZAITH ATIAU IABAU KANTANTOUMI BATHARA CHTHIBI ANOCH." Having said this, you will see some star gradually free itself from [heaven] and become a god. / But you approach, take him by the hand, kiss him and say the same spell: "ŌPTAUMI NAPHTHAUBI MAIOUTHMOU MĒTROBAL RACHĒPTOUMI AMMŌCHARI AUTHEI A. . .TAMARA CHIŌBITAM TRIBŌMIS ARACHO ISARI RACHI IAKOUBI TAURABERŌMI ANTABI TAUBI." When you have spoken this, / a reply will be given. But you say to him: "What is your divine name? Reveal it to me ungrudgingly, so that I may call upon [it]." It consists of 15 letters: SOUESOLYR PHTHĒ MŌTH.[35]

And this is spoken next: "Hither to me, King, [I call you] God of Gods, mighty, boundless, undefiled, indescribable, firmly established Aion. / Be inseparable from me from this day forth through all the time of my life."

Then question him by the same oaths. If he tells you his name, take him by the hand, descend and have him recline as I have said above, setting before him part of the / foods and drinks which you partake of. And when you release him, sacrifice to him after his departure what is prescribed and pour a wine offering, and in this way you will be a friend of the mighty angel. When you go abroad, he will go abroad with you; when you are destitute, he will give you money. He will tell you what things will happen both when and at what time of the night or day. And if / anyone asks you "What do I have in mind?" or "What has happened to me?" or even "What is going to happen?," question the angel, and he will tell you in silence. But you speak to the one who questions you as if from yourself. When you are dead, he will wrap [up] your body as befits a god,[36] but he will take your spirit and carry it into the air with him. / For no aerial spirit which is joined with a mighty assistant will go into Hades, for to him all things are subject. Whenever you wish to do something, speak his name alone into the air [and] say, ["Come!"] and you will see him actually standing near you. And say to him, "Perform this task," and he does it at once, and after doing it he will say to you, "What else do you want? For I am eager for heaven." If you do not / have immediate orders, say to him, "Go, lord," and he will depart. In this fashion, then, the god will be seen by you alone, nor will anyone ever hear the sound of his speaking, just you yourself alone. And he will tell you

31. For gemstones with figures similar to the one described here, see Bonner, SMA 19–20, 151–53; nos. 233–37, 283; also the statue described by Nilsson, GGR II, 498–99. See furthermore Bonnet, RÄRG 427–429, s.v. "Löwe."

32. This is Helios-Horus. See Bonner, SMA 19–20, 153.

33. The precise nature of the Anubian cord is not clear. Anubis, the divine undertaker, may have had his name applied to thread used in mummification (see also IV. 1083, 2899; XXXVI. 237). See P. Wolters, "Faden und Knoten als Amulett," ARW 8, Beiheft (1905): 1–22; Bonner, SMA 3.

34. INOUTHŌ corresponds to Egyptian i ntr ʿ3, "O great god," and is the beginning of an invocation. [R.K.R.]

35. In Greek the name consists of fifteen letters.

36. This dressing up refers to the practice of mummification and the body's subsequent deification. See B. Gunn, "The Decree of Amonrasonether for Neskhons," JEA 41 (1955): 84–85. [R.K.R.]

about the illness of a man, whether he will live or die, even on what day and at what 190 hour of night. / And he will also give [you both] wild herbs and the power to cure, and you will be [worshiped] as a god since you have a god as a friend. These things the mighty assistant will perform competently. Therefore share these things with no one except [your] legitimate son[37] alone when he asks you for the magic powers imparted [by] us. Farewell.

195 The address to the sun / requires nothing except the formula "IAEŌBAPHRENEMOUN" and the formula "IARBATHA."

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM I. 195–222

This, then, is the prayer of deliverance for the first-begotten and first-born god: "I call upon you, lord. Hear me, holy god who rest among the holy ones, at 200 whose side the Glorious Ones[38] stand continually. I call upon you, / [fore]father, and I beseech you, eternal one, eternal ruler of the sun's rays, eternal ruler of the celestial orb, standing in the seven-part region, CHAŌ CHAŌ CHA OUPH CHTHETHŌNIMEETHĒCHRINIA MEROUMI ALDA ZAŌ BLATHAMMACHŌTH PHRIXA ĒKE . . . PHYĒIDRYMĒŌ PHERPHRITHŌ IACHTHŌ PSYCHEŌ PHIRITHMEŌ ROSERŌTH /
205 THAMASTRA PHATIRI TAŌCH IALTHEMEACHE; you who hold fast to the root, [who] possess the powerful name which has been consecrated by all angels. Hear me, you who have established the mighty Decans and archangels, and beside whom 210 stand untold myriads of angels. You have been exalted to heaven, and the lord / has borne witness to your wisdom and has praised your power highly and has said that you have strength in the same way as he, as much strength as he [himself] has.

"I call upon you, lord of the universe, in an hour of need; hear me, for my soul is [distressed], and I am perplexed[39] and in want of [everything. Wherefore, come]
215 to me, you who are lord over all / angels; shield me against all excess of magical power of aerial daimon [and] fate.[40] Aye, lord, because I call upon your secret name which reaches from the firmament to the earth, ATHĒZOPHŌIM ZADĒAGĒŌBĒPHIA-
220 THEAA AMBRAMI ABRAAM THALCHILTHOE ELKŌTHŌŌĒĒ ACHTHŌNŌN / SA ISAK CHŌĒIOURTHASIŌ IŌSIA ICHĒMEŌŌŌŌ AŌAEI, rescue me in an hour of need."

Say this to Helios or whenever you are forced to do so.[41]

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. Since the character of this invocation shows no tangible connection with the preceding or foregoing spells, it is best understood as a separate charm. Although the purpose of this prayer (which at certain points is reminiscent of the language of the Psalms) is not exactly stated, ll. 215–16 and 221–22 suggest that deliverance from the onslaught of a demonic attack is requested.

37. Preisendanz's reading ἰσχινῷ υἱῷ is doubtful because the term is nowhere else attested (see his apparatus ad loc.). The word may reflect an Egyptian or Semitic idiom ("son of your own loins"), an idiom formed in Greek from the word ἴσχιον (hips). The Egyptian term is more general, however, and refers to "part of the body." [J.B.] Cf. also Gn 35:11; 1 Kgs 8:19; Acts 2:30; Heb 7:5, 10. See furthermore PGM IV. 646, 2519, and Abt, Apologie 65–66.

38. Doxai is a name for angels. See also IV. 1051, 1202, and Bauer, s.v. "δόξα," 4.

39. The translation of ἄβου[λος] follows Preisendanz ("ratlos"). For the general language of prayer, cf. Ps 42:6, 12; 43:5; Jon 4:9 LXX: Sir 37:2; Mk 14:34 par.

40. The concept of Heimarmene is found in PGM here and XIII. 613, 635; cf. 709. See D. Amand, Fatalisme et liberté dans l'antiquité grecque. Recherches sur la survivance de l'argumentation morale antifataliste de Carnéade chez les philosophes grecs et les théologiens chrétiens des quatre premiers siècles (Amsterdam: Hakkert, ²1974); H. O. Schröder, "Fatum (Heimarmene)," RAC 7 (1969):524–636, esp. 567–68.

41. The translation is tentative at this point.

PGM I. 222–31

*__Indispensable invisibility spell__: Take fat or an eye of a nightowl and a ball of dung rolled[42] by a beetle and oil of an unripe olive[43] and grind them all together until smooth, and smear your whole / body with it and say to Helios: "I adjure you by your great name, BORKĒ PHOIOUR IŌ ZIZIA APARXEOUCH THYTHE LAILAM AAAAAA IIIII OOOO IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ NAUNAX AI AI AEŌ AEŌ ĒAŌ," and moisten it and say in addition: "Make me invisible, lord Helios, AEŌ ŌAĒ EIĒ ĒAŌ, / in the presence of any man until sunset, IŌ IŌ Ō PHRIXRIZŌ EŌA."
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM I. 232–47

*__Memory spell__: Take hieratic papyrus and write the prescribed names with Hermaic[44] myrrh ink. And once you have written them as they are prescribed, wash them off[45] into spring water / from 7 springs and drink the water on an empty stomach for seven days while the moon is in the east. But drink a sufficient amount.

This is the writing on the strip of papyrus: "KAMBRĒ CHAMBRE SIXIŌPHI HARPON CHNOUPHI BRINTATĒNŌPHRIBRISKYLMA ARAOUAZAR BAMESEN KRIPHI NIPTOUMI CHMOUMAŌPH AKTIŌPHI ARTŌSE BIBIOU / BIBIOU SPHĒ SPHĒ NOUSI NOUSI SIEGŌ SIEGŌ NOUCHA NOUCHA LINOUCHA LINOUCHA CHYCHBA CHYCHBA KAXIŌ CHYCHBA DĒTOPHŌTH II AA OO YY ĒĒ EE ŌŌ." After doing these things wash the writing off and drink as is prescribed.

This is also the composition of the ink: myrrh troglitis, 4 drams; 3 karian figs, 7 pits of Nikolaus dates, / 7 dried pinecones, 7 piths of the single-stemmed wormwood, 7 wings of the Hermaic ibis,[46] spring water. When you have burned the ingredients, prepare them and write.
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM I. 247–62

*__Tested spell for invisibility__: A great work. Take an eye of an ape or of a corpse that has died a violent death and a plant of peony (he means the rose). Rub these with oil of lily, and as you are rubbing / them from the right to the left,[47] say the spell as follows: "I am ANUBIS, I am OSIR-PHRE,[48] I am OSOT SORONOUIER, I am OSIRIS whom SETH destroyed.[49] Rise up, infernal daimon, IŌ ERBĒTH IŌ PHOBĒTH IŌ PAKERBĒTH IŌ APOMPS; whatever I, NN, order you to do, / be obedient to me."

And if you wish to become invisible, rub just your face with the concoction, and you will be invisible for as long as you wish. And if you wish to be visible again, move from west to east and say this name, and you will be obvious and visible to all / men.

42. The pellet ("that which is rolled") of a scarab is sacred to the sun god Ra. See also PGM VII. 584. [R.K.R.]

43. The papyrus reads φακινίνου, which Preisendanz emends to ⟨ὀμ⟩φακινίνου. For similar expressions, see PGM IV. 228–29, 3008. For a different reading, see Schmidt, GGA 1931, 445.

44. This is the myrrh ink of Hermes.

45. In order to transfer the magical powers of the names, they were washed off and consumed. For the widespread practice, see Handbuch des deutschen Aberglaubens 8 (1936/37): 1156–57.

46. The ibis was sacred to Hermes Thoth. [R.K.R.]

47. See on this point J. F. Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts, Nisaba 9 (Leiden: Brill, 1978) 27, 30, 41, 56. [R.K.R.]

48. This is Osiris-Re.

49. The papyrus has tako where one expects the standard Coptic takof, "destroyed (him)." [M.W.M.] Cf. DMP col. I, 13, p. 23 (and n.) for Demotic parallels to part of this passage.

The name is: "MARMARIAŌTH MARMARIPHEGGĒ, make me, NN, visible to all men on this day, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly!" This works very well. *Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. Cf. PGM I. 222–31.

PGM I. 262–347

Apollonian[50] invocation: Take a seven-leafed sprig of laurel and hold it in your right hand / as you summon the heavenly gods and chthonic daimons. Write on the sprig of laurel the seven[51] characters for deliverance.

The characters are these:  , the first character onto the first leaf, then the second / again in the same way onto the second leaf until there is a matching up of the 7 characters and 7 leaves. But be careful not to lose a leaf [and] do harm to yourself. For this is the body's greatest protective charm, by which all are made subject, and seas and rocks tremble, and daimons [avoid] the characters' magical powers which / you are about to have. For it is the greatest protective charm for the rite so that you fear nothing.

Now this is the rite: Take a lamp which has not been colored red and fit it with a piece of linen cloth and rose oil or oil of spikenard, and dress yourself in a prophetic garment and hold an ebony staff in your left hand and / the protective charm in your right (i.e., the sprig of laurel). But keep in readiness a wolf's head so that you can set the lamp upon the head of the wolf, and construct an altar of unburnt clay near the head and the lamp so that you may sacrifice on it to the god. And immediately the divine spirit enters.

/ The burnt offering is a wolf's eye, storax gum, cassia, balsam gum and whatever is valued among the spices, and pour a libation of wine and honey and milk and rainwater, [and make] 7 flat cakes and 7 round cakes. These you are going to make completely [near] the lamp, robed and refraining from all / unclean things and from all eating of fish[52] and from all sexual intercourse, so that you may bring the god into the greatest desire toward you.[53]

Now these are the names, [which] you are going to write on the linen cloth and which you will put as a wick into the lamp which has not been colored red: "ABERAMENTHŌOULERTHEXANAXETHRENLYOŌTHNEMARAIBAI[54] / AEMINNAEBARŌTHERRETHŌBABEANIMEA."[55] When you have completed all the instructions set out above, call the god with this chant:[56]

50. This lamp divination is named after the god Apollo. Despite its syncretistic character, there are an unusual number of parallels with the cult of Apollo. See S. Eitrem, "Apollon in der Magie," in Orakel und Mysterien am Ausgang der Antike, Albae Vigiliae 5 (Zürich: Rhein-Verlag, 1947): 47–52.

51. Eight characters are shown.

52. See PGM I. 104 and note.

53. For sexual union with Apollo attributed to the Pythia, see Plutarch, De Pyth. or. 405 C–D; Origenes, C. Cels. 7.3; John Chrysostom, PG 61, p. 242 (hence Schol. Aristoph. Plut. 39; Suda, Lexicon, p. 3120). See G. Wolff, Porphyrii De philosophia ex oraculis haurienda (Berlin: Springer, 1856) 160; W. Burkert, Homo Necans, RVV 32 (Berlin: De Gruyter, 1972) 143. [W.B.]

54. The magical words begin with the name ABERAMENTHŌ, on which see J. Mahé, "Aberamentho," in Studies in Gnosticism and Hellenistic Religions, Festschrift for G. Quispel, EPRO 91 (Leiden: Brill, 1981): 412–18. The formula should be read as a palindrome (see Glossary). Cf. also PGM III. 67–68, 117–18; XXXVIII. 20–21.

55. The magical word should be read as a palindrome. Cf. also IV. 196–97; XIV. 24; LIX. 7.

56. These lines contain dactylic hexameters (several of which are metrically faulty) through l. 311. In 312–14 the meter breaks down completely, yet because the tone and the apparent intent is hymnic, the translation continues in a verse pattern that is sometimes faulty. Ll. 297–311 (although the identification says 297–314) also form vv. 1–15 of the reconstructed Hymn 23, while vv. 16–18 are taken from PGM I. 342–45. See Preisendanz, vol. II. p. 262. [E.N.O.]

"O lord Apollo, come with Paian.[57]
Give answer to my questions, lord. O master
Leave Mount Parnassos and the Delphic Pytho
Whene'er my priestly lips voice secret words, /
First angel of [the god], great Zeus. IAŌ
And you, MICHAĒL, who rule heaven's realm,
I call, and you, archangel GABRIĒL.
Down from Olympos, ABRASAX, delighting
In dawns, come gracious who view sunset from
The dawn, / ADŌNAI. Father of the world,
All nature quakes in fear of you, PAKERBĒTH.
I adjure God's head,[58] which is Olympos;
I adjure God's signet, which is vision;
I adjure the right hand you held o'er the world;
I adjure God's bowl containing wealth;
I adjure eternal god, AIŌN of all;
/ I adjure self-growing Nature, mighty ADŌNAIOS;
I adjure setting and rising ELŌAIOS:
I adjure these holy and divine names that
They send me the divine spirit and that it
Fulfill what I have in my heart and soul.
/ Hear blessed one, I call you who rule heav'n[59]
And earth and Chaos and Hades where dwell
[Daimons of men who once gazed on the light].
Send me this daimon at my sacred chants,
Who moves by night to orders 'neath your force,
From whose own tent this comes, and let him tell me /
In total truth all that my mind designs,
And send him gentle, gracious, pondering
No thoughts opposed to me. And may you not
Be angry at my sacred chants. But guard
That my whole body come to light intact,
For you yourself arranged these things among
Mankind for them to learn. / I call your name,
In number equal to the very Moirai,
ACHAIPHŌTHŌTHŌAIĒIAĒIA
AIĒAIĒIAŌTHŌTHŌPHIACHA."[60]

And when he comes, ask him about what you wish, about the art of prophecy, about divination with epic verses, about the sending of dreams, about obtaining revelations in dreams, about / interpretations of dreams, about causing disease, about everything that is a part of magical knowledge.

Cover a throne and couch with a cloth of linen, but remain standing while you

57. The words Ἄναξ . . . σὺν Παιήονι form an iambic pentameter which may preserve a line from a longer hymn. The line belongs to Hymn 8 in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 244. For a similar expression, cf. PGM II. 7–8. [E.N.O.]

58. Or, "I adjure (you by) God's head," here and in the verses that follow.

59. The dactylic hexameters are part of the reconstructed Hymn 4: vv. 7–8, 12–17, 20, 18, 23–24. For other versions and sections of Hymn 4, see PGM IV. 436–61, 1957–89; VIII. 74–80. (The identification of lines in Preisendanz is not correct, vol. II, p. 239: l. 18 is present, l. 19 is missing.) [E.N.O.]

60. The word should be read as a palindrome. One can see the word THŌTHŌ, written twice; it means "Thoth the great." [R.K.R.]

sacrifice with the aforementioned burnt offering. And after the enquiry, if you wish / to release the god himself, shift the aforementioned ebony staff, which you are holding in your left hand, to your right hand; and shift the sprig of laurel, which you are holding in your right hand, to your left hand; and extinguish / the burning lamp; and use the same burnt offering while saying:[61]

"Be gracious unto me, O primal god,
O elder-born, self-generating god.
I adjure the fire which first shone in the void;
I adjure your pow'r which is greatest o'er all; /
I adjure him who destroys e'en in Hades,
That you depart, returning to your ship,
And harm me not, but be forever kind."

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM II. 1–64

". . . AKRAKANARBA KANARBA ANARBA NARBA ARBA RBA BA A" (speak the whole name thus, in wing formation).[1]

"O Phoibos, helper through your oracles,
Come joyous, Leto's son, who works afar,
Averter, hither come, hither, come hither.
Foretell, give prophecies amid night's hour,[2]
ALLALALA ALLALALA SANTALALA TALALA"[3] (speak this name too, / leaving off one letter in succession, so as to make a wing formation):[4]

"If e'er with vict'ry-loving laurel branch
Here from your holy peak you often voiced
Words of good omen, so may you now speed
Your way to me with truthful oracles,

LAĒTONION and TABARAŌTH AEŌ EŌ, lord Apollo Paian, who control this night, who are master of it, who hold the hour of prayer too. Come, mighty daimons, help me today / by truly speaking with the son of Leto and Zeus."

Add also the following [spell], which is to be written on laurel leaves, and together with the strip of papyrus on which the Headless One is drawn, it is to be placed beside your head, rolled up. It is to be spoken also to the lamp, after you come in from the prayer, before going to bed, after you have placed a lump of frankincense in the wick of the lamp: "BOASOCH[5] OĒAĒ IAŌIĒ ŌIAĒ ŌIAĒ NICHARO-PLĒX / STHOM ŌTHŌ . . . Y IE IŌ ĒI IAĒL IRMOUCH ŌNOR ŌEYE IYŌ EAŌ SABAŌTH THĒOTĒ PAŌMIACH SIEOU IAŌ IE IEŌ . . . IOY IEOY IŌ IĒI ĒŌ IĒAI IEŌA A E Ē I O Y Ō."

61. The following dactylic hexameters also form vv. 16–18 of the reconstructed Hymn 23 in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 262. [E.N.O.] In contrast to the preceding hymn, ll. 341–47 are Egyptian in character and refer to the sun god's self-generation and daily travel in his ship. See Hornung, Das Amduat, passim. See also PGM I. 34. [R.K.R.]

1. On the wing formation, see PGM I. 11 and n. Here the formula seems to be incomplete. Supply ⟨KRAKANARBA RAKANARBA AKARNABA⟩ and ⟨A⟩ at the end. Cf. l. 65 below.

2. These lines, except for 4–5, are dactylic hexameters which are not always metrically correct; they are the reconstructed Hymn 9, Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 244. The first three lines appear, in slightly altered form, at PGM IV. 24–27 (Hymn 10, 4–6). [E.N.O.]

3. Presumably SANTALALA, but there is considerable corruption in the text.

4. The lines of the following hymn may have originally been written in some iambic meter. Cf. PGM I. 296–97.

5. In l. 32 the papyrus gives BOLSOCH in lieu of BOASOCH as the beginning of the incantation. One or the other is probably wrong.

In order to remember what is said: Use the following compound.[6] Take the plant wormwood, a sun opal, a "breathing stone," the heart of a hoopoe[7] (also known as the "vulture cock"). Grind all these together, add a sufficiency of honey, and anoint your lips with the mixture, having first incensed / your mouth with a grain of frankincense gum.

This is the preparation: In the evening, just before retiring, purify your bed with ass's milk, and then, holding in your hands twigs[8] of laurel (the preparation for which is given below), speak the invocation given below. Let your bed be on the ground, either upon clean rushes or upon a rush mat, and lie on your right side, on the ground and in the open air. While performing the invocation, give answer to nobody, and as you are uttering it, make an offering of a lump of frankincense / and twelve right-whorled[9] pinecones and 2 unblemished [gizzard stones of a] rooster, one to Helios and one to Selene, on the first day [of the month], on a censer[10] of bronze or of earth. On your right inscribe this character,[11] and go to sleep in line with the upper stroke of it. While praying, wear a garland of laurel of the following description: Take 12 laurel twigs; make a garland of 7 sprigs, and bind the remaining five together and hold them in your right hand while you pray, / and lie down to sleep holding this, in the above-mentioned position. Inscribe the character with myrrh ink, such as is shown to you [below], with a . . . feather [or pen],[12] and hold it, along with the laurel, while you are uttering in prayer the words which begin "BOLSOCH," etc.[13]

The names to be written on the sprigs, on each leaf: "YESSEMMIGADŌN ORTHŌ BAUBŌ NOĒRE SOIRE SOIRĒ SANKANTHARA ERISCHIGAL SANKISTĒ DŌDEKAKISTĒ AKROUROBORE KODĒRE" / (write 12 names).

The ink is as follows: In a purified container burn myrrh and cinquefoil and wormwood; grind them to a paste, and use them. Take a sprig of laurel and Ethiopian cumin and nightshade, and grind them together; take in a clay pot water from a new well, dug either 5 months previously or within the last 5 years, or any one you come across on the first day after its being dug, and throw the mixture into the water. Leave it for just 3 nights, and, as you are uttering the invocation, put a little of it into your / right ear.

To achieve a good memory: Write on a leaf of cinquefoil the following character, written with myrrh ink, and keep it in your mouth while you sleep.

The character is:[14] ☥

Start saying the aforementioned invocation at the 7th hour of the moon, until the god hearkens to you, and you make contact with him.

And these are the compulsive [procedures]: All of them may be brought before the moon after the first or second day. / If he does not appear, sacrifice the brain of

6. σύνθεμα as a variant of σύνθημα may also have the meaning of "token" or "sign."

7. Cf. Horapollo, Hier. 1. 55, and the use of the hoopoe in a magical recipe in PDM xiv. 116. See Crum, Coptic Dictionary 102, s.v. [R.K.R.]

8. κλάδος is normally to be translated "branch," but that seems to convey the notion of something larger than can be envisioned here. "Twig" may be better, but it may sound too small. The reader must think of a small branch.

9. δεξίους is either "right-turning" or simply "perfect in shape." Cf. PGM III. 694; XIII. 10.

10. θυμιατήριον is properly an incense burner, but here perhaps simply a word for "altar."

11. In the margin is the ankh sign (☥), a symbol of life.

12. The papyrus reads εν πιννηλι. . . . Preisendanz suggests πίννῃ λι[τῇ], "with a simple, or plain, pen" (taking πίννη as the equivalent of the Latin penna).

13. Cf. above, l. 14.

14. The sign is called shenou, an Egyptian symbol of protection. [J.B.]

a black ram, and on the third day the little nail of its right forefoot, the one nearest to the ankle; on the fourth, the brain of an ibis; on the fifth, write the figure sketched below[15] on papyrus with myrrh ink, wrap it in a piece of clothing of one who has died violently, and throw it into the furnace of a bathhouse[16] / (some, however, [throw it] not into a furnace, for that is too extreme, but they suspend it over a lamp, or place it beneath one).

In another [text] I have found the following: If then, he does not hearken to this method, wrap up the figure in the same piece of cloth, and throw it into the furnace of a bathhouse on the fifth day, saying after the invocation: "ABRI and ABRO EXANTIABIL, God of gods, king of kings, now force a friendly daimon of prophecy to come to me, lest I apply worse tortures to you, the things written on the strips of papyrus." /

If even after this he does not hearken, pour fine, pure oil of radishes over an uncorrupted boy, who has been tested,[17] and having gathered it up again, prepare a lamp not painted red, and set it upon a lampstand fashioned from virgin soil (some authorities say to pour some of the oil on the altar also). If you feel a blow,[18] chew up the cumin and drink it down with some unmixed wine.

Write the prescribed figure / as given above, along with the characters and the prescribed spell twice with myrrh ink on hieratic papyrus. And of these, one you should hold as you make your invocation, as you go to sleep grasping it in your right hand, and placing it under your head, while the other, if the necessity arrives for the compulsive [procedure], you should roll up in the aforementioned cloth and use as prescribed.

*Tr.: John Dillon and E. N. O'Neil (hymnic sections, ll. 2–4; 5–10)

PGM II. 64–183

*An alternative procedure: Take a sprig of laurel and write the / 2 names on its leaves, the one: "[AKRAKANARBA] KRAKANARBA RAKANARBA AKANARBA KANARBA ANARBA NARBA ARBA RBA BA A"; the other: "SANTALALA ANTALALA NTALALA TALALA ALALA LALA ALA LA A."[19]

Take another sprig with twelve leaves on it, and inscribe on it the following heart-shaped name,[20] while you begin with a sacred utterance. This is as follows: . . . . And make of the sprig inscribed with the two names / a garland for yourself, weaving about it a binding consisting of white wool, bound at intervals with red wool, and let this hang down as far as the collarbone. You shall hang a similar binding also from the twelve-leaved sprig, and present yourself to the god in the following manner: Take a completely white cock and a pinecone; pour wine upon it, anoint yourself and remain praying / until the sacrifice[21] is extinguished. Then rub

15. That is, the figure of the Headless One given at the end of the variant spell, PGM II. 64–183.

16. Properly, the hot-air space of a hypocaust. [J.M.D.] Bathhouses were important places for doing magic. See Kropp, Koptische Zaubertexte I, 51–52; II, 32; J. H. Johnson, OMRM 56 (1975): 44–45. See also PDM xii. 149. [R.K.R.]

17. γυμναζομένῳ means literally "trained" or "practiced." But cf. PDM xiv. 287 and esp. xiv. 68, where a boy's sexual purity is stressed. Hence the accompanying use of ἀφθόρῳ here.

18. What seems to be envisioned is something akin to an electric shock. Cf. VII. 230. [J.M.D.] Cf. also 2 Sm 6:7.

19. Cf. above, ll. 1–5. Each name is to be uttered in "wing formation," leaving off one letter from the beginning in sequence. See l. 11 and n.

20. The heart-shaped name is lost, but presumably it resembled the allegedly twelve-part inscription given at ll. 33–35 above. Cf. III. 70, "in the shape of a heart, like a bunch of grapes."

21. Cf. above, ll. 24ff.

yourself all over with the following mixture: laurel bayberries, Ethiopian cumin, nightshade, and "Hermes' finger." You shall also speak into the lamp the following: "PERPHAĒNŌ . . . DIAMANTHŌ . . . L DIAMENCHTHŌTH[22] PERPERCHRĒ ŌANOUTH PHROUMEN THORPSOU."

The operative name[23] is: "AKTI KARA ABAIŌTH, O lord god, servant of god, who are in control of this night, stand by me, Apollo Paian."

Go to sleep with your head toward the south. / Use this at the time of sunrise,[24] when the moon is in Gemini:

Fourth Invocation:[25]

"Laurel,[26] Apollo's holy plant of presage,
Whose leaves the scepter-bearing lord once tasted
And sent forth songs himself, Ieios,
Renowned Paian, who live in Kolophon,
Give heed to holy song. And quickly come
To earth from heaven and converse [with me].
Stand near and from ambrosian lips inspire
My songs; come, / lord of song, yourself; renowned Ruler of song. Hear, blessed one, heavy
In wrath and stern. Now, Titan, hear our voice,
Unfailing one, do not ignore. Stand here,
Speak presage to a suppliant from your Ambrosian mouth, quickly, all-pure Apollo."

(Speak while the sun is rising).

Greeting formula:[27]

"Hail, fire's dispenser, world's far-seeing king,
O Helios, with noble steeds, the eye
Of Zeus which guards the earth, all-seeing one,
Who travel lofty paths, O gleam divine,[28]
Who move, through the heaven, bright, unattainable, /
Born long ago, unshaken, with a headband
Of gold, wearing a disk, mighty with fire,
With gleaming breastplate, winged one, untiring

22. MENCHTHŌTH is equivalent to mnḫ Ḏḥwty, "Thoth is excellent/beneficent." [R.K.R.]

23. On the significance of the term κύριον ὄνομα, see Philo, Leg. alleg. 1. 75; Det. 22; 83; Plant. 74. For the doctrine of the sacred name, see also Iamblichus, Myst. 7.4–5.

24. The exact significance is not clear, but cf. PGM VI. 4–5, where a very similar hymn is to be recited at sunrise. See also Philo, Vit. cont. 89; Apuleius, Met. 11.20.

25. The basic form of the lines in this passage is metrical, but the dactylic hexameters are frequently interrupted by voces magicae and brief statements in prose. Ll. 81–102, 107, 132–40, 163–66 have been combined to reconstruct Hymn 11. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 245–46. Ll. 81–82 (Hymn 11. 1–2) appear also at PGM VI. 6–7 (Hymn 13. 1–2) and 81 also appears at PGM XII. 87–93. [E.N.O.]

26. For the role of laurel in magic, see L. Deubner, Kleine Schriften zur Klassischen Altertumskunde (Königstein: Hain, 1982) 401–3.

27. The papyrus reads χαῖρε, "hail," which Preisendanz understands as an abbreviation of χαιρετισμός, "greeting formula." See on this A. Baumstark, "Chairetismos," RAC 2 (1954): 993–1006. The hymn that follows is written in hexameters, although toward the end of the passage the meter falters. The hymnic section that begins in l. 101, "I call upon you . . . ," may be in prose; however, cf. PGM IV. 261ff., where σέ is used repeatedly as the first word of a hexameter and where καλ(έ)ω follows σέ three times.

28. διιπετές properly means "fallen from Zeus or heaven," referring to water, but the term is widely used to mean simply "divine." Here some of the original meaning seems appropriate. See Bauer, s.v. "διοπετής;" Betz, Lukian 168 n. 2.

With golden reins, coursing a golden path,
And you who watch, encircle, hear all men.
For you day's flames that bring the light give birth
To Dawn, and as you pass the midmost pole,
Behind you rosy-ankled Sunrise goes Back to her home in grief; in front, Sunset
Meets you and leads your team of fire-fed steeds /
Down into Ocean; Night darts down in flight
From heav'n, whene'er she hears the crack of whip
That strikes with force around the horses' flanks,
AAAAAAA EEEEEEE ĒĒĒĒĒĒĒ IIIIIII OOOOOOO YYYYYYY ŌŌŌŌŌŌŌ;
O scepter-bearing leader of the Muses,
Giver of life, come now to me, come quickly
To earth, Ieios, hair wreathed with ivy.
And, Phoibos, with ambrosian mouth give voice
To song. Hail, fire's guard, / ARARACHCHARA
ĒPHTHISIKĒRE, and hail, Moirai three,
Klotho and Atropos and Lachis[29] too.
I call you,[30] who are great in heav'n, airlike,
Supreme ruler, you whom all nature serves
Who dwell throughout the whole inhabited world, you [whose] bodyguard is the sixteen giants, you who are seated upon the lotus and who light up the whole inhabited world;[31] you who have designated the various living things upon the earth, you who have the sacred bird / upon your robe[32] in the eastern parts of the Red Sea, even as you have upon the northern parts the figure of an infant child seated upon a lotus, O rising one, O you of many names, SESENGENBARPHARANGĒS; on the southern parts you have the shape of the sacred falcon, through which you send fiery heat into the air, which becomes LERTHEXANAX; / in the parts toward the west you have the shape of a crocodile, with the tail of a snake, from which you send out rains and snows; in the parts toward the east you have [the form of] a winged dragon, a diadem fashioned of air, with which you quell all discords beneath the heaven and on earth, for you have manifested yourself as god in truth, IŌ IŌ ERBĒTH / ZAS[33] SABAŌTH SMARTH ADŌNAI SOUMARTA IALOU BABLA YAM MOLĒENTHIŌ PETOTOUBIĒTH IARMIŌTH LAILAMPS CHŌOUCH[34] ARSENOPHRĒ EU PHTHA ĒŌLI. Hear me, O greatest god, Kommes, who lights up the day, NATHMAMEŌTH; you who rise as an infant,[35] / MAIRACHACHTHA; you who traverse the pole, THARCHACHACHAU: you who unite with yourself and endow

29. Lachis is probably metrical for Lachesis.

30. The following is an Egyptian section in contrast to the preceding Greek hymn. Ll. 102 and 106–7 contain an invocation of the sun god as a child sitting upon the lotus, enlightening the world. See S. Morenz and J. Schubert, Der Gott auf der Blume (Ascona: Artibus Asiae, 1954). [R.K.R.]

31. For the transformations of the sun god hour by hour, see PGM III. 500ff.; IV. 1596ff., and on the whole subject H. Brugsch, "Die Kapitel der Verwandlungen," ZÄS 5 (1867): 21–26. [R.K.R.]

32. Cf. Apuleius' description of the Olympiaca stola in Met. 11. 24, and Griffith's commentary, The Isis-Book 308–14. The bird may be the phoenix, for which cf. PGM XII. 231; XIII. 881. See on the Phoenix myth the chapter in M. Tardieu, Trois mythes gnostiques: Adam, Éros et les animaux d'Égypte dans un écrit de Nag Hammadi (II, 5) (Paris: Études Augustiniennes, 1974) 231–62.

33. Zas is an old name for Zeus. See also PGM XIXa. 44; Orph. Frag. no. 145 (p. 189); cf. Dieterich, Abraxas 130 n. 1.

34. CHŌOYCH is equivalent to Egyptian kky, "darkness." [R.K.R.]

35. See on this point PGM II. 102 and n.

yourself with power, giver of increase and illuminator[36] of many things, SESENGENBARPHARANGĒS of waters, most powerful god, Kommes, Kommes IASPHĒ[37] IASPHĒ BIBIOU BIBIOU NOUSI NOUSI SIETHŌN / SIETHŌN ARSAMŌSI ARSAMŌSI NOUCHA NOUCHA Ē ĒI OMBRI THAM BRITHIAŌTH ABERAMENTHŌOUTHLERTHEXANAXETHRELUOŌTHNEMAREBA, the most great and mighty god. I am he, NN, who have presented myself to you, and you have given me as a gift the knowledge of your most great name, of which the number is 9,999: IĒ IE IA IAĒ IAE IEY IĒA IŌA IEY / IĒI ĒIA EA EĒ ĒE ŌĒ ĒŌ EĒE EEĒ ĒEE AAŌ ŌEA EAŌ ŌI ŌE ĒŌ EĒ EAE III OOO YYY ŌŌŌ IY EY OY ĒEA IĒEA EAE EIA IAIE IĒA IOY IŌE IOY IĒ IĒ IĒ IĒIE; Paian,[38] Phoibos of Kolophon, Phoibos of Parnassos, Phoibos of Kastalia; IĒEA IĒ IŌ IY / IE IŌA IĒA EYA ŌEA EYĒA ŌEYA EYŌA EYIE EYIAE EYE EYĒ EYIE EYŌ IEYAE EYĒAE, I will hymn Phoibos Mentor . . . AREŌTH IAEŌTH IŌA IŌĒA AE OŌE AĒŌ ŌĒA ĒŌA AĒE IE IŌ IŌ IŌ IEA IAĒ IEOY EOYŌ AA AĒŌ EE EĒY ĒĒ EĒA CHABRACH PHLIESKĒR PHIKRO PHINYRŌ PHŌCHŌBŌCH;[39] I summon you, Apollo of Klaros, / EĒY; Kastalian One, AĒA; Pythian, ŌAE; Apollo of the Muses, IEŌŌEI."

Preparation for the rite: On the first day, [collect] nails of a sheep; on the second, the nails of a goat; on the third, the hair or knucklebone of a wolf. Use these as burnt offerings for the next 3 days. On the seventh day, in case he does not yet come, / make a lampwick out of a piece of cloth taken from one who has died violently, and light a lamp from pure oil, and recite the prescribed formulas, beseeching and exhorting the god to come with good will; let your place be cleansed of all pollution, and having purified it, begin in purity the supplication to the god, for it is very great and irresistible.

/ Rite: Take mud and purify the doorposts of your bedchamber, in which you are observing ritual purity, and having thus smeared on the mud, write the following inscription with a bronze stylus on the right-hand doorpost.[40]

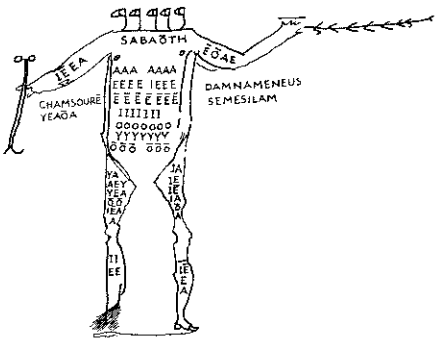
What is to be written is as follows: "  ARSAMŌSI NOUCHA NOUCHA  ĒI ĒI IA IA IE ĒY / ABRASAX LERTHEMINŌTH." Similarly on the left-hand doorpost: "  IŌE ĒŌA ĒIEA IAIA IE IAIĒEA HARPON KNOUPHI" (formula).[41]

On the upper part of the door: "  AA EE MICHAĒL ĒIA EYŌ YAE EYŌ IAE." Below the door, [inscribe] the scarab, as it stands / here,[42] having anointed it with the blood of a goat, outside your bedchamber. Let the throne be purified, and upon it a linen cloth, and beneath it a footstool. Inscribe on the throne, on the underside: "IĒ IEA IOAY DAMNAMENEUS ABRAĒ ABRAŌ ABRAŌA; lord of the

36. The papyrus reads πολυφωτιστα (cf. LSJ, s.v. πολυφωτίστης), a reasonably well-formed word only attested here. However, in view of the genitive ὑδάτων following the vox magica, which seems to need a governing noun, Preisendanz emends to πολύφω⟨τε κ⟩τίστα.

37. For similar formulas see PGM V. 485; XII. 80; XIII. 805ff.; XXI. 25. The formula beginning "ABERAMEN . . . " (see Glossary) should be read in Preisendanz's text as a long palindrome.

38. The following text has many epithets of the god Apollo. Cf. PGM II. 139–40; III. 251; VI. 24–25. See I. 263 and n.



39. The spacing of this formula has been changed to conform to the spacing of the same formula found elsewhere in the PGM (see I. 141–42; III. 77–78, 151–52, etc.).

40. For the ritual concerning the doorposts cf. the Jewish mezuzah, for which see Ex 12:7, 22–23; Dt 6:4–9; 11:13–21. See Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen 152; Schürer, History of the Jewish People II, 479–80 (with additional references).

41. For the whole formula, see PGM I. 27.

42. The papyrus has ωσπερισχει, which Preisendanz emends to read ὡς περιέχει, but the meaning is not clear.

Muses, / be gracious to me, your suppliant, and be benevolent and merciful; appear to me with pure countenance."

This figure is to be / inscribed on a piece of clothing belonging to one who has died violently, and is to be cast into a pure lamp.

SENSENGEN BARPHARANGĒS / ŌĒIA IŌAE

After you have learned all you want, you will release him, doing honor to him in a worthy manner. Sprinkle dove's blood round about, make a burnt offering of myrrh, and say, "Depart, lord, CHORMOU CHORMOU OZOAMOROIRŌCH KIMNOIE EPOZOI EPOIMAZOU / SARBOENDOBAIACHCHA IZOMNEI PROSPOI EPIOR; go off, lord, to your seats, to your palace, leaving me strength and the right of audience with you."

*Tr.: John Dillon and E. N. O'Neil (hymnic sections, ll. 81–87; 88–101).

PGM III. 1–164

* [Take a] cat, and [make] it into an Esiēs [by submerging] its body in water. While you are drowning it, speak [the formula] to [its] back.

The formula during the drowning [is as follows]:

"Come hither to me, you who are in control of the form of Helios, you the cat- / faced god,[1] and behold your form being mistreated by [your] opponents,[2] [them,] NN, so that you may revenge yourself upon them, and accomplish [the] NN deed, because I am calling upon you, O sacred spirit. Take on / strength and vigor against your enemies, them, NN, because I am conjuring you by your names, BARBATHIAŌ BAINCHŌŌŌCH NIABŌAITHABRAB[3] SESENGENBARPHARARGĒS . . . PHREIMI; raise yourself up for me, O cat-faced god, and perform the NN deed" (add the usual).

/ Take the cat, and make [three] lamellae, one for its anus,[4] one for . . . , and one for its throat; and write the formula [concerning the] deed on a clean[5] sheet of

1. The goddess addressed here is Sekhmet-Bastet, well known from Egyptian magical texts. See Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts, nos. 5, 13–15, 18, 20, 124; Bergman, Ich bin Isis 264–67; E. Otto, "Bastet," LdÄ 1 (1975): 628–30.

2. For this type of accusation, see PGM III. 113–14; IV. 2475 and n.

3. The letters BARBATHIAŌBAINCHŌŌŌCHNIABŌAITHABRAB form a palindrome. BAINCHŌŌŌCH ("soul of Khukh," the god of darkness) is often read separately, but is adapted to this form for numerological reasons: the formula adds up to 3663.

4. That is, "one [to be placed] in its anus." Preisendanz in the second case restores ἐν τ[ῷ στόμα]τι, but this is in conflict with the other restoration in l. 67 below: [. . . διὰ τ]ῶν καμ[αρῶν], "through the carholes."

5. "Clean" is meant regularly in PGM in a descriptive sense, i.e., previously unused or "free" from imperfections, etc. See LSJ, s.v. "καθαρός," 3a. For detailed description regarding papyrus, see Pliny, NH 13. 68–89, and R. Wünsch, "Charta," PRE 3 (1899): 2185–92.

papyrus, with cinnabar [ink], and [then the names of] the chariots and charioteers, and the chariot boards / and the racehorses.[6] Wind this around the body of the cat and bury it. Light seven lamps upon [7] unbaked bricks, and make an offering, fumigating storax gum to it, and be of good cheer.[7] / Take its body [and preserve] it by immuring it either in a tomb or in a burial place . . . with colors, . . . bury . . . looking toward the sunrise, pour out (?) . . . , saying:

"Angel, . . . [SĒMEA], chthonic / . . . lord[8] (?), grant [safety?], . . . O chthonic one, in [the] horse race, IAKTŌRĒ;[9] hold . . . restrain . . . , PHŌKENSEPSEUARE[KTATHOUMISONKTAI],[10] for me, the spirit . . . the daimon of [the] place . . . / and may the [NN deed] come about for me immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly, because I conjure you, at this place and at this time, by the implacable god . . . THACHŌCHA EIN CHOUCHEŌCH, and by the great chthonic god, / ARIŌR EUŌR, and by the names that apply to you; perform the NN deed" (add the usual).

Then take up the water in which the drowning took place, and sprinkle it [on] the stadium or in the place where you are performing [the rite].

The formula to be spoken, while you are sprinkling the drowning water, is as follows: "I call upon you, Mother of all men, / you who have brought together the limbs of Meliouchos, even Meliouchos himself, OROBASTRIA NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH, Entrapper,[11] Mistress of corpses,[12] Hermes, Hekate, [Hermes?], Hermekate,[13] LETH AMOUMAMOUTERMYŌR;[14] I conjure you, the daimon that has been aroused in this place, / and you, the daimon of the cat that has been endowed with spirit;[15] come to me on this very day and from this very moment, and perform for me the NN deed" (add the usual, whatever you wish), "CHYCHBACHYCH BACHACHYCH BACHAXICHYCH BAZABACHYCH BAIACHACHYCH BAZĒTŌPHŌTH / BAINCHŌŌŌCH ANIBŌŌŌ CHŌCHE . . . PHIŌCHEN GĒBRŌCHTHŌ MYSAGAŌTH CHEŌŌ . . . Ō[16] SABAŌTH EULAMOSI ĒĒLAXIMA . . . [. . . THACHŌCH]AXIN CHOUCHEŌCH."

On the [1st and 3rd leaves of metal] which you are to use for the conjuration, there should be this: "IAEŌ" /

6. μονάτωρ is a late word for μονάμπυξ, "horse with a single frontlet," i.e., a racehorse. Presumably one drew crude representations of them, along with their names, on a sheet of papyrus. Cf. such figures on the so-called Scythian curse tablets in R. Wünsch, Sethianische Verfluchungstafeln aus Rom (Leipzig: Teubner, 1899), esp. 51.

7. Cf. PGM IV. 2390 for a similar injunction to perform a rite with good cheer. See also Plutarch, De tranq. an. 20, p. 477E, and R. Bultmann, TDNT 2 (1976): 772–75 s.v. "εὐφραίνω."

8. The papyrus reads . . . ρνε. Eitrem suggests τύραννε.

9. It is not clear whether iaktore is a magical word or something sensible. Preisendanz suggests ακτωρε as a Greek equivalent of Latin actores, "drivers," but in that case the syntax is unclear.

10. Emended and restored with plausibility from PGM III. 78–79, 513–14, 545–46; IV. 339–40; LXVII. 13.

11. Although attested in LSJ, s.v. "ἀρκυία," as an epithet of the goddess Hekate with uncertain meaning (with reference to Audollent, Defixionum Tabellae 38. 14 [third cent. A.D.]), "the netter" is a standard Egyptian underworld daimon. See D. Bidoli, Die Sprüche der Fangnetze (Glückstadt: Augustin, 1976); J. Zandee, Death as an Enemy (Leiden: Brill, 1960) 226–34. [R.K.R.]

12. The term νεκυία is also attested in this sense only in PGM IV. 2781, but necessarily having some such meaning.

13. The name Hermekate is a combination of Hermes and Hekate. See Wünsch, Defixionum Tabellae, nos. 104–7. Here in the papyrus the name could also be read Hermekatēlēth, that is, with the typical ending -ēth; thus Eitrem in the apparatus to III. 37.

14. AMOY at the beginning is Coptic for "come!" [R.K.R.]

15. πνευματωτός is a form not otherwise attested; cf. PGM XIII. 525: ἐμπνευματώθη.

16. A plausible restoration is IAŌ in that IAŌ and SABAŌTH form a common pairing in the PGM.

60 [AEŌ]BAPHRENEMOUNOTH[ILARIKRIPHTHNAI]-
YIANTHPHIRKIRALITH[ONYOMENER]- PHABŌEA.

[ABLAN]ATHANALBA
[ABLAN]ATHANALBA.[17]

65 / On [the 2nd] metal leaf, that is to be put [through the earholes],[18] there should be this: "TREBA ABERAMENTHŌOUTHLERAEXANAXETHRELTHYOŌETHNEMA-70 REBA" / (in the shape of a heart, like a bunch of grapes).

Right skeletal figure: [Left skeletal figure]:

"IŌ ERBĒTH
IŌ PAKERBĒTH
IŌ BOLCHOSĒTH
IŌ APOMPS
75 IŌ PATATHNAX
IŌ AKOUBIA
IŌ SĒTH
PHŌKENSEPSEU-
AREKTATHOUMISAKTAI,
80 Perform the NN deed" (add the usual, whatever you wish).

"I conjure you, the powerful and mighty angel of this animal in this place; rouse yourself for me, and perform the NN [deed] both on this very day and in every hour and day; rouse yourself / for me against my enemies, NN, and perform NN deed" (add the usual), "for I conjure you by IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI ABRASAX, and by the great god, IAEŌ" (formula), "AEĒIOYŌ ŌYOIĒEA CHABRAX PHNESKĒR PHIKO PHNYRO PHŌCHŌ BŌCH / ABLANATHANALBA AKRAMMACHAMARI SESENGENBARPHARANGĒS MITHRA NAMAZAR ANAMARIA DAMNAMENEU CHEU CHTHŌ[NIE][19] THORTOEI, holy king, the sailor, [who steers]

17. After the second ABLANATHANALBA there appears an isolated "K" followed by a lacuna of uncertain size. The papyrus either reads και, "and," or κοινά, "add the usual." For obvious reasons, it has been left untranslated.

18. See above, l. 16 and n.

19. This formula, repeated below l. 100, may well be garbled Greek for Damnameneu, Zeu chthonie, identifying Helios-Mithras with Hades. [J.M.D.]

the tiller of the lord god,[20] rouse [yourself] for me, great cat-faced one, steerer of the tiller [of God], perform the NN deed (add the usual), from this very day, / immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly. Perform for me the NN deed (add the usual, as much as you wish), powerful Seth-Typhon,[21] and act lawlessly through your strength and overturn the NN deed in this place . . . [in this very hour?], as I command your image, / for I conjure you, MASKELLI MASKELLŌ (formula). Perform for me this, the NN deed, by virtue of your visage, cat-faced spirit; perform for me the NN deed (add the usual), and what is written hereafter" (add your additional requests).[22] Proceed toward the sunset[23] and, / taking the right-hand and left-hand whiskers of the cat as a phylactery, complete the rite by saying this formula to Helios.

Formula: "Halt, halt the sacred boat,[24] steersman of the sacred boat! Even you, Meliouchos, / I will bind to your moorings, until I hold converse with sacred Helios. Yea, greatest Mithra, NAMAZAR ANAMARIA DAMNAMENEU CHEU CHTHŌNIE THONTOEI, holy king, the sailor, he who controls the tiller of the lord god,[25] THONTOEI KATHEN KAI MENŌPHRIS[26] . . . KMEBAU KERKERYMI, before / [you attain to] the southwest of the heaven, before [you reach nightfall?] in flight from the outrages committed against you. Hearken to me as I pray to you, that you may perform the NN [deed], because I invoke you by your names BARBARATHAM CHELOUBRAM / BAROUCH[AMBRA] SESENGENBARPHARANGĒS AMPHI MIOURI . . . MIN. Perform the NN deed" (add the usual, whatever you wish), "for it is those same people who have mistreated[27] your holy image, they who have mistreated [the holy] boat, / wherefore for me . . . , that you may return upon them the NN deed (add the usual). Because I call upon you, IŌ ERBĒTH [IŌ] PAKERBĒTH IŌ BOLCHOSĒTH IŌ APOMPS IŌ PATATHNAX IŌ AKOUBIA IŌ ABERAMENTHŌOUTHLERTHEXANAXETHRELTHYOŌTHNEMAREBA. Perform the NN deed (add the usual), I conjure you in the Hebrew tongue[28] / and by virtue of the Necessity of the Necessitators,[29] MASKELLI MASKELLŌ. Accomplish this for me and destroy and ravage in the coming dawn, and let the NN deed befall them" (add the usual, whatever you wish), "immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly. Pleasant be your setting!"

When you have come to the place / in which you are performing the rite, then, taking hold of the long whiskers of the cat, both the right-hand and the left-hand, as a phylactery, go through the whole of this formula to Helios at his rising.

Formula: "Hither to me, O greatest in heaven, for whom the heaven has come into being as a dancing place, / SATIS[30] PEPHŌOUTH HŌRA, OITCHOU; of necessity

20. A reference to the solar bark of Re. See PGM III. 98–105. [R.K.R.]

21. Seth plays here the role of the defender of the bark of Re. See H. te Velde, Seth, God of Confusion (Leiden: Brill, 1967) 99–108. [R.K.R.]

22. Or, "for other uses." Cf. the list of uses at PGM XIII. 230–333.

23. A reference to a place from where the sunset can be viewed.

24. For the halting of the solar bark, cf. Iamblichus, Myst. 6.5 and B. Ebbell, Papyrus Ebers (London: Oxford University Press, 1937) 70–71. [R.K.R.]

25. Cf. PGM III. 81 and n.

26. Egyptian mn-nfr, "established and beautiful," an epithet of Memphis. [J.B.]

27. For this type of accusation see PGM III. 5; IV. 2475 and n.

28. Probably the meaning is "by the Hebrew sound" and refers to the vowel combinations with IAŌ. [J.B.] See also Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen 128–37; O. Eissfeld, "Jahwe-Name und Zauberwesen," in his Kleine Schriften 1 (Tübingen: Mohr, Siebeck, 1962) 150–71. On the use of "barbaric language" (ῥῆσις βαρβαρική) generally, see Hopfner, OZ I, sections 706–69; Betz, Lukian 153–54.

29. This peculiar expression is found also in PGM IV. 262; cf. VII. 302–4; XXXVI. 342–49 and perhaps IV. 1456; XIII. 291; XIXa. 11.

30. Probably referring to the Egyptian goddess Satis. See Bonnet, RÄRG 670–71, s.v. "Satis."

perform for me the NN deed, EĪ LAANCHYCH AKARBĒN LAAR MENTHRĒ SENE-
135 BECHYCH, you who love prophecy, golden-visaged,[31] gold-gleaming, / shining with fire in the night, valiant, valiant ruler of the world, who shine out early in the day, who set in the west[32] of heaven, who rise up from the east, SL . . . IX,[33] circle-
140 shaped, who run until midday and linger in Arabia, MOURŌPHO[34] / EMPHE . . . IR, the messenger of the holy light, the fiery circle, PERTAŌMĒCH PERAKŌNCHMĒCH PERAKOMPHTHŌAK KMĒPH,[35] the brilliant Sun, who shine throughout the whole inhabited world, who ride upon the ocean, PSOEI Ō PSOEI Ō PNOUTE NENTĒR
145 TĒROU;[36] / I adjure you by the Egg.[37] I am Adam the forefather; my name is Adam. Perform for me the NN deed, because I conjure you by the god IAŌ, by the god ABAŌTH, by the god ADŌNAI, by the god MICHAĒL, by the god SOURIĒL, by the 150 god GABRIĒL, by the god RAPHAĒL, / by the god ABRASAX ABLATHANALBA AKRAMMACHARI, by the lord god, IAIŌL, by the god lord CHABRA(CH)[38] PHNESKĒR PHICHRO PHNYRO PHŌCHŌBŌCH AEĒIOYŌ ŌYOIĒEA; you who light up the day,
155 NETHMOMAŌ; the child, / the riser, OROKOTOTHRO, augmenter of fire and of much light, SESENGENBARPHARAGGĒS. Come to me, hearken [to me], most just one of all, steward of truth, establisher of justice; I am he whom you met and granted
160 knowledge and holy utterance of your greatest name, by which you control / the whole inhabited world; perform for me the NN deed" [(add the usual)].

This is the ritual of the cat, [suitable] for every ritual purpose: A charm to restrain charioteers in a race, a charm for sending dreams, a binding love charm, and a charm to cause separation and enmity.

*Tr.: J. M. Dillon. This elaborate spell, a charm suitable for a number of purposes (all of which are forms of malicious magic), is set forth with special reference to its use in chariot races; it is understood, however, that the additional functions, as stated at the end of the spell, also prove useful to the practitioner, provided that he supply in the required places the appropriate requests.

PGM III. 165–86

165 *Take [some] water cress,[39] 4 fingers in length, and make from it . . . and of the plant bugloss . . . construct . . . a strip of papyrus, and in the middle of the papyrus 170 strip . . . throw it away, saying the / names: "AN . . . SAŌ IBR . . . EISIRO . . . OUSIREN [TECHTHA[40] . . .]L, I conjure you, lord gods, . . . do not, therefore, dis-

31. Neither φιλομαντοσύνος nor χρυσοπρόσωπος is attested elsewhere, according to LSJ.

32. Reading λιβυβόρῳ, a compound found nowhere else; it probably means "west."

33. It is not clear whether this damaged word is a vox magica or a Greek word.

34. Mourōph is a name of the hour god in PGM IV. 1690 (the god of the eleventh hour, having the form of an ibis).

35. Forms of this logos occur in PGM IV. 1010; XII. 190; XIII. 780, 820. The final name Kmēph is an epithet of Osiris and is the equivalent of the Egyptian ḫmʿf, "his shrine." Cf. SATRAPERKMĒPH in PGM XII. 185; XIII. 915.

36. The phrase is equivalent to the Egyptian p3 šy ʿ3 p3 šy ʿ3 p3 ntr n3 ntr. w tr. w, "Good Daimon, Good Daimon, O god of all the gods!" PSOEIŌ should be the usual PSAIAS. [R.K.R.]

37. For the sun as an egg, cf. PGM XII. 100–106. On the cosmic egg, see J. Bergman, Isis-Seele und Isis-Ei (Uppsala: Almqvist and Wiksell, 1970) 73–102; Morenz, Egyptian Religion 177–79. [R.K.R.]

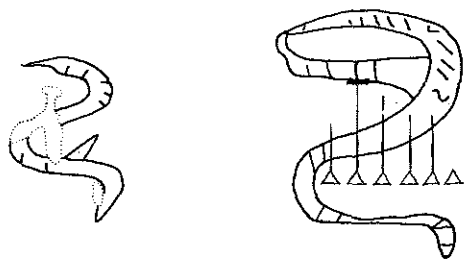
38. This formula has been misread and is here emended on the basis of PGM I. 141–42; II. 138–39; III. 77–78. Preisendanz has LABRA at the beginning. The lambda has been misread for a chi.

39. The papyrus has [.]α[.] δαμινον, which Preisendanz restores to read [κ]α[ρ] δάμινον, an unattested adjectival form of κάρδαμον, "nose-smart" (thus LSJ, s.v.; a mustardlike plant). However, Schmidt, GGA 1931, 450 suggests [β]α[λ] σάμινον, "balsam wood." Cf. PGM XII. 364.

40. A variant of the name OSIRCHENTECHTHA. See also PGM VII. 257. The name corresponds to Egyptian Osiris-khenty-khet, a combination of Osiris and Khenty-khet, the local god of Athribis, who in the text is joined together with Osiris, Horus, and Apis. See Bonnet, RÄRG 131–33, s.v. "Chentechtai." [R.K.R.]

regard me; speak to me [clearly about] everything, accomplish everything . . . of / my prayer [and . . .] if god will, of this prayer [on the strip of papyrus] and of the important matter of mine."



And you must make an offering in . . . [write] this [on a piece of priestly papyrus] with myrrh ink: . . . / [ouroboros][41] serpent . . . "ŌTE . . . IAM . . . GRASŌCHŌ . . . NŌPSITHER THERNŌPSI . . ."

*Tr.: J. M. Dillon. This fragmentary portion of PGM III begins another untitled spell which probably ends at line 186, since line 187 begins a new column (col. VIII) in the papyrus manuscript. Although the exact purpose of this short spell cannot be determined, its function may be similar to that of the spell to follow, viz., an oracular request.

PGM III. 187–262

*Pound up dry fruit (?)[42] with a pestle (?)[43] and mix it to sufficiency with honey and [oil of] a date palm. Grind up a magnet. Boil all together and pulverize it. Make little rounds, as many as you wish, / but put an ounce of each element of the mixture into each of these, and proceed thus, singing a hymn of praise to the god. Then the deity will come to you, shaking the whole house and the tripod[44] before him. Then he will bring about[45] your enquiry into the future, being clear in his intercourse with you,[46] as long as you wish, / and then dismiss the god with thanks.

The drawing of the tripod:

This is the prayer of encounter of the rite which is recited to Helios:[47]

"Keep silent, everyone, the voice that's in Your mouths; O circling birds of air, keep quiet; /
Cease frolicking, you dolphins, o'er the brine.
Stand for me, river streams and fountain [flows].

41. Supplying [οὐροβ]ορος in the lacuna. [R.D.K.]

42. τὰ ξυρά. Preisendanz translates on the basis of a gloss in Hesychius, ξυρόν, "cutting, dry, sharp." But perhaps we are to understand simply ξύλα, "pieces of wood," assuming a confusion of lambda and rho. The definite article, however, suggests the pieces of wood were previously mentioned, in which case this spell would be connected to the preceding (cf. l. 165).

43. The papyrus has σχομπανου, a word otherwise unattested and meaningless. Preisendanz emends to κομπανου, "strawberry tree," a rather radical change. Perhaps we should read κοπάνου, "pestle," the sigma being an error, and the mu intrusive, as it often is with pi. This, however, would have to be a genitive used instrumentally, which is troublesome.

44. This tripod has not been mentioned before, but it is obviously central to the ceremony (cf. ll. 291–96 below). Perhaps we can assume the tripod is a part of the magician's basic equipment (see PGM IV. 1890–91; 1897; V. 200–201; XIII. 104, 661, etc.).

45. Reading future τελεῖ instead of imperative τέλει. The phrase that follows (τρανὴς τῇ ὁμι[λ]ίᾳ) seems to make better sense if it refers to the god. Cf. PGM II. 83–84, where ὁμιλῶν is used of the god consorting with the magician.

46. On Apollo's epiphany cf. Callimachus, Hy. 2.1–2. [W.B.]

47. The following dactylic hexameters are also the reconstructed Hymn 5. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 241–42. [E.N.O.]

Now, birds of augury, stop everything
Beneath the sky. Snakes in your dens, attend
The cry and be afraid. May you in awe
[Keep] silence, daimons 'mid the shades. / The world
Itself's astonished by the secret words.
King Semea,[48] [father] of the world, be gracious
To me, O scarab; [I call you] immortal,
Golden-haired god, O scarab, marvel great
To ev'ry god and man, [be gracious, lord,
Who hold the fiery vapor in your power], /
Lord of the [sunrise], risen fiery,
Titan, I call [you], flaming messenger
Of Zeus, divine IAŌ; and you, too,
Who rule in heaven's realm, O [RAPHAĒL],
Who joy in sunrise, be a gracious god,
O ABRASAX; and you, O greatest one,
O heav'nly one, I call, and [you, MICHAĒL], your helper,[49] /
Who saves [his people's lives], the perfect eye
Of Zeus, and who has both exalted[50] nature
And brought forth nature in its turn from nature.
And I call . . . of the immortals . . .
OPASĒĒPA SESE[NGENB]ARPHARAGGĒS:
All-mighty is the god, but you are[51] greatest,
Immortal one; I beg you, shine forth now,
Lord of the world, SABAŌTH, / who veil[52] sunset
From dawn, ADŌNAI, who, being a world,
Alone among immortals tour the world, self-taught,
Untutored, through the world's midst traveling
To those who with a cry raise you at night.[53]
AKRAMMACH[ARI], KA . . . K . . .
Who joy in laurel offering, / in gates
Of untamed Styx and Death the Arbiter.

48. The name Semea also appears at PGM III. 29, where it is fem., and at V. 429; PDM xiv. 214 among the voces magicae. Despite the designation "King" here, Semea elsewhere is a Syrian goddess whose name appears in various forms on numerous votive inscriptions. She is identified with several deities, e.g., Astarte, Athena, Hera. Semea does not appear in Greco-Roman literary writings except perhaps in Ps.-Lucian, De Syr. Dea 33 (yet the text is uncertain), where it is suggested she is Semiramis. There is also a Syrian god Seimios. See O. Höfer, in Roscher IV, 601; R. Dussaud, "Simea und Simios," PRE, second series 5 (1927): 137–40; W. Fauth, "Simia," KP 5 (1979): 200. [E.N.O.]

49. The papyrus reads ἀ[ρ]ωγόν σου Μ[ιχαὴλ], which is unmetrical. Heitsch would excise ἀρωγόν σου; Preisendanz would excise μέγιστε at the beginning of the line, and write Μιχαὴλ σοὺ ἀρωγόν, which would restore the meter. "Michael" is a restoration, but a probable one; cf. PGM I. 301.

50. ἀέξοντα, the emendation of Wünsch, is preferable to δείξαντα for two reasons: (1) it corrects the meter and (2) it restores the proper sense, for whatever is written must govern φύσιν in both clauses. In any case, ἀέξοντα must be taken as a zeugma. [E.N.O.]

51. Fahz reads ἐσσι in lieu of ἐστι, "you are almighty god."

52. ἐπισκεπάζω is properly "to cover over," hence "veil." It may, however, be a solecism for ἐπισκέπτομαι, "look upon," the sense required here (cf. Preisendanz: "beschaut"). Cf. PGM I. 303, ἐπισκοπιάζεις, which is at least metrical, though the verb is not elsewhere attested. [E.N.O.]

53. The readings of the papyrus are quite uncertain here. See the restoration by Heitsch in Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 241–42 (Hymn 5).

You I adjure, god's seal,[54] at whom all deathless Gods of Olympos quake and daimons who Stand forth preeminent, for whom the sea
Is ordered to be silent when it hears.[55]
You I adjure by mighty god Apollo. /
ΑΕΕΙΟΥΩ."

Also say this: "Send me the daimon who will give responses to me about everything which I order him to speak about." And he will bring this about.

This is also [another] hymn:[56]

"I[57] sing of you, O blessed one, O healer,
Giver of oracles, / O all-wise one,
O Delian [lord and Python-]slaying[58] [youth],
Dodona's [king, foretell,] O Pythian Paian;
I call you, [god who rule the tuneful lyre],
Which you [alone] of gods [do hold and strike]
[With sturdy hands] . . . [lord of the silver bow],
[O well]-named Phoibos . . .
. . . . . .
/ . . . ruler absolute . . .
Who roam the wooded peaks [of Mount Parnassos],
Be silent, do not now unstring . . .
O myrrh tree . . . / Lykian god,
Cease grow . . .
A greater light, for he will learn . . .
From lips divine, someone . . . to arouse
The seer with plectrum[59] . . .
But come you hither, prophesying; come,
Come hither, prophet, who bring joy, O Smintheus,
Give your response and / hearken, Pythian Paian;
Undying shoot, hail, Delphic maiden, Daphne,
For to you first did Phoibos strike up songs
In contest with the Muses; Daphne, you
Shake bough and urge on Phoibos. Then in hymns
They praise your tunefulness from holy Delphi.
O maiden who exult in tones divine
And oracles / . . . heaven's runner,[60] light bearer,
Earth shaker: gracious and obedient,

54. O, "I adjure you [by] the god's seal." See PGM I. 306 and n.

55. In Hymn 5, Preisendanz concludes with ἀκούει, but the following words seem part of the hymn for two reasons: (1) they are almost metrically sound, and (2) they seem to have a poetic sense. [E.N.O.]

56. This hymn is extremely fragmentary in the papyrus. Here the suggested restoration by Heitsch is followed. See Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 247 (Hymn 12). [E.N.O.]

57. This passage contains what appears to be dactylic hexameters, many of which are fragmentary while others are completely missing. [E.N.O.]

58. The papyrus has ]ωλετοκτυπε, which Preisendanz (vol. II, p. 247 [Hymn 12]) restores as [Πυθ]ολετοκτύπε. This, if correct, would be a unique epithet, a combination of two attested epithets: Πυθοκτόνος, "Python slayer," and Πυθολέτης, "Python destroyer."

59. On the instrument called πλῆκτρον, cf. Plutarch, De def. or. 436E; Clement Alex., Protr. 1. 5. 3. [W.B.]

60. Read οὐρ(αν)οδρόμε for papyrus ουροδρομε, which is meaningless. For this epithet see l. 258 and LSJ, s.v.

Come to your prophet, but come now in haste,
O you who run through the air, O Pythian Paian."

Dismissal: ["Hasten], O air-traversing Pythian Paian; return to your heavens, / leaving to me health together with all gratitude, benevolent and ready to hearken, a sure breastplate (?), and depart to your own heavens, and [dwell there.]"

*Tr.: John Dillon and E. N. O'Neil (hymnic sections, ll. 198–230; 234–58).

PGM III. 263–75

Foreknowledge charm: Take your finger and place it under your [tongue][61] before you speak to anyone.[62] Say these things along with the [great name]: / "make me know in advance the things in each person's mind, today, [because] I am TOM . . . IAŌ SABAŌTH IAŌ THĒAĒĒTH . . . M ADOUNAI BATHIAŌ . . . EA THŌĒ IABRABA ARBATHRAS[IAŌ] BATHIAŌŌIA ZAGOURĒ BARBATHIAŌ AĒI AAAAAAA EEEEEEE . . . ŌE . . . SOESĒSISIETH . . . SABAŌTH IAEŌ" (formula). If you wish, you will know [all things in advance], . . . if you have [your finger] / under your tongue, according to [the command, and if you say] this formula to Helios.

And the formula is: "Lord, if you [wish me to know in advance], let the falcon [descend] onto the tree." If it does not happen, also speak this formula to the four winds while you turn around [toward] the wind.[63] Whenever you say the formula, also say to Helios the great name . . . and the great name . . . : AŌTH / SABAŌTH. The formula [is as] above.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM III. 275–81

*[Horoscope]:[64] Moon in [. . . or] Virgo: anything is obtainable, perform bowl divination, as you wish; in [Cancer]: perform the spell of reconciliation, air divination . . . ; in Gemini: perform spells of binding, . . . ; [in] Libra: perform invocation . . . spell of release . . . necromancy; in Pisces . . . OIŌ or love charm; in Sagittarius: conduct business / . . . ; [in] Capricorn: do what is appropriate; in . . . .

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM III. 282–409

*. . . words not to be spoken . . . beyond measure. . . .

Rite that brings foreknowledge, [which has] complete power and makes [all the passions] / subservient:[65] In the deep . . . of a river [or in] a tomb . . . after descending, throw into . . . [the] passion stops, and you will learn whatever you wish.

[But speak thus:] "Continue without deception, lord, the vision of every act, in accordance with the command of the holy spirit, the [angel][66] of Phoibos, you yourself being pliable because of these / songs and psalms."

The preparation for the operation: For a direct vision, set up a tripod and a table of olive wood or of laurel wood, and on the table carve in a circle these characters:[67]

61. For another example of placing something under the tongue, see PGM IV. 1745–46. Cf. also V. 253–54.

62. Cf. Smith, Jesus the Magician 116, who translates: "(in the morning) before you speak to anyone."

63. The formula is spoken to each of the four winds as the officiant faces them successively.

64. κύκλος is supplied by Preisendanz, who translates it "Zodiakalkreis." In the parallel passage in PGM VII. 284 papyrus has κύκλος Σελήνης, which Preisendanz translates "Kreislauf des Mondes."

65. Cf. PGM IV. 1718–19, 1721 for such a use of κλίνω.

66. The term "angel" can also be read as "messenger."

67. Among these characters a scarab is drawn.

 . Cover the tripod with clean linen, / and place a censer on the tripod. It is advantageous[68] to place on the table a [hollow figurine] of Apollo out of laurel wood. Engrave [on a lamella] of gold, of silver, or of tin these characters:  . Place the lamella under the censer, near / the wooden image, which was set up [at the same time as the] censer, and place [next to] the tripod a beaker or a shell containing [pure] water. In the center of the shrine, surrounding the tripod, inscribe on the floor with a white stylus the following character. . . . It is necessary to keep yourself pure for three days in advance. The shrine and the [tripod] must be / covered. [If] you wish [to see], look inside, wearing clean [white] garments [and crowned] with a crown of laurel,[69] which on the head . . . wormwood . . . [before the] invocation, sacrifice laurel to him . . . [during the] sacrifice / honor the [god] with paians [directed to the sunrise]. . . ask . . . [cardamom] . . . holy god . . . [almond blossom] . . . from balsam . . / . and taking . . . my thought . . / . a buttercup, after taking, taste . . . four-footed. . . .

But the formula that is recited is . . . if you wish [to know], say these things which are in the . . . god and all such prophetic . . . worm in . . . as for ten days. Mixing . . / . the heart [with] honey. [Recite] this formula toward the sunrise, [and] you will know in advance during the hour [and during this] day. [After sacrificing,] make a drink offering with dark wine . . . middle . . . say: "Make me know in advance each of the . . . from . . . and . . . toward the sunrise early / [to know] each of the men [and] to know in advance [what things] each has in his mind [and] all their essence."

Single-shooted wormwood, with a single stem, born of the sun, born of the moon[70] . . . fruit pulp of the lotus, houseleek, a turnip; [wait for] the sunrise in your house fasting. During the third hour finger . . / . [your] face, say: "[TH]ŌOU[TH] PIŌPIŌ[71] AUAPS THŌOUTH . . . ARS . . . KENON ŌOUN PACHEN NO . . . TOOU Ē . . . T ARSASŌTA YNASPOR . . . THA P . . . MNĒPHIELŌKNĒMEŌ, give to me from your effluence."

[To] the rising of the moon on the thirtieth day [say:] "Come to me, greatest archangel; come to me XASR XAM [THŌ]OUT . . . come to me, ruler / of reality, ĒMI THĒ . . . BA THŌOUTH THEŌREI . . . ENĒN PAUPIOU PSIBIOAU ABLANATHANALBA . . . AMOAMMA. Give to me, NN, memory . . . sō . . . I may know all things and I may understand the things above the. . . ."

. . . toward the sunrise MASĒS . . . saying thus: "I am [the lord] of the sea. Make all things . . . / all things [that will be, so that] I know in advance. Reveal this, the concerns of all men and what things will be . . . TŌOUT ANG[72] . . . SA . . . OUT ANG

68. Fahz and Preisendanz take καλόν as modifying θυμιατήριον, "a beautiful censer." Here καλόν has been taken with ἔστιν κτλ., and the text has been punctuated accordingly. Cf. also PGM IV. 2520 and Bauer, s.v. "καλός," 3.a.

69. The text at this point has many lacunae, and the reconstruction is uncertain. Fahz and Preisendanz take the reference to the garments and the laurel to refer to the god who is seen.

70. LSJ, s.v. ἡλιόγονος, σεληνόγονος translates these epithets accordingly. However, since selēnagenon is attested as a plant (peony) and since a plant name would be appropriate here, one should perhaps translate "peony." "Sun-born" is not attested as a plant name.

71. THŌOUTH PIŌ PIŌ (cf. also l. 340) is equivalent to Egyptian Ḏḥwty p3 ʿ3 p3 ʿ3, "Thoth the twice-great." Cf. PGM IV. 19. For this title of Thoth, see J. D. Ray, The Archive of Hor (London: Egypt Exploration Society, 1976) 158–60; R. K. Ritner, "Hermes Pentamegistos," Göttinger Miszellen 49 (1981): 73–75. [R.K.R.]

72. Following G. Möller (see the apparatus in Preisendanz ad loc.) this short section can also be read as Coptic: "[I am] Thoth; I am Sa[.]out; I am Em[..]e[.....]on; I am Alaboul[.....]lōrai; I am (?) Natreko; [.]m[.....] is your [true] name [...]." [M.W.M.]

EMĒS . . . ON ANG ALABOUL. . . ."

. . . during the tenth hour . . . A . . . N . . . N precisely . . . IE PEKREN EM . . . ONEI E . . . PO . . . NGAL . . / . just now. . . ."

. . . and at the rising . . . third . . . the upper . . . at the rising . . . "CHŌLŌM CHŌL . . . MASKELLI [MASKELLŌ] / . . . ITHĒCHTHŌ . . . lord. . . ."

. . . from the . . . at the same time . . . sun . . . and on . . . yet living . . / . anoint . . . ABLATHANALBA . . . according to the second formula . . . seventh sunrise . . . you have. / But if [you] want . . . throat of asses . . . the animal . . . tail . . . often repeating the seventh formula . . . whatever [you wish] . . . from a human head . . . [the formula], the beginning of which is: "Cause me to know, in order that . . .[73] the ear whatever . . . on earth . . . heaven, / the [beginning] . . . the hand according to . . . formula."

But if [you want] . . . and [to read] a written, sealed letter . . . the same seventh formula: "Do for me the things that are written. . . ."

To read the things that are written, take at [the rising] of the moon . . . carve . . . pieces of honeycomb. Put these in together with . . / . fresh, pleasing, happily as . . . with the things that are written, after thoroughly mixing, [with] all power daily . . . to the sun . . . say [also] the prescribed . . . and that day . . . up to half of the egg . . . put into a small drinking vessel and rub with chalk the parts of the egg, in a place[74] or in a river / where the sun . . . to animals and to humans becomes inaccessible . . . after bathing and . . . crowned with a crown of the season's flowers . . . to an altar, sacrifice on the altar and then take, [as you know,] three loaves of white bread . . . olive oil, likewise new wine . . . and milk of a [black] cow; in the finest cloaks of shieldbearers and . . . / following. Rub first . . . the half of the egg . . . the lord . . . all things . . . and the substance . . . and after saying the following formula, this the seventh, to the sun thus . . . into a holy, small drinking vessel . . . after going away and sacrificing . . . say also to the sun . . . formula or hymn giving advance knowledge . . . [single-stemmed] wormwood into . . / . saying seven times . . . Take cardamom and say the holy names . . . for all things belong to the master . . . whenever you conjure the earth by saying the seventh [formula to the] earth and all the immortal [gods].

This is the formula: "Come to me, lord . . . holy spirit. . . ."

. . . in the ninth hour . . . after this the [formula]: "I conjure those with complete power . . . and I conjure [the] earth, the heaven, [the light, and] / him who [created the universe]" . . . formula spoken of god. While saying [this] formula [to] a holy . . .[75]

". . . my name . . . / say that which . . . call . . . my name . . . my true name which . . . who makes . . / . Gabriel, Michael, PYAOUĒTE . . . NETETETET . . . the god (?) TAAIAIAIAIAIALOP . . . ĒL." Seven times you say . . . then say one time or three times.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese and M. W. Meyer (Coptic sections, ll. 399–409).

PGM III. 410–23

*Take a silver tablet and engrave it after the god[76] sets. Take cow's milk and pour

73. At the beginning of l. 369 appears what could be an isolated Coptic name, Hor-Pre; cf. Möller, in the apparatus, who suggests Harpokrates. [R.K.R.]

74. This could also be rendered "a grave." Cf. LSJ, s.v. "τόπος," 5; also l. 285 above.

75. Because of the fragmentary character of this Old Coptic section, little can be given here in translation. [M.W.M.]

it.[77] Put down a clean vessel[78] and place the tablet under [it]; add barley meal, mix and form bread: twelve rolls in the shape of female figures.[79] Say [the formula] three times, eat [the rolls] on an empty stomach, and you will know the power.

[It is]: "BORKA BORKA PHRIX PHRIX RIX Ō . . . ACHACH AMIXAG OUCH THIP LAI LAI LAMLAI LAI LAM MAIL AAAAAAAA IIIY ĒI AI ŌŌŌŌŌŌŌ MOUMOU ŌYIŌ NAK NAK NAX LAINLIMM LAILAM AEDA . . . LAILAM / AĒO ŌAĒ ŌAĒ ĒOĀ AŌĒ ĒŌA ŌĒA, enter, master, into my mind, and grant me memory, MMM ĒĒĒ MTHPH." Do this monthly, facing the moon, on the first day [of the month]. Prostrate yourself before the goddess,[80] and wear the tablet as an amulet.

The name of the soul of god is: "EIKIZITELITHDE then PHYSOUSKAZĒTTHZ blood." Write these things with a copper stylus: "I am KŌOU BŌOU PČŌSM . . . HOUIT[81] . . . APRIĒFMLNIĒF . . . MANIŌĒSE NMANIĒFIHTENOHĒIT RENIRE RENIM E GEINNA[82] EOI . . . EFREF / NGŌOU DNI IĒSOUS PNETO."[83] Speak into your hand seven times in front of the sun, stroke your face, spit, move your thumb from your nose up to your forehead. Facing the sun, speak seven times into your hand, spit once, stroke your face, and go on to the procedure and gift:[84] "SILIBANAGOUNACHAOUĒL. . . ."

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM III. 424–66

A copy from a holy book. Charm that gives foreknowledge and memory: Take a kakouphon,[85] / which in Egyptian is kakkou[phat, tear out] its heart, perforate it with a reed, [cut] the heart [into pieces], and put them into Attic honey when the goddess[86] approaches. Then grind the heart on the 1st of the goddess,[87] mix it with the honey, [and eat it] on an empty stomach while saying seven times, once while tasting with the forefinger, this formula:

"Make me know in advance once and for all the things that are going to happen, the things that are about to happen, the things that have been done, and all [today's] activities."

Say the name seven times, and quickly say / the other usual formulas. . . .[88]

76. That is, Helios, the sun god.

77. The papyrus has καταχεάσα[ς], "pour it," which is not meaningful here. Schmidt, GGA 193 (1931): 451–52, suggests καταλεάζειν on the basis of Hesychius' ἀλεάζειν, "to heat up." The translation here follows the text of Preisendanz.

78. Schmidt, GGA 193 (1931): 451, adds ⟨εἰς⟩, "into," which seems necessary to complete the sense of the phrase, viz., "put it [into] a clean vessel."

79. It seems only twelve pastry dolls are to be shaped and not an additional loaf and piece of pastry, as Preisendanz seems to take it. [R.D.K.]

80. That is, Selene, the moon goddess.

81. Probably Coptic pčosm [pe]houit, "the first darkness." [M.W.M.]

82. Probably read Gehenna. [M.W.M.]

83. Perhaps Coptic, meaning "Jesus our great one." [M.W.M.]

84. The blessing given in response to the procedure. Cf. PGM IV. 198. See also A.-J. Festugière, "La Valeur religieuse des papyrus magiques," in his L'Idéal religieux des Grecs et l'Évangile (Paris: Gabalda, 1932) 293; Bonner, SMA 178–79.

85. Cf. on this term PGM II. 18 and n.

86. That is, Selene, the moon goddess.

87. This refers to the first day of the lunar month.

88. Apparently the scribe forgot to add the formula for the second day; therefore an ellipsis has been inserted.

[While tasting] on the third, say the name LAILAM [SAN]KANTHARA (add the usual).[89] [On the] 4th of the moon say [the] 4th name, EPIMNŌ; on the 5th, the 5th name, saying seven times EKENTH . . . [on the 6th], the sixth name, AMOUN AMOUN; on the 7th of the moon, [the 7th name] . . . RA PREGXICHAROTH; on the 8th, the 8th name, EISI OUSIRI AMOUN [AMOUN;[90] on the 9th], the 9th name, PHORPHORBARZAGRA; [on the 10th], the 10th name, ZAZOUCHŌR DAMNIOTĒ; on the eleventh, the eleventh name, CHRYSA CHR[YSA] EYAE CHRYSOES EIRE CHRYSOEGETHREL . . . RON; on the twelfth, the twelfth name, and taste twelve times, ATHAB . . . ENIGRAPSATHIR . . . PSANO . . . ASĒ; [on the 13th, say the 13th name], ARTEMI DAMNŌ DAMNO / LYKAINA;[91] on the fourteenth, say the [fourteenth name]. This is the 14th name: HARPON [CHNOUPHI] BRINTATĒNŌPHRI BRISKYLMA OREOBAZAGRA. On the fifteenth, the fifteenth name, SESENGEN BARPHARAGGĒS AGAB . . . AEĒIOYŌ (add the usual formulas, as much as you want, saying it on each day).

When the moon [wanes], say [the formula] in hexameter, saying it seven times until it is again the fourteenth of the goddess. But beware, lest it be in conjunction . . . each day . . . and the whole composition of the divine arrangement be undone. [For] the lord [god] speaks. A procedure greater than this one does not exist. It has been tested / by Manethon,[92] [who] received [it] as a gift from god Osiris the greatest. Perform it, perform it successfully and silently.

Formula spoken . . . and . . . the sun: "Hail, absolute ruler, hail, hail, [forefather . . . DAMNAM]ENEU [ABRASAX] . . . K . . . ĒLĒL, one holy . . . SABĒLE SABĒLE KA. . . ."

. . . [Foreknowledge] . . . Moses . . . and . . / . for memory, [say] the following [formula] each [day]: ". . . IMEA . . . ABRASAX . . . [to know] OEIIAO . . . IAŌ SABAŌ[TH] . . . great . . . IABE[ZEBYTH] . . . ABRAXAS TAE." . . / . .

But in this way draw a boy and you . . . later, and you will hear the birds chattering . . . seven of fennel and of sesame, of black cumin . . . / [take] these and crush them, with spring water . . . the moon being second, and you will hear all things. . . .

". . . I am IEĒ IOEĒ IE IAŌ ISI . . . [the things in the] minds of men, because I. . . ."

. . . pray to him. But . . / . but a swallow[93] of this comes . . . this your formula repeat seven times . . . formula, which you say: "Hail, Helios, Mithras. . . ."

. . . this holy water . . . this one has in his mind . . . / that day [you] know . . . but if [you] touch, [you will have] a semitertian [fever].

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM III. 467–78

Memory spell: Take first . . . 2 calf's snouts, "Hermes' finger" . . . / taste, and prostrate yourself while saying three times to Helios: "[Enter,] MA . . . A KMĒPH ARSŌ ARSŌ THOUTH . . . O TIOI E.OI POMPOM PHRĒ [IARBATHA CHRAMNĒ] . . . upon my heart, [having granted] memory to my soul, to my eyes [SALBANACHAM-

89. As one can see from l. 436 below, the direction "add the usual" (κοινά) is to be understood after each day.

90. That is, Osiris, Amon in vocatives.

91. "She-wolf" is an epithet of the goddess Artemis. See also PGM IV. 2302–3; 2550.

92. The name Manetho probably refers to an Egyptian priest and historian of the third cent. B.C., the man who was instrumental in the setting up of the cult of Sarapis. Cf. also PGM XII. 23; Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 28, 362A; Iamblichus, Myst. 8.1. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 78–82; H.-J. Thissen, "Manetho," LdÄ 3 (1980): 1180–81.

93. The cliff, or chimney swallow. [J.S.]

BRĒ . . .] / monarch, the one who rules over all . . . ABLAN OOOO ADŌNIĒ AĒŌ . . . in order that, whatever I hear once, [I might remember it throughout] my lifetime."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM III. 479–83

Foreknowledge charm: Take [. . . parts] fleawort, [and say to] / the height of the heavenly circle: "The thief . . . the only great god, [come to me] from an assembly on the 6th day . . . to happen, Helios."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese. This and the two variant charms to follow serve as spells to "prognosticate" the identity or whereabouts of a thief.

PGM III. 483–88

Another [copy]: ". . . ALA.AANG XICHA MICHA ANG E . . . / EROTPITENPHĒT NPRŌME,[94] [having] a gold-colored [crown on the] head, turn to [the thief who took away the NN thing], kill, cleave him and . . . but if you behead. . . ."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM III. 488–94

Another: Take a wing . . . / "AŌŌ; then, according to the same . . . LŌ [PHNOU]KENT ABAŌTH . . . DO . . . ŌLEAIS . . . KA . . . TA K. . . ."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese. This is presumably another spell to detect a thief; see the note appended to PGM III. 479–83, above.

PGM III. 494–611

[Spell to establish a relationship with] Helios. A procedure for every [rite], for [all things]. / For whatever you want, invoke in this way: "[Come,] come to me from the four winds of the world, air-transversing, great god. Hear me in every ritual which [I perform], and grant all the [petitions] of my prayer completely, because I know your signs, / [symbols and] forms, who you are each hour and what your name is.[95]

"In the first hour you have the form and character of a young monkey; [the tree] you produce is the silver fir; the stone, the aphanos;[96] the bird . . . your name is PHROUER.[97]

"In the second hour you have the form of a unicorn; the tree you produce is the persea; the stone, the pottery stone;[98] / the bird, the halouchakon;[99] on land, the ichneumon; your name is BAZĒTŌPHŌTH.

"In the third hour you have the form of a cat; the tree you produce is the fig tree; the stone, the samouchos;[100] the bird, the parrot; on land, the frog; your name is AKRAMMACHAMAREI.

"In the fourth hour you have the form of a bull; the tree you produce / . . . the

94. This is Coptic and means "to the man." [R.K.R.]

95. In his twelve-hour course through the heavens, the sun is identified here with ancient theriomorphic and totemistic forms. Also, the sun's creative activities are identified with certain hours. See for this Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie 5–6. Cf. PGM II. 104–15 and n.

96. The identification of lithos aphanos is uncertain; literally it means "invisible stone" (clear quartz?). [J.S.]

97. PHROUER is Egyptian for "Pre the great." [R.K.R.]

98. On the pottery stone see Pliny, NH 37. 152.

99. Otherwise unidentified.

100. According to LSJ, this word is a hapax legomenon. Preisendanz identifies it with ψαμμοῦχος, a sandstone (not attested in LSJ).

101. Fahz reads γεννᾷς δένδρον [κα]ὶ λίθον, "you produce a tree [and] stone." This should probably be understood to refer to holly oak and a brick-red opal. Cf. also n. 102. [J.S.]

stone,[101] the amethyst;[102] the bird, the turtledove; on land, the bull; your name is DAMNAMENEUS.

"In the fifth hour you have the form of a lion; the tree you produce is the prickly shrub; the stone, the magnet; [the bird] . . . on land, the crocodile; your name is PHŌKENGEPSEUARETATHOUMISONKTAIKT.

"In the sixth hour you have the form of a donkey; the tree / you produce is the thorn tree; the stone, lapis lazuli; in the sea, the jellyfish;[103] on [land, the white-faced cow]; your name is EIAU AKRI LYX. . . .

"[In the seventh hour] you have the form of a [crayfish; the tree you produce] . . . [you produce] . . . ; [the stone, the sun opal;[104] / the bird] . . . on land, the cat; [your name is]. . . .

"In the eighth [hour] you have the form . . . [the tree you produce] . . . [the stone] . . . the bird . . . [on land], the hippopotamus; [your] name [is]. . . .

"In the ninth [hour] you have the form of an ibis; [the tree / you produce] . . . [the stone] . . . on land, the chameleon; [your name]. . . .

"In the tenth hour [you have] the form . . . ; [the tree you produce] . . . the stone, one the color of a falcon's neck; [the bird]. . . .

/ "In the twelfth [hour you have the form] . . . [your name is] ADŌNAI . . . [and]. . . .

". . . / GABRIĒL ALLŌEA . . . OURĒĒDYDIE THARABRACHIRIGX IARBATHACHRAMNĒPHIBAŌCHNYMEŌ[105] KAMPYKRIL . . . ELAMMARĒ.

"I have spoken your signs and symbols. Therefore, lord, do the NN deed by necessity, lest I shake heaven. Do the NN deed for me; you are the image, the whole of the universe, [you] who, after being selected,[106] guarded the holy place of the / great king. Do the NN deed for me, the one who keeps the keys of the triangular paradise of earth, which is the kingdom. Do the NN deed for me, the fatherless child of an honored[107] widow, BŌIATHYRITH, lest they take away from me the lord's fatherland and so that all / good things happen by command, PHŌKENGEPSEUARETATHOUMISONKTAIKT MASKELLI MASKELLŌ PHNOUNKENTABAŌ AŌRIŌ ZAGRA RĒSICHTHŌN HIPPOCHTHŌN PYROSPARIPĒGANYX KAILAM IALMIŌ LILIMOULĒALABAĒNEREDEMOU."

"Come[108] to me in / your holy circuit of
The holy spirit, founder of the world,
O god of gods, lord of the world, who have Divided by your own divine spirit
The universe; first from the firstborn you

102. Pliny identifies παιδέρως as an opal (NH 37. 84) or an amethyst (NH 37. 123). It has been rendered here as amethyst because in 37.80 Pliny says opals come only from India. See the note by D. E. Eicholz, LCL edition of Pliny's Natural History, vol. 10, p. 230, n. a. [J.S.]

103. The term literally means "glass fish." [M.S.]

104. The translation of ἡλιοπάλιος is uncertain.

105. Cf. for this name PGM I. 143 and n.

106. Following Preisendanz's translation as "Auserwählter."

107. The papyrus reads κατατετιμημένη[ς], a verb not attested elsewhere. The meaning could also be "despised." Preisendanz suggests that the widow is Isis and the magician identifies himself with Horus. Probably, the translation "dishonored" is to be preferred, because it would refer to the murder of Isis' husband and her subsequent flight to the swamps of Chemmis to raise her son Horus. For Horus as orphan, see Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts 69, no. 92. [R.K.R.]

108. These dactylic hexameters, many of which are metrically faulty, are also the reconstructed Hymn 2, for which see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 238. [E.N.O.]

Appeared,[109] created carefully, from water
That's turbulent, who founded all the world:
Abyss, earth, / fire, water, air, and in turn
Ether and roaring rivers, red-faced moon,
Heaven's stars, morning stars, the whirling planets.[110]
'Tis by your counsels they attend all things."

"You who summon . . . AMOCHL . . . PHODOPH . . . M . . . ARPHTHŌ . . . IBK / PSOUPHIS [TŌM] . . . OIŌTH ŌPHROUER CHMĒIB HARPONKNOUPHI BRINTATĒNŌPHRI BRISKYLMA HAROUAR ZARBAMESEG KRIPHI NIGTHOU MICHMOUMAŌPH IAŌLI PRIN ASTRAPTĒS[111] AI CHEAOKIRTABAOZAALE ASRISKI . . . OU BRITHEI STOMA,[112] master. Come to me, / lord, you who sometimes raise the light, sometimes lower the darkness [with] your own power. Hear me, lord, me, NN, graciously, gladly and for a blessing, from every element from every wind, today, with your happy face, in the present hour, because / I invoke your holy name from every side. You who were begotten in every human body, inspire us.[113] From the right of the axis your [name] is: 'IAŌ AŌI ŌAI [ŌYA] ŌŌŌŌŌŌ AAAAAA IY . . . ŌAI,' but from the left of the axis: 'IAŌ AYŌ IŌAI / PIPI ŌŌŌ ŌŌ III AYŌ . . . ŌA ŌAI.' Come to me with a happy face to a bed of your choice, giving to me, NN, sustenance, health, safety, wealth, the blessing of children, knowledge, a ready hearing, goodwill, sound judgment, honor, memory, grace, shapeliness, beauty to / all who see me; you who hear me in everything whatsoever, give persuasiveness with words, great god, to the EYAĒŌ IŌ IAŌ ŌAI ŌIŌ ĒAYI TAS ERCHIS AUXACHOCH HARSAMOSI. I beg, master, accept my entreaty, the offering to you which you commanded. In order that you might now illuminate me with knowledge of things beloved by you / even after the kind restoration of my material body, I pray, lord, accept this my request, [the] entreaty, the preliminary spell, the offering of my eloquent spirit. Let it also come to you, the ruler of all, in order that / you fulfill all the petitions of my prayer, you who originated from gods.[114] We give you thanks with every soul and heart stretched out to [you],[115] unutterable name honored with [the] appellation of god and blessed with the [appellation of father], for to everyone[116] and to everything you have shown fatherly / goodwill, affection, friendship and sweetest power, granting us intellect, [speech,] and knowledge; intellect so that we might understand you, speech [so that] we might call upon you, knowledge so that we might know you.[117] We rejoice because you showed yourself to us; we rejoice

109. This refers to the sun god's appearance from the waters of Nun, the primordial abyss. Cf. PGM I. 34–36. [R.K.R.]

110. There are three types of star referred to here: ἀστέρας (1) ἀερίους, (2) ἑώους, (3) περιδινοπλανήτας. On ἑώους as morning star, cf. Ptolemy, Tetrab. 3. 4 (114). [E.N.O.]

111. Or "before you hurl lightning."

112. Or "mouth is full."

113. ἐμπνευματίζω is not otherwise attested. Cf. C.H. 13.19 with Keil's conjecture πνευμάτιζε, cited by Nock and Festugière, Hermès Trismégiste II, p. 208, in the critical apparatus to l. 17.

114. The section in ll. 591–609 has close parallels in Ps.-Apulcius, Asclepius 41 (ed. Nock and Festugière, Hermès Trismégiste II, pp. 353–55) and NHC VI, 7: 63, 33–65, 7. See Robinson, The Nag Hammadi Library in English 298–99; P. Dirkse and J. Brashler, "The Prayer of Thanksgiving," in Nag Hammadi Codices V, 2–5 and VI, with Papyrus Berolinensis 8502, 1 and 4, NHSt 11 (Leiden: Brill, 1979) 375–87. Cf. also Iamblichus, Myst. 10. 8; C.H. 13. 18–20, with the discussion by Grese, Corpus Hermeticum XIII, pp. 183–88.

115. Following Nock and Festugière, Hermès Trismégiste II, p. 353.

116. Following J.-P. Mahé, Hermès en Haute-Égypt. Les textes hermétiques de Nag Hammadi et leurs parallèles grecs et latins, vol. 1 (Québec: Les presses de l'université Laval, 1978) 160–61.

117. Following Nock and Festugière, Hermès Trismégiste II, p. 354.

because while we are / [still] in bodies you deified us by the knowledge of who you are. The thanks of man to you is one: to come to know [you], O womb[118] of all knowledge. We have come to know, O womb[119] pregnant through the father's begetting. We have come to know, / O eternal continuation of the pregnant father. After bowing thus before your goodness,[120] we ask no [favor except this]:[121] will that we be maintained in knowledge of you; and one protection:[122] that [we] not fall away from a [life] such as this. . . ."

*Tr.: W. C. Grese (ll. 494–549; 558–611) and E. N. O'Neil (hymnic sections, ll. 549–58).

PGM III. 612–32

*[If you make] an offering of wheaten meal and ripe mulberries and unsoftened[123] (?) sesame and uncooked thrion and throw into this a beet, you will gain control of your own shadow[124] / so that it [will serve] you. Go at the sixth hour of the day, toward [the rising sun], to a deserted place, girt about with a [new] dark-colored palmfiber basket, and on your head a scarlet cord as a headband, behind your right ear / the feather of a falcon, behind your left that of an ibis.

Having reached the place,[125] [prostrate] yourself, stretch out your hands, and utter the following formula: "Cause now my shadow to serve me, because I know your sacred names [and] your signs and / your symbols, and [who you are at each hour], and what your name is."[126]

Having said this, [utter] the formula given above,[127] and in case he does not [hearken, say]:[128] "I have uttered your sacred names and [your signs] and your symbols, wherefore, O lord,[129] cause / my [shadow] to serve me." [And] at the seventh [hour] it will come to you before [your] face, and you address it [and say]: "Follow me everywhere!" But [look] to it, that it not leave you.

*Tr. J. M. Dillon. See the introductory note on PGM III. 494–611. This unique spell to acquire control over one's shadow may be part of the whole Encounter with Helios contained in III. 494–731. The Coptic section to follow (PGM III. 633–731) belongs with this section, and the mention of the "signs and symbols" in l. 625 connects this spell to the preceding; furthermore, the mention of the "formula given above" (l. 626) must refer to a formula given in the preceding spell, probably the formula found in III. 494ff. The appearance of one's shadow is thus the proof of Helios' appearance requested in PGM III. 494–731.

118. Following Nock and Festugière, Hermès Trismégiste II, p. 355.

119. On the role of the uterus in magic, see A. A. Barb, "Diva Matrix," JWCI 16 (1953): 193–238. Cf. also PGM V. 158.

120. Following Mahé, Hermès 164–65.

121. Ibid.

122. Following Mahé, Hermès 166–67, and Dirkse and Brashler, "The Prayer of Thanksgiving," 384–85.

123. Preisendanz reads ἀ[νέκ]χυτον, a word otherwise unattested. More likely would be the restoration ἀ[διά]χυτον, "not softened by cooking"; hence the translation here. [R.D.K.]

124. Cf. DMP col. IV, l. 23 for a spell for "lucky shadows" (wḏ ḫyb.t). [R.K.R.] See also Betz, "The Delphic Maxim," 163–64.

125. Literally, "treading about in the place."

126. Cf. ll. 499–501 for a similar expression. It seems that the deity invoked has a different appearance every hour. See also the introduction to this spell and its possible relationship with PGM III. 494–611.

127. That is, the formula given in 494–536, particularly the section containing the signs and symbols.

128. Following Preisendanz's restoration. This hardly seems suitable, as one would rather expect, "And when you are finished, say. . . ." [J.M.D.]

129. The "lord" addressed in this spell is Helios, the sun god, mentioned in III. 494–611.

PGM III. 633–731

*Call . . . , "Great god . . . , you who are the sun, Re is your name / . . . the glowing flames . . . my nail (?) . . . Em . . . is your name, Em . . . [is your true name] . . . crown . . . my name . . . [AEEĒ]ĒĒIIIIOOO[OOYYYYYYŌ]ŌŌŌŌ[Ō]Ō / . . . / of the great god . . . [Nef] is my name, Nef is my true name . . . Praise[130] be to (?) SABAŌTH ADŌNAI ADŌN BARBARIOT . . . of Lo son of Ouer[131] . . . / whose face is in the middle of . . . of Lo son of Ouer . . . whose face is in the middle of . . . in truth. For I am . . . For I am Lotus-Lion-Ram[132] . . . / Lotus, reveal yourself . . . For [I] am . . . all (repeat).[133] I am Oh, I am AEĒIOY[Ō AEĒIOYŌ] A[EĒIOYŌ AEĒI] OYŌ [AEĒI] OYŌ AEĒIOYŌ AEĒI[OY]Ō AEĒIOY[Ō] . . . , and we are strong (?) . . . of Shmoun[134] . . . / until you offer incense to Horus. I am Oh, I know [your name] . . . little, every time, at every hour. Come, go . . . what you want (repeat). For Ei is your name, Ei is the name of you. I . . . Totf; Totf is my true name (add the usual [?]) as you wish, after . . . the (formula) I am Kat son of Kat, whom Kat has borne . . . / I am the [breath] of night . . . I am Abriabot, the . . . the great snake . . . [Thoth the great] of Shmoun . . . the god Horus . . . , ([add the usual] as you wish). For I am Iethor,[135] who wants to . . . I . . . who . . . / frog . . . is my name . . . the great god who will do . . . To son of To[136] is your name . . . father. / You are Earth-shaker,[137] the High One, the son of Re, the [great] god . . . in the abyss, who is in . . . all the earth . . . (add the usual, as you wish) . . . he who does . . . I am . . . I am the one who . . . in him . . . / For . . . I am Io . . . is [my] name [. . . is] my true name . . . To the great is my [true] name . . ."

. . . this day . . . speak to Helios[138] . . . / on the third day, also to the moon[139] . . . at the third entrance of the goddess, go to an ever-flowing river . . . bathe, and go in pure garments . . . , having drunk . . . a solitary place, hold toward the rising sun a white rooster without blemish and twelve pinecones whorled[140] to the right. Offer milk and pour a libation of white wine, / and say the designated seven formulas [seven] times, requesting an encounter with [the] god . . . yourself. He will show . . . let him dwell (?)[141] for seven days. Set up . . . toward the moon, with purity; and when you see the god in this place, feast [in an appropriate manner].[142] So when you encounter the god, say the formula for a direct vision, and request foreknowledge from the master. / Go down to a pure and consecrated place, and

130. Cf. PGM IV. 11, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19.

131. For OUĒR cf. Egyptian wr, "the great one." [R.K.R.]

132. This corresponds to SERPOT-MOUI-SRO. Cf. PDM xiv. 12 and the note by Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus on DMP col. I, l. 12. On the solar character of this designation of the sun in the morning, at midday, and in the evening, i.e., the universal sun in three manifestations (Re-Khepri-Atum), see M.-L. Rhyner, "A propos de trigrammes panthéistes," Revue d'Égyptologie 29 (1977): 125–37. [M.W.M.]

133. Apparent instructions for the repetition of the formulas either forward or backward. Cf. ll. 667, 669, 682. But if this is the equivalent of Greek κοινόν (see Preisendanz's text at l. 682), we are to understand "(add the usual)"; thus the translation, as in several instances below.

134. Shmoun (Hermopolis, El-Eshmunen) is the city of the god Thoth. See on the name A. H. Gardiner, Ancient Egyptian Onomastica (London: Oxford University Press, 1968) II, 79*–81*. See for the name also below, l. 672.

135. That is in Egyptian "eye of Horus."

136. Possibly, To is "land"; hence at III. 687 "the great land."

137. For KMPTO cf. PGM IV. 1323; PDM xiv. 192.

138. That is, the sun god Helios.

139. The moon goddess Selene; see also l. 697.

140. See the note at PGM II. 25.

141. The text is uncertain at this point; perhaps οἰκείτω is to be read instead of οἰκητω. [M.W.M.]

142. Supplying in the lacuna ἐ[πιτη]δές, following Schmidt, GGA 193 (1931): 456.

again sacrifice a rooster, and while in pure garments secretly [grasp the other things] which are necessary as symbols . . . god(dess) . . . third . . . , hold in your right hand a [single-stemmed] wormwood and in your left a snakeskin, and recite the [specified] formulas [and] what you wish, and it will happen. Recite often / . . . written down . . . to learn something, it is told to you by the god. And if you . . . , write . . . and wrap in linen from head to foot . . . , and on the ground draw Harpokrates holding [his finger][143] to his mouth, and in his left hand clutching a flail and a crook[144] . . . then "ABLANATHANALBA"; in wing . . .[145] / "ABRASAX": near the back, "ŌĒAUA . . . ," and set the child on it, and write the 5th formula . . . : "ĒFĒINTOK[146] . . . TE UONĒFIOUOI." Also use this treatment often: take away . . . from before him the linen, and let him behold, and he will see; and ask [him] . . . on the tenth day . . . in the morning of the first (formula?), then the / first for a second time in the morning of the . . . let these things be . . . two bricks . . . under papyrus . . . head . . . hole . . . / hold in your hands . . . this . . . and say the . . . in each . . . as . . . little . . . all . . . on these . . . great . . . / both . . . formulas before . . . formulas with the . . . and all . . . and . . . pit . . . you make / call the olive . . . pure. . . .

*Tr.: M. W. Meyer. For the connection of the spell with the preceding, see the introductory notes at PGM III. 494–611 and III. 612–32.

PGM IV. 1–25

*"SAPHPHAIOR BAELKOTA KIKATOUTARA EKENNK LIX, the great daimon and the inexorable one,[1] . . . IPSENTANCHOUCHEŌCH / DŌOU SHAMAI ARABENNAK ANTRAPHEU BALE SITENGI ARTEN BENTEN AKRAB ENTH OUANTH BALA SHOUPLA SRAHENNE DEHENNE KALASHOU CHATEMMŌK BASHNE BALA SHAMAI—on the day of Zeus[2] in the first hour, but on the [day] of deliverance[3] in the fifth hour: a cat . . . / in the eighth: a cat.[4] Praise[5] be to Osiris, the king of the underworld, the lord of embalming, he who is at the south of This, who is honored at Abydos, he who is under[6] the noubs tree[7] in Merouse,[8] whose glory is in Pashalom.[9] Praise be to Althabot; bring unto to me Sabaoth. / Praise be to Althonai, great Eou, very valiant; bring unto me Michael, the mighty (?) angel who is with God. Praise be to

143. Supplying in the lacuna [τὸν δακτύ]λιον. [M.W.M.]

144. For depictions similar to the one here see Budge, Amulets and Talismans 206–7; Bonner, SMA, p. IX, nos. 189–94.

145. Perhaps, "in wing formation."

146. This is equivalent to Demotic iw.f r in.ṯ.k., "He shall bring you." [R.K.R.]

1. See for this term Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte," 101; on the verb παραιτέω, see Betz, "Fragments," 291.

2. That is, Thursday.

3. Perhaps Sunday.

4. These enigmatic phrases are instructions for the use of the spell.

5. This passage is parallel to PDM xiv. 627–35. See F. Ll. Griffith, "The Old Coptic Magical Texts of Paris," ZÄS 38 (1900): 86–93. [R.K.R.]

6. Or "under the shade of the noubs tree."

7. According to Griffith, ZÄS 38 (1900): 87, at Pnubs the noubs tree was sacred to Thoth. See on this point Brugsch, Dictionnaire 334–35.

8. Meroe is the capital of an ancient state in the Sudan. See Bonnet, RÄRG 456–57, s.v. "Meroe."

9. Cf. also PDM xiv. 627–29. Pashalom is the capital of the nome in which Abydos is also located. Situated to the south of This, Abydos is the holy city where the head of Osiris was buried. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 362 n. 1.

Anubis, of the nome of Hansiese,[10] upon his mountain.[11] Praise be to the goddesses—Thoth the great, the great, the wise. Praise be to the gods, / ACHNOUI ACHAM ABRA ABRA SABAÔTH.[12] For Akshha Shha[13] is my name, Sabashha is my true name; Shlot Shlot very valiant is my name. So let him who is in the underworld join him who is in the air; let them arise, come in, and bring me news / of the matter about which I ask them" (add the usual).

*Tr.: M. W. Meyer. This request for an oracle may be part of the larger spell contained in PGM IV. 1–85.

PGM IV. 26–51

Initiation:[14] Keep yourself pure for 7 days beforehand. On the third of the month, go to a place from which the Nile has recently receded, before anyone walks on the area that was flooded—or at any rate, to a place that has been inundated by the Nile. / On two bricks[15] standing on their sides, build a fire with olive wood (that is, with a branch of it) when half of the sun is above the horizon; but before the sun appears, dig a trench around the altar. When the disk of the sun is fully above the horizon, / cut off the head of an unblemished, solid white cock which [you are to carry] under your left arm (and do dig the trench around[16] the altar before the sun appears).[17] When you are beheading the cock, fix it in place [with your knees][18] and hold it down all by yourself. / Throw the head into the river and drink up the blood, draining it off into your right hand and putting what's left of the body on the burning altar. Then jump into the river. Immerse yourself in the clothes you have on, walk backwards[19] out of the water, and, after changing into fresh garments, / depart without turning round.[20] After this, take bile from an owl, rub some of it over your eyes with the feather of an ibis, and your initiation will be complete. But if you can't get hold of an owl, use an ibis's egg and a falcon's feather. / Bore a hole in the egg, insert the feather, break it open, and thereby get the fluid to rub on yourself.

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

10. The location is unknown. Cf. Ha-si-ise-t, "house of the son of Isis." See A. H. Gardiner, Ancient Egyptian Onomastica (London: Oxford University Press, 1968) II, 29* (no. 341A). One conjecture is that of Brugsch, Dictionnaire 659, who has identified Hansiese as a site (Chenoboskia?) near Koptos and Dendera in Upper Egypt.

11. This refers to an ancient title of Anubis. Cf. PDM xiv. 174. In this connection one should also note the relationship between mountain, desert, and cemetery in ancient Egypt.

12. Hebrew for "Lord, Lord of Hosts;" ABRA may be a variation of arba (Heb. "four") designating the tetragrammaton. See Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen 126; Dornseiff, Das Alphabet 64; A. Barb, "Abraxas-Studien," in Hommages à W. Deonna (Bruxelles: Latomus, 1957) 67–86.

13. Or "IEAKSHHA SHHA"; but cf. PGM IV. 77, also III. 658, 659, 661, 667, 673, etc., for other examples of the common formula "for . . . is my name" or "for I am. . . ."

14. The purpose of this rite is not clear (cf. l. 48). It may have simply been a part of the longer ritual of the context.

15. On the magical use of bricks for both the living and the dead, see J. Monnet, "Les Briques magiques du Musée du Louvre," Revue d'Égyptologie 8 (1951): 151–62. [R.K.R.]

16. Or "dig a trench around," which may in fact mean "walk around" and refer to the ritual circumambulation. See W. Pax, "Circumambulatio," RAC 3 (1957): 143–52.

17. See l. 33 above.

18. The phrase "with your knees" is a conjecture based on PGM IV. 227–28.

19. Cf. the injunctions to walk backwards at PGM I. 37; IV. 2493; XXXVI. 273.

20. Presumably, the initiate is to turn away from the river after he is out of the water and to depart without looking back at the river. Perhaps he is being instructed to depart by walking backwards. The text is not entirely clear; cf. for similar circumstances PGM VII. 439–40. For looking back and its consequences, cf. the story of Lot's wife (Gn 19:17, 26) and the injunction in Lk 17:31–32; Mt 24:15–18 (cf. Lk 9:62).

PGM IV. 52–85

*Keep yourself pure for 7 days before the moon becomes full by abstaining from meat and uncooked food, by leaving behind during the prescribed days exactly half / of your food in a turquoise[21] vessel, over which you are also to eat, and by abstaining from wine. When the moon is full, go by yourself to the eastern section of your city, village, or house and throw out / on the ground the leftover morsels. Then return very quickly to your quarters and shut yourself in before he[22] can get there, because he will shut you out if he gets there before you. But before you throw out the morsels, fix in the ground at a slight angle a verdant reed that is about two cubits long, tie some hairs from a stallion about the midsection of a horned dung beetle, and suspend / the beetle from the reed by them. Then light a lamp that has not been used before and place it under the beetle in a new earthenware dish, so that the heat from the lamp barely reaches the beetle. Stay calm after you have thrown out the morsels, gone to your quarters, and shut yourself in; / for the one you have summoned will stand there and, by threatening you with weapons, will try to force you to release the beetle. But remain calm, and do not release it until he gives you a response; then release it right away. And every day during the period of purification when you are about to eat and to go to bed, speak the following spell 7 times (you are to say them again / when you return to your quarters after throwing out the food). Keep it secret: "You with the wooden neck, you with the clay (?) face,[23] come in to me, for I am Sabertoush, the great god who is in heaven."

The phylactery for the foregoing: With blood from the hand or foot of a pregnant woman, / write the name[24] given below on a clean piece of papyrus; then tie it about your left arm by a linen cord and wear it. Here is what is to be written: "SHTĒIT CHIEN TENHA, I bind and loose."

The dismissal: When you release the beetle, say: "Harko, Harko is my name; Harko is my true name."

Guard these instructions / well. The rite: an onion.[25]

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr., and Marvin W. Meyer (Coptic sections, ll. 75–77, 81–82, 83–84).

PGM IV. 86–87

Phylactery against daimons:[26] "HOMENOS OHK KOURIĒL IAPHĒL, deliver" (add the usual), "EHENPEROOU BARBARCHAOUCHE."

*Tr.: Marvin W. Meyer. This brief spell seems to have no connection with the preceding or following spells.

21. A blue-green glazed pottery, almost certainly Egyptian faïence. See A. Lucas and J. R. Harris, Ancient Egyptian Materials and Industries (London: Arnold, 1962) 156–67, esp. 163–64. [R.K.R.]

22. "He" is the one summoned (l. 70), but "he" is never identified.

23. Probably referring to a clay or terracotta figurine on a wooden pedestal. [M.W.M.]

24. The "name" may have included not only sabertoush but also the attached epithets: in magical texts "name" often means "full title." The Greek προυποκείμενον normally means "given above," but it can also be read as meaning "set forth below." This latter interpretation (accepted by Preisendanz) would eliminate the apparent contradiction between this and the following sentence. However, the following sentence may be a deliberate contradiction by a glossator. [M.S.]

25. This is probably an abbreviated way of saying, "Use the procedure that involves an onion."

26. Or "For those possessed by daimons," which seems the better reading of the papyrus. The manuscript has πρὸς δαιμονιαζομένο(υ)ς. See A. Erman, ZÄS 21 (1883): 99 (plate III, l. 25) and Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc. The invocation which begins with OHK is separated by a space and -ζομενος is written with the same Greek letter forms as the preceding ones. [R.D.K.]

PGM IV. 88–93

*__Another,__[27] __to Helios__: Wrap a naked boy in linen from head to toe,[28] then clap your hands. After making a ringing noise, place the boy opposite / the sun,[29] and standing behind him say the formula:

"I am Barbarioth; Barbarioth am I; PESKOUT YAHO ADŌNAI ELŌAI SABAŌTH, come in to this little one today, for I am Barbarioth."

*Tr.: W. C. Grese and Marvin W. Meyer (Coptic sections, ll. 91–93).

PGM IV. 94–153

*Isis is the one who comes from the mountain at midday[30] in summer, the dusty maiden; / her eyes are full of tears and her heart is full of sighs.

Her father, Thoth the Great, came in unto her and asked her, "O my daughter Isis, dusty maiden, why are your eyes full of tears, your heart full of sighs, and [the . . .] of your garment soiled? [Away with] the tears of your eyes!"

She said [to him], "He is not with me,[31] O my father, Ape Thoth, Ape / [Thoth], my father. I have been betrayed by my female companion. I have discovered [a] secret: yes, Nephthys is having intercourse with Osiris . . . my brother, my own mother's son."

He said to her, "Behold, this is adultery against you, O my daughter Isis."

She [said] to him, "It is adultery against you, O my father, / [Ape] Thoth, Ape Thoth, my father; it is pregnancy proper for me myself."[32]

He said to her, "Arise, O my daughter Isis, and [go] to the south to Thebes, to the north to Abydos.[33] There are . . . those who trample (?) there. Take for yourself Belf son of Belf, [the one whose] foot is of bronze and whose heels are of iron, / [that] he forge for you a double iron nail with a . . . head, a thin base, a strong point, and light iron. Bring it before me, dip it in the blood of Osiris,[34] and hand it over; we . . . this mysterious (?) flame to me."

" / Every flaming, every cooking, every heating,[35] every steaming, and every sweating that you [masc.] will cause in this flaming stove, you [will] cause in the heart, in the liver, [in] the area of the navel, and in the belly of NN whom NN has borne, until I bring her to the house of NN whom NN has borne[36] and she puts what is in / her hand into my hand, what is in her mouth into my mouth, what is in her belly onto my belly, what is in her female parts onto my male parts, quickly, quickly; immediately, immediately. Rise up to the kings of Alchah,[37] speak the truth (?) in Oupōke, arouse god [after] NN[38] whom NN has borne, and I shall send

27. Presumably this is another request for divination (cf. PGM IV. 1–25, 52–85). In fact, the spell is specifically a "divination using a boy," for which cf. PGM VII. 348–58; also Test. Sol. I. 3.

28. Cf. for this phrase PDM xiv. 96.

29. That is, Helios, the sun god.

30. Cf. PDM xiv. 1219.

31. Or "It is not of my doing."

32. This episode is also told in a different fashion by Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 14, 356E–F. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 316–17.

33. Cf. PDM xiv. 628.

34. Cf. PDM xiv. 440–41.

35. Or "sighing."

36. Cf. PDM xiv. 656–58.

37. Alchah (Egyptian ʿrq-ḫḥ, "Alxai") and Oupōke (Egyptian w-pkr) are both sacred places at Abydos. Alchah designates the cemetery where the mummy of Osiris was buried. See PGM XIVb, 12–15 (in the context of PDM xiv. 451–58). [R.K.R.]

38. Or "every god (after NN)."

her / to be with NN whom NN has borne. For I am To son of To;[39] I am the Great son of the Great; I am Anubis, who bears the glorious crown of Re and puts it upon King Osiris, King Osiris Onnophris, . . . who arouses the whole earth, that you may arouse the heart of NN whom / NN has borne, that I may know what is in her heart for me, for NN whom NN has borne, on this day."

If a large amount of saliva forms in your mouth as you speak, understand that she is distressed[40] and wants to talk with you; if you yawn frequently, she wants / to come to you. But if you sneeze two times or more, she is in good health[41] and is returning to where she lives; if you have a headache and are crying, she is distressed[42] or even dying.

"Rise up to heaven, and arouse the High One [masc.] after the Noble One [fem.]. Rise up to the abyss, and arouse Thoth after Nabin; arouse / the heart of these two bulls, Hapi and Mnevis; arouse the heart of Osiris after Isis; arouse Re after the light; arouse the heart of NN whom NN has borne, after NN whom NN has borne."

[Say] these things on behalf of women. But when [you are speaking] about women, / then speak, conversely, so as to arouse the females after the males:

"When she drinks, when she eats, when she has intercourse with someone else, I will bewitch her heart, I will bewitch the heart of her, I will bewitch her breath, I will bewitch / her 365 members,[43] I will bewitch her inner part . . . wherever I desire, until she comes to me and I know what is in her heart, [what] she does, and of what she thinks, quickly, quickly; immediately, immediately."

*Tr.: M. W. Meyer.

PGM IV. 154–285

*Nephotes to Psammetichos, immortal king of Egypt. / Greetings. Since the great god has appointed you immortal king and nature has made you the best wise man,[44] I too, with a desire to show you the industry in me, have sent you this magical procedure which, with complete ease, / produces a holy power. And after you have tested it, you too will be amazed at the miraculous nature of this magical operation. You will observe through bowl divination[45] on whatever day or night you want, in whatever place you want, beholding the god in the water and / hearing a voice from the god which speaks in verses in answer to whatever you want. You will attain[46] both the ruler of the universe and whatever you command, and he will speak on other matters which you ask about. You will succeed by inquiring in this way: First, attach yourself to Helios in this manner: At whatever sunrise you want / (provided it is the third day of the month), go up to the highest part of the house and spread a 39. Cf. above, PGM III. 679, 687 with n.

40. Or "lovesick."

41. That is, "unafflicted" by the love charm.

42. Or "lovesick."

43. For a close parallel, compare the lead tablet from Oxyrhynchus published by Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte," 108–9. See also the Apocryphon of John (NHC II, 1:19:2–14) on the construction of the human body by 365 angels. In PGM the number 365 is commonly associated with the name Abrasax and its numerical value (see Glossary, s.v. "Abrasax"), but also with 365 gods or even 365 knots (PGM VII. 452–53).

44. Or "an expert magician," as σοφιστής applies to one skilled in his craft. See LSJ, s.v.; Betz, Lukian 10–11.

45. For bowl divination, see R. Ganszyniec, "Λεκανομαντεία," PRE 12 (1925):1879–89.

46. Preisendanz suggests that οἴσεις is a late future form of οἶδα. Perhaps one should emend the text to read ὄψεις, "you will see." However, the future of φέρω can be defended here (see LSJ, s.v., VI. 2–3, where "carry off as a prize," "win," "gain," etc., are given as meanings). [J.P.H.]

pure linen garment on the floor. Do this with a mystagogue. But as for you, crown yourself with dark ivy while the sun is in mid-heaven, at the fifth hour, and while looking upward lie down / naked on the linen and order your eyes to be completely covered with a black band.[47] And wrap yourself like a corpse, close your eyes and, keeping your direction toward the sun, begin these words. Prayer:[48]

"O mighty Typhon, / ruler of the realm
Above and master, god of gods, O lord
ABERAMENTHŌOU (formula),
O dark's disturber, thunder's bringer, whirlwind,
Night-flasher, breather-forth of hot and cold,
Shaker of rocks, wall-trembler, boiler of
The waves, disturber of the sea's great depth, /
IŌ / ERBĒT AU TAUI MĒNI,
I'm He[49] who searched with you the whole world and Found great Osiris, whom I brought you chained.
I'm he who joined you in war with the gods
(but others say, "'gainst the gods").
I'm he who closed / heav'n's double gates and put
To sleep the serpent which must not be seen,
Who stopped the seas, the streams, the river currents
Where'er you rule this realm. And as your soldier
I have been conquered by the gods, I have Been thrown face down because of empty wrath. /
Raise up your friend, I beg you, I implore;
Thrown me not on the ground, O lord of gods,
AEMINAEBARŌTHERRETHŌRABEANIMEA,[50]
O grant me power, I beg, and give to me
This favor, so that, whensoe'r I tell
One of the gods to come, he is seen coming /
Swiftly to me in answer to my chants,
NAINE BASANAPTATOU EAPTOU MĒNŌPHAESMĒ PAPTOU MĒNŌPH AESIMĒ TRAUAPTI PEUCHRĒ TRAUARA PTOUMĒPH MOURAI ANCHOUCHAPHAPTA MOURSA ARAMEI IAŌ ATHTHARAUI MĒNOKER BORO/PTOUMĒTH AT TAUI MĒNI CHARCHARA PTOUMAU LALAPSA TRAUI TRAUEPSE MAMŌ PHORTOUCHA AEĒIO IOY OĒŌA EAI AEĒI ŌI IAŌ AĒI AI IAŌ."

After you have said this three times,[51] there will be this sign of divine encounter,[52] but you, / armed by having this magical soul, be not alarmed. For a sea falcon flies down and strikes you on the body with its wings, signifying this: that you should arise. But as for you, rise up and clothe yourself with white garments and burn on an earthen censer uncut / incense in grains while saying this:

"I have been attached to your holy form.
I have been given power by your holy name.
I have acquired your emanation of the goods,

47. See Glossary, s.v. "Isis band."

48. The iambic trimeters (ll. 179–201), many of which are metrically faulty, also form the reconstructed Hymn 6. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 242–43. [E.N.O.]

49. See on this passage Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte," 92–93.

50. See for this formula PGM I. 295; XIV. 24 (abbreviated); LIX. 7.

51. For the triplicate repetition in magic see O. Weinreich, "Trisgemination als sakrale Stilform," in his Ausgewählte Schriften (Amsterdam: Grüner, 1973) 250–58.

52. See on this point PGM IV. 168–69.

Lord, god of gods, master, daimon.
ATHTHOUIN THOUTHOUI TAUANTI LAŌ APTATŌ."
Having done this, return / as lord of a godlike nature which is accomplished through this divine encounter.

Inquiry of bowl divination and necromancy:[53] Whenever you want to inquire about matters, take a bronze vessel, either a bowl or a saucer, whatever kind you wish. Pour water: / rainwater if you are calling upon heavenly gods, seawater if gods of the earth, river water if Osiris or Sarapis, springwater if the dead. Holding the vessel on your knees, pour out green olive oil, bend over the vessel and speak / the prescribed spell. And address whatever god you want and ask about whatever you wish, and he will reply to you and tell you about anything. And if he has spoken dismiss him with the spell of dismissal, and you who have used this spell will be amazed.

The spell spoken over the vessel is: "AMOUN AUANTAU / LAIMOUTAU RIPTOU MANTAUI IMANTOU LANTOU LAPTOUMI ANCHŌMACH ARAPTOUMI, hither to me, O NN god; appear to me this very hour and do not frighten my eyes. Hither to me, O NN god, be attentive to me because he wishes and commands this[54] ACHCHŌR ACHCHŌR / ACHACHACH PTOUMI CHACHCHŌ CHARACHŌCH CHAPTOUMĒ CHŌRACHARACHŌCH APTOUMI MĒCHŌCHAPTOU CHARACHPTOU CHACHCHŌ CHARACHŌ PTENACHŌCHEU" (a hundred letters).[55]

But you are not unaware, mighty king and leader of magicians, that this is the chief name of Typhon, / at whom the ground, the depths of the sea, Hades, heaven, the sun, the moon, the visible chorus of stars, the whole universe all tremble, the name which, when it is uttered, forcibly brings gods and daimons to it. This is the name that consists of 100 letters. Finally, when you have called, whomever you called will appear, god or dead man,[56] and he will / give an answer about anything you ask. And when you have learned to your satisfaction,[57] dismiss the god merely with the powerful name of the hundred letters as you say, "Depart, master, for the great god, NN, wishes and commands this of you." Speak the name, and he will depart. Let this spell, / mighty king, be transmitted to you alone, guarded by you, unshared.

There is also the protective charm itself which you wear while performing, even while standing:[58] onto a silver leaf inscribe this name of 100 letters with a bronze stylus, and wear it strung on a thong from the hide / of an ass.[59]

53. Following the emended punctuation by M. Smith, Clement of Alexandria and the Secret Gospel of Mark (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1973) 221.

54. The sudden shift to the third person in the words θέλει καὶ ἐπιτάσσει seems strange at first, and one is tempted to think that the magician begins to refer to himself in the third person. But cf. ll. 253–54 below, where the same phenomenon occurs with the subject named.

55. That is, according to Greek letters.

56. That is, the spirit or soul of a dead man. See on this primitive concept J. Bremmer, The Early Greek Concept of the Soul (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1983) 70–124: "The Soul of the Dead."

57. At this point the revelatory dialogue comes into the picture. Cf. Corp. Herm. I.3, 27, 30. Cf. P. Perkins, The Gnostic Dialogue: The Early Church and the Crisis of Gnosticism (New York: Paulist Press, 1980), where further literature can be found.

58. The Greek is obscure at this point. The translation follows Preisendanz: "auch wenn du stehend agierst."

59. The ass is the animal associated with Seth/Typhon. See Glossary, s.v.

Divine encounter of the divine procedure: Toward the rising sun say:[60]
"I call you who did first control gods' wrath,[61]
You who hold royal scepter o'er the heavens,
You who are midpoint of the stars above,
You, master Typhon, you I call, who are / The dreaded sovereign o'er the firmament.
You who are fearful, awesome, threatening,
You who're obscure[62] and irresistible
And hater of the wicked, you I call,
Typhon, in hours unlawful and unmeasured,
You who've walked on unquenched, clear-crackling fire,
You who are / over snows, below dark ice,
You who hold sovereignty over the Moirai,[63]
I invoked you in pray'r, I call, almight one.
That you perform for me whate'er I ask
Of you, and that you nod assent at once
To me and grant that what I ask be mine
(add the usual), because I adjure you, GAR THALA BAUZAU THŌRTHŌR / KATHAUKATH IATHIN NA BORKAKAR BORBA KARBORBOCH MŌ ZAU OUZŌNZ ŌN YABITH, mighty Typhon, hear me, NN, and perform for me the NN task. For I speak your true names, IŌ ERBĒTH IŌ PAKERBĒTH IŌ BOLCHOSĒTH OEN / TYPHON ASBARABŌ BIEAISĒ ME NERŌ MARAMŌ TAUĒR CHTHENTHŌNIE ALAM BĒTŌR MENKECHRA SAUEIŌR RĒSEIODŌTA ABRĒSIOA PHŌTHĒR THERTHŌNAX NERDŌMEU AMŌRĒS MEEME ŌIĒS SYSCHIE ANTHŌNIE PHRA; listen / to me and perform the NN deed."
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 286–95

Spell for picking a plant:[64] Use it before sunrise. The spell to be spoken: "I am picking you, such and such a plant, with my five-fingered hand, I, NN, and I am bringing you home so that you may work for me for a certain purpose. I adjure you by the undefiled / name of the god: if you pay no heed to me, the earth which produced you will no longer be watered as far as you are concerned—ever in life

60. The following dactylic hexameters also form the reconstructed Hymn 7. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 243–44. Here and elsewhere σέ is considered long metri gratia, contrary to classical usage. [E.N.O.]

61. The papyrus reads ὀργίλον, which the editors of Hymn 7 have obelized. Here in IV. 262 Preisendanz has emended and reads ὄπλον, while others have suggested such words as ὅρμον (Wünsch), κόσμον (Dieterich), etc. The translation here has retained the reading of the papyrus. For διέπω and its meaning here, see Bauer, s.v. [E.N.O.]

62. The papyrus has δῆλον, which Preisendanz retains both here and in Hymn 7 where he obelizes it. Kroll's emendation ἄδηλον is paleographically sound, for "A" could have been omitted before "Δ." Second, ἄδηλον is a good parallel to ἀμήχανον, and third, the idea of ἄδηλον fits Seth/Typhon, who is regularly associated with darkness, shadows, etc. Cf., e.g., Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 2, 351F; 44, 368F, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 468. [E.N.O.]

63. Preisendanz reads at this point ἐπ' εὐκταίων Μοιρῶν, "over the Moirai invoked in prayer." In the reconstructed Hymn 7 (Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 244), Heitsch reads ἐπευκταίων Μοιρῶν, "of the longed-for Moirai," originally a proposal by Dieterich (see the apparatus to PGM IV. 271).

64. For this type of ritual, see F. Pfister, "Pflanzenaberglaube," PRE 19 (1938): 1446–56.

again, if I fail in this operation, MOUTHABAR NACH BARNACHŌCHA BRAEŌ MENDA 295 LAUBRAASSE PHASPHA BENDEŌ; fulfil[65] for me / the perfect charm."
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 296–466

Wondrous spell for binding a lover: Take wax [or clay] from a potter's wheel and make two figures, a male and a female. Make the male in the form of Ares fully 300 armed, holding a sword / in his left hand and threatening to plunge it into the right side of her neck. And make her[66] with her arms behind her back and down on her knees. And you are to fasten the magical material on her head or neck. Write on the
305 figure of the woman being attracted as follows: On the head: / "ISEĒ IAŌ ITHI OUNE BRIDŌ LŌTHIŌN NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH"; on the right ear: "OUER MĒCHAN"; on the left ear: "LIBABA ŌIMATHOTHO"; on the face: "AMOUNABREŌ"; on the right
310 eye: / "ŌRORMOTHIO AĒTH"; on the other: "CHOBOUE"; on the right shoulder: "ADETA MEROU"; on the right arm: "ENE PSA ENESGAPH"; on the other: "MEL-
315 CHIOU MELCHIEDIA": on the hands: / "MELCHAMELCHOU AĒL"; on the breast: the name, on her mother's side, of the woman being attracted; on the heart: "BALAMIN THŌOUTH"; and below the lower belly: "AOBĒS AŌBAR"; on the pudenda:
320 "BLICHIANEOI OUŌIA"; on the buttocks: "PISSADARA"; on / the sole of the right foot: "ELŌ"; on the sole of the other one: "ELŌAIAOE."

And take thirteen copper needles and stick 1 in the brain while saying, "I am piercing your brain, NN"; and stick 2 in the ears and 2 in the eyes and 1 in the 325 mouth and 2 / in the midriff and 1 in the hands and 2 in the pudenda and 2 in the soles, saying each time, "I am piercing such and such a member of her, NN, so that she may remember no one but me, NN, alone."

330 And take a lead tablet[67] and write the same / spell and recite it. And tie the lead leaf to the figures with thread from the loom after making 365 knots while saying as you have learned, "ABRASAX, hold her fast!" You place it, as the sun is setting, beside the grave of one who has died untimely or violently, placing beside it also the seasonal flowers.

335 The spell to be written / and recited is: "I entrust this binding spell to you, chthonic gods, HYESEMIGADŌN and KORĒ PERSEPHONE ERESCHIGAL and ADONIS the BARBARITHA, infernal HERMES THŌOUTH PHŌKENTAZEPSEU AERCHTHA-
340 THOUMI / SONKTAI KALBANACHAMBRĒ and to mighty ANUBIS PSIRINTH, who holds the keys to Hades, to infernal gods and daimons, to men and women who have died untimely deaths, to youths and maidens, from year to year, month to 345 month, day to day, / hour to hour. I adjure all daimons in this place to stand as assistants beside this daimon. And arouse yourself for me,[68] whoever you are, whether male or female,[69] and go to every place and into every quarter and to every 350 house, and attract / and bind her. Attract her, NN, whom NN bore and whose

65. The sudden shift to the plural τελέσατε is strange. Preisendanz suggests that δαίμονες is the subject, but no daimons appear in the spell. Can the subject be the voces magicae themselves? [E.N.O.]

66. A figurine similar to the one described here, together with a lead tablet containing an inscription nearly identical to that of ll. 335–406, has been found in Egypt. See S. Kambitsis, "Une nouvelle tablette magique d'Égypte, Musée du Louvre, Inv. E 27145, 3e/4e siècle," BIFAO 76 (1976): 213–23 and plates.

67. For a parallel to this passage, see Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte," 56–58 (no. 1, ll. 6–16).

68. See on this point Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte," 70–71.

69. Egyptian lists of demons and demon-induced diseases carefully distinguish between male and female. For a characteristic example, see S. Sauneron, Le Papyrus magique illustré de Brooklyn (Brooklyn: The Brooklyn Museum, 1970) 6–11. [R.K.R.]

magical material you possess. Let her be in love with me, NN whom she, NN bore. Let her not be had in a promiscuous way,[70] let her not be had in her ass, nor let her do anything with another man for pleasure, just with me alone, NN, so that she, NN, be unable either to drink or eat, that she not / be contented, not be strong, not have peace of mind, that she, NN, not find sleep without me, NN, because I adjure you by the name that causes fear and trembling, the name at whose sound the earth opens, the name at whose terrifying sound the daimons are terrified, / the name at whose sound rivers and rocks burst assunder. I adjure you, god of the dead, whether male or female, by BARBARITHA CHENMBRA BAROUCHAMBRA and by the ABRAT ABRASAX SESENGEN BARPHARANGGĒS and by the glorious AŌIA / MARI and by the MARMAREŌTH MARMARAUŌTH MARMARAŌTH MARECHTHANA AMARZA MARIBEŌTH; do not fail, god of the dead, to heed my commands and names, but just arouse yourself from the repose which holds you, / whoever you are, whether male or female, and go to every place, into every quarter, into every house, and attract her, NN, to me and with a spell keep her from eating and drinking, and do not allow her, NN, to accept for pleasure the attempt of another man, / not even that of her own husband, just that of mine, NN. Instead, drag her, NN, by the hair, by her heart, by her soul, to me, NN, at every hour of life, day and night, until she comes to me, NN, and may she, NN, remain / inseparable from me. Do this, bind her for all the time of my life and help force her, NN to be serviceable to me, NN, and let her not frolic away from me for even one hour of life. If you accomplish this for me, I will quickly allow you your repose. / For I am BARBAR ADŌNAI who hides the stars, who controls the brightly shining heaven, the lord of the world, ATHTHOUIN IATHOUIN SELBIOUŌTH AŌTH SARBATHIOUTH IATHTHIERATH ADŌNAI IA ROURA BIA BI BIOTHĒ ATHŌTH / SABAŌTH ĒA NIAPHA AMARACHTHI SATAMA ZAUATHTHEIĒ SERPHO IALADA IALĒ SBĒSI IATHTHA MARADTHA ACHILTHTHEE CHOŌŌ OĒ ĒACHŌ KANSAOSA ALKMOURI THYR THAŌOS SIECHĒ. I am THOTH OSŌMAI; / attract her, bind her, NN, filled with love, desire and yearning for NN (add the usual), because I adjure you, god of the dead, by the fearful, great IAEŌ BAPH RENEMOUN OTHI LARIKRIPHIA EYEAI PHIRKIRALITHON YOMEN ER PHABŌEAI, / so that you attract her, NN, to me and join head to head and fasten lip to lip and join belly to belly and draw thigh close to thigh and fit black together with black, and let her, NN, carry out her own sex acts / with me, NN, for all eternity.

Then write on the other side of the tablet the heart and the characters as they are below:

"IAEŌBAPHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEYEAIPHIRKIRALITHONYOMENERPHABŌEAI

AEŌBAPHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEYEAIPHIRKIRALITHONYOMENERPHABŌEA

AŌ EŌBAPHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEYEAIPHIRKIRALITHONYOMENERPHABŌE III

EA ŌBAPHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEYEAIPHIRKIRALITHONYOMENERPHABŌ OEŌ

IŌ BAPHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEYEAIPHIRKIRALITHONYOMENERPHAB OIEE

YO APHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEYEAIPHIRKIRALITHONYOMENERPHA OEYI

IO PHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEYEAIPHIRKIRALITHONYOMENERPH OEYY

OE IAYY

IŌAE YYAA

EOĒI OIII

YAOU YAEE

IAŌI EŌAY

AĒAĒ OOYI

IAEŌBAPHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEYEAIPHIRKI

70. See on this point Wortmann, "Neue magische Text," 72.

ĒIOI ĒĒEA
ŌIYA AAIA
AŌOE IIIŌ
425 YIŌĒ EEAŌ
EOAŌA ĒĒAŌ
YAYA ĒIĒE
IOĒIIĒ OAĒI
IAŌI ĒIYI
430 AOAO ĒĒOI
YYOI YAAI
ĒIIA AAŌŌ"

435 Prayer that belongs to the procedure: At sunset, while holding / the magical material from the tomb, say:

"Borne[71] on the breezes of the wandr'ing winds,
Golden-haired Helios, who wield the flame's
Unresting fire, who turn in lofty paths
Around the great pole, who create all things
Yourself which you again reduce to nothing, /
440 From whom, indeed, all elements have been Arranged to suit your laws which nourish all
The world with its four yearly turning points.
Hear, blessed one, for I call you who rule
Heaven and earth, Chaos and Hades, where
Men's daimons dwell who once gazed on the light, /
445 And even now I beg you, blessed one,
Unfailing one, the master of the world,
If you go to the depths of earth and search
The regions of the dead, send this daimon,
From whose body I hold this remnant in my hands,
To her, NN, at midnight hours,
To move by night to orders 'neath your force, /
450 That all I want within my heart he may Perform for me; and send him gentle, gracious
And pondering no hostile thoughts toward me,
And be not angry at my potent chants,
For you yourself arranged these things among Mankind for them to learn about the threads
Of the Moirai, and this with your advice. /
455 I call your name, Horus,[72] which is in number
Equivalent to those of the Moirai,
ACHAIPHŌ THŌTHŌ PHIACHA AIĒ ĒIA IAĒ ĒIA THŌTHŌ PHIACHA.
Be kind to me, forefather, scion of
The world, self-gendered, fire-bringer, aglow
Like gold, shining on mortals, master of 460 The world, / daimon of restless fire, unfailing,
With gold disk, sending earth pure light in beams.

71. The following dactylic hexameters are part of the reconstructed Hymn 4 (Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 239–40): v. 1–17, 20, 22–28. For other versions and sections of Hymn 4, see PGM I. 315–27; IV. 1957–89; VIII. 74–80. [E.N.O.]

72. For Horus equated with Helios, cf. PGM IV. 989.

Send the daimon, whomever I have requested, to her, NN" (add the usual).

In another version, the name is: "ACHAI PHŌTHŌTHŌ AIĒ ĒIA IAĒ ĒIŌ THŌ THŌ PHIACHA." / In another it is: "ACHAI PHŌTHŌTHŌ AIĒ IĒA ĒAI IAĒ AĒI ĒIA ŌTHŌ- 465 THŌ PHIACHA."

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 467–68

Charm to restrain anger: "Will you dare to raise your mighty spear against Zeus?"[73]

*Tr.: R. F. Hock. The same spell occurs at PGM IV. 831–32.

PGM IV. 469–70

To get friends:

/ "Let . . . seize, lest we become a joy to our enemies."[74] 470

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr. The same charm using a verse from Homer (Iliad 10. 193) occurs in PGM IV. 833–34. Since there the single verse alone serves as a charm to get friends, and since the papyrus manuscript separates all verses with paragraph marks, it seems likely that the following four verses served as separate charms, though the original titles have been lost. Furthermore, since the three verses (Iliad 10.564, 10.521, and 10.572) that follow form a natural grouping in PGM IV. 2145ff. (cf. IV. 821–23), we have preserved that grouping in PGM IV. 471–73, below, though it is not clear whether the copyist inserted these verses here by mistake or whether the reader was to understand from PGM IV. 2145ff. that the spell served as a "divine assistance from three Homeric verses."

PGM IV. 471–73

*. . .

"After saying this, he drove the solid-hoofed horses through the ditch."[75]

"and men gasping out their lives amid the terrible slaughter."[76]

"and they washed off in the sea the sweat that covered them."[77]

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr. This untitled charm contains three verses of Homer that also occur in PGM IV. 821–23 and IV. 2145ff. It is presumed that these verses served the same functions as those listed in ll. 2145ff. See the introductory note on the previous spell. The verses all come from the tenth book of the Iliad and presumably could be read together.

PGM IV. 474

*". . . Ares endured, when Otos and mighty Ephialtes . . . him."[78]

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr. Cf. the introductory note on PGM IV. 469–70, and see PGM IV. 830, with n.

73. Homer, Il. 8. 424. For the use of single Homeric verses as charms and amulets, see R. Heim, "Incantamenta magica graeca latina," Jahrbücher für classische Philologie, Supplementband 9 (1893), section X: Versus Homerici et Vergiliani (pp. 514–20).

74. Homer, Il. 10. 193.

75. Homer, Il. 10. 564. The referent of "he" is Odysseus in the original context.

76. Homer, Il. 10. 521. Again, the papyrus quotes only a portion of the Homeric text. "Men" is the object of "saw" in l. 520, and it is a kinsman of the slaughtered Rhesus who saw.

77. Homer, Il. 10. 572. In Homer, the referent of "they" is Odysseus and Diomedes.

78. Homer, Il. 5. 385. The papyrus quotes only a single verse and leaves the syntax of "him" unaccounted for. In Homer, "him" is governed by "bound" in l. 386.

PGM IV. 475–829

*Be gracious to me, O Providence and Psyche,[79] as I write these mysteries handed down [not] for gain but for instruction; and for an only child I request immortality, O initiates of this our power (furthermore, it is necessary for you, O daughter, to take / the juices of herbs and spices, which will [be made known] to you at the end of my holy treatise), which the great god Helios Mithras ordered to be revealed to me by his archangel, so that I alone may ascend into heaven as an inquirer / and behold the universe.

This is the invocation of the spell:

"First origin of my origin, AEĒIOYŌ, first beginning of my beginning, PPP SSS[80] PHR[E], spirit of spirit,[81] the first of the spirit / in me, MMM, fire given by god to my mixture of the mixtures in me, the first of the fire in me, ĒY ĒIA EĒ, water of water, the first of the water in me, ŌŌŌ AAA EEE, earthy material, the first of the earthy material in me, / YĒ YŌĒ, my complete body, I, NN whose mother is NN, which was formed by a noble arm and an incorruptible right hand in a world without light and yet radiant, without soul and yet alive with soul, YĒI AYI EYŌIE: now if it be your will, METERTA / PHŌTH (METHARTHA PHĒRIĒ, in another place)[82] IEREZATH, give me over to immortal birth and, following that, to my underlying nature, so that, after the present need which is pressing me exceedingly, I may gaze upon the immortal / beginning with the immortal spirit, ANCHREPHRENESOUPHIRIGCH, with the immortal water, ERONOUI PARAKOUNĒTH, with the most steadfast air, EIOAĒ PSENABŌTH; that I may be born again in thought, KRAOCHRAX R OIM ENARCHOMAI, / and the sacred spirit may breathe in me, NECHTHEN APOTOU NECHTHIN ARPI ĒTH; so that I may wonder at the sacred fire, KYPHE; that I may gaze upon the unfathomable, awesome water of the dawn, NYŌ THESŌ ECHŌ OUCHIECHŌA, and the vivifying / and encircling aether may hear me, ARNOMĒTHPH; for today I am about to behold, with immortal eyes—I, born mortal from mortal womb, but transformed by tremendous power and an incorruptible right hand / and with immortal spirit, the immortal Aion and master of the fiery diadems—I, sanctified through holy consecrations—while there subsists within me, holy, for a short time, my human soul-might, which I will again / receive after the present bitter and relentless necessity which is pressing down upon me—I, NN, whose mother is NN, according to the immutable decree of god, EYĒ YIA EĒI AŌ EIAY IYA IEŌ. Since it is impossible for me, born / mortal, to rise with the golden brightnesses of the immortal brilliance, ŌĒY AEŌ ĒYA EŌĒ YAE ŌIAE, stand, O perishable nature of mortals, and at once [receive] me safe and sound after the inexorable and pressing / need. For I am the son PSYCHŌN DEMOU PROCHŌ PRŌA, I am MACHARPH[.]N MOU PRŌPSYCHŌN PRŌE."

Draw in breath from the rays, drawing up 3 times as much as you can, and you will see yourself being lifted up and / ascending to the height, so that you seem to be in midair. You will hear nothing either of man or of any other living thing, nor in that hour will you see anything of mortal affairs on earth, but rather you will see all

79. The goddess Psyche, "Soul." Some scholars read Tyche, "Fortune." On the problem see Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 2, 49–52, 70–72, 230–32. On the "Mithras Liturgy," see M. W. Meyer, The 'Mithras Liturgy' (Missoula, Montana: Scholars Press, 1976).

80. For the meaning of popping and hissing noises in magic, see Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 40–43, 228–29; R. Lasch, "Das Pfeifen und Schnalzen und seine Beziehung zu Dämonenglauben und Zauberei," ARW 18 (1915): 589–93. See also ll. 561–62, and 578–79 below, and elsewhere in the PGM.

81. "Spirit," "breath," "wind" (πνεῦμα) is one of the four elements.

82. This is evidence that the scribe had at least one other copy of the spell. See Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 4, 221.

immortal things. For in that day / and hour you will see the divine order of the skies: the presiding gods rising into heaven, and others setting. Now the course of the visible gods will appear through the disk of god, my father; and in similar fashion the so-called pipe, / the origin of the ministering wind. For you will see it hanging from the sun's disk like a pipe. You will see the outflow of this object toward the regions westward, boundless as an east wind, if it be assigned to the regions of the east—and the other (viz., the west wind), similarly, toward its own / regions. And you will see the gods staring intently at you and rushing at you.

So at once put your right finger on your mouth[83] and say:

"Silence! Silence! Silence!
Symbol of the living, incorruptible god! /
Guard me, Silence, NECHTHEIR THANMELOU!"

Then make a long hissing sound, next make a popping sound, and say:

"PROPROPHEGGĒ MORIOS PROPHYR PROPHEGGĒ NEMETHIRE ARPSENTEN PITĒTMI MEŌY ENARTH PHYRKECHŌ PSYRIDARIŌ / TYRĒ PHILBA."

Then you will see the gods looking graciously upon you and no longer rushing at you, but rather going about in their own order of affairs.

So when you see that the world above is clear / and circling, and that none of the gods or angels is threatening you, expect to hear a great crash of thunder, so as to shock you. Then say again:

"Silence! Silence! (the prayer) I am a star, wandering about with you, and shining forth out of / the deep, OXY O XERTHEUTH."

Immediately after you have said these things the sun's disk will be expanded. And after you have said the second prayer, where there is "Silence! Silence!" and the accompanying words, make a hissing sound twice and a popping sound twice, and immediately you will see / many five-pronged stars coming forth from the disk and filling all the air. Then say again: "Silence! Silence!" And when the disk is open, you will see the fireless circle, and the fiery doors shut tight. /

At once close your eyes and recite the following prayer. The third prayer:

"Give ear to me, hearken to me, NN, whose mother is NN, O lord, you who have bound together with your breath the fiery bars of the fourfold / root,[84]

O Fire-walker, PENTITEROUNI,
Light-maker (others: Encloser), SEMESILAM,
Fire-breather, PSYRINPHEU,
Fire-feeler, IAŌ,
Light-breather, ŌAI,
Fire-delighter, ELOURE,
Beautiful light, AZAI,
Aion, ACHBA,
/ Light-master, PEPPER PREPEMPIPI,[85]
Fire-body, PHNOUĒNIOCH,
Light-giver, . . .

83. For examples of this common depiction on stones, see the engraved gem showing Harpokrates with his finger to his mouth, in F. M. and J. H. Schwartz, "Engraved Gems in the Collection of the American Numismatic Society, I: Ancient Magical Amulets," The American Numismatic Society, Museum Notes 24 (1979) no. 3, p. 159. See also the bronze statue in G. S. Gasparro, I culti orientali in Sicilia, EPRO 31 (Leiden: Brill, 1973), plate XLV, fig. 66.

84. Reading τετραριζώματος with Hopfner (see apparatus ad loc.) rather than τεταλιζώματος. The reading of the manuscript, on the other hand, suggests διαζώματος (cf. C. H., Frag. 26.8). [W.B.]

85. For PIPI as a permutation of the tetragrammaton, the Hebrew divine name, see S. Lieberman, Greek in Jewish Palestine (New York: The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1942) 120 n. 38;

Fire-sower, AREI EIKITA,
Fire-driver, GALLABALBA,
Light-forcer, AIŌ,
Fire-whirler, PYRICHIBOOSĒIA,
Light-mover, SANCHERŌB,
Thunder-shaker /, IĒ ŌĒ IŌĒIŌ,
Glory-light, BEEGENĒTE,
Light-increaser, SOUSINEPHIEN,
Fire-light-maintainer, SOUSINEPHI ARENBARAZEI MARMARENTEU,
Star-tamer . . .

Open for me, PROPROPHEGGĒ EMETHEIRE MORIOMOTYRĒPHILBA, because, / on account of the pressing and bitter and inexorable necessity, I invoke the immortal names, living and honored, which never pass into mortal nature and are not declared in articulate speech by human tongue or mortal speech / or mortal sound: ĒEŌ OĒEŌ IŌŌ OĒ ĒEŌ ĒEŌ OĒ EŌ IŌŌ OĒĒE ŌĒE ŌOĒ IĒ ĒŌ OŌ OĒ IEŌ OĒ ŌOĒ IEŌ OĒ IEEŌ EĒ IŌ OĒ IOĒ ŌĒŌ EOĒ OEŌ ŌIĒ ŌIĒ EŌ OI III ĒOĒ ŌYĒ ĒŌOĒE EŌ ĒIA AĒA EĒA / ĒEEĒ EEĒ EEĒ IEŌ ĒEŌ OĒEEOĒ ĒEŌ ĒYŌ OĒ EIŌ ĒŌ ŌĒ ŌĒ EE OOO YIŌĒ."

Say all these things with fire and spirit, until completing the first utterance; then, similarly, begin the second, until you complete the / 7 immortal gods of the world.[86] When you have said these things, you will hear thundering and shaking in the surrounding realm; and you will likewise feel yourself being agitated. Then say again: "Silence!" (the prayer). Then open your eyes, and you will see the doors / open and the world of the gods which is within the doors, so that from the pleasure and joy of the sight your spirit runs ahead and ascends.

So stand still and at once draw breath from the divine into yourself, while you look intently. Then when / your soul is restored, say:

"Come, lord, ARCHANDARA PHŌTAZA PYRIPHŌTA ZABYTHIX ETIMENMERO PHORATHĒN ERIĒ PROTHRI PHORATHI."

When you have said this, the rays will turn toward you; look at the center of them. For when / you have done this, you will see a youthful god, beautiful in appearance, with fiery hair, and in a white tunic and a scarlet cloak, and wearing a fiery crown.[87] At once greet him with the fire greeting:

"Hail, O lord, Great Power, Great Might, / King, Greatest of gods, Helios, the Lord of heaven and earth, God of gods: mighty is your breath; mighty is your strength, O lord. If it be your will, announce me to the supreme god, the one who has begotten and made you: that a man—I, NN,[88] whose mother is NN, / who was born from the mortal womb of NN and from the fluid of semen, and who, since he

---

M. Philonenko, "L'Anguipède alectorocéphale et le dieu IAÔ" Academie des inscriptions et belles lettres, comptes rendus des séances de l'année 1979 297–304, where further material is collected and discussed. In PGM see also III. 575; IV. 1984; XVIIa. 1–2; cf. also III. 335.

86. For the following section of the ritual, cf. the combination of the seven grades of the initiation, the planetary gods, and the ascension in the mysteries of Mithras. See esp. R. Beck, "Interpreting the Ponza-Zodiac: II," Journal of Mithraic Studies 2 (1978): 120–35; R. Merkelbach, Weihegrade und Seelenlehre der Mithrasmysterien (Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1982) 13–21; also J. Bergman, "Per omnia vectus elementa remeavi. Réflexions sur l'arrière-plan égyptien du voyage de salut d'un myste isiaque," in U. Bianchi and M. J. Vermaseren, eds., La soteriologia dei culti orientali nell' impero romano, EPRO 92 (Leiden: Brill, 1982): 671–708.

87. Cf. the well-preserved fresco from the Mithras temple in Capua. For a color photo, see Merkelbach, Weihegrade 34.

88. For the interpretation of this self-presentation, see Betz, "The Delphic Maxim," 170.

has been born again from you today, has become immortal out of so many myriads in this hour according to the wish of god the exceedingly good—resolves to worship / you, and prays with all his human power, that you may take along with you the horoscope of the day and hour today, which has the name THRAPSIARI MORIROK, that he may appear and give revelation during the good hours, EŌRŌ RŌRE ŌRRI ŌRIŌR RŌR RŌI / ŌR REŌRŌRI EŌR EŌR EŌRE!"

After you have said these things, he will come to the celestial pole, and you will see him walking as if on a road. Look intently, and make a long bellowing sound, like a horn, releasing all your breath and straining your sides; and kiss / the phylacteries and say, first toward the right: "Protect me, PROSYMĒRI!"

After saying this, you will see the doors[89] thrown open, and seven virgins[90] coming from deep within, dressed in linen garments, and with the faces of asps.[91] They are called the Fates / of heaven, and wield golden wands. When you see them, greet them in this manner:

"Hail, O seven Fates of heaven, O noble and good virgins, O sacred ones and companions of MINIMIRROPHOR, O most holy guardians of the four pillars![92] / Hail to you, the first, CHREPSENTHAĒS! Hail to you, the second, MENESCHEĒS! Hail to you, the third, MECHRAN! Hail to you, the fourth, ARARMACHĒS![93] Hail to you, the fifth, ECHOMMIĒ! Hail to you, the sixth, TICHNONDAĒS! Hail to you, the seventh, EROU ROMBRIĒS!"

There also come forth another seven gods,[94] who have the faces of black bulls, in linen / loincloths, and in possession of seven golden diadems. They are the so-called Pole Lords of heaven, whom you must greet in the same manner, each of them with his own name:

"Hail, O guardians of the pivot, O sacred and brave youths, who turn / at one command the revolving axis of the vault of heaven, who send out thunder and lightning and jolts of earthquakes and thunderbolts against the nations of impious people, but to me, who am pious and god-fearing, you send health and soundness of body / and acuteness of hearing and seeing, and calmness in the present good hours of this day, O my lords and powerfully ruling gods! Hail to you, the first, AIERŌNTHI! Hail to you, the second, MERCHEIMEROS! Hail to you, the third, ACHRICHIOUR! / Hail to you, the fourth, MESARGILTŌ! Hail to you, the fifth, CHICHRŌALITHŌ! Hail to you, the sixth, ERMICHTHATHŌPS! Hail to you, the seventh, EORASICHĒ!"

Now when they take their place, here and there, in order, look in the air and you will see lightning bolts going down, and lights flashing /, and the earth shaking,

89. Cf. the seven gates of the mosaic of the Mitreo delle sette sfere at Ostia and the inscribed term ἑπτάπυλος, "seven-gated." See M. J. Vermaseren, Corpus Inscriptionum et Monumentorum Religionis Mithriacae, vol. I (The Hague: Nijhoff, 1966) 137, fig. 82; Merkelbach, Weihegrade 65.

90. For the seven virgins, see the discussion by Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 69–72, who also refers to the seven Hathors of Egyptian religion.

91. This seems to be an Egyptian idea, where three serpents stand for the word "goddess." One Egyptian Fate, Rnnwtet (Thermutis), is known to have a serpent face. See Erman and Grapow, Wörterbuch II, 362. [R.K.R.]

92. For this Egyptian cosmology, see H. Frankfort et al., The Intellectual Adventure of Ancient Man (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1946) 45–47; D. Kurth, Den Himmel stützen. Die "Tw3 pt"-Szenen in den ägyptischen Tempeln der griechisch-römischen Epoche (Bruxelles: Fondation Égyptologique Reine Élisabeth, 1975) 90, 98. [R.K.R.]

93. Cf. the Egyptian harmachis, "Horus who is on the horizon."

94. For a discussion of the seven young men, see Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 70–75. In the Mithras mysteries the seven grades of initiates were each under the tutelage of a planetary deity. See Merkelbach, Weihegrade 13–14.

and a god descending, a god immensely great, having a bright appearance, youthful, golden-haired, with a white tunic and a golden crown and trousers,[95] and holding in his right hand a golden / shoulder of a young bull: this is the Bear which moves and turns heaven around, moving upward and downward in accordance with the hour.[96] Then you will see lightning bolts leaping from his eyes and stars from his body.

And at once / make a long bellowing sound, straining your belly, that you may excite the five senses; bellow long until out of breath, and again kiss the phylacteries, and say:

"MOKRIMO PHERIMO PHERERI, life of me, NN: stay! Dwell in / my soul![97] Do not abandon me, for ENTHO PHENEN THROPIŌTH commands you."

And gaze upon the god while bellowing long; and greet him in this manner:

"Hail, O Lord, O Master of the water! Hail, O Founder of the earth! Hail, O Ruler of the wind! O Bright Lightener /, PROPROPHEGGĒ EMETHIRI ARTENTEPI THĒTH MIMEŌ YENARŌ PHYRCHECHŌ PSĒRI DARIŌ PHRĒ PHRĒLBA! Give revelation, O lord, concerning the NN matter. O lord, while being born again, I am passing away; while growing and having grown, / I am dying; while being born from a life-generating birth, I am passing on, released to death—as you have founded, as you have decreed, and have established the mystery. I am PHEROURA MIOURI."

After you have said these things, he will immediately respond with a revelation. / Now you will grow weak in soul and will not be in yourself, when he answers you. He speaks the oracle to you in verse, and after speaking he will depart. But you remain silent, since you will be able to comprehend all these matters by yourself; for at a later time / you will remember infallibly the things spoken by the great god, even if the oracle contained myriads of verses.

If you also wish to use a fellow initiate, so that he alone may hear with you the things spoken, let him remain pure with you for [seven] / days, and abstain from meat and the bath. And even if you are alone, and you undertake the things communicated by the god, you speak as if prophesying in ecstasy. And if you also wish to show him, then judge whether he is completely worthy as a man /: treat him just as if in his place you were being judged in the matter of immortalization, and whisper to him the first prayer, of which the beginning is "First origin of my origin,[98] AEĒIOYŌ." And say the successive things as an initiate, over his / head, in a soft voice,[99] so that he may not hear, as you are anointing his face with the mystery. This immortalization takes place three times a year. And if anyone, O child, after the teaching, wishes to disobey, then for him it will no longer / be in effect.

95. The description of the god Mithras agrees with extant pictures. See esp. the frescoes from Dura Europos, published in M. J. Vermaseren, Corpus inscriptionum et monumentorum religionis Mithriacae (Den Haag: Nijhoff, 1956, 1960); see also the discussion in Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 76–78.

96. For the interpretation of this passage, see Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 76–78, 234; R. Beck, "Interpreting the Ponza Zodiac," Journal of Mithraic Studies 1 (1976): 1–19, esp. 2; 2 (1978): 87–147, esp. 120–27; R. L. Gordon and J. R. Hinnels, "Some New Photographs of Well-known Mithraic Monuments," ibid. 2 (1978): 213–19. Cf. also Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus, col. V. 1 with note; te Velde, Seth, God of Confusion 86–89.

97. The combination of ζωή "life," and ψυχή "soul," suggests erotic overtones (see Juvenal, Sat. 6. 195 for ζωὴ καὶ ψυχή, and the note on PGM IV. 377). [E.N.O.] In fact, sculptures portraying Eros and Psyche were found in the Mithras sanctuaries at Capua and under the Church of S. Prisca in Rome. See Merkelbach, Weihegrade 22–24, and photos on pp. 68–69.

98. For this prayer, see PGM IV. 486–537.

99. Cf. on this point Firmicus Maternus, De err. prof. rel. 22. 1: lento murmure susurrat, "he whispers with a soft murmur"; Apuleius, Met. 1.3. See also G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism, and Talmudic Tradition (New York: The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, ²1965) 58.

Instruction for the rite: Take a sun scarab which has twelve rays, and make it fall into a deep, turquoise cup, at the time when the moon is invisible;[100] put in together with it the seed of the fruit pulp of the lotus, / and honey; and, after grinding it, prepare a cake. And at once you will see it [viz., the scarab] moving forward and eating; and when it has consumed it, it immediately dies. Pick it up and throw it into a glass vessel of excellent rose oil, as much as you wish; and / spreading sacred sand in a pure manner, set the vessel on it, and say the formula over the vessel for seven days, while the sun is in midheaven:

"I have consecrated you, that your material may be useful to me, to NN alone, IE IA ĒEĒ O Y EIA, that you may prove useful to me / alone, for I am PHŌR PHORA PHŌS PHOTIZAAS" (others: "PHŌR PHŌR OPHOTHEI XAAS").

On the 7th day pick up the scarab, and bury it with myrrh and Mendesian wine[101] and fine linen; and put it away in a flourishing bean field. / Then, after you have entertained and feasted together, put away, in a pure manner, the ointment for the immortalization.

If you want to show this to someone else, take the juice of the herb called kentritis, and smear, it, along with rose oil, over the eyes of the one you wish; / and he will see so clearly that he will amaze you. I have not found a greater spell than this in the world. Ask the god for what you want, and he will give to you.

Now the encounter with the great god is like this: Having obtained the abovementioned herb / kentritis, at the conjunction [of the sun and the moon] occurring in the Lion,[102] take the juice and, after mixing it with honey and myrrh, write on a leaf of the persea tree the eight-lettered name, as given below.[103] And having kept yourself pure for 3 days in advance, come at morning to face the sunrise; / lick off the leaf while you show it to the sun, and then he [the sun god] will listen to you attentively. Begin to prepare [the scarab] on the new moon in the lion, according to the god's [reckoning].[104]

Now this is the name: "I EE OO IAI." Lick this up, so that you may be protected; and rolling up the leaf /, throw it into the rose oil. Many times have I used the spell, and have wondered greatly.

But the god said to me:

"Use the ointment no longer, but, after casting it into the river, [you must] consult while wearing the great mystery / of the scarab revitalized through the 25 living birds,[105] and consult once a month, at full moon, instead of 3 times a year."

The kentritis plant grows from the month of Payni, in the regions of the / black earth, and is similar to the erect verbena. This is how to recognize it: an ibis wing is dipped at its black tip and smeared with the juice, and the feathers fall off when touched. After the lord / pointed this out, it was found in Menelaitis in Phalagry, at the river banks, near the besas plant. It is of a single stem, and reddish down to the root; and the leaves are rather crinkled and have fruit / like the tip of wild asparagus. It is similar to the so-called talapēs, like the wild beet.

100. Literally, "at the seizure of the moon," probably designating the new moon.

101. Cf. PGM I. 85–86 and n.

102. That is, at the new moon.

103. See PGM IV. 788.

104. The new moon of god, according to the heavens, in contrast to the new moon of man, according to the calendar.

105. The allusion to the twenty-five birds is obscure; it may be related to the hours, so that the scarab Khepri is reborn in the first hour of a new day, after the passage of twelve hours of day and twelve hours of night during the previous day.

Now the phylacteries require this procedure: copy that for the right [arm] onto 815 the skin / of a black sheep, with myrrh ink, and after tying it with sinews of the same animal, put it on; and copy that [for] the left [arm] onto the skin of a white sheep, and use the same procedure. The left one is very full of "PROSTHY-
820 MĒRI" /, and has this memorandum: [106]

"So speaking, he drove through the trench the single-hoofed horses." [107]
"And men gasping among grievous slaughters." [108]
"And they washed off their profuse sweat in the sea." [109]
"You will dare to lift up your mighty spear against Zeus." [110]

825 / Zeus went up the mountain with a golden bullock and a silver dagger. Upon all he bestowed a share, only to Amara did he not give, but he said: [111]
"Let go of what you have, and then you will receive, PSINŌTHER NŌPSITHER THERNŌPSI" (add the usual). [112]
*Tr.: M. W. Meyer.

PGM IV. 830

830 *. . . "Ares endured, when Otos and mighty Ephialtes . . . him." [113]
Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM IV. 831–32

Charm to restrain anger: "Will you dare to raise your mighty spear against Zeus?" [114]
Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM IV. 833–34

To Get Friends: "Let . . . seize, lest we become a joy to our enemies." [115]
Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM IV. 835–49

835 *From 53 years and 9 months on Hermes took the period up to 10 years and 9 months, from which he assigned to himself 20 months, which would be 55 years 5
840 months; then to Aphrodite 8 months, / which would thus be 56 years 1 month;

106. The relationship of the poetic quotations in the following, which repeat those in ll. 468–74, and the Mithras liturgy is obscure. They seem unrelated; see Wessely, Griechische Zauberpapyrus (see above, Introduction, n. 24), which shows a blank after l. 820 and a sign indicating a new paragraph. For a different view, cf. Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 84. [M.S.]

107. Homer, Il. 10. 564.

108. Homer, Il. 10. 521.

109. Homer, Il. 10. 572.

110. Homer, Il. 8. 424. See PGM IV. 467–68 above and 830–31 below. Probably this verse served as a spell to restrain anger, but it may be misplaced here.

111. That these verses are part of the ὑπόμνημα ("the memorandum," l. 821) seems unlikely. More probably, a heading has been lost, and the verses contain an altogether independent spell. Story spells (historiolae) were ancient (see Faulkner, Coffin Texts, nos. 7, 75, 148, 154, 157, 158, etc.). They usually tell of a happening such as they are meant to produce (cf., e.g., PGM VII. 199–201; IV. 1471–79). This story tells of a person compelled or bribed to give up something; it could have been used to make a person give up anger. Hence it may have been attached to the Homeric verse for that purpose and was interpolated here. The name Amara is obscure; it could mean "the bitter woman" (Hebrew or Latin; cf. Ru 1:20, Vulgate).

112. Cf. Pistis Sophia 136 and 142, also with permutations of IAŌ. PSINŌTHER is Egyptian for "the sons of god." [R.K.R.] See also PGM III. 186 and n. See Glossary, s.v. "THERNOPSI formula."

113. Homer, Il. 5. 385. The same verse occurs in PGM IV. 474.

114. Homer, Il. 6. 424, quoted also PGM IV. 468, 824.

115. Homer, Il. 10. 193. See PGM IV. 470, where the same verse is quoted.

then to Helios 19 months, which would be 57 years 8 months. In this period assigned to Helios, that is to the 19 months, devote yourself to what you seek. After this he assigned to Ares 15 months, which would be 58 years 11 months. This is a hostile period. / Then to Selene 25 months, which would be 61 years. They are good. Then to Zeus 12 months, which would be 62 years. They are good. Then to Kronos 30 months, which would be 64½ years. They are bad for the body; within them also are the dangerous points.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese. The section appears to be a fragment from an astrological work about the influence of the planets upon the periods of life.

PGM IV. 850–929

Charm of Solomon that produces a trance[116] (works both on boys and on adults): I swear to you by the holy gods and the heavenly gods not to share the procedure of Solomon with anyone and certainly not to use it for something questionable[117] / unless a matter of necessity forces you, lest perchance wrath be preserved for you.

Formula to be spoken: "OURIŌR AMĒN IM TAR CHŌB KLAMPHŌB PHRĒ[118] PHRŌR PTAR OUSIRI SAIŌB TĒLŌ KABĒ / MANATATHŌR ASIŌRIKŌR BĒEINŌR AMOUN ŌM MĒNICHTHA MACHTHA CHTHARA AMACHTHA AOU ALAKAMBŌT BĒSINŌR APHĒSIŌR PHRĒPH AMĒI OUR LAMASIR CHĒRIŌB PITRĒM / PHĒŌPH NIRIN ALLANNATHATH CHĒRIŌCH ŌNĒ BOUSIRI NINOUNO AMANAL GAGŌSARIĒR MĒNIAM TLĒR OOO AA ETNĒ OUSIRI OUSIRI OURISI OURISI MĒNĒMB MNĒM / BRABĒL TNĒKAIŌB. Hear me, that is, my holy voice, because I call upon your holy names, and reveal to me concerning the thing which I want, through the NN man or little boy, for otherwise I will not defend your holy and undefiled / names. Come to me, you who became Hesies and were carried away by a river; inspire the NN man or boy concerning that which I ask you: BARBĒTH MNŌR ARARIAK TARĒRIM ŌAR TĒRŌK SANIŌR MĒNIK PHAUEK / DAPHORIOUMIN LARIŌR ĒTNIAMIM KNŌS CHALAKTHIR KRŌPHĒR PHĒSIMŌT PRĒBIB KNALA ĒRIBĒTIM GNŌRI. Come to me through the NN man or little boy and tell me accurately since / I speak your names which thrice-greatest Hermes[119] wrote in Heliopolis with hieroglyphic letters: ARBAKŌRIPH MĒNIAM ŌBAŌB ABNIŌB MĒRIM BAIAX CHENŌR PHĒNIM ŌRA ŌRĒSIOU OUSIRI[120] PNIAMOUSIRI / PHRĒOUSIRI HŌRIOUSIRI NAEIŌROUSIRI MĒNIMOUSIRI MNĒKOUSIRI PHLĒKOUSIRI PĒLĒLOUSIRI ŌNIŌ RABKOUSIRI ANIŌBOUSIRI AMĒAOUSIRI ANŌROUSIRI AMĒNĒPHĒOUSIRI / AMĒNIOUSIRI XŌNIŌR ĒOUROUSIRI. Enter into him and reveal to me concerning the NN matter."

After you have purified the designated man [by keeping him] from intercourse for 3 days, you yourself also being pure, enter together with him.[121] After you have taken him up / to an open place, seat him on unbaked bricks, dress him and give him an anubian head of wheat[122] and a falconweed plant so that he will be protected. Gird yourself with a palm fiber of a male date palm, extend your hands / up

116. Literally, the title means "Solomon's Collapse," an indication of ecstatic seizure.

117. Or "for trivial reasons."

118. The names include the gods Prē, Osiris, and Amon.

119. That is, Hermes Trismegistos. For this name, see PGM VII. 551 and n.

120. The following list, after "Osiris," contains a series of compound deities whose second element is the god Osiris, but only some can be identified: Pre-Osiris, Horus-Osiris, Onnuris-Osiris, Amenophis-Osiris, and Amon-Osiris. [R.K.R.]

121. The following account has a parallel in Test. Sol. I. 3, ed. McCown, p. *8, ll. 5–15.

122. The meaning of Anubis's head of grain is not known. On the god Anubis, see J.-C. Grenier, Anubis Alexandrin et Romain, EPRO 57 (Leiden: Brill, 1977), esp. p. 139 for ear of grain. [R.K.R.]

to heaven, toward the rays of the sun, and say the formula 7 times. Next make an offering of male frankincense after pouring out wine, beer, honey, or milk of a black cow onto grapevine wood. Then say the formula 7 times just into the ear / of the NN man or little boy, and right away he will fall down. But you sit down on the bricks and make your inquiry, and he will describe everything with truth. You should crown him with a garland of indigenous wormwood, / both him and you, for god delights in the plant.

Dismissal of the lord: into the ear of NN: "ANANAK ARBEOUĒRI AEĒIOYŌ."

If he tarries, sacrifice on grapevine charcoal a sesame seed [and] black cumin while saying: / "ANANAK ŌRBEOUSIRI AEĒIOYŌ, go away, lord, to your own thrones and protect him, NN, from all evil." You learned thoroughly; keep it secret.

The awakening[123] [of the man or boy] is as follows: Stand away from the boy or man, having your / palms spread on your buttocks, your feet together on the ground, recite [the following] often until he is moved either toward the right or toward the left: "AMOUN ĒEI[124] ABRIATH KICHŌP ŌTEM PITH." Then as a dog.[125]
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM IV. 930–1114

Charm that produces a direct vision:[126] Prayer for divine alliance, which you are to say first toward the sunrise, then the same first prayer is to be spoken to a lamp. Whenever you seek divinations, be dressed in the garb of a prophet, shod with fibers of the doum palm and / your head crowned with a spray from an olive tree—but the spray should have a single-shooted garlic tied around the middle. Clasp a pebble numbered 3663[127] to your breasts, and in this way make your invocation.

Hymn:[128]

"Hail,[129] serpent, and[130] stout lion, natural
Sources of fire.[131] / And hail, clear water and Lofty-leafed tree,[132] and you who gather up

123. The translation of this difficult term follows Preisendanz (see apparatus ad loc.).

124. AMOUN ĒEI is equivalent to Egyptian "Amon comes" (?), with Greek ηει standing for Egyptian iy. [R.K.R.]

125. Probably referring to barking; cf. PGM IV. 1006.

126. This is equivalent to the type of Demotic spell called ph-ntr-spell, literally, a "god's arrival" spell. See J. H. Johnson, "Louvre E 3229: A Demotic Magical Text," Enchoria 7 (1977):90–91.

127. According to Dornseiff, Das Alphabet 184, the mystical number is 3663 and refers to BAINCHŌŌŌCH (the numerical value of the Greek letters being 2 + 1 + 10 + 50 + 600 + 800 + 800 + 600 = 3663.

128. Preisendanz ends the hymn at l. 948, but the petition to the god continues through l. 955. Ll. 949–54 include references to the spell for a direct vision, the lamp divination, and the prayer for divine alliance. Thus the present form of these lines comes from the time when the spell was put together. Ll. 949–54 contain vestiges of verse and originally may have been part of the hymn which was composed by the final author; or they may be a prose addition to part of an earlier hymn, perhaps substituting for, or expanding the petition in, the original hymn. [W.C.G.]

129. These dactylic hexameters also form the reconstructed Hymn 3; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 238.

130. τε, though necessary to the sense, mars the hexameter. [E.N.O.]

131. A possible echo of a pre-Socratic expression, but to the author of this spell this phrase must have had a much different meaning. Preisendanz wants to emend and read Φύσι καὶ πυρὸς ἀρχή ("O Nature and fire's origin"), but the emendation is more clever than persuasive. For Physis as a goddess, see PGM I. 310 and n. [E.N.O.]

132. An adaptation of Homer, Od. 4. 458, which in the context of the spell indicates that the author knew not only the Homeric verse but the whole passage as well. [E.N.O.]

Clover from golden fields of beans,[133] and who Cause gentle foam to gush forth from pure mouths.
Scarab, who drive the orb of fertile fire,
O self-engendered one,[134] because you are
Two-syllabled, AĒ, and are the first-
Appearing one, / nod me assent, I pray,
Because your mystic symbols I declare,
ĒŌ AI OY AMERR OOUŌTH IYIŌĒ MARMARAUŌTH LAILAM SOUMARTA.
Be gracious unto me, first-father, and
May you yourself send strength as my companion.
Stay allied, lord, and listen to me / through the charm that produces direct vision which I do today, and reveal to me concerning those things I ask you through the lamp divination for direct vision which I do today, I, NN, IY EYĒ OŌ AEĒ IAEĒ AIAĒ E AI EY ĒIE ŌŌŌŌŌ EY ĒŌ / IAŌAI" (repeat).[135]

Light-bringing charm: Crown your head with the same spray, stand in the same fashion facing the lamp, close your eyes and recite this spell 7 times.

Spell: "I call upon you, the living god, / fiery, invisible begetter of light, IAĒL PEIPTA PHŌS ZA PAI PHTHENTHA PHŌSZA PYRI BELIA IAŌ IAO EYŌ OEĒ A ŌY EOI A E Ē I O Y Ō give your strength, rouse your daimon, / enter into this fire, fill it with a divine spirit, and show me your might. Let there be opened for me the house of the all-powerful god ALBALAL,[136] who is in this light. / Let there be light, breadth, depth, length, height, brightness, and let him who is inside shine through, the lord BOUĒL[137] PHTHA PHTHA PHTHAĒL PHTHA ABAI BAINCHŌŌŌCH, now, now; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly."

Light-retaining spell that is spoken once / in order that the light-magic might remain with you, for sometimes when you invoke the god-bringing spell darkness is produced. Therefore, you should conjure in the following way.

Spell: "I conjure you, holy light, holy brightness, breadth, depth, length, height, brightness, by the holy names / which I have spoken and am now going to speak. By IAŌ SABAŌTH ARBATHIAŌ SESENGENBARPHARAGGĒS ABLANATHANALBA AKRAMMACHAMARI AI AI IAO AX AX INAX, remain by me in the present hour, until I pray to the god / and learn about the things I desire."

God-bringing spell to be spoken three times with your eyes open: "I call upon you, the greatest god, sovereign HŌROS HARPOKRATĒS ALKIB HARSAMŌSI IŌAI DAGENNOUTH RARACHARAI / ABRAIAŌTH, you who enlighten the universe and by your own power illumine the whole world, god of gods, benefactor, AO IAŌ EAĒY, you who direct night and day, AI AŌ, handle and steer the tiller,[138] restrain the ser-

133. This refers to the Egyptian bean from the Nymphean lotus mentioned in PGM IV. 1110. Thus the reference is again to Horus atop the lotus. [R.K.R.]

134. "Self-generation" is a common epithet of Khepri (see Glossary, s.v. "Scarab") and is a pun on his name which means "to come into being." [R.K.R.] See also J. Whittaker, "Self-generating Principles in Second-century Gnostic Systems," in B. Layton, ed., The Rediscovery of Gnosticism, vol. I: The School of Valentinus, Studies in the History of Religions (Supplements to Numen) 41 (Leiden: Brill, 1980) 176–93.

135. Here the papyrus has the sign //, perhaps signifying doubling. See below, ll. 973 and 1046 (in the papyrus).

136. For this name, see T. Hopfner, "Orientalisch-Religionsgeschichtliches aus den griechischen Zauberpapyri Ägyptens," Archiv Orientální 3 (1931): 341.

137. This name is not attested elsewhere.

138. A reference to the solar bark of Re and the serpent Apophis, who attempts daily to devour the sun. Cf. Pritchard, ANET 6–7; E. Hornung and A. Badawy, "Apophis," LdÄ 1 (1975): 350–51. [R.K.R.]

pent, / you Good, holy[139] Daimon, whose name is HARBATHANŌPS IAOAI, whom sunrises and sunsets hymn when you arise and set. You who are praised among all gods, angels and daimons, come and appear to me, god of gods, HŌROS / HARPOKRATĒS ALKIB HARSAMŌSI IAŌ AI DAGENNOUTH RARACHARAI ABRAIAŌTH. Enter, appear to me, lord, because I call upon you as the three baboons[140] call upon you, who speak / your holy name in a symbolic fashion, A EE ĒĒĒ IIII OOOOO YYYYY ŌŌŌŌŌŌŌ (speak as a baboon). Enter in, appear to me, lord, for I speak your greatest names: BARBARAI BARBARAŌTH AREMPSOUS PERTAŌMĒCH PERA / KŌNĒTHCH IAŌ BAL BĒL BOL BE SRŌ IAOĒI OYEĒI EĒI EOYĒI AĒI ĒI IAO ĒI. You who are seated on the top of the world and judge the universe, surrounded by the circle of truth and honesty, / IYAĒ IŌAI, enter in; appear to me, lord, to me, the one who is before fire and snow and in the midst of them, because my name is BAINCHŌŌŌCH. I am the one who is from heaven; my name is BALSAMĒS. Enter in, appear to me,[141] / lord, you who have a great name, you whom we all have each in our own heart; your name is BARPHANNĒTH RALPHAI NINTHER CHOUCHAI. You who break apart rocks and change the names of gods, enter in, appear to me, lord, you who have in fire your power / and your strength, SESENGENBARPHARAGGĒS. You who are seated within the 7 poles, AEĒIOYŌ, you who have on your head a golden crown and in your hand a Memnonian staff[142] with which you send out the gods, your name is BARBARIĒL BARBARAIĒL god / BARBARAĒL BĒL BOUĒL. Enter in, lord, and answer me with your holy voice in order that I might hear clearly and unerringly concerning the NN matter, IYEYĒ OŌAEĒ (formula) IAEĒ AIAĒ EAI EYĒIE / ŌŌŌŌŌ IYĒŌ IAŌ AI."

Charm of compulsion: If somehow he delays, say in addition this following incantation (say the incantation one or 3 times): "The great, living god commands you, he who lives for eons of eons, who shakes together, who thunders, who created every / soul and race, IAŌ AŌI ŌIA AIŌ IŌA ŌAI. Enter in, appear to me, lord, happy, kind, gentle, glorious, not angry, because I conjure you by the lord, IAŌ AŌI ŌIA AIŌ IŌA ŌAI APTA PHŌIRA ZAZOU / CHAMĒ. Enter in, lord, appear to me happy, kind, gentle, [glorious,][143] not angry" (repeat).[144]

Salutation said once after the god enters. While holding the pebble, say: "Hail, lord, god of gods, benefactor, HŌROS HARPOKRATĒS ALKIB HARSAMŌSI IAŌ AI DA/GENNOUTH RARACHARAI ABRAIAŌ; let your Hours which you traverse be welcomed; let your Glories[145] be welcomed forever, lord."

139. The occurrence of "holy" between "good" and "daimon" makes it doubtful that the familiar Good Daimon is meant. See Glossary, s.v.; see also the apparatus ad loc.

140. Baboons were thought to praise the sun when they chattered at it. For a representation, see A. Piankoff, Mythological Papyri (New York: Pantheon Books, 1957), vol. I, 39, fig. 22 and pl. I. See also Bonnet, RÄRG 7–8, s.v. "Affe." [R.K.R.] On the magician's imitation of the "language" of animals, see Hopfner, OZ I, sections 778–80. Understanding this language of animals belongs to the traditional phenomenology of the "divine man" and magician. See, e.g., Porphyry, De abst. 3. 3, and on the whole topic H. Güntert, Von der Sprache der Götter und Geister (Halle: Niemeyer, 1921); Betz, Lukian 28–38.

141. Preisendanz has φάνη θίμοι, which should be read as φάνηθί μοι, as in PGM IV. 1001, 1006, 1015, 1024, 1041, 1045. [W.C.G.]

142. For Memnon as a deified hero in Egypt, see A. Bataille, Les Memnonia (Cairo: L'Institut français d'archéologie orientale, 1952) 1–21; as recipient of worship, see D. Wildung, Imhotep und Amenhotep (Munich: Deutscher Kunstverlag, 1977) 299, no. 82. [R.K.R.]

143. An addition by Preisendanz in order to conform to PGM IV. 1042. But such consistency is not always to be expected. Cf. ll. 1063–65 with 1079–80.

144. See the note above on PGM IV. 955, regarding the sign for doubling.

145. Cf. PGM I. 199 and n.

Charm to retain the god: When he comes in, after greeting him, step with your left heel on the big toe of his right foot, and he will not / go away unless you raise your heel from his toe[146] and at the same time say the dismissal.

Dismissal: Close your eyes, release the pebble which you have been holding, lift the crown up from your head and your heel from his / toe, and, while keeping your eyes closed, say 3 times: "I give thanks to you lord BAINCHŌŌŌCH, who is BALSAMĒS. Go away, go away, lord, into your own heavens, into your own palaces, into your own course. Keep me healthy, unharmed, not plagued by ghosts, free from calamity and without terror. Hear me during my / lifetime."

Dismissal of the brightness: "CHŌŌ CHŌŌ ŌCHŌŌCH,[147] holy brightness." In order that the brightness also go away:[148] "Go away, holy brightness, go away, beautiful and holy light of the highest god, AIAŌNA." Say it one time with closed eyes, smear yourself / with Coptic kohl;[149] smear yourself by means of a golden probe.

Phylactery for the rite, which you must wear for the protection of your whole body: On [a strip][150] from a linen cloth taken from a marble statue of Harpokrates in any temple [whatever] / write with myrrh these things: "I am HOROS ALKIB HARSAMŌSIS IAŌ AI DAGENNOUTH RARACHARAI ABRAIAŌTH, son of ISIS ATHTHA BATHTHA and of OSIRIS OSOR[ON]NŌPHRIS; keep me healthy, unharmed, not plagued by ghosts and without terror during my / lifetime." Place inside the strip of cloth an everliving plant;[151] roll it up and tie it 7 times with threads of Anubis.[152] Wear it around your neck whenever you perform the rite. /

Preparation: Take broad cords of papyrus, tie them to the four corners of the room so that they form an X. In the middle of the X attach a ring-shaped mat made from single-stemmed wormwood. Provide / a glazed lamp[153] with a wick called reed grass, and rub the wick itself with fat of a black, male, firstborn and first-reared ram. Fill the lamp with good olive oil, and place it in the middle, / on the mat. Light the lamp and stand in the previously mentioned fashion, facing the sunrise, whenever you perform the rite, without distinguishing the days.[154] Purify yourself / from everything three days in advance, and rub the wick beforehand with the fat of a black, male, firstborn and first-reared ram.

Signs of the lamp: After saying the light-bringing spell, open your eyes and you will see / the light of the lamp becoming like a vault. Then while closing your eyes say (differently: 3 . . .[155] after saying 3 times), and after opening your eyes you will see all things wide-open and the greatest brightness within, but the lamp shining nowhere. Then you will see the god / seated on a lotus,[156] decorated with rays, his

146. The translation follows the interpretation by Preisendanz; see the apparatus ad loc.

147. CHŌŌ CHŌŌ ŌCHŌŌCH corresponds to Coptic KŌ KŌ Ō KAKE, "depart, depart, O darkness." [R.K.R.]

148. An attempt on the part of the redactor of the papyrus text to explain the need for a second dismissal.

149. Powdered antimony used as eyepaint.

150. Addition by Eitrem on the basis of l. 1081.

151. A general name for plants that seem to live a long time. See R. Strömberg, Griechische Pflanzennamen, Göteborgs Högskolas Årsskrift 46 (Göteborg: Elanders, 1940) 103.

152. On the Anubian thread, see PGM I. 147 and n.

153. On this type of faïence, see PGM IV. 55 and n.

154. That is, the charm can be performed on any day. For charms that can be used only on certain days, cf. PGM III. 275–81; VII. 155–67, 284–89.

155. The text is obscure at this point but seems to include alternative instructions. See apparatus ad loc.

156. The deity seated on the lotus flower is Harpokrates, invoked here in ll. 989, 999–1000, and 1074–75. This standard depiction of Harpokrates is found in all the media during the Greco-Roman right hand raised in greeting and left [holding] a flail, while being carried in the hands of 2 angels with 12 rays around them.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese (ll. 930–38; 949–1114) and E. N. O'Neil (hymnic sections, ll. 939–48). This spell is a composite, made by combining a lamp divination with a charm for a direct vision and including an introductory prayer for divine alliance. The repetition in the present charm (note especially the two dismissals in ll. 1057ff. and 1065ff. and the explanation in ll. 1066ff.) is a result of the inclusion of similar elements from both of the charms here combined.

PGM IV. 1115–66

1115 *__Hidden__[157] __stele__:[158] "Hail, entire system of the aerial spirit,[159] PHŌGALŌA. Hail, spirit who extends from heaven to earth, ERDĒNEU, and from earth which is in the 1120 middle chamber of the / universe unto the borders of the abyss, MEREMŌGGA.[160] Hail, spirit who enters into me, convulses me, and leaves me kindly according to 1125 the will of god, IŌĒ ZANŌPHIE. / Hail, beginning and end of the immovable nature, DŌRYGLAOPHŌN. Hail, revolution of untiring service by heavenly bodies, RŌGYEU ANAMI PELĒGEŌN ADARA EIŌPH. Hail, radiance of the universe subordi-1130 nate / to the solar ray, IEO YĒŌ IAĒ AI ĒŌY OEI. Hail, orb of the night-illuminating, unequally shining moon, AIŌ RĒMA RŌDOUŌPIA. Hail, all spirits of the aerial im-1135 ages / RŌMIDOUĒ AGANASOU ŌTHAUA. Hail to those to whom the greeting is given with blessing, to brothers and sisters, to holy men and holy women. O great, greatest, round, incomprehensible figure of the universe, heavenly ENRŌCHES-1140 YĒL; / in heaven, PELĒTHEU; of ether, IŌGARAA; in the ether, THŌPYLEO DARDY; watery, IŌĒDES; earthy, PERĒPHIA; fiery, APHTHALYA; windlike, IŌIE ĒŌ AYA; lumi-1145 nous, ALAPIE; dark-looking, / IEPSERIA; shining with heavenly light, ADAMALŌR; moist, fiery, and cold spirit. I glorify you, god of gods, the one who brought order to the universe, AREŌ PIEUA; the one who gathered together the abyss at the invisi-1150 ble foundation of its position, PERŌ MYSĒL / O PENTŌNAX; the one who separated heaven and earth and covered the heaven with eternal, golden wings, RŌDĒRY OYŌA; the one who fixed the earth on eternal foundations, ALĒIOŌA; the one who 1155 hung up / the ether high above the earth, AIE ŌĒ IOYA; the one who scattered the air with self-moving breezes, ŌIE OYŌ; the one who put the water roundabout, 1160 ŌRĒPĒLYA; the one who raises up hurricanes, ŌRISTHAUA; / the one who thunders, THEPHICHYŌNĒL; the one who hurls lightnings, OURĒNES; the one who rains, OSIŌRNI PHEUGALGA; the one who shakes, PERATŌNĒL; the one who produces living creatures, ARĒSIGYLŌA; the god of the Aions; you are great, lord, god, ruler of the period. Harpokrates holds the flail, the symbol of royalty, here interpreted as a whip. See A. M. El-Kachab, "Some Gem-Amulets Depicting Harpocrates Seated on a Lotus Flower," JEA 57 (1971): 132–45, esp. 133–34. For the gesture of greeting, a modification under the influence of Helios instead of the more common gesture of finger sucking, see S. Morenz and J. Schubert, Der Gott auf der Blume (Ascona: Artibus Asiae, 1954). [R.K.R.]

---

157. The exact meaning of ἀπόκρυφος is uncertain here. LSJ, s.v., II, gives as possible meanings "obscure, recondite, hard to understand." More likely is the meaning "secret," for which see Bauer, s.v.; cf. also PGM XIII. 344, 731, 732, 1057, 1078.

158. The term stēlē occurs in the PGM with several meanings. Originally it refers to a plate of stone or metal on which texts could be inscribed (e.g., VIII. 42), but most of the time the term is a literary device suggesting the text was copied from a stone slab. It can also refer to an amulet in the shape of a stēlē (as in PGM VII. 215; see the picture Tafel I, Abbildung 1 in Preisendanz, vol. II).

159. The prayer is addressed to the god Aion (see l. 1164). Cf. Reitzenstein, Poimandres 277–78; Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 200, 208–10. See also PGM I. 309 and n.

160. For this imagery, see H. O. Lange, Der magische Papyrus Harris (Copenhagen: Høst, 1927) 74; furthermore, DMP col. XX, l. 28 (p. 133); PGM IV. 1210. [R.K.R.]

All, ARCHIZŌ / NYON THĒNAR METHŌR PARY PHĒZŌR THAPSAMYDŌ MARŌMI CHĒLŌPSA."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM IV. 1167–1226

*__Stele__ that is useful for all things; it even delivers from death. Do not investigate what is in it.

Formula: "I praise you,[161] the one and blessed of the eons and / father of the world, with cosmic prayers. Come to me, you who filled the whole universe with air, who hung up the fire from the [heavenly] water and separated the earth from the water. Pay attention, form, spirit, / earth and sea, to a word from the one who is wise concerning divine Necessity, and accept my words as fiery darts, because I am a man,[162] the most beautiful creature of the god in heaven, made out of spirit, / dew, and earth. Heaven, be opened; accept my words. Listen, Helios, father of the world; I call upon you with your name AŌ EY ĒOI AIOĒ YEŌA OUORZARA LAMANTHATHRĒ KANTHIOPER / GARPSARTHRĒ MENLARDAPA KENTHĒR DRYOMEN THRANDRĒTHRĒ IABE ZELANTHI BER ZATHRĒ ZAKENTI BIOLLITHRĒ AĒŌ OYŌ ĒŌ OŌ RAMIATHA AĒŌ ŌYŌ OYŌ ŌAYŌ: the only one having the original / element. You are the holy and powerful name considered sacred by all the angels; protect me, so- and-so, from every excess of power and from every violent act. Yes, do this, / lord, god of gods, IALDAZAŌ BLATHAM MACHŌR PHRIX AĒ KEŌPH EĒA DYMEŌ PHERPHRITHŌ IACHTHŌ PSYCHEŌ PHIRITHMEŌ RŌSERŌTH THAMASTRAPHATI RIMPSAŌCH IALTHE MEACHI ARBATHANŌPS, / creator of the world, creator of the universe, lord, god of gods, MARMARIŌ IAŌ. I have spoken of your unsurpassable glory,[163] you who created gods, archangels, and decans. The ten thousands of angels stood by [you] and exalted / the heaven, and the lord witnessed to your Wisdom,[164] which is Aion, IEOYĒŌĒ IAĒAIĒŌĒYOEI, and said that you are as strong as he is. I invoke your hundred-lettered / name[165] which extends from the sky to the depth of the earth; save me, for you are always ever rejoicing in saving those who are yours, ATHĒZE PHŌI AAA DAIAGTHI THĒOBIS PHIATH THAMBRAMI ABRAŌTH / CHTHOLCHIL THOE OELCHŌTH THIOŌĒMCH CHOOMCH SAĒSI ISACHCHOĒ IEROUTHRA OOOOO AIŌAI (100 letters). I call upon you, the one on the gold leaf,[166] before whom the unquenchable lamp continually burns,[167] / the great God, the one who shone on the whole world, who is radiant at Jerusalem, lord, IAŌ AIĒ IŌĒ ŌIĒ ŌIĒ IĒ AIŌAI AI OYŌ AŌĒ ĒEI IEŌ ĒYŌ AĒI AŌ AŌA AEĒI YŌ EIĒ / AĒŌ IEY AEĒ IAIA IAŌ EY AEY IAĒ EI AAA III ĒĒĒ IŌ IŌĒ IAŌ (100 letters), for a blessing, lord."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

161. The prayer is addressed to the god Aion. See Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 198, who compares the prayer with the older form in I. 196–221.

162. For different interpretations and translations, see Reitzenstein, Poimandres 279, who thinks of the god Anthropos, "Man"; cf. also Betz, "The Delphic Maxim," 169: "I am a human being, the heavenly deity's most beautiful creation. . . ."

163. Preisendanz prints Δόξα, as if to suggest a divine hypostasis. See also PGM I. 199.

164. The notion of "Wisdom" (Sophia) is here identified with Aion, a unique instance in the PGM. Cf. PGM I. 210, and Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 198–99.

165. Cf. l. 1225.

166. This protective prayer presumes a section describing a gold lamella to be worn as a phylactery. The phylactery contained the hundred-letter name of the god and was worn as protection against "every excess of power" and the "very violent act" mentioned in ll. 1193–94.

167. For the light miracle at Jerusalem, see PGM IV. 3070 and n. See also PDM xiv. 490 and K. Preisendanz, "Zum grossen Pariser Zauberpapyrus," ARW 17 (1914): 347–48.

PGM IV. 1227–64

*__Excellent rite for driving out daimons__: Formula to be spoken over his head: Place olive branches before him, / and stand behind him and say:

"Hail, God of Abraham; hail, God of Isaac; hail, God of Jacob; Jesus Chrestos,[168] the Holy Spirit, the Son of the Father, who is above[169] the Seven, / who is within the Seven. Bring Iao Sabaoth; may your power issue forth from him, NN, until you drive away this unclean daimon Satan, who is in him. I conjure you, daimon, / whoever you are, by this god, SABARBARBATHIŌTH SABARBARBATHIOUTH SABARBARBATHIŌNĒTH SABARBARBAPHAI. Come out, daimon, whoever you are, and stay away from him, NN, / now, now; immediately, immediately. Come out, daimon, since I bind you with unbreakable adamantine fetters, and I deliver you into the black chaos in perdition."

Preparation: take 7 olive branches; for six of them / tie together the two ends of each one, but for the remaining one use it like a whip as you utter the conjuration. Keep it secret; it is proven.

After driving out the daimon, hang around him, NN, a phylactery, which the patient puts on after the expulsion of the daimon—a phylactery with these things [written] on / a tin metal leaf: "BŌR PHŌR PHORBA PHOR PHORBA BES CHARIN BAUBŌ TE PHŌR BŌRPHORBA PHORBABOR BAPHORBA PHABRAIĒ PHŌRBA PHARBA PHŌRPHŌR PHORBA / BŌPHOR PHORBA PHORPHOR PHORBA BŌBORBORBA PAMPHORBA PHŌRPHŌR PHŌRBA, protect him, NN." But another version has a phylactery on which this sign[170] occurs: ⸗

*Tr.: M. W. Meyer. This Greek and Coptic exorcistic spell is discussed by Tambornino, RGVV VII 3, 9; 10. For additional literature, see Preisendanz, PGM vol. I, 114 and idem, APF 8 (1927): 115.

PGM IV. 1265–74

*__Aphrodite's name__ which becomes known to no one quickly is NEPHERIĒRI[171]—this is the name. If you wish to win a woman who is beautiful, be pure for 3 days, make an offering of frankincense, / and call upon this name over it. You approach the woman and say it seven times in your soul as you gaze at her, and in this way it will succeed.[172] But do this for 7 days.

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 1275–1322

*__Bear-charm__[173] __which accomplishes everything__: Formula: "I call upon you, the greatest power in heaven" (others: "in the Bear") "appointed by the lord god to turn with a strong / hand the holy pole, NIKAROPLĒX. Listen to me, Helios, Phre;[174] hear the holy [prayer], you who hold together the universe and bring to life the 168. On Chrēstos, "excellent one," rather than Christos, "anointed one," see K. Weiss, TDNT 9 (1974): 484–85; B. Layton, The Gnostic Treatise on Resurrection from Nag Hammadi (Missoula, Montana: Scholars Press, 1979) 44–45; Smith, Jesus the Magician 63.

169. Or "below."

170. This sign is familiar from the so-called Chnoubis amulets. See Bonner, SMA 54–55; Delatte and Derchain, Les Intailles magiques 54–57; A. Jacoby, "Ein Berliner Chnoubisamulett," ARW 28 (1930): 269–70. The translation of the sentence is according to the interpretation by R.D.K.

171. Nepherieri is the Egyptian Nfr-iry.t, "the beautiful eye," a suitable epithet for Aphrodite/Hathor. See G. Möller, in Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc. [J.B.; R.K.R.]

172. Or "you will succeed," the subject being the spell itself.

173. The spell invokes the astral constellation of the Bear and its powers. See PGM IV. 700, 1331; VII. 687; XXIII. 10.

174. That is, Helios-Prē.

whole world, THŌZOPITHĒ EUCHANDAMA ŌCHRIENTHĒR / OMNYŌDĒS CHĒMIOCHYNGĒS IEŌY" (perform a sacrifice) "THERMOUTHER PSIPHIRIX PHROSALI KANTHIMEŌ ZANZEMIA ŌPER PEROMENĒS RŌTHIEU ĒNINDEU KORKOUNTHO EUMEN MENI KĒDEUA KĒPSĒOI" (add the usual).

Petition / to the sun at sunset. Formula: "THĒNŌR, O Helios, SANTHĒNŌR, I beseech you, lord, may the place and lord of the Bear devote themselves to me" (while petitioning, sacrifice armara.[175] Do it at sunset).

Charm of compulsion for the 3rd day: "ANTEBERŌYRTŌR EREMNETHĒCHŌR CHNYCHIROANTŌR MENELEOCHEU ĒESSIPO DŌTĒR EUARĒTŌ GOU PI PHYLAKĒ ŌMALAMINGOR MANTATONCHA / do the NN thing."

The first formula in a different way: "THŌZOPITHĒ, Bear, greatest goddess, ruling heaven, reigning over the pole of the stars, highest, beautiful-shining goddess, incorruptible element, composite of the all, all-illuminating, / bond of the universe AEĒIOYŌ (square),[176] you who stand on the pole, you whom the lord god appointed to turn the holy pole with a strong hand: THŌZOPITHĒ (formula)."

Offering for the procedure: 4 drams of frankincense, 4 drams of myrrh, 2 ounces each of cassia leaf and / of white pepper, 1 dram of bdellion, 1 dram of asphodel seed, 2 drams each of amomon, of saffron, of terebinth storax, 1 dram of wormwood, . . . of vetch plant, priestly Egyptian incense, the complete brain of a black ram. / Combine these with white Mendesian wine[177] and honey, and make pellets of bread.

Phylactery for the procedure: Wear a wolf knucklebone, mix juice of vetch and of pondweed in a censer, / write in the middle of the censer this name: "THERMOUTHEREPSIPHIRIPHI[178] PISALI" (24 letters),[179] and in this way make an offering.
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM IV. 1323–30

Another*: "KOMPHTHO KOMASITH KOMNOUN[180] you who shook and shake the world, you who have swallowed the ever-living serpent and daily / raise the disk of the sun and of the moon, you whose name is ITHIOŌ ĒI ARBATHIAŌ Ē, send up to me, NN, at night the daimon of this night to reveal to me concerning / the NN thing."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM IV. 1331–89

Powerful spell of the Bear[181] which accomplishes anything: Take the fat of a black ass, the fat of a dappled she-goat, the fat of a black bull, and Ethiopian cumin, mix all together / and make an offering to the Bear, having as a phylactery hairs

175. For the recipe, see below, ll. 1308–16, and Hopfner, OZ I, section 803. Cf. PGM IV. 1990.

176. According to Preisendanz, πλινθίον (square) inserted here means that the letters are to be arranged in a series of lines forming a square. For this form of pictorial writing, see V. Gardthausen, Griechische Palāographie II (Leipzig: Veit, ²1913) 59. For a similar piece, see A. Greifenhagen, Schmuckarbeiten in Edelmetall, II: Einzelstücke (Berlin: Staatliche Museen, Preussischer Kulturbesitz, Antikenabteilung, 1975) 98 n. 11; cf. also PGM XIII. 905–11.

177. Cf. PGM I. 85 and n.

178. Thermouth is Renmutet, the Egyptian harvest goddess and Fate. See Bonnet, RÄRG 803–4, s.v. "Thermutis." See also PGM IV. 664 and n.

179. That is, in Greek letters.

180. Preisendanz suggests this line may contain Coptic, which according to F. Ll. Griffith, "The Old Coptic Magical Text of Paris," ZÄS 38 (1900) : 93, means "earth-shaker, ground-shaker, abyss-shaker." [R.K.R.] Cf. PGM III. 680.

181. For the meaning of the constellation of the Bear, see PGM IV. 1275.

from the same animals which you have plaited into a cord and are wearing as a diadem around your head. Anoint your lips with the fats, smear your whole body with storax / oil, and make your petition while holding a single-shooted Egyptian onion. Speak concerning whatever you wish. Gird yourself with a palm fiber of a male date palm, kneel down, and speak the following formula:

/ "I call upon you, holy, very-powerful, very-glorious, very-strong, holy, autochthons, assistants of the great god, the powerful chief daimons, you who / are inhabitants of Chaos,[182] of Erebos, of the abyss, of the depth, of earth, dwelling in the recesses of heaven, lurking in the nooks and crannies of houses, shrouded in dark clouds, watchers of things not to be seen, guardians of secrets, leaders of those in the underworld, administrators / of the infinite, wielding power over earth, earthshakers, foundation-layers, servants in the chasm, shudderful fighters, fearful ministers, turning the spindle, freezing snow and rain, air-transversers, causing / summer heat, wind-bringers, lords of Fate, inhabitants of dark Erebos, bringers of compulsion, sending flames of fire, bringing snow and dew, wind-releasers, disturbers of the deep, treaders on the calm sea, mighty in courage, grievers / of the heart, powerful potentates, cliff-walkers, adverse daimons, iron-hearted, wild-tempered, unruly, guarding Tartaros, misleading Fate, all-seeing, all-hearing, / all-subjecting, heaven-walkers, spirit-givers, living simply, heaven-shakers, gladdening the heart, those who join together death, revealers of angels, punishers of mortals, sunless revealers, rulers of daimons, / air-transversers, almighty, holy, unconquerable AŌTH[183] ABAŌTH BASYM ISAK SABAŌTH IAŌ IAKŌP MANARA SKORTOURI MORTROUM EPHRAULA THREERSA; do the NN matter."

/ Then write on a piece of papyrus the hundred-lettered name of Typhon,[184] curved as a star, and bind it in the middle of the core with the letters showing.

This is the name: / ACHCHŌR ACHCHŌR ACHACHACHPTOUMI CHACHCHŌ CHARACHŌCH CHAPTOUMĒ CHŌRA CHŌCH APTOUMIMĒ CHŌCHAPTOU CHARACHPTOU CHACHCHŌ CHARA CHŌCH PTENACHŌCHEOU.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM IV. 1390–1495

Love spell of attraction performed with the help of heroes or gladiators or those who have died a violent death: Leave a little of the bread which you eat; break it up and form it into seven bite-size pieces. And go to where heroes and gladiators and those who have died a violent death were slain. / Say the spell to the pieces of bread and throw them. And pick up some polluted dirt from the place where you perform the ritual and throw it inside the house of the woman whom you desire, go on home and go to sleep.

The spell which is said upon the pieces of bread is this:

"To[185] Moirai, Destinies, / Malignities,
To Famine, Jealousy, to those who died

182. For these names referring to the underworld places of Greek mythology, see Orph. Frag. 1 and 54; Homer, Il. 16. 327; Od. 10. 528; Hesiod, Theog. 515; etc. See W. K. C. Guthrie, Orpheus and Greek Religion (London: Methuen, 1952) 92.

183. The magical words contain some garbled Aramaic. On BASYM, see PGM LXX. 3 and n.; XIII. 147, 593. For an explanation from the Hebrew ba-shem, see G. Alon, Jews, Judaism and the Classical World (Jerusalem: Magnes, 1977) 235–51, esp. 237, 240.

184. The association of Typhon with the constellation of the Bear (cf. PGM IV. 1331, 1335) is Egyptian. The Bear represents the soul of Typhon, the murderer of Osiris. See Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 21, 359D, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 373.

185. These iambic trimeters (which are sometimes rather clumsy) have been adapted to form the reconstructed Hymn 25, for which see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 263. [E.N.O.]

Untimely deaths and those dead violently,
I'm sending food: Three-headed Goddess, Lady
Of Night, who feed on filth, O Virgin, thou
Key-holding Persephassa,[186] Kore out
Of Tartaros, grim-eyed, dreadful, child girt /
With fiery serpents, he, NN, has mixed
With tears and bitter groans leftovers from His own food, so that you, O luckless heroes
Who are confined there in the NN place,
May bring success to him who is beset
With torments. You who've left the light, O you
Unfortunate ones, / bring success to him,
NN, who is distressed at heart because
Of her, NN, ungodly and unholy.
So bring her wracked with torment—and in haste!
EIOUT ABAŌTH PSAKERBA ARBATHIAŌ LALAOITH / IŌSACHŌTOU ALLALETHŌ
You too as well, Lady, who feed on filth[187]
SYNATRAKABI BAUBARABAS ENPHNOUN MORKA[188] ERESCHIGAL NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH, and send the Erinys ORGOGORGONIOTRIAN,[189]
Who rouses up with fire souls of the dead, /
Unlucky heroes, luckless heroines,
Who in this place, who on this day, who in
This hour, who in coffins of myrtlewood,
Give heed to me and rouse / her, NN, on
This night and from her eyes remove sweet sleep,
And cause her wretched care and fearful pain,
Cause her to follow after my footsteps,
And / for my will give her a willingness
Until she does what I command of her.
O mistress Hekate[190]
PHORBA PHORBŌBAR BARŌ PHŌRPHŌR PHŌRBAI
O Lady of the Crossroads, O Black Bitch."

When you have done / these things for 3 days and accomplish nothing, then use this forceful spell: just go to the same place and again perform the ritual of the bread pieces. Then upon ashes of flax offer up dung / from a black cow and say this and again pick up the polluted dirt and throw it as you have learned.

The words spoken over the offering are these:

"Chthonic Hermes and chthonic Hekate and chthonic Acheron[191] and chthonic /

186. A poetic form of Persephone.

187. These words with some changes are included as part of Hymn 25 (ll. 14–16), and they seem to scan, but without a translation possible for the formulaic terms nothing can be gained by inserting them in the verse section. [E.N.O.]

188. A. Jacoby has proposed (see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.) that the name is that of the Babylonian deity Omorka. See O. Höfer, in Roscher 3/1 (1897–1902) 868–69, s.v. "Omorka."

189. The epithet "the Orgogorgoniotrian" signifies one of the Furies (Erinys). According to LSJ, s.v., it is found only here in Greek.

190. The meter breaks down at this point and only by rearranging and omitting words can Hymn 25 (l. 28) accommodate the concluding phrases here. [E.N.O.]

191. The name Acheron refers to the mythical river or sea in the underworld. There is also a connection with the river Acheron in Epirus, where the famous underworld oracle of Ephyra was located. See E. Vermeule, Aspects of Death in Early Greek Art and Poetry (Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, 1979) 252. The oracle of Ephyra has been excavated; see S. I. Dakaris, "Das Tau-flesh-eaters and chthonic god and chthonic Amphiaraos[192] and chthonic attendants and chthonic spirts and chthonic sins and chthonic dreams / and chthonic oaths and chthonic Ariste[193] and chthonic Tartaros and chthonic witchery, chthonic Charon and chthonic escorts and the dead and the daimons and souls of all men: / come today, Moirai and Destiny; accomplish the purpose with the help of the love spell of attraction, that you may attract to me her, NN whose mother is NN, to me NN, whose mother is NN (add the usual), because I am calling

O[194] primal Chaos, / Erebos, and you
O awful water of the Styx, O streams
O Lethe, Hades' Acherousian pool,
O Hekate and Pluto and Kore,
And chthonic Hermes, Moirai, Punishments,
Both Acheron and Aiakos,[195] / gatekeeper
Of the eternal bars, now open quickly,
O thou Key-holder, guardian, Anubis.[196]
Send up to me the phantoms of the dead
Forthwith for service in this very hour. /

So that they may go and attract to me, NN, her, NN, whose mother is NN" (add the usual).

"Isis[197] came, holding on her shoulders her brother who is her bedfellow,[198] and Zeus came down from Olympus and stood awaiting the phantoms / of the dead as they were being led to her, NN, and were performing the NN business (add the usual). All the immortal gods and all the goddesses came to see the phantoms of these dead. Do not, therefore, delay; / do not loiter, but dispatch, O gods, the phantoms of these dead, so that having gone to her NN they may perform the NN deed (add the usual) because I adjure you by IAŌ / SABAŌTH and ADŌNAI PATRAXILYTRA BOURREPHAŌMI ASSALKĒ AIDOUNAX SESENGEN (formula) BALIABA ERECHCHARNOI ABERIDOUMA SALBACHTHI EISERSE / RATHŌ EISERDA ŌMI SISIPHNA SISAEDOUBE ACHCHARITŌNĒ ABERIPHNOUBA IABAL DENATHI ITHROUPHI. Send up the phantoms of these dead to her NN / whose mother is NN, so that they may perform the NN deed" (add the usual).

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

---

benorakel von Dodona und das Totenorakel bei Ephyra," Antike Kunst, Beiheft 1 (1963): 35–55; Burkert, Griechische Religion 185–86.

192. The name refers to an old underworld god who had an incubation oracle at Oropos. See R. Herzog, "Amphiaraos," RAC 1 (1950): 396, with further literature.

193. For this epithet of Artemis and Demeter, see Jessen, "Ariste," PRE 2 (1895): 876.

194. These dactylic hexameters also form the reconstructed Hymn 26, for which see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 264. The reconstruction is even more extensive than usual, for in places only faint vestiges of verse remain. [E.N.O.]

195. Aiakos was one of the judges of the underworld, along with Minos and Rhadamanthys. See Plato, Apol. 41a; Gorg; 523e, and W. Schmid, "Aiakos," PRE 1 (1893): 923–26.

196. On Anubis with the key, see S. Morenz, "Anubis mit dem Schlüssel," in his Religion und Geschichte des Alten Ägypten (Köln and Wien: Böhlau, 1975) 510–20. [R.K.R.]

197. These lines, which contain vestiges of dactylic hexameters, have been arranged in an awkward verse pattern and accepted as the reconstructed Hymn 27; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 264. Nonetheless, the translation is prose because the lines have no more of a metrical pattern than many other passages scattered through these documents. [E.N.O.]

198. Isis aroused desire within the dead Osiris and by him conceived Horus. [R.K.R.]

PGM IV. 1496–1595

Love spell of attraction over myrrh which is offered: While offering it over coals, recite the spell.

Spell:

"You are Myrrh, the bitter, the difficult, who reconciles / combatants, who sears and who forces those to love who do not acknowledge Eros. Everyone calls you Myrrh, but I call you Flesh-eater and / Inflamer of the heart. I am not sending you to far-off Arabia; I am not sending you to Babylon, but I am sending you to her NN, whose mother is NN, so that you may serve me on the mission to her, so that / you may attract her to me. If she is sitting,[199] let her not keep sitting; if she is chatting with someone, let her not keep chatting; if she is gazing at someone, let her not keep gazing; if she is going to someone, let her not keep going; if she is strolling about, let her not / keep strolling; if she is drinking, let her not keep drinking; if she is eating, let her not keep eating; if she is kissing someone, let her not keep kissing him; if she is enjoying some pleasure, let her not keep enjoying it; if she is sleeping, let her not keep sleeping. Rather, let her hold me / NN alone in her mind; let her desire me alone; let her love me alone; let her do all my wishes. Do not enter through her eyes or through her side or through her nails / or even through her navel or through her frame, but rather through her 'soul.' And remain in her heart and burn her guts, her breast, her liver, / her breath, her bones, her marrow, until she comes to me NN, loving me, and until she fulfills all my wishes, because I adjure you, Myrrh, by the three names,[200] / ANOCHŌ[201] ABRASAX TRŌ, and by the more coercive and stronger names KORMEIŌTH IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI, so that you may carry out my / orders, Myrrh. As I burn you up and you are potent, so burn the brain of her, NN, whom I love. Inflame her and turn her guts inside out, / suck out her blood drop by drop, until she comes to me, NN, whose mother is NN. I adjure you by the MARPARKOURITH NASAARI NAIEMARE PAIPARI / NEKOURI. I throw you into the burning fire and adjure you by the almighty god who lives forever: Having adjured you, I now also adjure you, / ADŌNAI BARBAR IAŌ ZAGOURĒ HARSAMŌSI ALAOUS and SALAŌS. I adjure you who strengthened man for life: Hear, hear, / great god, o Adonaios, ETHYIA, self-gendering, everlasting god, EIŌĒ IAŌ AIŌ AIŌ PHNEŌS SPHINTĒS ARBATHIAŌ IAŌ IAĒ IŌA / AI, who are OUĒR[202] GONTHIAŌR RARAĒL[203] ABRA BRACHA SOROORMERPHERGAR MARBAPHRIOUIRIGX IAŌ SABAŌTH MASKELLI / MASKELLŌ (the formula) AMONSŌE ANOCH RIGCH PHNOUKENTABAŌTH SOUSAE PHINPHESĒCH MAPHI / RAR ANOURIN IBANAŌTH AROUĒR CHNOUPH ANOCH BATHI OUCH IARBAS BABAUBAR ELŌAI; attract for me her NN, whose mother is NN, to me / NN, whose mother is NN, on the very day, on this night, at this very hour, MOULŌTH PHOPHITH PHTHŌITH PHTHŌYTH PENIŌN. I call upon you also who hold / the fire, PHTHAN ANOCH; give heed to me, O one, only-begotten, MANEBIA BAIBAI CHYRIRŌOU THADEIN ADŌNAI EROU NOUNI / MIŌŌNCH CHOUTIAI MARMARAUŌTH. Attract her, NN, whose mother is NN, to me NN, whose mother is NN, now, now; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly."

And say also the spell for all / occasions.

Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

199. For parallels to this passage, cf. P. Smither, "A Coptic Love-Charm," JEA 25 (1939): 175–76.

200. On this passage, see C. Bonner, "Liturgical Fragments on Gnostic Amulets," HTR 25 (1932): 362–67; idem, "The Transcendency of Divine Attributes," ibid. 37 (1944): 338–39.

201. This means in Egyptian "I am great." [R.K.R.] Cf. PGM I. 149.

202. OUER corresponds to Egyptian wr, "great." [R.K.R.]

203. RARAĒL occurs only here; perhaps Raphael should be read. [E.N.O.]

PGM IV. 1596–1715

This is the consecration for all purposes: Spell to Helios: "I invoke you, the greatest god, eternal lord, world ruler, / who are over the world and under the world, mighty ruler of the sea, rising at dawn, shining from the east for the whole world, / setting in the west. Come to me, thou who risest from the four winds, joyous[204] Agathos Daimon, for whom heaven has become the processional way. I call upon your holy / and great and hidden names which you rejoice to hear. The earth flourished when you shone forth, and the plants became fruitful when you laughed; the animals begat their young / when you permitted. Give glory and honor and favor and fortune and power to this, NN, stone which I consecrate[205] today (or to the / phylactery being consecrated) for NN.[206] I invoke you, the greatest in heaven, ĒI LANCHYCH AKARĒN BAL MISTHRĒN MARTA / MATHATH LAILAM MOUSOUTHI SIETHŌ BATHABATHI IATMŌN ALEI IABATH ABAŌTH SABAŌTH ADŌNAI, the great god, ORSENOPHRĒ ORGEATĒS / TOTHORNATĒSA[207] KRITHI BIŌTHI IADMŌ IATMŌMI METHIĒI[208] LONCHOŌ AKARĒ BAL MINTHRĒ BANE BAI(N)CHCHYCHCH OUPHRI NOTHEOUSI THRAI / ARSIOUTH ERŌNERTHER, the shining Helios, giving light throughout the whole world. You are the great Serpent, leader of all[209] the gods, who control the beginning / of Egypt and the end of the whole inhabited world, who mate in the ocean, PSOI PHNOUTHI NINTHĒR.[210] You are he who becomes / visible each day and sets in the northwest of heaven, and rises in the southeast.[211] In the 1st hour you have the form of a cat; your name is PHARAKOUNĒTH. / Give glory and favor to this phylactery. In the 2nd hour you have the form of a dog; your name is SOUPHI. Give strength and honor to this phylactery, [or] to this stone, / and to NN. In the 3rd hour you have the form of a serpent; your name is AMEKRANEBECHEO THŌYTH. Give honor to the god NN. In the 4th hour you have the form of a scarab; your name is / SENTHENIPS. Mightily strengthen this phylactery in this night, for the work for which it is consecrated. In the 5th hour you have the form of a donkey; your name is / ENPHANCHOUPH. Give strength and courage and power to the god, NN. In the 6th hour you have the form of a lion; your name is BAI SOLBAI, the ruler of time. Give / success to this phylactery and glorious victory. In the 7th hour you have the form of a goat; your name is OUMESTHŌTH. Give sexual charm to this ring / (or to this phylactery, or to this engraving). In the 8th hour you have the form of a bull; your name is DIATIPHĒ, who becomes visible everywhere. Let all / things [done] by the use of this stone be accomplished. In the 9th hour you have the form of a falcon; your name is PHĒOUS PHŌOUTH, the lotus emerged from the abyss.[212] Give success / [and] good luck to his phylactery. In the 10th hour you have the form of a baboon; your name is BESBYKI. In the 11th

204. "Joyous" can also mean "benevolent" or "lucky," meanings appropriate and probably intended here. In the writer's mind the three were probably not distinguished. [M.S.]

205. Cf. on this point PGM IV. 2179 and n.

206. Or "for use in relation to NN."

207. Reading ⟨ὁ⟩ οργεατης τ' ὁ θορνατης. Both nouns seem unattested formations; perhaps the former should be corrected to ὀργιαστής, "participant in orgiastic rites," which were often secret and connected with Dionysos. [M.S.]

208. From ĒI onward the words repeat in variations the formula with which the series begins.

209. Reading πάντων for τούτων, with Reitzenstein, Poimandres 29. [M.S.]

210. This is equivalent to the Egyptian "the Agathodaimon, the god (of) the gods." [R.K.R.] Cf. PGM III. 144–45.

211. On the forms of the sun god, see PGM II. 104 and nn.

212. On the lotus flower, see PGM IV. 1111; PDM xiv. 45; and Morenz, Egyptian Religion 179–80. [R.K.R.]

hour you have the form of an ibis; your name is / MOU RŌPH.[213] Protect this great phylactery for lucky [use] by NN, from this present day for all time. In the 12th hour you have the form of a crocodile; your name / is AERTHOĒ. You who have set at evening as an old man,[214] who are over the world and [under] the world, mighty ruler of the sea, hear my voice in this present day, / in this night, in these holy hours, and let [all things done] by this stone [or] for this phylactery, be brought to fulfilment, and especially NN matter for which I consecrate it. Please, / lord KMĒPH LOUTHEOUTH ORPHOICHE ORTILIBECHOUCH IERCHE ROUM IPERITAŌ YAI. I conjure earth and heaven and light and darkness and the / great god who created all, SAROUSIN, you, Agathon Daimonion the helper, to accomplish for me everything [done] by the use of this ring or [stone]."

When / you complete [the consecration], say, "The one Zeus is Sarapis."[215]

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM IV. 1716–1870

Sword[216] of Dardanos:[217] Rite which is called "sword," which has no equal because of its power, for it immediately bends and attracts the soul[218] of whomever you wish. / As you say the spell, also say: "I am bending to my will the soul of him NN."[219]

Take a magnetic stone which is breathing and engrave Aphrodite sitting astride Psyche[220] / and with her left hand holding on her hair bound in curls. And above her head: "ACHMAGE RARPEPSEI"; and below / Aphrodite and Psyche engrave Eros standing on the vault of heaven, holding a blazing torch and burning Psyche.[221] And below Eros these / names: "ACHAPA ADŌNAIE BASMA CHARAKŌ IAKŌB IAŌ Ē PHARPHARĒI." On the other side of the stone engrave Psyche and Eros embracing / one another and beneath Eros' feet these letters: "ssssssss," and beneath Psyche's feet: "ĒĒĒĒĒĒĒĒ." Use the stone, when it has been engraved and conse-

213. Here, and again below after the twelfth hour, the prayer for a gift to the phylactery or stone has presumably been skipped by a copyist.

214. This is a reference to Atum, the form of the sun god at setting. See Bonnet, RÄRG 731. [R.K.R.]

215. On this formula, see O. Weinreich, Neue Urkunden zur Sarapisreligion (Tübingen: Mohr, Siebeck, 1919; reprinted in his Ausgewählte Schriften I [Amsterdam: Grüner, 1969] 410–42); Nilsson, GGR II, 574; W. Hornbostel, Sarapis. Studien zur Überlieferungsgeschichte und Wandlungen der Gestalt eines Gottes, EPRO 32 (Leiden: Brill, 1973) 353, n. 2; 396.

216. The designation "sword" apparently serves as a kind of title for certain types of formulas, here presumably the formula in l. 1813. See K. Preisendanz, "Xiphos," Roscher 6 (1924–37) 526–28; Nock, Essays I, 190. The classical work of this kind is the so-called Sword of Moses, for which see M. Gaster, Studies and Texts in Folklore, Magic, Medieval Romance, Hebrew Apocrypha and Samaritan Archaeology I (London: Maggs, 1925) 288–337. See also PGM IV. 1813 and n.

217. Dardanos was believed to have founded the mysteries of Samothrake. See A. Hermann, "Dardanus," RAC 3 (1957): 593–94.

218. Since the operator does not want spiritual love, ψυχή here is probably the female pudenda. Against this interpretation is τὴν ψυχὴν τοῦ δεῖνα (l. 1721), but since the rest of the spell is concerned with attracting a woman, we should probably emend here and read τῆς δεῖνα. [E.N.O.]

219. It is not clear whether this spell concerns a male or a female lover. Cf. ll. 1720, 1807, 1828–29.

220. The best treatment of this image is that by R. Mouterde, Le Glaive de Dardanos. Objets et inscriptions magiques de Syrie, Mélanges de l'Université Saint-Joseph 15/3 (Beirut: Imprimérie Catholique, 1930) 53–64. See also R. Reitzenstein, "Noch einmal Eros und Psyche," ARW 28 (1930): 42–87; A. Rumpf, "Eros (Eroten) II. in der Kunst," RAC 6 (1966): 312–42, esp. 330–31.

221. For this theme and literature, see R. Helm, "Psyche," PRE 23 (1959): 1434–38; S. Binder and R. Merkelbach, Amor und Psyche (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1968) esp. 433–34. See also PGM XII. 20.

crated, / like this: put it under your tongue and turn it to what you wish and say this spell:

"I[222] call upon you, author of all creation, who spread your own wings over the whole / world, you, the unapproachable and unmeasurable who breathe into every soul life-giving / reasoning, who fitted all things together by your power, firstborn, founder of the universe, golden-winged, whose light is darkness, who shroud reasonable / thoughts and breathe forth dark frenzy, clandestine one who secretly inhabit every soul. You engender an unseen fire / as you carry off every living thing without growing weary of torturing it, rather having with pleasure delighted in pain[223] from the time when the world came into being. You also come / and bring pain, who are sometimes reasonable, sometimes irrational, because of whom men dare beyond what is fitting and take refuge in your light which is darkness. / Most headstrong, lawless, implacable, inexorable, invisible, bodiless, generator of frenzy, archer, torch-carrier, master of all living / sensation and of everything clandestine, dispenser of forgetfulness, creator of silence, through whom the light and to whom the light travels, infantile when you have been engendered within / the heart, wisest when you have succeeded; I call upon you, unmoved by prayer, by your great name: AZARACHTHARAZA[224] LATHA / IATHAL[225] Y Y Y LATHAI ATHALLALAPH IOIOIO AI AI AI OUERIEU OIAI LEGETA RAMAI AMA RATAGEL,[226] first-shining, night-/shining, night rejoicing, night-engendering, witness, ERĒKISITHPHĒ[227] ARARACHARARA ĒPHTHISIKĒRE[228] IABEZEBYTH IO, you in the depth,[229] BERIAMBŌ / BERIAMBEBŌ, you in the sea, MERMERGOU, clandestine and wisest, ACHAPA ADŌNAIE BASMA CHARAKŌ IAKŌB IAŌ CHAROUĒR AROUĒR LAILAM / SEMESILAM SOUMARTA MARBA KARBA MENABŌTH ĒIIA. Turn the 'soul' of her NN to me NN, so that she may love me, so that she may feel passion for me, so that she may give me what is in her power.[230] / Let her say to me what is in her soul because I have called upon your great name."

And on a golden leaf inscribe this sword:[231] "One[232] THOURIĒL / MICHAĒL

222. The hymn to Eros has been called "notably elegant and literary" (Nock, Essays I, 183). Cf. the hymn to Eros among the Orphic Hymns (no. 58). See Binder and Merkelbach, Amor und Psyche 150, 386–87.

223. The words ὀδυνηρᾷ τέρψει make little sense, esp. without a verbal form in the clause. Because there are traces of poetic language here, we should perhaps read ὀδύνῃ ῥᾳ̣̂ τέρψας, and this is what the translation renders. [E.N.O.]

224. An imperfect palindrome.

225. The spacing of this vox magica has been arranged to show the palindrome.

226. Again, the spacing has been arranged to show the palindrome.

227. Again, the vox magica has been arranged to show the palindrome.

228. This often attested vox magica can be read as Greek φθισικηρε (φθίω, κήρ), perhaps "destroying evil demons" (cf. φθισήνωρ, φθισίμβροτος, φθισίφρων). [W.B.] See also R. Merkelbach, "ΦΘΙΣΙΚΗΡΕ," ZPE 47 (1982):172, commenting esp. on PGM II. 100.

229. Here, βύθιε, "you in the deep," as well as πελάγιε, "you in the sea" (l. 800), and κρύφιε καὶ πρεσβύτατε, "clandestine and wisest" (ll. 1801–2) are recognizable Greek words, inserted into this series of magical palindromes. Cf. the similar formulas on a lead piece, P. Rein. II. 88, ll. 17–20. See P. Collart, Les Papyrus Theodore Reinach, vol. II, BIFAO 39 (1940):29–32. [R.D.K.] Cf. also the figure of Bythos in Valentinian gnosticism.

230. This means "power to give"; lit., "what is in her hands."

231. See also on l. 1717, above. This "sword" or magical formula may be so named because the words to be written on the gold lamella were to be engraved in the shape of, or enclosed by, a "sword." For a magical gold leaf with a sword, see the facsimile in S. Reinach and E. Babelon, "Recherches archéologiques en Tunisie (1883–1884)," Bulletin Archéologique 1886, p. 57. [R.D.K.]

232. For a discussion of this monotheistic formula, see Bonner, SMA 175–76; cf. H. D. Betz, Exegetisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament I (1978):969–71, s.v. "εἷς."

GABRIĒL OURIĒL MISAĒL IRRAĒL ISTRAĒL:[233] May it be a propitious day for this name and for me who know it and am wearing it. I summon the immortal / and infallible strength of God. Grant me the submission of every soul for which I have called upon you." Give the leaf to a partridge to gulp down[234] / and kill it. Then pick it up and wear it around your neck after inserting into the strip the herb called "boy love."

The burnt offering / which endows Eros and the whole procedure with soul is this: manna, 4 drams; storax, 4 drams; opium, 4 drams; myrrh, [4 drams;] frankincense, saffron, bdella, / one-half dram each. Mix in rich dried fig and blend everything in equal parts with fragrant wine, and use it for the performance. In the performance first make a burnt offering and / use it in this way.[235]

And there is also a rite for acquiring an assistant,[236] who is made out of wood from a mulberry tree. He is made as a winged Eros wearing a cloak, with his right foot lifted / for a stride and with a hollow back. Into the hollow put a gold leaf after writing with a cold-forged copper stylus so-and-so's name [and]: "MARSABOUTARTHE[237]—be my / assistant and supporter and sender of dreams."

Go late at night to the house [of the woman] you want, knock on her door / with the Eros and say: "Lo, she NN resides here; wherefore stand beside her and, after assuming the likeness of the god or daimon whom she worships, say what I propose." And go to your / home, set the table, spread a pure linen cloth, and seasonal flowers, and set the figure upon it. Then make a burnt offering to it and continuously say the / spell of invocation. And send him, and he will act without fail. And whenever you bend her to your will with the stone, on that night it sends / dreams, for on a different night it is busy with different matters.[238]

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 1872–1927

*. . . instruct no one, for it is very powerful and unsurpassable, effective for everyone / on the same day, absolutely binding, exceedingly powerful. And it is: Take 4 ounces of wax, 8 ounces of fruit from the chaste-tree, 4 drams of manna. Pound each of these fine / separately and mix with pitch and wax, and fashion a dog eight fingers long with its mouth open. And you are to place in the mouth of the dog / a bone from the head of a man who has died violently, and inscribe on the sides of the dog these characters: ⨯ Z̄ Ō ⊓ ▤ Ψ ⨯ V Ψ and you are to place the dog on a tripod. And have the dog raising its right paw. And write on the strip of papyrus these / names and what you wish: "IAŌ ASTŌ IŌPHĒ," and / you are to place the strip of papyrus on the tripod and on top of the strip you are to place the dog and / say these names many times. And so, after you have spoken the spell, the dog

233. For a discussion of these peculiar variants of the name of Israel, see R. Ganschinietz, "Israel," PRE 9 (1939):2234; Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism 95. Cf. PGM IV. 3034: Osrael; XXXVI. 259: Astrael.

234. Cf. Sword of Moses 324 n. 70 (see n. 216, above) for a parallel: a silver lamella is given to a cock to swallow, and the cock is then killed. [R.D.K.]

235. The excessive use of χρῶ and χρῆσον is strange. The translation of this sentence is tentative and little more than a paraphrase. [E.N.O.] Cf. the following section and also PGM I. 38; XII. 284.

236. The translation is based on the emended Greek in Preisendanz, but it differs from the German translation ("Erfolg hat aber auch ein Beisitzer . . .").

237. The translation tries to make sense of what appears to be a corrupt Greek text; it differs from the German translation (". . . den Namen eines Beliebigen geschrieben hast: 'Marsaboutarthe, werde mir . . .'"). See the apparatus ad loc.

238. The Greek is ambiguous at this point. Cf. Preisendanz's translation: "Denn in jeder Nacht beschäftigt er sich mit anderen."

hisses [or barks], and if it hisses, she is not coming.[239] Therefore address the spell to it again, / and if it barks, it is attracting her. Then open the door, and you will find her whom you wish at your doors. Let a censer stand beside the dog, and let frankincense be placed upon it / as you say the spell.

Spell: "Barking dog, I adjure you, Kerberos, by those who have hanged themselves, by the dead, by those who have died violently: / attract to me her, NN, whose mother is NN. I adjure you, Kerberos, by the holy head of the infernal gods. Attract to me her, NN, whose mother is NN, ZOUCH / ZOUKI TO PARY YPHĒBARMŌ ENŌR SEKEMI KRIOUDASEPHĒ TRIBEPSI: attract to me her, NN, whose mother is NN, to me, NN, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly."

And you are also to say / the spell for all occasions. But you are to do these things in a level, pure place.

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 1928–2005

Spell of Attraction of King Pitys over any skull cup. *His / prayer of petition to Helios: Stand facing the east and speak thus:

"I call upon you, lord Helios, and your holy angels on / this day, in this very hour: Preserve me, NN, for I am THĒNŌR, and you are holy angels, guardians of the ARDIMALECHA. And ORORŌ / MISRĒN NEPHŌ ADŌNAI AUEBŌTHI ABATHARAI THŌBEUA SOULMAI SOULMAITH ROUTREROUTĒN ŌPHREŌPHRI ŌLCHAMAŌTH OUTE SOUTĒATH MONTRO ELAT / CHOUMIOI LATHŌTH ŌTHETH, I beg you, lord Helios, hear me NN and grant me power / over the spirit of this man who died a violent death, from whose tent I hold [this], so that I may keep him with me, [NN] as helper and avenger for whatever business I crave from him."

/ At sunset the same man's prayer to Helios:

"Borne[240] on the breezes of the wand'ring winds,
Golden-haired Helios, who wield the flame's
Unresting fire, who turn in lofty paths
Around the great pole, / who create all things
Yourself which you again reduce to nothing.
From you, indeed, come elements which are
Arranged to suit your laws which nourish all
The world with its four yearly turning points.
Hear, blessed one, I call you who rule heav'n
And earth and Chaos and Hades, where dwell /
Daimons of men who once gazed on the light.
And even now I beg you, blessed one,
Unfailing one, the master of the world,
If you go to the depths of earth and reach
The regions of the dead, this daimon send
To move at midnight hours perforce at your Commands, / from whose tent I hold this. And let

239. As the text stands, it makes no sense. We should probably follow the suggestion of Preisendanz, who inserts "or he barks" ("oder bellt"), and add to the Greek some such phrase as ἢ ὑλακτεῖ which may have fallen out by haplography. For similar alternative conditions, cf. PGM IV. 131–37; VII. 613–16. [E.N.O.]

240. The dactylic hexameters are part of the reconstructed Hymn 4 (Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 239–40): vv. 1–17, 20–22, 18, 25, 23–24. For other versions and sections of Hymn 4, see PGM I. 315–27; IV. 436–61; VIII. 74–81. [E.N.O.]

Him tell to me (NN) whate'er my mind designs,
And let him tell me fully and with truth.
Let him be gentle, gracious, let him think
No thoughts opposed to me. And may you not
Be angry at my sacred chants. / But guard
That my whole body come to light intact;
Let him (NN) reveal to me the what and whence,
Whereby he now can render me his service
And at what time he serves as my assistant, /
For you yourself gave these for men to learn, lord.
Because I call upon your four-part name:
CHTHETHŌ NI LAILAM IAŌ ZOUCHE PIPTOĒ.
I call upon your name, / Horus,[241] which is
In number equal to the Moirai's names:
ACHAI PHŌTHŌTHŌ AIĒ IAĒ AI IAĒ AIĒ
IAŌ THŌTHŌ PHIACHA (36 letters).[242]
Be gracious unto me, O primal god,
O father of the world, self-gendered one.
/ After burning armara[243] and uncut frankincense, go home.

Enquiry:[244] Ivy with 13 leaves. Begin from the left side and write on them one by one with myrrh, and after putting on the wreath / say over them the same names. And over the skull cup place the same writing on the forehead with the proper words: "SOITHERCHALBAN OPHROUROR ERĒKISITHPHĒ (formula)[245] / IABE ZEBYTH LEGEMAS THMESTAS MESMYRA BAUANECHTHEN KAI LOPHŌTŌ BRĒLAX HARCHENTECHTHA APSOIER CHALBAN."

And the ink: Serpent's blood / and the soot of a goldsmith.

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 2006–2125

Pitys' spell of attraction:[246] Pitys to King Ostanes: greetings. Since you write to me on each occasion about the enquiry of skull cups, I have deemed it necessary to send you this process / as one which is worthy of admiration and able to please you greatly. And subsequently I will submit to you the process, and finally the black ink will be revealed.

Take the hide of an ass[247] and, after drying it / in shade, inscribe on it the figure which will be revealed and inscribe this spell in a circle: "AAMASI NOUTHI APHTHECHENBŌCH POUPAIEICHNERI TA LOUTHIANI SERANOMĒGRENTI EI BIL / LONOUCHICH EITA PHOR CHORTOMNOUTHI THRACH PHIBŌBI ANTERŌ PHOCHORTHAROCH EBOCH LESANOUACH PHEORŌBIS TRAION KŌBI INOUNIA SAPHŌBI CHIMNOUTHI ASRŌ / CHNOUPHNEN PHARMI BOLCHOSĒTH EPHOUKTERŌ ABDIDANPITAAU EAE BOL SACHY ACHCHERIMA EMINTO RŌŌRIA EN AMOUN AKREMPHTHO OUTRAUNEIL / LABOCH PHERACHI AMENBOL BĒCH OSTAOUA BEL-

241. Horus is identified with Helios; see ll. 988–89 below.

242. That is, thirty-six Greek letters.

243. For this material, see PGM IV. 1294 and n.

244. That is, the inquiry of the spirit of the dead man (l. 1950). See PGM IV. 2140–41; 2005–7.

245. Referring to the palindrome cited also in PGM IV. 1797–99.

246. ἀγωγή is a general term which sometimes, as here, indicates a spell whose primary purpose is not to "attract" for sexual purposes. The same noun, without a qualifying word, is the title of a "Love spell of attraction." For a parallel to the usage of this passage, cf., e.g., PGM IV. 2441. [E.N.O.]

247. The ass is associated with Seth/Typhon. See PGM IV. 259–60 and n.

THŌ; I adjure you, dead spirit, by the powerful and inexorable god and by his holy 2035 names, to stand beside me in the / coming night in whatever form you used to have, and inform me whether you have the power to perform the NN deed; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly!"

Then go quickly to where [someone] lies buried or where something has been 2040 discarded, if you do [not] have a buried body; / spread the hide under him at about sunset. Return [home], and he will actually be present and will stand beside you on 2045 that night. And he describes to you how he died, but first he tells you if / he has the power to do anything or to perform any service.

And take a leaf of flax and with the black ink which will be revealed to you, paint on it the figure of the goddess who will be revealed to you, and paint in a circle this 2050 spell (and place on his head / the leaf which has been spread out and wreathe him with black ivy, and he will actually stand beside you through the night in dreams, and he will ask you, saying, "Order whatever you wish, and I do it"): "PHOUBEL
2055 TAUTHY ALDE MINŌOURITHI / SENECHŌ CHELĒTHICHITIATH MOU CHŌ ARIANTA NARACHI MASKELLI (formula) AEBITHŌ ACHAIL CHAŌSOUNISOU SOUNIARTE-
2060 NŌPH ARCHEREPHTHOUMI / BOLPHAI ARŌCHŌ ABMENTHŌ PHORPHORBA CHNOUCHIOCHOIME; I adjure [you], dead spirit, by the Destiny of Destinies,[248] to 2065 come to me, NN, on this day, on this night, and / agree to the act of service for me. And if you don't, expect other chastisements."

And when he agrees, rise up immediately and take a roll of hieratic papyrus and write on it with the black ink which will be revealed to you the figure which will be 2070 revealed to you,[249] / and write in a circle this spell and offer it to him, and straightway he will attract, even if he is unmanageable, immediately without delaying a single day.

But often there will be no need for the leaf of flax, but in the second spell[250] the 2075 papyrus / sheet[251] is to be placed there after you have commanded the act of service for you. He attracts and causes one to be ill, and he sends dreams and restrains, and he obtains revelations by dreams as well. These are the things which this single spell
2080 accomplishes. Depending on what you are performing,[252] / alter only the passage with the usual items.[253] Most of the magicians, who carried their instruments[254] with them, even put them aside and used him as an assistant. And they accom-
2085 plished the preceding things with all dispatch. / For [the spell] is free of excessive verbiage, immediately carrying out as it does the preceding things with all ease.

Spell: "I say to you, chthonic daimon, for whom the magical material of this 2090 female (of this male) has been embodied on / this night: proceed to where this female (or this male) resides and bring her to me NN either during the middle of the night or quickly. Perform the NN deed because the holy god OSIRIS KMĒPHI

248. See on this concept PGM III. 120 and n.

249. The figure is not extant. See Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

250. This refers to a variant in another spell available to the author but not included in the PGM.

251. Preisendanz suggests, in the apparatus ad loc., that this sheet refers to the hide of the ass mentioned in IV. 2014.

252. Preisendanz follows the papyrus and reads πρός τό, τὸ πράσσεις, but this is surely impossible Greek. The easiest change is πρὸς τοῦτο ὃ πράσσεις, but the sense seems to require something like πρὸς ὅ τι ποτὲ πράσσεις, "for whatever you do," or "depending on what(ever) you do." [E.N.O.]

253. This is apparently a reference to the formulas given as κοινόν, κοινά found elsewhere in the PGM.

254. Probably this is a reference to instruments such as were found in Pergamon. See R. Wünsch, Antikes Zaubergerät aus Pergamon, Jahrbuch des Kaiserlich Deutschen Archäologischen Instituts, Ergänzungsheft 6 (Berlin: Reimer, 1905).

SRŌ[255] wishes and commands it of you. Fulfill, daimon, what / is written here. And after you have performed it, I will pay you a sacrifice. But if you delay, I will inflict on you chastisements which you cannot endure. And perform for me the NN deed, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly."

The black ink of the procedure / is this: The hide is inscribed with blood of an ass[256] from the heart of a sacrificial victim, with which is mixed the soot of a coppersmith. But the leaf of flax is inscribed with falcon's blood, with which is mixed the soot of a goldsmith. / But the leaf of the hieratic papyrus is inscribed with eel's blood, with which acacia is mixed.

Do these things in this manner and, once you have performed them, you may know with what a marvelous nature this process is endowed, since in all ease / it considers the implements as the assistant. But guard yourself with whatever protection you want.

And this is the figure[257] written on the hide: A lion-faced form of a man wearing a sash, holding in his right hand a staff, and on it let there be a serpent. / And around all his left hand let an asp be entwined, and from the mouth of the lion let fire breathe forth.

The figure written onto the leaf of flax is this: Hekate[258] with three heads and six hands, holding / torches in her hands, on the right sides of her face having the head of a cow; and on the left sides the head of a dog; and in the middle the head of a maiden with sandals bound on her feet.

And inscribed on the piece of papyrus: Osiris clothed / as the Egyptians show him.[259]

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 2125–39

A restraining seal for skulls that are not satisfactory [for use in divination], and also to prevent [them] from speaking or doing anything whatever of this [sort]:[260] Seal the mouth of the skull with dirt from the doors of [a temple] of Osiris / and from a mound [covering] graves. Taking iron from a leg fetter, work it cold and make a ring on which have a headless lion engraved. Let him have, instead of his head, a crown of Isis, and let him trample with his feet / a skeleton (the right foot should trample the skull of the skeleton). In the middle of these should be an owl-eyed cat with its paw on a gorgon's head; in a circle around [all of them?], these names: IADŌR INBA NICHAIOPLĒX BRITH.

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

255. The names come from the Egyptian and mean "Osiris, Good Daimon, great prince" (or "ram"). [R.K.R.]

256. For the application, see PGM IV. 2015, 2220. On the blood of the ass, see D. Wortmann, "Das Blut des Seth," ZPE 2 (1968): 227–30; also Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 276, commenting on De Is. et Os. 6, 353B.

257. For this figure, see Dieterich, Abraxas 53; Nilsson, GGR II, 499–501 with Tafel V, 2a and 2b.

258. For pictures of Hekate triformis on gemstones, see Bonner, SMA, nos. 64, 66; cf. no. 156; Delatte and Derchain, Les Intailles 189, nos. 252, 253, *254, *254 (bis); Mouterde, Glaive 67–71 (see above, n. 220).

259. This prescription is remarkable because it seems to have been made by a magician who was not an Egyptian. The Egyptian Osiris is presented here in his capacity as god of the dead. For his ability to send demons and spirits of the dead, cf. Pritchard, ANET 16, "The Contending of Horus and Seth," Faulkner, Ancient Egyptian Coffin Texts I, spell 335, pt. II. [R.K.R.]

260. Reading τουτω⟨ι⟩ with the papyrus, instead of Preisendanz's τουτω⟨ν⟩.

PGM IV. 2140–44

2140 Pitys the Thessalian's spell for questioning corpses:[261] On a flax leaf write these things: "AZĒL BALEMACHŌ" (12 letters).[262]

Ink: [Made] from red ochre, burnt myrrh, juice of fresh wormwood, evergreen, and flax. Write [on the leaf] and put it in the mouth [of the corpse].

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM IV. 2145–2240

2145 Divine assistance from three Homeric verses:[263]

"After saying this, he drove the solid-hoofed horses through the ditch."[264]

"and men gasping out their lives amid the terrible slaughter."[265]

2150 / "and they washed off in the sea the sweat that covered them."[266]

If a runaway carries these verses inscribed on an iron lamella,[267] he will never be 2155 found. Likewise, attach the same lamella / to someone on the point of death, and you will get an answer[268] to everything you ask him. Whenever anyone thinks he is under a spell, let him pronounce the verses while sprinkling with sea water and . . . 2160 against enchantments. A contestant with the / tablet stays undefeated, just as also a charioteer who carries the tablet along with a lodestone; and the same is true in court; also, these are the things for a gladiator to carry. Attach it to a criminal who 2165 has been executed, speak / the verses in his ear, and he will tell you everything you wish. Insert the lamella into his wound, and you will have a great blessing with regard to your superiors and masters and others as well, for you will have honor, 2170 / trust. It also keeps off daimons and wild animals. Everyone will fear you; in war you will be invulnerable; when you ask you will receive; you will enjoy favor; your life will change; and you will be loved by any woman or man you have contact 2175 with. / You will have honor, happiness; you will receive inheritances, have good fortune, be unaffected by potions and poison; you will break spells and conquer your enemies.

Here is the the formula to be spoken when you immerse the lamella.[269]

261. See PGM IV. 1990 and n.

262. That is, in Greek letters.

263. In the papyrus these three verses from Homer are written in exceptionally large letters. Cf. PGM IV. 470–74; 821–24, where magical power is ascribed to the same verses. See the note on PGM IV. 470.

264. Homer, Il. 10. 564. In Homer, the referent of "he" is Odysseus.

265. Homer, Il. 10. 521. The quotation includes only a portion of the Homeric sentence. "Men" is the object of "saw" in l. 520, and it is a kinsman of the slaughtered Rhesus who "saw." The text of Il. 10. 521 here and at PGM IV. 822 differs slightly, though not so as to offset the sense of that of PGM IV. 472.

266. Homer, Il. 10. 572. In Homer, the referent of "they" is Odysseus and Diomedes.

267. The use of iron lamellae (as opposed to those of lead, silver, gold, and tin) is comparatively rare in magic (but cf. PGM VII. 382). See the discussion by A. M. Tupet, La Magie dans la poésie latine (Paris: Les belles lettres, 1976) 39–43. An iron lamella engraved with magical words is housed in the Louvre; see A. Dain, Inscriptions grecques du Musée du Louvre: Les textes inédits (Paris: Les belles lettres, 1933) 108, no. 205. [R.D.K.]

268. The Greek verb rendered "you will get an answer to" could also mean "he will hear." Perhaps the former is the correct rendering, and the passage is expressive of the ancient notion that individuals on the point of death have prophetic power (see, e.g., Il. 16. 843–61, where the dying Patroclus prophesies the death of Hector; Il. 22. 355–66, where the dying Hector does the same of Achilles; Sophocles, Oed. Col. 605–28, 1370–96, 1516–55, where the aged Oedipus, his death approaching, delivers prophecies; and Virgil, Aen. 4. 607–29, where Dido utters a prophetic curse shortly before committing suicide. [H.M.]

269. Immersing the lamella is part of the consecration; see S. Eitrem, "Die magischen Gemmen und ihre Weihe," SO 19 (1939): 57–85.

The formula: / "NN, leave the sweet light and also render me whatever service I require of you whenever I call you (add the usual) because I conjure you by the gods of the underworld GOGGYLORYGCHE OMBROLIGMATE[270] THOĒRYSĒRIS. / Render me the service for which I summon you." Speak this formula that invokes all supernatural powers.

Consecrating the plaque: Go, I say, into a clean room. Set up a table, on which you are to place a clean linen cloth and flowers of the season. / Then sacrifice a white cock, placing beside it 7 cakes, 7 wafers, 7 lamps; pour a libation of milk, honey, wine, and olive oil.

Here is the formula to be spoken when you consecrate the plaque: "Come to me! You who are master above the earth and below the earth, / who look to the west and the east and gaze upon the south and the north, O master of all, Aion of Aions! You are the ruler of the universe, Ra, Pan,[271] (H)ARPENCHNOUBI / BRINTATĒNŌPHRI BRISKYLMA AROUZAR BAMESEN KRIPHI NIPTOUMI CHMOUMAŌPHI IA IOY IYŌ AII OYŌ AEĒIOYŌ BAUBŌ BAUBŌ PHORBA PHORBA OREOBAZAGRA ŌYOIĒEA ER." Speak too the formula that invokes Necessity: "MASKELLI (formula) IARCHTHA ECHTHABA CHOIX IABOUCH IABŌCH," and the one that / invokes all supernatural powers.

So much for the ritual of consecration.[272] Here are the operations for specific purposes:

For an oracle: Write as follows on a bay leaf in myrrh mixed with blood from someone who has died by violence: "ABRAA, you are the one who reveals all things MARIAPHRAX." / Then put it under the lamella.

For wrecking chariots: Burn garlic and a snake's slough as an offering, and write on a tin plaque:[273] "NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH BEU ERBĒTH PAKERBĒTH and ŌNOUPH; overturn him, NN, and his / companions." Bury the tablet for 3 days in the grave of someone who died untimely; he will come to life for as long as it stays there.

For spells that restrain: Write on a seashell in the ink[274] mentioned below, adding / Typhon's blood.[275] Then you are to bury the shell in the tomb of someone who died untimely, when the moon stands in opposition to the sun. What you are to write is the 3 Homeric verses,[276] and the following: "IŌ BOLCHOSĒTH IAKOUBIAI IŌ PATATHNAX / ERBĒTH IŌ PAKERBĒTH." The lamella is to be carried, as in the examples at the beginning.

For popularity spells and love spells: Write "MYRI MYRI NES MACHESNŌN" on a gold tablet, after putting it under / the iron one for 3 days. When you remove it, carry it, keeping yourself clean all the while.

For fetching spells. Burn roses and sumac as an offering; take myrtle leaves and write on them in ink: "STHENEPIŌ ARRŌRIPHRASIS YYYY / IIII fetch her, NN, for him, NN." Recite the formula[277] and put the magical substance under the lamella.

270. This and the preceding voces magicae can be translated and mean, "you with the round snout," and "you who lap rain." [H.M.]

271. The interpretation of the god Pan as Aion and as god of the All is based on the assumed etymology of the name (cf. also PGM XIII. 980: ἓν καὶ τὸ πᾶν, "One and the All"). See F. Brommer, "Pan," PRE.S 8 (1956): 1005–6.

272. See above on PGM IV. 2186.

273. That is, the iron tablet that has been consecrated, not the tin plaque just described.

274. That is, the myrrh ink mentioned at the end of the spell.

275. For the blood of Seth/Typhon, see PGM IV. 2100 and n.

276. See for these verses PGM IV. 2145–51.

277. Presumably, this formula is the one previously mentioned ("that invokes all supernatural pow-

You are to add some single-stemmed wormwood to the myrrh ink. Let the lamella 2240 be worn on a cord; get it from the places where / the woolworkers have their shops.
*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM IV. 2241–2358

 Document to the waning moon.[278]

Spell:

"Hail,[279] Holy Light, Ruler of Tartaros,
Who strike with rays; hail, Holy Beam, who whirl
Up out of darkness and subvert all things
2245 With aimless plans. / I'll call and may you hear
My holy words since awesome Destiny
Is ever subject to you. Thrice-bound goddess,
Set free yourself. Come, rage against him, NN.
For Klotho will spin out her threads for you.
Assent, O blessed one, ere I hold you
2250 As hateful, ere I seize your / sword-armed fist,[280]
And ere you grieve, O god in maiden form.
You'll, willy-nilly, do the NN task
Because I know your lights in full detail,
And I am your priest of good offices, /
2255 Your minister and fellow witness, Maid.
What must take place, this you cannot escape.
You'll, willy-nilly, do the NN task.
I now adjure you by this potent night,
In which your light is last to fade away,
2260 In which / a dog opens, closes not, its mouth,
In which the bar of Tartaros is opened,
In which forth rages Kerberos, armed with A thunderbolt, Bestir yourself, Mene,
Who need the solar nurse, guard of the dead, /
2265 You I implore, Maid, by your stranger beams,[281]
You I implore,[282] O cunning, lofty, swift,
O crested one, who draw swords, valiant,
Healer, with forethought, far-famed, goading one,
2270 Swift-footed, brave, crim/son, Darkness, Brimo,
Immortal, heedful, Persian, pastoral,
Alkyone, gold-crowned, the elder goddess,
Shining, sea-goddess, ghostly, beautiful,
The one who shows, skiff-holder, aiming well, ers"), ll. 2186, 2204–5. The "magical substance" is usually material taken from the person to be "fetched." See Glossary, s.v. "Material, magical."

---

278. The correct reading here is Δέλτος ἀποκρουστικὴν πρὸς Σελήνην. [E.N.O.]

279. These iambic trimeters, many of which are metrically faulty or even collapse almost completely, have been adapted as the reconstructed Hymn 17; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 250–53. The text is frequently uncertain and the translation is tentative. [E.N.O.]

280. The magician claims later to have done so (l. 2328).

281. For ξεινη τ' Αυγη read ξεινην αυγην; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 251, apparatus ad loc.

282. The conclusion of the line is lost. Here a long list of what seem to be epithets, now mostly corrupt, has been inserted. The translation usually follows the conjectures proposed by Heitsch, although many are questionable.

Self-gendered, wearing / headband, vigorous,
Leader of hosts, O goddess of Dodona,
Of Ida,[283] e'er with sorrows fresh, wolf-formed,
Denounced as infamous, destructive, quick,
Grim-eyed, shrill-screaming, Thasian, Mene,
O Nethermost one, beam-embracer, savior,
World-wide, dog-shaped, / spinner of Fate, all-giver,
Long-lasting, glorious, helper, queen, bright,
Wide-aimer, vigorous, holy, benign,
Immortal, shrill-voiced, glossy-locked, in bloom,
Divine, with golden face, delighting / men,
Minoan, goddess of childbirth, Theban,
Long-suffering, astute, malevolent.
With rays for hair, shooter of arrows, maid;
I[284] truly know that you are full of guile
And are deliverer from fear; as Hermes,
The Elder, chief of all magicians, I
Am Isis' father.[285] Hear: EŌ PHORBA
BRIMŌ SACHMI NEBOUTO / SOUALĒTH.
For I have hidden this[286] magic symbol
Of yours, your sandal, and possess your key.
I opened the bars of Kerberos, the guard
Of Tartaros, / and premature night I
Plunged in darkness. I whirl the wheel for you;
The cymbals I don't touch.[287] Gaze at yourself:
Lo! As you see yourself, you'll wonder at
The mirror, love charm of the Nile's goddess,[288]
Until you cast the dark light from your eyes.
What you must do, / this you must not escape.
You'll, willy-nilly, do this task for me,
Mare, Kore, dragoness, lamp, lightning flash,
Star, lion, she-wolf, AĒŌ ĒĒ.
A sieve, an old utensil, is my symbol,[289]

283. The papyrus reads ειδεα, which Wessely, whom Preisendanz follows, emends to Ἰδαία. This epithet means "belonging to Ida," a mountain range in Crete or Phrygia. Cf. PGM V. 455–56; LXX. 14, and Betz, "Fragments," 293 with n. 30; H. von Geisau, "Idaia," KP 2 (1979): 1337.

284. Here the spell that preceded the list of epithets is resumed. Some connective material may have been lost. [M.S.]

285. The elder Hermes is the Egyptian Hermes Trismegistos (Thoth) who was thought to be older than the Greek god. On Hermes/Thoth as the father of Isis, see Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 3, 352A–B, and 12, 355F–356A, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 263. See also PGM IV. 99–101, where Thoth is the father. On the topic, see also Reitzenstein, Poimandres 136 n. 4; Nock and Festugière, Hermès Trismégiste III, p. cxxvii. [R.K.R.]

286. Reading τό for τοῦτο. That the symbol was the sandal is shown by the later reference to it in ll. 2334–35. The "symbols" of the gods were thought not to be mere signs of them but objects and formulas by which they could be controlled. [M.S.] See also Betz, "Fragments," 291.

287. Reading ⟨δ'⟩οὐχ and understanding the negative to refer to both verbs, as suggested by L. Koenen. The magician threatens to strike: he will not perform actions that would prevent the impending eclipse. [M.S.]

288. Reading Νειλαω⟨ι⟩ Ἰ⟨σ⟩ιδος χαριν κατοπτρ⟨οι οι⟩. For ἀθρέω with ἐν, see the Etymologicum Gudianum, ed. Sturzius, 13. 20. [M.S.]

289. Perhaps "you" instead of "my" should be read (also l. 2311). Cf. the similar list in PGM VII. 780–85. [M.S.]

And one morsel of flesh, a piece / of coral,
Blood of a turtledove, hoof of a camel,
Hair of a virgin cow, the seed of Pan,
Fire from a sunbeam, colt's foot, spindel tree,
Boy love, bow drill, a gray-eyed woman's body
With legs outspread, a black sphinx's / pierced vagina:
All of these are the symbol of my power.
The bond of all necessity will be Sundered, and Helios will hide your light
At noon, and Tethys will o'erflow the world,[290]
Which you inhabit. Aion's / quaking; heaven
Will be disturbed; Kronos, in terror at
Your pole[291] o'erpowered by force, has fled to Hades
As overseer of the dead below.
The Moirai throw away your endless thread,
Unless you check my magic's winged shaft,[292] /
Swiftest to reach the mark. For to escape
The fate of my words is impossible:
Happen it must.[293] Don't force yourself[294] to hear
The symbols forward and then in reverse
Again. You'll, willy-nilly, do what's needed.
Ere useless light becomes your fate, do what /
I say, O Maid, ruler of Tartaros.
I've bound your pole with Kronos' chains, and with Awesome compulsion I hold fast your thumb.
Tomorrow does not come unless my will
Is done. / To Hermes, leader of the gods,
You promised[295] to contribute to this rite.
Aye, in my power I hold you. Hear, you who Watch and are watched. I look at you, you look
At me. Then, too, I'll speak the sign to you:
Bronze sandal of her / who rules Tartaros,
Her fillet, Key, wand, iron wheel, black dog,
Her thrice-locked door, her burning hearth, her shadow,
Depth, fire, the governess of Tartaros,
Fearing the Furies, those prodigious daimons,[296] /
You've come? You're here? Be wroth, O maid, at him,
NN, foe of heav'n's gods, of Helios-
Osiris[297] and of Isis, his bedmate.

290. Reading κλυζησει for κουφισει. Helios' light is the moon's because the moon shines with it (see above). He will hide it in the south, because that is where the sun goes to hide in the winter. Tethys is the goddess of the primordial waters. [M.S.]

291. Reading πολον for σου νουν with H. van Herwerden, "De carminibus e papyris aegyptiacis erutis et eruendis," Mnemosyne, n.s. 16 (1888): 342. [M.S.]

292. Understanding μαγειης τῆς ἐμῆς as equivalent to the dative (emendation may not be necessary), and reading ἀναγκασ⟨θ⟩ῆς. [M.S.]

293. Reading ἦν δεῖ γενέσθαι for ὃ δεῖ γενέσθαι. [M.S.]

294. Reading σα⟨υ⟩τήν with Preisendanz, ad. loc. [M.S.]

295. Reading ἐννευσα for ἐνευσας. [M.S.]

296. Reading nominatives for accusatives. [M.S.]

297. Although the link between Helios and Osiris is possible through the connection with Sarapis,

As I instruct you, hurl him to this ill
Because, Kore, I know your good and great /
Majestic names, by which heav'n is illumined,
And earth drinks dew and is pregnant; from these
The universe increases and declines;
EUPHORBA PHORBA PHORBOREOU PHORBA PHORBOR PHORBOR PHORBOR BORBORPHA ĒRPHOR / PHORBAIŌ PHORBOR PHORBOR BOROPH PHORPHOR BOR PHORBOR AŌ IŌĒ PHORBORPHOR EUPHOR BOPHOR EUOIEŌ PHŌTH IŌPHŌTH IŌPHŌTH PHŌTHIŌPH AŌŌŌTHŌ ŌAI IŌ EŌŌIŌ HAHAHA EE ĒĒ IOYY ŌŌŌ OYYYY AEĒIOUŌ / YYY mistress, Harken-techtha,[298] who sits beside Lord Osiris, Michael, Archangel of angels, the god who lights the way, perform for me."

Protective charm of the procedure . . .

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. The translation is based on the edition in Preisendanz, but several emendations by Morton Smith have been accepted (see the notes); see his article "The Hymn to the Moon, PGM IV 2242–2355," Proceedings of the XVI International Congress of Papyrology, ed. L. Koenen et al. (Chico, Cal.: Scholars Press, 1981) 643–54.

PGM IV. 2359–72

Business spell: Take orange beeswax and / the juice of the aeria plant and of ground ivy and mix them and fashion a figure of Hermes[299] having a hollow bottom, grasping in his left hand a herald's wand and in his right a small bag. Write on hieratic papyrus these names, and you will see continuous business: / "CHAIŌCHEN OUTIBILMEMNOUŌTH ATRAUICH. Give income and business to this plase, because Psentebeth[300] lives here." Put the papyrus inside the figure and fill in the hole with the same beeswax. Then deposit it in a wall, at an inconspicuous place, / and crown him on the outside, and sacrifice to him a cock, and make a drink offering of Egyptian wine, and light for him a lamp that is not colored red.

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM IV. 2373–2440

Charm for acquiring business and for calling in customers[301] to a workshop or house or wherever you put it. / By having it, you will become rich, you will be successful. For Hermes made this for the wandering Isis.[302] The charm is marvelous and is called "the little beggar."

Take beeswax that has not been heated, which is known as bee glue, and fashion / a man having his right hand in the position of begging and having in his left a bag and a staff. Let there be around the staff a coiled snake, and let him be dressed in a girdle and standing on a sphere that has / a coiled snake, like Isis. Stand it up and the older link between Osiris and Re may be of influence here. See A. Piankoff, The Litany of Re (New York: Bollingen, 1964) 19–21. [R.K.R.]

---

298. Harkentechtha is a male god (see Glossary s.v.); thus he is not to be addressed by "mistress," a title belonging to the moon goddess of the preceding hymn. See also PGM IV. 2004 and n.

299. Here Hermes is portrayed as the god of merchants and of commerce. See PGM V. 390–99.

300. This name means "the son of the female falcon." Cf. Jacoby in Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc., who fails to recognize the female definite article, a fact that precludes the identification with Horus, the falcon god. [R.K.R.]

301. LSJ renders κατακλητικόν (spell) "for invoking," but Eitrem, in Preisendanz's apparatus, is probably right in translating "charm for calling in customers." See on this point Maltomini, Studi Classici e Orientali 29 (1979): 102; see also PGM CXXIV. 7.

302. The wandering of Isis refers to her as the widow of Osiris searching for his body. See Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 14, 356D–E; 39, 366F, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 315, 452. For wax figurines associated with the cult of Isis, see Diodorus Sic. I. 21. 5–6 and the commentary by A. Burton, Diodorus Siculus Book I, EPRO 29 (Leiden: Brill, 1972): 93–94.

erect it in a single block of hollowed-out juniper, and have an asp covering the top as a capital.[303] Fashion him during the new moon and consecrate / it in a celebrating mood, and read aloud the spell over his members, after you have divided him into three sections—repeating the spell four times for each member. For each member write on strips of papyrus made from a priestly scroll, with ink of cinnabar, juice of wormwood, and myrrh. When you have set it / up high on the place you have chosen, sacrifice to it a wild [ass][304] with a white forehead and offer it whole and roast the inward parts over the wood of willow and thus eat it.

Now this is what is to be written on [each] strip of papyrus. The spell on the / bag: "EPH EROUCHIŌ CHŌRAI DARIDA MĒTHEUEI ABACHTHIE EMESIE ECHENĒ IAE IEN EBAPS PHNEŌA ENTHŌNICHAENTHA TROMOCHMOUSŌ THERAŌCHEIN SASI SAMACHIŌTH OUASA AMAKARALA KAIŌS / LASOI." Upon the head: "ŌAI IĒ ĒIŌ NAŌ OULABETHEN THERMATH ENESIE." On the neck: "THALAA MEMARACHŌ CHETH THROU PHEN PHTHAI." On the right shoulder: "ĒMAA CHNA THOUE BŌLERI." On / the left: "ARIAŌ IĒE SYPSO ITHEN BACHTHIPHĒRPSOI THENIBON." On the belly: "AMAMAMAR AIII OU MAMŌ MOU OMBA." On the sacred bone: "IANOA PHTHOUTHO OTHOM MATHATHOU." / On the right thigh: "ARIN THEA RAGNI MĒTHETHIŌ CHRĒ IĒ IĒ ERE." On the left thigh: "ĒI ĒIN YEAIŌ ERENPS TEPHĒT PARAOU ANĒI." On the private parts: "ĒERŌTHĒSONĒEN / THNIBITH EUECHEN." On the right shin: "MIANIKOUĒI BIOUS." On the left: "CHNOU TOUŌYMOUCHOS ONIŌ." Under the sole of the right foot: "OURANION."[305] On the left: / "ANOUPSIE." On the back of the buttocks: "ETEMPSIS PSPHOPS IAIAĒĒIOO." On the snake the name "Agathos Daimon," which is, as Epaphroditus[306] says, the following: / "PHRĒ ANŌI PHŌRCHŌ PHYYY RORPSIS OROCHŌŌI," but as on the paper which I found the spell was changed thus: "Harponknouphi" (formula).

This is the spell for the rite: "I receive / you as the cowherd who has his camp toward the south, I receive you for the widow and the orphan.[307] Therefore, give me favor, work for my business. Bring to me silver, gold, clothing, / much wealth for the good of it."

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM IV. 2441–2621

Spell of attraction:[308] (implements: those for a lunar burnt offering); it attracts those who are uncontrollable and require no magical material[309] and who come in one day. It inflicts sickness excellently and destroys powerfully, sends dreams beau-

303. The clause ὀρυκτόν . . . κεκρυμμένον is obscure and not clearly related to its context. Preisendanz understands the snake to be buried in the basket which is put under the figure. The reference is apparently to the cista mystica which contained the snake and was carried on the head. See Apuleius, Met. 11. 11 and Griffiths, The Isis-Book 222–26; H. Leisegang, "The Mystery of the Serpent," in The Mysteries: Papers from the Eranos Yearbooks, Bollingen Series XXX. 2 (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1978), 194–260.

304. The papyrus has only here and in l. 3148 αγριον which Jacoby emends to ⟨ὀν⟩ἄγριον, "wild ass." Eitrem suggests ἄγριον κριόν, "wild ram."

305. In Greek, "heavenly."

306. Apparently the papyrus refers to another author by the name Epaphroditos, but nothing is known about him.

307. Cf. l. 2375. See also Reitzenstein, Poimandres 31. The widow and orphan refer to Isis and Horus; cf. PGM III. 542–43. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 450. For the importance of hospitality in the myth of the wandering Isis, cf. C. E. Sander-Hansen, Die Texte der Metternichstele (Copenhagen: Munksgaard, 1956) 41–42; Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts 59–62. [R.K.R.]

308. This spell is similar to, and perhaps even parallel to, PGM IV. 2622–2784.

309. The translation of these adjectives is tentative and follows Preisendanz's German translation, tifully, accomplishes dream revelations marvelously and in its many / demonstrations has been marveled at for having no failure in these matters.

Burnt offering: Pachrates,[310] the prophet of Heliopolis, revealed it to the emperor Hadrian, revealing the power of his own divine magic. / For it attracted in one hour; it made someone sick in 2 hours; it destroyed in 7 hours, sent the emperor himself dreams as he thoroughly tested the whole truth of the magic within his power. And marveling at the prophet, / he ordered double fees to be given to him.

Take a field mouse[311] and deify it in spring water. And take two moon beetles[312] and deify them in river water, and take a river crab and fat of a dappled goat that is virgin and dung of a dog- / faced baboon, 2 eggs of an ibis, 2 drams of storax, 2 drams of myrrh, 2 drams of crocus, 4 drams of Italian galingale, 4 drams of uncut frankincense, a single onion. Put all these things onto a mortar with the mouse and the remaining items / and, after pounding thoroughly, place in a lead box and keep for use. And whenever you want to perform a rite, take a little, make a charcoal fire, go up on a lofty roof, and make the offering as you say / this spell at moonrise, and at once she comes.

Spell:[313] "Let all the darkness of clouds be dispersed for me, and let the goddess AKTIŌPHIS shine for me, and let her hear my holy voice. For I come / announcing the slander[314] of NN, a defiled and unholy woman, for she has slanderously brought your holy mysteries to the knowledge of men. She, NN, is the one, [not] I, who says, 'I have seen the greatest / goddess, after leaving the heavenly vault, on earth without sandals, sword in hand, and [speaking] a foul name.' It is she, NN, who said, 'I saw [the goddess] drinking blood.' She, NN, said it, not I, AKTIŌPHIS ERESCHIGAL / NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH PHORPHORBA SATRAPAMMŌN CHOIRIXIĒ, flesh eater. Go to her NN and take away her sleep and put a burning heat in her soul,[315] punishment and frenzied passion in her thoughts, / and banish her from every place and from every house, and attract her here to me, NN."

After saying these things, sacrifice. Then raise loud groans and go backward as you descend. And she will come at once. But pay attention to the one being attracted / so that you may open the door for her; otherwise the spell will fail.[316]

For causing illness: Use these spells, adding, "Make her, NN, whom NN bore, ill."

And for destroying: Say, "Draw out her breath, Mistress, from the nostrils of her, NN."

---

except for μονοημέρους which is rendered in analogy to μονόωρος in ll. 2450–51. Cf. also the parallels in PGM IV. 2071–72; XXXVI. 361.

310. The prophet Pachrates may be identical with Pankrates described by Lucian, Philops. 34. See K. Preisendanz, "Pachrates," PRE 18 (1942):2071–74; Nock, Essays I, 183–84.

311. On the role of the mouse in magic, see W. R. Dawson, "The Mouse in Egyptian and Later Medicine," JEA 10 (1924):83–86.

312. On the moon beetle and its association with the moon, see Abt, Apologie 126–27.

313. Although only the general term for "spell" is used here (λόγος), the contents show clearly that the passage is a "slander spell" (διαβολή). Cf. PGM IV. 2622 in the title of a spell. [E.N.O.]

314. For this slander, cf. ll. 2574–2621, below. The projection of a ritual violation onto the party to be affected by the spell, esp. the statement, "It is NN who said that. It is not I who said that," is also found in numerous older Egyptian texts. See F. Lexa, La Magie dans l'Égypte antique I (Paris: Geuthner, 1925) 56–58; Pritchard, ANET 327 and note b. In PGM cf. also III. 5, 114–15; VII. 593–619. On the whole subject, see S. Eitrem, "Die rituelle ΔΙΑΒΟΛΗ," SO 2 (1924):43–61. [R.K.R.]

315. On the "burning of the soul," see R. Ganszyniec, "Das Märchen der Pythia," Byzantinisch-Neugriechische Jahrbücher 1 (1920):170–71. Cf. also Glossary, s.v. "Soul."

316. Differently Preisendanz, who understands: "otherwise she will die."

/ For sending dreams: Say, "Become like the god whom she worships."

For dream revelations: Say, "Stand beside me, Mistress, and reveal to me about the NN matter." And she will stand beside you and will tell everything without deception.

Do not therefore perform the rite rashly, and do not perform / it unless some dire necessity arises for you. It also possesses a protective charm against your falling, for the goddess is accustomed to make airborne those who perform this rite unprotected by a charm and to hurl them from aloft down to the ground. So consequently / I have also thought it necessary to take the precaution of a protective charm so that you may perform the rite without hesitation. Keep it secret.

Take a hieratic papyrus roll and wear it around your right arm with which you make the offering. And these are the / things written on it: "MOULATHI CHERNOUTH AMARŌ MOULIANDRON, guard me from every evil daimon, whether an evil male or female." Keep it secret, son.[317]

The second spell, after you make / the first sacrifice, but it is better for you to say it before you make the offering. This is the spell attached to the first:

"[I offer you][318] this spice, O child of Zeus,
Dart-shooter, Artemis, Persephone,
Shooter of deer, night-shining, / triple-sounding,
Triple-voiced, triple-headed Selene,
Triple-pointed, triple-faced, triple-necked,
And goddess of the triple ways, who hold
Untiring flaming fire in triple baskets,
And you who oft frequent the triple way
And rule the triple decades with three forms
/ And flames and dogs. From toneless throats you send
A dread, sharp cry when you, O goddess, have Raised up an awful sound with triple mouths.
Hearing your cry, all worldly things are shaken:
The nether gates and Lethe's / holy water
And primal Chaos and the shining chasm
Of Tartaros. At it ev'ry immortal
And ev'ry mortal man, the starry mountains,
Valleys and ev'ry tree and roaring rivers,
And e'en the restless sea, / the lonely echo,
And daimons through the world, shudder at you,
O blessed one, when they hear your dread voice.
Come here to me, goddess of night, beast-slayer,
Come and be at my love spell of attraction,
Quiet and frightful, and having your meal
Amid the graves. / And heed my prayers, Selene,
Who suffer much, who rise and set at night,
O triple-headed, triple-named MĒNĒ
MARZOUNĒ, fearful, gracious-minded, and Persuasion.[319] Come to me, horned-faced, light-bringer,

317. The term "son" seems to indicate the magician's apprentice. Cf. similar references in PGM I. 193; XIII. 214, 313, 343, 719, 755, etc. [E.N.O.]

318. These dactylic hexameters, with the usual mixture of accurate and faulty meter, also form the reconstructed Hymn 20, for which see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 257–59. [E.N.O.]

319. For the personified Persuasion (Peithō) as an attribute and companion of Aphrodite cf. PGM

Bull-shaped, horse-faced goddess, who howl doglike; /
Come here, she-wolf, and come here now, Mistress
Of night and chthonic realms, holy, black-clad,
'Round whom the star-traversing nature of
The world revolves whene'er you wax too great.
You have established ev'ry worldly thing,
For you engendered everything on earth
And from / the sea and ev'ry race in turn
Of winged birds who seek their nests again.
Mother of all, who bore Love, Aphrodite,
Lamp-bearer, shining and aglow, Selene,
Star-coursing, heav'nly, torch-bearer, fire-breather, /
Woman four-faced, four-named, four-roads' mistress.
Hail, goddess, and attend your epithets,
O heav'nly one, harbor goddess, who roam
The mountains and are goddess of the crossroads;
O nether one, goddess of depths, eternal,
Goddess of dark, come to my / sacrifices.
Fulfill for me this task, and as I pray
Give heed to me, Lady, I ask of you."

Use this for the spells of coercion, for it can accomplish anything, but do not use it frequently to Selene / unless the procedure which you are performing is worthy of its power. For the hostile offerings, when some slander is involved, use the following stele, speaking thus:

This is the 3rd coercive spell:

"She,[320] NN, is burning for you, /
Goddess, some dreadful incense[321]
And dappled goat's fat, blood and filth,
The menstrual flow of virgin
Dead, heart of one untimely dead,
The magical material
Of dead dog, woman's embryo,
Fine-ground wheat husks, / sour refuse,
Salt, fat of dead doe, and mastic,
And myrtle, dark bay, barley,
And crab claws, sage, rose, fruit pits and
A single onion, / garlic,
Fig meal, a dog-faced baboon's dung,
And egg of a young ibis.
And this is sacrilege! She placed
Them on your altar; she set
The flaming fire / to juniper
Wood strips and slays a seahawk
For you, a vulture and a mouse,
Your greatest myst'ry, goddess.

LII. 15, where the connection is not clear, however, and esp. Pindar, Pyth. 4; Aeschylus, Suppl. passim.

320. The meter of these lines is iambic tetrameter acatalectic. The passage is one version of the reconstructed Hymn 19; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 255–57. The second version, which differs in a number of places, appears just below in PGM IV. 2643–74. [E.N.O.]

321. On the accusations, see PGM IV. 2475 and n.

She said, too, that these deeds of pain
You had performed so harshly:
For she said that you slew a man
And drank the / blood of this man
And ate his flesh, and she says that
Your headband is his entrails
That you took all his skin and put
It into your vagina,
[That you drank] sea falcon's blood and
That your food was dung beetle.
But Pan before your very eyes
Shot forth his seed unlawful. /
A dog-faced baboon now is born
Whene'er there's menstrual cleansing.
But you, AKTIŌPHIS, Mistress,
Selene, Only Ruler,
Swift Fortune of daimons and gods:
NEBOUTOSOALĒTH IŌI LOIMOU LALON, in Syriac: ĒTARONKON BYTHOU PNOUSAN / KATHINBERAO ESTOCHETH ORENTHA AMELCHERIBIOUTH SPHNOUTHI,
Brand her, NN, the lawless one,
With bitter retributions,
Whom I again will duly charge
To you in hostile manner.
I call you, triple-faced goddess
Mene, O light-beloved
Hermes / and Hekate at once,
Male-female child together;
MOUPHÔR PHORBA, Queen Brimo, dreaded and lawful, and Dardania, All-seeing One, come here, IŌIĒ, Virgin, Goddess of crossroads and bull snake are you, Nymph and mare bitch and head / -nodder and Minoan and powerful, EALANINDŌ, come here, ATEĒS ENIDELIDIMA, Mistress Phaiara, MĒDIXA EMITHĒNIŌ, come to me, INDEOMĒ, come here, MEGAPHTHĒ; she will come here. Attract her NN to me very quickly, / I myself will clearly convict her of everything, goddess, which she had done while sacrificing to you."
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 2622–2707

Slander spell[322] to Selene,[323] which works for everything and every rite. For it attracts in the same hour, it sends dreams, it causes sickness, produces / dream visions,[324] removes enemies when you reverse the spell, however you wish. But above all be protected by a protective charm and do not approach the procedure[325] carelessly or else the goddess is angry.[326]

322. See on this term PGM IV. 2475 and n.

323. For a similar slander spell, see PGM IV. 2471–92.

324. The papyrus has ονειρο|θαυπτει. For conjectures, cf. the apparatus ad loc., and for parallels PGM IV. 3172, 3197. See also K. Preisendanz, "Miszellen zu den Zauberpapyri," WSt 42 (1920): 31–32.

325. Here πραγματεία seems to be a variant for the usual expression πρᾶγμα, "rite."

326. The present tense is strange here; it should perhaps be read μηνιεῖ, "will be angry." Preisendanz's translation has a future ring, too ("sonst zürnt die Göttin").

/ Preparation of the procedure's protective charm: Take a magnet that is breathing and fashion it in the form of a heart, and let there be engraved on it Hekate lying about the heart, like a little crescent. Then carve the twenty-lettered spell that is all vowels, / and wear it around your body.

The following name is what is written: "AEYŌ ĒIE ŌA EŌĒ EŌA ŌI EŌI." For this spell is completely capable of everything. But perform this ritual in a holy manner, not frequently / or lightly, especially to Selene. At any rate, burn upon pieces of juniper wood an offering of Cretan storax and begin the spell.

The spell which is to be spoken:

"For[327] you the woman NN burns
Some hostile incense, goddess;
The fat of dappled goat, and blood, /
Defilement, embryo of
A dog, the bloody discharge of
A virgin dead untimely,
A young boy's heart,[328] with barley mixed
In vinegar, both salt and
A deer's horn, mastic, myrtle and Dark bay, and mix at random,
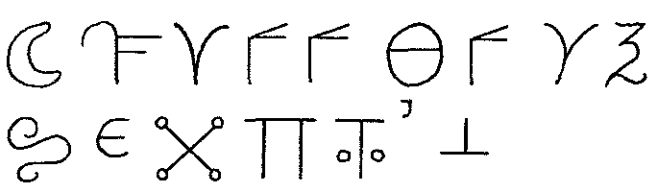
And crab claws, / sage, rose, pits for you
And single onion, garlic,
Mouse pellets, dog-faced baboon's blood,
And egg of a young ibis—
And what is sacrilege, she placed
These on your wooden altar
Of juniper. She, NN, / said
That you had done this matter;
For she said that you slew a man
And drank the blood of this man
And ate his flesh, and she says that
Your headband is his entrails,
That you took all his skin and put
It into your vagina, /
[That you drank] blood of a sea falcon
And your food was dung beetle.
And Pan before your very eyes
Shot forth his seed unlawful:
A dog-faced baboon now is born
From all the menstrual cleansing,
But you, AKTIŌPHIS, Mistress,
Selene, / Only Ruler,
The Fortune of daimons and gods,
NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH IŌ IMI BOULLON ENOURTILAIĒ (otherwise: NOUMILLON

327. The meter of these lines is iambic tetrameter acatelectic. The passage is one version of the reconstructed Hymn 19; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 255–57. The second version, which differs in a number of places, appears above in PGM IV. 2574–2610. [E.N.O.]

328. On rituals involving a boy's heart, see A. Henrichs, Die Phoinikika des Lollianos. Fragmente eines neuen griechischen Romans, Papyrologische Texte und Abhandlungen 14 (Bonn: Habelt, 1972): 32–37, 69–72.

ESORTILĒS BATHYPNOU SANKANTHARA MIBERATH ENTOCHE THŌ RENTHA IMOUĒ SORENTHA).



Mark her, NN, the lawless one,
With bitter / retributions,
Whom I again will duly charge
To you in hostile manner
(Of all unlawful things that she Has said against the goddess
Detail as many as you want),
For by the spell she forces
Even the rocks to burst asunder."

This, then, is the beneficent offering / which you sacrifice on the first and second day (but on the third day, with the coercive spell also sacrifice the offering that is coercive). The beneficent offering, then, is: Uncut frankincense, bay, myrtle, fruit pit, stavesacre, / cinnamon leaf, kostos. Pound all these together and blend with Mendesian[329] wine and honey, and make pills the size of beans.

The coercive offering: When you say the foregoing coercive spell / on the third day, also make an offering: it is a field mouse, fat of a virgin dappled goat, magic material of a dog-faced baboon, egg of an ibis, river crab, a perfect moon beetle, single-stemmed wormwood picked at sunrise,[330] magic material of a dog, / a single clove of garlic. Blend with vinegar. Make pills and stamp with a completely iron ring, completely tempered, with a Hekate[331] and the name BARZOU PHERBA.

The protective charm which you must wear: / Onto lime wood write with vermilion this name: "EPOKŌPT KŌPTO BAI BAITOKARAKŌPTO KARAKŌPTO CHILOKŌPTO BAI (50 letters). Guard me from every daimon of the air / on the earth and under the earth, and from every angel and phantom and ghostly visitation and enchantment, me NN." Enclose it in a purple skin, hang it around your neck and wear it. /

A protective charm on a silver leaf:[332]

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 2708–84

Another love spell of attraction: Take some Ethiopian cumin and fat of a dappled virgin goat / and after putting the offering together, offer it to Selene on the 13th, 14th, on an earthen censer, on a lofty housetop, on coals. Spell:

329. See on this term PGM I. 85 and n.

330. Cf. on this point PGM IV. 286–87. It is likely that the magician recognizes that he is to perform a "ritual for picking a plant" (βοτανήαρσις).

331. The ring is supposed to have an image of Hekate.

332. For an example of a phylactery consisting of magical characters, see D. Jordan, "A Silver Phylactery at Istanbul," ZPE 28 (1978): 84–86.

"Come,[333] giant Hekate, Dione's[334] guard, /
O Persia, Baubo Phroune,[335] dart-shooter,
Unconquered, Lydian,[336] the one untamed,
Sired nobly, torch-bearing, guide, who bends down
Proud necks, Kore, hear, you who've parted / gates
Of steel unbreakable. O Artemis,
Who, too, were once protectress, mighty one,
Mistress, who burst forth from the earth, dog-leader,
All-tamer, crossroad goddess, triple-headed,
Bringer of light, august / virgin, I call you
Fawn-slayer, crafty, O infernal one,[337]
And many-formed. Come, Hekate, goddess
Of three ways, who with your fire-breathing phantoms
Have been allotted dreaded roads and harsh / Enchantments. Hekate I call you with Those who untimely passed away and with
Those heroes who have died without a wife
And children, hissing wildly, yearning in Their hearts."[338] (But others say, "with form of winds"). /
"Go stand above her (NN) head and take Away from her sweet sleep. And never let Eyelid come glued to eyelid, but let her
Be sore distressed with wakeful cares for me. /
And if she lies with someone else in her Embrace, let her thrust him away and take Me in her heart. Let her abandon him
At once and stand before my door subdued
In soul at longing for my bed of love.[339] /
But you, O Hekate, of many names,
O Virgin, Kore, Goddess, come, I ask,
O guard and shelter of the threshing floor,
Persephone, O triple-headed goddess,
Who walk on fire, cow-eyed BOUORPHORBĒ[340]
PANPHORBA PHORBARA AKTIŌPHI
ERESCHIGAL / NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH

333. The dactylic hexameters, which are frequently interrupted by voces magicae and other formulas, also form the reconstructed Hymn 21. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 259–60, where the hymn concludes with IV. 2764 but adds 2784 as a kind of postscript. [E.N.O.]

334. Dione is a name of Aphrodite; see LSJ, s.v. Here in this syncretistic hymn the name belongs to Hekate, as on the magical tools from Pergamon; see Wünsch, Antikes Zaubergerät 23–24.

335. The epithet of Hekate may be related to the frog (cf. PGM XXXVI. 235). The animal played an important role in magic as a representative of the gods of the underworld. See M. Weber, "Frosch," RAC 8 (1970): 524–38.

336. The use of the name "Lydian" with Hekate-Artemis should be noted in connection with the possible Lydian origin of Artemis. See on this point Chantraine, Dictionnaire I, 116–17.

337. The translation follows Reitzenstein's emendation (see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.) of ανδναια as Ἀϊδωναία. This epithet of the goddess of Hades also occurs in PGM IV. 2855. Cf. LSJ, s.v. Ἀΰδυναῖος; Suppl. s.v.

338. Cf. Homer, Od. 9. 75. As the apparatus points out, the verse may be corrupt.

339. φιλότητι καὶ εὐνῇ is a Homeric hendiadys. Cf. Il. 3. 445; 6. 25. See PGM IV. 2910.

340. The voces magicae here seem intended as a part of the verse pattern and they have, however awkwardly, been treated as such. [E.N.O.]

Beside the doors, PYPYLĒDEDEZŌ
And gate-breaker; Come Hekate, of fiery
Counsel, I call you to my sacred chants.
MASKELLI MASKELLŌ PHNOUKENTABAŌTH OREOBAZAGRA who burst forth from the earth, / earth mare, OREOPĒGANYX MORMORON TOKOUMBAI" (add the usual),
"In frenzy[341] may she (NN) come fast to my doors,
Forgetting children and her life with parents,
And loathing all the race of men / and women
Except me (NN), but may she hold me alone
And come subdued in heart by love's great force.
THENŌB[342] TITHELĒB ĒNŌR TENTHĒNŌR. / Many-named One, KYZALEOUSA PAZAOUS; wherefore, KOLLIDĒCHMA and SAB set her (NN) soul ablaze with unresting fire. Both ŌRIŌN and MICHAĒL who sits on high: you hold the seven waters / and the earth, keeping in check the one they call the great serpent, AKROKODĒRE[343] MOUISRŌ CHARCHAR ADŌNAI ZEUS DĒ DAMNAMENEUS KYNOBIOU EZAGRA" (add the usual). "IŌ, all-powerful goddess / and IŌ all-guarding one; IŌ, all-sustaining One, ZĒLACHNA: and SAAD SABIŌTHE NOUMILLON NATHOMEINA, always KEINĒTH, stalwart THĒSEUS ONYX,[344] prudent DAMNAMENEUS, / avenging goddess, strong goddess, rite of ghosts, Persia SEBARA AKRA.
Haste quickly. Let her now stand at my doors" (add the usual).
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 2785–2890

Prayer to Selene for any spell:[345]
"Come[346] to me, O beloved mistress, Three-faced
Selene; kindly hear my sacred chants;
Night's ornament, young, bringing light to mortals, /
O child of morn who ride upon fierce bulls,
O queen who drive your car on equal course
With Helios, who with the triple forms
Of triple Graces dance in revel with /
The stars. You're Justice[347] and the Moira's threads:
Klotho and Lachesis and Atropos[348]

341. See on this point the discussion by Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte," 101–2. On the subject of madness caused by magic, see J. Mattes, Der Wahnsinn im griechischen Mythos und in der Dichtung bis zum Drama des 5. Jahrhunderts, Bibliothek der Altertumswissenschaften, N. F. 2. Reihe, Band 36 (Heidelberg: Winter, 1970) 44–49.

342. These lines (2764–84) retain some traces of hexameters, but only the last line comes close to being a complete line. [E.N.O.]

343. The formula seems to be textually mutilated. Cf. for similar passages PGM II. 23–24; V. 424–27; VII. 680–83. See Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

344. ONYX may refer to the stone onyx which was used in magic. Cf. Hopfner, OZ I, section 582.

345. For a discussion of this hymn, see K. Kerényi, "Die Göttin Natur," Eranos-Jahrbuch 14 (1947): 39–86, esp. 68–79.

346. These dactylic hexameters, some of which show the usual irregularities, also form the reconstructed Hymn 18. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 253–55. [E.N.O.]

347. Dike (Justice), the daughter of Zeus, has here and in l. 2860 become an epithet of the underworld goddess. For the association of Dike with underworld deities, see A. Dihle, "Gerechtigkeit," RAC 10 (1976): 243–45.

348. The reading of the papyrus is uncertain at this point. Traditionally, the names of the Furies were Alecto, Tisiphone, and Megaira (Apollodorus, Bib. 1. 1. 4; Orph. Hymn. 69. 2). If the three Furies are intended here, the reading of Persephone will have to be changed to Tisiphone, as suggested by Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc. See also H. Funke, "Furien," RAC 8 (1971): 699–722, esp. 704–5.

Three-headed, you're Persephone, Megaira,
Allekto, many-formed, who arm your hands /
With dreaded, murky lamps, who shake your locks
Of fearful serpents on your brow, who sound
The roar of bulls out from your mouths, whose womb
Is decked out with the scales of creeping things, /
With pois'nous rows of serpents down the back,
Bound down your backs with horrifying chains
Night-Crier, bull-faced, loving solitude,
Bull-headed, you have eyes of bulls, / the voice
Of dogs; you hide your forms in shanks of lions,[349]
Your ankle is wolf-shaped, fierce dogs are dear
To you, wherefore they call you / Hekate,
Many-named, Mene, cleaving air just like
Dart-shooter[350] Artemis, Persephone,
Shooter of deer, night / shining, triple-sounding,
Triple-headed, triple-voiced Selene
Triple-pointed, triple-faced, triple-necked,
And goddess of the triple ways, who hold
Untiring flaming fire in triple baskets, /
And you who oft frequent the triple way
And rule the triple decades,[351] unto me
Who'm calling you be gracious and with kindness
Give heed, you who protect the spacious world
At night, before whom daimons quake in fear /
And gods immortal tremble, goddess who Exalt men, you of many names, who bear
Fair offspring, bull-eyed, horned, mother of gods
And men, and Nature,[352] Mother of all things,
For you frequent Olympos, / and the broad
And boundless chasm you traverse. Beginning
And end are you, and you alone rule all.
For all things are from you, and in you do
All things, Eternal one, come to their end.
As everlasting / band around your temples
You wear great Kronos' chains,[353] unbreakable
And unremovable, and you hold in Your hands a golden scepter. Letters 'round
Your scepter / Kronos wrote himself and gave
To you to wear that all things stay steadfast:
Subduer and subdued, mankind's subduer,
And force-subduer; Chaos, too, you rule.

349. The phrase describing Hekate/Artemis as standing between two lions points to the older concept of the "queen of the animals." See W. Helck, Betrachtungen zur Grossen Göttin und den ihr verbundenen Gottheiten (München und Wien: Oldenbourg, 1971) esp. 223–25.

350. Ll. 2819–26 are parallel to IV. 2523–28.

351. For the term "triple decades," see PGM IV. 2527.

352. For the concept of Nature, see Glossary, s.v.; for the epithet "mother of all things" see Orph. Hymn. 10. 1: παμμήτειρα. See also PGM IV. 2917.

353. See also PGM IV. 3084–3124 and S. Eitrem, "Kronos in der Magie," Université libre de Bruxelles, Annuaire de l'institut de philologie et d'histoire orientales, II: Mélanges J. Bidez, vol. I (Bruxelles: Secretariat de l'institut, 1934) 351–60.

ARARACHARA/RA ĒPHTHISIKĒRE.
Hail, goddess, and attend your epithets,
I burn[354] for you this spice, O child of Zeus,
Dart-shooter, heav'nly one, goddess of harbors,
Who roam the mountains, goddess of crossroads, /
O nether and nocturnal, and infernal,
Goddess of dark, quiet and frightful[355] one,
O you who have your meal amid the graves,[356]
Night, Darkness, broad Chaos: Necessity
Hard to escape are you; you're Moira and /
Erinys,[357] torment, Justice and Destroyer,
And you keep Kerberos in chains, with scales
Of serpents are you dark, O you with hair
Of serpents, serpent-girded, who drink blood, /
Who bring death and destruction, and who feast
On hearts, flesh eater, who devour those dead
Untimely, and you who make grief resound
And spread madness, come to my sacrifices,
And now for me do you filfill / this matter."

Offering for the rite: For doing good, offer storax, myrrh, sage, frankincense, a fruit pit. But for doing harm, offer magical / material of a dog and a dappled goat (or in a similar way, of a virgin untimely dead).

Protective charm for the rite: Take a lodestone and on it have carved / a three-faced Hekate. And let the middle face be that of a maiden wearing horns, and the left face that of a dog, and the one on the right that of a goat. After the carving is done, / clean with natron and water, and dip in the blood of one who has died a violent death. Then make a food offering to it[358] and say the same spell at the time of the / ritual.[359]

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 2891–2942

Love spell of attraction:

Offering to the star of Aphrodite:[360] A white dove's blood and fat, untreated myrrh and parched wormwood. Make this up together as pills and offer them to the star on pieces of vine / wood or on coals. And also have the brains of a vulture for the compulsion, so that you may make the offering. And also have as a protective charm a tooth from the upper right jawbone of a female ass or of a tawny sacrificial heifer, tied to your left arm with / Anubian thread.[361]

354. The following lines are similar to those at PGM IV. 2522–29, but their order occasionally differs.

355. On δασπλήτι, "frightful," cf. Theocritus, Idyll 2. 14 (said of Hekate). [E.N.O.]

356. On eating amid graves, cf., e.g., Tibullus 1. 5. 49–56, esp. 53–54.

357. The goddess is here identified with Erinys, the avenging deity. This identification is somewhat inconsistent with l. 2798, where the three Furies are named; the same is true of Moira (l. 2859) as compared with the three Moirai (ll. 2795–96). See PGM IV. 1418, 2339; V. 191; and IV. 2798 with n.

358. The term παράθεσις refers to an offering of food. See PGM I. 23, 39; XIII. 1012. Cf. Eitrem's and Preisendanz's translation: "leg ihn (eine Weile) beiseite." Wünsch thinks of the term as a cover ("Hülle").

359. For the meaning of the phrase, see PGM V. 230.

360. The star of Aphrodite is the planet Venus.

361. On the Anubian thread see PGM I. 147 and n.

Compulsion element of the rite:

"But,[362] if as goddess you in slowness act,
You will not see Adonis rise from Hades,[363]
Straightway I'll run and bind him with steel chains; /
As guard, I'll bind on him another wheel
Of Ixion;[364] no longer will he come
To light, and he'll be chastized and subdued.
Wherefore, O Lady, act, I beg: Attract
NN, whom NN bore, to come with rapid step
To my door,[365] me, NN, whom NN bore, /
And to the bed of love, driven by frenzy,
In anguish from the forceful goads—today,
At once, quickly. For I adjure you, Kythere,[366]
NOUMILLON BIOMBILLON AKTIŌPHI ERESCHIGAL NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH PHROURĒXIA THERMIDOCHĒ BAREŌ / NĒ."

Hymn of Compulsion:

"O foam-born Kythereia, mother of Both gods and men, etherial and chthonic,
All-Mother Nature, goddess unsubdued,
Who hold together things,[367] who cause the great Fire to revolve, who keep the ever-moving
BARZA[368] / in her unbroken course; and you
Accomplish everything, from head to toes,
And by your will is holy water mixed,
When by your hands you'll move RHOUZŌ[369] amid
The stars, the world's midpoint which you control.
You move holy desire into the souls
Of men / and move women to man, and you
Render[370] woman desirable to man

362. This is a curious and confused passage. Ll. 2902–15 contain scattered snatches of verses which are obviously parts of dactylic hexameters. Ll. 2916–28 contain lines which are relatively accurate hexameters, but 2929–39 are a mixture of metrical and nonmetrical lines. Nevertheless, the whole passage has been arranged and reconstructed as Hymn 22; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 260–61. Since the tone and purpose of the whole passage seems hymnic, the translation has been made in verse but with an occasional faulty line. [E.N.O.]

363. On the cult of Adonis in Egypt and the problem concerning his "resurrection," cf. Theocritus, Idyll 15 and, with further literature, Nilsson, GGR II, 35 n. 2; 650, n. 4; Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 320–22.

364. Because he attempted to make love to Hera, wife of Zeus, the mythical king Ixion was condemned by being fastened to an ever-turning wheel. The myth of Ixion was very popular in antiquity. See Cook, Zeus III, 2, pp. 200–205 (with plates); P. Weizsäcker, in Roscher 2, 766–72, s.v. "Ixion"; H. von Geisau, "Ixion," KP 3 (1979): 31–32.

365. Preisendanz states that ἐν προθύροισιν is a tag from Homer, Od. 10. 220.

366. Two traditional epithets of Aphrodite occur here closely together: Kythērē in l. 2912 and Kythereia in l. 2915. The name may refer to the island of Kythera which was believed to be Aphrodite's birthplace and which had a temple of Aphrodite Urania. See LSJ, s.v.; E. Meyer, "Kythera," KP 3 (1979): 423.

367. The reading of this epithet is uncertain. See the apparatus.

368. The word BARZA is Persian and means "shining light." See Hopfner, OZ II, p. 100.

369. Hopfner, OZ II, p. 100, assumes that RHOUZŌ is confused with the Persian magical word ZOURŌ. See also K. Preisendanz, "Zuro," in Roscher 6, pp. 763–64.

370. Preisendanz prints τίθησι, the reading of the papyrus, but the third person is certainly wrong here. The simplest correction is that of Wessely: τίθης σύ, and that is what is translated here.

Through all the days to come, our Goddess Queen,
Come to these chants, Mistress
ARRŌRIPHRASI GŌTHĒTINI, Cyprus-born, SOUI ĒS THNOBOCHOU THORITHE
2930 STHENEPIŌ, Lady / SERTHENEBĒĒI, and inflict fiery love on her, NN, whom NN bore,
So[371] that for me, NN, whom NN bore,
She melt with love through all the days to come
But, blessed RHOUZŌ, grant this to me, NN:
Just as into your chorus 'mid the stars
A man unwilling you attracted to 2935 Your bed for intercourse, / and once he was Attracted, he at once began to turn
Great BARZA, nor did he cease turning, and While moving in his circuits, he's aroused:
wherefore attract to me, her, NN, whom NN bore,
To bed of love. But goddess Cyrpus-born
Do you now to the full fulfill this chant." /
2940 If you see the star shining steadily, it is a sign that she has been smitten, and if it is lengthened like the flame of a lamp, she has already come.[372]
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 2943–66

Love-spell of attraction through wakefulness: Take the eyes of a bat and release 2945 it alive, and take / a piece of unbaked dough or unmelted wax and mold a little dog; and put the right eye of the bat into the right eye of the little dog, implanting also in the same way the left one in the left. And take a needle, thread it with the 2950 magical material and / stick it through the eyes of the little dog, so that the magical material is visible. And put the dog into a new drinking vessel, attach a papyrus strip[373] to it and seal it with your own ring which has crocodiles with the backs of 2955 their heads attached,[374] and / deposit it at a crossroad after you have marked the spot so that, should you wish to recover it, you can find it.

Spell written on the papyrus strip: "I adjure you three times by Hekate PHOR-2960 PHORBA BAIBŌ PHŌRBŌRBA, that she, NN, lose the fire in her eye or even / lie awake with nothing on her mind except me, NN, alone. I adjure by Kore, who has become the Goddess of Three roads, and who is the true mother of . . . (whom you 2965 wish), PHORBEA BRIMŌ NĒRĒATO DAMŌN BRIMŌN SEDNA / DARDAR, All-seeing one, IŌPĒ, make her, NN, lie awake for me through all [eternity]."
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

371. The verse resumes here after a few lines of prose; however, the NN-formula does not scan.

372. The last word of this section is either ἦξεν ("she has come") or ἤξεν ("it has attracted"). The magical sense—or the result—is the same in either case. For the rare aorist of ἄγω cf. PGM IV. 2934: ἦξας. Preisendanz prints ἦξεν in the first, ἤξεν in the second edition, but in the index lists the word under ἥκω. [E.N.O.]

373. πιττακίζω means "attach a label" (LSJ, s.v.) in the sense of attaching a papyrus strip on which writing is placed; cf. below, ll. 2956–66. [E.N.O.]

374. Whether this means "head to head" (thus Preisendanz) or "tail to tail" (thus LSJ) or "head to tail" is uncertain. Paired crocodiles appear on seals in all these positions, but head to tail is far more frequent. [M.S.] The crocodile was sacred to Sobek, with whose cult sacred prostitution seems to have been associated. Thus there may be a link with the erotic theme of this spell. See H. Thompson, "Two Demotic Self-Dedications," JEA 26 (1940):68–78. [R.K.R.]

PGM IV. 2967–3006

*Among the Egyptians herbs are always obtained like this:[375] the herbalist first purifies his own body, then sprinkles with natron[376] and / fumigates the herb with resin from a pine tree after carrying it around the place 3 times.[377] Then, after burning kyphi and pouring the libation of milk as he prays, he pulls up the plant while invoking by name the daimon to whom the herb / is being dedicated and calling upon him to be more effective for the use for which it is being acquired.

The invocation for him, which he speaks over any herb, generally at the moment of picking, is as follows:[378]

"You were sown by Kronos, you were conceived by Hera, / you were maintained by Ammon, you were given birth by Isis, you were nourished by Zeus the god of rain, you were given growth by Helios and dew.[379] You [are] the dew of all the gods, you [are] the heart of Hermes, you are the seed of the primordial gods, you are the eye / of Helios,[380] you are the light of Selene,[381] you are the zeal of Osiris,[382] you are the beauty and the glory of Ouranos, you are the soul of Osiris' daimon which revels in every place, you are the spirit of Ammon. As you have exalted Osiris, so / exalt yourself and rise just as Helios rises each day. Your size is equal to the zenith of Helios, your roots come from the depths, but your powers are in the heart of Hermes, your fibers are the bones of Mnevis,[383] and your / flowers are the eye of Horus,[384] your seed is Pan's seed. I am washing you in resin as I also wash the gods[385] even [as I do this] for my own health. You also be cleaned by prayer and give us power as Ares and Athena do. I am Hermes. I am acquiring you with Good / Fortune and Good Daimon both at a propitious hour and on a propitious day that is effective for all things."

After saying this, he rolls the harvested stalk in a pure linen cloth (but into the place of its roots they threw seven seeds of wheat and an equal number of barley, after mixing them with honey), / and after pouring in the ground which has been dug up, he departs.

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

375. On plant picking, see PGM IV. 286 and n.

376. Natron, a natural compound of sodium carbonate and sodium bicarbonate, was the primary mineral used for purification in Egypt. See J. R. Harris, Lexicographical Studies in Ancient Egyptian Minerals (Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1961), 193–94. [R.K.R.]

377. On the ritual of walking in a circle, see W. Pax, "Circumambulatio," RAC 3 (1957): 143–52. For a humorous example, see Propertius, Eleg. 4. 8. 81–86. [E.N.O.]

378. Cf. the divinization of persons in Egyptian religion, documentation of which lists the individuals alongside various gods so as to identify them. See A. Massert, "A propos des 'listes' dans les textes funéraires et magiques," Analecta Biblica 12 (1959): 227–46. [R.K.R.]

379. On the significance of dew (δρόσος), see Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 33, 364A, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 424, where he refers to PGM XII. 234. [E.N.O.]

380. The association of the eye and the sun (Helios) was widely known in antiquity. See P. Wilpert (S. Zenker), "Auge," RAC 1 (1950) esp. 961–63.

381. That is, the light of the moon.

382. The term σπουδή ("zeal") is troublesome. Preisendanz translates "Würde" (majesty). Cf. the apparatus ad loc. [E.N.O.]

383. The epithet Mnevis, which occurs in PGM VII. 445; XIXa. 6, is the hellenized form of the Egyptian Mr-wr, the name of the holy bull of Heliopolis, the incarnation of the sun god Prē. See Diodorus Sic. 1. 84. 4; Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 33, 364C, with Griffiths commentary, 425. On the matter, see W. Helck, "Mnevis," KP 3 (1975): 1374–75; L. Kákosy, "Mnevis," LdÄ 4 (1980): 165–67.

384. For the eye of Horus, see PGM III. 421–26.

385. The reference is to the daily temple cult and care for the divine statues, including their washing, dressing, and feeding. See Morenz, Egyptian Religion 87–88. [R.K.R.]

PGM IV. 3007–86

A tested charm of Pibechis[386] for those possessed by daimons:[387] Take oil of unripe olives with the herb mastigia and the fruit pulp of the lotus, and boil them with colorless marjoram / while saying, "IŌĒL ŌS SARTHIŌMI EMŌRI THEŌCHIPSOITH SITHEMEŌCH SŌTHĒ IŌĒ MIMIPSŌTHIŌŌPH PHERSŌTHI AEĒIOYŌ IŌĒ EŌ CHARI PHTHA, come out from NN" (add the usual). The phylactery: On a tin lamella write / "IAĒO ABRAŌTH IŌCH PHTHA MESENPSIN IAŌ PHEŌCH IAĒŌ CHARSOK," and hang it on the patient. It is terrifying to every daimon, a thing he fears. After placing [the patient] opposite [to you], conjure. This is the conjuration: "I conjure you by the god of the Hebrews, / Jesus,[388] IABA IAĒ ABRAŌTH AIA THŌTH ELE ELŌ AĒŌ EOY IIIBAECH ABARMAS IABARAOU ABELBEL LŌNA ABRA MAROIA BRAKIŌN, who appears in fire, who is in the midst of land,[389] snow, and fog, TANNĒTIS;[390] let your / angel, the implacable, descend and let him assign the daimon flying around this form, which god formed in his holy paradise, because I pray to the holy god, [calling] upon AMMŌN IPSENTANCHŌ (formula). I conjure you, LABRIA IAKOUTH / ABLANATHANALBA AKRAMM (formula) AŌTH IATHABATHRA CHACHTHABRATHA CHAMYN CHEL ABRŌŌTH OUABRASILŌTH HALLĒLOU IELŌSAI IAĒL. I conjure you by the one who appeared to Osrael[391] in a shining pillar and a cloud by day,[392]/who saved his people from the Pharaoh and brought upon Pharaoh the ten plagues because of his disobedience.[393] I conjure you, every daimonic spirit, to tell whatever sort you may be, because I conjure you by the seal / which Solomon[394] placed on the tongue of Jeremiah, and he told. You also tell whatever sort you may be, heavenly or aerial, whether terrestrial or subterranean, or netherworldly or Ebousaeus or Cherseus or Pharisaeus,[395] tell / whatever sort you may be, because I conjure you by god, light-bearing,[396] unconquerable, who knows what is in the heart of every living being, the one who formed of dust the race of humans,[397] the one who, after bringing them out from obscurity, packs together

386. Pibechis was a legendary magician from Egypt. See K. Preisendanz, "Pibechis," PRE 20 (1941): 1310–12. Pibechis is Egyptian P3-bk, "the falcon." [E.N.O.]

387. The following section contains numerous references to Jewish traditions. For a discussion and collections of parallel passages, see W. L. Knox, "Jewish Liturgical Exorcism," HTR 31 (1938): 191–203; Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East 256–64.

388. On the peculiar epithet "Jesus the god of the Hebrews," see Reitzenstein, Poimandres 14, nn. 1–2; Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East 260, n. 4; Knox, "Jewish Liturgical Exorcism," 193–94; H. Chadwick, Origen, Contra Celsum (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, ²1965) 210 (on c. Cels. 4. 34); Smith, Jesus the Magician 113; A. A. Barb, "Three Elusive Amulets," JWCI 27 (1964): 7–9. Cf. PGM XXIIb. 18.

389. See on this "field" PGM XIV. 8; LXXVII. 5.

390. TANNĒTIS may be equivalent to the Egyptian Ta-nt-N.t, "She of Neith." Cf. the apparatus ad loc. [R.K.R.]

391. Osrael is a variant form of Israel. See PGM IV. 1816 with n.

392. Cf. on this legendary tradition LXX Ex 13:21–22 and parallels. See J. Daniélou, "Feuersäule (Lichtsäule, Wolkensäule)," RAC 7 (1969): 786–90.

393. On the plagues of Pharaoh, see LXX Ex 7:8–11:10 and parallels.

394. The "seal of Solomon" is the name of a famous amulet in antiquity. For bibliography, see G. Fitzer, TDNT 7 (1971): 947, n. 72. Placing the amulet on the tongue of Jeremiah appears to come from haggadic tradition unknown to us. See K. Preisendanz, "Salomo," PRE.S 8 (1965): 660–704.

395. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East 261, n. 11, derives these names of demons from LXX Gn 15:20–21; Ex 3:8, 17, etc.: The Χετταῖοι have become Χερσαῖος ("land daimon"), the Φερεζαῖοι have become Φαρισαῖος (which therefore has been confused with Pharisee), and the Ἰεβουσαῖοι have become Ἐβουσαῖος. Cf. Dietrich, Abraxas 139; Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

396. Ll. 3045–52 contain prayer language apparently of Jewish origin. See the biblical parallels in Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East 261–62.

397. Cf. LXX Gn 2:7.

the clouds, waters the earth with rain / and blesses its fruit, [the one] whom every heavenly power of angels and of archangels praises. I conjure you by the great god SABAŌTH, through whom the Jordan River drew back[398] and the Red Sea, / which Israel crossed, became impassable,[399] because I conjure you by the one who introduced the one hundred forty languages[400] and distributed them by his own command. I conjure you by the one who burned up the stubborn giants with lightning,[401] / whom the heaven of heavens praises, whom the wings of the cherubim[402] praise. I conjure you by the one who put the mountains around the sea [or] a wall of sand and commanded the sea not to overflow.[403] The abyss obeyed;[404] and you obey, / every daimonic spirit, because I conjure you by the one who causes the four winds to move[405] together from the holy aions, [the] skylike, sealike, cloudlike, light-bringing, unconquerable [one]. I conjure [you] by the one in holy Jerusalem,[406] before whom the / unquenchable fire burns for all time,[407] with his holy name, IAEŌBAPHRENEMOUN (formula), the one before whom the fiery Gehenna trembles, flames surround, iron bursts asunder and every mountain is afraid from its foundation. / I conjure you, every daimonic spirit, by the one who oversees the earth and makes its foundations tremble,[408] [the one] who made all things which are not into that which is."[409]

And I adjure you, the one who receives this conjuration, / not to eat pork,[410] and every spirit and daimon, whatever sort it may be, will be subject to you. And while conjuring, blow once, blowing air from the tips of the feet up to the face,[411] and it will be assigned. Keep yourself pure, for this charm / is Hebraic and is preserved among pure men.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

398. Cf. LXX Jos 3:13–14; Ps 113:3.

399. Cf. LXX Ex 14:27. See J. Daniélou, "Exodus," RAC 7 (1969):22–44.

400. Most Jewish sources speak of seventy nations and seventy languages in the world. But there are authorities who name 140 languages. For discussion and references, see Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews I, 173; II, 214; V, 194–95.

401. Cf. LXX Gn 6:4; 19:24–29. See W. Speyer, "Gigant," RAC 10 (1978):1247–75.

402. The text has Cherubin. See Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East 262, n. 8.

403. Cf. LXX Jb 38:10–11; Jer 5:22.

404. Cf. LXX Prv 8:26–29; Jb 38:30, 34.

405. Cf. LXX Ps 134:7; also Gn 8:1; Nm 11:31; Jb 28:25, etc.

406. The name is given as Hierosolymon. For the various forms of the city's name, see G. Fohrer and E. Lohse, TDNT 7 (1971), s.v. Σιών κτλ., sections A. I. 2; B. I (esp. nn. 133, 134); C. I. 2.

407. This refers to the seven-branched candelabrum (menorah) of the Jerusalem Temple. Its undying light was legendary in antiquity. See PGM IV. 1219 and n.; Ps.-Hecataeus, in Iosephus, c. Ap. 1. 199; LXX Ex 27:20; Lv 6:12–13; Diodorus Sic. 34. 1. 4 (also in M. Stern, Greek and Latin Authors on Jews and Judaism I [Jerusalem: The Israel Academy of Sciences and Humanities, 1976], p. 180 (# 63). For additional references, see Schürer, The History of the Jewish People II (1979) 297 and n. 18.

408. Cf. LXX Ps 103:32.

409. This is a reference to the doctrine of the creatio ex nihilo. Cf. 2 Mc 7:28; Philo, De spec. leg. 4.187; etc. Cf. D. Winston, The Wisdom of Solomon, The Anchor Bible 43 (New York: Doubleday, 1979) 38–40; G. May, Schöpfung aus dem Nichts, AKG 48 (Berlin: De Gruyter, 1978).

410. The prohibition to eat pork is the Jewish one in this case, and not the Egyptian. Cf. LXX Lv 11:7; Dt 14:8; Is 65:4; etc. Cf. also PGM I. 105; Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 5, 352F and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 272.

411. On this "inspiration," see S. Eitrem, Some Notes on the Demonology of the New Testament (Oslo: Universitetsforlaget, ²1966) 47–49.

PGM IV. 3086–3124

*Oracle of Kronos[412] in great demand, called "little mill": Take two measures of salt and grind with a handmill while saying the formula many times until / the god appears to you. Do it at night in a place where grass grows. If while you are speaking you hear the heavy step of [someone] and a clatter of iron, the god is coming bound with chains, holding a sickle.[413] But do not be frightened since you are protected by the phylactery that / will be revealed to you. Be clothed with clean linen in the garb of a priest of Isis.[414] Offer to the god sage together with a heart of a cat and horse manure.

The formula to be spoken while you are mixing is this*: *Formula: "I call you, the great, holy, the one who created the whole inhabited world, against whom the transgression was committed / by your own son,[415] you whom Helios bound with adamantine fetters lest the universe be mixed together, you hermaphrodite, father of the thunderbolt, you who hold down those under the earth, AIE OI PAIDALIS PHRENOTEICHEIDŌ STYGARDĒS SANKLEON / GENECHRONA KOIRAPSAI KĒRIDEU THALAMNIA OCHOTA ANEDEI; come, master, god, and tell me by necessity concerning the NN matter, for I am the one who revolted against you, PAIDOLIS MAINOLIS MAINOLIEUS." These are to be said while the salt / is being ground.

And the formula which compels him is: "KYDOBRIS KODĒRIEUS ANKYRIEUS XANTOMOULIS." You say these things when he appears threateningly, in order that he might be subdued and speak about the things you ask.

The phylactery / in great demand for him [is]: On the rib[416] of a young pig carve Zeus holding fast a sickle and this name: "CHTHOUMILON." Or let it be the rib of a black, scaly, castrated boar.

Dismissal: "ANAEA OCHETA THALAMNIA KĒRIDEU / KOIRAPSIA GENECHRONA SANĒLON STYGARDĒS CHLEIDŌ PHRAINOLE PAIDOLIS IAEI, go away, master of the world, forefather; go to your own places in order that the universe be maintained. Be gracious to us, lord."

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM IV. 3125–71

*Whenever you want a place to prosper greatly, so that those in the place or the temple where the phylactery is hidden will marvel, [use this rite]. For wherever this [phylactery] be placed, if in a temple, the temple will be talked about throughout the whole world; / if in some other place, [the place] will prosper greatly.

This is how to make [the phylactery]: Taking Etruscan wax, mold a statue three handbreadths high.[417] Let it be three-headed. Let the middle head be that of a sea falcon; the right, of a baboon; / the left, of an ibis. Let it have four extended wings and its two arms stretched on its breast;[418] in them it should hold a scepter. And let 412. For an analysis of the agrarian features of Kronos in this spell, see Eitrem, "Kronos in der Magie," 351–60.

413. On the sickle as a weapon (also l. 3116), see A. A. Barb, "Cain's Murder-weapon and Samson's Jawbone of an Ass," JWCI 35 (1972): 386–89.

414. For the Egyptian priestly costume, see S. Sauneron, The Priests of Ancient Egypt (New York: Grove Press, 1960) 40. See also Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 4, 352C, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 270. [R.K.R.]

415. That is, Zeus who castrated his father Kronos.

416. The text is uncertain at this point. See the apparatus ad loc.

417. For a wax statue of this so-called pantheistic god, see S. Sauneron, "Le Nouveau sphinx composite du Brooklyn Museum et le rôle du dieu Toutou-Tithoès," JNES 19 (1960): 269–87; esp. 284–85. Cf. PGM XII. 121–43; XIII. 50 for this figure. [R.K.R.]

418. Probably crossed. [M.S.]

it be wrapped [as a mummy] like Osiris. Let the falcon wear the crown of Horus; the baboon, / the crown of Hermanubis;[419] and let the ibis wear the crown of Isis. Put into the hollow inside it a heart [made] of magnetite, and write the following names on a piece of hieratic papyrus and put them into the hollow. Next, when you have made it an iron base, stand it / on the base and put it into a little juniper wood temple at moonrise on the third day of the goddess.[420] Then, having fixed it [firmly] in whatever place you choose, sacrifice to it a wild white-faced [falcon?],[421] and burn [this offering] entire; also pour to it, as a libation, the milk of a black cow, / the firstborn [of its mother] and the first she suckled. [By these sacrifices you will have completed the deification of the statue.] And [now] feast with [the god], singing to him all night long the names written on the strip [of papyrus] put in the hollow. Wreathe the little temple with olive and thus [you will prosper] throughout life. / And sing the same spell when you get up in the morning, before you open [your shop or temple]. The names to be written and recited are these:

"BICHŌ
BICHŌBI
CHŌBIBEU
NASSOUNAINTHI
NOUNAITH
MOUR
SOURPHEŌ
MOURĒTH
ANIMOKEŌ
ARPAĒR
SANI
SOUMARTA
AKERMORTHŌOUTH
ANIMI
MIMNOUĒR
IĒRI
ANIMI
MIMNIMEU."

"Give me all favor, all success, for the angel bringing good, who stands beside [the goddess] Tyche, is with you. Accordingly, give profit [and] success to this house. Please, Aion, ruler of hope, giver of wealth, O holy Agathos Daimon, bring to fulfillment all favors and / your divine oracles." Then open [your establishment] and you will marvel at the unsurpassed holy power.
*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM IV. 3172–3208

Dream-producing[422] charm using three reeds: The picking of the three reeds is to be before sunrise.[423] After sunset raise the first, look / to the east and say three times: "MASKELLI MASKELLŌ PHNOUKENTABAŌ OREOBAZAGRA RĒXICHTHŌN HIPPOCHTHŌN PYRIPĒGANYX AEĒIOYŌ LEPETAN AZARACHTHARŌ, I am picking you up in order that you might give me a dream." / Raise the second to the south and say again the "MASKELLI" formula, the vowels and "THRŌBEIA"; hold the reed and spin around; look toward the north and the west and say three times the same names, / those of the second reed. Raise the third and say the same names and these things: "IĒ IĒ, I am picking you for such-and-such a rite."

These things are to be written on the reeds: On the first: "AZARACHTHARŌ"; on the second: "THRŌBEIA"; / on the third: "IĒ IĒ."

Then take a lamp that is not painted red and fill it with pure olive oil. Take a clean strip of cloth and write down all the names. Say the same things to the lamp seven times. Let the lamp be facing east / and let it be next to a censer on which you will make an offering of lumps of frankincense. After preparing the reeds and binding them together with fibers of a date palm, make them into a kind of tripod, and 419. The name is a combination of Hermes and Anubis.

420. Third day of the goddess Selene. Cf. PGM III. 702; IV. 170; XII. 379.
421. For the emendation ⟨ὀν⟩ἀγριον, see PGM IV. 2396 and n.
422. The word translated is ὀνειροθαυπτάνη. Cf. the apparatus ad loc. and PGM IV. 2624–25.
423. For picking a plant, see PGM IV. 286 and n.

place the lamp on it. Let the head of the practitioner be crowned with olive branches.
Composition of the ink with which it is necessary to write / on the reeds and the wick: single-stemmed wormwood, vetch, 3 pits of Nicolaus date palms, 3 Karian dried figs, soot from a goldsmith, 3 branches of a male date palm, sea foam.
The things to be written / and recited are these: "I conjure you by the sleep releaser because I want you to enter into me and to show me concerning the NN matter, IERŌRIETHEDIEN THROU CHAŌRA ARPEBŌ ENDALĒLA."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM IV. 3209–54

*Saucer divination of Aphrodite: Having kept oneself pure for 7 / days, take a white saucer, fill it with water and olive oil, having previously written on its base with myrrh ink: "ĒIOCH CHIPHA ELAMPSĒR ZĒL A E Ē I O Y Ō" (25 letters); and beneath the base, on the outside: "TACHIĒL CHTHONIĒ DRAXŌ" (18 letters). Wax over / with white wax. On the outside of the rim at the top: "IERMI PHILŌ 6 ERIKŌMA DERKŌ MALŌK GAULĒ APHRIĒL I ask" (say it 3 times). Let it rest on the floor and looking intently at it, say "I call upon you, the mother and mistress / of nymphs,[424] ILAOUCH OBRIĒ LOUCH TLOR; [come] in, holy light, and give answer, showing your lovely shape."

Then look intently at the bowl. When you see her, welcome her and say, "Hail, very glorious goddess, ILARA / OUCH. And if you give me a response, extend your hand." And when she extends it, expect answers to your inquiry.

But if she does not listen say, "I call upon the ILAOUCH who has begotten Himeros,[425] the lovely Horai and / you Graces; I also call upon the Zeus-sprung Physis of all things, two-formed, indivisible, straight, foam-beautiful Aphrodite. Reveal to me your lovely light and your lovely face, O mistress ILAOUCH. / I conjure you, giver of fire, [by] ELGINAL, and [by the] great names OBRIĒTYCH KERDYNOUCHILĒPSIN NIOU NAUNIN IOUTHOU THRIGX TATIOUTH GERTIATH GERGERIS GERGERIĒ THEITHI. I also ask you[426] [by] the all wonderful / names, OISIA EI EI AŌ ĒY AAŌ IŌIAIAIŌ SŌTHOU BERBROI AKTEROBORE[427] GERIĒ IĒOYA; bring me light and your lovely face and the true saucer divination, you shining with fire, bearing fire all around, stirring the land from afar, / IŌ IŌ PHTHAIĒ THOUTHOI PHAEPHI. Do it."

Preparation: having kept yourself pure, as you learned, take a bronze drinking cup, and write with myrrh ink the previously inscribed stele which calls upon Aphrodite, / and use the untouched olive oil and clean river water. Put the drinking cup on your knees and speak over it the stele mentioned above, and the goddess will appear to you and will reveal concerning what things you wish.
*Tr.: J. P. Hershbell.

PGM IV. 3255–74

*Take an unbaked [brick] and with a bronze stylus draw an [ass] running, and on its face "IAŌ IŌ," and on its neck in the shape of a little bell "ĒOĒOĒ," and on its 424. For the epithet "Mistress of the Nymphs," see Orph. Hymn. 52. 22–25. Aphrodite Nymphaia is discussed in Pausanias 2. 32. 7.

425. Himeros may be a personification of "the yearning of love." See LSJ, s.v. "ἵμερος," I. 3.

426. ἀξιώσῃς, "you might ask," could be emended to ἀξιῶ σέ, "I ask you," and perhaps read with the following imperative as a part of the conjuration set in quotation marks. [R.D.K.]

427. The papyrus has ακτεβορε, which Preisendanz reads as an unattested epithet ἀκτε⟨ρο⟩βόρε, "eater of the unburied."

back "LERTHEMINŌ," and on its breast "[s]ABAŌTH," and under its hooves "ABRASAX." / Smear it with the blood of Typhon and a pig and with juice of an onion.

The spell of the brick to be written down is this:

"IŌ ERBĒTH IŌ PAKERBĒTH IŌ BOLCHOSĒTH IŌ BOLCHOSĒTH SABAOUM KOKLOTOM PATATHNAX, the shaker, IŌ ERBĒTH APOMPS IAŌTH IABAŌTH SEISAŌ PEUKRĒ, you fortunate one, TESCHŌ PATONAK PHENDE / MIEPHEOR ABIRBOLONCHITHI RŌPHTHĒ APERMA PALELŌPS, the shaker of the world, I call upon you, great Typhon, IŌ ERBĒTH IŌ PAKERBĒTH IŌ BOLCHOSĒTH, because I am he, NN. Hear me, in this business which I am performing LERTHEMINŌ AROUZORON BATHOU / CHĒASMĒPHIS, O great, great[428] Typhon LERTHEMINO; attend this magical operation which I am performing, because it is your great and honored name that I am saying and writing, ABERAMENTHŌOU" (formula).

Underneath the ass: "Give her the heaving of the sea, total wakefulness[429] of Mendes,[430] and give her[431] the punishments."

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM V. 1–53[1]

Oracle of Sarapis, [by means of] a boy, by means of a lamp, saucer and bench: "I call upon you, Zeus, Helios, Mithra, Sarapis, / unconquered one, Meliouchos, Melikertes, Meligenetor, ABRAAL BACHAMBĒCHI BAIBEIZŌTH (ĒBAI BEBOTH) SERIABEBŌTH AMELCHIPSITHIOUTHIPOTHOIO PNOUTE NINTHĒRTĒROU[2] IYEY ĒOŌ AIĒIA EĒOIA / ĒEAI EYĒIE ŌŌŌŌŌ EYĒŌ IAŌAI BAKAXICHYCH BOSIPSETĒTH PHOBĒBIBŌTH, the great, great[3] Sarapis SAMASPHRĒTH" (otherwise above) "O DARGAZAS O DARMAGAS O DAPHAR YAKIABŌTH EPHIA ZELEARTHAR (AKRABAEŌEPHIAZALE ARBAMENOTHIĒŌ SAMAS PHRĒTI)[4] / METHOMĒŌ› LAMARMERA OPTĒBI PTĒBI MARIANOU (AKRABAEŌ EPHIAZĒLE ARBAMENOTHI ĒŌ NAMISPHRĒTI), appear and give respect to him who appeared before fire and snow, BAINCHŌŌŌCH, for you are the one who introduced light and snow, hurler of shudderful / thunder and lightning, KYPODŌKTE PINTOUCHE ETŌM THOOUT THASINAĒAK AROURONGOA PAPHTHA[5] ENŌSADE IAĒ IAŌ AI AOIAŌ EOĒY" (nine lettes): [Pronounce]:

the "A" with an open mouth, undulating like a wave;
the "O" succinctly, as a breathed threat,
the "IAŌ" to earth, to air, and to heaven;
the "Ē" like a baboon;
the "O" in the same way as above;[6]
the "E" with enjoyment, aspirating it, /

428. The repeated "great, great" is Egyptian geminatio. See also PGM I. 41 and n.

429. E. Hohl, RhM 68 (1913): 313, n. 4, restores [π]αναγρυπνιαν in accordance with Anth. Pal. 7. 195. 5, where Meleager has used παναγρύπνοιο μερίμνης. Both the noun and the verb are hapax legomena. [E.N.O.]

430. Mendes corresponds to Egyptian B3-nb-Ḏd.t, the ram incarnation of Prē identified with Pan and Priapus. See Bonnet, RÄRG 451, s.v. "Mendes"; 868–71, s.v. "Widder"; Herodotus 2. 46; Diodorus Sic. 1. 88; Strabo 16. 1. 19. [R.K.R.]

431. The translation follows Preisendanz in assuming that αὐτῇ in ll. 3273–74 is τῇ δεῖνα. But the fact remains that, while ὁ δεῖνα occurs in l. 3248, nowhere in the spell is a woman mentioned. There is really no indication that this spell is designed to affect a woman, until this last sentence. [E.N.O.]

1. Parentheses in this spell contain words that are written between the lines. For further discussion see Preisendanz, ad loc.

2. The phrase means "O god (of) all the gods." Cf. PGM III. 144–45 and n.

3. For the meaning of "twice great," see PGM IV. 3270 and n.

4. See l. 46 below.

5. This is equivalent to "Thoth . . . He of Ptah." [R.K.R.]

6. According to Hopfner, OZ I, section 778, this means either as the "E" in l. 27 or the "O" in l. 25.

the "Y" like a shepherd, drawing out the pronunciation.[7]
If he says, "I prophesy," say: "Let the throne of god enter, THRONOUZATERA KYMA KYMA LYAGEU APSITADRYS GĒ MOLIANDRON BONBLILON PEUCHRĒ, / let the throne be brought in." If it then is carried by 4 men, as, "With what are they crowned, and what goes before the throne?" If he says, "They are crowned with olive branches, and / a censer precedes," [the] boy speaks the truth.

Dismissal: "Go, lord, to your own world and to your own thrones, to your own vaults, and keep me and / this boy from harm, in the name of the highest god, SAMAS PHRĒTH.[8]" Do this when the moon is in a settled sign, in conjunction with beneficial planets or is in good houses, not when it is full; for it is / better, and in this way the well-ordered oracle is completed. (But in other copies "when it is full" has been written.)
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM V. 54–69

Direct vision spell: "EEIM TO EIM ALALĒP BARBARIATH / MENEBREIO ARBATHIAŌTH IOUĒL IAĒL OUĒNĒIIE MESOMMIAS, let the god who prophesies to me come and let him not go away until I dismiss him, OURNAOUR SOUL ZASOUL / OUGOT NOOUMBIAOU THABRAT BERIAOU ACHTHIRI MARAI ELPHEŌN TABAŌTH KIRASINA LAMPSOURĒ IABOE ABLAMATHANALBA AKRAMMACHAMAREI."

In a bronze cup over oil. Anoint / your right eye with water from a shipwreck and the left with Coptic eyepaint, with the same water. If you cannot find water from a shipwreck, then from a sunken skiff.
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM V. 70–95

*Take a plant chelkbei (?) and bugloss, strain them, burn what you strain out, mix [them] well with juice, and write "CHOŌ"[9] with it on a wall. Take gallows wood and carve a hammer. With / the hammer strike the [eye][10] while saying the formula: "I conjure you by the holy names; hand over the thief who made off with it, CHALCHAK CHALKOUM CHIAM CHARCHROUM ZBAR BĒRI ZBARKOM CHRĒ / KARIŌB PHARIBOU, and by the shudderful names: A EE ĒĒĒ IIII OOOOO YYYYYY ŌŌŌŌŌŌŌ."

"Ō			"A
/ Y Y			E E
I I I I			Ē Ē Ē
Ē Ē Ē Ē Ē			I I I I
E E E E E E			Ē Ē Ē Ē Ē
A A A A A A A			E E E E E E
/ IAŌ ŌIA	IŌA	AĒŌ	A A A A A A A A
			ĒŌA ŌAĒ."

"Hand over the thief who stole it. As long as I strike the eye with this hammer, let the eye of the thief be struck, and let it swell up until it / betrays him." While saying these things, strike with the hammer.
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

7. Presumably, the way the formula is to be spoken; see Preisendanz's interpretation ad loc.

8. Samas is the Canaanite solar deity Shamash, combined here with the Egyptian counterpart Prē. Cf. ll. 12–14 above.

9. CHOŌ could be Coptic KŌ which can mean "hand over," or "put"; it would fit the sense of the spell. [R.K.R.]

10. Thus the emendation οὐ⟨τάτιον⟩ in Preisendanz, based on l. 91. Cf. the apparatus ad loc.

PGM V. 96–172

Stele of Jeu the hieroglyphist[11] in his letter:

"I summon you, Headless One, who created earth and heaven, who created night and day, / you who created light and darkness; you are Osoronnophris whom none has ever seen; you are Iabas; you are Iapos; you have distinguished the just and the unjust; you have made female and male; / you have revealed seed and fruits; you have made men love each other and hate each other.

"I am Moses your prophet to whom you have transmitted your mysteries / celebrated by Israel; you have revealed the moist and the dry and all nourishment; hear me.

"I am the messenger of Pharaoh Osoronnophris; / this is your true name which has been transmitted to the prophets of Israel. Hear me, ARBATHIAŌ REIBET ATHELEBERSĒTH [ARA] BLATHA ALBEU EBENPHCHI CHITASGOĒ IBAŌTH IAŌ; / listen to me and turn away this daimon."

"I call upon you, awesome and invisible god with an empty spirit,[12] AROGOGO-ROBRAŌ SOCHOU MODORIŌ PHALARCHAŌ OOO. Holy Headless One, deliver him, NN, from the daimon which restrains him, / ROUBRIAŌ MARI ŌDAM BAABNA-BAŌTH ASS ADŌNAI APHNIAŌ ITHŌLĒTH ABRASAX AĒŌŌY; mighty Headless One, deliver him, NN, from the daimon which restrains him. / MABARRAIŌ IOĒL KOTHA ATHORĒBALŌ ABRAŌTH, deliver him, NN AŌTH ABRAŌTH BASYM ISAK SABAŌTH IAŌ. /

"He is the lord of the gods; he is the lord of the inhabited world; he is the one whom the winds fear; he is the one who made all things by the command of his voice."

"Lord, King, Master, Helper, / save the soul, IEOU PYR IOU PYR IAŌT IAĒŌ IOOU ABRASAX SABRIAM OO YY EY OO YY ADŌNAIE, immediately, immediately,[13] good messenger of God ANLALA LAI GAIA APA DIACHANNA CHORYN." /

"I am the headless daimon with my sight in my feet; [I am] the mighty one [who possesses] the immortal fire; I am the truth who hates the fact that unjust deeds are done in the world; I am the one who makes the lightning flash and the thunder roll; / I am the one whose sweat is the heavy rain[14] which falls upon the earth that it might be inseminated; I am the one whose mouth burns completely; I am the one who begets and destroys; / I am the Favor of the Aion; my name is a heart encircled by a serpent; come forth and follow."

Preparation for the foregoing ritual: Write the formula[15] on a new sheet of papyrus, and after extending it from one / of your temples to the other, read the 6 names, while you face north saying,

"Subject to me all daimons, / so that every daimon, whether heavenly or aerial or earthly or subterranean or terrestrial or aquatic, might be obedient to me and every enchantment and scourge which is from God." / And all daimons will be obedient to you.

The beneficial sign is: ⟩

*Tr.: D. E. Aune.

11. The term ζωγράφος, usually translated "painter," is here rendered "hieroglyphist," after the suggestion of Wünsch (see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.).

12. On the notion of "empty spirit," see J. Reiling, Hermas and Christian Prophecy, NTS 37 (Leiden: Brill, 1973) 41–48.

13. The letters ηδε εδε are indicated in Preisendanz as magical words, but they may be Greek misspelled for ἤδη ἤδη, "immediately, immediately."

14. Cf. the expression ὕδωρ ὀχευτικόν in C.H. I. 17. See also Dieterich, Abraxas 25.

15. The term ὄνομα apparently refers to a formula containing a number of magical words. See also the apparatus ad loc.

PGM V. 172–212

Another way*:[16] "In order to catch a thief I summon you, Hermes,[17] immortal god, who cut a furrow down Olympos / and a holy barge, light-bearer Iao, the great immortal, shuddersome indeed to behold and shuddersome to hear. Hand over the thief whom I seek ABERAMENTHŌOULERTHEXENAXSONELYSŌTHNEMAREBA." / This formula* is to be said 2 times during the purificatory sacrifice.

Formula of bread and cheese:[18] "Come to me, LISSOIN MATERNA MAUERTĒ PRETEKTIOUN INTIKIOUS OLOKOTOUS PERIKLYSAI; / may you bring back to me what is lost and point out the thief today. I call upon Hermes, finder of thieves, Helios and the pupils[19] of Helios, / two who bring to light lawless deeds, and Themis,[20] Erinys,[21] Ammon, and Parammon, to take control of the thief's throat and to single him out / today, in this hour."

Preparation: The same formula during the purificatory sacrifice: Take a faïence vessel, add water, myrrh, and calf's-snout plant. Wet a branch of laurel [and sprinkle], / cleansing each one. Take a tripod and place it on an earthen altar, offer myrrh, frankincense, and a frog's tongue. Take unsalted winter wheat and goat-/ cheese, and give to each 8 drams of winter wheat and 8 drams of cheese while saying the following formula (inscribe this name and glue it underneath the tripod): "Master IAŌ, light-bearer, / hand over the thief whom I see." If one of them does not swallow what was given to him, he is the thief.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM V. 213–303

Hermes' ring.[22] Preparation of a scarab: Taking a scarab / engraved as described below, put it on a papyrus table and put under the table a clean sheet and olive twigs, scattering them about, and in the middle of the table / a small censer, burning myrrh and kyphi. Have ready a little faïence vessel in which there should be salve of lilies or myrrh or cinnamon. / And taking the ring put it into the salve, having in advance purified [it?][23] from everything, and burning on the censer the kyphi and myrrh. Leave [the ring] 3 days and, taking it[24] [from the table], put it in a pure place. Have at hand / for the consecration pure bread and whatever fruits are in season. When you have made another [incense] offering on [a fire of] grapevine twigs, during the offering take the ring from the / salve and put it on. Anoint yourself at dawn with the ointment from it and stand facing the sunrise [and] say the spell given below.

Carving of a scarab: Carve a scarab in costly green stone / and, having pierced [the stone], thread it with gold [wire?]. On the underside of the scarab engrave holy 16. That is, another spell to catch a thief. Originally this spell may have followed immediately after PGM V. 70–95 (a spell to catch a thief), but the Stele of Jeu (V. 96–172) was inserted between the two.

17. On Hermes, the god of thieves, see Dieterich, Abraxas 63; W. Fauth, "Hermes," KP 2 (1975): 1074–75. On the identification with IAŌ (ll. 176–77), see A. A. Barb, "Three Elusive Amulets," JWCI 27 (1964): 1–6.

18. See on this peculiar form of magic P. de Labriolle, "Artyrotyritae," RAC 1 (1950): 718–20.

19. For the "eye of Helios," see PGM IV. 2985 and n.

20. Themis is the personified Greek concept of justice, custom, and social law. See K. Latte, "Themis," PRE, 2nd series 5 (1934): 1626–30.

21. On the Erinys, see PGM IV. 2860 and n.

22. On Hermes' ring, see Hopfner, OZ II, secs. 294–95.

23. Presumably the ring, but the reference could be to the practitioner himself, or even to the salve. The Greek gives no indication of the object.

24. I.e., that in which it was laid.

Isis. And when you have consecrated it as written above, use it. The days in which it is proper to perform [the rite] are, [counting] from the rise / [of the new moon] the 7th, 9th, 10th, 12th, 14th, 16th, 21st, 24th, 25th. On the others, restrain yourself.

The spell to be said to Helios: "I am Thouth, discoverer and founder of drugs and letters. Come to me, you under the earth; arouse [yourself] for me, / great daimon, he of Noun,[25] the subterranean" (or [in other texts]: 'the [plural] Noun the subterranean'). I am the famous Heron,[26] egg of the ibis,[27] egg of the falcon, egg of the air-ranging Phoenix, having under my tongue the mud of Em;[28] / I wear the hide of Keph.[29] Unless I know what is in the minds of everyone, Egyptians, Greeks, Syrians, Ethiopians, of every race and people, unless I know[30] what / has been and what shall be, unless I know their skills and their practices and their works and their lives, and the names of them and of their fathers and / mothers and brothers and friends, even of those now dead, I will pour the blood of the black dog-face[31] as a drink offering in a new, faultless jar and put it on a new base and burn under it the bones of Hesies,[32] and I will shout[33] / in the port of Busiris that he remained in the river 3 days and 3 nights, Hesies, that he was carried by the current of the river / into the sea, that he was surrounded by the waves of the sea and by the mist of the air. Your belly is eaten by fish, and I will not / stop the fish chewing your body with their mouths, nor will the fish shut their mouths. I will take the fatherless boy away from his mother.[34] The pole [of the sky] will be brought down,[35] and the two mountains will be one. / I will let anoixis[36] loose against you and she will do what

25. PHNOYN refers to the primordial abyss; cf. PGM III. 554 and IV. 139. PHNOYN is the Bohairic spelling of the definite article before NOYN used as a vocative. [R.K.R.] See also Bonnet, RÄRG 535–36, s.v. "Nun."

26. Heron was a god of Greco-Roman Egypt, apparently a fusion of the "Thracian rider god" and the Egyptian god Atum; the name has no connection with the English bird name or the bird so called. [M.S.] See Bonnet, RÄRG 295–96, s.v. "Heron."

27. For the egg of the ibis, see Bonnet, RÄRG 321, s.v. "Ibis"; 162–64, s.v. "Ei"; Bergman, Isis-Seele und Osiris-Ei 76–87.

28. For this name, see PGM III. 636; V. 353. For possible explanations, see Preisendanz, vol. III, index, p. 219, s.v. "Ἐμ."

29. This name is unexplained; for suggestions, see Preisendanz, vol. III, index, p. 259 s.v. "κεφ." Em may be an abbreviation of Ammon, and Keph of Kynokephalos, i.e., baboon, symbol of Thoth, with whom the magician identified himself at the beginning of the spell. [M.S.]

30. For this threat against the deity see J. Bergman, "Mystische Anklänge in den altägyptischen Vorstellungen von Gott und Welt," in Mysticism, Scripta Instituti Donneriani Aboensis 5 (1970): 70–72.

31. The translation of the term follows the emendation in Preisendanz; see the apparatus ad loc. Clearly Anubis is meant. See also Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 317–19; idem, The Isis-Book 215–18. The reference is to the dog-headed god Anubis, assistant of Osiris, Isis, and Horus. It is not Thoth because (1) the magician has identified himself with Thoth; (2) this god face is "black," as Anubis commonly is in Egyptian paintings, whereas the Kynokephalos ("dog-headed," s.c. baboon) of Thoth is commonly tan. [M.S.]

32. For the name Hesies, see Glossary, s.v. "Esies."

33. For the myth recounted here, cf. Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 13, 356C–D, and the commentary by Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 312. For the threat to Busiris, cf. P. Smither, "A Ramesside Love-Charm," JEA 27 (1941): 131–32.

34. The fatherless boy is Horus; the mother, Isis. Cf. PGM III. 543.

35. For toppling the supports in heaven, cf. PGM III. 537–38; IV. 669. The two mountains of east and west (Bakhu and Manu) form the horizons of Egyptian cosmography; they derive from the mountains framing the Nile valley. See Bonnet, RÄRG 78, s.v. "Bachu"; 440, s.v. "Manu." [R.K.R.]

36. The papyrus has ἄνοιξιν from ἄνοιξις, "opening." The reference is obscure; it may refer to an unknown mythical or ritual item or it may be a corruption of the text. See the apparatus ad loc.; LSJ, s.v.

she wants. I will not let god or goddess give oracles until I, NN, know through and through what is in the minds of all men, Egyptians, / Syrians, Greeks, Ethiopians, of every race and people, those who question me and come into my sight, whether they speak or are silent, so that I can tell them / whatever has happened and is happening and is going to happen to them, and I know their skills and their lives and their practices and their works and their names / and those of their dead, and of everybody, and I can read a sealed letter[37] and tell them everything [in it] truly."

*Tr.: Morton Smith. How to carve, consecrate, and use a scarab; with the spell to be said when using it. Though the scarab is engraved with Isis and the spell is addressed to Helios, the ring is said to be "of Hermes" because the spell first identifies the magician with Hermes-Thoth. As Thoth he invokes Osiris (the Nile) from the underworld waters, to reveal to him all facts relevant to all men, and he threatens that, unless he receives this knowledge, he will destroy the remains of Osiris' body, reveal his mysteries, and generally upset the divine order.

PGM V. 304–69

*Taking hieratic papyrus or a / lead lamella and iron ring, put the ring on the papyrus and with a pen draw the outlines of the ring, inside and outside, then tint the outlined area with myrrhed ink, then write on this outlined area / of the ring—writing on the papyrus—the name,[38] and write the characters outside [the area], then, [in the circle] inside it, what you want not to happen, and "Let so-and-so's thoughts be bound so that he may not do NN thing." Then / putting the ring on its outline, which you made, and turning up the [areas of the papyrus] outside the outline, wrap up the ring until it is completely covered. Piercing [the package] through the characters / with the pen and tying it, say, "I bind NN with regard to NN [thing]. Let him not speak, not be contrary, not oppose; let him not be able to look me in the face nor speak against me; let him be subjected / to me, so long as this ring is buried. I bind his mind and his brains,[39] his desire, his actions, so that he may be slow [in his dealings] with all men." / And if it be a woman: "In order that she, NN, may not marry him, NN" (add the usual). Then, taking it [the package] away to the grave of someone untimely dead, dig [a hole] four fingers deep and put it in and say, "Spirit of the dead, who[ever] / you are, I give over NN to you, so that he may not do NN thing." Then, when you have filled up the hole, go away. Better do it when the moon is waning.

The things to be written inside the circle [bounded by the inner side of the ring's outline] are these: "AROA / MATHRA ERESCHIGALCH EDANTA IABOU NĒ AKĒ IAŌ DARYKNŌ MANIĒL, let NN thing not be done so long as this ring is buried." Bind [the package] with ties, [using] cords you have made, / and thus deposit it. The [wrapped] ring may also be thrown into an unused well, or [into the grave] of [anyone dead] untimely. After the characters, write also the following, under the [outline of the] ring, as a rectangle: "ARCHOOL LAILAM / SEMESILAMPH AMMOPHORIŌN IŌAĒ PHTHOUTH EŌ PHRĒ, the greatest daimon, IAŌ SABAŌTH ARBATHIAŌ LAILAM OSORNŌPHRI EM PHRĒ PHRĒ PHTHA CHRŌIŌ IAŌ BABOURĒ THIMAM EN PHRĒ RE/NOUSI SABAŌTH BARBARTHIAŌ THACHRA OUCHEETH

"ἄνοιξις"; Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 522, 523, 536 for the ritual of the "Opening of the mouth."

37. For the magical ability to read sealed letters, see the tale of Khamwas in Lichtheim, Ancient Egyptian Literature III, 142–51. [R.K.R.]

38. Given below, ll. 339–41.

39. In Greek, "the midriff," representing the classical term for the supposed location of the thinking element of the body. [M.S.]

ESORNŌPHRI" and the entire 59 [letter formula] above,[40] which you also put inside [the circle bounded by the ring's outline].[41]

[The same schedule can be written on a lead lamella; then, putting the / ring in [the middle] and folding up [the lead] around it, cover [it] with plaster. After the rectangle underneath [write] also the IAEŌ formula[42] and the following: "BAKAXICHYCH MENEBAICHYCH ABRASAX AŌ, prevent NN thing," [or], as the names are found in the authentic [text]: / "ARPHOOL LAILAM SEMESILAM IAEŌ (formula) BAKAXICHYCH ABRASAX AŌ ARCHŌMILAK MENESILAM IAEŌ OYŌ BAKAXICHYCH ABRASAX ŌII, prevent the NN thing."

*Tr.: Morton Smith. This untitled text gives directions for a familiar type of magical rite called defixio—essentially sending a letter to underworld powers to ask or compel them to do something to a specified victim. Many defixiones are, like this one, intended to prevent things from happening. The gods invoked here are a curious lot—solar and subterranean, Hebrew, Egyptian, and Mesopotamian, suggesting that the text has grown, like many, by ignorant additions.

PGM V. 370–446

*Take 28 leaves from a pithy laurel tree[43] and some virgin earth and seed of wormwood, wheat meal and the herb calf's-snout[44] (but I have heard[45] from a certain

40. This refers to the top of the papyrus page, where the scribe has written on the margin, with a few errors, the formula IAEŌBAPHRENEMOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAEU and the same letters (without the final U) in reverse order. Together they form a fifty-nine-letter palindrome which often occurs in magical texts, mainly in spells to the solar deities. [M.S.]

41. (On the drawing): the reading of the third line in the circle from TH on, including the letters NIN (?) written above, is uncertain. If PHTHANNI is read, Phtha contains the name of the Egyptian god revered as creator. [M.S.]

42. See ll. 366–69 and the picture, l. 357. The palindrome is also printed in Preisendanz, apparatus to l. 357.

43. Cf. on this point PGM I. 264.

44. On this plant see PGM V. 198 and III. 468.

45. Undoubtedly, these are the words of a redactor, but expressions in the first person (here and l. 383) are rare. More often such variants are introduced by οἱ δέ . . . (cf. l. 390). [E.N.O.]

man of Herakleopolis that he takes 28 new sprouts from an olive tree, / which is cultivated, the famous one). Those are carried[46] by an uncorrupted boy.[47] Also pounded together with the foregoing ingredients is the liquid of an ibis egg[48] and made into a uniform dough and into a figure of Hermes wearing a mantle, while the moon is ascending in Aries or Leo or / Virgo or Sagittarius. Let Hermes be holding a herald's staff. And write the spell on hieratic papyrus or on a goose's windpipe (again, just as I heard from the man of Herakleopolis), and insert it into the figure for the purpose of / inspiration; and when you want to use it, take some papyrus and write the spell and the matter; and shave your head[49] and roll a hair into the papyrus, binding it with a piece from a purple cord, and put on the outside of it an olive branch, and / place it[50] at the feet of the Hermes (but others say: place it upon him). And let the figure lie in a shrine of lime wood. But when you want to use it, place the shrine beside your head / along with the god and recite as on the altar you burn incense, earth from a grain-bearing field and one lump of rock salt. Let it rest beside your head, and go to sleep after saying the spell without giving an answer to anyone. /

"Hermes,[51] lord of the world, who're in the heart,
O circle of Selene, spherical
And square, the founder of the words of speech,
Pleader of justice's cause, garbed in a mantle,[52]
With winged sandals, turning airy course /
Beneath earth's depths, who hold the spirit's reins,
O eye of Helios, O mighty one,
Founder of full-voiced speech,[53] who with your lamps
Give joy to those beneath earth's depths, to mortals
Who've finished life.[54] / The prophet of events
And Dream divine you're said to be, who send Forth oracles by day and night; you cure
All pains of mortals with your healing cares.
Hither, O blessed one, O mighty son
Of Memory, / who brings full mental powers,
In your own form both graciously appear
And graciously render the task for me,
A pious man, and render your form gracious

46. Apparently the subject of βαστάζεται is all the ingredients named above. [E.N.O.]

47. See on this medium of the "uncorrupted boy" PGM II. 56; V. 87; VII. 544, and T. Hopfner, "Die Kindermedien in den griechisch-ägyptischen Zauberpapyri," in Recueil d'études dédiées à la mémoire de N. P. Kondakov (Prague: Seminarium Kondakovianum, 1926) 65–74; R. Ganschinietz, Hippolytos' Capitel gegen die Magier, Refut. haer. IV. 28–42, TU 39/3 (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1913) 30, 32–33.

48. See on this point PGM V. 252 and n.

49. This is done in imitation of Egyptian priests. See S. Sauernon, The Priests of Ancient Egypt (New York: Grove Press, 1960) 37. On the shaving of the head by the initiates of Isis, see Apuleius, Met. 11. 28; Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 3–4, 352C; and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 268–69.

50. For hair sacrifices in Egyptian religion, see Bonnet, RÄRG 267–68, s.v. "Haaropfer"; Betz, Lukian 131, n. 3.

51. Although the text of the following lines is quite fragmentary, enough remains to show that they are dactylic hexameters. Consequently they have been accepted as one version of the reconstructed Hymns 15–16, ll. 1–15; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 429. This version is, however, very different from that in PGM VII. 668–80 and XVIIb. 1–23. [E.N.O.]

52. Cf. l. 378 above.

53. A repetition of the idea expressed in l. 402.

54. A reference to the role of Hermes as the guide of the dead to the underworld.

To me, NN,
That I may comprehend you by your skills
Of prophecy, by your own wond'rous deeds. /
I ask you, lord, be gracious to me and Without deceit appear and prophesy to me."

Recite this both at sunrise and moonrise.

The stele written on the papyri belonging to the figure: "YESENNIGADŌN ORTHŌ BAUBŌ / NOĒRE KODĒRE SOIRE SOIRE SANKANTHARA ERESCHIGAL ANKISTĒ DŌDEKAKISTĒ AKROUROBORE[55] KODĒRE SĒMEA KENTEU KONTEU KENTEU KĒRIDEU DARYGKŌ LYKYNXYNTA KAMPYCHRĒ IRINŌTON LOUMANATA . / . . ION KOMANDRON CHREIBACHA NOUBACHA NOUMILLON EROUPHI TETROUPHI LIBINOU NOUMILLON CHANDARA TON PHERPHEREU DROUĒR MAROUĒR" (say it 3 times, then / the usual formula).

Spell of compulsion: "OUKRA NOUKRA PETIRINODE TMAISIA, terrible-eyed, DRYSALPIPS BLEMENNITHEN BANDYODMA TRIPSADA ARIBA . . . TA KRATARNA" (then the hundred-lettered name of Hermes). . . .[56]

/ Another: "IOUKRAIŌNIOU (spoken to the lamp) ŌCHMARMACHŌ TONNOURAI CHRĒMILLON DERKYŌN NIA IAŌ SOUMPSĒPHISON SOUMPSĒNIS SIASIAS IAŌ, you who shake the world, come in and prophesy / concerning the NN matter, THOIS KOTOTH PHTHOUPHNOUN NOUEBOUĒ."

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. For a discussion of ll. 370–439, see Hopfner, OZ II, section 174.

PGM V. 447–58

*On a jasperlike agate engrave Sarapis seated, facing forwards (?), holding an Egyptian royal scepter and on the scepter an ibis, and on the back of the stone / the [magical] name [of Sarapis?], and keep it shut up. When need [arises] hold the ring in your left hand, and in your right a spray of olive and laurel [twigs], waving them toward the lamp while saying the spell 7 times. And when you have put / [the ring] on the index finger of your left hand with the stone inside, [keep it] thus and, going off[57] [to bed] without speaking to anybody, go to sleep holding the stone to your left ear.

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM V. 459–89

*Another way: "I call upon you who created / earth and bones[58] and all flesh and all spirit and who established the sea and suspended (?)[59] the heavens, who separated[60] the light from the darkness, the Supreme Intelligence[61] / who lawfully ad-

55. Cf. on this formula the Glossary, s.v. "YESSIMMIGADON/AKROUROBORE formula."

56. The name is missing here, but the papyrus left space for its insertion later. Cf. the apparatus ad loc. For one-hundred-letter names, see PGM IV. 242, 1209, 1380.

57. Reading the papyrus ἀπεχ̲— as an abbreviation of ἀπερχόμενος rather than Preisendanz's ἀπεχόμενος, which would be awkward Greek. See the apparatus ad loc. [M.S.]

58. See on this point LXX Jb 10:9–11.

59. The text is corrupt at this point; for suggested emendations, see the apparatus ad loc. Cf. Preisendanz's translation: "der . . . festgenagelt hat den Himmel"; Festugière, La Révélation IV, 90: "solidement cloué le ciel."

60. Cf. Gn 1:4, 14, 18; Wisd Sol. 7:29–30. See Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen 107; Festugière, La Révélation IV. 190.

61. The concept of the divine Nus (Mind) is an influence from Greek philosophy. Cf. also PGM XIII. 173, 487. See Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 49, 371A; C. H. I. 2, 6, 9; X. 19–21; XIII. 21. See J. Dillon, The Middle Platonists (London: Duckworth, 1977) 283, 372, 382, 389, 391, 393; Reitzenstein, Poimandres 279, n. 2; Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 199–200 and index, s.v. "Nus, Nous."

ministrates[62] all things. Eternal Eye, Daimon of daimons, god of gods, the lord of the spirits, the invariable AIŌN IAŌ OYĒI, hear my voice.

/ "I call upon you, master of the gods, high-thundering Zeus, sovereign Zeus, ADŌNAI, lord IAŌ OYĒE; I am he who calls upon you, great god, in Syrian: 'ZAALAĒRIPHPHOU,' and you must not / ignore my voice (in Hebrew: 'ABLANATHANALBA ABRASILŌA'); for I am SILTHACHŌOUCH LAILAM BLASALŌTH IAŌ IEŌ NEBOUTH SABIOTH ARBŌTH ARBATHIAŌ IAŌTH SABAŌTH PA/TOURĒ ZAGOURĒ BAROUCH ADŌNAI ELŌAI ABRAAM[63] BARBARAUŌ NAUSIPH, high-minded one, immortal, who possess the crown of the whole [world], SIEPĒ SAKTIETĒ BIOU BIOU SPHĒ SPHĒ NOUSI NOUSI / SIETHO SIETHO CHTHETHŌNI RIGCH ŌĒA Ē ĒŌA AŌĒ IAŌ ASIAL SARAPI OLSŌ ETHMOURĒSINI SEM LAU LOU LOURIGCH."

It loosens shackles, makes invisible, sends dreams; [it is] a spell for gaining favor. (Add the usual for what you want.)

*Tr.: D. E. Aune.

PGM Va. 1–3

*"O Helios BERBELŌCH CHTHŌTHŌMI ACH SANDOUM ECHNIN ZAGOUĒL, bring me into union with you" (add the usual). Then anoint yourself, and you will have a direct vision.

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM VI. 1–47

*. . . His encounter with Helios [takes place] on the 2nd, but the invocation itself is spoken when [the moon] is full. But you will accomplish a better encounter at [sun]rise on the 4th, when the god is on the [increase,[1] from the ground floor of a house]. Say, therefore, to the rising sun[2] / [the following] prayer:

"[Laurel,][3] Apollo's holy plant [of presage,
Which] Phoebus [tasted once] and with [the fresh-
Cut] branches wreathed his [holy] head, adorned
With tresses long [and golden]. In his hands
He shook [a scepter] / on the [peaks of Mount
Parnassus], lofty and with many vales
[And gave to all] the gods[4] [responses] and
To mortals prophesied. [For in the throes
Of grievous love], it was Apollo who Himself [gave you, a nymph], dread virgin, power
[To utter presages. Come quickly hither

62. The doctine of διοίκησις points to philosophical influence. Cf. also LXX Wisd Sol. 8:1; Philo, De opif. mundi 3; De spec. leg. IV. 187; C. H. I. 9. See Festugière, La Révélation IV, 190, n. 3.

63. The Greek underlying these magical words corresponds in part to the Jewish blessing, "Blessed be Jahwe, . . . god of Abraham. . . ." It is not clear whether or not the magician understood these words. A similar formula written in Greek occurs on a gold lamella published by R. G. Collingwood and R. P. Wright, The Roman Inscriptions of Britain I (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1965), n. 436. See also Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen 106–7.

1. An apparent reference to the spring, when the days grow longer. Cf. PGM XIII. 388–91. [E.N.O.]

2. The sun is identical with the god Helios; see Glossary, s.v.

3. These dactylic hexameters (ll. 6–21) are also the reconstructed Hymn 13. See Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 248. PGM VI. 6–7 (Hymn 13. 1–2) also appear at PGM II. 81–82 (Hymn 11. 1–2), and l. 6 also appears at PGM VI. 40 (Hymn 14.1). [E.N.O.]

4. In Hymn 13. 6 Preisendanz has changed ἑοῖς to ϑεοῖς.

To me beseeching you] in holy measures[5] /
[And] in my hands holding [a laurel leaf].[6]
Send me [divine responses] and a holy Prophetic sign. In lucid [words], O priestess,
[Reveal all things]: both [when this will occur]
And how it will be done. [Give me a presage,]
So that with it [I may perform a test]
On [anything. / Subduer, hither come!
Lo you,] mankind's Subduer, mankind's [force!
Come, blessed Paian,][7] most supreme, [help] me;
[Come hither to me, golden-tressed], IEŌ,
E'en thou, Paian, [the very lord of song.
Come thou to me,] O Phoibos, many-named.
O Phoibos, / sing out clear with presages,
Phoibos Apollo, Leto's son, far-worker,
Hither, come hither, hither come; respond
With prophecies, give presage in night's hour."
Then speak, declaiming[8] this: "EĒ IE IE ĒI IŌ . . . IAŌIĒ IYE IA IAŌ Ē . . . OUŌ."
Then at sunset make your request again: /
"Hear me, god of the silver bow, who stand
Protector of Chryse and holy Cilla[9]
And are the mighty lord of Tenedos,
Gold-shining, hurricane and dragon-slayer,
MESEGKRIPHI,[10] Leto's son, SIAŌTH,
SABAŌTH, MELIOUCHOS, ruler, PEUCHṘĒ,
Night-wanderer, SESĒGGEN, BARPHARAGGĒS, /
ARBĒTHŌ, god of many forms, O thou
Who're fond of chariots,[11] ARBATHIAŌ
Smintheus, if e'er I've roofed a pleasing shrine
For you, or if I've ever burned for you
Fat thighs of bulls or goats, grant this my prayer."[12]
And in the same way in his encounter with Selene, as follows: /
"Laurel,[13] Apollo's holy plant of presage,

5. "In holy measures" translates ἱεροῖσι ποδίλοις. Although Preisendanz says "auf heiligen Sandalen," this sense has no place in the passage: first, the word order suggests that the phrase goes closely with μοι λισσομένῳ ("to me as I pray"); second, Daphne's mythology seems to have nothing to do with sandals (cf. L. von Sybel, in Roscher I [1884–86] 954–55, s.v. "Daphne," although the article omits this passage and PGM in general); and third, this passage is hymnic, and one meaning of πέδιλον (as the diminuitive of ποῦς) is "meter," "measure," for which cf. Pindar, O. 3.5 and 6. 8. [E.N.O.]

6. The mixing of the plant and the goddess in this hymn is another good example of the thin line between inanimate objects and personified spirits of these objects. Cf. esp. ll. 40–41 below. [E.N.O.]

7. These dactylic hexameters (ll. 22–38), many of which are metrically faulty, are the reconstructed Hymn 10; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 244–45. Ll. 24–27 (Hymn 10. 4–6) appear, in slightly altered form, at PGM II. 2–4 (Hymn 9. 1–3). [E.N.O.]

8. The translation is problematic, but cf. perhaps Plutarch, Mor. 131A; Cic. 4, 862F. [E.N.O.]

9. Cf. Homer, Il. 1. 37–38.

10. The voces magicae in these verses are intended to be a part of the verses. The translation attempts to treat them in the same way, but some liberties must be taken. [E.N.O.]

11. φιλάρματε, "fond of chariots," is the reading in Hymn 10. 12; the papyrus has φιλαίματε, "fond of blood." [E.N.O.]

12. Cf. Homer, Il. 1. 39–41.

13. These dactylic hexameters are also the reconstructed Hymn 14; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 248. PGM VI. 40 (Hymn 14. 1) also appears at PGM II. 81 (Hymn 11. 1) and VI. 6 (Hymn 13. 1). [E.N.O.]

O virgin Laurel, Laurel, Phoibos' mistress,
SABAŌTH[14] IAŌAŌO IAGCHŌTHIPYLA MOYSIARCHA[15] OTONYPON
Hither to me come quickly; haste to sing
Divine precepts to me [and to proclaim
Pure words] and in dark night [bring me true sayings].[16] /
45 RĒSABAAN AAN . . . ANA AANANAANANALAAA AAA AAA.[17]

It is for you, O Delios, O Nomios, O son of Leto and Zeus, to give persuasive oracles at night as you recount the truth through dream oracles."

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. This papyrus is badly mutilated, and little is gained by offering a translation of the scattered words and phrases that remain. Instead, for the three verse passages, the reconstructed texts of Hymns 10, 13, 14 have been used. Additional information appears at VI. 6, 22, and 40. [E.N.O.]

PGM VII. 1–148

Homer oracle:

1. 1-1-1 But on account of their accursed bellies they have miserable woes, [Od. 15. 344]
2. 1-1-2 neither to cast anchor stones nor to attach stern cables, [Od. 9. 137]
3. 1-1-3 being struck by the sword, and the water was becoming red with blood. [Il. 21. 21]
4. 1-1-4 . . .
5. 1-1-5 stood holding a scepter, which Hephaistos produced by his labors. [Il. 2. 101]
6. 1-1-6 . . .
7. 1-2-1 amends I wish to make and to give a boundless ransom. [Il. 9. 120; 19. 138]
8. 1-2-2 surely then the gods themselves have ruined your mind. [Il. 7. 360; 12. 234]
9. 1-2-3 . . .
10. 1-2-4 . . .
11. 1-2-5 let it lie in the great hall. And I wish for your happy arrival [Od. 15. 128]
12. 1-2-6 . . .
13. 1-3-1 . . .
14. 1-3-2 . . .
15. 1-3-3 But Zeus does not accomplish for men all their purposes. [Il. 18. 328]
16. 1-3-4 I would even wish it, and it would be much better [Il. 3. 41; Od. 11. 358; 20. 316]
17. 1-3-5 Then indeed would he smash all your fine show, [Od. 17. 244]
18. 1-3-6 I also care about all these things, woman. But very terribly [Il. 6. 441]
19. 1-4-1 . . .
20. 1-4-2 speaking good things, but they were contriving evil things in their hearts. [Od. 17. 66]

14. The voces magicae in these lines make no pretense of being verse and for that reason are omitted from Hymn 14. [E.N.O.]

15. Cf. the epithet ὁ Μουσάρχος, "leader of the Muses," belonging to Apollo. See LSJ, s.v.

16. See Hymn 14. 4–5 in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 248.

17. The voces magicae here appear immediately after "in dark night" in the papyrus, but because of the addition of two half-lines in Hymn 14, it is more convenient to complete the translation of the hymn before giving these voces. [E.N.O.]

21. 1-4-3 The glorious gifts of the gods are surely not to be cast aside, [Il. 3. 65]
22. 1-4-4 . . .
23. 1-4-5 . . .
24. 1-4-6 These things, Zeus-nurtured Skamander, will be as you order. [Il. 21. 223]
25. 1-5-1 a joy to your enemies, and a disgrace to yourself? [Il. 3. 51]
26. 1-5-2 Within this very year, Odysseus will arrive here, [Od. 14. 161; 19. 306]
27. 1-5-3 No use indeed to you, since you will not lie clad in them, [Il. 22. 513]
28. 1-5-4 And to the victor are to go the woman and the possessions. [Il. 3. 255]
29. 1-5-5 The rule of the many is no good. Let there be one ruler, [Il. 2. 204]
30. 1-5-6 And the gateway is full of ghosts, and full also is the courtyard, [Od. 20. 355]
31. 1-6-1 We have won great honor. We have killed glorious Hektor, [Il. 22. 393]
32. 1-6-2 Who would undertake and complete this task for ? [Il. 10. 303]
33. 1-6-3 Not even if his gifts to me should be as numerous as the grains of sand and particles of dust, [Il. 9. 385]
34. 1-6-4 . . .
35. 1-6-5 . . .
36. 1-6-6 . . .
37. 2-1-1 For no island is made for driving horses or has broad meadows, [Od. 4. 607]
38. 2-1-2 in the past, when you were boys, did you listen to your [Od. 4. 688]
39. 2-1-3 . . .
40. 2-1-4 . . .
41. 2-1-5 . . .
42. 2-1-6 His gifts are hateful to me, and I honor him not a whit. [Il. 9. 378]
43. 2-2-1 an only beloved heir to many possessions, [Il. 9. 482; Od. 16. 19 (?)]
44. 2-2-2 . . .
45. 2-2-3 . . .
46. 2-2-4 . . .
47. 2-2-5 So they thronged about him. And near [Od. 24. 19]
48. 2-2-6 and fashioning lies out of what nobody could see. [Od. 11. 366]
49. 2-3-1 be valiant, that later generations may also speak well of you. [Od. 1. 302]
50. 2-3-2 leaning on the grave marker over a barrow heaped up by men [Il. 11. 371]
51. 2-3-3 go. You have a way, and beside the sea your ships [Il. 9. 43]
52. 2-3-4 You will be proved a liar, and will not go on to fulfill your word. [Il. 19. 107]
53. 2-3-5 And his mother for her part continued the lament amid a flood of tears, [Il. 22. 79]
54. 2-3-6 Not even if remaining for five or six years [Od. 3. 115]
55. 2-4-1 So he spoke, and ordered Paion to administer a cure. [Il. 5. 899]
56. 2-4-2 These things, unhappy man, will I accomplish and do for you. [Od. 11. 80]

57. 2-4-3 How can you propose to render toil useless and ineffectual? [Il. 4. 26]
58. 2-4-4 a thing delayed, late of fulfillment, whose fame will never perish. [Il. 2. 325]
59. 2-4-5 Sooner would you grow weary and return to your native land. [Od. 3. 117]
60. 2-4-6 to go, that he may bring poisonous drugs from there, [Od. 2. 329]
61. 2-5-1 Husband, you departed from life young, and me behind as a widow [Il. 24. 725]
62. 2-5-2 in which way I will for sure accomplish everything and how it will be brought to pass, [Il. 9. 310 (?)]
63. 2-5-3 Offer me not honey-tempered wine, honored mother, [Il. 6. 264]
64. 2-5-4 . . .
65. 2-5-5 . . .
66. 2-5-6 Do not orphan your son and make your wife a widow. [Il. 6. 432]
67. 2-6-1 would that they might now eat their last and final meal here. [Od. 4. 685]
68. 2-6-2 It is not meet for a man who speaks in the Council to sleep all the night through, [Il. 2. 24]
69. 2-6-3 What's wrong with you, that you took this wrath into your heart? [Il. 6. 326]
70. 2-6-4 But who knows if he will one day return and punish them for their violent deeds? [Od. 3. 216]
71. 2-6-5 wives I will provide for both and furnish possessions [Od. 21. 214]
72. 2-6-6 we may try the bow and complete the contest. [Od. 21. 180]
73. 3-1-1 For it's no reproach to flee evil, nor by night. [Il. 14. 80]
74. 3-1-2 Be mindful of every form of valor. Now you needs must [Il. 22. 268]
75. 3-1-3 as a widow at home. And the boy is still just a baby, [Il. 22. 484; cf. 24. 726]
76. 3-1-4 But do you in no wise enter the moil of Ares, [Il. 18. 134]
77. 3-1-5 For amid misfortune mortals quickly grow old. [Od. 19. 360]
78. 3-1-6 . . .
79. 3-2-1 . . .
80. 3-2-2 Such a man is not alive nor will be born, [Od. 6. 201]
81. 3-2-3 Of a truth, child, there's nothing really wrong with this, [Il. 18. 128]
82. 3-2-4 Now is it no longer possible for him to find escape from us, [Il. 22. 219]
83. 3-2-5 we will ransom with bronze and gold, for it is within. [Il. 22. 50]
84. 3-2-6 drink, and do not vie with younger men. [Od. 21. 310]
85. 3-3-1 where are you fleeing, turning your back like a craven in the ranks? [Il. 8. 94]
86. 3-3-2 Would that such a man be called my husband [Od. 6. 244]
87. 3-3-3 plants her head in heaven and walks upon the earth. [Il. 4. 443]
88. 3-3-4 But Zeus does not accomplish for men all their purposes. [Il. 18. 328]
89. 3-3-5 and nodded for his army to survive and not to perish. [Il. 8. 246]
90. 3-3-6 Would that you had not pled with the noble son of Peleus, [Il. 9. 698]
91. 3-4-1 Honey-sweet wine has the best of you, which others also [Od. 21.

293]

92. 3-4-2 Act in whatever way your mind is moved, and no longer hold back. [Il. 22. 185]
93. 3-4-3 For it is fated for both to turn the same ground red [Il. 18. 329]
94. 3-4-4 keep on shooting like this, if haply you may become a light to the Danaans [Il. 8. 282]
95. 3-4-5 as there is no one who could keep the dogs off your head, [Il. 22. 348]
96. 3-4-6 You will not kill me, since I am for sure not subject to Fate. [Il. 22. 13]
97. 3-5-1 staying right here you would help me watch over this house [Od. 5. 208]
98. 3-5-2 Get out of the gateway, old man, or it won't be long before you're dragged out by the foot. [Od. 18. 10]
99. 3-5-3 Better for a man to escape evil by flight than to be caught. [Il. 14. 81]
100. 3-5-4 and declare to no one, neither man nor woman, [Od. 13. 308]
101. 3-5-5 of wheat or barley. And the heaps fall thick and fast. [Il. 11. 69]
102. 3-5-6 Whatever sort of word you speak, such would you hear. [Il. 20. 250]
103. 3-6-1 was opposed to giving Helen to tawny Menelaos, [Il. 11. 125]
104. 3-6-2 or will you alter your purpose? The hearts of the good are flexible. [Il. 15. 203]
105. 3-6-3 Yet I for one never doubted, but at heart [Od. 13. 339]
106. 3-6-4 Eurymachos, it will not be so. And even you know it. [Od. 21. 257]
107. 3-6-5 You miserable foreigner, you have no sense at all. [Od. 21. 288]
108. 3-6-6 And the father granted him one thing, but denied him the other. [Il. 16. 250]
109. 4-1-1 Nay, go to your chambers and tend to your own work, [Od. 1. 356]
110. 4-1-2 Now then, do not even tell this to your wife. [Od. 11. 224 (alternate version)]
111. 4-1-3 would you have been stoned to death for all the wrongs you've done. [Il. 3. 57]
112. 4-1-4 you prayed to the immortals to see with a beard grown. [Od. 18. 176]
113. 4-1-5 and vow to Lycian-born Apollo the famous archer [Il. 4. 101]
114. 4-1-6 and no spirit of harmony unites wolves and sheep, [Il. 22. 263]
115. 4-2-1 Come now, let us make these concessions to one another, [Il. 4. 62]
116. 4-2-2 And in the throng were Strife and Uproar, and Fate-of-Death, [Il. 18. 535]
117. 4-2-3 . . .
118. 4-2-4 Up, rush into battle, the man you have always claimed to be. [Il. 4. 264]
119. 4-2-5 . . .
120. 4-2-6 You baby, what use now to keep your bow idle? [Il. 21. 474]
121. 4-3-1 For even fair-tressed Niobe turned her mind to food, [Il. 24. 602]
122. 4-3-2 after giving a mass of bronze and gold and raiment [Od. 5. 38]
123. 4-3-3 Surely then the journey will not be useless or fail to occur. [Od. 2. 273]
124. 4-3-4 One omen is best, to defend your country. [Il. 12. 243]
125. 4-3-5 I will gild her horns all round and sacrifice her to you. [Il. 10. 294]

126. 4-3-6 and you would gain every Trojan's thanks and praise, [Il. 4. 95]
127. 4-4-1 put in with your ship, since women are no longer trustworthy. [Od. 11. 456]
128. 4-4-2 It is not possible or proper to deny your request. [Il. 14. 212]
129. 4-4-3 would straightway fit his will to your desire and mine. [Il. 15. 52]
130. 4-4-4 and give him instruction. And it will be beneficial for him to obey. [Il. 11. 789]
131. 4-4-5 will give glory to me, and your soul to horse-famed Hades. [Il. 5. 654]
132. 4-4-6 fill up his ship with gold and bronze aplenty, [Il. 9. 137]
133. 4-5-1 but tell one part, and let the other be concealed. [Od. 11. 443]
134. 4-5-2 and at birth Zeus sends a weight of misery. [Il. 10. 71]
135. 4-5-3 alone to have intelligence, but they are flitting shades. [Od. 10. 495]
136. 4-5-4 yielding to his indignation. But they now withheld from him the gifts [Il. 9. 598]
137. 4-5-5 I rejoice at hearing what you say, son of Laërtes. [Il. 19. 185]
138. 4-5-6 But Zeus causes men's prowess to wax or to wane, [Il. 20. 242]
139. 4-6-1 a terrible man. He would be quick to blame even the blameless. [Il. 11. 654]
140. 4-6-2 with all haste. For now would you capture the broad-wayed city [Il. 2. 66]
141. 4-6-3 Endure now, my heart. An even greater outrage did you once endure, [Od. 20. 18]
142. 4-6-4 You lunatic, sit still and listen to the word of others, [Il. 2. 200]
143. 4-6-5 had cast aside wrath and chosen friendship. [Il. 16. 282]
144. 4-6-6 so good it is for a son to be left by a dead [Od. 3. 196]
145. 5-1-1 Here then, spread under your chest a veil, [Od. 5. 346]
146. 5-1-2 'Tis impiety to exult over men slain. [Od. 22. 412]
147. 5-1-3 through immortal night, when other mortals sleep? [Il. 24. 363]
148. 5-1-4 How then could I forget divine Odysseus? [Od. 1. 65]
149. 5-1-5 lurid death and o'erpowering doom laid hold of [Il. 5. 83]
150. 5-1-6 So there's nothing else as horrible and vile as a woman [Od. 11. 427]
151. 5-2-1 Let us not advance to fight the Danaans around the ships. [Il. 12. 216]
152. 5-2-2 to put up a defense, when some fellow provokes a fight. [Il. 24. 369; Od. 16. 72; 21. 133]
153. 5-2-3 nor do children at his knees call him "papa" [Il. 5. 408]
154. 5-2-4 I am this very man, back home now. And after many toils [Od. 21. 207]
155. 5-2-5 Talk not like this. There'll be no change before [Il. 5. 218]
156. 5-2-6 let him stay here the while, even though he's eager for Ares. [Il. 19. 189]
157. 5-3-1 And do not, exulting in war and battle, [Il. 16. 91]
158. 5-3-2 never to have gone to bed with her and had intercourse, [Il. 9. 133; 19. 176]
159. 5-3-3 and moistens the lips, but fails to moisten the palate. [Il. 22. 495]
160. 5-3-4 Take heart! Let these matters not trouble your thoughts. [Il. 18. 463]
161. 5-3-5 But this mad dog I'm unable to hit. [Il. 8. 299]
162. 5-3-6 Keep quiet, friend, and do as I say. [Il. 4. 412]

163. 5-4-1 Bad deeds don't prosper. The slow man for sure overtakes the swift, [Od. 8. 329]
164. 5-4-2 They shut fast and locked the doors of the hall. [Od. 21. 236]
165. 5-4-3 Ah, poor man! Death's not at all on your mind, [Il. 17. 201]
166. 5-4-4 Odysseus has come and reached home, though he was long in coming. [Od. 23. 7]
167. 5-4-5 in full he will accomplish it at last, and the penalty they pay is great, [Il. 4. 161]
168. 5-4-6 and therein was Strife, and therein Valor, and therein chilling Attack, [Il. 5. 740]
169. 5-5-1 but 'tis most wretched to die and meet one's doom by starvation. [Od. 12. 342]
170. 5-5-2 shall I be laid low when I die. But good repute is now my goal, [Il. 18. 121]
171. 5-5-3 Up, rush into battle, the man you have always claimed to be. [Il. 4. 264]
172. 5-5-4 In no way do I mock you, dear child, nor am I playing tricks. [Od. 23. 26]
173. 5-5-5 but she stayed Alkmene's labor and stopped her from giving birth. [Il. 19. 119]
174. 5-5-6 But come, and hereafter I shall make amends for this, if now anything wrong [Il. 4. 362]
175. 5-6-1 Where are you two rushing? What causes the heart within your breast to rage? [Il. 8. 413]
176. 5-6-2 Pray now, let him not be too much on your mind. [Od. 13. 421]
177. 5-6-3 But the gods do not, I ween, give men all things at the same time. [Il. 4. 320]
178. 5-6-4 Talk not like this. There'll be no change before [Il. 5. 218]
179. 5-6-5 So he spake, but did not move the mind of Zeus by saying this. [Il. 12. 173]
180. 5-6-6 but Odysseus nodded no and checked him in his eagerness. [Od. 21. 129]
181. 6-1-1 How can you want to go alone to the ships of the Achaians? [Il. 24. 203]
182. 6-1-2 him a bridegroom in his house, who left as only child a daughter [Od. 7. 65]
183. 6-1-3 And too, I've taken the mist from your eyes, which before was there, [Il. 5. 127]
184. 6-1-4 we may try the bow and complete the contest. [Od. 21. 180]
185. 6-1-5 And I know that my arrival was longed for by you two [Od. 21. 209]
186. 6-1-6 I shall dress him in a mantle and a tunic, fine garments. [Od. 16. 79; 17. 550; 21. 339]
187. 6-2-1 by fastening a noose sheer from a high rafter, [Od. 11. 278]
188. 6-2-2 remembering our excellence, of the sort that even we [Od. 8. 244]
189. 6-2-3 the sea's great expanse they cross, since this is the Earthshaker's gift to them. [Od. 7. 35]
190. 6-2-4 Nay, come on with the bow. You'll soon be sorry for obeying everybody. [Od. 21. 369]
191. 6-2-5 But hurry into battle, and rouse the other soldiers. [Il. 19. 139]

192. 6-2-6 For mighty Herakles, not even he escaped his doom, [Il. 18. 117]
193. 6-3-1 amends I wish to make and to give a boundless ransom. [Il. 9. 120; 19. 138]
194. 6-3-2 And let him stand up among the Argives and swear an oath to you [Il. 19. 175]
195. 6-3-3 The man is nearby. Our search will not be long, if you are willing [Il. 14. 110]
196. 6-3-4 and not quite suddenly, and a very god should be the cause? [Od. 21. 196]
197. 6-3-5 Verily, these things have already happened, and not otherwise could [Il. 14. 53]
198. 6-3-6 On now, follow close! In action numbers make a difference. [Il. 12. 412]
199. 6-4-1 surely then the gods themselves have ruined your mind. [Il. 7. 360; 12. 234]
200. 6-4-2 Take heart, and let your thoughts not be of death. [Il. 10. 383]
201. 6-4-3 by her wailing she rouse from sleep her household servants, [Il. 5. 413]
202. 6-4-4 Come now in strict silence, and I shall lead the way, [Od. 7. 30]
203. 6-4-5 are there ears for hearing, and sense and respect are dead. [Il. 15. 129]
204. 6-4-6 as he was growing old. But the son did not grow old in his father's armor. [Il. 17. 197]
205. 6-5-1 to return home and behold the day of homecoming. [Od. 5. 220; 8. 466]
206. 6-5-2 Apollo of the silver bow did strike the one, still sonless, [Od. 7. 64]
207. 6-5-3 then you may hope to see your loved ones and reach [Od. 7. 76]
208. 6-5-4 As for you two, I will tell you exactly how it will be. [Od. 21. 212]
209. 6-5-5 For so shall I proclaim, and it will be accomplished too. [Il. 1. 212]
210. 6-5-6 and I shall send him wherever his heart and spirit urge him. [Od. 16. 81; 21. 342]
211. 6-6-1 idiot? You'll soon pay when the swift hounds devour you [Od. 21. 363]
212. 6-6-2 You would learn what mighty hands I have to back me up. [Od. 20. 237; 21. 202]
213. 6-6-3 In no wise do I think he will in that event take you for himself, nor is it proper. [Od. 21. 322]
214. 6-6-4 here we gather, waiting day after day. [Od. 21. 156]
215. 6-6-5 to reach decision making secret plans. Nor yet now to me [Il. 1. 542]
216. 6-6-6 Don't dare get it into your mind to escape from me, Dolon. [Il. 10. 447]

Here end the verses of the Homer oracle. May it help you!

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr. The so-called Homer oracle, a list of 216 isolated and disconnected Homeric verses, is in fact a manual designed to provide the reader with an oracular response to a personal inquiry. Concerned with matters of daily life such as we find in our newspaper horoscopes, the inquirer rolls three dice or knucklebones, each of which has its six surfaces numbered from one to six and is used to select a number from one of the three vertical number columns to the left of the Homeric verses (in each column, there are only six numbers to select from, though each occurs thirty-six times); one die thrown three times would achieve the same purpose. The three numbers selected by this process establish a horizontal number column that indicates which verse is to be consulted; e.g., a roll of 1, 3, 6 on the dice would guide the inquirer to no. 18. As is true with oracles in general, most of the responses provide ambiguous answers which leave the exact interpretation up to the reader.

In this translation of Homer, which usually follows the Oxford Classical Text rather than that of Preisendanz, a lowercase letter at the beginning of a translated verse indicates that the first word of the verse does not begin a sentence. Such verses often constitute or involve incomplete syntactical units. In general, the punctuation at the end of a translated verse is that of the Oxford text, although in some instances this policy cannot be strictly observed. In a number of cases both the text and the Homeric reference given by Preisendanz have been emended. Furthermore, each of the verses has been numbered consecutively for ready reference. Since in all but a few instances the text of the Homeric verse is certain, we have omitted the usual brackets used to indicate lacunae in the papyrus. For additional discussion on this special type of divination, see T. Hopfner, "Astragalomanteia," PRE.S 4 (1924) 51–56, esp. 54–55; cf. Franz Heinevetter, Würfel- und Buchstabenorakel in Griechenland und Kleinasien (Breslau, 1912).

PGM VII. 149–54

To keep bugs / out of the house: Mix goat bile with water and sprinkle it. To keep fleas out of the house: Wet rosebay with salt water, grind it and spread it. 150

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 155–67

Days and hours for divination: 155

1 at dawn
2 at noon
3 do not use
4 at dawn
/ 5 at dawn
6 do not use
7 at noon
8 throughout the whole day
9 do not use
/ 10 throughout the whole day
11 in the afternoon
12 throughout the [whole] day
13 throughout the whole day
14 at dawn
15 throughout the whole day
16 do not use
17 do not use
18 at dawn and in the afternoon
19 at dawn
20 at dawn 160
21 in the afternoon
[22] in the afternoon
[23] at dawn
24 at dawn
25 do not use 165
26 in the afternoon
27 throughout the whole day
28 throughout the whole day
29 throughout the whole day
30 in the afternoon

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 167–86

Demokritos' "table gimmicks":

To make bronzeware look like it's made of gold:[1] Mix native sulfur with chalky soil and wipe it off.[2]

/ To make an egg become like an apple: Boil the egg and smear it with a mixture 170 of egg-yolk and [red] wine.[3]

To make the chef unable to light the burner: Set a houseleek plant on his stove.

1. According to H. Diels and W. Kranz, Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker (Berlin: Weidmann, [8]1956), vol. II, p. 220, this recipe shows the beginnings of alchemy.

2. That is, one wipes off the mixture after it has been applied.

3. For coloring eggs, see the references in M. Wellmann, Die ΦΥΣΙΚΑ des Bolos Demokritos und der Magier Anaxilaos aus Larissa, part I, APAW 7 (1928): 57–58. Cf. also Athenaeus 13. 484e. Here, "egg yolk" can also mean "saffron."

To be able to eat garlic and not stink:[4] Bake beetroots and eat them.

To keep an old woman from either chattering or drinking too much: Mince some pine[5] / and put it in her mixed wine.

To make the gladiators painted [on the cups] "fight":[6] Smoke some "hare's-head" underneath them.

To make cold food burn the banqueter: Soak a squill in hot water and give it to him to wash with. To relieve him: [Apply] oil.

To let those who have difficulty intermingling[7] perform well: Give gum mixed with wine and honey / to be smeared on the face.

To be able to drink a lot and not get drunk:[8] Eat a baked pig's lung.

To be able to travel [a long way] home and not get thirsty:[9] Gulp down an egg beaten in wine.

To be able to copulate a lot:[10] Grind up fifty tiny pinecones with 2 ozs. of sweet wine and two pepper grains and drink it.

To get an erection[11] / when you want: Grind up a pepper with some honey and coat your "thing."

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky. This curious collection of recipes contains humorous tricks as well as helpful remedies presumably designed to be performed or used at a symposiastic dinner. Similar tricks are found scattered throughout the pages of Athenaeus' Deipnosophistae. See also PGM XIb; VII. 149–54; Delatte, Anecdota Atheniensia 449 (3–7); Wellmann, APAW.PH 7 (1928): 1–80. It has not been fully appreciated that this collection seems to refer to events that take place at a dinner table. This fact does not necessarily hold true for all the other examples of paignia.

PGM VII. 186–90

Favor and victory charm: Take a blood-eating gecko that has been found among the tombs and grasp its right front foot and cut it off with a reed, allowing the gecko to return to its own hole alive. Fasten the foot / of the creature to the fold of your garment and wear it.

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 191–92

Eternal spell for binding a lover: Rub together some gall of a wild boar, some rock salt, some Attic honey and smear the head of your penis.

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 193–96

For scorpion sting: On a clean piece of papyrus, write the characters and place it on the part which has the sting; wrap / the papyrus around it, and the sting will lose its pain immediately.

4. Cf. Athenaeus 3. 84c for a similar breath freshener.

5. Cf. Athenaeus 2. 57b–d for pine and pine kernels at a dinner.

6. It seems likely that the reference is to translucent, painted glass which, when lit, produces the effect.

7. The reference is presumably to those who are shy in a social setting: the concoction is to be applied to the face.

8. Cf. Athenaeus 2. 52d where eating almonds is said to prevent drunkenness.

9. In Athenaeus 2. 58f and 2.69f similar means for quenching thirst are found.

10. Cf. Athenaeus 1. 18d–e, where certain devices for having frequent sexual intercourse are mentioned.

11. See on this point PGM VII. 194–95; PDM lxi. 58–62.

These are the characters: (there are 11 characters).
*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 197–98

*__For discharge of the eyes__: Write [this] on a piece of papyrus and attach it as an amulet: "ROURARBISAROURBBARIASPHRĒN."
*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 199–201

*__For migraine headache__: Take oil in your hands and utter the spell / "Zeus sowed a grape seed: it parts the soil; he does not sow it; it does not sprout."
*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 201–2

*__*Another*__: Write these things on scarlet parchment: "ABRASAX  " (and add the usual). Place it, having made it into a plaster, on the side of the head.
*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 203–5

*__For coughs__: In black ink, write on hyena parchment: "THAPSATE STHRAITŌ"—[or] as I found in another [recipe]: "TEUTHRAIŌ THRAITEU THRAITŌ THABARBAŌRI ⊗ / LIKRALIRĒTA—deliver [him], NN, from the cough that holds him fast."
*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 206–7

*__*Another*__: On hyena parchment write these characters:
 . Hang it around the neck as an amulet, but keep it dry while wearing.
*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 208–9

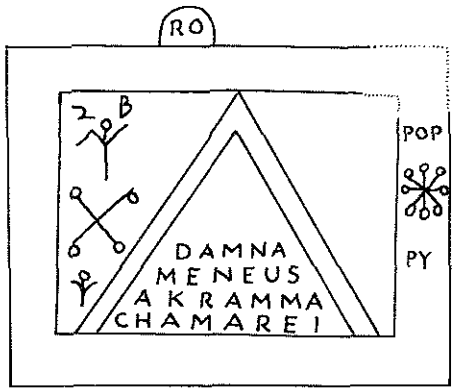
*__For hardening of the breasts__: Take a fine linen rag and write on it in black ink:
 .
*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 209–10

*__For swollen testicles__: Take a cord from a coin bag / and say with each knot "Kastor" once, "Thab" twice.
*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 211–12

*__For fever with shivering fits__: Take oil in your hands and say 7 times, "SABAŌTH" (add the usual, twice). And spread on oil from the sacrum to the feet.
*Tr.: John Scarborough.



PGM VII. 213–14

*__For daily fever and nightly fever__: On the shiny side of an olive leaf write , and on the dark side write ☾ and wear it as an amulet.
*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 215–18

215 *__Stele__[12] __of Aphrodite__: To gain friendship, favor, success, and friends. Take a strip of tin and engrave on it with a bronze stylus. And be sure you are pure while carrying it.

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM VII. 218–21

*__Phylactery for daily fever with shivering fits__: Write on a clean piece of papyrus and wear as an amulet:

220 / "IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI AKRAMMACHAMMAREI (subtracting down)
AŌ [SABAŌTH ADŌNAI AKRAMMACHAMMAREI]
Ō [SABAŌTH ADŌNAI AKRAMMACHAMMAREI]
ABRASAX."

*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 222–49

*__Request for a dream oracle from Besas__: Take red ocher [and blood][13] of a white dove, likewise of a crow, also sap of the mulberry, juice of single-stemmed worm-
225 wood, cinnabar, and rainwater; / blend all together, put aside and write with it[14] and with black writing ink, and recite the formula to the lamp[15] at evening. Take a black[16] of Isis and put it around your hand. When you are almost awake the god
230 will come and speak to you, and he will not go away unless you wipe off / your hand with spikenard or something of roses and smear the picture with the black of

12. The use of "stele" may refer here to the triangular shape found on the drawing of the tin plate.

13. The translation follows the text of Preisendanz, μίλτον ⟨καὶ αἷμα⟩ περιστερᾶς λευκῆς. The conjectural ⟨καὶ αἷμα⟩ makes the text conform to the parallel passage in PGM VIII. 69–70, where blood of a white dove is mentioned. The addition here, however, is not needed, for μίλτον (which does not occur in the parallel passage) can also mean "blood." See PGM XII. 98 and LSJ, s.v. "μίλτον," III.

14. The Greek seems defective here. The only possible antecedent for αὐτός is the preceding potion as a substance with which one is to write. The following reference to ink suggests that it would be better to take αὐτός as the substance on which one is to write, particularly since the practitioner has just been told to put the potion aside, and no substance to write on is mentioned. In the parallel charm, PGM VIII. 64–110, a similar potion is used to paint the left hand.

15. Cf. PGM VIII. 84–111, where the use of a lamp is more fully described; this description occurs immediately before the prayer to the headless god, which is here found in ll. 233–48.

16. This item, which is not explained here (cf. PGM VII. 231; VIII. 67–68), may be the black linen garment used in the Isis cult. It is mentioned in Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 39, 366E; 77, 382C. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 451, 562. Preisendanz interprets the reference by translating: "take a black piece from the garment. . . ."

Isis.[17] But the strip of cloth put around your neck,[18] so that he will not smite you.

Formula to be spoken to the lamp: "I call upon you, the headless god, the one who has his face upon his feet;[19] you are the one who hurls lightning, / who thunders, you are [the one whose] mouth continually pours on himself. You are the one who is over Necessity ARBATHIAŌ; you are the one lying on a coffin and having at the side of the head an elbow cushion[20] of resin and asphalt, the one whom they call ANOUTH. Rise up, daimon. You are not a daimon, but the [blood] of the 2 falcons[21] / who chatter and watch before the head of Heaven.[22] Rouse your nighttime form, in which you proclaim all things publicly. I conjure you, daimon, by your two names ANOUTH ANOUTH. You are the headless god, the one who has a head and his face on his feet, / dim-sighted Besas. We are not ignorant. You are the one whose mouth [continually] burns. I conjure [you by] your two names ANOUTH ANOUTH M . . . ORA PHĒSARA Ē . . . Come, lord, reveal to me concerning the NN matter, without deceit, without treachery, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly." The small figure[23] is drawn in the beginning of the book.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 250–54

Request for a dream oracle, a request which is always used. Formula to be spoken to the day lamp: "NAIENCHRĒ NAIENCHRĒ, mother of fire and water, you are the one who rises before, ARCHENTECHTHA; reveal to me concerning the NN matter. If yes, show me a plant and water, but if no, fire and iron; immediately, [immediately; quickly,] quickly."

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 255–59

*Another to the same lamp: "Hail, lord, lamp, you who shine beside Osiris and shine beside Osirchentechtha[24] and my lord, the archangel Michael. If it is advantageous for me to do this, show me a plant and water, but if not, fire and iron, immediately, immediately."

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 260–71

For ascent of the uterus:[25] "I conjure you, O Womb, [by the] one established

17. See the note on l. 227 above. There is no previous reference in this charm to a picture (though "write" in l. 226 can also mean "draw"). Cf., however, PGM VIII. 64–65.

18. For this detail, see PGM VIII. 67.

19. K. Preisendanz, Akephalos. Der kopflose Gott, Beihefte zum Alten Orient 8 (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1926) 48–50, sees this passage as a reference to the Egyptian practice of putting the heads of those who have been beheaded between their feet. A. Delatte, "Akephalos," BCH 38 (1914): 221–32, prefers to see this passage as a reference to the god Besas, who has the heads of animals for feet. Cf. K. Abel, "Akephalos," PRE.S 12 (1970): 13. See Glossary, s.v. "Headless."

20. Cf. on this point PGM VIII. 97–98.

21. This refers to Isis and Nephthys, who in the form of falcons or kites watch over the body of Osiris. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 35, 305, 328. [R.K.R.]

22. See on this concept the parallel passage PGM VIII. 100–101, which has 'Οσίρεως, "of Osiris," instead of "of Heaven." But "Heaven" should be kept (against the suggestion by F. Boll, in Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.). Perhaps, Nut (Heaven) is really meant here: her image was placed in the coffin in such a way that her head and that of the dead were close to each other. [J.B.]

23. The picture is missing; it may have been in the portion of the papyrus which is now lost.

24. See PGM III. 171 and note; note also the apparatus at PGM VII. 252.

25. Cf. on this point Soranus, Gynecology III. 50 (ed. Ilberg, pp. 127–28): "On the Flexion, Bending, and Ascent of the Uterus," esp. sec. 2 (p. 127): "[A] flexing to the anterior of the uterus causes over the Abyss, before heaven, earth, sea, light, or darkness came to be; [you?] who created the angels, being foremost, AMICHAMCHOU and CHOUCHAŌ CHĒRŌEI OUEIACHŌ ODOU PROSEIOGGĒS, and who sit over the cherubim, who bear / your (?) own throne, that you return again to your seat, and that you do not turn [to one side] into the right part of the ribs,[26] or into the left part of the ribs, and that you do not gnaw into the heart like a dog, but remain indeed in your own intended and proper place, not chewing [as long as] I conjure by the one who, / in the beginning, made the heaven and earth and all that is therein. Hallelujah! Amen!"

Write this on a tin tablet and "clothe" it in 7 colors.[27]

*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM VII. 272–83

*Thōth: 1, 4, 12, 13, 22. Phaōphi: 2, 4, 10, 19, 20. Athyr: 7, 8, 9, 17, 18, 23, 27. / Choiak: 5, 6, 13, 15, 16, 24, 25. Tybi: 3, 4, 12, 24, 26. Mecheir: 1, 2, 10, 14, 19. Phamenōth: 7, 8, 9. Pharmouthi: 5, 6, 14, 15, 20. / Pachōn: 3, 4, 12, 13, 21, 26, 28. Pauni: 1, 2, 10, 11, 15, 20. Epeiph: 7, 8, 9, 14, 18, 19, 22. Mesore: [10, 14,] 20, 23, 24, 25.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese. An Egyptian calendar of months and days unsuitable for magic operations. See Hopfner, OZ I, secs. 829–30. Cf. also PGM VII. 153–67; Delatte, Anecdota Atheniensia I. 631–32; I. Gruenwald, Apocalyptic and Merkabah Mysticism, Arbeiten zur Geschichte des antiken Judentums 14 (Leiden: Brill, 1980) 102–3.

PGM VII. 284–99

Orbit[28] of the moon: Moon / in Virgo: anything is rendered obtainable.[29] In Libra: necromancy.[30] In Scorpio: anything inflicting evil.[31] In Sagittarius: an invocation or incantations / to the sun and moon. In Capricorn: say whatever you wish for best results. In Aquarius: for a love charm. Pisces: for foreknowledge. / In Aries: fire divination or love charm. In Taurus: incantation to a lamp. Gemini: spell for winning favor. In Cancer: phylacteries. Leo: rings or binding spells.

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. Cf. PGM III. 275–81, which is very similar to this passage despite some significant differences in detail.

PGM VII. 300

*"SACHMOU OZOZO, you the one who thunders, the one who shakes the heaven and the earth, the one who has swallowed the serpent, hour by hour raising[32] the some problems [blockage?] in urination, and also causes a swelling of the pubic area; in some patients, it [will cause] an inability to stand upright." [J.S.] For a more magical interpretation see A. A. Barb, "Diva Matrix," JWCI 16 (1953): 193–238.

---

26. The context might suggest "hips," but the Greek is specific; perhaps the author was quite vague in the knowledge of internal anatomy. [J.S.]

27. Presumably, this means that the cord around the neck is to be woven together from the threads of seven colors. The strip of tin would then be worn as an amulet.

28. Or "horoscope"; see, however, PGM III. 275, where κύκλος appears alone. On Selene and her astrological role in magic, see Hopfner, OZ I, secs. 826–28; Delatte, Anecdota Atheniensia I, 411. On κύκλος, see Gundel, Astrologumena, esp. pls. I, VII. [E.N.O.]

29. The Greek term is unclear; see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.; K. F. W. Schmidt, GGA 196 (1934): 171.

30. Necromancy and Libra are also connected in PGM III. 278.

31. The reading πανκακώσιμον is uncertain and, at any rate, a hapax legomenon. Cf. PGM LXXI. 6–7.

32. Reading ἐξαιρῶν, which Preisendanz has in the two parallels to this passage: PGM IV. 1326; VII. 367.

disk of the sun and surrounding the moon, CHŌNSOU[33] OCHCHA ENSOU O BIBEROĒSOS." Write on your left hand with myrrh ink these things surrounding the ibis.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese. The purpose of this spell is not given though it may form part of the whole given in PGM VII. 272–83, 284–99.

PGM VII. 300a–310

/ Love charm which acts in the same hour: Take a seashell and write the holy names with the blood of a black ass.[34] 300a

Spell: "I adjure you, shell, by bitter Necessity[35] (MASKELLI formula)[36] and [by those] who have been placed [in charge of] the Punishments, LAKI LAKIŌ LAKIMOU MOUKILA KILAMOU IŌR MOUŌR MOUDRA MAXTHA / MOUSATHA: attract her, NN, 305 whom NN bore" (add the usual, whatever [you wish]). "Do not be stubborn, but attract her, OUCH OUCH CHAUNA MOUCHLIMALCHA MANTŌR MOURKANA MOULITHA MALTHALI MOUI ĒIĒI YYY AĒ AIĒ YOŌ AĒI AĒI AĒI AŌA AŌA AŌA IAŌ ŌAI ŌAI AIŌ ŌIA IŌA IAŌ ŌAI, attract her, NN" (add the usual). As the moon waxes / in 310 Aries or in Taurus [add the usual, whatever you wish].[37]

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 311–16

A phylactery: "IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI ABLANATHANALBA AKRAMMACHAMAREI SESENGENBAR[PHARANGES] PEPHRAZAŌTH ZŌTH [MENE] BAINCHŌŌŌCH, protect NN, whom NN [bore], from any violence both by a frightful dream and by all demons of the air. [I conjure you] by the great, famous name, Abraam EMEINA AEOUBAŌTH BAITHŌ BES IA IABAŌTH AGRAMAKRAMARI PSINŌTH[38] BER ŌŌN

33. This refers to the Egyptian moon god Khonsu; the moon is mentioned in the context. See Bonnet, RÄRG 140–44, s.v. "Chons"; Hellmut Brunner, "Chons," LdÄ I (1975): 960–63.

34. See on this point PGM IV. 3260 and n.

35. On "bitter Necessity," see PGM IV. 526, 605, 1499–1500; XV. 13. See Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 59–60; idem, Nekyia (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, ³1969) 124. Necessity ('Ανάγκη) is a demonic being. See H. D. Betz, ed., Plutarch's Theological Writings and Early Christian Literature, SCHNT 3 (Leiden: Brill, 1975) 224 (on De sera num. vind. 25, 564E).

36. See the Glossary, s.v. "MASKELLI logos."

37. Preisendanz deletes these words, thinking they belong at l. 316.

38. This name is Egyptian, meaning "the son of the female falcon." [R.K.R.]

IASŌP B . . . PNOUTE"[39] / [and add the usual, whatever you wish].[40]
*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM VII. 317–18

Another phylactery, [to be said] to the moon: "ACHTHIŌPHIPH ERESCHIGAL NEBOUGOSOUALĒTH[41]SATHŌTH SABAŌTH SABRŌTH" (add the usual, whatever you wish).
*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM VII. 319–34

Charm for direct vision: Take a copper vessel, / pour rainwater into it and make an offering of male frankincense.

Formula: "Let the earth be still, let the air be still, let the sea be still; let the winds also be still, and do not be a hindrance to this my divination—no sound, no loud cry, no hissing. For I am a prophet, and since I am about to call / a terrible, fearful name, 'KOLLA OLPHILOGEMALA ACHERŌIO,' open [the holy temple,] the world [built on the earth,] and welcome Osiris, because I am MANCHNŌBIS CHOLCHOBĒ MALASĒT IAT THANNOUITA KERTŌMENOU PAKERBAŌ KRAMMASIRAT MOMOMO MELASOUT PEU PHRĒ. Open my ears so that you may reveal to me / concerning those things I ask you to answer me. Come on, come on; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly; and speak concerning those things about which I questioned you. Appear to me, lord Anubis,[42] I command you, for I am IEŌ BELPHENŌ, who considers [this] matter."

Dismissal. Say: "Go away, Anubis, to your own thrones, for my health and well-being."

Use after you have kept yourself pure for 3 days.
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 335–47

Charm for a direct vision: If you want to see him yourself, take a fly and Coptic eyepaint, grind them, and smear them on your eyes. Take a feather of an ibis 14 fingers long, smear it with perfume of roses or lilies, wind around it a linen cloth, and hold it with your hands as a scroll. Then say thus, while looking to the side with the left / eye:

Formula: "MOUN EIPOSIS ĒU PHTHA NOUTHI[43] THIE SĒMI NOUEI NĒITHI[44] CHRECHREŌ SININŌRPS MOUCH ORŌOU ENTHERINI[45] EŌĒ MOUNIACH NESŌI MOUNESŌCH MOUNĒI ENIME CHREMOU RENENE SON SNĒI ŌS MOUCHORŌOU ENTHERINI / ANOK SŌS ERMAICHŌ ENTEUMOUTOICHNĒ CHREMOU TĒŠBAS PNĒTE[46] KYPHOCH EMM IEBOCHNĒS TCHĒNĒ PHIMOU CHNOU NYOICHŌŌIM SEOUNEUMOI INONRI."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

39. The word is Egyptian and means "O/the god." [R.K.R.]
40. Preisendanz adds this formula from l. 310.
41. Read νεβουτοσουαληθ (tau for gamma). See PGM IV. 2484–85, and Glossary, s.v. "Nebutosoualeth."
42. For Anubis as conducting the gods to the magician, cf. PDM xiv. 35–37. [R.K.R.]
43. These three words mean in Egyptian, "Come, Ptah, god." [R.K.R.]
44. This name seems to refer to the Egyptian goddess Neith; see Bonnet RÄRG 512–17, s.v. "Neith." [R.K.R.] Cf. Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 9, 354C, reporting about the statue of the Athena of Sais, as Neith is called by the Greeks. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 283–84.
45. This word corresponds to the Egyptian ntr, "god." [R.K.R.]
46. Perhaps this corresponds to the Egyptian p3 ntr, "O/the god." Cf. PGM VII. 316. [R.K.R.]

PGM VII. 348–58

Divination by means of a boy:[47] After you have laid [him] on the ground, speak, and a dark-colored boy will appear to him. /

Formula: "I call upon you, inhabitants of Chaos and Erebos, of the depth, of earth, watchers of heaven, of darkness, masters of things not to be seen, guardians of secrets, leaders of those beneath the earth, administrators of things which are infinite, those who wield power over earth, servants in the chasm, shudderful fighters, fearful ministers, inhabitants of dark Erebos, / coercive watchers, rulers of cliffs, grievers of the heart, adverse daimons, iron-hearted ones BITHOURARA ASOUĒMARA . . . OTROUR MOURROUR APHLAU MANDRAROUROU SOU MARAROU, reveal concerning the matter which I am considering" (add the usual).
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 359–69

Request for a dream oracle: Take a strip of clean linen and write on it the following name. / Roll it up to make a wick, pour pure olive oil over it and light it.

The formula to be written is this: "HARMIOUTH LAILAM CHŌOUCH[48] ARSENOPHRĒ PHRĒU PHTHA HARCHENTECHTHA."

In the evening then, when you are about to go to sleep, being pure in every respect, do this: Go to the lamp, say 7 times the following formula, extinguish the light / and go to sleep.

The formula to be spoken is as follows: "SACHMOUNḘ[49] PAĒMALIGOTĒRĒĒNCH, the one who shakes, who thunders, who has swallowed the serpent, surrounds the moon, and hour by hour raises the disk of the sun, 'CHTHETHŌNI' is your name. I ask you, lords of the gods, SĒTH CHRĒPS: reveal to me concerning the things I wish."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 370–73

Against every wild animal, aquatic creature and robbers: Attach a tassel[50] to your garment and say: "LŌMA ZATH AIŌN ACHTHASE MA . . . ZAL BALAMAŌN ĒIEOY, protect me, NN, in the present hour; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 374–76

Charm to induce insomnia: [Take] a seashell and write: / "IPSAĒ IAŌAI, let her, NN daughter of NN, lie awake because of me." That night she will lie awake.
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 376–84

*Another: Take a lamp and furnish it with a wick and say to it: "I conjure you, lamp, by your mother Hestia, MĒRALLĒL (say twice), and by your father Hephaistos, MELIBOU MELIBAU / MELIBAUBAU. [Let] her lie awake" (and add the usual).

47. On this form of divination, see PGM V. 1 and n.

48. CHŌOUCH is Egyptian for "darkness." [R.K.R.]

49. This name refers to the goddess Sakhmet; cf. PGM VII. 300. See Bonnet, RÄRG 643–46, s.v. "Sachmet" (esp. 645–46 on her role in magic).

50. For the tassel, cf. the zizith in Jewish religion. See Nm 15:38–39; Dt 22:12. See Schürer, The History of the Jewish People II, 479, with further references.

[Write these letters on the wick: "♂ chiiiiiii."[51] And having provided the material [recite] the above spell. Now make an iron metal leaf, too.

The spell: "Turn cold, iron, and become like snow, [for I] am MELIBOU MELIBAU MELIBAUBAU" ([and] add the usual).
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 385–89

385 A good cup spell: Over a cup say 7 times: "KANŌPI[TI] PROIE RŌDOCH . . . PH KALYPSAS EREKIN POTHĒXAS ERATEUN MORPHYS CHARIS PHAPHIETI EISI Ō BOUBASTI[52] POTHŌPI, I adjure you, holy names of Cypris, that, if you descend into the innermost heart of her, NN, [whom] NN bore, make her love" (add the usual).
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 390–93

390 Victory charm for the races: Write on the wide part of its hoofs by inscribing these characters with a bronze stylus: ⲙ ⲣⲧ Write: "Give me success, charm, reputation, glory in the stadium" (also add the usual, as much as you want).
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 394–95

395 Coercive spells for restraining: "SPHEDEMOUR BIRBIA / ĒCHI ERŌPHTHI ATARMETRA CHĒLŌŌPS" (add the usual).
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 396–404

An excellent spell for silencing, for subjecting, and for restraining: Take lead from a cold-water pipe and make a lamella and inscribe it with a bronze stylus, as shown below, and set it with a person who has died prematurely.
400 ⲝ ⲡ ⊗ ⲙ ⲝ ⲥ ⲟ ⲧ ⲩ ⲭ ⊗ ⲯ / BACHYCH ⲧ ⲩ ⲯ ⲱ ⲗ ⲓ AALOUGIKI ELŌAI BAINCHŌŌŌCH ⲋ ⲫ ⲍ ⲫ ⲕ ⲯ ⲓ ⲗ EULAMŌ PHNOUBENE EIZOCHOR MOBOR PHŌ CHORBA ZACHEI ANACHIA ⲩ ⲕ ⲩ ⲫ ⲯ ⲧ ⲃ PHŌRPHORBA PHŌRBORBA SEMESILAM ARCHENTECHTHA ASCHELIDONĒL. Restrain" (add the usual, as you wish).
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 405–6

405 Love spell: For[53] love say while kissing passionately: "I am THAZI N EPIBATHA CHEOUCH CHA I am I am CHARIEMOUTH LAILAM" (add the usual).
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. Some of the words are recognizable as Coptic.

PGM VII. 407–10

*If you wish to appear to someone at night in dreams, say to the lamp that is in daily use,[54] say frequently: "CHEIAMŌPSEI ERPEBŌTH, let her, NN, whom NN 410 bore, see me in her / dreams, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly" (and add the usual, whatever you wish).
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

51. For parallels to these letters see Wünsch, Antikes Zaubergerät 16, A, l. 5.

52. This phrase corresponds to the Egyptian "Isis, O Boubastite." Isis is here identified with one of the epithets of Kypris/Aphrodite. See Bergman, Isis-Seele und Osiris-Ei 22–34. [R.K.R.]

53. ἐπί is strange here and at PGM VII. 661. Perhaps the section title here is φίλτρον ἐπὶ φιλίας and that at VII. 661 is φίλτρον ἐπὶ λαλήματος. Thus ἐπί can mean "for the purpose of." [E.N.O.]

54. So Preisendanz for τὸν καθημερινόν, but elsewhere lamps used in spells are special ones. Perhaps this accusative is adverbial: "daily." [E.N.O.]

PGM VII. 411–16

*__Spell for causing talk while asleep__: Take the heart of a hoopoe[55] and place it in myrrh. And write on a strip of hieratic papyrus the names and characters and roll up the heart in the strip of papyrus and place it upon her pudenda and ask your questions. And she will confess every/thing to you: "DARYGKO IAU IAU ⊗⊗ϤΧϕβ ΑΘΑΘλΔαΑβΖαΤΙΖβ" (add the usual, as much as you want).

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 417–22

*__A restraining [spell]__: Write on a tin lamella with a bronze stylus before sunrise the names "CHRĒMILLON MOULOCH KAMPY CHRĒ ŌPHTHŌ MASKELLI (formula) ERĒKISIPHTHĒ IABEZEBYTH." / Then throw it into [the] river [or] into [the] sea before sunrise. Also write on it, with [the others], these characters: "⊗ΞΖϬΧϵ. Mighty gods, restrain" (add the usual, whatever you wish).

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM VII. 423–28

*__To win at dice__: "THERTHENITHŌR DYAGŌTHERE THERTHENITHŌR SYAPOTHEREUO KŌDOCHŌR make me a winner at dice, / O prevailing Adriel." Into your hand say: "Let not even one person be equal to me, for I am THERTHENITHŌR ĒRŌTHORTHIN DOLOTHOR, and I am going to throw what I want." And say this repeatedly, and then throw.

Another way you must say the formula is: "Let not even one of these playing with me be equal, and I am going to throw what I want."

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 429–58

*__A restraining [rite] for anything__, works even on chariots. It also causes enmity / and sickness, cuts down, destroys, and overturns, for [whatever] you wish. The spell [in it], when said, conjures daimons [out] and makes them enter [objects or people]. Engrave in a plate [made] of lead from a cold-water channel what you want to happen, and when you have consecrated it with bitter aromatics such as myrrh, bdellium, styrax, and aloes and thyme, / with river mud, late in the evening or in the middle of the night, where there is a stream or the drain of a bath, having tied a cord [to the plate] throw it into the stream—or into the sea—[and let it] be carried along. Use the cord so that, when you wish, you can undo [the spell]. Then should you wish to break [the spell], untie the plate. Say the formula 7 times and you will see something wonderful. Then go away without turning back / or giving an answer to anyone, and when you have washed and immersed yourself, go up to your own [room] and rest, and use [only] vegetable food. Write [the spell] with a headless bronze needle.

The text to be written is: "I conjure you, lord Osiris, by your holy names OUCHIŌCH OUSENARATH, Osiris, OUSERRANNOUPHTHI OSORNOUPHĒ[56] / Osiris-Mnevis,[57] OUSERSETEMENTH[58] AMARA MACHI CHŌMASŌ EMMAI[59] SERBŌNI

55. κοκκοφάδιος occurs only here, but cf. PGM II. 18 and III. 424–25. [E.N.O.]
56. OSORNOUPHE is Egyptian wsir nfr, "Osiris the good." [R.K.R.]
57. On Osiris-Mnevis, see PGM IV. 140, 2994 and n.
58. OUSERSETEMENTH is Egyptian for "Osiris . . . the west (the underworld)." [R.K.R.]
59. EM MAI is Egyptian, "in truth." [R.K.R.]

EMER Isis,[60] ARATŌPHI ERACHAX ESEOIŌTH ARBIŌTHI AMEN CH[N]OUM (?) MONMONT OUZATHI PĒR OUNNEPHER[61] EN ŌŌŌ, I give over to you, lord Osiris, and I deposit with you this matter / " (add the usual).

But if you cause [the plate] to be buried or [sunk in] river or land or sea or stream or coffin or in a well, write the Orphic[62] formula, saying, "ASKEI KAI TASKEI" and, taking a black thread, make 365 knots[63] and bind [the thread] around the outside of the plate, saying the same formula again and, "Keep him who is held" (or "bound"), or whatever you do. And thus [the plate] / is deposited. For Selene, when she goes through the underworld, breaks whatever [spell] she finds. But when this [rite] has been performed, [the spell] remains [unbroken] so long as you say over [the formula] daily at this spot [where the plate is deposited]. Do not hastily share [this information] with anyone, for you will find [its like (?) only] with much labor.

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM VII. 459–61

*__Excellent love charm__: Inscribe by scratching on a tin lamella. Write / and lay it down, walking over it. And what is written is this: "I adjure you by the glorious name of Bacchios"[64] (and add the usual, whatever you wish).

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 462–66

*__Excellent love charm__: Inscribe by scratching on a tin lamella the characters and the names, and after making it magically potent with some magical material,[65] roll it up and throw it into the sea.

The characters are these: "  ICHANARMENTHŌ CHASAR, cause her, NN, to love me" (add the usual). Write with a copper nail from a shipwrecked vessel.

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 467–77

*Take a shell from the sea and draw on it with myrrh ink the figure of Typhon given below, and in a circle write his names, and throw it into the heating chamber[66] of a bath. But when / you throw it, keep reciting these words engraved in a circle and "attract to me her, NN, whom NN bore, on this very day, from this very hour on, with her soul and heart aflame, quickly, quickly; immediately, immediately." The picture[67] is the one below.

But when reciting the spell, [say] its beginning: "This is the god of Destinies,[68]

60. EMER ISI is Egyptian for "whom Isis loves." [R.K.R.]

61. [H]OUNNEPHER is Egyptian and corresponds either to ḥwn-nfr, "beautiful youth," or wn—nfr (if unaspirated), "Onnophris." Cf. PGM IV. 1078. [R.K.R.]

62. It is not clear why the formula here is called "Orphic." Usually, this formula is called by the name Ephesia grammata (cf. PGM LXX. 12); its origin and meaning is still a mystery. For bibliography, see Betz, "Fragments," 291–92.

63. See on this point PGM IV. 1084 and n.

64. Bacchios may be the epithet of Dionysos or a personal name derived from it. See D. Detschew, "Bakchos (Bacchus)," RAC 1 (1950): 1147–50. But the name here is uncertain for textual reasons.

65. For the term οὐσιάζω, cf. PGM VII. 381.

66. For the role of the heating chamber, see PGM II. 51 and n.

67. The term here is θεώρημα, while below, l. 477, the noun is ζῴδιον (cf. the verb ζωγράφω in l. 467). Seemingly the three words refer to the same depiction, but it is missing. [E.N.O.]

68. The text here is uncertain and the translation tentative. [E.N.O.]

ŌKĒSĒ EĒRINIARE MIN / ENTĒNTAIN PHOOU TŌNKTŌ MNĒ SIETHŌN OSIRI ENABŌTH PSANOU LAMPSOUŌR IEOU IŌ IŌ AI ĒI EI AI EI AŌ, attract to me her, NN, whose mother is NN," and the rest. This is the figure:
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 478–90

*"Eros, darling PASSALEON ĒT,[69] send me my personal [angel] tonight to give me information about whatever the concern is. For I do this / on order from PANCHOUCHI THASSOU at whose order you are to act, because I conjure you by the four regions of the universe, APSAGAĒL CHACHOU MERIOUT MERMERIOUT and by the one who is above the four regions of the universe, KICH MERMERIOUTH" (add the usual).

This is the offering: Take equal portions of dirt from your sandal, / of resin, and of the droppings from a white dove, and while speaking [the invocation], burn them as an offering to the Bear.

The phylactery for this: Write these names on a strip of tin: "ACHACHAĒL CHACHOU MARMARIOUTI." Then wear it around your neck. After uttering the summons, go to your quarters, put out the lamp, and sleep / on a newly made bed of rushes.
*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM VII. 490–504

*Taking sulfur and seed of Nile rushes, burn [them] as incense to the moon and say, "I call on you, Lady Isis, whom Agathos Daimon permitted to rule in the entire black [land].[70] Your name is LOU LOULOU BATHARTHAR THARĒSIBATH ATHERNEKLĒSICH / ATHERNEBOUNI ĒICHOMŌ CHOMŌTHI Isis Sothis,[71] SOUĒRI, Boubastis, EURELIBAT CHAMARI NEBOUTOS OUĒRI[72] AIĒ ĒOA ŌAI. Protect me, great and marvelous names of the [god] (add the usual); for I am the one established in Pelusium,[73] SERPHOUTH MOUISRŌ[74] / STROMMŌ MOLŌTH MOLONTHĒR PHON Thoth. Protect me, great and marvelous names of the great god" (add the usual).

"ASAŌ EIŌ NISAŌTH. Lady Isis, Nemesis, Adrasteia,[75] many-named, many-formed, glorify me, as I have glorified the name of your son[76] Horus" (add the usual).
*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM VII. 505–28

Meeting with your own daimon:[77] "Hail, Tyche, and you, the daimon of this

69. The text here is doubtful. See the apparatus ad loc.

70. The name for Egypt in Egyptian is Km.t, meaning the "black" and referring to the alluvial soil in distinction from the "red" desert soil that borders it. [R.K.R.] See Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 33, 364C, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 425–26.

71. Isis Sothis is the identification of Isis with the dog star Sothis (Sirius). See J. Bergman, "I Overcome Fate, Fate Harkens to Me," in Fatalistic Beliefs in Religion, Folklore, and Literature, Scripta Instituti Donneriani Aboensis II (1967) 38–40; idem, Isis-Seele und Osiris-Ei 22–34, 41–45, 52–58 (p. 55 refers to PGM VII. 490–504).

72. OUERI is Egyptian wr, "great one." [R.K.R.]

73. The god of Pelusium (Pr-ir-Imn) is Amon. [R.K.R.] See Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 17, 357E, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 334–35.

74. SERPHOUTH MOUISRO is Srp.t mȝy sr, "Lotus, Lion, Ram." Cf. PGM III. 659 and n.

75. On the identification of Isis, Nemesis, and Adrasteia, see Griffiths, The Isis-Book 153–54.

76. Although this sentence seems parallel to Jn 17:4–5, there is no Christian influence here.

77. For this spell and its interpretation, see Betz, "The Delphic Maxim," 160–62.

place, and you, the present hour, and you, the present day—and every day as well. Hail, Universe, that is, earth and heaven. Hail, Helios, for you are the one who has established yourself in invisible light over the holy firmament / ORKORĒTHARA.[78]

"You are the father of the reborn Aion ZARACHTHŌ;[79] you are the father of awful Nature Thortchophanō;[80] you are the one who has in yourself the mixture[81] of universal nature and who begot the five wandering stars,[82] which are the entrails of heaven, the guts of earth, the fountainhead of the waters, and the violence / of fire AZAMACHAR ANAPHANDAŌ EREYA ANEREYA PHENPHENSŌ IGRAA; you are the youthful one, highborn, scion of the holy temple, kinsman to the holy mere called Abyss which is located beside the two pedestals SKIATHI and MANTŌ.[83] And the earth's 4 basements were shaken, O master of all, / holy Scarab,[84] AŌ SATHREN ABRASAX IAŌAI AEŌ ĒŌA ŌAĒ IAO IĒO EY AĒ EY IE IAŌAI."

Write the name in myrrh ink on two male eggs.[85] You are to cleanse yourself thoroughly with one; then lick off the name, break it, and throw it away. Hold the other in your partially open right hand and show it to the sun at dawn and . . .[86] / olive branches; raise up your right hand, supporting the elbow with your left hand. Then speak the formula 7 times, crack the egg open, and swallow its contents.

Do this for 7 days, and recite the formula at sunset as well as sunrise.

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM VII. 528–39

Victory charm: "Helios, Helios, hear me, NN, Helios, lord, Great God, you who maintain all things and who give life / and who rule the world, toward whom all things go, from whom they also came, untiring, ĒIE ELĒIE IEŌA ROUBA ANAMAŌ MERMAŌ CHADAMATHA ARDAMATHA PEPHRE ANAMALAZŌ PHĒCHEIDEU ENE-

78. For the magical name ORKORĒTHARA, see Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 203.

79. Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 203, n. 34, suggests that the name ZARACHTHŌ may be related to that of Zorochthora Melchisedek, which plays a role in gnosticism (Pistis Sophia IV. 136, 139, 140; Book of Jeu 108, 110, 111; Epiphanius, Pan. 55. 1; Hippolytus, Ref. 7. 36).

80. This name is written in Coptic.

81. The term "mixture" plays a great role in hellenistic philosphy and gnosticism. See C.H. XI. 7; Pistis Sophia III. 3 (and passim). For further references see PGL, s.v.

82. That is, the planets.

83. For the background of this passage in Egyptian religion and explanation of the names SKIATHI and MANTHŌ, see J. Bergman, "An Ancient Egyptian Theogony in a Greek Magical Papyrus (PGM VII, 11. 516–521)," in Studies in Egyptian Religion Dedicated to Professor Jan Zandee, Numen Supplements 43 (Leiden: Brill, 1982) 28–37.

84. This acclamation expresses Khepri theology, of which the cosmogony in Papyrus Bremner-Rhind 26, 21 (in Pritchard, ANET, p. 6) is the largest example. Khepri, the holy scarab, is mentioned at the end of the climax of names and epithets which often refer to his form of existence even by the Greek terms. The cultic context is also evident: the noble birth, representing creation, takes place in the temple at the time of the appearance of the Original Sea. This sea is identical with the sacred lake in the temple near the two pedestals of the evening bark (Sektat) and the morning bark (Manedjet). The temple represents the whole world, so that the four basements of the earth were shaken by the birth of Khepri, the master of all. [J.B.]

85. That is, eggs from which male chicks will be hatched. The ancients believed that one could predict the sex of the chick from the shape of the egg, though there appears to be some uncertainty as to which shape produced which sex. See Aristotle, Historia Animalium VI. 2 (559a); Pliny NH 10. 74; Columella, De Re Rustica VIII. 5. Cf. the comments by P. Louis in vol. 2 (Paris: Les belles lettres, 1968) of his Budé translation of Aristotle's treatise, p. 64, n. 4, and by A. L. Peck in vol. 2 (Cambridge, Mass. and London: Harvard University Press, 1970) of his LCL translation of the same treatise, p. 225, n. a; also the reference at PGM XII. 100 to an egg that will produce a male chick. [H.M.]

86. There is a lacuna in the Greek text at this point.

DEREU SIMATOI MERMEREŌ AMALAXIPHIA MERSIPHIA EREME THASTEU PAPIE[87] PHEREDŌNAX ANAIE / GELEŌ AMARA MATŌR MŌRMARĒSIO NEOUTHŌN ALAŌ AGELAŌ AMAR AMATŌR MŌRMASI SOUTHŌN ANAMAŌ GALAMARARMA. Hear me, lord Helios, and let the NN matter take place on time." Say this while you make an offering over oak charcoal, sacred incense, with which has been mixed the brain of a wholly black ram and the wheat meal of a certain plant.[88]
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 540–78

Lamp divination: Put an iron lampstand in a clean house[89] at the eastern part, and having placed on it a lamp not colored red, light it. Let the lampwick be of new linen, and light the censer. Then make a burnt offering of frankincense on grapevine wood. The boy, then, should be uncorrupt, pure.[90]

/ Formula: "PHISIO IAŌ AGEANOUMA SKABARŌ SKASABRŌSOU ASABRŌ, because I implore you this day today, this very time, to let the light and the sun appear to this boy, MANE OUSEIRI, MANE[91] ISI,[92] ANOUBIS the servant of all gods, and make this boy fall into a trance and see the gods, / all who are present at the divination. Appear to me in the divination, O high-minded god, Hermes thrice-great![93] May he appear, the one who [made] the four parts of the heaven and the four foundations of the earth, RESENNĒETHŌ BASENERAIPAN THALTHACHTHACHŌTHCH CHINEBŌTH CHINEBŌTH MIMYLŌTH MASYNTORI / ASTOBI. Come to me, you who are in heaven; come to me, you who are from the egg.[94] I conjure you by the ENTŌ[95] TAPSATI LEGĒNISTHŌ ĒLEGĒ SERPHOUTH MOUISRŌ[96] LEGE [having appeared and][97] the two gods who are about you, THATH. The one god is called 'So'[98] the other, 'Aph,'[99] KALOU KAGŌĒI SESOPHĒI BAINCHŌŌŌCH."

87. Perhaps PAPIE is related to PIPI, but cf. the apparatus ad loc. See for PIPI PGM IV. 595 and n.

88. For the plant called καταναάγκης ἄλευρα, see Diosc. 4.131; Pliny, HN 27.57.

89. The Greek is ambiguous, referring either to a house or a room in a house serving as a temple.

90. On the boy medium, see PGM V. 1 and n.

91. MANE is perhaps equivalent to Egyptian mrj.n, "beloved one of," hence: "beloved one of Osiris, beloved one of Isis." [J.B.]

92. OUSERI . . . ISI, referring to Osiris and Isis, perhaps by the vocative. [R.K.R.]

93. The epithet "thrice great" results from the Egyptian superlative which repeats the positive three times. For the name Hermes Trismegistos and its derivation, see Festugière, La révélation I, 73–74; K. W. Tröger, "Die hermetische Gnosis," in Gnosis und Neues Testament. Studien aus Religionswissenschaft und Theologie (Berlin: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1973) 103–4; J. Parlebas, "L'Origine égyptienne de l' appelation 'Hermès Trismegistos,'" GM 13 (1974):25–28; M.-Th. and P. Derchain, "Noch einmal Hermes Trismegistos," GM 15 (1975):7–10; R. K. Ritner, "Hermes Pentamegistos," GM 49 (1981): 73–75; idem, "Additional Notes to Hermes Pentamegistos," GM 50 (1981):67–68.

94. In Egyptian cosmogony the mythical primordial egg played a great role. Cf. PGM III. 145 and n. According to Orphic cosmogony, the one born from the egg is the god Phanes. See Orph. Frag. nos. 54, 55, and 56, and H. Leisegang, "The Mystery of the Serpent," in J. Campbell, ed., The Mysteries (Princeton: Princeton University, 1978) 194–260.

95. Or, ἐν τῷ, ". . . by the one who is in TAPSATI . . . ," following Preisendanz. The latter probably belongs to the series of voces magicae as indicated here. See also l. 576.

96. On SERPHOUTH MOUISRO, see PGM III. 659; and Preisendanz, vol. III, p. 230, s.v.

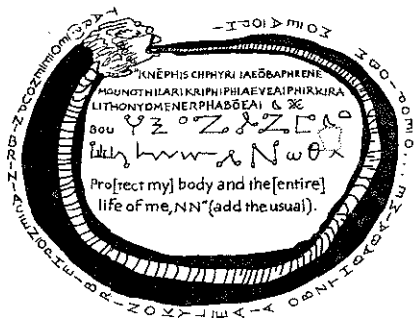
97. The text is mutilated here: "[and having appeared]" is Preisendanz's conjecture. The plural participle may refer to the two preceding commands, if these commands refer to two separate gods. But the conjecture does not help much. The problem is also complicated by λεγε, "tell" or "speak" (?).

98. This name probably refers to the god Shu, Greek Sōsis. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 326–37; Bonnet, RÄRG 685–89, s.v. "Schu." Cf. PGM VII. 345.

99. The name is unexplained; for possible explanations, see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc., and vol. III, p. 217, index, s.v. "'Αφ." Perhaps the name refers to Apophis, the snake god and enemy of Re. This god is mentioned as Ἀφνφις in PGM XIII. 262; cf. Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 36, 365D. See Griffiths,

The formula to be spoken: "Come to me, spirit that flies in the air, / called with secret codes and unutterable names, at this lamp divination which I perform, and enter into the boy's soul, that he may receive the immortal form in mighty and incorruptible light, because while chanting, I call, 'IAŌ ELŌAI MARMACHADA MENEPHŌ[100] MERMAI / IĒŌR AIEŌ ĒREPHIE PHEREPHIŌ CHANDOUCH AMŌN EREPNEU ZŌNŌR AKLEUA MENĒTHŌNI KADALAPEU IŌ PLAITINE RE AŌTH IĒI ŌĒI MEDCHĒNŌR ALACHAL PERECHAĒL SERENŌPH DOUNAX ANAXIBOA EREBE BŌ BEBŌBIA ANĒSIODEU IAŌA ENIŌEAL / EMERŌ MASAIANDA.'"

"Hither to me, O lord, riding upon immaculate light without deceit and without anger; appear to me and to your medium, the boy, MARMARIAU ANAPSICHALAŌ PEOE NIPSEOUA AIETY HARENNŌTHĒS[101] ANERŌPHĒS ITHYAMAREM ŌSIĒR ANAPSICHYŌN PSYELĒMICHALĒS, appear" (say it 3 times).



/ If he says, "I see your lord in the light," say: "O holy YMERI EIGESOU ENTŌ TĒRIOUA MENĒ SOMIŌŌ ALAMAŌR CHŌCHENEMĒTŌR," and thus he will answer. Ask: "ARSERETŌTHI OUĒMANTOUR."

*Tr.: J. P. Hershbell.

PGM VII. 579–90

A phylactery, a bodyguard against daimons, against phantasms, / against every sickness and suffering, to be written on a leaf of gold or silver or tin or on hieratic papyrus. When worn it works mightily for it is the name of power of the great god and [his] seal, and it is as follows: "KMĒPHIS CHPHYRIS[102] IAEŌ IAŌ AEĒ IAŌ OŌ AIŌN IAEŌBAPHRENE / MOUNOTHILARIKRIPHIAE Y EAIPHIRKIRALITHANYOMENERPHABŌEAI."[103] These [are] the names; the figure is like this: let the Snake be biting its tail, the names being written inside [the circle made by] the snake, and the characters thus, as follows:

The whole figure[104] is [drawn] thus, as given below, with [the spell], "Protect my body, [and] the / entire soul of me, NN." And when you have consecrated [it], wear [it].

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 440; Bonnet, RÄRG 51, s.v. "Apophis." Cf. the strange ἀφφώ in LXX 2 Kgs 2:14; 10:10 and the explanations given by patristic commentators, for which see PGL, s.v. "ἀφφώ."

100. Menepho is the name of the city of Memphis. Cf. PGM III. 104.

101. Harennōthes is Egyptian for Ḥr-nḏ-it.f (Harendotes), meaning "Horus the defender of his father." See Bonnet, RÄRG 269, s.v. "Harendotes"; Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 345; D. Meeks, "Harendotes," LdÄ 2 (1977):964–66. [R.K.R.]

102. Chphyris is the Egyptian scarab, Khepri.

103. IAEŌ begins an often-cited palindrome, but it is not set out as such in Preisendanz. The copyist got one letter wrong: ALITHA should be ALITHO.

104. Preisendanz gives the opening words surrounding the serpent as TARĒON ĒOU PHI, but the photograph (plate I, no. 4) shows clearly the reading given in the transcription here.

PGM VII. 591–92

*"Come to me, ear of heaven; come to me, ear [of the air;] come to me, ear of the earth," and so forth, as indicated.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese. This portion of an invocation seems to be mislocated in the papyrus manuscript.

PGM VII. 593–619

Fetching charm for an unmanageable [woman]:[105] Take a [lamp], not painted red, with seven wicks, and make a wick of [the hawser of] a wrecked / ship. On the [1st] wick write with myrrh, "IAŌ"; on the 2nd, "ADŌNAI"; on the 3rd, "SABAŌTH"; on the 4th, "PAGOURĒ"; on the 5th, "MARMOROUTH"; on the 6th, "IAEŌ"; on the 7th, "MICHAĒL."

Put olive oil in the lamp and place it in a window / facing south. Also put wormwood seeds on the lamp (around the edge of the lamp), and recite this formula: "I call upon you, the masters, great gods, who shine in the present hour, on this day, for the sake of her, the ungodly NN. For she has said: /

'IAŌ does not have ribs.'

[She, NN, has said,] 'ADŌNAI was cast out because of his violent anger.'

[She, NN, has said,] 'SABAŌTH emitted three cries.'[106]

She, NN, has said, 'PAGOURĒ is by nature a hermaphrodite.'

She, NN, has said, 'MARMOROUTH was castrated.'

She, NN, has said, 'IAEŌ was not entrusted with the ark.'

She, NN, has said, 'MICHAĒL is by nature a hermaphrodite.'

/ "I am not the one who says such things, master, but she, the godless NN. Therefore fetch her for me, her inflamed with passion, submissive. Let her not find sleep until she comes to me" (repeat 7 times).

If the first lamp flickers, know that she has been seized by the daimon. And if the 2nd, she has left (the house); and if the 3rd, she is on the / way; and if the 4th, she has arrived; and if the 5th, she is at the door; the 6th, at the doorlatch; the 7th, she has come into the house.

It can fetch people even from across the sea. For that, place the lamp in some water in the open air. Place a papyrus boat under the lamp, and [recite the] formula 6 times.

*Tr.: D. E. Aune.

PGM VII. 619–27

From the Diadem of Moses:[107] / Take the plant snapdragon and hold it under your tongue while lying asleep. And rise early and before you speak to anyone recite the names, and you will be invisible to everyone.

But when you say them over drinking cups and give them to a woman, she will love you, since this spell has power over everything: "ARESKILLIOUS THOUDALESAI KRAMMASI CHAMMAR / MOULABŌTH LAUABAR CHOUPHAR PHOR PHŌRBAŌ SACHI HARBACH MACHIMASŌ IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI."

For what you wish, say: "Get her, NN, for me, NN" (add the usual, whatever you wish).

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

105. See for parallels to this spell PGM IV. 2475 and n.

106. For this cry, cf. the parallel in Ignatius, Eph. 19. 1.

107. This spell seems to be a selection from a larger collection entitled "The Diadem of Moses." [E.N.O.]

PGM VII. 628–42

*Taking a field lizard,[108] let it down into oil of lilies until it be deified. Then engrave / the [image of] the Asklepios [worshiped] in Memphis[109] on a ring of iron from a leg fetter and put [the ring] into [the] oil of lilies [in which the lizard was drowned]. And when you use [the ring] take [it and] show [it] to the pole star,[110] saying this spell 7 times: "MENŌPHRI[111] who sit on the cherubim, send me / the true Asklepios, not some deceitful daimon instead of the god." Then take the incense burner in where you are going to sleep and burn 3 grains of frankincense and wave the ring in the smoke of the incense, saying 7 times the [spell], "CHAUAPS / ŌAEIAPS ŌAIS LYSIPHTHA,[112] lord Asklepios, appear." And wear the ring on the index finger of your right hand.

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM VII. 643–51

Cup spell, quite remarkable: Say the spell that is spoken to the cup 7 times: "You are wine; you are not wine[113] but the head of Athena. / You are wine; you are not wine, but the guts of Osiris, the guts of IAŌ PAKERBĒTH SEMESILAM ŌŌŌ Ē PATACHNA IAAA." (For the spell of compulsion: "ABLANATHANALBA AKRAMMACHAMAREI EEE, who has been stationed over necessity, IAKOUB IA IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI ABRASAX").

"At whatever hour / you descend into the guts of her, NN, let her love me, NN, [for] all the time of her life."

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 652–60

Spell to induce insomnia by means of a bat: Take blood of a black ox or of a goat or of Typhon[114]—but preferably of a goat—and write on its right wing: "BŌRPHŌR PHORBA PHORPHARBA / PHŌRBŌRPHORBA PHORBA PHORBA PHORBA BAPHAIĒ PHŌRBAPHŌR BARBA" (put one word under another one, like bricks,[115] and [add the usual, whatever] you want). And on the left wing write this in the same pattern: "PHŌRPHŌR PHORBA BORPHOR PHORBA BORPHOR PHORBA PHORPHOR PHORBABŌR / BORBORBA PHŌRPHŌR PHORBA" (likewise, add the usual as you want).

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

108. See A. D. Nock, "The Lizard in Magic and Religion," in his Essays I, 271–76. On deification by drowning, see PGM I. 5; III. 1, with notes; LXI. 39–71.

109. Asklepios in Memphis is the Egyptian god Imhotep. See D. Wildung, Imhotep und Amenhotep (München: Deutscher Kunstverlag, 1977). [R.K.R.]

110. The constellation of the pole star (Bear) is connected here with the "true" Asklepios of Memphis, that is Asklepios/Imhotep in contrast to the Greek Asklepios. This expression is indeed non-Greek. See Hopfner, OZ II, secs. 14 and 181.

111. That is, Memphis, or perhaps Memphite. [R.K.R.]

112. -SI PHTHA is Egyptian and means "son of Ptah," a standard epithet of Imhotep. [R.K.R.]

113. For the formula "you are x, you are not x, but . . ." cf., e.g., PGM LXI. 7–9. See also Smith, Jesus the Magician 111, 197 n.

114. The "blood of Typhon" is the blood of an ass. See PGM IV. 2100 and n.

115. For this magical formation of words, see PGM V. 349, 361 and Preisendanz, vol. I, plate III, no. 6.

PGM VII. 661–63

Love spell: In conversation[116] while kissing passionately, say: "ANOK THARENEPIBATHA CHEOUCHCHA ANOA ANOK CHARIEMOCHTH LAILAM."
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 664–85

Spell for obtaining dream revelations: Take a linen strip, and on it you write with myrrh ink the matter, / and wrap an olive branch and place it beside your head, beneath the left side of your head, and go to sleep, pure, on a rush mat on the ground, saying the spell 7 times to the lamp:

"Hermes,[117] lord of the world, who're in the heart,
O circle of Selene, spherical
And square, / the founder of the words of speech,
Pleader of Justice's cause, garbed in a mantle,
With golden sandals, turning airy course
Beneath earth's depths, who hold the spirit's reins,
The sun's and who with lamps of gods immortal
Give joy to those beneath earth's depths, to mortals
Who've finished life. / The Moirai's[118] fatal thread
And Dream divine you're said to be, who send Forth oracles by day and night; you cure
Pains of all mortals with your healing cares.
Hither, O blessed one, O mighty son
Of the goddess who brings full mental powers,
By your own form and gracious mind. And to An uncorrupted youth / reveal a sign
And send him your true skill of prophecy,
OIOSENMIGADŌN ORTHŌ BAUBŌ NIOĒRE KODĒRETH DOSĒRE SYRE SUROE SANKISTĒ DŌDEKAKISTĒ AKROUROBORE[119] KODĒRE RINŌTON KOUMETANA ROUBITHA NOUMILA PERPHEROU AROUŌRĒR / AROUĒR"[120] (say it seven times and add the usual, whatever you wish).
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 686–702

Bear charm: "Bear, Bear, you who rule the heaven, the stars, and the whole world; you who make the axis turn and control the whole cosmic system by force and compulsion;[121] / I appeal to you, imploring and supplicating that you may do the NN thing, because I call upon you with your holy names at which your deity rejoices, names which you are not able to ignore: BRIMŌ, earth-breaker, chief hunt-

116. Cf. on this title PGM VII. 405 and n.

117. These dactylic hexameters are also one version of the reconstructed Hymns 15–16, ll. 1–12; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 249. This version is, however, quite different from that in PGM V. 400–421 and XVIIb. 1–23. [E.N.O.]

118. At PGM V. 410, Preisendanz prints the word as a common noun, here as the proper noun. [E.N.O.]

119. On this vox magica, see the Glossary, s.v. "YESSIMMIGADO/AKROUROBORE formula."

120. AROUĒR is Egyptian for Ḥr-wr, "Horus the great." [R.K.R.]

121. For this concept of the divine mover of the universe, see Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 208–11.

ress,[122] BAUBŌ L[123] . . . I AUMŌR AMŌR AMŌR . . . IĒA [shooter] of deer[124] AMAM[A-695 MAR] APHROU . . . MA, universal queen, queen of wishes, / AMAMA, well-bedded,[125] Dardanian, all-seeing, night-running, man-attacker, man-subduer, man-summoner, man-conqueror, LICHRISSA PHAESSA, O aerial one, O strong one,[126] O song and 700 dance, guard,[127] spy, delight, delicate, protector, adamant, adamantine, O / Damnameneia, BREXERIKANDARA, most high, Taurian,[128] unutterable, fire-bodied, light-giving, sharply armed. Do such-and-such things" (add the usual).
*Tr.: H. D. Betz. The purpose of the spell is not given, although directions to insert requests come at the end. Cf. the Bear spells in PGM IV. 1275–1330, 1331–89; LXXII. 1–36.

PGM VII. 703–26

Request for a dream oracle: Write [with myrrh] on clean papyrus:
705 "I call you, the one who shines on the whole inhabited / and uninhabited world, whose name is composed of 30 letters, in which are the seven vowels, through which you name [the] universe, gods, lords, RARAPAE ABRAIĒ IRARA PAUOUŌ
710 ARAŌACH (30 letters)[129] IEŌYŌĒ AIĒ IAŌĒ YŌEI: Reveal [to me], / lords, concerning the NN matter, dependably and through memory, PSICHOM[130] MORAIOUCH PSICHOM ARASKELLITH ĒCHOMMORAKAUPS PSICHOMMO ARATOPOTH. Lords of glory, reveal to me concerning the NN matter tonight, THŌOUTH PHEUBĒ CHAR-
715 PHRAUTHI / PHRĒ"[131] (add the usual, as you wish). Also write the name composed of 30 letters in two wing formations,[132] thus: RARAPAEABRAIĒIRARAPAOUŌABRAŌACHRARAPAEABRAIĒIRARAPAOUŌABRAŌACH: A

Ō

CHAŌARBAŌYOAPARARIĒIARBAEAPARAR
/ RAR A A R
Ō Ō
IEŌYŌĒ[AIĒIAŌĒYŌEI]
R E E R

Write also the ["heart"] as indicated [if] you want, and after placing the strip of 725 papyrus / under the lamp, go to sleep in a pure condition. Give answer to no one, ENTYTHLCH.[133]
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

122. The rendering of προκυνη is uncertain. See also PGM VII. 885–86; P. Reinach II, 88 which has προκυνητε. For similar epithets, see LSJ, s.v. "κυναγέτις, προκυναγός, προκυνηγίς, προκύων." The epithet "earthbreaker" has usually in PGM been transcribed RĒXICHTHŌN.

123. The following list of divine epithets comes from the cult of Artemis; it contains old material, but not all is explainable and some renderings are quite tentative. Cf. for parallels PGM IV. 1301–8, 1345–79; also P. Reinach II, 88 (ed. P. Collart, Les Papyrus Théodore Reinach, BIFAO 39 [1940]: 29–32).

124. For this epithet, see Homeric Hymn 27. 2 and K. Wernicke, "Artemis," PRE 2 (1895): 1384.

125. The rendering of εὐναία is uncertain. See Euripides, Hippol. 160, also Burkert, Griechische Religion 236.

126. Preisendanz translates, "O goddess of Erymna."

127. On this epithet of Artemis, see also PGM IV. 1298; Orph. Frag. 42.

128. The meaning of this epithet is uncertain; for similar expressions, see K. Wernicke, PRE 2 (1895): 1399–1400.

129. The name is given below, ll. 716–18; cf. 708–9.

130. PSICHOM is Egyptian p3 sḫm, "the image/power." [R.K.R.]

131. THŌOUTH PHEUBĒ . . . PHRE corresponds to Egyptian "Thoth the ibis . . . Prē." [R.K.R.]

132. For the wing formation of magical words, see PGM I. 11 and n.

133. This is Demotic mtw.f.ti hl.k (?), "and he makes you fly" (?). [R.K.R.]

PGM VII. 727–39

Charm for a direct vision of Apollo: In a ground-floor room without light, while you are crowned with a wreath of marjoram and while wearing wolf-skin sandals, recite this formula:

Formula: / "Helios, ruler of light, MER . . . EIPHIRA GARGERI PHTHA ER . . . OIE . . . GERLYCHA MER . . . [OPHO] R ITHARA PHERXEI AR . . . EID . . . PHŌRITHARZEI ERPHIBILCHIE ZEIRABELBĒ BICHA ARTHIA MĒLICHIA ERGA GERPHI IŌ CHERPHEI KARGŌOARA EARMILICHA ATHERTHAPHTHŌ ATHTHERTHAPHI ARNACHERBBI." /

After you have said these things, the god Apollo will come having a cup for a drink offering. Then you inquire concerning what you want. He gives from memory if you want, and if you ask, he will let you drink from his cup.

Dismissal: "ERKIKCHI BELTĒAMILICHA ARCHARZEIR PHIZŌR GEIRPHEI."

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 740–55

*[Request for a dream oracle: Write] on a strip of tinfoil, and after crowning the strip of foil with myrtle, set up the censer. Then make a burnt offering of frankincense and carry the leaf of metal around the vapor while saying: "Lords, gods, reveal to me concerning the NN matter / tonight, in the coming hours. Emphatically I beg, I supplicate, I your servant and enthroned[134] by you."

Then place the piece of foil under your pillow, and, without giving answer to anyone, go to sleep after having kept yourself pure for 3 days.

Formula to be written: / "MOU AMOU[135] AU IAŌ ABARBARASA AIŌ BAŌA CHPHĒNOURIS AŌB AMO ADŌNAI ŌIG IIII OTHTHOUŌ AORCHA ARORCHA CHAXYNNĒRE THIRARI OTHŌ CHOŌTH ERRE OCHŌ ANA ĒEPHRORE CHEIR ĒIN IĒIŌ ŌŌAAMADAA / OOO ŌŌŌ ŌŌA." Write [it] with a copper stylus.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese. This spell appears to be another version of a dream request; cf. PGM VII. 703–76. In this one, however, the title has been added by Preisendanz.

PGM VII. 756–94

Prayer: "I call upon you who have all forms and many names, double-horned goddess, Mene, whose form no one knows except him who made the entire / world, IAŌ, the one who shaped [you] into the twenty-eight shapes of the world so that they might complete every figure and distribute breath to every animal and plant, that it might flourish, you who grow from obscurity into light and leave light for darkness" / (beginning to leave by waning).

"And the first companion of your name is silence, the second a popping sound, the third groaning, the fourth hissing, / the fifth a cry of joy, the sixth moaning, the seventh barking, the eighth bellowing, the ninth neighing, / the tenth a musical sound, the eleventh a sounding wind, the twelfth a wind-creating sound, the thirteenth a coercive sound, the fourteenth a coercive emanation from perfection. /

"Ox, vulture, bull, beetle, falcon, crab, dog, wolf, serpent, horse, she-goat, asp, goat, he-goat, baboon, cat, lion, leopard, fieldmouse, deer, multiform, virgin, torch, / lightning, garland, a herald's wand, child, key.[136]

"I have said your signs and symbols of your name so that you might hear me, because I pray to you, mistress of the whole world. Hear me, you, the stable one,

134. On the ritual of the enthronement of the initiate, see A. D. Nock, "Notes on Beliefs and Myths," JHS 46 (1926):47–48; Nilsson, GGR II, 642, 680.

135. AMOU is Coptic for "come!" [R.K.R.]

136. See for the meaning of these symbols PGM LXX. 9–11 and nn.

the mighty one, / APHEIBOĒŌ MINTĒR OCHAŌ PIZEPHYDŌR CHANTHAR CHADĒ- 790
ROZO MOCHTHION EOTNEU PHĒRZON AINDĒS LACHABOŌ PITTŌ RIPHTHAMER
ZMOMOCHŌLEIE TIĒDRANTEIA OISOZOCHABĒDŌPHRA" (add the usual).
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 795–845

Pythagoras' request for a dream oracle and Demokritos' dream divination: 795
The entering angel is subordinate to the sun, and as subordinate to the sun he enters—so he enters in the form of your friend whom you recognize, with a shining star upon his head, and sometimes he enters / having a fiery star. Take, then, a 800 branch of laurel, and inscribe on each leaf a sign of the Zodiac with cinnabar, hav- 805 ing crowned yourself [with it]. (Also write its name in front of the sign of the Zodiac.) / This rite is divine. Hence, keep in your breast the things revealed to you by me even after the parting of my life, and if you perform them devoutly you will be successful.

They are:[137]

1. Aries	HAR MONTH[138] HAR THŌ CHE	810
2. Taurus	NEOPHOBŌTHA THOPS
3. Gemini	ARISTANABA ZAŌ
[4]. Cancer	PCHORBAZANACHAU
[5]. Leo	ZALAMOIRLALITH
[6]. Virgo	EILESILARMOU PHAI	815
[7]. Libra	TANTINOURACHTH
[8]. Scorpio	CHORCHORNATHI
9. Sagittarius	PHANTHENPHYPHLIA
[10]. Capricorn	AZAZAEISTHAILICH
[11]. Aquarius	MENNY THYTH IAŌ	820
[12]. Pisces	SERYCHARRALMIŌ

Take still another leaf of the royal laurel and write with cinnabar [ink] this name of [the] living god: "CHALCHANA PHOE KOSKIANŌ (19) / ALĒMONTALL . . . ASEICH." 825
Having written it, do this for three days: wrap the leaves in a new handkerchief and lay it under your head. Having come when it is evening, while burning frankincense, speak this formula:

"I call upon you, holy angel ZIZAUBIŌ, from the company of the Pleiades to whom you are subordinate / and serve for all things, [for] whatever she might com- 830
mand you, you great, indestructible, fire-breathing one, who cast the rope of heaven, through which rope all things turn upon earth. Also, you [do I call upon], as many of you angels who are placed under his [ZIZAUBIŌ's] power. Hence I call upon you all that you may come quickly / in this night, and reveal to me clearly and 835 firmly, concerning those matters I desire. I conjure you, O lord, who rise above the earth of the whole cosmic region, by the one ruling the whole inhabited world and the benefactor of all. Hence, I call upon you in this night, / and may you reveal all 840 things to me through dreams with accuracy, O angel ZIZAUBIŌ."

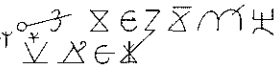
Go to your house and having incensed the branch, put it on your head and sleep pure. You must have [the place] where you perform absolutely pure, and the phylac-

137. In this list most of the numerical designations 1–12 can be recognized in the far right column of the papyrus manuscript, numbering downward from Aries to Pisces. These numbers were erroneously included in the magical symbols by Preisendanz.

138. Har-Month is Horus-Montu. Montu is the Egyptian god of war and therefore the proper counterpart of Ares, the ruler of the zodiacal sign Aries. Horus is also associated with this sign, for "Horus the Red" was the name of Mars which governs Aries. [R.K.R.]



tery / where you have inscribed the name, put on your head and crown yourself with the branch.
*Tr.: J. P. Hershbell.

PGM VII. 846–61

Shadow[139] on the sun: After you have purified yourself, walk towards the sun in the 5th hour, crowned with a tail of a cat, and say: "ERBETH BIO . . . PH . . . PH . . . LL . . . III ANACH ABAREIR LATŌRŌCH ERBEBRITHA AMBRITHĒRA ŌRYKISTAR / LAILAM AŌR XARXI THADARI ĒSYRPHA PHŌRPHI AGĒRŌCHĒ BEBATHA BARA LIRYPŌ PHERCHĒ AMIARTH THERTHI GŌRĒ AMINACHARPHA IRGIRAMOU THARPHI THEIRIŌRYS PHERIA PHORPHOROPHI."

When you have said these things, you will see a shadow in the sun. / Close your eyes, look up, and you will see a shadow standing before you. Ask what you want, "ERBAIGŌRYTHARPHTHEIR:"

Phylactery: The tail and the characters with the circle [on which] you will stand after you have drawn it with chalk.

The characters are the following: /

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 862–918

Lunar spell of Claudianus[140] and [ritual] of heaven and the north star[141] over lunar offerings: This papyrus itself, the personal property of the Twelve Gods, was found[142] in Aphroditopolis [beside] the greatest goddess, / Aphrodite Urania, who embraces the universe.

The preparation for Mistress Selene is made like this: Take clay from a potter's wheel and mix a mixture[143] with sulfur, and add blood of a dappled goat and mold an image of Mistress Selene the Egyptian,[144] as shown below, making her in / the form of the Universe. And make a shrine of olive wood and do not let it face the sun at all.[145] And after dedicating it with the ritual that works for everything, [put it away,] and thus it will be dedicated in advance. And anoint it also with lunar ointment and wreathe it. And late / at night, at the 5th hour, put it away, facing Selene in a [pure] room. And also offer the lunar offering and repeat the following in succession and you will send dreams, you will bind with spells. For the invocation to Selene is very effective. And after anointing yourself in advance [with] the ointment, appeal to her.

And this is the lunar spell: / "I call upon you, Mistress of the entire world, ruler of the entire cosmic system, greatly powerful goddess, gracious [daimon], lady of night, who travel through the air, PHEROPHORĒ ANATHRA . . . OUTHRA. Heed

139. On the significance of the shadow, see Betz, "The Delphic Maxim," 163–64.

140. Preisendanz indicates the name Klaudianos may refer to a certain philosopher and alchemist appearing in a list in Berthelot and Ruelle, Collection des anciens alchimistes grecs 26, l. 1.

141. The identity of the constellation of the Bear with Aphrodite-Selene is late. See Plutarch, Amat. 19, and F. Schwenn, "Selene," PRE, 2nd ser. 2 (1921): 1142; W. Fauth, "Arktos in den griechischen Zauberpapyri," ZPE 57(1984): 93–99. [R.K.R.]

142. On this literary claim of having found books, see W. Speyer, Bücherfunde in der Glaubenswerbung der Antike, Hypomnemata 24 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck and Ruprecht, 1970).

143. The pleonasm (μῖξον μίγματος, "mix a mixture,") is not uncommon in PGM; see PGM VII. 972. [E.N.O.]

144. The Egyptian Selene is the mistress of the night sky. See Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth 46. [R.K.R.]

145. Preisendanz has incorrectly translated τὸ σύνολον with "das Ganze." Cf. l. 915 below, for the sense of the instruction. [E.N.O.]

your sacred symbols and give a whirring sound,[146] [and] give a sacred angel or a holy assistant who serves / this very night, in this very hour, PROKYNĒ BAUBŌ PHOBEIOUS MĒE, and order the angel to go off to her, NN, to draw her by her hair, by her feet; may she, in fear, seeing phantoms, sleepless because of her passion for me and her love for me, NN, come to my consecrated bedroom."

So goes the song. But when / you see the goddess turning red, know that she is now attracting, and then say: "Mistress, send forth your angel from among those who assist you, one who is leader of night, because I adjure [you] by your great names, because of which no aerial or infernal daimon can ignore you, MESOURPHABABOR BRAL IĒŌ ISI Ē. Come to me just as I have summoned you, / ORTHŌ BAUBŌ NOĒRE KODĒRE SOIRE SOIRE ERESCHIGAL SANKISTĒ DŌDEKAKISTĒ AKROUROBORE KODĒRE SAMPSEI; hear my words, and send forth your angel who is appointed over the 1st hour: / MENEBAIN, and the one over the 2nd hour: NEBOUN, and the one over the 3rd hour: LĒMNEI, and the one over the 4th hour: MORMOTH, and the one over the 5th hour: NOUPHIĒR, and the one over the 6th hour: CHORBORBATH, and the one over the 7th hour: ORBEĒTH, and the one over the 8th hour: PANMŌTH, and the one over the 9th hour: / THYMENPHRI, and the one over the 10th hour: SARNOCHOIBAL, and the one over the 11th hour: BATHIABĒL, and the one over the 12th hour: ARBRATHIABRI, so that you may do this for me; that you may attract, that you may tame on this very night, and so that she, NN (or he, NN) be unable to have success until coming / to me, NN. [May she remain] fully satisfied, loving, desiring me, NN, and may she be unable to have intercourse with another man, except with me alone."

Now recite the spell many times, and it will attract and bind, and she will love you for all the time of her life. But when you attract her and she has had intercourse with you, then pick up / the goddess and stow her away, giving her magical material, and do not show her to the sun and she will not stop coming, desiring you.

You will act in the same way for the spell to send dreams until you accomplish what you want. The power of the spell is strong. The figure is below.[147]
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 919–24

Hermes' wondrous victory charm which you are to keep in your sandals: Take a tablet / gold like the sun[148] and inscribe on it with a bronze stylus and put it on whatever you want and see what it does on a boat, on a horse, and you will be amazed.

These are the characters: "  THŌOUTH, give victory, strength, influence to the wearer."
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 925–39

Another[149] tablet charm but one to subject: Take a lead tablet from a yoke for mules and inscribe [on it] with a bronze stylus the following names and characters,

146. ῥοῖζον, "whirring," most likely refers to the sistrum of Hathor, her constant emblem. The Egyptian name for the sistrum (sšš.t) is onomatopoetic for the rustling sound made by the shaking of its jingles. See on this point Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth 59–60. [J.B./R.K.R.]

147. See Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc. The figure is missing.

148. Literally, a "sun" or "solar" tablet, that is, a gold lamella.

149. Literally, "another one." However, the only connection with the preceding is the use of a metal tablet, hence the translation.

and put it under the sole of your left foot, after you have fumigated it carefully with incense.

/ The names and characters are: 930

935

*Tr.: R. R. Hock. As shown here the papyrus illustrates how the lead tablet is to be drawn. The language of the curse suggests the spell was designed for use in a courtroom scene.

PGM VII. 940–68

A charm to restrain anger and a charm to subject: On clean papyrus write with pure myrrh ink these names together with the "stele:" 940

IŌERBĒTH
IŌERBĒ
IŌERB
IŌER
IŌE
IŌ
I

IŌPAKERBĒTH
ŌPAKERBĒTH
PAKERBĒTH
AKERBĒTH
KERBĒTH
ERBĒTH
RBĒTH
BĒTH
ĒTH
TH

945

950

IŌSESESRŌ
ŌSESESRŌ
SESESRŌ
ESESRŌ
SESRŌ
ESRŌ
SRŌ
RŌ
Ō

IŌPĒMPS
ŌPĒMPS
PĒMPS
ĒMPS
MPS
PS

955

960

"Come to me, you who are in the everlasting air,[150] you who are invisible, almighty, creator of the gods. Come to me, you who are the unconquerable daimon. Come to me, you who are never grieved for your own brother, Seth.[151] Come to me, / you fire-bright spirit. Come to me, you god who are not to be despised, you daimon, and put to silence, subordinate, enslave him, NN, to him, NN, and cause him to come under my feet."

965

*Tr.: R. R. Hock.

150. For this expression see the parallel in PGM IV. 507–8.

151. This refers to Seth's murder of his brother Osiris. See H. te Velde, Seth, God of Confusion (Leiden: Brill, 1967) esp. 81–82. [R.K.R.]

PGM VII. 969–72

*__A good potion__: Take a piece of hieratic papyrus and / write on it: "IAŌ Ō ESTABISASĒ TOUREŌSAN ATHIACHIŌOUĒNOU ACHĒMACHOU. Let her, NN, whom NN bore, love me, NN, when she has drunk the drink."[152]
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 973–80

*__A love spell of attraction through touch__: Take a scarab and boil it in a good unguent,[153] / and take the beetle and grind it together with the plant vetch, and place them in a glass cup and say the spell that follows twice: "THŌBARRABAU MICHAĒL MICHAĒL OSIRIS PHOR PHORBA ABRIĒL SESEGGENBARPHARAGGĒS IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAIE LAILAM, compel / her, NN, whom NN bore, to follow me should I touch her."
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 981–93

*[__Love spell of attraction__: Purify yourself from everything for . . .] days and say [this] spell at sunrise: "Helios . . . but come here to me, [Mistress AKTIŌPHIS ERESCHIGAL] PERSEPHONĒ; / attract [to me and bind her], NN, whom NN bore, [to] the man who is [pining away] with [passion for her]; at this very moment, inflame her that she fulfill the nightly desires of NN, whom NN bore. Aye, lord NETHMOMAŌ [Helios, enter] into the [soul] of her, NN, whom NN bore, / and [burn her heart], her guts, [her liver, her spirit, her bones. Perform] successfully for me [this] charm,[154] immediately, immediately; [quickly, quickly]."
*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM VII. 993–1009

*Look [to the] east [and say: "You are the one who thunders,] the one who rains and / hurls lightning [at the] right time and dries [in the same way]; come to me, reveal" (add the usual or [write] whatever [you want], and anoint your hand).

Preparation of the ink: 3 dried figs, 3 stones of the Nicolaus date, 3 fragments of wormwood, and 3 lumps of myrrh; [mix together, / then] after pulverizing them, [write] the following formula. Isis uttered [it and] wrote [it] when, after taking up Osiris, she fit together his separated members. Asklepios[155] [saw] Osiris and admitted that he [could] not [put together] someone who was dead [even] with the help of Hebe[156] or of [anyone else].

[This is / the formula: "Come to me, SESEGGENBARPHARAGGĒS SABAŌTH,] for [I conjure] you, [daimon] of the dead, [by] bitter [Necessity]; open [your ears and] hear [the] holy [words]." Also say [frequently] the [stele given] below.
*Tr.: W. C. Grese. This fragmentary spell has not preserved its title and so its exact purpose cannot be known.

152. On the pleonasm πιοῦσα τὸν πότον, cf. PGM VII. 867. [E.N.O.]

153. μύρον is translated by Preisendanz as "Myrrhenöl." Both translations, however, may be too specific for this unspecified aromatic concoction. [E.N.O.]

154. For this phrase, cf. PGM IV. 295, 2939; XX. 5.

155. Asklepios seems to have taken over the role of Anubis (thus Eitrem, in Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.).

156. The appearance of Hebe, daughter of Hera and Zeus, is surprising in this context. According to Euripides, Heraklid. 847; Ovid, Met. 9. 400, she made Iolaos young again, a deed of proverbial fame.

PGM VII. 1009–16

Divination by a dream: Say / to the . . . double . . . and rub your [head]; and [after descending], go to sleep without answering anyone.

"I call upon [you], Sabaoth, Michael, Raphael and you, [powerful archangel] Gabriel, do not [simply] pass by me [as you bring visions], but let one of you enter / and reveal [to me] concerning the NN matter, AIAI ACHĒNĒ IAŌ." Write these things [on leaves . . .] of laurel and place them by your head.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 1017–26

*"[Hail, Helios!] Hail, Helios! Hail, [Gabriel! Hail, Raphael! Hail,] Michael! Hail, whole [universe! Give me] the [authority] and power of SABAŌTH, the / [strength of IAŌ], and the success of ABLANATHANALBA, and [the might of] AKRAMMACHAMAREI. Grant that I [gain] the victory, as I have summoned you" (then write the 59-[letter] IAEŌ formula). "Grant [victory] because I know the names of the Good Daimon, HARPON [CHNOUPHI] BRITATĒNŌPHRI BRISAROUAZAR BASEN / KRIPHI NIPTOUMI CHMOUMAŌPHI (add the usual) and accomplish this for me." Speak to [no one].

*Tr.: R. F. Hock. Although untitled, this spell is a "favor and victory" charm. Cf. PGM XCII for a similar request for the power and strength of various magical and mythological personalities.

PGM VIII. 1–63

Binding love spell of Astrapsoukos:[1]

Spell: "Come to me, lord Hermes, as fetuses do to the wombs[2] of women. Come to me, lord Hermes, who collect the sustenance of gods and men; [come] to me, NN, lord Hermes, and give me favor,[3] sustenance, / victory, prosperity, elegance, beauty of face, strength of all men and women. Your names in heaven: LAMPHTHEN OUŌTHI OUASTHEN OUŌTHI OAMENŌTH ENTHOMOUCH. These are the [names] in the 4 quarters of heaven. I also know what your forms are:[4] in the east you have the form / of an ibis, in the west you have the form of a dog-faced baboon, in the north you have the form of a serpent, and in the south you have the form of a wolf. Your plant is the grape which is the olive.[5] I also know your wood: ebony. I know you, Hermes, who you are and where you come from and what your city is: Hermopolis. Come to me, lord Hermes, many-named one, who know / the things hidden beneath heaven and earth. Come [to me], NN, lord Hermes; serve well, benefactor of the world. Hear me and make me agreeable to all the forms throughout the inhabited world. Open up for me the hands of everyone who [dispenses gifts][6] and compel them to give me what they have in their / hands. I also know your foreign names: 'PHARNATHAR BARACHĒL CHTHA.' These are your foreign names.

"Whereas Isis, the greatest of all the gods, invoked you in every crisis, in every

1. According to Diogenes Laertius, Provem. 2, Astrampsychos was the name of one or several Persian magicians. See E. Reiss, "Astrampsychos," PRE 2 (1896): 1796–97.

2. For parallels to this concept, see PGM III. 603 and n.

3. Here and throughout this section, χάρις is translated "favor," but the term comes close to meaning "grace." [E.N.O.]

4. The four animals represent the following deities: the ibis is Thoth, the dog-faced baboon is Anubis, the serpent is Uto, the wolf is another form of Anubis. Their respective positions are partially clear as well: Uto is often the north, Anubis the west (or the south), but why Thoth stands in the east remains a puzzle. [J.B.]

5. The underscored words are Coptic written with Greek letters.

6. Accepting the emendation of Preisendanz.

district, against gods and men and daimons, creatures of water and earth and held your favor, / victory against gods and men and [among] all the creatures beneath the world, so also I, NN, invoke you.[7] Wherefore, give me favor, form, beauty. Hear me, Hermes, benefactor, [inventor][8] of drugs; be easy to talk to and hear me, just as you have done everything in the form of your Ethiopian dog-faced baboon, / the lord of the chthonic daimons. Calm them all and give me strength, form (add the usual), and let them give me gold and silver and every sustenance which will never fail. Preserve me always, through all eternity, from drugs and deceits, every slander and evil tongues, from / every daimonic possession,[9] from every hatred of both gods and men. Let them give me favor and victory and business and prosperity. For you are I, and I am you;[10] your name is mine, and mine is yours. For I am your image.[11] If something should happen to me during this year or this month or this day or this hour, it will happen to the great / god ACHCHEMEN ESTROPH, the one inscribed on the prow of the holy ship. Your true name has been inscribed on the sacred stele in the shrine at Hermopolis where your birth is. Your true name: OSERGARIACH NOMAPHI. This is your name with fifteen / letters,[12] a number corresponding to the days of the rising moon; and the second name with the number 7, corresponding to those who rule the world,[13] with the exact number 365,[14] corresponding to the days of the year. Truly: ABRASAX. I know you, Hermes, and you know me. / I am you, and you are I. And so, do everything for me, and may you turn to me[15] with Good Fortune and Good Daimon, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly."

Take a piece of olive wood and make a small dog-faced baboon sitting down, wearing the winged helmet of Hermes / and a box on its back, and inscribe the name of Hermes on the papyrus and put it in the box. Write in myrrh ink, praying for what you do or what you wish, and after putting a lid on, burn incense and place it where you wish in the middle of the workshop.

And the name to be written is: "PHTHORON PHTHIONĒ THŌYTH." / In addition, write also these great names: "IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAIE ABLANATHANALBA AKRAMMACHAMAREI, 365, give to the workshop business, favor, prosperity, elegance, both to NN himself and to his workshop, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly."

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. The title of the spell is misleading, for the spell has nothing to do with love, sex, or attraction of a woman. This is a spell for some shopkeeper to ensure good business. There are traces of mysticism here. See Reitzenstein, Poimandres 19–20. [E.N.O.]

7. On Thoth as Isis' chief helper, see Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth 132–36. [R.K.R.]

8. The translation follows Preisendanz's emendation. Cf. below, l. 33 and PGM V. 247–48.

9. συνοχή occurs only here in PGM, and its meaning is uncertain. The verb συνέχω, however, occurs at PGM IV. 1408; V. 126, 131, where each time it seems to refer to daimonic possession. [E.N.O.]

10. For this formula of mutual identity, see PGM VIII. 49–50; XIII. 795. See Betz, "The Delphic Maxim," 165–68.

11. The term εἴδωλον may show philosophical influence. See PGM XII. 235–36; LXI. 53–55. See Betz, "The Delphic Maxim," 165–67; J. Bremmer, The Early Greek Concept of the Soul (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1983) 78–80, 83.

12. As the Greek text stands, the name has sixteen letters. The name should be separated OSERGARIACH NOMAPHI. The discrepancy must be in the first word because the second is correctly said to have seven letters. The confusion may be due to underlying Egyptian words. [J.B.]

13. That is, the seven planets.

14. Cf. l. 61. The number has the numerical value of Abraxas. See Glossary, s.v. "Abraxas."

15. The term συρρέπω is rare. See Betz, "The Delphic Maxim," 164 n. 49.

PGM VIII. 64–110

* Request for a dream oracle of Besa: / On your left hand draw Besa in the way shown to you below. Put around your hand a black cloth[16] of Isis and go to sleep without giving answer to anyone. The remainder of the cloth wrap around your neck.

This is the ink with which you draw: Blood of a crow, blood / of a white dove, lumps of incense, myrrh, black writing ink, cinnabar, sap of mulberry tree, rain-water, juice of a single-stemmed wormwood and vetch. With this write.

Prayer to him,[17] toward the setting sun:

"Borne[18] on the breezes of the wand'ring winds, /
Golden-haired Helios who wield the flame's
Untiring light, who drive in lofty turns
Around the great pole; who create all things
Yourself which you again reduce to nothing.
For from you come the elements arranged
By your own laws which cause the whole world to Rotate through its four yearly turning points. /
If you go to the depths of earth and reach
The region of the dead, send up the truthful
Prophet out of that innermost abode.

I beg you LAMPSOUĒR SOUMARTA BARIBAS DARDALAM PHORBĒX, lord, send forth your holy daimon ANOUTH ANOUTH SALBANACHAMBRĒ BRĒITH, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly; in this night, come." / If you wish to call him also for a direct vision, [take] a strip [of linen], soak it in sesame oil you have mixed [with] cinnabar, and place the linen as a wick in a lamp that is not colored red. The lamp should be lighted with sesame oil. Place it opposite you, say the formula, and he will come to you. Have near you / a small tablet so that you may write as much as he says,[19] lest after going to sleep you forget.

"I call upon / you, the headless god, having your face beside your feet,[20] the one who hurls lightning and thunders; you are the one whose mouth is continually full of fire, the one placed over Necessity. I call upon you, the god placed over Necessity, IAEŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI ZABARBATHIAŌ; you are the one lying on a coffin of myrrh, having resin and asphalt as an elbow cushion,[21] [the one] whom they call ANOUTH ANOUTH. Rise up, daimon. You are not a daimon, but the blood / of the two falcons[22] who chatter and watch before the head of Osiris. You are the oracle-giving god SALBANACHAMBRĒ ANOUTH ANOUTH SABAŌTH ADŌNAI IĒ IE IĒ IE" (add the usual). Go to sleep on a rush mat, having an unbaked brick beside your head.

What you draw is / of this sort: A naked man, standing, having a diadem on his head, and in his right hand a sword that by means of a bent [arm] rests on his neck,

16. See PGM VII. 227 and n.

17. The translation here is tentative because the reading of the papyrus is uncertain. See Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

18. These dactylic hexameters are part of the reconstructed Hymn 4: vv. 1–6, 11 (7–8 [the identification of lines in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 239, is incorrect: v. 13 is not included here]). For other versions and sections of Hymn 4, see PGM I. 315–27; IV. 436–61; 1957–89. [E.N.O.]

19. Cf. the memory spells in PGM I. 233–47; II. 16–20, 40–42.

20. See on this point PGM VII. 234 and n.

21. See for a parallel PGM VII. 237.

22. See for the two falcons and their watch PGM VII. 239 and n.

and in the left hand a wand. If he reveals to you, wipe off your hand with rose perfume. This is the figure / of the rite:

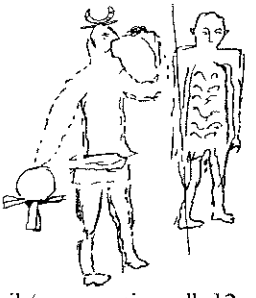
*Tr.: W. C. Grese (ll. 64–74; 81–110) and E. N. O'Neil (ll. 74–81). This particular charm in its present form is actually two charms (a request for a dream oracle and a request for a direct vision) directed to Bes, an originally non-Egyptian god who came to Egypt early and was given many functions, one of which was to provide oracles. The request for a dream oracle contains preparatory instructions and a hymn to the sun that also appears in PGM IV. 436–46 and 1957–68. The request for a direct vision has instructions and a formula of invocation addressed to the "headless god." This invocation also appears in PGM VII. 233–48 and makes use of language that can also be found in a boast of the "headless god" in PGM IV. 145–58.

PGM IX. 1–14

*"'I'll give you rest from wrath and soothe your raging.'[1] Come, lord BAINCHŌŌŌCH, with your father ANIBAINCHŌŌŌCH, with your mother CHECHPHIŌ, with your two bodyguards CHENGĒBIŌCHTHŌ MYSAGŌTH ECHE ŌŌ MYSAGŌTH ACHPHIPHIŌ IAIA ŌCH SEBAU PHRĒ IŌ RĒXICHTHŌN YŌĒŌ AEAEĒIOYŌ CHYCHBACHYCH BAUACHYCH BAKAXICHYCH BAZABACHYCH MENEBACHYCH BADĒDOPHŌ BAINCHŌŌŌCH. Bring into subjection, put to silence, and enslave / every race of people, both men and women, with their fits of wrath, and those who are under the earth beneath the feet of him, NN, especially so-and-so (add the usual, as you wish), for you have put beneath my feet, like my robe, the heart of SABAŌTH."

On the back of the lamella: "EULAMŌ SISIRBBAIĒRSESI PHERMOU CHNOUŌR ABRASAX. Bring into subjection, enslave, and put to silence the soul, the wrath [of him, NN], because I adjure you by the / awful Necessity MASKELLI MASKELLŌ PHMOUKENTABAŌTH OREOBAZAGRA RĒXICHTHŌN HIPPOCHTHŌN PYRIPĒGANYX LEPETAN LEPETAN PHNOUNOBOĒ." On the front [write] the person's name.

The introduction to the rite:



"I'll[2] give you rest from wrath
And soothe your raging.
Come silently and bring
Silence and keep it.
Stop ev'ry wrath in souls
And melt all anger
Of those with temper,

because I call upon your authentic name, BAINCHŌŌŌCH." Say this name, [written] at the top of the metal leaf: "IAŌMORMOROTOKONBAI."

1. The introduction to this spell cites only the first line of the "prologue" given in ll. 12–14.

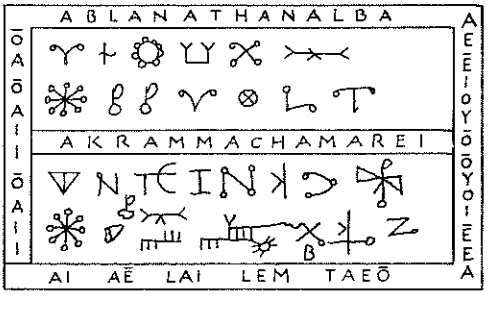
2. These lines have been arranged in iambic trimeters and are the reconstructed Hymn 30. See Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 266. [E.N.O.]

[ON VERSO]:

*Tr.: R. F. Hock and E. N. O'Neil (verse sections, ll. 12–13). This spell to subject and silence gives instructions for engraving a so-called curse tablet, presumably made of lead.

PGM X. 1–23

*[While drinking] and eating take the first [morsels] and place them [into] a small dish[1] [of the temple while speaking] thus: "NN, may you have been sent [to me as a helper] to fulfill the commands / of the gods. My name is ŌI . . . IAŌ SABAŌTH ZABARBATHIAŌ [ADŌNAI . . .]; let her, [NN,] love me, NN, with a divine [and] indelible [love]." »»»»»»——



Spell that is spoken: / "I adjure you and the spirit which is with you. To you speaks the great and powerful god, SATHIS [PEPHOOUTH MOU]RŌPH ANOUR[2] OUPH[IRIGCH]: let her, NN, be well [disposed toward me]; let her see me and, having seen me, let her fall in love with me, and no one [will be able] to speak in opposition, PHTHOROCHĒB ATHA / . . . N THARAMĒCHI EOPSĒRIPSOU ACHORSŌTHIA . . . THIE Ē NOUSOU PHTHAPA APOUOROTH . . . Ē CHOADOUSTRŌ PRŌTHIAPSIŌR . . . S CHOMARCHŌCH CHANACHOUŌRRĒLOUKOUMPHA."

[The spell in another form: "May she, NN,] fall in love when she sees[3] [me, and] may she [never] resist [me], / O great and powerful god, because of modesty." And when you see her, NN, take a long, deep breath three times while staring at her, and then she smiles at you. For [this is] a sign of [her love]. »»»»»»——

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. The text clearly preserves a love spell, but the beginning of the text is mutilated. The restoration by Preisendanz remains tentative, and so is the translation.

PGM X. 24–35

Charm to restrain anger which works in all cases, for it works against enemies, / accusers, brigands, phobias, and nightmares: Take a gold or silver lamella and engrave on it the characters and names, and when you have consecrated it, wear it in purity. Now here it is:

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

1. παραψίδιον is taken here to be a misspelling of παροψίδιον, referring to a small food dish. [E.N.O.]

2. ANOUR is Egyptian In-ḥr (Greek Onouris), whose major role in mythology was to bring back the angry goddess Tefnut. Cf. Bonnet, RÄRG 545–47, s.v. "Onuris." [R.K.R.]

3. On the idea of love at first sight, a typically hellenistic idea, see, for example, Theocritus, Idyll 2.

PGM X. 36–50

Another way*: Apollo's charm to subject: Take a lamella [or metal leaf][4] from a yoke for mules and engrave on it the following names and put a frog's tongue in it.

Spell, when the metal leaf with the frog's tongue is put / into your right sandal: "Just as these sacred names are being trampled, so also let him, NN (add the usual), the trouble-maker, be trampled."

"ABRASAX

			IŌCHCH
AEĒIOYŌ	CHYCH	MICHAĒL	NYSEU
EĒIOYŌA	CHYBACHYCH	RAPHAĒL	NYCHIEU
ĒIOYŌAE	BACHACHYCH	GABRIĒL	AŌCHĒ
IOYŌAEĒ	BAKAXICHYCH	SOURIĒL	MECHEU
OYŌAEĒI	BAZABACHYCH	ZAZIĒL	IAŌ
YŌAEĒIO	BADĒTOPHŌTH	BADAKIĒL	SABAŌTH
ŌAEĒIOY.	BAINCHŌŌŌCH.	SYLIĒL.	ADŌNAI.

 ABRASAX  Subject him, NN, to me, / immediately; quickly, quickly."

 Z

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM XI.a 1–40

Apollonius of Tyana's old serving woman: Take Typhon's skull[1] and write the following characters on it with the blood of a black dog: "  SABERRA." Then, going to a suitable place, by a river, the sea, or at the fork of a road, in the middle of the night put the skull / on the ground, place it [under] your left foot, and speak as follows.

The formula: "ERITHYIA[2] MEROPĒ GERGIRŌ CHĒTHIRA ANAPEROUCH . . . LYRŌPHIA GĒGETHIRA LOLYN GOUGŌGĒ AMBRACHA BI . . . AEBILĒ MARITHAIA MPROUCHE ABĒL ETHIRAŌ AP . . . ŌCHORIĒLA MŌRĒTHIRA PHECHIRŌ ŌSRI PHOIRA AMERI . . . PHĒ. OUTHĒRA / GARGERGIŌ TITHEMYMĒ MĒRAPSĒCHIR AŌRIL. Come, appear, O goddess called Mistress of the House."[3]

After you say this, you will behold sitting on an ass a woman of extraordinary loveliness, possessing a heavenly beauty, indescribably fair and youthful. As soon as you see her, make obeisance and say: "I thank [you], lady for appearing to me. / Judge me worthy of you. May your Majesty be well disposed to me. And accomplish whatever task I impose on you."

---

82 (on a magical ritual), a line which Virgil, Ecl. 8. 41, and the author of the Ciris (l. 430) copied. See Gow's note to Idyll 2. 82, Theocritus, vol. II, 51–52. [E.N.O.]

4. The translation follows the text of Preisendanz, which has the editor's insertion (ἢ πέταλον) to conform with the occurrence of the noun in l. 39. The emendation, however, may not be necessary.

1. "Typhon's skull" is the semantic equivalent of the skull of an ass. See C. Colpe, "Geister (Dämonen)," RAC 9 (1978): 620–21; H. Kees, "Seth," PRE, 2nd ser. 4 (1923): 1896–1922; esp. 1899, 1920–21; W. Fauth, "Seth-Typhon, Onoel und der eselköpfige Sabaoth," Oriens Christianus 57 (1973): 79–120.

2. This seems to be the reading of the papyrus, but it is not certain. Preisendanz treats the word as a proper name. One may also read ειλειθυια on the grounds that both it and μεροπε which follows immediately are names suitable for the goddess Nephthys. [J.B.]

3. "Mistress of the house" is a direct translation of the Egyptian name Nephthys, sister of Isis, and (as is stressed in this spell) wife of Seth. Thus she is fittingly associated with an ass. See Bonnet, RÄRG 519–21, s.v. "Nephthys"; Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 305, 447. [J.B./R.K.R.]

The goddess will reply to you, "What do you have in mind?"

You say, "I have need [of you] for domestic service."

At that, she will get off the ass, shed her beauty, and will be an old woman.[4] And the old woman will say to you, "I will serve and attend you."

After she tells you this, the goddess will again put on her own beauty, which she had just taken off, / and she will ask to be released.[5]

But you say to the goddess, "No, lady! I will use you until I get her."

As soon as the goddess hears this, she will go up to the old lady, and will take her molar tooth and a tooth from the ass and give both to you; and after that it will be impossible for the old woman to leave you, unless perhaps you want to release her. From that time forth, you will receive a bounty of great benefits, for everything that your soul desires will be accomplished by her. She will guard all your possessions[6] / and in particular will find out for you whatever anyone is thinking about you.[7]

Indeed she will tell you everything and will never desert you: such is her store of good will toward you. But if ever you wish, there is a way to release her (but never do this!). Take her tooth and the ass's tooth, / make a bonfire, and throw them into the fire, and with a shriek the old woman will flee without a trace. Do not be prone to release her, since it will be impossible for you to replace her.

But do release the goddess, when you are sure that the old woman will serve you, by speaking as follows: "MENERPHER PHIĒ PRACHĒRA LYLŌRI / MĒLICHARĒ NĒCHIRA." When the old woman hears this, the goddess will mount the ass and depart.

The phylactery to be used throughout the rite: The skull of the ass. Fasten the ass's tooth with silver and the old lady's tooth with gold, and wear them always; for if you do this, it will be impossible for / the old woman to leave you. The rite has been tested.

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr. See on this spell, for general background and additional literature, E. L. Bowie, "Apollonius of Tyana: Tradition and Reality," ANRW II, 16, 2 (Berlin: De Gruyter, 1978) 1652–99, esp. 1686; J. Bergman, "Nephthys découverte dans un papyrus magique (PGM XIa.)," in Melanges Adolphe Gutbub (Montpellier: Editions de l'université de Montpellier, 1984) 1–11.

PGM XIb. 1–5

To make men who have drinking at a symposium appear to have donkey snouts[8] to outsiders, from afar: In the dark [take] a wick from a lamp and dip it in donkey's blood; make a new lamp / with the new wick and touch the drinkers.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky. For similar "gimmicks," see the translation and notes on PGM VII. 167–85. The translation adopts the restorations mentioned in the apparatus criticus of Preisendanz.

4. At this point, the old woman and the goddess assume separate identities. [H.M.]
5. On this point see PGM LXX. 11 and Betz, "Fragments," 291.
6. Reading with Eitrem πάντα δέ σοι, instead of Preisendanz's καὶ τάδε σοι. [H.M.]
7. Or "whatever anyone is plotting against you." [J.B.]
8. LSJ, s.v., cites this as a gloss (a plant name). But here and in Psellos, Lect. Mirab. (A. Westermann, Paradoxographi Graeci [Amsterdam: Hakkert, 1963; repr. of 1839 ed.] 147, 11; the paignion of Anaxilaos in Wellmann, APAW.PH 1928, p. 79, 7) the term can be rendered literally "donkey-faced" or "ass-snouted." The paignion of Anaxilaos reads: "If you wish your wife to appear 'ass-snouted' when she looks in the mirror, rub her mirror with donkey's tears." [R.D.K.]

PGM XIc. 1–19

*You write this on hieratic papyrus and [place . . . :]

"I adjure you, by the god
IABŌ: turn the heart of her,
NN, whom NN bore, to NN, whom / NN bore, at the command of IABŌ, MASKELLEI MASKELLŌ PHAINOUKENTABAŌ; cause me, NN, to obtain intercourse,
God the [BAR]BARAI
let her, NN, [whom NN bore, come beneath my] / roof,
and let her love
[me, NN, whom NN bore], for [all] the time / [of her] life, lusting [for me] with [eternal] love, immediately,
[immediately; quickly, quickly]."

ABLANATHANALBA
BLATHANABA
NATHANDA
ANATHANA
NABANAEI
ABTHŌŌTH
BARBACHA
ABRASAX
AŌ[IAMARI]
SERPHOUTHEI
E EI EI Ē I Ē I AAAAAAA IIIIIII

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PDM xii. 1–5

*". . . I am NA, come (?) . . . farmer (?), the millions of falcons, / this young man. . . ."

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson, following the edition and translation in OMRM 56 (1975): 32–33, col. II*, ll. 1–5. The first line of this invocation of an uncertain purpose is missing. Section titles are indicated in the Demotic texts only when they appear in red letters (see the Introduction to the Demotic magical papyri).

PDM xii. 6–20

*A ring to cause praise: You bring a ring of iron and you bring a white stone which is in the shape of a grape [which] grows / as a fresh plant in the water, there being [a] daimon with the face [of] a falcon . . . together with his snake tail,[1] there being a nemes headdress (?) in (?) the . . . eye whose face goes to the. . . . Write / this name on it . . . saying, "ABRAXAM PHILEN . . . CHNI . . . ," put a limb of a lion under it together with a piece of gold; put them under it; and / make . . . it.

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson, following the edition and translation in OMRM 56 (1975): 32–33, col. II*, ll. 6–20.

PDM xii. 21–49

*"Open to me, O heaven! Open to me, O earth! Open to me, O underworld! Open to me! I am Horus. Open to me! I went forth from the necropolis of Wen-nefer.

1. For a composite deity, cf. PGM XII. 121ff.; XIII. 50 with n.

May Iymhotep[2] the Great, the son of Ptah, born of Kherti-ankh, come to me tonight! May he tell me a prescription which is fitting to the illness / which has happened to me, together with the method of [using] it, there being no falsehood therein! Bear witness! Bear witness![3] O Iymhotep the Great, the son of Ptah, born of Kherti-ankh, and put this . . . of reed (?) on yourself while the bark of ʿrw-wood is under you, while the . . . of . . . of Ptah is on you. Is it what is fitting? May he, Iymhotep the Great, the son of Ptah, / born of Kherti-ankh bear witness (?) to the fury against you in the presence of Nephthys saying,

'O Shu, live! O soul, live! Live, O Shu, live! Live, O Osiris! Live, O Ethiopian soul! Live, O Sokar who endures (?) who is [on] board . . . harbor . . . entire (?), he having ascended. Live O great (secret) image of Egypt who rests in the middle of Memphis, the place of Ptah' (another [manuscript] says: 'the House of the obelisk') 'without a prescription! If I am called / about it, . . . calls to me about a prescription, I shall tell him the prescription which is fitting to the illness in which he is.' Is it what is fitting? May Iymhotep the Great, the son of Ptah, born of Kherti-ankh bear witness (?). Come to me, O battler! Tell me the prescription which is fitting to the illness [which] has happened to me! Come to me, O great of face . . . O . . . the peak . . . soul! Come to me, O one whose face / is as the face of a falcon . . . hair of . . . ! O he who rests . . . necropolis of (?) Heliopolis (?). I (?) am the son . . . after swallowing. O son of the great Shu. Come to me . . . of man upon his egg (?) . . . of Thoth and his father! Come to me, O (?) . . . who is in the great ennead, not knowing his . . . , the . . . ! Are you steadfast against me, not to tell me the prescription which is fitting to the illness which has happened / in me? I will say much (?) . . . which is in . . . , the mysterious one (?), who is in . . . the heart of the . . . the . . . of . . . of . . . of the . . . soul" (another [manuscript] says: "Ruler of the western half"). "You will not live in the . . . without having come to me tonight to tell me a prescription which is fitting to the illness which has happened to me, together with the method of using it, [there] being no falsehood therein."

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson, following the edition and translation in OMRM 56 (1975): 35–37, col. I*, ll. 1–29. The purpose of this prayer is to secure a remedy for an unstated disease.

PGM XII. 1–13

Rite: Unfold a funeral shroud at night and carry it;[4] also take a sword.

Then say: "THERMOCH CHTHABOI ACHAPH MARMILYCHA BERTHIŌCH CHARĒL . . . BAIOCH . . . THACH DĒRPHO PHIRBSAT (?) SŌTHŌRAI PHAUXAI IŌA MEILICH IABAI EIA KARSE REUTHRA ENROUCH ZERPHRĒCH / PSERPHERCHŌ THNERBĒCH CHARCHERBER YEICH PHCHYAR PA . . . CHA MILCHITHER CHLĒLŌR PHACHILER MAZ MACHAIRIŌCH."

After you say this, the Maiden will come carrying torches.[5] Say: "PHERTHELILŌCH PEIY . . . ," and her firebrands will be extinguished, and she will stand there in distress and complain.

You say, "Do such-and-such and I will light your torches." If she sends a dream, you are to light them and she will fly away. / If you send her to kill somebody, give

2. For Imhotep, the vizier and architect of the Step Pyramid of Djoser at Saqqara later divinized as the patron of scribes and physicians, see Dietrich Wildung, Imhotep und Amenhotep (München: Deutscher Kunst Verlag, 1977); idem, "Imhotep," LdÄ 3, 145–48. [J.H.J.]

3. The words "Bear witness!" were crossed out by the original scribe.

4. It is not clear what the conjurer is to carry. Is it the funeral shroud? [H.M.]

5. The reference is to Kore (Persephone). See the picture on the Niinnion Tablet in G. E. Mylonas, Eleusis and the Eleusinian Mysteries (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1961), fig. 88, and the discussion, pp. 213–21.

her the sword and she will give you the torches and return with the sword covered with blood. Tell her that the torches belong to her; they will catch fire, and she will take flight.

While doing this, say: "MŌZĒRPHER TACHCHAPS." Attach a phylactery[6] to your right and your left hand at night and wear it.

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM XII. 14–95

*Eros[7] as assistant. / A ritual of Eros: consecration and preparation (among his operations, he sends dreams or causes sleeplessness; and he releases from an evil spirit, if you use him in a proper and holy manner, for he can perform every operation). Take [wax] of Etruria[8] and mix with it [every] kind of aromatic plant. Then make a statue of a torch-bearing Eros that is eight dactyls[9] high and has a large base to support it. Put a bow / and arrow in [his left] hand, and fashion a Psyche[10] of the same sort as Eros.

When you have completed all this, conduct a three-day consecration. You are to present to Eros fresh fruits of every kind and 7 cakes, 7 pinecones, every kind of sweetmeat, 7 lamps not colored red; also, [three] daggers, votive tablets, a bow and arrow, dates, a bowl mixed with honey wine.

After you make the statues and the presentation as indicated, next place your Eros on a table laden with the fruit / and holding both the 7 lamps, ablaze with clear olive oil, and all else listed so as to win the favor of wondrous Eros.

On the first day, after you put him on the table and arrange things as prescribed—and I describe its form in full for you, that you may understand and lack no detail—build a pure altar; that is, take two unbaked bricks and form them into 4 horn-shaped objects, on which you lay fruit-bearing branches. / Take also on the first day 7 living creatures and strangle them: one cock, a partridge, a wren, a pigeon, a turtledove, and any two nestlings you can get hold of. Do not make a burnt offering[11] of any of these; instead, you are to take them in hand and choke them, all the while holding them up to your Eros, until each of the creatures is suffocated and their breath[12] enters him. After that, place the strangled creatures on the altar together with aromatic plants / of every variety.

On the second day, strangle a male chick before your Eros and burn it as a whole offering.

On the 3rd day, place another chick on the altar; while conducting this portion of the ritual, consume the chick by yourself, allowing no one else to be present. I assure you, if you perform the above actions in a holy and pure manner, you will have complete success.

First formula to be spoken while making the burnt offering: / "I call upon you, who are on the couch of beauty, who are in the mansion of desire: serve me and, no matter where I send you, always bear the message I give you, likening yourself to some god (or goddess) such as men and women there worship, announcing all that is written out or imparted to you in speech, quickly!

6. It is not certain what the phylactery is, although it may be the shroud.
7. Cf. PGM VII. 479 for a parallel.
8. For this substance, see PGM IV. 3131.
9. That is, the measure of the finger's breadth, about 7/10 of an inch.
10. On Eros and Psyche, see PGM IV. 1741 and n.
11. This refers to the so-called holocaust, in which the sacrificial gifts are burnt completely (cf. PGM IV. 2396, 3148–49). See Nilsson, GGR I, 132; J. Milgrom, IDB.S (1976): 769–70 on ʿŌlâ.
12. For this peculiar purpose of sacrifice, see PGM XIII. 377.

"Fire overtook the greatest phantoms, and heaven swallowed unawares the orb of the holy scarab / called 'PHŌREI.'[13] Scarab, the winged ruler in midheaven, was be- 45 headed, dismembered, and wasted his greatness and glory; they confined him and took another as master of heaven.[14] You take note, and serve as my minister to anyone I choose, man or woman.

"Come to me, O master of heaven, who shine upon the world of men; serve as my minister, whether to men or to women, whether to the small or to the great, and / compel them always to do everything written by me. 50

"Come to me, O master of forms, and arouse men and women for me; force them by your ever-strong and mighty authority to do everything written or spoken by me, EISAPHSANTA PHOUREI ARNAI SYSYN PHREŌ[15] RIŌBAIOSOI, you are ATEPHTHO AŌREL ADŌNAI; afflict them with fear, trembling, terror; trouble their thoughts / with fear of you. And do everything prescribed for [me], NN. If you 55 disobey me, the sun's orb will burn out and darkness will cover the whole world. The Scarab will come down until you do for me everything I write or say—in strict obedience to me; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly."

Second [formula] to be spoken while making the burnt offering: "I conjure you by the one who controls the universe, laid the four foundations, and mixed the 4 / winds. You are the one who sends lightning, you are the one who thunders, you 60 are the one who shakes, you are the one who overturned all things and set them up again. Cause all men and all women to turn to love me, the man NN (or the woman NN), from the very hour when I make my petition with this binding charm,[16] on order from the most high god,[17] IAŌ ADŌNEAI ABLANATHANALBA. You are the one who embraces the Graces on the mountain top, LAMPSRĒ; you are the one who holds Necessity in your right hand, BELTEPIACH; you are the / one who looses and 65 binds, SEMESIELAMP EKRIPH. Obey me from this day forth even unto all time."

Third formula for the same offering: "I call upon you, gods of heaven and gods of earth, gods aerial and gods terrestrial. And I conjure you by the one who controls the 4 foundations, to accomplish for me, the man NN (or the woman NN) such-and-such a matter and to give me favor, sweet speech, charm with all men / and all women under creation, that they may be submissive to my every wish, in- 70 asmuch as I am the slave of the most high god, the almighty who controls the universe, MARMARIŌTH LASIMIŌLĒTH ARAAS . . . S SĒBARBAŌTH NOŌ AŌI ŌIĒR (add the spice)[18] AAAAA ĒĒĒĒĒĒĒ ŌŌŌŌŌŌŌ. I give orders to Eros, who is charged with carrying out these my commandments, inasmuch as I am god of all gods, 75
IAŌN SABAŌTH ADŌNAI [ABRASAX] IARABBAI / THŌURIŌ THANAKERMĒPH PANCHONAPS."

The above formulas must be used and [spoken] during the 3 days if you are to endow the rite with full potency. But when you dispatch your Eros to accomplish

13. The relationship between the holy scarab and the name PHŌREI is not clear. Cf. the voces magicae below, l. 53 (PHOUREI) and the apparatus ad loc.

14. The reference to scarab mythology in ll. 45–47 is syncretistic and reminiscent of the dismemberment of Osiris. See S. Eitrem, "Sonnenkäfer und Falke in der synkretistischen Magie," in Pisciculi. Festschrift für F. Dölger (Münster: Aschendorff, 1939) 94–101.

15. PHREŌ is "Prē the great." It should be noted that the sun god is in conjunction with the scarab. [R.K.R.]

16. The papyrus reads παραψιμω (LSJ, s.v.: "charm acting by means of touch"); the translation follows Preisendanz's reading παραφιμω ("Zauberzwang"). See the apparatus ad loc.

17. For this epithet of IAŌ ADŌNAI, cf. PGM IV. 1068; XVI. 9. See G. Bertram, TDNT 8 (1972): 618–19, s.v. "ὕψιστος."

18. The papyrus reads ἄρτημα, "ornament"; Preisendanz takes it to be ἄρτυμα, "spice."

your desires, utter only the formula below, removing him from the table together with the things presented to him; write instructions as to what you desire on a small piece of papyrus.

Formula to be written on the piece of papyrus: "You are the babe, the living god,
80 the creature of beauty[19] . . . SAMMŌTH / SABAŌTH TABAŌTH SORPHĒ SEOURPHOUTH MOUI SI SRŌ[20] SALAMA GŌUTH ETHEIMĒOUS OUSEIRI HESEIĒ E PHTHA NOUTH SATHAĒ ISIS[21] ACHTHI EPHANOUN BIBIOU BIBIOU SPHĒ SPHĒ ASĒĒAĒI. Go [to] every place and every dwelling to which I send you, to him, NN, [born of] her, NN (or to her, NN, [born of] her, NN), likening yourself to a god (or goddess) he [or she] worships. Force him to do such-and-such a matter (write as much as you wish on the piece of papyrus along with the formula). Awake, terrify him! I
85 conjure you / by the [holy] and precious name to which all creation is subject: PASICHTHŌN IBARBOU THARAKTITHEANŌ BABOUTHA KŌCHED, Amen.[22] Let such-and-such a matter come to pass immediately, immediately. . . .

". . . of the Red Sea, the one who drives the winds together from the 4 regions, the one who sits upon the lotus[23] and illumines the whole world; for you throne in the form of a crocodile, and in southerly regions you are a winged serpent. Such
90 now in very / truth is your nature, IŌIŌ BARBAR ADŌNAI KOMBALIŌPS THŌB IARMIŌOUTH. Come to me; heed this my request for service, this my request for action, O most great one, HARSAMŌSI MOUCHA LINOUCHA robber ADŌNEAI. I am he whom you met at the foot of the holy mount and to whom you gave the knowledge of your most great [name], which knowledge will I even keep in sanctity, imparting it to no one save the very initiates into your own holy mysteries, IAR-
95 BATHATRA MNĒPSIBAŌ / CHNĒMEŌPS. Come! Submit to this service and be my assistant."

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM XII. 96–106

Himerios'[24] recipes:

Drawing made with Typhonian ink:[25] A fiery red poppy, juice from an artichoke, seed of the Egyptian acacia, red Typhon's ocher, asbestos, quicklime, wormwood with a single stem, gum, rainwater.

100 To do well at the workshop: / On the egg of a male bird[26] write and then bury the egg near the threshold where you live. "CHPHYRIS,[27] egg, which is CHORBAI SANACHARSŌ AMOUN ☩ SPHĒ SPHĒ GAKNEPHĒ SIETHŌ ☩ NOUSI NOUSI, you are the sacred egg from birth, which is SELBIOUS BATHINI PHNIĒIAĒO AŌĒ AŌĒ AŌIAŌI A PHIAEA THŌUTH IAŌ SELETĒA THEŌĒPH OXYMBRĒ ĒĒĒ III."

19. The words "babe, living god, creature of beauty" translate Egyptian epithets: ḫwn, "youth," ntr ʿnḫ, "living god," and Wn-nfr, "Onnophris." See PGM IV. 1078. [R.K.R.]

20. For SERPOUTH MOUI SI SRO, "Lotus, lion, son (?) of Ram," cf. PGM III. 659 and n.

21. USIRI HESIE PHTHA NOUTH . . . ISI is Egyptian and means "Osiris, drowned one, Ptah, Nut . . . Isis." On Hesies, see Glossary, s.v. "Esies"; for Nut, the sky god, see Bonnet, RÄRG 536–38, s.v. "Nut." [R.K.R.]

22. The amen points to Jewish influence. Cf. PGM VII. 271; XXIIb. 21, 25.

23. For this epithet, see PGM II. 101 and n.; IV. 1684; LXI. 32.

24. The papyrus reads ημεριου, which Preisendanz assumes is a reference to the fourth-century physician Himerios. See H. Goossen, "Himerios, 2," PRE 8 (1913):1635.

25. Cf. for this ink PGM VII. 653; XIa. 2.

26. Preisendanz translates "on the male egg of a bird." The idea is less of a problem when the egg is taken to be an image of the primordial egg, in which the first god comes to existence. See PGM III. 145 and n.

27. CHPHYRIS is the scarab. See PGM VII. 584 and n.

The prayer concerning the egg: "Great God, give favor, business to me and to this place where the egg lies, in the house I do my business, SELEPĒL THEŌĒPH and / Good Daimon, send to this place every business and good daily profit. You are my work. You are the great Ammon,[28] who dwells in heaven. Come, help me."
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM XII. 107–21

Charm of Agathokles[29] for sending dreams: Take a completely black cat that died a violent death, make a strip of papyrus and write with myrrh the following, together with the [dream] you want sent,[30] and place it into the mouth of the cat. /

"I am lying,[31] I am lying, I am the great one, the one lying in [the mouth], MOMMOU THŌTH NANOUMBRĒ CHARICHA KENYRŌ PAARMIATH, [to whom belongs] the holy name, IAOU IEĒ IEOU AĒŌI, the one above the heaven; arise, YMEU NENNANA SENNANA ABLANATHANALBA AKRAMMACHAMARI ABRASILOUA LAMPSŌREI EEI EIEI AŌĒĒŌ THĒOURIS[32] ŌA EPEIDEU EPERGA BRIŌN AMĒN. Reveal to him, NN, concerning this."

Compelling charm: "Come to me, NN, [you who] established the . . . by your own power, / you who rule the whole world, the fiery god.[33] Reveal to him, NN, THARTHAR THAMAR ATHATHA MOMMOM THANABŌTH APRANOU BAMBALĒA CHRĒTH NABOUSOULĒTH ROMBROU THARAĒL ALBANA BRŌCHRĒX ABRANA ZOUCHĒL. Hear me, because I am going to say the great name, AŌTH, before whom every god prostrates himself and every daimon shudders, for whom every angel completes those things which are assigned. Your divine name according to the seven[34] is AEĒIOYŌ IAYŌĒ EAŌOYEĒŌIA. I have spoken the / glorious name, the name for all needs. Reveal to NN, lord god."

This is the name; this Apollobex[35] also used.
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM XII. 121–43

Zminis[36] of Tentyra's spell for sending dreams:[37] Take a clean linen cloth, and (according to Ostanes) with myrrh ink draw a figure on it which is humanlike in

28. For the invocation of Amon and Thoth in conjunction with the cosmic egg, see Morenz, Egyptian Religion 178.

29. Nothing is known about this author.

30. Or "to whom you want to send this dream." [J.B.]

31. The papyrus has κειμι. It could be a reference to the Egyptian kemi, kmj, "the black one," an epithet of Osiris. See Schmidt, Philologische Wochenschrift 55 (1935): 1174, and the apparatus ad loc.

32. THĒOURIS is the Egyptian T3-wr.t, "Thoeris," the hippopotamus goddess who protected the bedside. See Bonnet, RÄRG 530–35, s.v. "Nilpferd." [R.K.R.] For the Greek name, see Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 19, 358C: Θούηρις; and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 347–48.

33. See on this epithet Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 118–20, 164.

34. That is, the seven vowels.

35. Apuleius, Apol. 90 calls Apollobex a famous magician, and Pliny, NH 30. 9, makes him the forerunner of Demokritos, who copied his works from him. But the name is also an epithet of Horus. See E. Riess, "Apollobex," PRE 1 (1894): 2847; Hopfner, OZ II, sec. 210; K. Preisendanz, "Apollobex," PRE 20 (1941): 1311–12.

36. The magician Zminis of Tentyra (Dendera on the Nile) is not otherwise known. See K. Preisendanz, "Zminis," Roscher 6 (1936): 762.

37. On dream sending, see I. E. S. Edwards, Oracular Amuletic Decrees of the Late New Kingdom (London: British Museum, 1960), vol. I, pp. xx, n. 11; 63. [R.K.R.]

appearance but has four wings,[38] having the left arm outstretched[39] along with the 125 two left wings, and having the other arm bent with the fist clenched. / Then upon the head [draw] a royal headdress and a cloak over its arm, with two spirals on the cloak. Atop the head [draw] bull horns and to the buttocks a bird's tail. Have his right hand held near his stomach, and on either ankle have a sword extended.

Also write on the strip the following names of the god and whatever you want him, [NN], to see and how:[40] "CHALAMANDRIŌPH IDEARZŌ THREDAPHNIŌ /
130 ERTHIBELNIN RYTHADNIKŌ PSAMOMERICH,[41] to all of you I speak, also to you, O very powerful daimon: go into the house of this person and tell him such-and-such."

Next take a lamp neither colored red nor inscribed, and after you put a wick in it, fill it with cedar oil, and light it. Invoke the following names of the god, three [times]:[42] "CHALAMANDRIŌPH IDEARYŌTH THREDAPHNIŌ ERTHABEANIG RYTHANIKŌ PSAMMORICH, O sacred names of the god, listen to me—you also, O Good 135 Daimon, whose might is very great / among the gods, listen to me: go to him, NN, into his house, where he sleeps, into his bedroom, and stand beside him, causing fear, trembling, by using the great and mighty names of the god. And tell him such-and-such.

"I conjure you [by] your power, [by] the great god, SĒITH,[43] [by] the hour in which you were begotten a great god,[44] [by] the god revealing[45] it now (?), [by] the 365 names of the great god, to go to him, NN, this very hour, this very night, and 140 to tell / him in a dream such-and-such.

"If you disobey me and don't go to him, NN, I will tell the great god, and after he has speared you through, he will chop you up into pieces and feed your members to the mangy dog who lies among the dungheaps.[46] For this reason, listen to me immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly, so I won't have to tell you again."
*Tr.: Roy Kotansky.

PGM XII. 144–52

145 Request for a dream; / an exact method for everything:[47] Using blood from a

38. The picture is of Bes-Pantheos known from Egyptian monuments and from gemstones. See Delatte and Derchain, Les Intailles 126–41; Bonner, SMA 25, also nos. 251–61, plates 24–25. On the identification with El-Kronos, see A. Barb, Gnomon 41 (1969): 304; P. Zazoff, ed., Antike Gemmen in Deutschen Sammlungen, vol. IV (Wiesbaden: Steiner, 1975) 387 (no. 77). For a detailed picture and description, see S. Sauneron, Le Papyrus magique illustré de Brooklyn (Brooklyn Museum 47.218.156) (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1970) 11–16.

39. Reading ἐκτεταμένον; see apparatus criticus in Preisendanz ad loc.

40. ὡς must be read here as a relative particle, with the meaning that the magician is to insert a description of how the dream will appear to the sleeper. See LSJ, s.v. "ὡς," A.c.

41. The voces magicae here have been written to conform to the second occurrence of the list in ll. 133–34. The division of the words follows the edition of C. Leemans, Papyri Graeci Musei Antiquarii publici Lugduni-Batavi, vol. II (Leiden: Brill, 1885), plate V, col. 4a. Preisendanz divides the names differently in both series. [R.D.K.]

42. Or the "three names of the god."

43. That is, Seth.

44. Or "[by] the hour in which you were appointed a great god." This rendering follows Leemans's edition.

45. The interpretation of the symbol, read by Preisendanz as χ(ρηματίσοντ)α, is open to question. See the apparatus ad loc.

46. The god is threatened in the name of Seth with the same attack Seth committed against Osiris. Cf. PGM VII. 940–68. [R.K.R.]

47. The translation follows the suggestion by W. B. that ἀκριβὴς εἰς πάντα is probably part of the title.

quail, draw on a strip of linen the god Hermes, standing, ibis-faced.[48] Then with myrrh write also the name and say the formula:

"Come to me here quickly, you who have the power. I call upon you, the one appointed god of gods over the spirits, to show this[49] to me in dreams. I conjure [you] by your father, Osiris, and Isis,[50] your mother, to show me one of your forms, / and reveal concerning the things I want. Your name is ĒIIOUATHI PSRĒP- 150 NOUA NERTĒR DIOCHASBARA ZARACHŌ, whom they call BALCHAM. Reveal concerning this[51] concerning all things [about which] I inquire."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM XII. 153–60

Spell for a divine revelation: Invoke the great name in a time of great stress, in major and pressing crises. If not, you will blame yourself.[52] In addition say three times the "IAŌ," then the great name of god. /

"I call upon you, PHTHA RA PHTHA IĒ PHTHA OUN EMĒCHA ERŌCHTH BARŌCH 155
THO[RCH]THA THŌM CHAIEOUCH ARCHANDABAR ŌEAEŌ YNĒŌCH ĒRA ŌN ĒLŌPH BOM PHTHA ATHABRASIA ABRIASŌTH BARBARBELŌCHA BARBAIAŌCH; let there be depth, breadth, length, brightness, ABLANATHANALBA ABRASIAOUA AKRAMMACHAMAREI THŌTH HŌR ATHŌŌPŌ. Come in, lord, and reveal."

The serpent-faced god[53] will come in and answer you. When you dismiss [him], make an offering of / the skin of a serpent. 160
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM XII. 160–78

*[Charm to release from bonds:][54] If you want to do something spectacular and want to free yourself from danger, stand at the door and say the spell, and having said it, go out, adding: "Let the bonds of him, NN, be loosened, and let the doors be opened for him, and let no one see him."

You may even prove that it happens. Bind someone securely and shut him in a house. Stand outside and say the spell six or seven times thus: "I call upon you great gods, with a loud voice, / AISAR AIŌTH OUAIGNŌR MARSABŌOUTŌRTHE LABATH 165
ERMOU CHOŌRTHEN MANACHTHŌRPH PECHRĒPH TAŌPHPŌTHTHŌCHO THARŌCH BALETHAN CHEBRŌOUTHAST ADŌNAI HARMIŌTH."

Whenever [you say] this spell, and he has been released, say this besides, in order that the doors might open: "OCHLOBARACHŌ LAILAM DARIDAM [DARDAM] DARDARAMPTOU IARTHA IERBA DIERBA BARŌTHA THIARBA ARBITHŌ . . . Ō MAAR SEMESILAM MARMARACHNEU MANE THŌTH; holy one, enter and release him, NN, and give him a way / of escape, SESENGENBARPHARAGGĒS, you who loosen all 170

48. For an ibis-faced Hermes, see PGM VIII. 10.

49. Or "such and such." That is, the practitioner supplies here his request. See below, l. 151.

50. Osiris and Isis are the parents of Horus, not of Thoth/Hermes as one might infer from the preceding.

51. See n. 49 above.

52. Cf. the lex sacra from Halikarnassos, published by M. Çetin Şahin, "Five Inscriptions from Halicarnassus," ZPE 20 (1976): 22–23. [W.B.]

53. When depth, breadth, length, and brightness are summoned, this may indicate the reenactment of creation. In such a context, a serpent-faced deity (l. 159) would be appropriate, because the serpent form is the primordial form of the gods. See K. Sethe, Amun und die Acht Urgötter von Hermopolis (Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1929) 26–27. [R.K.R.]

54. This title for the spell does not appear in the papyrus manuscript and has been supplied by Preisendanz. It is, however, typical of other spells to begin with the phrase, "If you wish to do (this and this). . . ." Cf. e.g., PGM XII. 179–81; XIII. 239–64, and often. [R.D.K.]

bonds and you who loosen the iron fetter that has been placed around him, NN, because the great, unutterable, holy, righteous, awful, powerful, unspeakable, fearful and not-to-be-despised daimon of the great god commands you, SOROERMER [PHERGAR] BAX MAMPHRI OURIXG."

When the bonds break, say: "I thank you, lord, [because] the holy spirit, the unique one, the living one, has [released] me."

And say this spell again: / "Star-grouping god, you thunderbolt-with-great-clap-Zeus-confining-world-flashing-abundant-bolt-bestowing daimon, cracking-through-the-air, ray-producing, mind-piercing, you who [produce] cunning."

And use also the name of Helios for everything: "Fiery, ĒPHAIĒ, Hephaistos, who is shining with fire, brightly moving, ANANŌCHA AMARZA MARMARAMŌ."
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM XII. 179–81

*If you want someone to cease being angry with you, write with myrrh [on linen][55] this / name of anger: "CHNEŌM."[56] Hold it in your left [hand and say]: "I am restraining the anger of all, especially of him, NN, which is CHNEŌM."
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM XII. 182–89

*"Greetings, lord, you who are the means to obtain favor for the universe and for the inhabited [world]. Heaven has become a dancing place [for you], ARSENOPHRĒ, O king of the heavenly [gods], ABLANATHANALBA, you who possess righteousness, AKRAMMACHAMAREI, gracious [god,] SANKANTHARA, ruler / of nature, SATRAPERKMĒPH, origin of the heavenly [world], ATHTHANNOU ATHTHANNOU ASTRAPHAI IASTRAPHAI PAKEPTŌTH PA . . . ĒRINTASKLIOUTH ĒPHIŌ MARMARAŌTH.

"[Let] my outspokenness not leave me. [But] let every tongue and language listen to me, because I am PERTAŌ [MĒCH CHACH] MNĒCH SAKMĒPH[57] IAŌOYEĒ ŌĒŌ ŌĒŌ IEOYŌĒIĒIAĒA IĒŌYOEI, Give [me graciously] whatever you want."
*Tr.: R. F. Hock. Although untitled, the first line of this invocation shows it is a "favor charm."

PGM XII. 190–92

Request for a dream oracle spoken to the Bear: Take olive oil [from] a clean[58] . . . onto the left hand and say the [names. Then] smear yourself and go to sleep having your head towards the east. "IĒSOUS[59] ANOUI. . . ."
*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM XII. 193–201

[To make] a tincture [viz., "reduction"] of gold:[60] Take thickened pungent vinegar and also have ready 8 drachmas of ordinary salt, 2 drachmas of rock alum that has clear cleavage, 4 drachmas of massicot, and triturate them [together] with the

55. Or byssus.

56. CHNEŌM here and in l. 181 is probably Egyptian Khnum. Cf. PGM I. 29. [R.K.R.]

57. MNĒCH SAKMĒPH corresponds to Egyptian "beneficient, son of Agathodaimon." For Kmeph, Knephis, cf. PGM I. 27; μνηχ is Egyptian mnḫ, an adjective of the preceding noun. Cf. PGM II. 77. [R.K.R.]

58. A noun seems to be missing here.

59. The name of Jesus appears at the beginning of an invocation; the rest is lost.

60. The term ἴωσις or ἐξίωσις (l. 198) probably refers to the process of reduction in alchemy. Since there is no gold included in the papyrus until l. 198, the process may actually be designed to produce vinegar for 3 days, and strain off [and] / use. Then add one drachma blue vitriol [cupric sulfate] to the vinegar, 1/2 obol in weight of chalcopyrite, 8 obols of rock alum, 1/2 obol in weight of melanterite, a carat [viz., 1/1728 lb. = siliqua] of ordinary salt, 2 [carats] of Cappadocian [salt].

Make a leaf [of metal] of 2 fourths by weight, dip [it] 3 times into fire until the leaf [breaks up] into fragments. Then take up the pieces [and] assume them as "reduced" to the metallic state of gold.

Treatment: Take [2] fourths by weight of gold, make a leaf and [purify it in] fire, dip it in blue vitriol / triturated with water.

And another [treatment]: Pound dry cupric sulfate and dip [it] in the vinegar.

(Yet another [treatment]: with the compound): Pour off the verdigris and throw it in.

*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM XII. 201–69

Placing (a) ring.[61] A little ring [useful] for every [magical] operation and for success. Kings and governors [try to get it]. Very effective. Taking an air-colored[62] jasper, engrave on it a snake in a circle with its tail in its mouth, and also in the middle of [the circle formed by] the snake [Selene][63] having two stars / on the two horns, and above these, Helios, beside whom ABRASAX should be inscribed; and on the opposite side of the stone from this inscription, the same name ABRASAX, and around the border you will write the great and holy and omnicompetent [spell], the name IAŌ SABAŌTH. And when you have consecrated the stone[64] wear it in a gold ring, when you need it, [provided] you are pure [at that time], and you will succeed in everything you may wish. You are to consecrate the ring together with the stone in the rite used for all [such] objects. A similar engraving in gold, / too, is equally effective.

The consecration [requires] the following equipment: Making a pit in a holy place open to the sky, [or] if [you have none] in a clean, sanctified tomb looking toward the east, and making over the pit an altar of wood from fruit trees, sacrifice an all-white goose, with no flecks [of color], and 3 roosters and 3 pigeons. Make these whole burnt offerings and burn, with the birds, all sorts of incense. Then, standing by the pit, look / to the east and, pouring on a libation of wine, honey, milk, [and] saffron, and holding over the smoke, while you pray, [the stone] in which are engraved the inscriptions, say:

"I invoke and beseech the consecration, O gods of the heavens, O gods under the earth, O gods circling in the middle region from one womb. O masters of all living and dead, [O] heedful in many necessities of gods and / men. O concealers of things now seen, O directors of the Nemeseis[65] who spend every hour with you,[66] pseudo gold. This is in keeping with the fact that the section 193–201 is full of technical terminology from alchemy. See M. P. Crosland, Historical Studies in the Language of Chemistry (London: Heinemann, 1962) 3–4, and esp. 54; A. J. Hopkins, "Transmutation by Colour: A Study of Earliest Alchemy," in J. Ruska, ed., Studien zur Geschichte der Chemie. Festgabe E. O. von Lippmann (Berlin: Springer, 1927) 9–14. [J.S.]

---

61. The symbols printed in Preisendanz's text as magical characters are Demotic w' gswr, "a ring." Cf. PGM XII. 270. [R.K.R.]

62. According to LSJ, s.v., a "light-blue" or perhaps "grey, cloudy" color.

63. That is, a crescent moon.

64. On the consecration of amulets, see PGM IV. 2179 and n.

65. For the Nemeseis, cf. PGM VII. 503 and n.; Griffiths, The Isis-Book 311–12.

66. The papyrus here accidentally repeats the preceding clause about the Nemeseis.

O senders of Fate who travels around the whole world, O commanders of the rulers, O exalters of the abased, O revealers of the hidden, O guides of the winds,
225 O arousers of the waves, O bringers of / fire (at a certain time), O creators and benefactors of every race, O nourishers of every race, O lords and controllers of kings, come, benevolent, for that [purpose] for which I call you, as benevolent assistants in this rite for my benefit. I am a plant named Baïs (palm leaf); I am an outflow of blood from the tomb of the great One [between] the palm trees;[67] I am the faith[68] found in men, and am he who declares the holy names, who [is] always alike, who 230 came forth from the abyss.[69] I am / CHRATES[70] who came forth from the eye [of the sun].[71] I am the god whom no one sees or rashly names. I am the sacred bird, Phoinix.[72] I am Krates the holy, called MARMARAUŌTH. I am Helios who showed forth light. I am Aphrodite called TYPHI.[73] I am the holy sender of winds. I am Kronos who showed forth light. I am Mother of gods, called Heaven. I am Osiris,
235 called water. I am Isis, called dew.[74] / I am ĒSENEPHYS,[75] called spring. I am the image resembling the true images. I am SOUCHOS[76] [who appear as] a crocodile. Therefore, I beseech [you], come as my helpers, for I am about to call on the hidden and ineffable name, the forefather of gods, overseer and lord of all."

"Come to me, you from the four winds, god, ruler of all, who have breathed spirits into men for life, master of the good things in the world. Hear me, lord, 240 whose / hidden name is ineffable. The daimons, hearing it, are terrified—the name BARBAREICH ARSEMPHEMPHRŌTHOU—and of it the sun, of it the earth, hearing, rolls over; Hades, hearing, is shaken; rivers, sea, lakes, springs, hearing, are frozen; rocks, hearing it, are split. Heaven is your head; ether, body; earth, feet; and the water around you, ocean, [O] Agathos Daimon.[77] You are lord, the begetter and nourisher and increaser of all."

67. For the efflux of Osiris, see Book of the Dead, spells 63b sec. S 1; 119 sec. S 1; 147a sec. S 1; 147g sec. S 1; 149n sec. S 1; 149o. [R.K.R.]

68. Preisendanz treats the term as a hypostatized name (Pistis, "Faith"). See Reitzenstein, Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen 234–35; D. Lührmann, "Glaube," RAC 11 (1979): 84–86.

69. Preisendanz takes βύθος to be the name of a deity. Bythos is the name of the primordial deity in Valentinian gnosticism. For passages, see PGL, s.v. "Βύθος"; The Nag Hammadi Library in English, index s.v. "Bythos." See also Bousset, Hauptprobleme, passim; idem, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 58.

70. Preisendanz, following Eitrem, takes this name to be Egyptian for Chrat, "child (Horus)." Actually, the papyrus reads σοκρατης; see C. Leemans, Papyri Graeci Musei Antiquarii publici Lugduni-Batavi, vol. 2 (Leiden: Brill, 1885) 26–27. Eitrem's emendation was taken up by J. Kroll, "Chrates," PRE 11 (1922): 1641–42; K. Preisendanz, "Pachrates," PRE 18 (1942): 2071–74, esp. 2072. The fact, however, remains that the papyrus reads Socrates in l. 230 and Crates in l. 231.

71. The papyrus reads ουαγιου; the translation follows Preisendanz's emendation ἐκ τοῦ οὐατίου. Cf. PGM V. 75.

72. On the Phoenix, see Tardieu, Trois mythes gnostiques 231–62. Cf. PGM II. 104.

73. Typhi, the epithet of Aphrodite, may correspond to Egyptian Triphis (T3-rpy.t), "the maiden." See Bonnet, RÄRG 838–39, s.v. "Triphis." [R.K.R.]

74. For Isis as dew, see Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 12, 355F–365A; 33, 364B, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 303, 420, 424. [R.K.R.]

75. ĒSENEPHYS may correspond to Egyptian "Isis the beautiful." Preisendanz, however, understands it to refer to Isis-Neph[th]ys. [R.K.R.]

76. Souchos is Sobek, the Egyptian crocodile god. See Bonnet, RÄRG 755–59, s.v. "Suchos." [R.K.R.]

77. On the cosmic body of the deity, see PGM XIII. 767–72; XXI. 3–7. See J. Assmann, "Primat und Transzendenz: Struktur und Genese der ägyptischen Vorstellung eines höchsten Wesens," in Aspekte der ägyptischen Religion, ed. W. Westendorf, Göttinger Orientforschungen, 4th series 9 (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1979) 7–42.

"Who[78] molded the forms of the beasts [of the Zodiac]? Who / found [their] routes? Who was the begetter of fruits? Who raises up the mountains? Who commanded the winds to hold to their annual tasks? What Aion nourishing an Aion rules the Aions? One deathless god. You are the begetter of all and assign souls to all and control all, king of the Aions and lord, [before] whom mountains and plains together tremble, springs and streams of rivers, and valleys of earth, and spirits, and [all things] that are. High shining heaven trembles before you, and every sea, / lord, ruler of all, holy one, and master of all. By your power the elements exist and all things come into being, the route of sun and moon, of night and dawn—all things in air and earth and water and the breath of fire. Yours is the eternal processional way [of heaven], in which your seven-lettered name is established for the harmony of the seven sounds [of the planets] which utter [their] voices according to the 28 forms of the moon. Yours are the beneficent effluxes of the stars, daimons and fortunes / and fates. You give wealth, good old age, good children, strength, food. You, lord of life, ruling the upper and the lower realm, whose justice is not thwarted, whose glorious name the angels hymn, who have truth that never lies, hear me and complete for me this operation so that I may wear this power in every place, in every time, without being smitten or afflicted, / so as to be preserved intact from every danger while I wear this power. Yea, lord, for to you, the god in heaven, all things are subject, and none of the daimons or spirits will oppose me because I have called on your great name for the consecration. And again I call upon you, according to Egyptians, PHNŌ EAI IABŌK; according to Jews, ADŌNAIE SABAŌTH; according to Greeks, "the king of all, ruling alone"; / according to the high priests, "hidden, invisible, overseer of all"; according to Parthians, "OUERTŌ,[79] master of all." Consecrate and empower this object for me, for the entire and glorious time of my life."

The names inscribed on the back side of the stone are these: "IAŌ SABAŌTH ABRASAX."

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM XII. 270–350

A Ring. A little ring for success and favor and victory. It makes men famous and great and admired and rich as can be, or it makes possible friendships with suchlike men. The circlet is always yours [to use] justly and successfully for all purposes. It contains a first-rate name.

Helios is to be engraved on a heliotrope stone[80] as follows: A thick-bodied snake[81] in the shape of a wreath should be [shown] having its tail in its / mouth. Inside [the circle formed by] the snake let there be a sacred scarab[82] [beetle surrounded by] rays. On the reverse side of the stone you are to inscribe the name in hieroglyphics, as the prophets pronounce [it]. Then, having consecrated [the ring], wear it when you are pure.

The world has had nothing greater than this. For when you have it with you you will always get whatever you ask from anybody. Besides, it calms the angers of masters and kings. Wearing it, whatever you may say to anyone, you will be believed,

78. The dactylic hexameters (ll. 244–52) are also the reconstructed Hymn 1. See Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 237. [E.N.O.]

79. OUERTŌ corresponds to the Egyptian epithet "the great one of earth." [R.K.R.]

80. A green chalcedony with small spots of red jasper. Cf. Pliny, NH 37. 165. [J.S.]

81. That is, the Ouroboros serpent. See Glossary, s.v. "Ouroboros."

82. On the scarab, see PGM IV. 943 and the Glossary, s.v. "Scarab."

and you will be pleasing to everybody. Anyone can open doors and break chains and rocks if he / touches them with the stone, that is, the gem, and says the name written below. It also works for demoniacs. Just give it [to one] to wear, and the daimon will immediately flee. So at dawn stand facing the sun, holding the well-planned, beneficent, divine, holy, useful, economical, merciful stone which provides your needs, the beautiful and becoming one, [say]:

"Greatest god, who exceed / all power, I call on you, IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI EILŌEIN[83] SEBŌEIN TALLAM CHAUNAŌN SAGĒNAM ELEMMEDŌR CHAPSOUTHI SETTŌRA SAPHTHA NOUCHITHA, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob,[84] CHATHATHICH ZEUPEIN NĒPHYGOR ASTAPHAIOS KATAKERKNĒPH KONTEOS KATOUT KĒRIDEU MARMARIŌTH LIKYXANTA BESSOUM SYMEKONTEU, the opponent of Thoth, / MASKELLI MASKELLŌTH PHNOU KENTABAŌTH OREOBAZAGRA HIPPOCHTHŌN RĒSICHTHŌN PYRIPĒGANYX NYXIŌ ABRŌROKORE KODĒRE MOUISDRŌ, King, THATH PHATH CHATH XEUZĒN ZEUZEI SOUSĒNĒ ELATHATH MELASIŌ KOUKŌR NEUSŌŌ PACHIŌ XIPHNŌ THEMEL NAUTH BIOKLĒTH SESSŌR CHAMEL CHASINEU XŌCHŌ IALLINŌI / SEISENGPHARANGĒS MASICHIŌR IŌTABAAS CHENOUCHI CHAAM PHACHIARATH NEEGŌTHARA IAM ZEŌCH AKRAMMACHAMAREI Cheroubei(m) BAINCHŌŌCH EIOPHALEON ICHNAŌTH PŌE XEPHITHŌTH XOUTHOUTH THOŌTHIOU XERIPHŌNAR EPHINARASŌR CHANIZARA ANAMEGAR IŌO XTOURORIAM IŌK NIŌR CHETTAIOS ELOUMAIOS NŌIŌ DAMNAMENEU / AXIŌTHŌPH PSETHAIAKKLŌPS SISAGETA NEORIPHRŌR HIPPOKELEPHOKLŌPS ZEINACHA IAPHETHANA A E Ē I O Y Ō. I have called on you, greatest god, and through you on all things, that you may give divine and supreme strength to this image and may make it effective and powerful against all [opponents] and to be able to call back souls, move spirits, subject legal opponents, strengthen friendships, produce all [sorts of] profits, bring / dreams, give prophecies, cause psychological passions and bodily sufferings and incapacitating illness, and perfect all erotic philters. Please, lord, bring to fulfillment a complete consecration."

When you perform this rite, say [the spell] three times each day, in the third, sixth, and ninth hour, and this for fourteen days, beginning when the moon begins its third quarter. And try to have the goddess [i.e., the moon] either [rising] in [the Zodiacal sign of] the Bull or the Virgin or Scorpion or the Water Carrier or the Fishes. Also when you are performing the consecration, each time / you recite [the spell] pour as libation the [fluids] specified above and all kinds of perfumes except frankincense. And when you have completed the consecration properly, have a live rooster with a double comb—either white or yellow; keep away from black—and after the consecration cut the rooster open and stick the [stone with its] image well into the guts of the rooster, taking care that the entrails of the animal be not broken. Leave [it there] for one day, / then in the ninth hour of the night take [it] out and put [it] away in a holy place, and use as [seems] best.

Whenever you wish to command the god, give [your] command, saying the greatest [name] OUPHŌR, and he will perform. You have [now] the consecration [to secure] the supreme and divine action. This OUPHŌR is the [god] whom Urbicus used, the holy, true OUPHŌR. Here is truly written out, with all brevity, [the rite] by which all modeled images and engravings / and carved stones are made alive. For this is the true [rite], and the others such as are widely circulated, are falsified and made up of vain verbosity. So keep this in a secret place as a great mystery. Hide it, hide it! It is—the beginning—

83. Almost certainly a misspelling of elohim, a Hebrew word meaning "god."

84. The names are misspelled as Abraan, Isak, Iakkōbi.

"The gates of heaven were opened. The gates of earth were opened. / The route of the sea was opened. The route of the rivers was opened. My spirit was heard by all gods and daimons. My spirit was heard by the spirit of heaven. My spirit was heard by the terrestrial spirit. My spirit was heard by the marine spirit. / My spirit was heard by the riverine spirit. Therefore give spirit to the mystery[85] I have prepared, O gods whom I have named and have called on. Give breath to the mystery I have prepared."

Hide, hide the true [spell to control?] OUPHŌR, / which contains the truth in summary. The invocation to OUPHŌR:[86]

"ĒI IEOU MAREITH
ĒI IEOU MONTHEATHI MONGITH
ĒI IEOU CHAREŌTH MONKĒB
ĒI IEOU SŌCHOU SŌRSŌĒ
/ ĒI IEOU TIŌTIŌ OUIĒR
ĒI IEOU CHARŌCHSI CHARMIŌTH
ĒI IEOU SATHIMŌOYEĒOY
ĒI IEOU RAIRAI MOURIRAI
ĒI IEOU Amoun ĒEI Osiris
/ ĒI IEOU̅ PHIRIMNOUN[87]
ĒI IEOU ANMORCHATHI OUĒR
ĒI IEOU ANCHEREPHRENEPSOUPHIRINGCH
ĒI IEOU ORCHIMORŌIPOUGTH
ĒI IEOU MACHPSACHATHANTH
/ ĒI IEOU MOROTH."

*Tr.: Morton Smith. The Demotic title (line 270) is written between the sections.

PGM XII. 351–64

Demokritos' "sphere": prognostic of life and death. Find out what day of the month[88] the sick one took to bed. Add his name from birth[89] to the day of the month and divide by thirty.[90] Look up on the "sphere" the quotient: if the number is on the upper register, the person will live, but if it is on the lower register, he will die.

85. That is, the magical ring.

86. These invocations begin with a formula corresponding to the Egyptian i i3w, "O, hail!" [R.K.R.]

87. PHIRIMNOUN corresponds to Egyptian "He who comes forth from Nun (the abyss)." Cf. PGM XII. 229. [R.K.R.]

88. Literally, "know in relation to the moon." Beginning with the new moon, each day of the lunar month can be given a number from one to thirty.

89. The praenomen, or first name, among the Romans. Each letter of the Greek alphabet has a numerical value.

90. Literally, "see how many times thirty there are." In other words, the sum of the numerical value of the name and the value of the day on which the person took ill, is divided by thirty.

1	10	19
2	11	20
3	13	23
4	14	25
7	16	26
9	17	27
5	15	22
6	18	28
8	21	29
12	24	30

*Tr.: J. P. Hershbell. A similar "sphere" is attributed to Petosiris, the mythical Egyptian astrologer. The so-called sphere is only a circle or other plane figure, in this case a rectangle, but even when the circle is reduced to a rectangle, it is called a sphere. For full discussion of this kind of "astrological medicine," see A. Bouché-Leclercq, L'astrologie grecque (Paris 1899, repr. 1963) 537–42, esp. 538, and Thorndike, A History of Magic I, 682ff.; see also V. Alfieri, Gli atomisti, frammenti e testimonianze (Bari 1936) 305–6, n. 801 and Budge, Egyptian Magic 228–30.

PGM XII. 365–75

Charm for causing separation: On a pot for smoked fish inscribe a spell with a bronze stylus and recite it afterwards and put it where they [i.e., your victims] are, where they usually return, repeating at the same time this spell: "I call upon you, god, you who are in the empty air, you who are terrible, invisible, and great, you who afflict the earth and shake the universe, you who love disturbances and hate stability and scatter the clouds / from one another, IAIA IAKOUBIAI IŌ ERBĒTH, IŌ PAKERBĒTH IŌ BOLCHOSĒTH BASDOUMA PATATHNAX APOPSS OSESRŌ ATAPH THABRAOU ĒŌ THATHTHABRA BŌRARA AROBREITHA BOLCHOSĒTH KOKKOLOIPTOLĒ RAMBITHNIPS: give to him, NN, the son of her, NN, strife, war; and to him, NN, the son of her, NN, odiousness, enmity, just as Typhon and Osiris had"[91] (but if it is a husband and wife, "just as Typhon and Isis had"). "Strong Typhon, very / powerful one, perform your mighty acts."

*Tr.: R. F. Hock. This charm provides a means for effecting a breach between two men's friendship or love for each other, with a variant formula inserted to make the spell work against a husband and wife.

PGM XII. 376–96

Charm to induce insomnia: Take a living bat and on the right wing paint with myrrh the following figure, and on the left write the 7 names of the god as well as: "Let her, NN whom NN bore, lie awake until she consents." And so release the bat again.

Perform this spell at the waning of the moon[92] when the goddess is in her third night, and the woman will die for lack of sleep, without lasting / 7 days.

This charm cannot at any time have an antidote. But if you at some time wish one, do not release the bat, but keep it in custody, and do this as well: when you want to release it, wash off with spring water [what] has been written on the wings and release the bird. But do not do this, save for a great intrigue.

91. On the enmity between Typhon/Seth and Osiris, see PGM VII. 964 and n.

92. That is, the moon goddess Selene.

This then is the figure:

/ The names to be written on the left wing are these: "I call upon you, great god, THATHABATHATH / PETENNABOUTHI PEPTOU BAST[93] EIĒSOUS OUAIR AMOUN OUTHI ASCHELIDONĒTH / BATHARIBATH; let her, NN, lie awake through the whole night and day, until she dies, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly."
*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM XII. 397–400

To gain favor and friendship forever: Take a pasithea or wormwood root and write this name on it in a holy manner: ‡ϒΛ⊢ʃ–3 ᘐᘐL. Then carry it, and you will be an object of favor, friendship, and admiration to people who see you. /

The formula: 1 dram of myrrh, 4 drams of truffle, 2 drams of blue vitriol, 2 drams of oak gall, 3 drams of gum arabic.
*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

PGM XII. 401–44

Interpretations which the temple scribes employed, from the holy writings, in translation. Because of the curiosity of the masses they [i.e., the scribes] inscribed the names of the herbs and other things which they employed on the statues of the gods, so that they [i.e., the masses], since they do not take precaution, / might not practice magic, [being prevented] by the consequence of their misunderstanding.[94] But we have collected the explanations [of these names] from many copies [of the sacred writings], all of them secret.

Here they are:[95]

A snake's head: a leech.

93. On Bastet, the Egyptian cat goddess, see PGM III. 1 and n.

94. Cf. V. F. Vanderlip, The Four Greek Hymns of Isidorus and the Cult of Isis (Toronto: Hakkert, 1972), Hymn IV. 37–39: "Reliably learning these facts from men who study history, I myself have set them all up on inscribed pillars and translated (into Greek) for Greeks the power of a Prince who was a god" (pp. 64–65). Isidorus himself cannot read the hieroglyphs.

95. For similar lists of names, cf. De succedaneis transmitted among the works of Galen, Claudii Galeni Opera Omnia, ed. C. G. Kühn, vol. 19 (Lipsiae: Officina libraria Car. Cnoblochii, 1830) 721–

A snake's "ball of thread": this means soapstone. /
Blood of a snake: hematite.
A bone of an ibis: this is buckthorn.
Blood of a hyrax:[96] truly of a hyrax.
"Tears"[97] of a Hamadryas baboon: dill juice.
Crocodile dung: Ethiopian soil. /
Blood of a Hamadryas baboon: blood of a spotted gecko.
Lion semen: Human semen.
Blood of Hephaistos: wormwood.
Hairs of a Hamadryas baboon: dill seed.
Semen of Hermes: dill. /
Blood of Ares: purslane.
Blood of an eye: tamarisk gall.[98]
Blood from a shoulder: bear's breach[99]
From the loins: camomile.
A man's bile: turnip sap.[100] /
A pig's tail: leopard's bane.[101]
A physician's bone: sandstone.
Blood of Hestia: camomile.
An eagle: wild garlic (?).[102]
Blood of a goose: a mulberry tree's "milk." /
Kronos' spice: piglet's milk.
A lion's hairs: "tongue" of a turnip.[103]
Kronos' blood: . . . of cedar.
Semen of Helios: white hellebore.
Semen of Herakles: this is mustard-rocket.[104] /
[A Titan's] blood: wild lettuce.[105]
Blood from a head: lupine.
A bull's semen: egg of a blister beetle.[106]

47, as well as the adapted version of Galen's tract in Paul of Aegina, Paulus Aegineta, Corpus Medicorum Graecorum IX/2, ed. I. L. Heiberg, vol. II (Lipsiae: Teubner, 1924) 401–8; and Dioscorides' Materia medica, ed. M. Wellmann, 3 vols. (Berlin: Weidmann, 1907–14). [J.S.]

96. Probably the rock hyrax (Procavia capensis), also mentioned in the LXX Lv 11:6; Dt 14:7; Ps 103 (104): 18; Prv 24:61 (30:26). [J.S.]

97. Perhaps the "sleep sand" from the eyes of baboons. [J.S.]

98. Cf. Dioscorides 1. 75; also 1. 89. [J.S.]

99. Probably to be emended to ἄκανθος (Acanthus mollis L. or Helleborus foetidus L.). [J.S.]

100. Probably to be emended to βουνίας as in Dioscorides 2. 111, a kind of turnip (probably Brassica napus L.). [J.S.]

101. Literally, "scorpion-tail," probably a variety of "leopard's bane" in the genus Boronicum, or one of the heliotropes. Cf. Theophrastus, Hist. plant. 9. 13. 6; Nicander, Alexiph. 145; Dioscorides 4. 190. 1. See J. Scarborough, "Theophrastus on Herbals and Herbal Remedies," Journal of the History of Biology 11 (1978):373–74, with n. 120; idem, "Nicander's Toxicology II: Spiders, Scorpions, Insects, and Myriapods," Pharmacy in History 21 (1979):3–34, 73–92. [J.S.]

102. The papyrus reads οσελγεβει, which the editors read either as χελκβει, "wild garlic" (Trigonella foenumgraecum), following Griffith, ad loc.; PGM V. 70, or as ἑλλέβορος, "hellebore." [J.S.]

103. As emended in l. 425 (see above, n. 100), referring to the leaves of the taproot. [J.S.]

104. Probably Eruca sativa Mill. [J.S.]

105. See on this Dioscorides 2. 136. [J.S.]

106. The blister beetle played a role in the manufacture of the aphrodisiac known as Spanish fly. See J. Scarborough, "Some Beetles in Pliny's Natural History," Coleopterists Bulletin 31 (1977):293–96; idem, "Nicander's Toxicology" (see above, n. 101). [J.S.]

A hawk's heart: heart of wormwood.
Semen of Hephaistos: this is fleabane. /
Semen of Ammon: houseleek. 440
Semen of Ares: clover.
Fat from a head: spurge.
From the belly: earth-apple.
From the foot: houseleek.[107]

*Tr.: H. D. Betz (ll. 401–7) and John Scarborough (ll. 408–45) who are also responsible for the respective notes. The "interpretations" refers to the secret list of plant names below; cf. the Discourse on the Eighth and the Ninth 61, 19ff., in The Nag Hammadi Library in English, 296–97; 2 Jeu, chaps. 45–48; Test Sol 13.6; see Gudeman, "Lyseis," PRE 13 (1927): 2511–29.

PDM xii. 50–61 [PGM XII. 445–48]

*A spell for separating one person from another: Dung of . . . and you put it [in] a 50 [1] document, and you write on a document of papyrus these great names / together 55 [6] with the name of the man, and you bury it under the doorsill of the house.

Here are the names for (?) it and you recite them over it also, 7 times: "†IO-ERBĒTH †IO-SĒTH[108] †IO-BŌLGHŌSĒTH[109] †IO-PAGERBĒTH †IO-PATATHNAGS †LĒE-MENG.RĒ †IO-ŌSESRO[110] / †IO-GHLŌNTOĒPS, separate NN, born of NN, from NN, (445–48) born of NN!" It is . . . : "Separate Isis from . . ." (formula: 7 times). 60 [11]

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson, following the edition and translation in OMRM 56 (1975): 38–39, col. IV, ll. 1–12. The Old Coptic/Greek and Demotic voces magicae in ll. 57–60 [8–11] are transcribed as Greek in PGM XII. 445–48 (Kol. XIV) in Preisendanz. A variant of the same spell follows immediately in ll. 62–75, a spell in which a magical figure is supplied. Words preceded by † are written in the text in Demotic with Old Coptic glosses inserted above.

PDM xii. 62–75 [PGM XII. 449–52]

*Another: You bring a . . . and you write the names on it, and you bury [it] in the road of. . . .

Formula: †BRAG †GRAB †BRAGH †HŌSPERTHNAKS[111] / †BHRIENTHE(?)GH †BAS-PHETHŌI †ATHRYPH †PATATHNAG †APŌPSI †IŌ-BĒTH †IŌ-BŌLGHŌSĒTH †IŌ-PAG-ERBĒTH,[112] separate NN born of NN, from NN born of NN!" Two [times] . . . You 65 [16]
(449–52)
bring a sherd . . . of beer of . . . which is burnt, and you write [on] it a donkey / in 70 [21] this manner:

107. See on this plant Dioscorides 4. 88. [J.S.]
108. Ending includes Egyptian god Seth. [J.H.J.]
109. See n. 108 above.
110. Or, perhaps, IŌ ŌSEIRŌ, as in the label to the figure. [J.H.J.]
111. HŌSPER may be for ὥσπερ, "similarly." [R.K.R.]
112. See figure.

"Separate NN, born of NN, from NN, born of NN!" And you say this name to it again, 7 times, and you lift the sherd, and you . . . in the house in which they 75 [26] are. / You do it. . . .

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson, following the edition and translation in OMRM 56 (1975):38–39, col. IV, ll. 13–26. The Demotic voces magicae in ll. 15–18 are transcribed as Greek in PGM XII. 449–52 (Kol. XIV). Words preceded by ' are written in the text in Demotic with Old Coptic glosses inserted above.

PDM xii. 76–107 [PGM XII. 453–65]

*Another: . . . of a black donkey,[113] and you put a . . . which is . . . , and you leave [it] in it for three days . . . it. You should cook it for one night . . . , and you should 80 [5] bring a / strip of . . . , and you should write . . . the names on it with donkey blood, and you should gather outside . . . saying, "Separate NN, born of NN, from NN, born of NN!" And you should . . . and you should . . . the urine. . . .

85 [10] Here is the name which you should write it: / . . . "THALAMAXI, separate NN, born of NN, from NN, born of NN!"

. . . again on the day of separating (another [manuscript] says: "beating" [?]), 90 [15] . . . of a donkey and a . . . / urine (?), and you put them in a new ladle (?) and you . . . until they come . . . , and you put . . . and you . . . the sherd . . . and you [write] these names . . . and you . . . in the above-mentioned house.

95 [20] / Here are the names: "I call upon you, you who are in the [empty air], you who (453–65) are terrible, you who are an invisible god, you who cause destruction and desolation, you who hate a stable household and you who do mischief.[114] I call upon your great name; cause him, NN, to be separated from him, NN, IŌ IŌ IŌBRACH KRABROUKRIOU BATRIOU APOMPS STROUTELIPS IAK[OUBIAI][115] IŌ PAKERBĒTH PAKERBĒTH, god of gods . . . at the gate of IAŌ. Separate him, NN, from him, NN, because I am the daimon XANTHIS[116] OUBATH . . . E . . . TEBERETERRI . . . EI . . . , separate him, [NN], from him, NN."

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson (ll. 76–95), following the edition and translation in OMRM 56 (1975):40–41, col. III, ll. 1–20; and R. F. Hock (ll. 96–107), following Preisendanz, PGM XII. 453–65.

PDM xii. 108–18 [PGM XII. 466–68]

*A spell [to] cause a woman to hate a man . . . : You bring dung, hair and hair . . .
110 [3] which is dead, / and you mix them with fresh blooms, and you put it in a new papyrus after writing on the papyrus first with my ink, saying, "May NN, born of NN, hate NN, born of NN!" And you recite these true names over it 7 times, and you bind the papyrus, and you put it in the water of. . . .

115 [8] Here are / the true names: 'IAKYMBIAI IAŌ 'IŌERBĒTH 'IŌBOLGHOSĒTH 'BA-
(466–68) SELE OM 'GITATHNAGS 'APSOPS 'Ō.EL.T, separate NN, born [of] NN, from NN, born of NN; hurry, hurry; be quick, be quick!"

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson, following the edition and translation in OMRM 56 (1975):42–43, col. II, ll. 1–18. The Demotic voces magicae in ll. 8–10 are transcribed by Preisendanz as Greek in PGM XII. 466–68. Words preceded by ' are written in the text in Demotic with Old Coptic glosses inserted above.

113. On the donkey as the image of Seth, see the Glossary, s.v. "Typhon-Seth."
114. So following the emendation in Preisendanz; cf. the apparatus ad loc.
115. Supplying in the lacuna Ἰακο[υβιαι], a name attested elsewhere.
116. The reading of this name is, however, textually uncertain.

PDM xii. 119–34 [PGM XII. 469–70; 471–73]

*A spell for it: Surround (?) . . . of . . . another [manuscript] says . . . : / You (?) write [the] true names with ink . . . and you write at its bottom, . . . to me Anubis, saying, "Surround (?) NN, born of NN!" . . . you should write on its bottom . . . "vex NN, born of NN!" and you should . . . them to it again, and you should . . . fire, flame (?), and you should [bind] . . . of the hair of the woman with . . . , / and you should put a . . . a bitch which is dead. 120 [13] 125 [18]

Its formula: "Rouse yourself and depart, at the undertaking ward off responses of each penalty . . . woman." You write these words on a new papyrus with myrrh ink, and you put it in . . . of a . . . / built (?), and you put it in a chest (?), and you give it to an ibis. (469–70) 130 [23]

Here are the names: "†ALBANAGHAMBRE †AMESŌTSIE(?)R †ATHRŌER †ATHROI †THYIN, surround NN, born of NN, . . . in her heart." (471–73)

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson (ll. 119–125, 128–31), following the edition in OMRM 56 (1975):42–43, col. II, ll. 12–27; and E. N. O'Neil (ll. 126–27), following the edition in Preisendanz, PGM XII. 469–70. The Demotic voces magicae in ll. 132–33 are transcribed by Preisendanz as Greek at PGM XII. 471–73. Words preceded by † are written in Demotic in the text with Old Coptic glosses inserted above.

PDM xii. 135–46 [PGM XII. 474–79]

*. . . you bring a sealed . . . of copper . . . this lion, this mummy (?), and this Anubis . . . while they seek . . . black scarab (?) . . . put . . . : 135 [1]

/ ". . . AIDIŌ ŌRICH THAMBITŌ, Abraham who at . . . PLANOIEGCHIBIŌTH MOU ROU and the whole soul for her, NN [whom NN bore] . . . the female body of her, NN [whom NN bore], I conjure by the . . . [and] to inflame her, NN whom [NN bore]." 140 [6] (474–79)

[Write these] words together with this picture on a new papyrus:

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson (ll. 135–39; 146), following the edition and translation in OMRM 56 (1975):44–45, col. I, ll. 1–5, 12; and E. N. O'Neil (ll. 140–45) following Preisendanz, PGM XII. 474–79.

PDM xii. 147–64 [PGM XII. 480–95]

*Another: Cook it [in the (?)] bath: "ALLANTH BIREIBAMETIRA / EMETHIRE THARABLATH PNOUTHE THOUCHARA ŌSOUCHARI SABACHAR . . . , / burn her, NN, until she [comes] to me, NN, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly. I conjure you, daimons of the dead, [by] the dead and by the daimon of [Balsames], and the / dog-faced god,[117] and the gods with him." 150 [16] 155 [21] (480–95) 160 [26]

117. The dog-faced god is Anubis.

Write these things . . . with the salt first . . . which is on it.

*Tr.: Janet H. Johnson (ll. 147, 163–64), following the edition and translation in OMRM 56 (1975): 44–45, col. I, ll. 13–14, 29–30; and E. N. O'Neil (ll. 148–62), following Preisendanz, PGM XII. 480–95.

PGM XIII. 1–343

*GOD/GODS.[1] A sacred book called "Unique"[2] or "Eighth Book of Moses," concerning the holy Name. Its content goes as follows: Remain / pure 41 days, having calculated in advance so that your completion of them will coincide with the dark of the moon which occurs in Aries.[3] Have a house on ground level, in which no one has died during the past year. The door should face west. Now set up in the middle of the house an earthen altar and have ready cypress wood, ten pinecones full of seed,[4] two white roosters / uninjured and without blemish, and two lamps each holding an eighth of a pint, filled with good oil. And don't pour in any more, for when the god comes in they will burn more fiercely. Have the table prepared with these following kinds of incense, which are cognate to the god (from this / book Hermes plagiarized when he named the 7 kinds of incense[5] [in] his sacred book called Wing).[6]

The proper incense of Kronos is styrax, for it is heavy and fragrant; of Zeus, malabathron;[7] of Ares, kostos; of Helios, frankincense; of Aphrodite, Indian nard; of Hermes, cassia; / of Selene, myrrh. These are the secret incenses (the direction in the Key of Moses,[8] "Prepare sun vetch on every occasion," refers with these [words]

1. θεοί ("gods") commonly stands at the beginning of sacral inscriptions from Athens and sites in the Athenian sphere of influence; elsewhere it is rare (see the uses in F. Sokolowski, Lois sacrées des cités grecques, Paris: E. de Boccard, 1969). The use here indicates literary and philosophical pretensions. "GOD" is put above "GODS" both to suggest that the magician has access to a higher power, and to conform to the fashion which, by the time this text was copied (under Constantine's successors), favored monotheism.

2. "Unique" translates the Greek μόνας, "by oneself, solitary"; in philosophy, primarily Pythagorean, then Platonic, "monad." Hence also in C.H. 4. 10, on which see Festugière's n. 28. Philosophic use for the primal deity made the word vague and prestigious, which accounts for its appearance here. The attribution to Moses was due partly to the texts' content (see below, n. 16), partly to Moses' fame as a magician. Pliny, NH 30. 11, credited him with starting his own school of magic. Both Jews and gentiles helped the tradition grow by repeating stories about him and circulating magical texts under his name. See J. Gager, Moses in Greco-Roman Paganism (Nashville, Abingdon Press, 1972), chap. 4, pp. 134–61. The compiler of PGM XIII was both a composer and a collector of "Mosaic" texts. He had himself written one called "The Key of Moses" (l. 229), which he often recommends; he had a variorum edition of VIII Moses, giving three texts, and in his additions to it he cites "The Archangelic (Teaching?) of Moses," Moses' "secret moon prayer," and "The Tenth Hidden (Book?) of Moses." The choice of "eighth" as the number of the book is surprising, since we hear nothing of the sixth and seventh; it may be due to the increasing prestige of the ogdoad (see below, nn. 29 and 112). The choice of "Tenth" for the next numbered book (nothing is heard of a ninth) is also explicable from numerology, ten being the Pythagorean perfect number.

3. The Greek σύνοδος here is ambiguous. It was also used loosely to refer to the new moon, and was so understood by Preisendanz, but see l. 349.

4. So Preisendanz, translating δέξιος; alternatively, "with spirals (formed by the edges of the scales) running to the right."

5. The promised list of incenses "cognate to the (one) god" can hardly be the following list of incenses proper for seven different gods. The author probably inserted a standard list taken from the book of "Hermes" whom he therefore accused of plagiarism.

6. To this "Hermetic" book there is no other reference. Evidently it was the work of a rival author. This comment by the compiler clearly interrupts the earlier text. That "Hermes" is attacked makes the restoration of "Hermetic spell" (in l. 138) dubious.

7. Leaves of Cinnamomum tamala or albiflorum. "Kostos," which follows, is Sassurea lappa.

8. The two following statements by the compiler again interrupt the text. The Key of Moses was his own book (l. 229), evidently a sort of magician's handbook with astrological information, etc. There is to the Egyptian bean). Moreover, Manetho gave these directions in his own book.

Then take the 7 flowers of the 7 stars (which are marjoram, white lily, lotus, erephyllinon,[9] / narcissus, gillyflower, rose); take these flowers twenty-one days before the initiation, and grind them fine in a white mortar[10] and dry them in the shade and have them ready for that day.

First, however, present yourself, on / whatever auspicious new moon occurs,[11] to the gods of the hours of the day, whose names you have in the Key. You will be made their initiate[12] as follows: Make 3 figures from fine flour, one bull-faced, one goat-faced, one ram-faced, each of them standing on the celestial pole and holding an Egyptian flail.[13] And when you have / censed them, eat them, saying the spell for the gods of the hours (which is in the Key) and the compulsive formula for them and the names of the gods set over the weeks. Then you will have been made their initiate.

Next, for the all-important meeting, have a square of natron[14] on which you will write the great name with the seven vowels. Instead / of the popping noise and the hissing [sound in the name] draw on the first part of the natron a falcon-faced crocodile[15] and the nine-formed god standing on him, for this falcon-faced crocodile at the 4 turning points [of the year] greets the god with the popping noise. For, coming up to breathe from the deep, he goes "Pop, pop, pop," / and he of the 9 forms replies to him antiphonally. Therefore, instead of the popping noise, draw the falcon-faced crocodile, for the popping noise is the first element of the name. The second is a hissing. Instead of the hissing [draw] a snake biting its / tail. So the two elements, popping and hissing, are represented by a falcon-faced crocodile and the nine-formed god standing on it, and around these a snake and the seven vowels.

Now [the great name] is [composed of] 9 names, before which you say [those of] the gods of the hours, with [the prayer on] the stele, and [those of] the gods of the days and of those / set over the weeks, and the compulsive formula for these; for without these the god will not listen but will refuse to receive you as uninitiated, unless you emphatically say in advance the [names of] the lord of the day and of the hour, which information you will find at the end [of this tractate]; for without these / you will not accomplish even one of the things you find in the Key: . . . .

---

no good reason to think it had anything to do with C.H. 10, which was also called Key but dealt with totally different subjects. Manetho was an Egyptian priest who wrote a history of Egypt for Ptolemy II, ca. 275 B.C. The success of this work made him famous; hence many other texts, especially of astrology, but also of magic, were fathered onto him. Which this writer had in mind, is unknown. Cf. PGM III. 440 and n. The content of the Key is described in eight passages in PGM XIII, viz. ll. 21–22, 30–31, 35–36, 59–60, 228–29, 282–83, 431–32, and 735–43. From these it appears that the Key contained directions for performance of rites, names of the gods of the days, hours, etc., spells to control these, and the great name of 6 letters, Ogdoas. Some of the directions were allegorical or allegorized (see ll. 21–22 and 228–29).

9. Unknown.

10. Alternatively, "into white incense."

11. Literally, "a new moon favored by a god," meaning one which the god, by giving good auspices, declares favorable for your purposes.

12. Literally, "initiated."

13. Alternatively, "Egyptian flails."

14. Sodium carbonate, a soapy substance. This was not a gourmet rite.

15. The falcon-faced crocodile appears on many Egyptian inscriptions. He was a fusion of the crocodile god Sobek and the hawk god Horus. The "nine-formed" was the "Ennead," an Egyptian complex of nine gods who in the late period were thought to be the members of the body of a single god. See H. Bonnet, RÄRG, 521–25, s.v. "Neunheit." The "four turning points of the year" are the equinoxes and solstices. That crocodiles pop off at these periods is an example of the unnatural history surprisingly common in ancient authors from Aristotle on.

Now the [text of the] sacred stele to be written in the natron is:

"I[16] call on you, who are greater than all, the creator of all, you, the self-begotten, who see all and are not seen. For you gave Helios the glory and all the / power, Selene [the privilege] to wax and wane and have fixed courses, yet you took nothing from the earlier-born darkness, but apportioned things so that they should be equal. For when you appeared, both order[17] arose and light appeared.[18] All things are subject to you, whose true form none of the gods can / see; who change into all forms. You are invisible, Aion of Aion.

